THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

Scanned from the collections of
The Library of Congress

AUDIO-VISUAL CONSERVATION at The LIBRARY of CONGRESS

Packard Campus for Audio Visual Conservation www.loc.gov/avconservation

THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS

NOV -9 1953

A'S GREATEST MOVIE MAGAZINE

nodern screen

DEC.
20¢

LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
SERIAL RECORD
NOV 27 1953

Z AND MIKE: intimate picture story
u'll never forget

The TRUTH about those PARIS FLINGS of Bing Crosby, Clark Gable, Gregory Peck, Gary Cooper

I dreamed
I rode in a gondola in my maidenform* bra

The dream of a bra: Maidenform's new Etude* in fine white broadcloth or nylon taffeta, in AA, A, B and C cups . . . from 2.00.
There is a Maidenform for every type of figure*.

COSTUME BY ZITA *REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. ©1953 MAIDEN FORM BRASSIERE CO., INC.

NOV -9 [illegible]

At all stores now—in same familiar package!

NEW IPANA® WITH ANTI-ENZYME WD-9 reduces tooth decay...stops bad breath!

What should you know about ENZYMES and how to fight them?

Here are proved facts — in plain language!

The enzymes you have been hearing about are formed by mouth bacteria. They speed up production of decay-causing acids. They also help produce unpleasant mouth odor.

Dental scientists now say that most tooth decay may be stopped — by stopping bacterial-enzyme action.

That is why you should use new white Ipana. All Ipana now on sale contains anti-enzyme WD-9. Brushing your teeth regularly after meals with Ipana containing WD-9 checks bacterial-enzyme action.

Most dentists recommend this way of using Ipana. It is the best way to fight decay all day long.

New Ipana Tooth Paste is so effective that a single brushing stops most unpleasant mouth odor up to 9 hours. Even after smoking—and eating anything you please except onions and garlic.

And with anti-enzyme WD-9, Ipana now has a new minty flavor, new foaming and cleansing power. Children love it.

Get new Ipana with WD-9 today—encourage every member of the family to use it regularly.

Don't forget your gums — they are important, too. Brushing with new Ipana containing WD-9—from gum margins toward biting edges—helps remove irritants that can lead to gum troubles.

Every single brushing helps stop tooth decay!

Even one brushing can stop bad breath all day!

Product of Bristol-Myers

No change in package design. Look for the familiar yellow-and-red striped carton wherever fine drug products are sold.

ALL IPANA NOW ON SALE CONTAINS ANTI-ENZYME WD-9

Hundreds of girls praise this greaseless

YOUNG SKIN TREATMENT

Has your skin suddenly become "upset"?

This may be what is happening:

In the teens, oil glands often start to overwork, skin grows sluggish. Soon, an oily layer of undiscarded dead skin cells begins to "choke" pore openings. Next come enlarged pores, even blackheads!

Now—Pond's recommends this greaseless corrective for oily skin, flakiness, large pores, blackheads. Hundreds of girls with these "Young Skin" problems said they saw a real change in less than 2 weeks of Pond's treatments. "The best I've ever used!" . . . "Did wonders for blemishes and that oily look" . . . "My skin cleared up wonderfully."

New help for Oily Skin, Blackheads, Flakiness!
POND'S

Several times a week—cover face, except eyes, with a deep, cool layer of Pond's Vanishing Cream. Its "keratolytic" action loosens, dissolves away dead skin cells, frees the tiny skin glands to function normally. Leave on one full minute—wipe off. Rinse with cold water. See how tingling, how ungreasy your skin looks, how soft it feels!

Give yourself a "Young Skin" treatment with Pond's Vanishing Cream tonight. See results right away!

"Young Skin" doesn't like heavy make-up!

A protecting powder base of Pond's Vanishing Cream is most becoming to "Young Skin," stays unshiny longer.

DECEMBER, 1953

AMERICA'S GREATEST MOVIE MAGAZINE

modern screen

stories

HAPPY THE BRIDE . . . (Lana Turner and Lex Barker) by Imogene Collins 31
OUT OF THE FRYING PAN (Rita Hayworth and Dick Haymes) by William Barbour 32
MY SIDE OF THE STORY by Dick Haymes 93
THE TRUTH ABOUT THOSE CONTINENTAL FLINGS by Colette Maurier 34
*THE HAPPIEST TIME (Elizabeth Taylor and Michael Wilding) by Susan Trent 36
THIS IS A MONSTER? (Robert Mitchum) by Louis Pollock 40
MY ROOMMATE, ELAINE (Elaine Stewart) by Suzanne Scheirer 42
ANYBODY HERE SEEN MRS. KELLY? (Gene Kelly) by Alice Finletter 44
THE SONG AND DANCE HOUSE (Cyd Charisse and Tony Martin) by Marva Peterson 46
THE MAN BEHIND THE FACE (Jack Palance) by Jack Wade 49
FRIEND OF THE FAMILY (Esther Williams) by Henny Backus 50
I'D MAKE A LOUSY BACHELOR by Tony Curtis 52
NOW LET ME TELL IT! by Terry Moore 54
"ACTORS ARE A DIME A DOZEN" (Dale Robertson) by Richard Moore 56
THE RIGHT MR. WRONG (Judy Garland) by Steve Cronin 58
A FAITH FOR MY CHILD by Deborah Kerr 60

departments

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS 4
THE INSIDE STORY 10
MIKE CONNOLLY'S HOLLYWOOD REPORT 16
MOVIE REVIEWS by Florence Epstein 20
SWEET AND HOT by Leonard Feather 25
TAKE MY WORD FOR IT by Mona Freeman 26
TV TALK 28

*On the cover: Color portrait of MGM's Elizabeth Taylor and her baby by Trindl and Woodfield, FPG. Other picture credits are on page 72.

CHARLES D. SAXON
editor

DURBIN HORNER
executive editor

CARL SCHROEDER
western manager

PAIGE LOHR, story editor
BARBARA J. MAYER, assistant editor
KATIE ROBINSON, western editor
FERNANDO TEXIDOR, art director
BILL WEINBERGER, art editor
BOB BEERMAN, staff photographer
BERT PARRY, staff photographer
MARCIA L. SILVER, research editor

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS

Changes of address should reach us five weeks in advance of the next issue date. Give both your old and new address, enclosing if possible your old address label.

POSTMASTER: Please send notice on Form 3578 and copies returned under Label Form 3579 to 263 Ninth Ave., New York 1, New York

MODERN SCREEN, Vol. 48, No. 1, December, 1953. Published monthly by Dell Publishing Company, Inc. Office of publication at Washington and South Aves., Dunellen, N. J. Executive and editorial offices, 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y. Dell Subscription Service: 10 West 33rd St., New York 1, N. Y. Chicago advertising office, 221 No. LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill., Los Angeles advertising and editorial offices, 8701 West 3rd Street, Los Angeles, California. George T. Delacorte, Jr., President; Helen Meyer, Vice-Pres.; Albert P. Delacorte, Vice-Pres. Published simultaneously in the Dominion of Canada. International copyright secured under the provisions of the Revised Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. All rights reserved under the Buenos Aires Convention. Single copy price 20c in U. S. A. and Canada. Subscriptions in U. S. A. and Canada $2.00 one year; $3.50 two years; $5.00 three years; Foreign, $3.00 a year. Entered as second class matter September 18, 1930, at the post office at Dunellen, N. J., under Act of March 3, 1879. Copyright 1953 by Dell Publishing Company, Inc. Printed in U. S. A. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Names of characters used in semi-fictional matter are fictitious—if the name of any living person is used it is purely a coincidence. Trademark No. 301778

ALL THE ADVENTURE IN THE WORLD!
Mutiny! Typhoons! Buried Treasure! 1001 Thrills!

ALL THE EXCITEMENT IN THE WORLD!
Man Against Monsters of the Deep!

ALL THE ROMANCE IN THE WORLD!
Brother Against Brother for a Beautiful Bride!

ALL THE ENTERTAINMENT IN THE WORLD!

M·G·M's Tremendous Technicolor Adventure!

ALL THE BROTHERS WERE VALIANT

COLOR BY TECHNICOLOR

STARRING
ROBERT TAYLOR
STEWART GRANGER
ANN BLYTH

with BETTA ST. JOHN · KEENAN WYNN · JAMES WHITMORE · KURT KASZNAR

Screen Play by HARRY BROWN · Based on the Story by Ben Ames Williams · Directed by RICHARD THORPE · Produced by PANDRO S. BERMAN · AN M-G-M PICTURE

GRETA PECK DAMPENS THOSE RUMORS

ABOUT GREG AND AUDREY HEPBURN . . .

EUROPE AGREES WITH CLARK GABLE . . .

LOUELLA PARSONS'

THE GOSSIPS' eyebrows shot up like rockets when Greta (Mrs. Gregory) Peck honored Audrey Hepburn at a swimming pool party at the Peck home, welcoming the Hepburn doll to Hollywood.

The chatterers chirped, "How can Greta be so naive when every*body* knows that Greg fell like a ton of bricks for Audrey when they were making Roman Holiday in Italy."

It's the gossips who are being naive in this case—not Greta. The rumor hounds have been taken in by the old, old nonsense that an actor and actress who play love scenes well on screen are also playing them well off.

The truth is that Greta and the lovely Audrey were the ones who became good friends in Rome, not the other way 'round.

Not long ago, Greta told me that things were not all they should be between her and Greg. A long separation such as the Pecks are weathering, with Gregory in Europe and Greta and the children in Hollywood, puts a strain on any marriage.

But, I happen to know that she still receives three or four letters weekly from her roving husband and many of their close friends believe they will never reach the final break of divorce.

It isn't easy for a woman to read day in and day out that her husband and the father of her children is engaged in some new "love" adventure in Europe.

Through all the gossip, Greta has kept her chin up, has been a good mother—and her conduct has earned her a great deal of admiration.

On Greg's side it can be said that he may be the innocent victim of rumors about every pretty woman he dines with in Paris, London or Rome.

Greta told me, "I hardly expect him to be alone."

If I were Greg, I'd think twice about losing a wise and understanding wife like Greta.

IT'S BEEN a month of so many explosive news breaks that before the fireworks died down I was convinced I should have gone in for china-painting or some less strenuous career than reporting Hollywood.

My nights were turned into days as developments popped in such headlines as:

LUCILLE BALL COMMUNIST VOTER IN 1936!

RITA WEDS DICK HAYMES IN LAS VEGAS!

LANA AND LEX ON SECRET EUROPEAN HONEYMOON!

Yipes! I'm sure you know all the factual details of these events—but as I look back, I find myself remembering the personal angle behind the headlines in each case.

For instance, for the first time in my life I was out of touch with my newspaper (I was trying to get a few days' rest) when the Lucille Ball bombshell broke.

Lucille and Desi Arnaz had been trying to reach me all day.

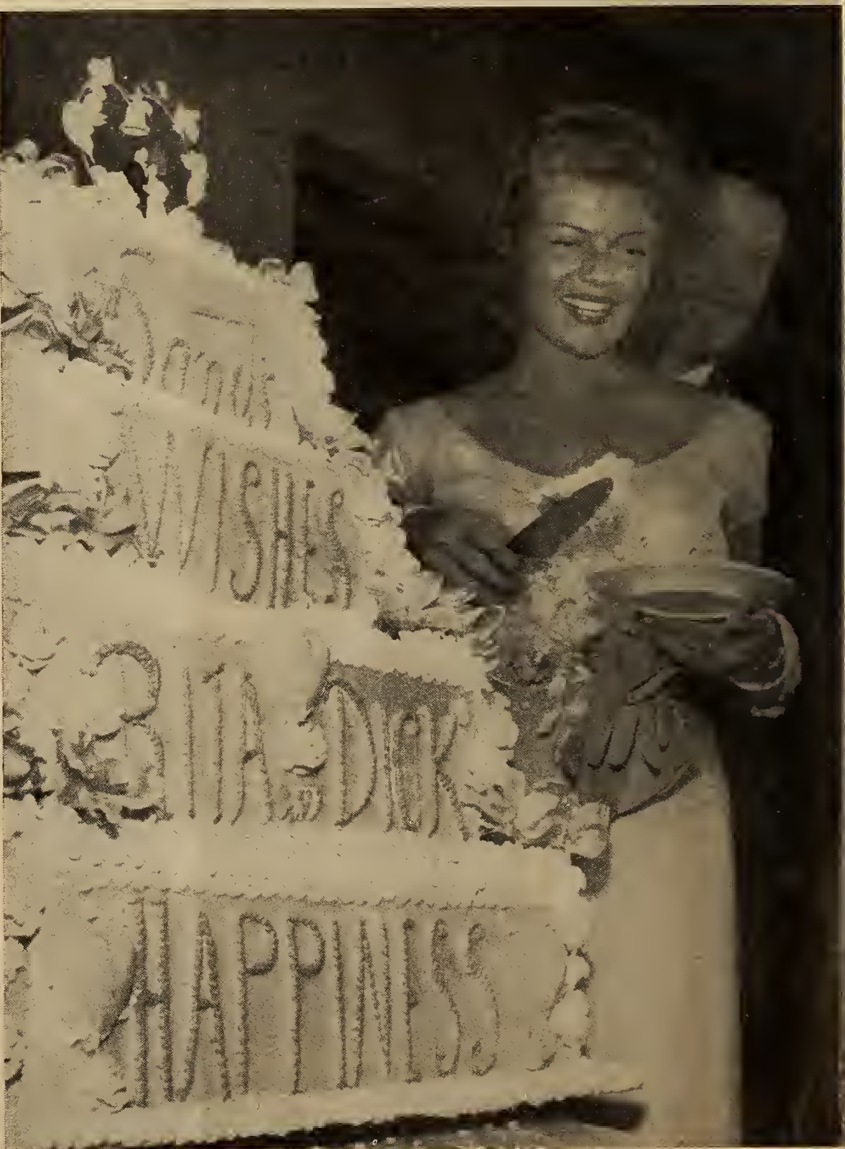
It was early the following morning when the call came through to my hotel.

Desi said, "We have nothing to hide. Lucille told the whole truth to the Un-American Activities Investigation Committee about how she happened to be registered as a Communist voter in 1936.

"The only thing that worries me is that she'll break down. But she came through like a trouper tonight on our show and I was so proud of her!"

When I returned the next day, Desi and Lucille again talked with me.

Desi said, "Not until Lucille received hun-



"This wedding is too important to me to clutter up with frills," Rita said. But the couple's arm-in-arm procession from her quarters to the casino where they were married was witnessed by several hundred people—some climbed diving boards for the sight

REPORTERS OUTNUMBERED THE OTHER GUESTS. A PRESS AGENT

$4000 THEFT AT A STAR-STUDDED PARTY . . . SHELLEY WOULD RATHER HAVE A BABY THAN A DIVORCE . . .

GOOD NEWS

"I want a ring, too," Yasmin announced when Rita and Dick exchanged bands. Witnesses were couple's lawyers, children's nurse. Rita wore a blue linen dress (not new), toast hat, gloves, held lilies-of-the-valley and orchids.

They had taken out a license as soon as Dick won divorce in 7-minute hearing. "At last, after so many difficulties," Rita sighed, regretted that her father could not leave work to attend wedding.

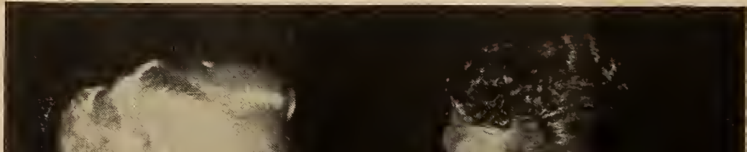
Wedding was held in Gold Room of Sands Casino, owned by best man Jack Entratter. The couple recited vows before District Judge McNamee, ignored gambling which continued through ceremony.

Dick moved into Rita's suite for brief Las Vegas honeymoon before keeping Philadelphia singing date. Asked by reporters whether he had tasted Rita's cooking, Dick grinned, demanded, "Who marries Rita Hayworth for cooking?"

GAVE THE SIGNAL THAT BEGAN RITA AND DICK'S FOURTH WEDDING IN A SIMPLE, 3-MINUTE CEREMONY

Pert Mitzi Goynor, unlike most of Hollywood's younger crowd, is often seen at nightclubs on The Strip. At Mocambo with Jack Beon, she displayed her new, short Italian haircut, but admitted Jack's clipping beat her trim by inches!

Jean Simmons, also following the short-hair fad, is rumored peeved at husband, Stewart Granger, because he plans a film in England without her. Jean's latest hit, The Robe, has been filling theatres ever since the gala première.



Deon Martin and wife, Jeanne, dine at Ciro's. Rumors of trouble between them have died down since Dean's return from Europe with Jerry Lewis, squelched by announcement that Jean will soon present him with new baby.

LOUELLA PARSONS' good news

Continued

dreds and hundreds of telegrams and our sponsor expressed complete confidence in her did she break down and cry."

After Congressman Jackson released the full transcript of Lucy's testmony, the atmosphere cleared.

All I can say is that Lucille was the smartest girl in the world in telling the truth: that her grandfather so completely dominated the family's political thinking years ago, that they registered as Communists just to please an old man, although they did not vote.

RITA HAYWORTH called personally from Las Vegas to invite me to her wedding to Dick Haymes.

I laughed. "Maybe you'll have better luck if I skip this marriage," I said. I was referring to the jaunt I made half around the world covering her headline-splattered tie-up with Aly Khan.

"I'm not superstitious," said my girl friend. "You're my friend. Please come."

But work was pressing and I had to remain at my desk to keep up with the didoes of many of her stellar confreres (also breaking out in a rash of headlines).

And, just between you and me, my heart isn't quite in this latest marriage of the exotic girl I've known for so many years.

ELEANOR PARKER was shocked almost speechless when I was the first to tell her that her ex-husband, Bert Friedlob, had filed a request in the Children's Court of Conciliation that a reconciliation be effected between them.

This, despite Eleanor's divorce suit already filed last July.

As long as I've been covering Hollywood divorces, this is the first case of it's kind I've known of.

Eleanor, almost in despair said, "How can he do this? Of course, I'll fight it. Bert cannot force me to take him back. Only the two of us know the real reason back of our separation. I have never discussed it."

I told her that Bert had submitted sealed papers to the court in his petition, one of the points being that it was to the best interest of their three minor children that the home not be destroyed.

In her suit for divorce, Eleanor had said that Friedlob gave her a great inferiority complex and belittled her in front of the children and their friends; also, that he refused to let her make her own decisions even in vital matters concerning her career.

It will be very interesting to see how this unusual angle in a Hollywood divorce comes out legally. Her friends hold out very little hope that Eleanor will take Bert back—certainly not without a desperate fight.

AND HERE'S a little "inside" on the Italian wedding of Lana and Lex which made it such an ultra surprise to her studio. Exactly one week before she and Barker put wedding rings on their little fingers (????!!) Lana cabled MGM:

"ABSOLUTELY NO WEDDING PLANS.
LOVE. LANA."

WITH ALL the mishmush and nonsense about many of the Hollywood happenings, there have been two wonderful stories

BY THE AUTHOR WHOSE BOOKS HAVE BECOME WORLD-CELEBRATED MOTION PICTURES!

WARNER BROS.
PRESENT
EDNA FERBER'S
PULITZER PRIZE NOVEL

"So Big"

He stood there so big. Love had come... intense, unashamed... She was ready to forget she'd ever been a lady...

STARRING
JANE WYMAN
HER FINEST PORTRAYAL SINCE 'JOHNNY BELINDA'!

CO-STARRING
STERLING HAYDEN · NANCY OLSON

WITH STEVE FORREST • SCREEN PLAY BY JOHN TWIST • MUSIC BY MAX STEINER • DIRECTED BY ROBERT WISE • PRODUCED BY HENRY BLANKE

WB

of courage and sincerity and faith.

I mean Suzan Ball, for one, whom I most certainly believe when she tells me it was faith and her deep belief in the goodness of God that has made it possible for her to discard her crutches after many doctors had said that her shattered leg had developed cancer.

"It's as though everything beautiful were happening to me all of a sudden after so much unhappiness," Suzan told me. "I've met a boy—a man, rather—who has brought real love into my life. Through his tenderness and understanding I've come to know what real love is." Of course, she was referring to Dick Long, the promising young actor who has fallen hard for Suzan.

THE OTHER story of almost super-human courage and heart is that of Boni Buehler, the pretty airline hostess—young, attractive and with so much ahead of her—who lost an arm and a leg in a speedboat accident at Lake Arrowhead.

The way Boni fits into the Hollywood angle of the news is that her escort, and the one who saved her life, was Geary Steffen, ex-husband of Jane Powell.

Many girls would have completely collapsed after such a tragedy.

Yet, just a bare six weeks after the accident, Boni was dining in a wheelchair at La Rue's with Geary. He introduced me as I passed their table.

"Isn't she wonderful?" beamed Geary proudly, holding onto Boni's hand, "I've never known such courage."

As I looked into Boni's eyes, smiling, vivacious—and with no bitterness—I wholeheartedly agreed with Geary.

If it were a movie script, I suppose Boni and Geary would fall in love, mutually healing both their hurts, Boni's terrible physical tragedy and Geary's hurt over losing Jane Powell to another man.

But this is real life, and I don't know whether it will turn out that way or not. I do know that these two have found a real and everlasting bond of friendship.

'TWAS A REAL wingding the William Perlbergs tossed following the Hollywood première of Bing Crosby's Little Boy Lost. Bill produced the picture. Bobbie, with her own fair hands, decorated the private dining room at Chasen's and did a bang-up job.

I was very interested in meeting Nicole Maury, the French beauty and Bing's leading lady, who flew from Paris just for the oc-

(Continued on page 13)

Jane Powell, whose box-office appeal does not seem to have dropped as feared because of her divorce, says she has never been so happy. She and Gene Nelson cheerfully sign autographs on their frequent nights out.

José Ferrer and Rosemary Clooney are together constantly. Rosie gets up at 6 A.M. to watch her husband play tennis; he squires her to parties and seems to enjoy them. Rosie has lost weight since her marriage.

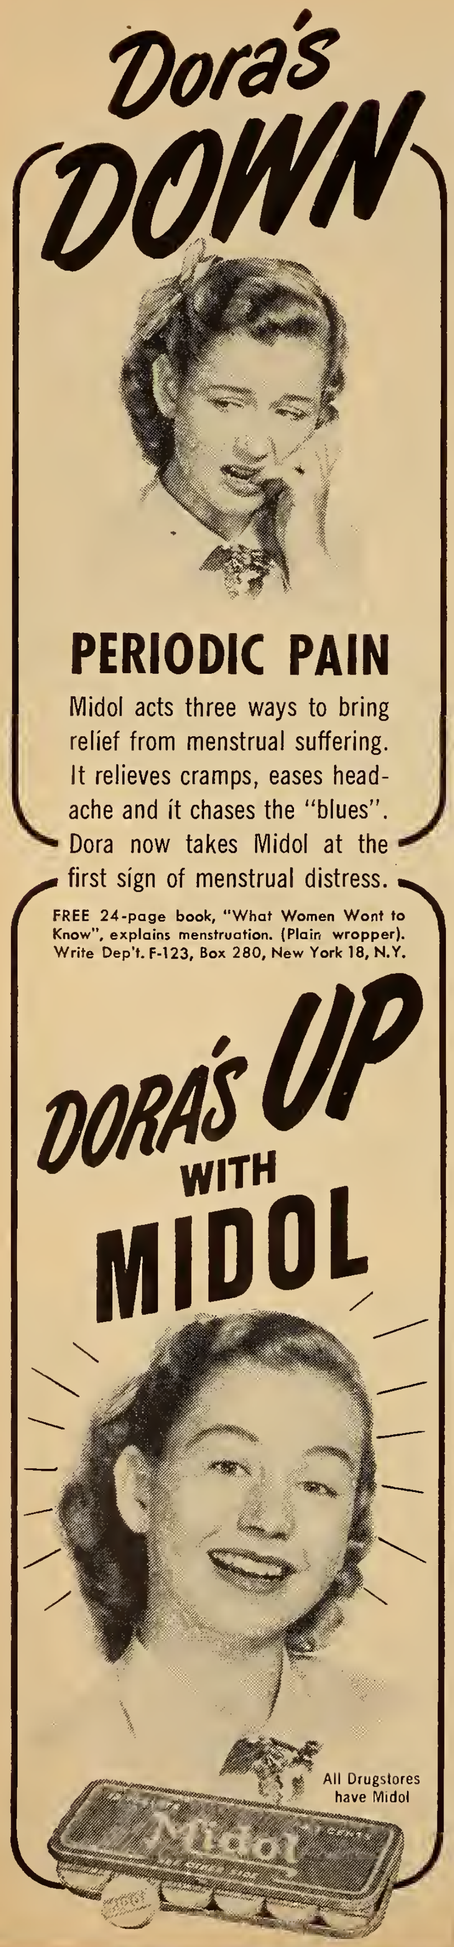
One of Hollywood's quietest, happiest couples, Ronald Reagan and his wife, actress Nancy Davis, took time out from their television performances to attend. Ronald is former president of the Screen Actors' Guild.

Audrey Hepburn, Broadway hit, was unknown in Hollywood before he first American film, Roman Holiday. After the première she was mobbe by photographers and fans who hadn't noticed her on the way in.

ARLENE DAHL, co-starring in
"HERE COME THE GIRLS"
A Paramount Picture
COLOR BY TECHNICOLOR

The most breath-taking complexions in Hollywood are cared for with Lux Toilet Soap

Screen stars use it because they know from experience that Lux Toilet Soap is as good a soap for your skin as you can buy. Arlene Dahl is one of the famous Hollywood beauties who use Lux Soap. She especially likes it because it's so gentle on her skin, and because it's so nicely fragrant. We think you'll like it, too, (there's the Lever Brothers money-back guarantee, of course) and we think you'll like watching Hollywood stars every Thursday evening on Lux Video Theatre.



Dora's DOWN

PERIODIC PAIN

Midol acts three ways to bring relief from menstrual suffering. It relieves cramps, eases headache and it chases the "blues". Dora now takes Midol at the first sign of menstrual distress.

FREE 24-page book, "What Women Want to Know", explains menstruation. (Plain wrapper). Write Dep't. F-123, Box 280, New York 18, N.Y.

DORA'S UP WITH MIDOL

All Drugstores have Midol

THE INSIDE STORY

Want the real truth? Write to INSIDE STORY, Modern Screen, 8701 W. Third St., Los Angeles 48, Cal. The most interesting letters will appear in this column. Sorry, no personal replies.

Q. I've read that Dick Haymes and Fernando Lamas were schoolboy friends in Buenos Aires, Argentina. How about that? —O.F., MOBILE, ALA.

A. They were both born in Argentina, never met as schoolboys.

Q. Is it on the level that Humphrey Bogart won't permit his children to be photographed? —A.L., BOSTON, MASS.

A. No, the Bogart children have been photographed many times.

Q. Why was there so much trouble in getting an actor to play opposite Judy Garland in A Star Is Born? —N.O., BALTIMORE, MD.

A. The script was written so that it featured Garland. Several actors refused the male role because they felt it wasn't big enough. James Mason, who accepted it, felt it was fine.

Q. That Kay Spreckels who was allegedly beaten up by her husband—wasn't she once Clark Gable's sweetheart? —B.T., PHOENIX, ARIZ.

A. Yes.

Q. Why doesn't some man ask Ann Miller to marry him? She has a lot of sex appeal. Hasn't she ever been married? —C.I., DALLAS, TEX.

A. Divorced once, Ann Miller has turned down several marriage proposals.

Q. Isn't there a hot romance going on between Joan Crawford and Jeff Chandler? —H.H., DULUTH, MINN.

A. They are good friends only.

Q. Can you truthfully tell me Ava Gardner's current salary, please? —W.O., RALEIGH, N. C.

A. $5,008 per week, forty weeks per year.

Q. How many times has Dick Haymes been married? —B.U., HONOLULU

A. Four times.

Q. Who sang for Cyd Charisse in The Band Wagon? —L.B., OGDEN, UTAH

A. India Adams dubbed the sound track.

Q. I'm told that June Allyson used to room with Gene Nelson's ex-wife, Miriam, and Gene Kelly's wife, Betsy. Why is it that June doesn't go around with these girls any longer? —V.B., BRONX, N. Y.

A. Since her marriage to Dick Powell, Miss Allyson moves in different social circles.

Q. What is the real reason MGM dropped Marge and Gower Champion, those wonderful dancers? —D.K., COLUMBUS, OHIO

A. Studio executives felt they couldn't carry an entire picture; also a studio economy wave.

Q. Isn't Marilyn Monroe in love with a big shot at 20th Century-Fox? Isn't Joe DiMaggio being used as a smoke screen? —C.J., DENVER, COLO.

A. No.

Q. What happened to Grace Kelly, who was so friendly with Clark Gable when they made Mogambo? —C.H., PHILADELPHIA, PA.

A. Miss Kelly has just finished the female lead in Dial M For Murder.

Q. Is it true that success has gone to the heads of Janet Leigh and Tony Curtis? I understand they now refuse to be interviewed. —E.J., STOCKTON, CAL.

A. They are both extremely cooperative with all members of the press. Always have been, too.

Q. What is the status of the Dean Martin-Jerry Lewis versus Bob Hope feud? —D.L., AMARILLO, TEX.

A. Still going strong.

Q. Is it true that all members of the Armed Forces have been forbidden to see The Moon Is Blue? —J.J., FT BRAGG, N. C.

A. The picture was banned from service theatres. Men in uniform may see it at any civilian theatre.

Q. Wasn't Rory Calhoun's badly-slashed arm the result of a fight with his wife? Tell the truth now. —H.H., LONG BEACH, CAL.

A. The truth is that Calhoun shoved a hand through a glass-paneled door in his house, had no fight with his wife.

A thrilling Christmas gift—this modern chest in blond oak with its clean lines, polished finish, automatic tray. Model #2966. Also in Seafoam mahogany, #2979. Lane Table, #241. Chest price, $59.95*

Ask for the Christmas gift that makes dreams come true...

A LANE CEDAR CHEST!

DREAMING of the future? If so, now is a perfect time to plan for that future . . . by asking for a Lane Cedar Chest for Christmas . . . the gift that gathers more gifts.

With a Lane to inspire you, you can begin gathering a treasure of luxurious blankets, lovely linens, delicate lingerie . . .

What's more, a Lane keeps woolens and other precious things sweet-smelling and fresh—safe from moths and dust—as no other storage method can.

Remember, one garment saved from moths can pay for a Lane! At most leading furniture and department stores.

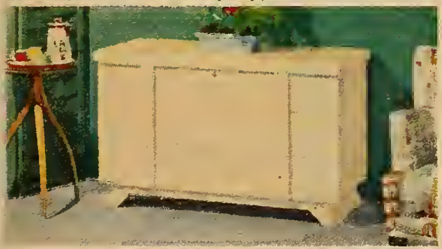
Lane is the ONLY pressure-tested, aroma-tight cedar chest. Made of ¾-inch red cedar in accordance with U. S. Government recommendations, with a moth-protection guarantee underwritten by one of the world's largest insurance companies, upon proper application. Helpful hints for storing are in each chest. The Lane Company, Inc., Dept. Z, Altavista, Va. In Canada: Knechtels, Ltd., Hanover, Ont.

Many Lane Chests at... $49.95*
Easy terms

Also makers of Lane Tables

© 1953, The Lane Company, Inc.

*$5.00 higher in the West due to higher freight costs—slightly higher in Canada.



Unusual modern in blond oak; drawer in base. Model #2852. Seafoam mahogany, #2853; Cordovan mahogany, #2856. $79.95.*

Attractive modern in lustrous walnut. Self-lifting tray. Model #2874. Also in gray walnut, #2869. Each, $59.95.*

Streamlined modern in figured blond Sonora. Aroma-tight and pressure-tested. Self-lifting tray. Model #2700—$69.95.*

Streamlined modern in matched American walnut with touches of Paldao wood. Self-lifting tray. Model #2971—$49.95.*

Arresting modern in Seafoam mahogany. Base-drawer tray. Model #2925. In walnut, model #2939. $69.95.* Lane Table, #257.

18th Century chest in glorious mahogany. Full-length drawer in base, simulated drawers above. Model #2221—$79.95.*

Sir Christopher Salad Set, Wood $16.50 (Spoon illustrated)

Christmas gifts to be treasured a lifetime

WALLACE

Sterling Silver

Romance of the Sea Pickle Fork $6.60

Grand Colonial Tomato Server $16.50

Waltz of Spring Vegetable Spoon $13.50

You will enjoy a personal satisfaction in selecting a gift of Wallace Sterling . . . will be proud because your gift is perfection in itself, sterling that is set apart from all others by its dramatic and incomparable "Third Dimension Beauty*." Your Wallace gift is the ultimate in silvercrafting . . . the full-formed sculptured loveliness that is a joy to give and a thrill to receive.

Yes, here is a gift to tell a lucky someone you have the finest taste, for you want her to have the best sterling . . . to treasure at Christmas, and for all the years to come!

WALLACE SILVERSMITHS
AT WALLINGFORD, CONN.—Since 1835

Rose Point Jelly Server $6.60

Stradivari Cheese Server $6.60

Grande Baroque Steak Carving Set $26.50 (Fork illustrated)

THERE ARE MORE THAN SIXTY CHRISTMAS GIFTS IN EACH WALLACE PATTERN

SERVING PIECES

Berry Spoon	$20.00-29.00
Bon Bon or Nut Spoon	6.60-7.50
Butter Knife	9.35-13.25
Cake Breaker	11.00-12.00
Cake Knife, 13"	13.50
Cheese Server	6.60-8.00
Cold Meat Fork	14.50-21.00
Cream, Mayo, or Sauce Ladle	8.75-10.25
Gravy Ladle	15.50-20.00
Jam Spoon	3.30
Jelly Server	6.60-8.75
Lemon Fork	4.75-6.60
Mustard Spoon	2.75
Olive or Pickle Fork	5.75-6.60
Pie or Pastry Server	11.25-13.25
Poultry Shears	30.00-33.00
Punch Ladle	55.00-110.00
Salad or Serving Fork	20.00-27.00
Salad or Serving Spoon	20.00-29.00
Salad Set, Wood	14.50-18.00
Soup Ladle	50.00-80.00
Sugar Spoon	6.85-10.25
Sugar Tongs	10.75-12.00
Table or Serving Spoon	12.00-18.00
Tomato Server	15.00-21.00
Vegetable Serving Spoon	12.00-18.00
Wedding Cake Knife	18.50

CARVING SETS

Roast Set 2 pc.	$36.00-40.00
Steak Set 2 pc.	24.00-30.00

JUVENILE

Baby Set, 2 pc.	$6.50-7.70
Baby Fork	3.25-3.85
Baby Spoon	3.25-3.85
Junior (Child's) Set, 3-pc.	15.00-16.50
Junior Fork	5.25-6.00
Junior Knife	5.75-6.25
Junior Spoon	3.65-4.25

MISCELLANEOUS

Bottle Opener	$6.50
Candle Snuffer	11.00-12.50
Letter Opener	6.50
Salt Spoon Pin	1.65

PLACE SETTING ITEMS

Tea Spoon	$4.25-6.25
Luncheon Knife	6.50-7.75
Luncheon Fork	7.50-10.50
Butter Spreader	5.00-6.25
Cream Soup Spoon	6.00-8.50
Salad or Pastry Fork	6.50-8.50
Dinner Knife	7.25-8.50
Dinner Fork	9.25-13.00

OTHER PLACE ITEMS

Bouillon Spoon	$6.00-7.25
Butter Spreader	6.00-7.00
Cocktail or Oyster Fork	4.50-6.00
Coffee Spoon	3.00-3.85
Dessert or Cereal Spoon	8.00-10.25
Fish Fork	8.50-10.00
Fish Knife	8.00-9.75
Fruit Knife	6.50-7.25
Ice Cream Fork	6.00-6.60
Iced Beverage Spoon	6.25-8.75
Orange or Grapefruit Spoon	7.25-8.00
Salt Spoon	1.65
Sherbet Spoon	3.25
Soup Spoon	10.00-12.00
Steak Knife	8.25-9.50
Tea Knife	5.75-6.50
Tea Spoon, small	3.65-4.25

*Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

©1953

All prices include federal tax and vary according to pattern casion. She knocked me cold by speaking perfect English. She knocked the males cold by being so beautiful and alluring.

Rosemary Clooney looked to me as though she had taken off some of those pesky pounds she put on following her marriage to José Ferrer. For the first time I have had occasion to observe, José seemed to be enjoying a party, and he was devotion itself to Rosy.

Nancy Sinatra brought thirteen-year-old Nancy, Jr., and ten-year-old Frankie, Jr., to the movie and they were permitted to drop in on the party for a half-hour. Frankie, Jr., was as pleased as punch that his invitation came directly from Bing Crosby (who was in Elko and wasn't present, himself).

That cute Charlie Coburn had an attractive "date," and danced every number.

Maureen O'Hara came with her handsome brother, Charles FitzSimmons, and Maureen agreed with me that Bing will be among the Oscar contenders next March for his fine work in this touching picture.

IT WAS Dick Haymes' own brainstorm (and not Rita's lawyer's, as suspected) that he sign what many considered those "embarrassing" papers, waiving all rights to Rita's money, or property or future earnings.

"I want the world to know that I love Rita—and I took this step on my own initiative," he told me. "I don't give a damn about her money."

Dick also had a lot to do with the redheaded Hayworth's coldly turning down a $1,000,000 settlement from her former husband, Aly Khan, provided she would bring up their three-year-old child, Yasmin, as a Moslem.

For a guy who is having plenty of financial headaches you have to admit that Dick is going way out of his way to prove it's just loooove, loooove, loooove he feels for Rita.

SPEAKING of Yasmin, everybody at the Sands Hotel fell completely under the charm of this little girl, who is one of the most engaging youngsters I have ever met.

One of the guards (assigned to her after Rita received threatening letters) gave her a small dog.

Yasmin taught the pooch to swim and she was in the pool with him every day. She named the dog "Esther" for Esther Williams.

"But it's a he dog," the guard told her.

"Does that make any difference," the little girl asked, "when it swims so good?"

CLARK GABLE got so fat—he put on twenty-two pounds, wining and dining through Europe with his favorite gal, Suzanne Dadolle, after Mogambo—that he had to go on a torturous diet before stepping before the cameras with Lana Turner Barker in The True And The Brave.

It's supposed to be a secret, but MGM practically put the King in retirement while he shed the unbecoming poundage.

This may be the real reason behind Mlle. Dadolle's asking for her job back as a model for Schiaparelli and why many people got the idea that Gable's mad yen for her had cooled.

I hear that Lana Turner kidded Clark unnercifully about his expanded waistline. Jsually, it's Lana who has to go on a strict liet to make the weight before a picture.

PERSONAL OPINIONS: If Tony Curtis and Piper Laurie are forced to work together n Johnny Dark, the studio bosses can start aking aspirin right now. This feud is as strong June Allyson has been mothering contented papa Dick Powell ever since his sudden illness last year. At Vic Damone's opening in Mocambo's famous Champagne Room, she hovered over him attentively.

Debbie Reynolds has been dating "like cra-a-a-zy" ever since her break-up with Bob Wagner. She attended the star-studded première of Bing Crosby's latest hit, Little Boy Lost with another popular youngster, actor Tab Hunter.

There's a new leading lady in the Esther Williams-Ben Gage home ever since Thursday, October 1, when Esther gave birth to a 7 lb. 15 oz. daughter. Susan is the first sister for their two sons, Benjamin, 4, and Kimball, 3.

Farley Granger vacationed on Italy's sunny Isle of Capri, spent much of his time shopping for a native hat to wear with his sporty outfit.

Lovely Jan Sterling arrived at the première with her famous husband, Paul Douglas. Paul's latest picture is a comedy, Forever Female.

Shirley Temple and her husband, Charles Block are rumored to be contemplating a movie debu for Shirley's talented daughter, Linda Susan as it was two years ago. . . .

It could happen only to a movie-husband: Vittorio Gassman called Shelley Winters all the way from Rome to ask if she was divorcing him. He'd read it in an Italian newspaper that afternoon. "No," chortled Shell via trans-Atlantic telephone, "I'm planning to have another baby if I can ever catch up with you again!"

MARILYN MONROE, Terry Moore and Barbara Stanwyck all hold their mouths slightly open all the time, an odd mannerism in three such widely divergent types. . . .

If Susan Hayward liked Jeff Chandler a lot more than she does, she could take him out of circulation. But Susie's not concentrating on any gent. She's enjoying her freedom too much. . . .

After years of carrying a torch for one married lady, Rocky Cooper, I think Peter Lawford is lighted-up over another Mrs.—Judy Holliday Oppenheim. . . .

Had to giggle when I heard Ava's last feud with Frankie was because she thought he was getting swell-headed again after From Here To Eternity. Those Sinatras are something. . . .

Watch the Vera-Ellen romance with British Richard Gully getting hot. . . .

The Tyrone Powers should forget their disappointment over a second baby daughter. The important thing is—a healthy baby.

AS USUAL when the Ice Follies comes to town, it's a star-studded event for our actors who turn out to "ah" and "oh" over the thrilling skaters like the wildest-eyed fans.

Many dinner parties were given before the gala event, one of the gayest by the Jules Steins. I rode to the Follies in the same car with Audrey Hepburn, Phil Silvers and our host.

Love this Hepburn girl. She's so regular and unaffected and kids a lot about being so thin.

At the ice palace, I sat next to the Edgar Bergens with Henry Fonda just a few chairs away, close enough to tell me that he was in town to start rehearsals on his next stage venture, The Caine Mutiny Court-Martial, from Herman Wouk's book.

Olivia De Havilland looked beautiful in all-white, and although she was with an old friend, Sammy Colt, her heart was about 3000 miles away with journalist Pierre Galante in New York. Love is becoming to Livvy. She looks young and sparkling.

After a brief interlude of playing the field, Donald O'Connor was back with Marilyn Erskine, and seemingly liking it.

One of the real beauties in a box was Cyd Charisse who looks more and more like Ava Gardner since she snipped her hair short. Of course Cyd, in a tomato-colored dress with a white coat, was with Tony Martin.

Jane Wyman and Freddie Karger must have had two dozen candid cameramen around them snapping pictures at intermission.

"They must think I'm a skater," called Janie, who really is almost too modest about her fame.

Rock Hudson was with his (currently) favorite date, Betty Abbott. (Hey! He got her the job of script girl on his new picture Magnificent Obsession—and this begins to look serious.)

Nice to see so many old friends like Dennis Morgan, Jack Benny and many others eating peanuts and popcorn and acting just like kids about the exciting show.

GUY MITCHELL, the new singing sensation who screen debuts with Rosemary Clooney in Red Garters, ain't goin' to get off lightly because his career zoomed so far ahead of that of his bride-of-a-year, Jackie Loughery.

The lady has made this quite plain in asking $500 weekly alimony from Guy, who, a bare fourteen months ago, barely had $500 to his name!

The break-up of the former "Miss America," who was far more famous than her bridegroom when they married, and the new crooning rage, is the same old Hollywood story.

Two new careers under one roof. Jealousy. Tears. Suspicions. Then—calling it all off.

FOR A FULL fifteen minutes after Spike Jones dashed back into the Harry Jamesons' house at the party being given in honor of Helen Grayco's birthday (she's Mrs. Spike) and reported his $4000 gift for her had been stolen from their locked car, absolutely no one believed him.

Far from being a gag, the gorgeous diamond bracelet had been lifted from the glove compartment where Spike had put it until time to slip it on Helen's wrist.

Jerry Lewis, all dolled up in dinner clothes and tennis shoes (!) was one of the guests believing poor Spike was clowning—and insisted he had the gift in his pocket.

It was a case of one prankster kidding another and Spike didn't know whether Jerry had it or not.

Was Jerry's face red when he realized that Spike was not spoofing—and the detectives were called.

Among those milling around during the excitement were the Van Heflins, Betty Hutton and Charles O'Curran, Jeff Chandler and Cesar Romero.

EDGAR BERGEN'S little girl, Candy, has a big crush on Guy Madison (so have many bigger girls).

Not long ago Edgar and Candy were shopping in Beverly Hills when Guy came along.

After the child had been introduced to her idol, her father asked her what she thought of Guy.

"I just wish he came in smaller sizes," Candy sighed.

THE LETTERBOX: "I can't take Jeanne Crain's new look," writes Mrs. Ronald Hunt, Mansfield, Ohio. "Bring back our old, lovely Jeanne, minus that hair-cut and those short skirts."

Carlos Turpiner opines: "Count at least one fan, me, as still as enchanted with Jane Powell as I ever was. Her private life is her own. Her talent is ours, thank heavens."

Two schoolgirls, Chicago, write: "Who is Deborah Paget kidding that she hasn't been kissed?" I think Debra has now been kissed, girls, and her name is Debra—not Deborah.

That's all for now. See you next month.

Marilyn MONROE Betty GRABLE Lauren BACALL

Big as Life and a Million Times More Fun

in

CINEMASCOPE

YOU SEE IT WITHOUT GLASSES!

Only CinemaScope could surround you with so glittering an array of stars... engulf you in the glamour of the world's greatest city... the excitement of Maine's ski slopes... the dazzling beauty of a fabulous fashion show..

20TH CENTURY-FOX PRESENTS

How To Marry a Millionaire

TECHNICOLOR

Produced by
NUNNALLY JOHNSON
Directed by JEAN NEGULESCO Screen Play by NUNNALLY JOHNSON

Co-starring
DAVID WAYNE · RORY CALHOUN · CAMERON MITCHELL
Based on Plays by Zoe Akins and Dale Eunson and Katherine Albert • with ALEX D'ARCY • FRED CLARK and William POWELL

SPECIAL TO MODERN SCREEN:

hollywood report

by Mike Connolly

famous columnist for
The Hollywood Reporter

THE REAL LOWDOWN:

Jane Russell's chapel in the San Fernando Valley has become quite a rehabilitation spot for alcoholics. David Brian delivered a sermon, his first, to Jane's religious group last month. And the guy has never looked better . . . Did you know that Susan Hayward and Jeff Chandler were once schoolmates in Brooklyn? Shortly after Susie filed suit for divorce from Jess Barker, Jeff offered her his shoulder "to cry on." Watch this pair! . . . Quite a guy, Chandler. He came to the Multiple Sclerosis Telethon here in Hollywood at midnight on Saturday and stayed on until four P.M., Sunday, working like a dog answering phones and taking messages from donors.

Chandler

Marilyn Erskine gave Donald O'Connor a black star sapphire ring for his birthday . . . Did you know that the car that overturned and almost killed Beetsie Wynn on her trip back to New York belonged to Sid Luft, Judy Garland's husband? A friend was driving it back east for Sid and Beetsie hitched a ride in it . . . Is Judy responsible for Sid's alimony obligations? Lynn Bari, his ex, keeps filing lawsuits against him in an effort to get an answer . . . Debbie Reynolds has become the datingest gal in town since breaking up with Bob Wagner. Wonder when Deb, my favorite Girl Scout, will dye her hair and tread the glamour trail? . . . Liz Taylor, whose hair was naturally curly, now resorts to permanents. A medico tells me this is sometimes caused by motherhood.

Reynolds

LONG HUNCH DEP'T:

Their Hollywood chums wonder what significance there was in Lana Turner and Lex Barker's placing their wedding rings on their little fingers . . . When she heard about the Lana-Lex linking, Arlene Dahl, Lex's ex, said, "I wish them happiness. I think they have a lot in common" . . . Wait'll you see Arlene's torrid love scenes with Fernando Lamas in The Diamond Queen! . . . If Gary and Rocky Cooper reconcile it'll be because of their daughter . . . Now that Ava Gardner and Frank Sinatra are at the height of their careers—she in Mogambo, he in From Here To Eternity—their intimates don't give that marriage long, either, this despite its many on-again-off-again aspects that have lately become mostly off . . . The romance to keep your eye on is the one between Chata Wayne, John's ex-spouse, and Steve Cochran. Steve kept long-distancing her from Rome throughout the divorce action.

Dahl

Lanza

Don't be surprised when Shirley Temple returns to movies. If she ever needed proof that the fans want her back she got it when they mobbed her at the Multiple Sclerosis Telethon, so overwhelmed were they by her sweetness and simplicity. She attended the party tossed by Sheila MacRae, Elyse Knox and Cleo Arnold when they started their new TV show, featuring remarks about their better-halves, Gordon MacRae, Tom Harmon and Edward Arnold. Outside the TV station, on Vine Street, who got the biggest hand from the fans? Shirley. They kept yelling, "We want Shirley! We want Shirley!" till she went out and took a bow . . . Don't look for anything exciting to happen between Judy Holliday and Pete Lawford, despite the romantic rumors . . . Johnnie Ray has been working in the night clubs without his hearing aid, which means you'll see no evidence of the device in any movie he makes . . . If Mario Lanza keeps saying nasty things to reporters over the phone he's likely to wind up in the clink . . . These three kiddies look like they'll be up for Academy Awards for best supporting actor roles: Christian Fourcade for Little Boy Lost, Tommy Rettig for The 5,000 Fingers of Dr. T, and Brandon de Wilde for Shane.

HOLLYWOOD HEARTBEATS:

Nelson

Tony Curtis' devotion to his father during a recent heart attack confirms what I've known all along: that Tony is tops . . . Jane Powell missed only one performance of Gene Nelson's Cocoanut Grove engagement, that one due to Dore Schary's birthday party . . . Then Janie herself opened at the Grove right after Gene closed. I was there opening night, when Janie's mother's date, a bartender, became obstreperous and had to be led outside by Gene's agent, Johnny Darrow. Everybody held his breath during that incident! . . . The Powell-Nelson wedding may happen much sooner than the year set by California law . . . I talked to Janie at the MGM See For Yourself star party for MGMers from all over the world, and congratulated her on her singing. "How come you're singing better than I've ever heard you?" I asked. She replied, "It could be because I have a new vocal coach. Or it could be because I've never been so happy in my life!"

Suzan Ball's ability to walk without her crutches and Dick Long's loving attendance during her long illness are the talk of Hollywood . . . Ty and Linda Power were disappointed at first when the stork delivered their second daughter instead of the son forecast by Linda's Rome astrologer. But now they wouldn't trade little Taryn for all the astrologers in the world . . . Pier Angeli has really been torching for Kirk Douglas! . . . Mrs. Douglas Mueller, the widow of a millionaire, has been consoling Fred MacMurray, following the death of his beloved Lillian . . . It's been touch-and-go for Olivia de Havilland and her French reporter amour, Pierre Galante. Anything in the romantic line can happen with these two! . . . Rock Hudson moved from Coldwater to Laurel Canyon—one canyon away from Betty Abbott . . . Anne Baxter dyed her hair from red back to its natural auburn shade for her tour in John Brown's Body and I like it, I like it! . . . When lonesome matrons (and some of the younger babes!) phone John Hodiak and invite him to parties he replies, "Did you know Anne (John's ex) is back from Europe? Maybe you'd rather have her." Ouch!

SKIRMISHES OF THE MONTH:

Gabor

Barbara Ruick and Bob Horton almost didn't get married, the in-laws and agents were so dead set against it . . . Biggest surprise, the rift in the marriage of Guy Mitchell, Paramount's new star, and Jackie Loughery, who was Miss America of 1952. Career jealousy was blamed . . . Zsa Zsa Gabor has been seeing Porfirio Rubirosa, Doris Duke's ex-husband, so George Sanders has been seeing Ilse Bey . . . Mona Freeman dated Nicky Hilton at the Villa Nova but they had a spat and she called her ex-husband, Pat Nerney, to come and take her home! . . . Errol Flynn just can't seem to stay out of trouble. He trounced a young U.S. businessman in a hotel in Rome. The younger man landed in a hospital and threatened to sue.

Martin & Lewis got into a spat with British

Mrs. Dorian Mehle of Morrisville, Pa., is all three: a housewife, a mother, and a very lovely lady.

"I wash 22,000 dishes a year... but I'm proud of my pretty hands!"

You and Dorian Mehle have something in common. Every year, you wash a stack of dishes a quarter-mile high!

Detergents make your job so much easier. They cut right into grease and grime. They get you through dishwashing in much less time, but while they dissolve grease, they also take away the natural oils and youthful softness of your hands!

Although Dorian hasn't given up detergents her hands are as soft, as smooth, as young-looking as a teenager's. Her secret is no secret at all. It's the world's best-known beauty routine. It's pure, white Jergens Lotion, after every chore.

When you smooth on Jergens Lotion, this liquid formula doesn't just "coat" your hands. It penetrates right away, to help replace that softening moisture your skin needs.

Jergens Lotion has two ingredients doctors recommend for softening. Women must be recommending it, too, for more women use it than any other hand care in the world. Dorian's husband is the best testimonial to Jergens Lotion care. Even after years of married life, he still loves to hold her pretty hands!

Use Jergens Lotion like a prescription: three times a day, after every meal!

Use JERGENS LOTION—avoid detergent hands

Now—lotion dispenser FREE of extra cost with $1.00 size. Supply limited.

hollywood report continued

reporters who criticized their act at the London Palladium, but Abbott & Costello came back from London saying, "You can't get laughs from British audiences just because you're a success in the United States" . . . The only casualty following a name-calling spat between Nora Flynn Haymes and Lita Baron Calhoun was Rory Calhoun, Lita's husband. In the middle of the melee, which started when Nora called Lita a name, Rory tripped on the front porch of his home and cut his hand . . . And Joanne Dru Ireland, John's wife and Dick Haymes' ex-wife, went to court and demanded that Dick support his three children ahead of consideration for Nora or Rita!

FUNNIES:

The story goes that Jane Russell was dressing in front of an eight-year-old niece who ogled Jane and trilled: "How come I'm so plain and you're so fancy?" . . . Guy Madison calls Los Angeles' combination of smog and heat, sometimes known as smog, smeat . . . Bob Mitchum to Susan Hayward: "My, you're small with your shoes off!" Susie to Bob: "You're small with yours on!" . . . When Marilyn Monroe saw the X-ray of her ankle bone following that accident in Canada she said, "That's one part of me that's never been photographed before."

Madison

HOME FIRES BURNING:

Debra Paget's family gave her an anklet with a diamond heart for her twentieth birthday . . . Doris Day bought a radiant-heat dog house for her hound . . . Joan Evans has made up with her parents (she fell out with them when she married Kirby Wetherley) but her husband hasn't . . . Loretta Young, Irene Dunne, Jane Russell, June Allyson and Dick Powell have set up an outfit called International Adoption Association, object being to get children out of orphanages into private homes . . . Ann Sothern will not discuss her conversion to Catholicism with the press. She says it's a personal matter, and who can blame her? . . . Rosemary Clooney arises at six A.M. twice a week to watch José Ferrer play tennis . . . Ann Blyth gave Doc McNulty a family crest for their second anniversary—second month, that is.

Evans and father

Dale Evans' contribution to date to the American Society for Retarded Children totals $50,000 . . . Joyce Holden and Dok Stanford, who surprised everyone by announcing a date with the stork, have been married since June 16, 1951. They decided to pop with the news now that they've moved into their own home in Woodland Hills . . . The bracelet Grace Kelly is wearing is a gift from Clark Gable . . . The illness from which Jane Withers is suffering has been diagnosed as rheumatoid arthritis. Janie has to spend most of the day sleeping . . . Clifton Webb returned from Europe so excited over Rome that he is installing an Italian garden in his Beverly Hills place that's authentic right down to the naughty statues for the fountain . . . Linda Darnell returned from Italy, too, to find her daughter, Lola, an expert high diver . . . Burt Lancaster has given up the idea of buying that Connecticut farmhouse and will settle for an apartment in New York City this coming year.

ODDS BODKINS:

Nine-year-old Maggie Douglas has an overabundance of glamour parents: Paul Douglas, her real pop, and his wife, Jan Sterling, who loves to mother Maggie—and Virginia Field, her real mom, and Virginia's husband, Willard Parker, who loves to father Maggie! . . . Mary McCarty explains why Jane Russell is such a big woman: "She has to be big to make room for her big heart." . . . Marlon Brando lives on $100 a week drawn from the Marsdo Company, a corporation set up by himself, and another $50 drawn from his agent . . . Farley Granger is getting $85,000 for Summer Hurricane, the movie he's been making abroad . . . Gal about whom I've never heard an unkind word: Eve Arden . . . Esther Williams lists her swimming pool as a tax deduction. The Internal Revenue people call it her office because she spends most of her "business hours" there—working, that is . . . Joan Crawford's cure for insomnia: spend hours every night dictaphoning answers to fan mail in bed, turn the whole mess over to your secretary in the morning, then go to sleep!

Brando

Bing Crosby caused an uproar at Paramount when he showed up in boss Don Hartman's office wearing Bermuda shorts and a sports shirt . . . Kathryn Grayson's doctor told her to cancel her concert tour because of nervous exhaustion. So, says she: "I'm relaxing at home, scrubbing floors!" . . . Betsy Drake is taking guitar lessons. Poor Cary Grant . . . Roberta Haymes switched from playing Scrabble to—Steve Rowland! . . . Joan Benny and Vic Damone resumed the romance interrupted by his stretch in the Army . . . Karl Malden murders Dolores Dorn on the set of The Phantom Ape at Warners. But the catch is that this big-hearted guy picks her up and drives her to work every ayem!

SEX APPEAL:

If you measure Janet Leigh and Debra Paget around the chests you'll find they total Bob Wagner's height: 72 inches! . . . Greer Garson is hankering to make one of those sexy Italian films—in Italy . . . Marla English, Paramount's cute, new, little starlet, stopped by to see the Hollywood columnists in their offices. She's very cute: has Cadillac-blue eyes and lots of other things that spell s-t-a-r-d-o-m . . . Having heard her at a party, I can assure you that Maureen O'Hara's Irish soprano pipes are every bit as melodious as Ann Blyth's, and I hope she gets a chance to use them in a movie . . . A traveler back from Mexico City reports that the hottest glamour attraction for tourists south of the border is sleek, sunny, svelte, sexy, simply super Annie Sheridan! . . . Byron Palmer is buying a house where he can hide away from all the gals who've been bothering him for dates . . . Kathleen Hughes has devised polka-dot toenail polish . . . Fernando Lamas tells me he would give up girls—well, almost!—for a chance to play the star role in Ernest Hemingway's bullfight story, Death In The Afternoon.

Sheridan

QUICK QUOTES:

I asked Audrey Dalton if she laughs at Bob Hope's jokes or at his facial expressions. She replied: "Both—a funny story's no good unless it's told with the right face" . . . Grace Kelly inherited Shirley Booth's former Hollywood apartment and sighed, "I hope some of the talent rubbed off" . . . Anne Baxter on the subject of romance: "I'm as free as the wind because the man on the white horse hasn't come along as yet."

Farley Granger wrote me from Rome: "A sweet, rich, young Italian countess thinks she and I should get married. I told her I would if she would give me Sam Goldwyn (Farley's former boss) as a wedding present" . . . Jean Peters on the subject of Latin lovers: "They take longer to tell you how wonderful you are, but what a wonderful way to get bored!"

Granger

Pete Lawford was talking about people and the questions he runs into on his trips around the country. He said that this is the sort of thing he goes through!

A girl comes up to him and says, "Have you got a sweetheart?" His answer is that his work keeps him pretty busy. Then she says, "What is your favorite type of girl?" So Pete looks around and by then there are several types hanging around and he doesn't want to stick his neck out. So he answers, "I like healthy girls."

That doesn't discourage the questioners. One asks, "Who do you like best to take out on dates?" Pete has a good answer for that. He says, "Girls . . . just girls!"

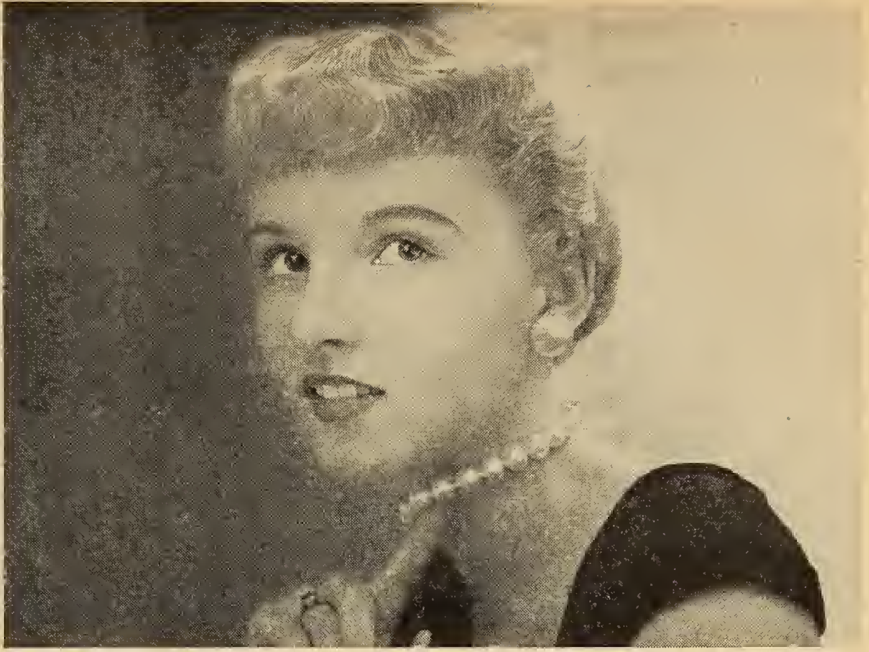
Then comes the embarrassing type question. A girl says, "You're a bachelor, aren't you? Did you ever think of getting married?" The best retort to that is this, "Yes."

Pete says that this short answer, usually, is a surprise.

It stops everything dead for about 30 seconds. Then someone says, "What do you admire most in a girl?" Pete says an actor can say—Intelligence, sense of humor, modesty, anything like that. But then some wise little creature will come up with, "You mean you don't like sex appeal in your girl friends?" At that point you say, "I'm sorry, you wonderful people, but my train is about ready to leave."

Next time Pete Lawford makes a personal apppearance in your town, just to get even, you can step up to him and say, "Mr. Lawford, are there any questions you'd like to ask me?" If you tried that technique on any actor, he'd fall over in a dead faint . . . and you could drag him away, because he'd be all yours!

Carl Schroeder



Only Bobbi is designed to give the soft waves needed for this "Bobbi Bob"—the 1920 bob gone modern. Bobbi gives waves exactly where you want them.

NO TIGHT, FUSSY CURLS ON THIS PAGE!

These hairdos were made with Bobbi ...the special home permanent for casual hair styles

Yes, Bobbi Pin-Curl Permanent is designed to give you lovelier, softer curls . . . the kind you need for today's casual hairdos. Never the tight, fussy curls you get with ordinary home or beauty shop permanents. Immediately after you use Bobbi your hair has the beauty, the body, the soft, lovely look of naturally wavy hair. And your hair stays that way—your wave lasts week after week.

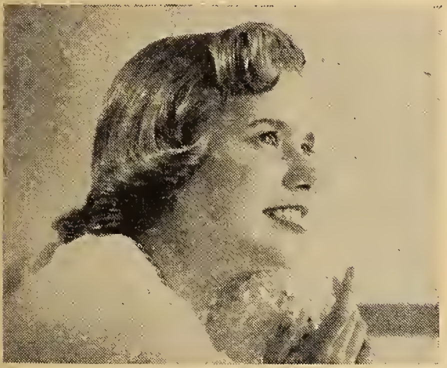
Bobbi's so easy to use, too. You just put your hair in pin curls. Then apply Bobbi Creme Oil Lotion. A little later rinse hair with water, let dry, brush out—and that's all. No clumsy curlers to use. No help needed.

Ask for Bobbi Pin-Curl Permanent. If you like to be in fashion—if you can make a simple pin curl—you'll love Bobbi.

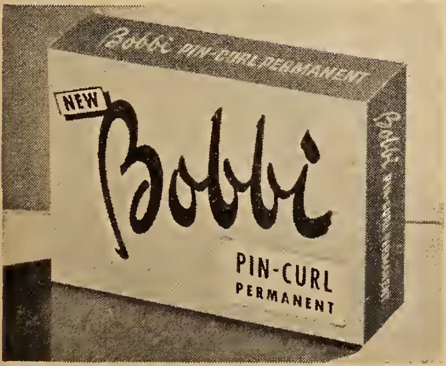
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Bobbi is perfect for this gay, casual "Florentine" hairdo, for Bobbi is the permanent designed to give soft, natural-looking curls. No help needed.

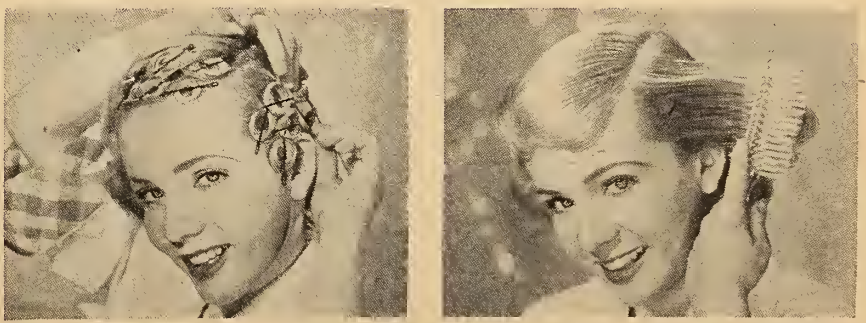
Bobbi's soft curls make a casual wave like this possible. Notice the easy, natural look of the curls in this new "Starlite" style. No nightly settings needed.



Casual, carefree—that's the "Skylark," thanks to Bobbi! Bobbi Pin-Curl Permanents always give you soft, carefree curls and waves right from the start.



Everything you need! New Creme Oil Lotion, special bobby pins, complete instructions for use. $1.50 plus tax.



Just simple pin-curls and Bobbi give this far easier home permanent. When hair is dry, brush out. Neutralizing is automatic. No curlers, no resetting.

PICTURE OF THE MONTH

movie reviews

by florence epstein

MOGAMBO Some girls will go to any length to cop a maharajah. Kelly (that's Ava Gardner) hops off a bar stool in New York and lands in the middle of Africa. Her maharajah has gone up the river on a safari without so much as a fare-thee-well. Good riddance, thinks Ava, the minute she spots Clark Gable. He's a professional hunter with a jaded theory about women. Easy come, easy go, is the theory. He loves Ava till the pack boat arrives, then he gives her ten minutes to sprint for it. Getting off the boat are Grace Kelly and her scientist husband, Donald Sinden. Grace arouses Gable's protective instinct, which is one instinct away from pure, undying love. If you think Ava takes this, you're silly. She fights like a panther. The utter splendor of Tanganyika and the magnificent shots of wild gorillas and hostile natives pale a little beside this girl, whose wisecracks, low cut gowns and feline grace steal the picture. Technicolor.—MGM

HANK MARTIN CAMPAIGN HEADQUARTERS
EVERY PENNY • NICKEL • DIME HELPS! GIVE!

A LION IS IN THE STREETS This particular lion is James Cagney and you can hear his roar all over the south. Cagney is a peddler in a small, cotton-growing town. The item he sells best is himself. School teacher Barbara Hale doesn't even ask the price when she marries him, but she pays plenty ever after. Fiery and wildly ambitious, he becomes a champion of the people by proving that the town's chief cotton dealer (Larry Keating) is short-weighing the farmers. Flushed with this victory, which is accompanied by bloodshed, Cagney acquires a blonde (Anne Francis) and lays his remaining principles at the feet of an influential gambler (Onslow Stevens). Stevens promises him the governorship. Almost delivers it, too. But you remember what Abe Lincoln said: You can't fool all of the people all of the time. Too bad Cagney doesn't remember. Among the townspeople who aren't fooled are Warner Anderson and Jeanne Cagney. Technicolor.—Warners

BLOWING WILD Anthony Quinn owns eighteen oil wells in Mexico. An uncouth bandit named Juan García is willing to let him keep them for fifty thousand dollars. Quinn's so scared he's half way to the bank before Gary Cooper stops him. Cooper isn't worth a nickel (García blew up his oil well the week before) but he has more nerve than the entire Mexican army, Don't pay—fight; says Coop, who happens to be working for Quinn after a lapse of some years. The lapse was due to Quinn's wife, Barbara Stanwyck, who always loved Coop more. Coop tries brushing Barbara off again, but it isn't easy. Ruth Roman, who passes her time as a black-jack dealer in a local casino, lends a helping hand. To get back to the oil—what with the bandits whooping it up around those wells, Barbara considering tossing her husband into one, and Coop extracting a live nitro torpedo from another—there's plenty blowing wild. Including Ward Bond.—Warners

THE BIG HEAT A cop commits suicide because his conscience would have killed him, anyway, if not his wife (Jeanette Nolan). She blossoms in mink immediately and this arouses Glenn Ford's suspicion. Glenn is a cop, too, but honest. He decides the city is ruled by gangsters and he's going to clean it up. Alone, if necessary. And that's necessary, because his superiors keep telling him the case is closed. Superiors are scared of the big boss (Alexander Scourby). Ford is scared of no one, especially after his wife (Jocelyn Brando) is victimized by the gang and his small daughter is threatened. Glenn involves himself with B-girls, moronic henchmen and smart alecs who hurl scalding coffee into their sweethearts' faces. One sweetheart (Gloria Grahame) resents this treatment; it's bad for the complexion. With her aid, Glenn exposes more crooks than the Kefauver committee. Players include Lee Marvin, Peter Whitney, Willis Bouchey.—Columbia

Elizabeth Taylor, star of RHAPSODY,
an M-G-M Technicolor picture, finds Leg-O-Genic glamour easy with Bur-Mil Cameo nylons.

"SOFT, MISTY STOCKINGS SPELL LEG LOVELINESS..."

says Elizabeth Taylor

BUR-MIL
CAMEO STOCKINGS WITH EXCLUSIVE
face powder finish

"Shiny stockings can make the loveliest legs appear unshapely," says lovely Elizabeth Taylor. That's the reason Miss Taylor and other M-G-M stars welcome the soft, misty, permanent dullness of Bur-Mil Cameo's exclusive Face Powder Finish. And you'll find Leg-O-Genic beauty in Cameo's 66 gauge, 12 denier personally proportioned nylons—the most luxuriously sheer stockings you can buy! Incidentally, they give up to 40% longer wear by actual test!

Ask for Bur-Mil Cameo 66 gauge, 12 denier nylons . . . $1.65. Other styles from $1.15 to $1.65.

ALSO MADE IN CANADA BY BURLINGTON MILLS HOSIERY COMPANY OF CANADA, LTD.

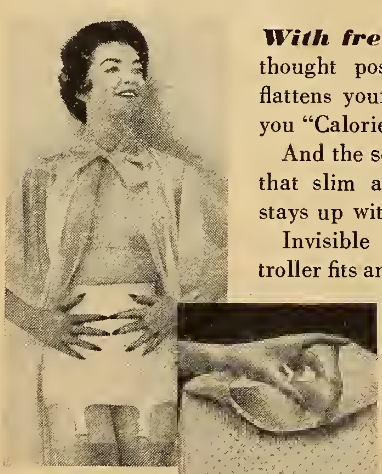
BUR-MIL, CAMEO, FACE POWDER FINISH AND LEG-O-GENIC ARE REGISTERED TRADEMARKS OF BURLINGTON MILLS CORPORATION.

Now... Control those "Calorie-Curves"!
Imagine! Hidden "finger" panels plus new non-roll top that slim, firm and control you without a single seam, stitch, bone or stay!

New Playtex® Magic-Controller! (FABRIC LINED)

Now available in all 3 styles:

Garter girdle — Panty with garters — Panty brief



With freedom and comfort you never thought possible, Magic-Controller firms and flattens your figure from waist to thighs—gives you "Calorie-Curve Control"!

And the secret? Those hidden "finger" panels that slim and smooth, that non-roll top that stays up without a stay!

Invisible under sleekest clothes, Magic-Controller fits and feels like a second skin. Cloud-soft fabric lining inside, lovely textured latex outside, it's one piece and wonderful! Wash it in seconds—you can practically watch it dry.

Feel that soft-as-a-cloud fabric lining—see the lovely textured latex outside.

Playtex Magic-Controller*...Now in all 3 styles

Garter Girdle . . . with 4 reinforced adjustable garters, $7.95

Panty Girdle . . . with 4 reinforced adjustable garters, $7.95

Panty Brief, $6.95

Fabric Lined Playtex Girdles, from $4.95

Other famous Playtex Girdles, from $3.50

Extra-Large sizes slightly higher.

Playtex . . . known everywhere as the girdle in the SLIM tube. At department stores and specialty shops everywhere.

*U.S.A. and Foreign Patents Pending

©1953 International Latex Corp'n... PLAYTEX PARK... Dover Del. Playtex Ltd., Arnprior, Ontario

VICKI Vicki (Jean Peters) was a waitress until publicity man Elliott Reid and columnist Casey Adams discovered her. Overnight, they turned Vicki into New York's most famous model. But both are willing to swear they didn't turn her into a corpse. Someone did—on the morning she intended to depart for Hollywood. A sadistic detective, Richard Boone, insists on handling the case. Nothing would give him greater pleasure than sending Reid to the chair. But who says Reid's guilty? That detective looks pretty homicidal himself. And there are other suspects. Vicki's sister, Jeanne Crain, kept plugging away as a bookkeeper while Vicki wallowed in glamour. A matinee idol, Alex D'Arcy, loved Vicki enough to kill her if she spurned him. Take that crazy little desk clerk, Aaron Spelling. He could have made a fortune haunting houses. Why not question him? No sir, you can't sway Boone's one-track mind—and guess where the track is going!—20th Century-Fox.

TANGA TIKA It took Dwight Long four years to produce Tanga Tika (he was his own director, sound man and cameraman) which may be why he achieved such a happy blend of authenticity and charm. This is a movie about Tahiti, but don't expect a documentary. Expect a warm and simple love story centering around Timi, an island chief's son. To wed his girl Timi must have money, so he enters the South Pacific Olympic Games for a prize purse. You see dance competitions, canoe races, javelin meets—events highlighted by the knowledge that Timi's romance hangs in the balance. In addition, you see copra workers scaling giant trees, fishermen stoning their prey as the Tahitians did a thousand years ago. You see a Chinese wedding ceremony, a tropical feast, a shipwreck and a rescue in shark-infested waters. —Norton and Condon.

THOSE REDHEADS FROM SEATTLE Papa is a newspaper editor in Dawson, Alaska. For his pains in trying to reform that outpost, he catches two bullets in the chest. Mama (Agnes Moorehead) and her four daughters (Rhonda Fleming, Teresa Brewer and the Bell sisters) arrive via dogsled—too late for the funeral, but not soon enough for Gene Barry, a saloon keeper who immediately succumbs to Rhonda's charms. Gene is the villain in this piece, as his dancing girls and poker tables will attest. Rhonda fixes him; she takes over her dad's newspaper and writes poison pen editorials. Sister Teresa doesn't want revenge; she wants to show her legs in Barry's chorus, and does, to the disgrace of her redheaded family. And sister Cynthia dares to fall for Guy Mitchell, the saloon's emcee. What turmoil, what heady passions play themselves out in this Technicolored, 3-D, musical drama!—Para.

THUNDER OVER THE PLAINS In 1869 there weren't ny oil wells in Texas. No Nieman-Marcus, either, o you can understand why Phyllis Kirk is bored. Besides, carpetbaggers are swarming around like ultures feeding on the farmers. Ben Westman (Charles McGraw) is a kind of local Robin Hood aking it tough for those baggers. According to martial law, Westman's an outlaw. Phyllis' husband, Randolph Scott, is an Army officer, but he's thrown into confusion about performing his duty. He admires Westman too much. Lex Barker is an officer of a different stripe. He hates Texans, he likes Phyllis, he's willing to relieve Randy of the care of both. Gunfighting goes on amid Technicolor scenery, but Thunder Over The Plains isn't just a shoot-'em-up. It deals with those rare qualities known as honor and loyalty—and that's a refreshing change. Cast includes Elisha Cook, Jr., Hugh Sanders, Lane Chandler, Mark Dana.—Warners.

ARRY ME AGAIN Marie Wilson and Robert Cummings almost never get to the altar in this one. Bob is a jet pilot recalled to duty about three seconds efore he can produce the ring. I gotta go, honey, he hispers to his eager bride and races out of the hurch. While he's becoming a hero in Korea, she's nheriting a million dollars from a newly-dead aunt. Marie can't tell Bob, though, knowing his stubborn ride. This same pride impels him to tell the world, ia national radio hook-up, that any wife of his will ave to struggle along on the sixty-five bucks a eek he earns as an auto mechanic. What happens ext is exactly what you'd expect, although that oesn't make it any easier to sit through. Assisting n the broad and baleful attempts at comedy are Ray Walker, Mary Costa, Richard Gaines and two French oodles.—RKO SPERATE MOMENT The time is post-war Germany; the place is prison where an innocent man Dirk Bogarde) is serving a life sentence for mur- r. He doesn't care, because the woman he loved Mai Zetterling) was killed during the last weeks of war. Imagine Dirk's surprise when Mai turns up visiting day. Let me out of here, he screams. wn, boy, they say. Obviously, Dirk is being framed, in his position, it's hard to prove. The only urse is to escape and find the arch-fiend (Albert even) who posed as his dearest friend. Actually, ven's a ruthless black-marketeer. He knew Mai s alive, but he lied a little to save his own skin. w a chase begins that grows in excitement as each ness to the murder is bumped off. Lieven hightails or the Russian sector of Berlin, but he can't run t enough when love and justice betrayed are at heels.—J. Arthur Rank; U.-I. release

Dummies don't perspire
...but real live girls need MUM®
MUM
AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF LAUNDERING CERTIFIED
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

New Mum with M-3 kills odor bacteria ...stops odor all day long

PROOF!

New Mum with M-3 destroys bacteria that cause perspiration odor.

Photo (left), shows active odor bacteria. Photo (right), after adding new Mum, shows bacteria destroyed!

Mum contains M-3, a scientific discovery that actually destroys odor bacteria . . . doesn't give underarm odor a chance to start.

Amazingly effective protection from underarm perspiration odor — just use new Mum daily. So sure, so safe for normal skin. Safe for clothes. Gentle Mum is certified by the American Institute of Laundering. Won't rot or discolor even your finest fabrics.

No waste, no drying out. The only leading deodorant that contains no water to dry out or decrease its efficiency. Usable right to the bottom of the jar. Get Mum—stay nice to be near!

For sanitary napkins — Mum is gentle, safe, dependable . . . ideal for this use, too.

A Product of Bristol-Myers

Take a Tip from the Nelsons! See and Hear "THE ADVENTURES OF OZZIE & HARRIET" Two different shows, radio and television, every week. See your paper for times and stations.

AT THE FIRST SIGN OF A

COLD OR SORE THROAT

"OZZIE & HARRIET" know what to do!

Kills germs like these way back on throat surfaces

(1) Pneumococcus Type III, (2) Hemophilus influenzae, (3) Streptococcus pyogenes, (4) Pneumococcus Type II, (5) Streptococcus salivarius.

These, and other "secondary invaders," as well as germ-types not shown, can be quickly reduced in number by the Listerine Antiseptic gargle.

They know that . . .

LISTERINE INSTANTLY KILLS GERMS ON THROAT SURFACES . . . BY MILLIONS!

At the first sign of a sneeze, cough or sniffle, out comes the Listerine bottle and the Nelsons start gargling. With heavy TV and radio commitments, they simply can't afford to let a cold or a sore throat due to colds get them down if they can help it.

Like millions of other healthy American families, they have found that, used early and often, Listerine can often help head off a cold entirely or lessen its severity.

That is also true in reducing the number of sore throats.

In tests over 12 years, users had fewer colds, fewer sore throats

You see, Listerine Antiseptic reaches way back on throat surfaces to kill millions of germs, including the "secondary invaders" (see panel above).

These are the threatening germs that many authorities believe account for much of a cold's misery when they invade the tissue.

Listerine often halts such mass invasions . . . attacks the germs before they attack you. Actual tests showed germ reductions on mouth and throat surfaces ranging up to 96.7% even fifteen minutes after gargling and up to 80% after one hour.

This safe, germ-killing action, we believe, accounts for this remarkable record:

Tests made over a 12-year period showed that regular twice-a-day users of Listerine Antiseptic had fewer colds, and generally milder ones, and fewer sore throats than non-users.

So, if colds are going around, it's a pretty smart idea to see that everybody in the family gargles systematically with this wonderful antiseptic.

DECAMERON NIGHTS One of the greatest medieval story tellers was a writer named Boccaccio, and his most famous work was a collection of tales called The Decameron. Someone, namely RKO, finally got smart and based a movie on it. This movie. Louis Jourdan plays Boccaccio himself—a sensitive romantic, hopelessly in love with a young widow (Joan Fontaine). Joan is of such high moral character that she clings to mourning much longer than decency requires. Jourdan seeks refuge in her castle during a local war, and to keep him busy she demands he tell an after dinner story after every dinner. Certainly, says Jourdan—and what a spicy, imaginative spell he weaves over that lady. Clothed in laughter and medieval costume, Decameron Nights is exotic and delightful entertainment. Binnie Barnes, Godfrey Tearle, Joan Collins are among the cast.—RKO

RECOMMENDED FILMS NOW PLAYING

THE ROBE (20th-Fox): This widely-heralded epic of early Christian days tells in sensational new CinemaScope (realism without goggles) the story of Lloyd C. Douglas' best-selling novel. Heading the huge cast are Richard Burton, Jean Simmons, Victor Mature. Technicolor.

LITTLE FUGITIVE: Wonderful newcomer Richie Andrusco as a seven-year-old who thinks he has killed his brother and runs away to Coney Island for a mixed-up, riotous day. Independently produced, this picture took top honors at the Venice Festival.

THE ALL-AMERICAN (U.I.): Tony Curtis as an athlete who shows a snobbish Ivy League College what football and democracy are all about. Also attending: Richard Long, Lori Nelson.

THE MOONLIGHTER (Warners): Action, excitement, and plenty of love interest with Barbara Stanwyck, Fred MacMurray and Ward Bond fighting it out amidst cattle rustlers and bank robbers.

THE CADDY (Para.); If you can believe it, Martin and Lewis got together on a golf course and began their career by taking a few hilarious pratfalls in fron of a little fat man with a lot of pull. Barbara Bates, too.

THE GOLDEN BLADE (U.I.): Piper Laurie and Rock Hudson in Bagdadian costumes and Technicolor are enough to defeat any plot (even by Gene Nelson)—add an invincible sword and half a dozen plots—and you come up with a lot of fun.

FROM HERE TO ETERNITY (Col.): A brilliant portrait of Army lives and loves adapted from James Jones' best seller. Excellent performances by Montgomery Clift, Frank Sinatra, Burt Lancaster, Deborah Kerr and Donna Reed.

GENTLEMEN PREFER BLONDES (20th-Fox): Marilyn Monroe and Jane Russell in tights and Technicolor as Anita Loos' uninhibited gals with diamonds on their minds. Also involved: Charles Coburn, Tommy Noonan, Elliott Reed.

THE BAND WAGON (M-G-M): Fred Astaire and Cyd Charisse team for top-notch dancing in this above-average musical; delightful songs and a lot of Technicolored fun with Oscar Levant, Nanette Fabray and Jack Buchanan.

LATIN LOVERS (M-G-M): Lana Turner doesn't know what to do with all her money and can't decide whether to let millionaire John Lund or masterful Latin Ricardo Montalban help her out. Technicolor ISLAND IN THE SKY (Warners): John Wayne and a crew of Army pilots are downed in a Greenland snowstorm; Colonel Walter Abel makes a desperate attempt to locate the lost men before their supplies run out.

sweet and hot

Highly Recommended
*Recommended
No Stars: Average

by leonard feather

RECORD OF THE MONTH

DUKE ELLINGTON—*Premièred By Ellington (Capitol). Here's an unusual album idea. All eight songs were originally presented by the Ellington band years ago, but were not written by Duke, who usually writes all his own music.

Stardust is here—Duke's band played it before it had its famous lyrics. So are Cocktails For Two and My Old Flame, which the Ellington band played in two movies, Murder At The Vanities and Belle Of The Nineties. You'll also hear Liza, Flamingo, Stormy Weather, I Can't Give You Anything But Love—all melodic performances with the unique Ellington touch by a band that's still ahead of the field.

Odd sidelight: Three Little Words is the song Duke first recorded for a movie soundtrack, along with the Rhythm Boys trio—because the producer wasn't satisfied with an earlier solo version cut by a member of that trio, a lad named Bing Crosby.

FROM THE MOVIES

FROM HERE TO ETERNITY—Taps by Rudy Vallee (Victor). Title theme by Ray Bloch* (Coral). Re-Enlistment Blues by Ray Bloch (Coral).

The Ray Bloch version of From Here features a very pretty accordion solo by Mat Mathews, a talented new star from Holland. Rudy Vallee's disc is coupled with a new version of his perennial Whiffenpoof Song.

JOE LOUIS STORY—theme and I'll Be Around by George Bassman* (MGM).

These two sides, recorded in New York, are from the soundtrack of the biographical film about the fighter. Bassman, best known as the composer of I'm Getting Sentimental Over You, wrote some unusually interesting background music.

ITTLE BOY LOST—The Magic Window and Cela M'Est Egal by Bing Crosby (Decca).

These two tunes from Bing's latest should help to reestablish his slightly sagging popularity on records.

TORY OF THREE LOVES—Eighteenth Variation from Rachmaninoff's Rhapsody On A Theme of Paganini by William Kapell with Fritz Reiner & The Robin Hood Dell Orch.* (Victor).

OPULAR

IC DAMONE—*Ebb Tide (Mercury).

OMMY DORSEY—Tenderly LP (Decca).

This is listed as a set of "love songs in waltz time." Actually it's nothing of the sort (there isn't a single tune out of the eight that's played in waltz time) but these are excellent swinging adaptations, arranged by Neal Hefti, of tunes that were originally waltzes, including the title song, Charmaine, I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now and, most important, Tommy's recent best seller, The Most Beautiful Girl In The World.

IRVING NURICK

Merry Xmas Mother

Are you in the know?

What solves your family gift problem?
☐ Charge 'em to Dad ☐ I.O.U.'s

You'd plant really different (and wonderful) presents under the family tree? Write I.O.U.'s! One to Mom, promising you'll take over some household chore daily—for 3 months. To Dad your pledge to deliver 20 shoe shines on demand. And Sis? She'll prefer the present to future service; get something glamorous, "grown-up." But one day you can do her a service—by helping her to get the sanitary protection that keeps her confident: Kotex. Those flat, pressed ends prevent revealing outlines!

Want to winterize your chassis?
☐ Add anti-freeze ☐ Change oil

Snow weather sets your teeth a-chattering? Heed both hints above. Keep your radiator (circulation) "het up" with such "anti-freeze" as outdoor sports, wholesome meals, ample H2O and juices. And chapproof your pelt; change to richer beauty creams. On "those" days, you'll radiate poise with the comfort Kotex gives: softness (holds its shape!), plus extra protection to thaw all chilling doubts.

For mistletoe bait, why not try—
☐ Formal flattery ☐ Gooless lipstick

You, too, can be a Lorelei in your holiday formal—even if you're built on the lean and hollow side. A gently draped bodice, a gossamer stole, can make a dream dress perfect for you. So too, a girl's calendar needs should be exactly suited to her. That's why Kotex gives you a choice of 3 absorbencies. Try 'em! There's Regular, Junior, Super.

Regular Kotex

More women choose KOTEX* than all other sanitary napkins

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Which of these "steadies" does most for you?
☐ Romeo & Juliet ☐ Kotex and Kotex belts ☐ Moon 'n' June

Made for each other—that's Kotex and Kotex sanitary belts—and made to keep you comfortable. Of strong, soft-stretch elastic . . . they're designed to prevent curling, cutting or twisting. So lightweight you'll hardly know you're wearing one. And Kotex belts take kindly to dunking; stay flat even after countless washings. Why not buy two . . . for a change!

Creating a successful personality for yourself is like painting a picture, according to vivacious Mona Freeman. It takes care and a natural manner—plus a lot of attention to make-up.

Take my word for it

by MONA FREEMAN, star columnist for December

Painting made me more tolerant but baby won't be an "easel-orphan."

I learned not to bubble too much, and to try to keep an even mood.

HOW TO BE INTERESTING—BE INTERESTED in many things but mostly in people. There are many approaches. I found a good one in painting, though I didn't know it to be that at the time. I started to paint four years ago for recreation. But I found it was also giving me a new pair of eyes and a new understanding of people. The friend whose appearance I had formerly written off as just "plain" I now began to see as individual, possessing qualities in either formation of features or combination of coloring that I ached to capture on canvas. Faces took on a new meaning to me—and so did their owners. I saw more deeply, more thoroughly into their personalities. I became, via something I thought was just a hobby, much more tolerant.

I UNDERSTOOD MORE ABOUT MYSELF, TOO. I found out that I have a tendency to go whole hog about things. For a while I got so that nothing else mattered as long as I could paint. The house went to pot, appointments were put off, my little girl became an "easel-orphan." When I awoke to what was going on I gave up painting altogether for a while, and now I watch myself against overdoing it. My worst model is myself—I refuse to hold still in the mirror.

Painting gave me an insight into the moods of people—including me. I am the victim of many moods, not all good, and I used to give in to them. The worst one, curiously enough, was a gay exuberance which would strike me every so often. This was bad because anyone meeting me when I was "high" in this manner would expect me to be the same bubbly person always. When I failed to come up to expectations the next time they saw me, there was an odd letdown; a sense of social failure floated in the atmosphere and, believe me, this can be demoralizing.

THE IMPORTANCE OF AN EVEN MOOD cannot be overstated—especially in marriage. Can you think of any more provoking (and more common) expression between husband and wife than, "Well! What's got into you today?" Two people who recognized this in their marriage were my husband and I. We got so that whenever one of us was down the other automatically worked to talk her or him out of it. Of course, when we were both down . . . but let's not even bring that up!

If you think I'm overenthusiastic about painting's helping me in unexpected ways, let me tell you about some other benefits that came sneaking into my way of life as a result of it. For instance, while working on a picture of a girl friend one morning I was suddenly struck by the length of time it took to paint a face on canvas compared to the short time it took to "do" a face in real life—meaning my make-up! From that time on there has been no more hasty smear, daub and slap-on for me at the mirror. I take pains. Once I have it on though, before going out for an evening, that's it. I don't fuss with it afterwards.

PAINTING IS A BUSINESS OF MIXING COLORS to get the exact shade you want, and in doing faces it is also a blending of the colors to reproduce the way nature works in its tones. All artists know this, and also girls who put on make-up. But I decided I wasn't paying enough blending attention to my own face when I realized how much care it took to make a face look realistic on canvas. In time I developed some little beauty tricks along this line. First of all I made sure my face was absolutely clean before I applied make-up. No more of this rushing home and piling on new make-up on top of old, as girls will often do.

In applying rouge—which I do with a brush, of course—I began mixing in a little face powder with it. I found it went on more smoothly and eliminated this business of looking pale except around the cheeks where you suddenly take on a harsh, healthy look. Instead, you could achieve, in this manner, the soft, rosy sort of glow that looks as though it comes from within instead of having been slapped on from without.

I USED TO APPLY VASELINE or cold cream to my eyelids to give me that old eyeshine, but I gradually realized that here you have to fight gravity and it's a losing battle—the vaseline tends to run and gather at the eyelash line. Pretty soon you feel something and daub at it and there you are, making pretty conversation in the parlor and wondering what to do with a fingertipful of goop! So ruling out the greased-eye treatment, I went in for silver eye shadow instead, putting it on at the eyelashes and achieving my sparkle without worrying about having to drain my eye oil every social mile.

There are two more phases of this blending process. After my make-up is all on, I take a hot washcloth and hold it close against my face. Or sometimes I even daub at my face with warm water. What I achieve here is most important—an elimination of the dry, powdery appearance that so spoils the look of a face, and a more perfect blending of everything you've used, powder, rouge, lipstick and pencil.

I don't have to tell you not to touch your mascara with either the washcloth or water!

AND THEN THE FINAL TOUCH. In portrait work I learned that when the hair is lightened wherever it is against the face the whole appearance is softened. I make use of this technique for myself now. You know that hair-streaking vogue that originated in France and has become all the rage? I use the same touch to ighten my hair around my face. In summer time, fortunately, the sun does it for me. I'm one of those blondes whose hair bleaches into a two-tone job, lightening up just where I want it. But in winter or when I can't get out into the sun for long enough periods, I get my hair streaked to achieve the same effect, blonde-streaked, not grey.

WHEN I BUY A DRESS I look for what I have earned to call the "impossible." This perfect dress is one that is very plain, very simple, yet very feminine. You know what I mean. It isn't color, or decoration, or unusual effect. I don't care what the color is, the decorations only add flip, unusual effects individualize the dress more than they do you. The "impossible" has to be present in the line, in the cut. If it isn't, anything else in the dress is just an inducement to compromise.

Like everybody else I have to compromise a lot . . . but I keep looking. When I do find what I want I hang on to it, believe me. I once bought an outfit that will seem a whole botch of colors when I describe it but, take my word for it, it was a dream costume. The skirt was a tight-fitting, dark blue, wool crepe, and the jacket was cashmere, done in green and white checks, with a red lining! I know, I know how it sounds. But it was it! For five years it was the star of my wardrobe. The moment I lifted it off the hanger, knowing I was going to wear it, I felt myself armed, primed and set for a conquering day!

As soon as I finish this I think I'm going out prowling again . . . looking through the stores for the "impossible." I'll never hunt big game in Africa, but I bet the thrill is the same!

LEARNING TO LOOK FOR WHAT I WANT has turned me from the worst shopper in the world to, I think, a pretty good one. I used to pick up things that had no possible relation to the rest of my clothes. Now I buy nothing I can't visualize as part of a combination; in fact, not only as part of one combination but part of others I might be able to make up from my wardrobe. Very often I do what many girls do, I'm sure. I play the "clothes game," laying out all I've got to wear and trying to re-assemble it in new outfits. Sometimes you can hit on some surprising combinations.

Having taken care of my make-up and my clothes, there remains only one thing more to worry about . . . the real me . . . and how real am I to people I meet? What's the use of kidding? Beauty and clothes can make a girl look interesting but in the long run she has to be interesting to hold on to her happiness.

BEAUTY IS A RESPONSIBILITY. To me there is nothing worse than a girl who uses her beauty at a time when she should be using her intelligence or better still, her true, warm heart. For it is only by heart-to-heart steps with others that a person can lift himself into being a really happy human being.

Mona Freeman

It costs so little to look Lovable

ADD-Vantage with invisible padding...$2

So good when you slip on Lovable's padded ADD-Vantage. You look better. You feel better! The hidden foamette curves and firms, adds beauty without bulk, can't lose its shape. And it's light-as-a-whisper...both on your figure and your budget! Ask for Lovable's ADD-Vantage, only $2 everywhere.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

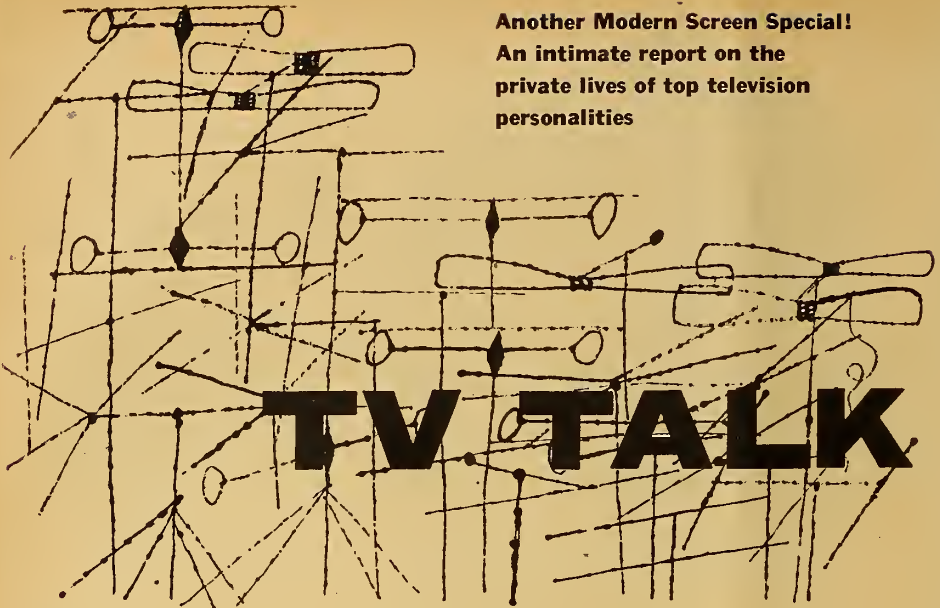
Other fine Lovable styles, padded and regular, from $1 to $2.50...Also in Canada.

Lovable BRA

Look for the heart . . . for the Lovable look.

The Lovable Brassiere Co., Dept. DM-12, 180 Madison Ave., New York 16, N.Y.

Another Modern Screen Special!
An intimate report on the private lives of top television personalities



TV TALK

JACKIE GLEASON's home life is one of the most frenetic in show business. Separated from his wife, he lives alone in a penthouse apartment in the same hotel Mrs. Roosevelt used to live in. But he's never alone. He has incorporated himself so that the $25,000-a-year duplex is deductible. And he uses it for an office, rehearsal hall, and dancing school—for everything that goes into his television show. There are dancers hoofing in one room, singers warbling in another, and scriptwriters somewhere else. Agents and directors and friends wander in and out of the kitchen helping themselves, and the phone keeps ringing. Jackie—or Jackie's voice—is everywhere.

RED BUTTONS actually enjoys writing out his rent checks. His jazzy new apartment overlooking the East River costs $400 month, and Red is just plain proud that he can afford it. He and Helayne, the tiny Mrs. B., went out and signed up for the layout before his first TV show. Only after he made his sudden and smashing success did they know they could afford it. Before they moved in, Helayne got herself an interior decorator. The living-dining room ended up café-au-lait, chartreuse, and coral. Their bedroom is all pink—the walls, the carpeting, the oversize bed, even the telephone. But one room was never finished. It could be a den or a guest room, but the Buttonses don't want anything but a crib in it. So there the room sits, with suitcases and pictures stacked on the floor, waiting for the one thing Red hasn't got—a baby. Don't pay any attention, by the way, to the rumors that Buttons has gone high hat. He's just trying to get something out of life that his club-date days never gave him. And he has found out, just as all celebrities do, that the minute the money starts rolling in, the relatives start asking for it. The people he wants to do things for—his parents, his brother, and his sister, the people who did things for him before he was a big star—get anything they want. They don't want much, however; it's the cousins he never heard of who are clamoring. And ignore the nasty rumors about Helayne. Sure, she calls Red, "Rouge," but it's not an affectation. So does his lawyer—and anyone else who knew him overseas. When he was in France entertaining with the Mickey Rooney troupe during the war, he told a French girl at a bar that his name was Red Buttons. "Ah," she said, "Rouge Boutons!" His buddies picked it up; the next morning the sergeant at roll call bellowed out "Rouge Boutons," and now Helayne uses it. All very legitimate.

TWO OTHER TENANTS in the same building with Red and Helayne are Faye Emerson and her piano-playing husband, Skitch Henderson. Faye leads a busy social life all her own, and some observers think that her marriage is smooth only when it strikes Faye's fancy. As you know, she gave up her Butch hairdo in a hurry, right after she stopped being the intellectual moderator on Author Meets The Critic, and returned to her famous chignon. So, from the neck up, she looks about like the old Faye. Below that, though, she has spread. And she's not the fashion plate she used to be. You can see her around town in sober black numbers that don't turn her into the glamour girl we all used to know.

THEIR FRIENDS WONDER how long Ernie Kovacs and Edith Adams can keep on this way. They've been in love for years, but the Hungarian with the string tie and the little blonde singer of Wonderful Town can't get married because he already is. Although his wife has left him and their two little girls (his mother takes care of them), she apparently doesn't want a divorce. Religious difficulties stand in the way, too.

DAVE GARROWAY really isn't nuts about J. Fred Muggs, the chimp who gets more fan mail than the star of Today. And Mr. Muggs acts as though the feeling were mutual. When you see him away from Garroway, he's as lovable as can be—friendly and full of tricks. But around Dave he apparently doesn't feel too playful. He proved it once by biting him!

BERGEN EVANS, the professor with the puns on Super Ghost and Down You Go, doesn't have to worry about losing his teaching job at Northwestern because he frolics on TV panel shows (a cause for firing in many colleges). He's been there so long, and is so popular with the students, that a near-riot would break out if the University tried to clamp down.

IT'S FUNNY how men will stick to the same physical types when they pick a second wife. Movie producer Frank Ross (The Robe) did it when he married Joan Caulfield. You'd never know it from hearing her on My Favorite Husband, but her voice is low-pitched just like Jean Arthur's. Jean, of course, was Joan's predecessor. Joan, incidentally, made a lot of friends in the New York press when she came to town for interviews before her show started. It undoubtedly helped My Favorite Husband get off to a good start. The fact that the show turned out to be good didn't hurt, of course.

SHERMAN BILLINGSLEY used to be very fussy about which newspaper and magazine writers he would deign to see. Even wrote CBS a letter giving them a list of the publications he would talk to! It was a short one, too. But when he found himself without a sponsor, he changed his tune fast.

JEROME THOR and his agent told the press that he and wife Sydna Scott left Europe and Foreign Intrigue because they wanted to get back to the good old U.S.A. after two years abroad. The other side of that story is that he picked up a bad case of plain, old-fashioned temperament. Even reached the point where he allowed the cameramen to shoot him from just one side, his "good" side. It might be all right for Claudette Colbert, but the boys on the other end of the camera were not impressed.

MAKING TV SHOWS ABROAD can be just as hazardous as making movies abroad. Movie stars make treks to Europe to do pictures for some independent outfits and then return because the financing has fallen through. And so do the TV people. Foreign Intrigue and the Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., shows have been the only successes; the rest have gone little further than a press release or two. Even Fairbanks had trouble in Paris; he tried to set up another show there, and the deal did not go through. American TV producers, on the whole, have a bad name abroad. Too many fast-talking characters have showed up, shot a pilot film, and disappeared without paying their bills.

YOU'D BE SURPRISED if you knew how some of the panelists feel about their fellow guessers. The ones who play for fun get pretty peeved with the ones who play for keeps. And nearly all of them worry about being upstaged. Don't believe, incidentally, that many of them make $500 or $750 a week. Most of them are quite satisfied for $200 or a lot less.

Thrilling!...
PARK & TILFORD
Perfume #3.
Yet, surprise!— costs less than many colognes! In jewel case, 49¢*

"Soaping" dulls hair... HALO glorifies it with your very first shampoo! 10¢, 29¢, 57¢, 89¢

Winter roughens your skin
... PACQUINS
Silk 'n Satin Lotion satinizes it! 25¢, 49¢.* In new dispenser bottle, 79¢*

tfully fragrant after g or when changing... a of CASHMERE BOUQUET
n. 12¢, 29¢, 43¢*

Your choice!
TONI Home Permanent in Very Gentle, Super, or Regular... according to your very own hair-type. Refill, 1.50*

a!
as-packed GILLETTE
ades in handy dispensers.
-blade dispensers (50 blades), 2.45 des, 4.90

It's the new TEK toothbrush... with the new, non-slip grip and the new tapered handle. 29¢

w
NE
Toothpaste
p teeth immune lecay acids
ng, in 9 out of 10
¢, 59¢

SUSAN SMART† says

Hoping to go 'neath the Mistletoe?

Help that hope with a touch of holiday magic from Woolworth's

array of toiletries

Stays on!... even when you kiss, eat, drink. It's HAZEL BISHOP
Lipstick in Jumbo
Swivel Case, 1.10*
Push-up Case, 59¢*

"Invisible shield"
of FRESH Cream
Deodorant helps keep underarms
dry, odorless.
12¢, 27¢, 43¢, 63¢*

Never needs
after-rinse!...
LUSTRE-CREME
Shampoo. And it's Hollywood's favorite for lovelier hair.
27¢, 53¢

New shades for the new season!
HELEN NEUSHAEFER
Nail Polish in Joy, Gaiety, and First Lady Pink. 10¢*

*Plus t
†Woolworth's Shopping Report

F. W. WOOLWORTH CO

THERE'S

COLD CREAM

NOW IN

CAMAY

CAMAY
THE SOAP OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN
CAMAY

HER PETAL-SOFT SKIN GOES STRAIGHT TO HIS HEART!

Pamper your beauty with new Camay!
Wonderful for complexion and bath!

Here's wonderful news about complexion care! Now Camay contains fine cold cream. And Camay alone among leading beauty soaps brings you this luxury ingredient.

More delightful than ever before! Whether your skin is dry or oily, new Camay leaves it feeling exquisitely cleansed, wonderfully fresh. And Camay with cold cream brings new luxury to your Beauty Bath, too!

You still get everything that's always made Camay a treasure . . . the softer complexion that's yours when you change to regular care and Camay, that velvety Camay lather, famous Camay mildness, and delicate fragrance yours only in Camay.

LOOK FOR NEW CAMAY IN THE SAME FAMILIAR WRAPPER.
It's at your store now—at no extra cost.
And there's no finer beauty soap in all the world!

NOW MORE THAN EVER . . . THE SOAP OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN

happy the bride . . .

Lana and Lex took Lex' son Alexander, daughter Lynn, Lana's mother and daughter, Cheryl, along on Paris honeymoon.

Only a few months ago Lana and Lex tied the knot. But already rumor says it was a slip-knot— and it's slipping!

BY IMOGENE COLLINS

■ According to one of the persons who was with Lana Turner in Italy and in London during the production of The Flame And The Flesh, "Modern Screen is probably more responsible for Lana Turner's marriage to Lex Barker than any other single factor.

"Your magazine," this informant reports, "ran a story about Lex and Lana (our August, 1953 issue) entitled, They Called Them Shocking, with a cover blurb that read, 'Lana and Lex: They Scandalized Europe.'

"When Lana read that story, she blew her top. I mean really blew it. She was mad. She said that she was living her own life. It was her business. No one was going to tell her what to do, and especially not Modern Screen. If she wanted to go around with Lex Barker, she was going to do it, and she didn't care what anyone wrote about it.

(Continued on page 78)

THEIR COURTSHIP'S HISTORY WAS WRITTEN IN GARISH HEADLINES AND THEIR WEDDING WAS SEALED IN FLASHBULBS. IS THIS THE HAPPY ENDING RITA AND DICK DREAMED ABOUT?

OUT OF THE FRYING PAN...

By WILLIAM BARBOUR

One of the most popular pinups in World War II was a photograph of Rita Hayworth. It showed her sitting up in bed, clad in a transparent nightgown. This pinup was plastered on bomb bays, block-busters, and barracks walls throughout the world. Rita Hayworth was portrayed as the most beautiful, glamorous, desirable woman on earth. Life magazine described her as the American version of the "love goddess."

A few years later, when Rita was married to Aly Khan, a columnist for the New York Post spoke for the male sex when he wrote: "There is scarcely a man among us who on the occasion of this news does not suffer a sense of personal defeat."

But today, Rita Hayworth is more often regarded as a typical Hollywood glamour girl who wears her heart on her lips. This change of the attitude of the public may be attributed to her recent marriage to Dick Haymes and the incredible circumstances surrounding it.

Earlier this year when Dick and Rita began going together, instead of acknowledging their friendship, they made a secret of it. Rita refused to talk to reporters. She refused to tell friends where she was. She refused to discuss Haymes in any light, whatever, Every question concerning Dick got one answer, "No comment."

Haymes, a rather muddled character, behaved even more strangely. For long periods of time no one could find him. Not even his wife. Not even his lawyer. Servants at the Hayworth home answered questions with, "Dick Haymes? Never heard of him."

Actually, there was no need for any of this furtiveness. Nora Haymes, Dick's third wife, had told him that their marriage was finished. Some people say Nora fell in love with an agent who was once very close to Rita, and who promised Nora a great career. Others believe that Nora fell in love with a producer of the legitimate theatre.

Whatever the reason, it was she who decided that she wanted no more of her marriage with Haymes. They agreed to separate, and Haymes was a free agent. A man who chronically falls in love, he fell in love then with Rita Hayworth.

Instead of being proud of their mutual love, instead of admitting it, Dick and Rita made a mystery of it. When Rita took a train to New York, Haymes went along. For some reason, they felt it necessary to be so discreet that it became a kind of cloak-and-dagger performance.

No one could understand why. Nora Haymes was never in a position to name Rita Hayworth as a co-respondent in a divorce case, and Dick and Rita knew that. Were they ashamed of their love?

The plain, simple, appalling answer to their strange headline-making behavior is that they both occasionally have very poor judgment about their personal lives.

Look at the Haymes record. (Continued on page 92)

WAS IT JUST PARIS IN THE SPRING OR THE REAL THING? HERE ARE THE

THE TRUTH ABOUT

THOSE CONTINENTAL FLINGS

These five stars went to Europe for work or a quiet vacation. But home

Suzanne Dadolle, really in love, gave up modeling for Schiaparelli to tour Europe with Gable. Experts say this may be only Paris fling to end in marriage.

Gary Cooper wooed Gisèle Pascale while sh was supposedly engaged to Prince of Monac his success convinced French he is a great love

FACTS BEHIND THE STARTLING RUMORS ABOUT HOLLYWOOD'S TOP STARS ABROAD. ■ BY COLETTE MAURIER

■ Paris is the traditionally romantic city, a magnet which attracts, sooner or later, the most beautiful women on earth. Respectable businessmen may sow their wild oats there without making the rest of the world party to their indiscretions. But above all, Paris is a city in which a man's behavior may be his own business, but his romantic nature the business of thousands of predatory women. Certainly, American movie actors abroad are more than fair game.

In the annals of motion picture history, 1953 will be recorded as the year of the great European migration. Practically every star you can think of spent some of 1953 in Europe.

Why?

Their reasons were varied. Many went abroad to take advantage of the favorable tax law which was later legislated away. Some went for vacations. Some went because they couldn't find work in Hollywood, a few went abroad for love, and a handful went on studio assignments. Regardless of their reasons for going there, some of Hollywood's top flight male movie stars managed to reserve a considerable amount of time for their Paris flings.

"Your actors come here," one Parisian explains, "because this is a city where a kiss in a café does not make headlines, where a night of revelry with a girl and a bottle of wine does not fill a gossip column. Paris is a lover, and it gathers all the world's lovers to its bosom. If a man has the price, Paris denies him nothing."

Of course, most movie actors have the price. But with money or without, when Americans are in Europe they are faced with unfamiliar social standards. Briefly, the French expect gentlemen on a fling to handle their amours lightly, but deftly and discreetly. The Italians are not so much concerned with sophistication. They admire volatile romance and they like to go to a wedding.

Bing Crosby, for example, was quickly accepted by Paris high society. Clark Gable apparently ranked next, but his chances of complete acceptance suffer from his failure to accept the social position of the French mannequin, either because he doesn't understand it, or because he doesn't care. Gary Cooper pays little attention to the social set, preferring to stick with the movie crowd. He enjoys great public popularity in France.

Unquestionably, Bing Crosby understands and follows the Parisian social law. For a while, he squired about a Belgian girl named Arlett Piquet. But the girl who received the most attention from Monsieur Bing, and incidentally from the press, was Ghislaine de Boysson, a twenty-ish model who works for Jacques Fath and Schiaparelli.

In Paris, models are a special class of people. Generally speaking, they are (Continued on page 87) and Hollywood may have a lot of trouble getting them back from their extra-curricular romances!

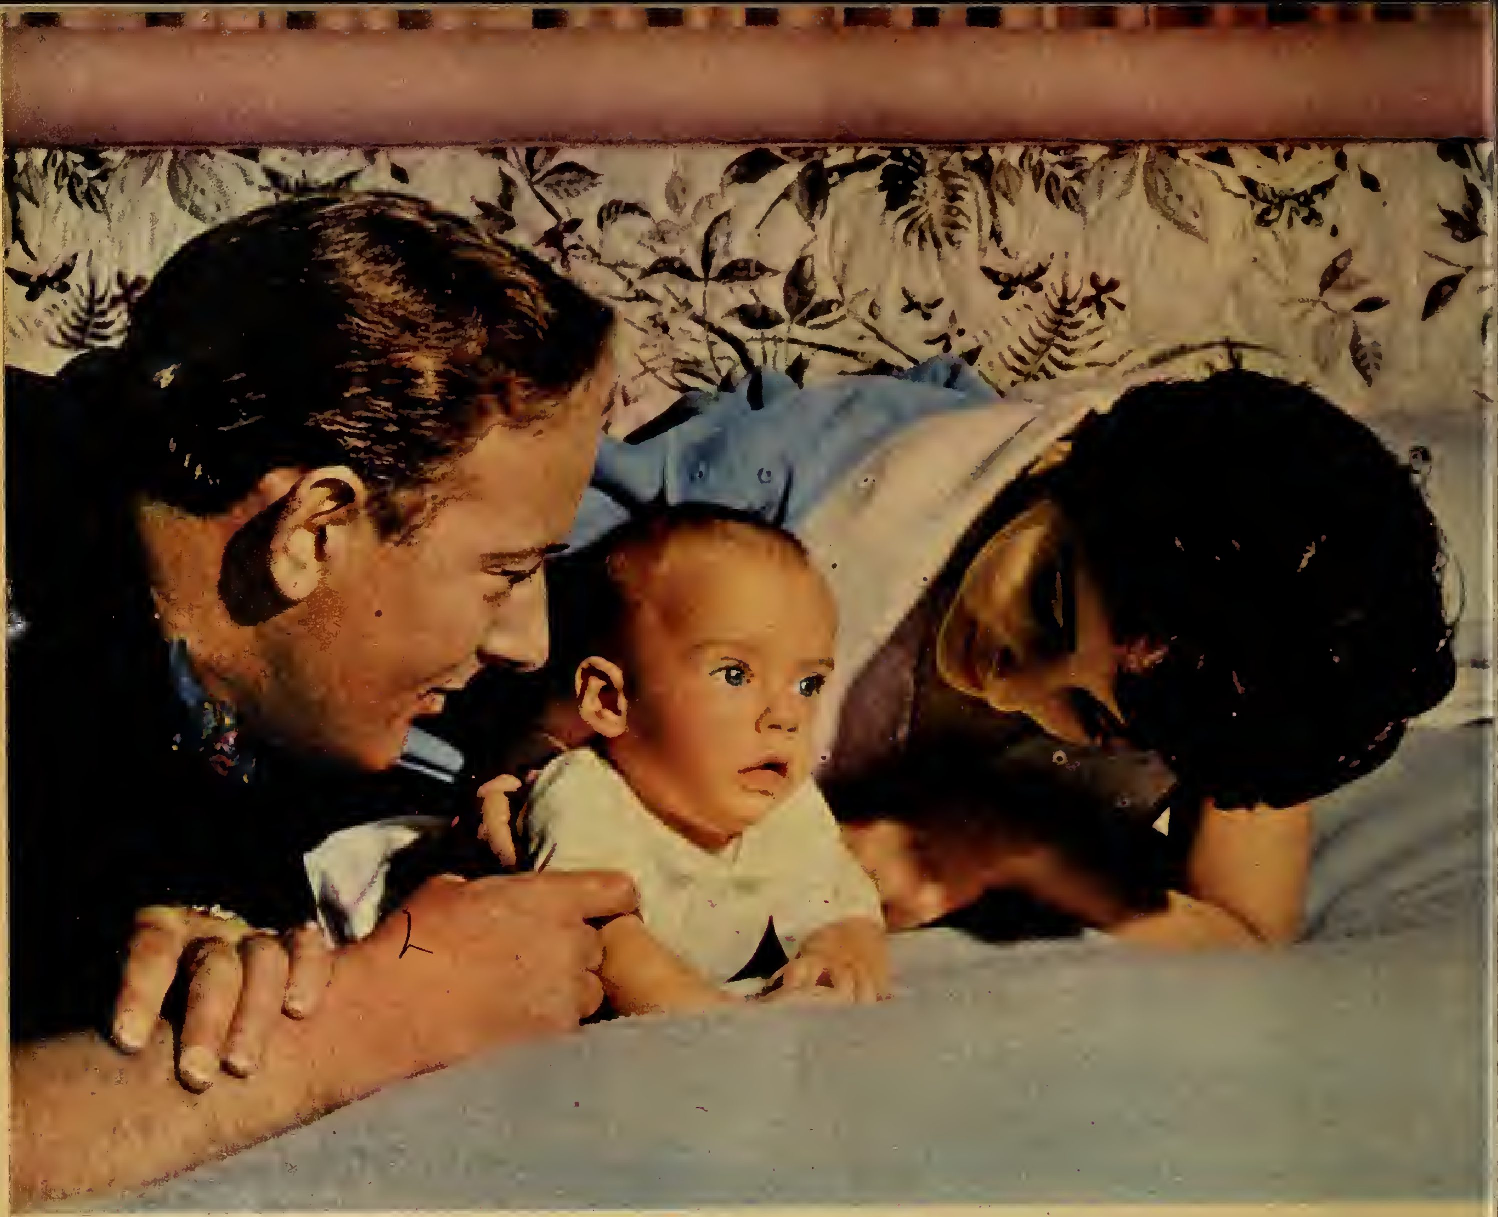
Cosmopolitan Bing Crosby holds high social position in France, dines with Comtesse des Cars. His romance with model Ghislaine de Boysson follows approved French pattern.

Actress Ursula Thiess holds German view that women should follow and adore their men. Many believe she and Bob Taylor will have a happy marriage.

Audrey Hepburn, Veronica Pasanie were among Gregory Peck's rumored romances.



▲ "I can't call him Michael," Mike complains: "I feel as if I'm talking to myself!" So he called his son "Boy" (because the hospital identification bracelet worn by the new baby read "Boy Wilding"). Then Liz came up with "Britches" for a pet name. Now a confident father, Mike once feared hospital would give them the wrong baby.

◀ Liz and Nurse Mary share care of eight-month-old Britches. Ordinarily cheerful and easy to handle, Britches is given to crying only when tired. He found the flight across the Atlantic wearing, alarmed Liz and the plane's crew with his wails until England and a nurse comforted him. Imperturbable Mike, Sr., only felt sorry for the other passengers!

➤ Mike couldn't resist adding his own family snapshots to MODERN SCREEN'S collection. Liz shares motherhood with one of her menagerie—Gigi, her French poodle, who had a Caesarean birth at the same time Liz did, produced almost as cute offspring. Britches shares his parents' love of animals, plays happily with the family's many pets.

The happiest time

■ The steward of the giant BOAC flying ship moved up to the crew's cabin. Lightly, he tapped the pilot on the shoulder. The skipper looked back.

"Elizabeth Taylor and her baby," the steward shouted.

The skipper relinquished control of the ship to his co-pilot.

"What about it?"

"The little fellow is crying his head off," the steward said. "Miss Taylor thinks maybe he's sick."

The pilot got up and walked back to the tail of the ship. Liz and her son had spent the night in a berth flying across the Atlantic, and according to her, "He was just wonderful, not a peep out of him, until about an hour ago. Now, he just won't keep quiet."

"I feel sorry for the rest of the passengers," said Michael Wilding, the baby's father. "I think he's tired."

The pilot nodded and returned to the nose of the ship. He motioned to his radio officer. "Send a message to London Airport. Tell them to have a nurse standing by."

Three hours later, when Mr. and Mrs. Michael Wilding set foot on English soil, the nurse was waiting. But first the three (Continued on page 38)

Liz often plunks Britches on her huge bed for romp with 4 cats!

Still new to motherhood, Liz admits, "When he cries, I cry."

by Susan Trent

The immortal Raphael never painted lovelier mother-and-child pictures than those caught by MODERN SCREEN's camera in these exclusive shots of Elizabeth Taylor and her son.

MORE ➤

Psychologists say the American home is child-centered. Liz and Mike agree—and they love it!

(Continued from page 37) Wildings had to pass through Customs and Immigration.

A reporter asked an official whether Liz was traveling on an American or British passport. There had been some question of her citizenship before she had left Hollywood. On previous trips she had used dual passports, having been born in England of American parents.

"She is an American citizen using an American passport," the official explained. "Her husband is a British citizen using a British passport."

Liz carried her crying eight-month-old son as she went through Passport Control. The minute the Immigration men were finished, she handed the baby over to the waiting nurse. Instantly, the child stopped crying.

Liz, wearing a dumpy little bowl of a hat, a wide, flourishing skirt, with a fabric stole to match, turned to her husband. "How do you like that?" she asked.

The imperturbable Michael Wilding smiled. "Probably thinks she's Mary." Mary is the baby's nurse in Hollywood.

They drove to the flat in Grosvenor Square West which Michael Rennie's wife had rented for them. Here Liz undressed her son, changed him, and gave him his bottle.

(Continued on page 73)

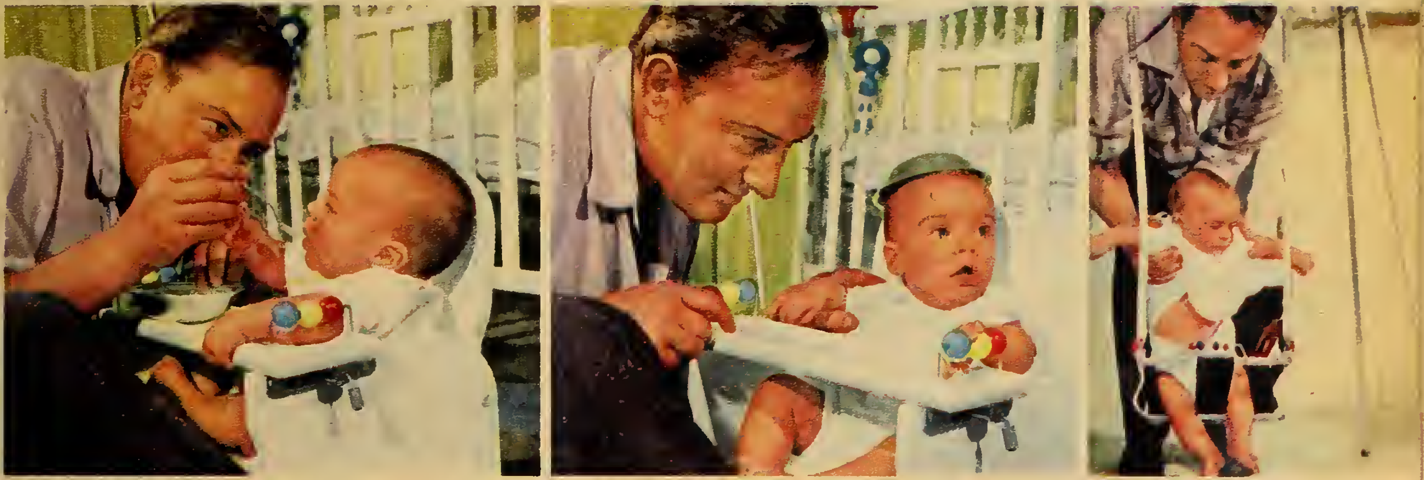
"I don't care where I work," says the new Liz, "or if I ever work. I just want to be with two guys named Mike."



Mike enjoys fatherhood, counters Liz' worries with calm efficiency. He reassured her before trip, ("Typhoid injections don't bother babies") promised that son would like new nurse in England, ("This baby likes everyone") and agrees that a big family will be just fine.

IF YOU'VE HEARD ANY WILD STORIES ABOUT MITCHUM LATELY, DON'T BELIEVE A WORD. CHANCES ARE HE MADE THEM UP HIMSELF! ▪ BY LOUIS POLLOCK

THIS is a MONSTER?

■ From all you read about Bob Mitchum, it would seem that such time as he can spare from sleepy-eyed stardom he cynically devotes to the neglect of his character. Most interviewers can't even come close to the truth about him.

It is not the fault of the writers. It is difficult to capture Bob on paper, and Bob doesn't make it any easier. He often takes an impish delight in supplying some of the wrong colors which have been used to paint the popular picture of him.

The result is that the Bob Mitchum the public knows is a self-made fraud. A big, tall one. Inside that, Mitchum is a guy he never lets anyone see; that he isn't going to let anyone see, no matter how misrepresented he is. Listen to Mitchum about Mitchum and after a while you can feel him laughing at you, and through you, at the world. He paints himself black, black and heartless. And in the end, you listen not so much to what he says as to yourself asking why he says it.

It is becoming clear that all through his professional life he has tried to hide two aspects of himself: (1) that he is a man with a heart, and a soft one, (2) that he is serious about the art of acting. But time—Bob has been under journalistic observation for nearly ten years now—is defeating his little game. Despite his own efforts, he reveals his true self in little ways—little, but significant—and by a record of achievement he can't very well obscure. There is nothing he can do to keep this from washing out, bit by bit, the legendary Mitchum, the careless, indolent, even dissolute fellow he not only pretends to be, but sometimes makes painfully realistic demonstrations to prove he is. That fantasy is slowly being replaced with a flesh and blood figure who, if not so colorful, is more human and a lot more (Continued on page 80)

Bob pretends to treat homelife carelessly, leave family worries to Dorothy. But he has been seen feeding the baby, carrying luggage and making like a model father with his sons.

Self-styled toughie, Bob is a very dependable actor, lets nothing keep him from work. On location with Rory Calhoun and Marilyn Monroe he even refrained from wolf whistles.

Bob's directors know the only safe person to bawl out is Bob himself; "blackhearted" Mitchum has walked off sets to protest unfair treatment of crew members by higher-ups.

My roommate, Elaine

BY SUZANNE SCHEIRER

Don't room with a movie star! Not unless you're prepared for roses in the bathtub, bear cubs in the livingroom, and badminton all over the house!

The author, blonde Suzanne Scheirer, prefers to do the driving for herself and impulsive roomie Elaine Stewart; she is often routed out of bed for 3 A.M. spins to the desert or ocean.

■ I opened the door of my apartment, put one foot inside, and stopped dead. I may be a coward, but I wasn't going in until I knew whether I was seeing things or not.

I wasn't. My roommate, Elaine Stewart, was sitting in the middle of the livingroom rug, wearing a pair of black satin slacks, and in her arms she was cradling a baby bear. I was used to the black satin slacks, and I shouldn't have been surprised by the bear, because when you live with a movie star you shouldn't be surprised by anything.

It's like living with an electric spark, a runaway freight train, or the bubbles from a glass of champagne. It's playing Hamlet at four in the morning in costumes made of colored napkins and swimming by moonlight in the Pacific Ocean, and never knowing what to expect next.

The bear came from a South American admirer —if admirer is the right word. He had flashing eyes, wavy hair, and a Spanish temper. He met Elaine on the set while she was making Take The High Ground. When Elaine refused to go out with him, he got so angry that he threatened to send her an alligator. I guess he couldn't find an alligator, so he sent the bear instead.

There was the time I started to take a bath and almost stepped into the middle of the 412 red roses that were floating aimlessly around the bathtub. And there was the time Elaine felt like playing badminton.

The roses were a gift from the Navy. Or rather from a Naval squadron that chose her its queen. Each man in the squadron had sent her a rose, and the only vase Elaine (Continued on page 61) anybody

■ A few days after Gene Kelly finished Crest Of The Wave in London, newspaper editors notified their reporters in New York to keep close watch on all ports of entry.

"Gene Kelly," one waterfront newsman was told, "is the first and only actor to have spent seventeen months overseas under the old tax law. He has earned about $300,000, tax free. He is also responsible, in part, for the change of the tax laws by Congress. We want a story on him."

Alert newsmen subjected every plane and ship passenger list to close scrutiny. When they were absolutely confident that Gene Kelly could never get into New York City undetected by the press, word came from Hollywood that Gene was back in movietown and that Arthur Freed, Metro's chain-smoking producer, was throwing a big welcome-home party for the dancer.

The editors back east were fit to be tied. Verbally, they went to work on their waterfront and airport reporters. How in heaven's name had they missed Kelly?

Chagrined, the reporters offered several alibis. One said that Kelly was traveling under an assumed name. Another said flatly that he got off his plane in Boston and caught a direct flight to Los Angeles. A third announced that Kelly was really in New York, having a series of wild parties in a midtown hotel while awaiting the return from Europe of his wife, Betsy, and his daughter, Kerry.

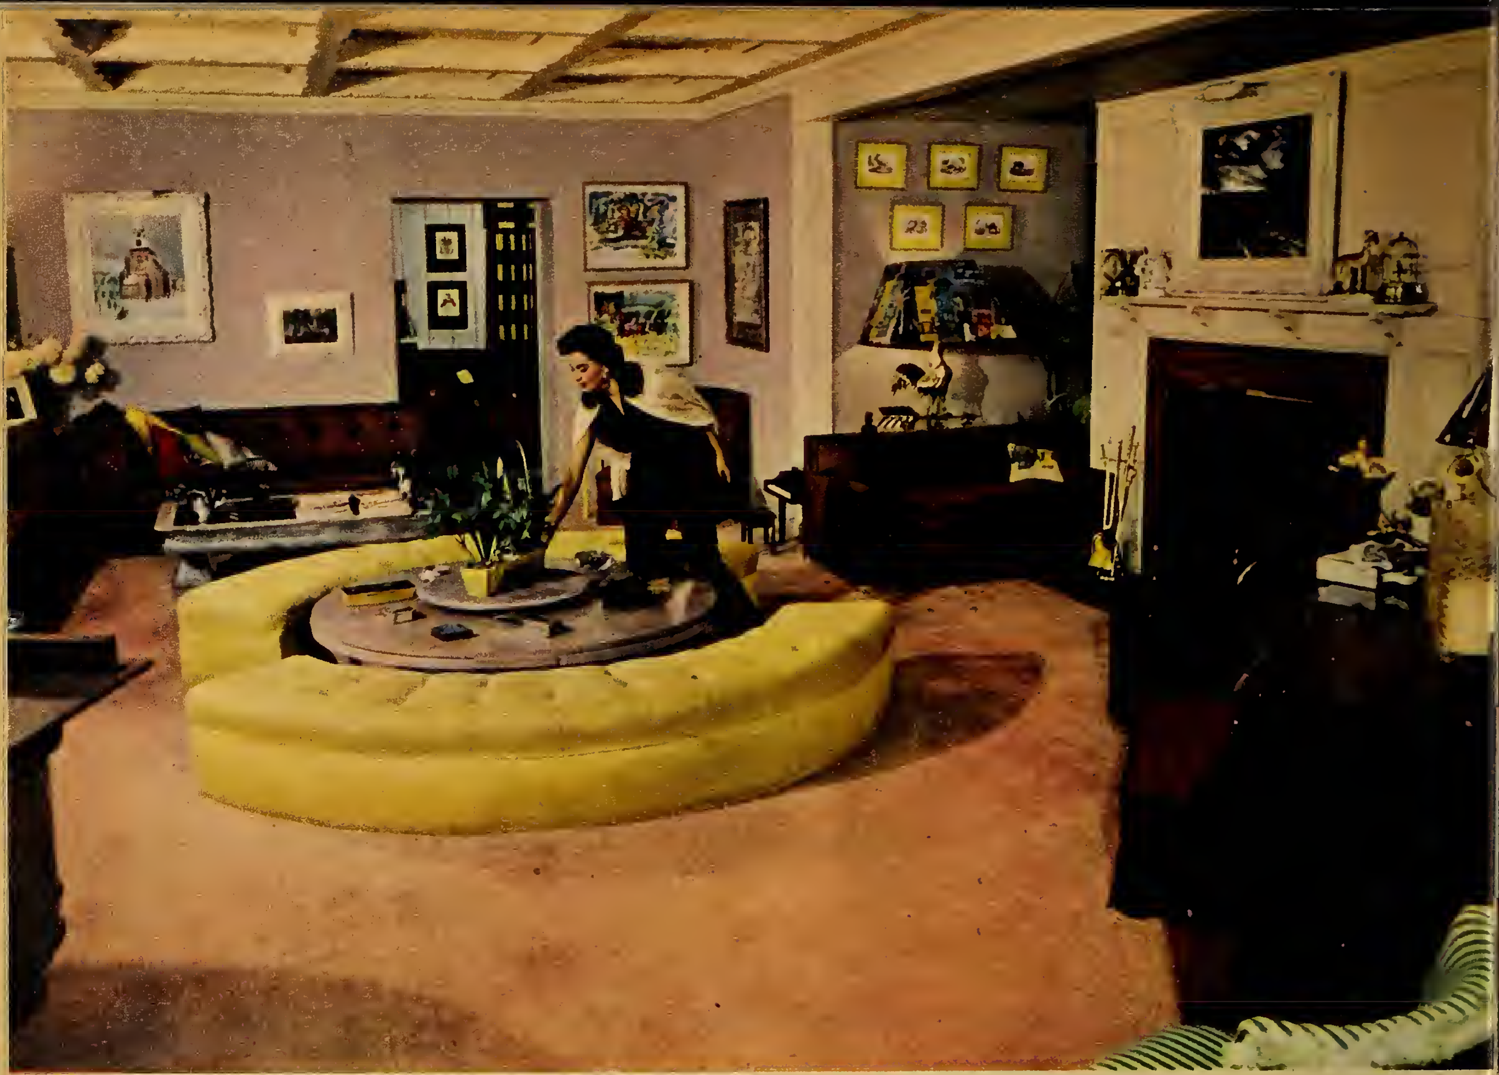
When Arthur Freed read this last item about his leading star, he blew his top. "We're gonna sue that guy," he stormed, naming the columnist who printed the defamation. "This time he has gone too far. He really has. We have a libel suit set to go. Sayin' those things about Gene. Lies, all (Continued on page 94)

The Gene Kelly formula has always been "All for one and one for all" but they say there's trouble brewing in Paradise—maybe Betsy's been getting second billing.

BY ALICE FINLETTER

here seen Mrs. Kelly?

Betsy's fine performance in The Snake Pit is still remembered. Now that Kerry, 9, is in school, Betsy has too much time on her hands.



Cyd and friend Dusty Negulesco combed city for perfect center table for livingroom: it has slide-out trays that are removed for buffet dinners.

The Martins' ten-room Colonial house stands on a busy Sunset Boulevard corner. (Tony likes to be in the middle of things!) Once grim and old-fashioned, it has been modernized by Cyd.

the Song and Dance house

by Marva Peterson

CYD CHARISSE AND TONY MARTIN BROUGHT A BRIGHT NEW LOVE TO AN OLD COLONIAL HOME.

■ The shrill, sustained jangle peculiar to long-distance calls sounded in the kitchen.

"Pittsburgh calling Mrs. Tony Martin," the operator monotoned.

"This is she," Cyd Charisse acknowledged. It was Tony, of course. In their five years of marriage, he never has missed phoning at least once a day while he's out of town.

"How're the boys?" he asked.

"Great," Cyd said. "Little Tony had his first trip to the dentist today . . . Well, we got him into the chair, anyway . . . You're sending what?" The beautiful, leggy dancer walked the phone into the library. With one toe, she deftly shut the kitchen door behind her. The conversation with Tony, mostly love-talk, lasted half an hour.

When it was over, Cyd was still smiling, inside and out. In the front hall, she met Casey, their amicable butler. "If a crate arrives with some lamps," she offered lightly, "they're from Mr. Martin."

"Lamps?" Casey repeated. "Did you say lamps, m'am?"

"That's right."

"Did the mister say how many we can expect?" Casey asked, with a pained expression.

"Three." (Continued on next page)

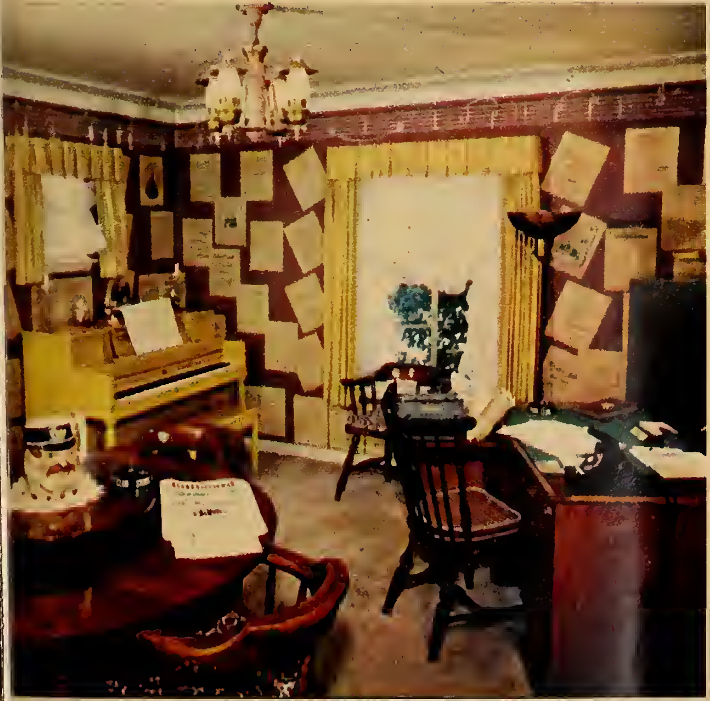
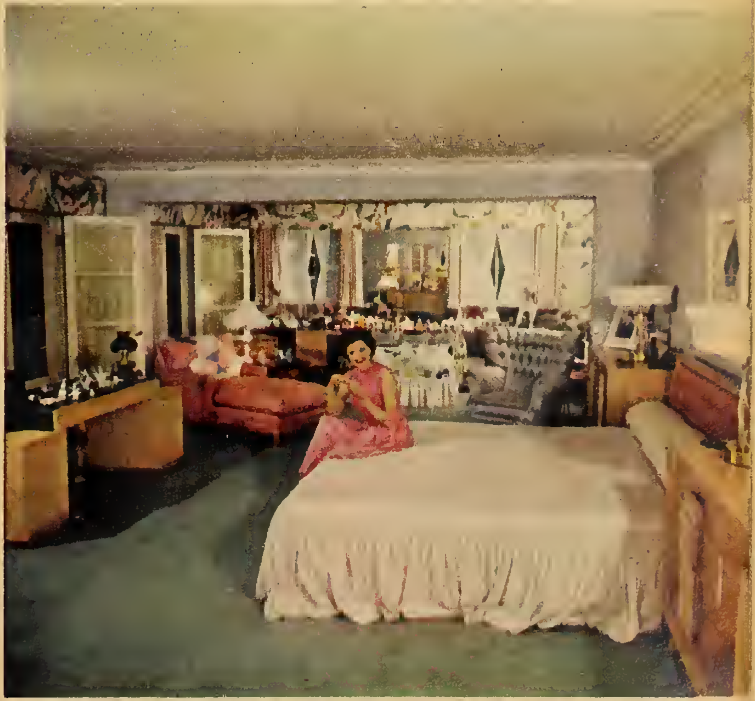
Foyer and stairs were originally red tile; Cyd covered them with carpet to match the rose-beige livingroom rug inherited from previous owners, lined one wall with antique mirror and indoor plants.



Cyd did Tony's study-music room in cocoa and light brown, had his theme song, "I'll See You In My Dreams," painted along top border. She papered the walls with sheet music from an antique shop.



Cyd had Spanish arches of pink and grey master bedroom squared, planned room to blend her feminine pink chaise, wall-length mirrored dressing table with Tony's tailored TV set, dark green contour chair.

HOUSE OF THE MONTH

MORE▸

the Song and Dance house continued

Cyd and Tony love sunning; patio has chaises of various widths, pool-side telephone, dining tables and serving counters from bar and kitchen.

Cyd and Tony keep in shape by constant use of fenced-in pool, long walks on their acre of lawn and old trees. Four years ago house and grounds seemed too large for the newlyweds, now barely holds their growing family and staff.

Tony surprised Cyd with a Provincial dining room set. "The rest of the house is modern," commented Mrs. Martin, "but—I like a change of pace!"

Fireman-red leather chair and ottoman accent quiet tones of the library. The tailored motif shows in the leather-topped card table and chairs.

"Where the blazes can we put three more lamps?" the outspoken butler muttered. "We already got more lights than we got electric outlets. We got more pictures than we got wall space. More records than—"

"Now, Casey," Cyd placated. "You know Mr. Martin likes new things around the house. Don't let it worry you. I'll find a place for them."

By now, Cyd Charisse knows what to expect of her tall, handsome, singing husband. She knows that he's a shopping addict, that given fifteen minutes between planes, he may buy a dozen ash trays, a Mercedes-Benz, an oil painting, two platinum rings, or a whole dining room set.

She knows, too, what an incredible amount of bric-a-brac he receives from his thousands of fans. A couple of little old ladies in Michigan, for example, knit him one laprobe every two years. When he played the Palladium in 1948 he mentioned that he loved sports, especially cricket. At the next performance he was gifted with two dozen cricket bats, one of which he brought home to hang over his bar. He has framed personal letters from Eisenhower and Nixon thanking him for entertaining at the Inaugural festivities in Washington. When he sang at the American Shoe Manufacturers Convention he received a token gift of one of his own shoes—in bronze.

Tony is also one of Leo Durocher's best friends, which means he gets his share of Giant trophies. Cyd must find room in their library for autographed baseballs, autographed photos of all the leading players, and a bat used in the 1950 World Series.

The lamps, too, were a present from a grateful fan. One night, during a recent (Continued on page 64)

Jack Palance is Hollywood's most terrifying find. But he isn't really as tough as he looks—just almost!

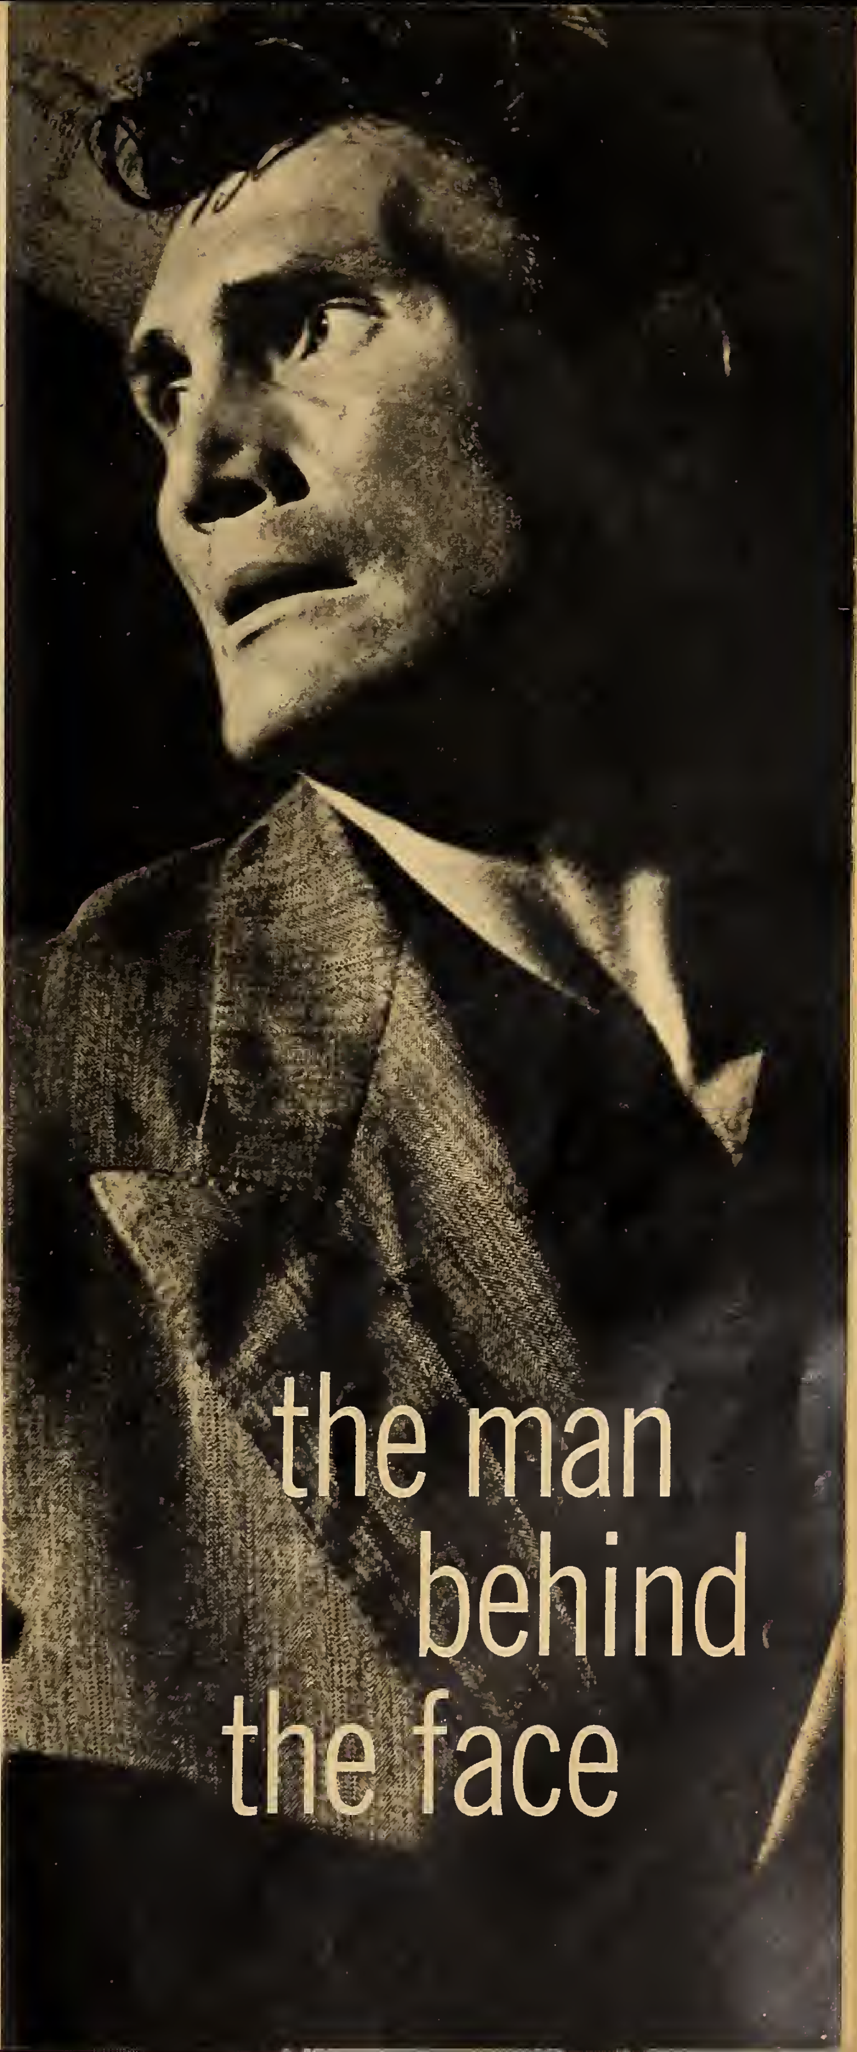
BY JACK WADE

■ There are acting discoveries by the hundreds each year, but once in a decade a man like Jack Palance shows up, shoulders his way into the spotlight, forcing the real men of Hollywood to move over. Then, because there is room for just so many important male stars, some guy whose virility and talent are optical illusions drops quietly back into oblivion.

Jack Palance jolted the public for the first time in the role of a man with murder on his mind; the sadistic husband of Joan Crawford in Sudden Fear. That he wasn't promptly promoted to stardom is due to the curious fact that producers constantly cry for new faces, but when they see one as compelling and different as Mr. Palance's, they are thrown for a loss.

In this quandary they have had something in common with Palance, for he didn't always have this face. He doesn't like to talk about it, but his nose has been broken more times than he can remember. And at one time he spent many months hiding away in a furnished room in New York, struggling with the fear that he would never again look human. The face, which is now so familiar and approved by the public had been (Continued on page 88)

Jack met wife Virginia in a theatre basement, later hocked his suits to pay for their honeymoon. Daughter Holley is named after their Greenwich Village honeymoon hotel.



the man behind the face

Friend of the Family

BY HENNY BACKUS

Keeping up with the Gages is for the

Our crowd at one of the get-togethers Esther loves. There's Renee and Bill Lundigan, me, Janet Blair, Jim, Esther. Seated: Ben, Lou Hirsch.

No matter how many chairs are available, Esther always pl down on the floor. She didn't like the hat I was trying

HENNY AND JIM BACKUS HAVE KNOWN ESTHER SINCE THE GAGE MANSION WAS HODGE PODGE LODGE.

■ The first time Esther and Ben Gage invited my husband and me to their house, we were really impressed. To visit a movie star in her native habitat was moving a couple of New Yorkers-by-adoption into the lifted pinky set.

As we drove out to Brentwood, we actually sneered at the hapless tourists who were buying maps so they could gawk at movie stars' homes—from the outside, yet.

We parked our car at a discreet distance from the house, and approached it with no little trepidation. My husband, Jim, who has since become famous in his own right, was aghast—but aghast—at the sight of the small, white frame house.

"This is a movie star's home?" he gasped. "To me, it looks like Hodge Podge Lodge!"

And he was right. Apparently, they had thrown together everything around the place with their own little mitts. We found out that Ben had even built the pool. Pool? It was an oversize Lily cup. We had expected something that would compare favorably in size to Tahoe.

Not that it was Ben's fault, really. They didn't have as much money as Bing Crosby—then. Besides, they loved doing things for themselves. So Ben did all the carpentry, and worked so hard that the house eventually spilled over into the next lot, which they didn't own. If Esther wanted to go to the incinerator, she was off limits!

But Hodge Podge Lodge was their honeymoon cottage and they loved it. Esther made all the curtains, the slipcovers, the lampshades and the upholstery, and she had enough time left over to knit Ben a few pairs of argyle socks. It was all lovely and informal. In fact, there was a bow on the garbage can.

Well, that was a few years back, when my husband was best known as "Hubert Updyke" on the radio, which led to our meeting with Esther and Ben. We were living in an upholstered telephone booth over Schwab's drugstore. This, at a time when Jim's character, "Updyke," was billed as "the richest man in the world."

We were transplanted New Yorkers, and we disdained automobiles (let's face it, we couldn't afford one). Jim had gone into Romanoff's restaurant in Beverly Hills to get out of the rain and wait for a taxi. He was standing there, trying to look accustomed to such places, when two tall, beautiful people approached him.

"We watched you do Updyke the other night," said Esther, while Jim tried to swallow his busy Adam's apple, "and we want you to know that we think you are the greatest!"

You tell any man he's great, and you've got a friend. So has your spouse. Then and there, we became friends of the Gages, and we've never let them go.

You ought to see how things have changed since 1946 when we first laid cynical eyes on Hodge Podge Lodge. Since then, the Gages have pioneered in a place called Mandeville Canyon, a deep gorge, previously the residence of coyotes and rattlesnakes living in little houses of beer cans left by brave picnickers. That's all changed since Esther and Ben took over. Now it's a sort of Schubert Alley (a place in New York where you see no one but famous people.) But life in Mandeville Canyon, despite the encroachment of movie millionaires, is still primitive and breath-taking.

For instance, Dick Widmark lives there in a house he made over from an old nursery, and on a clear day, you can see him with a small ax, hacking at an ith strong constitutions. If you can ride with a practical joke, Esther's the most—and a real friend.

(Continued on page 81)

er and I don't like spectator sports, so when Jim Ben go golfing we stay home and cook together.

Even when she was working on a picture herself, Esther always found time to help me in my work on the lot.

We dressed up as waiters and waitresses from The Trails for a costume ball.

HAWAII WITHOUT JANET WAS NO PARADISE FOR TONY. MINUS THE MISSUS, LIFE WASN'T CIVILIZED.

While making Beachhead Tony haunted his hotel mail box; hoped for at least two letters a day.

New island games served to kill time for Tony while he waited for Janet's frequent phone calls.

Tony took photos for Janet but he'd rather have painted at home.

I'd make a lousy Bachelor

by Tony Curtis

■ In the old days (three years ago), I figured myself to be a fairly happy guy. That was the era when I threw my clothes on the floor at night and didn't care whether anybody picked them up or not. I drank a dozen bottles of orange pop every day and ate what I wanted when I felt like it, even if it was peanut butter and pumpernickel at three A.M. My life was as orderly as Macy's basement after a bargain sale, and I had all the self discipline of a pampered Pekingese.

I'm a changed man. So much so that when I look back on those days I wonder that I could ever have thought myself happy. Three years with Janet have taught me how to be civilized, and most important of all, I've come to depend on someone else for happiness. I'd suspected that for some time, but last summer when I finished All American and left immediately for Honolulu to make Beachhead, I had it proved to me. Without Janet I fell apart. It meant a five-week separation, the longest we had ever had, and the longest we ever will have. It was as though I were living in a state of suspended animation. I counted the days and the hours and the minutes until I would be home, and in the interim I made a game out of getting to bed as soon as possible every night so that I'd be unconscious for a while.

Much as I love Janet, it's still hard to understand how (Continued on page 90)

Letters to Janet began "Hello Darling," told what a good boy he was.

Fighting mad about recent stories, Terry Moore asked MODERN SCREEN for a chance to tell her side. Here's an unusual feature: a sizzling defense by an angry star!

Sex-queen with a candy bar? Terry attends a première with British actor Lawrence Harvey.

Were Terry's many dates with Liz Taylor's wealthy ex, Nicky Hilton, "bad publicity?"

Terry, who objects to sex build-up, wore low-cut gown on big date with popular Scott Brady.

Ty Power co-starred with Terry in King Of The Khyber Rifles, enjoys reading articles about her.

■ I'm not at all sure I should be writing this article. In fact, friends with whom I've discussed the project have, for the most part, advised me not to. Man-bites-dog is a commonplace compared to actress-bites-magazine. In some respects—in theory, at least—you might as well put your hand in a buzz-saw as retort to a writer who has every weapon to tear you to pieces, whereas you, with no column nor other public outlet at your command, are relatively helpless. Well, maybe that's one reason I'm doing it; that "relatively helpless" business, I mean. Surely no one is so relatively helpless that she is not entitled to defend herself against distortions, false inference and simple untruths. If indeed she is that helpless, she goes further than imperilling her career; it seems to me she has sacrificed to ambition her right to live with dignity. And if she wants to be a star so much that she will surrender to moral cowardice, then she's in the wrong business. There's not enough fame or money in the world to compensate for living with fear.

Then there's another reason I'm willing to stick my neck out. MODERN SCREEN is willing to let me. There's a little more to that than meets the eye. Because MODERN SCREEN, you see, is the magazine I'm biting—or rather, an article that appeared in the September issue by Steve Cronin, titled: Is Terry Moore Heading For Trouble?—one of those affectionate variations on Have You Stopped Beating Your Wife? Although the story bothered me, as it would have bothered you if you had been the subject, I do honestly appreciate this magazine's courage and fairness in letting me refute their own article in my own words. There are not too many publications that would do it. Similarly, I haven't a doubt that the editors bought Mr. Cronin's essay in good faith. MODERN SCREEN's reputation in the film colony is that of a tough, but clean fighter, not always sweetness and light, but not given to low blows either. And the evidence of that is what you are now reading.

Let me say one more word for the film personality in (Continued on page 75)

AN OPEN LETTER TO MODERN SCREEN

Now let me tell it!

by Terry Moore

"Actors are a dime a dozen"

Don't try to tell Dale Robertson that you think he's great—or even a success! The answer is very likely to be a horse-laugh!

BY RICHARD MOORE

■ Amid the diminishing stockpile of Dale Robertson lore, there emerged the fact that as a child he had taught himself to do a good many things with his left hand, just in case his right hand should be amputated someday. It was a revelatory slant on a man who is not necessarily a pessimist but who does have a death-grip on the long view.

Robertson mentioned this casually over lunch at the RKO commissary. He had fiddled for a while with a platter of small herring lying at a sort of parade rest on a bed of lettuce, and now gave up the encounter to light a cigarette. It was strictly a portside operation: removing pack from pocket, extracting cigarette, tearing loose match, lighting match, lighting cigarette. His right arm never moved.

"The way I figured it was," Robertson said, "I'm no southpaw. So if I did lose my right arm, where would I be? I like to be ready for anything."

And "anything," it presently developed, included his own hypothetical demise as a motion picture star—presumably a long way off, but still a likelihood, sooner or later.

He had just come from downtown Los Angeles where he had conferred with associates on an independent business enterprise, and he was absorbed with its details—more so, at the moment, than he was with his better-known vocation.

"It's another left arm," he said. "If I fall, I'd rather fall in a load of hay than on a cement block. One thing I'm sure of, actors are expendable."

Between takes on an earlier picture, an actress told her friends that Robertson had turned to her and remarked with negligent grimness: "You know, they could grab any guy in off the street and teach him to do what we're doing here." The actress had been a trifle offended. "What he's doing, maybe," she had said. "But it's taken me years to learn my job."

Robertson hadn't meant it exactly that way. "I'm not talking about what they call a star. A star—and I'm not putting myself in that category—is another matter. He has to have something. But go down to the level just below that, and what have you got?

"This I'm willing to bet on: two groups on any picture set can be replaced, the guys who sweep out the stage—and the actors. The rest are technicians and are indispensable. But pushing a broom or sidling up to a bar and saying: 'Make mine whisky!'—these can be replaced. So can a lead. I don't want to sound too much like the worry-wart who wears both belt and suspenders, but I've got no reason yet to think I've got this thing taped. Too much can happen.

"A player can't call himself a star or think of himself as a star until he's been around between five and ten years—and after he's reached the low point in his career and survived it. That's the real test. Guy Madison's a good example. He's been about as far down as you can get. Now he's come back and he's going to stay. I haven't reached my low yet but I have a feeling I'm getting there. Then we'll see. It's a superstitious feeling in a way, a way things have of going. Like the other night I saw a picture I might have had. Well it was a good picture, a wonderful picture. I sat through it twice, something I haven't done since lord knows when. And it was a good part, too, which is more what I'm getting at. Maybe that's a straw in the wind. (Continued on page 83)

Sid Luft has brought Judy back from heartbreak
to happiness and health.
Nobody's calling him a "nobody" now!

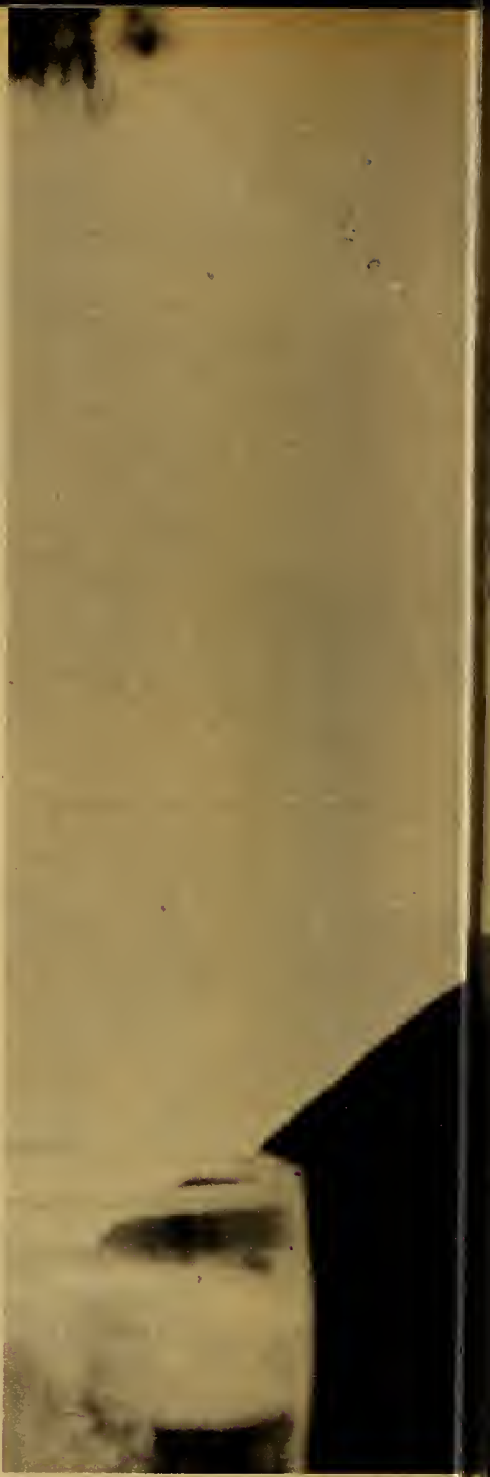
BY STEVE CRONIN

the right Mr. Wrong

Sid Luft, ex-RCAF pilot, entered Judy's life when her emotions and career were low. Despite unfriendly criticism, he planned her now-legendary Palace debut, gave her confidence and a happy home.



■ The best place to see movie stars at their worst is the tenth tee at the Bel Air Country Club. Here a deep gully with a yawning mouth 135 yards across waits to gulp down the golf balls of those who blow up when faced by a mental hazard, whether they be screen celebrities or just plain citizens.

Judy Garland, a "beginner" golfer, adjusted her little clown hat, took a practice swing, then stepped up to the ball and took an easy swing. The little white sphere started off low, gained altitude as it cleared the big ditch and came to rest thirty feet n the green. a well-nailed shot of almost yards.

Gee," Judy muttered, as a murmur of azement rose from a few bystanders, at's more gratifying than an encore at Palace!"
he Judy Garland of today, who gets as h thrill out of a well-played golf shot he does from the thunderous applause theatre jammed to standing room only, ardly reminiscent of the girl who was own away" by Hollywood's self-ap-ited career experts, a few short years ago.

While many another star has twinkled on and off the Hollywood horizon, Judy Garland today stands on the threshold of an even greater career when she returns to pictures. Far behind Judy is the frenzied life in which movie executives overworked her so seriously in the mad scramble for box office dollars that she grew up a popular, well-loved performer and a tragic, lonesome girl.

Abruptly, a few years ago, Judy's inner spirit rebelled at the endless grind of overwork. There's no need to go into that now, for we all read the headlines about her breakdown, largely caused by extreme pressure from those who wanted to rush her into one hit picture after another while the "going was good." We also followed the story of her marital breakup, and here in Hollywood, we heard the frequently repeated statement, "As if Judy hasn't had enough trouble already, now she's gone and married the wrong man!"

Oddly enough, it appears that "marrying the wrong man" was the "rightest" thing she ever did. It was (Continued on page 84)

"I have wondered all my life . . . where shall I go to find God? Now my daughter is asking me this question. Shall I give her my faith or help her seek her own as I did?"

a Faith for my child

by Deborah Kerr

■ Melanie Jane is six and beginning to ask the questions one cannot always answer. The where and why of God, and especially the Who, are intriguing her, not too deeply yet, but again and again. When I manage to slide by the momentary emergency of inquiry without committing myself she gives evidence that she is not going to be put off for long. I sometimes want to tell her that I know exactly how she feels.

The wonder of life has touched me, but not yet the true knowledge. Though I have sought it with all my heart, in some periods of my life fiercely, at others passively, and am yet seeking it, I, too, have been put off.

But if He has not yet seen fit to give me whole and abiding belief, He has at least planted in me the yearning for it; even more, the instinct that will not permit me to admit that there is nothing left of us beyond the dust to which our corporeal bodies must return.

This much I can tell Melanie, although it is too soon yet, at the beginning of her life, to speak of the end. But when she can contemplate it, and if she has not yet found a better teacher, perhaps I shall. I do pray that in church (though I do not yet know which church because I was a seeker in more than one) she can find her (Continued on page 72)

my roommate, elaine

(Continued from page 42) could find that was big enough for the flowers was the bathtub.

The badminton game was played on a rainy, winter afternoon. Elaine just felt like playing badminton. When I stepped over our threshold that day, I stepped smack into the middle of a winning serve. The ball was made from my best cashmere yarn, and the net was yards and yards of red ribbon from candy boxes, and the livingroom furniture was piled on top of everything, including the kitchen sink. Triumphant in the midst of the debris, Elaine was beating the tar out of two very self-conscious neighbors.

Badminton in the livingroom and roses in the bathtub don't add up to peace and quiet. Nice words—"peace" and "quiet," but they don't mean much when Elaine Stewart is around. They're shoved out of the way by words like "excitement," "quicksilver," "high as a kite," "low as a snake's ear," "unpredictable," and "whirlwind." And eight hours' sleep a night is another thing that's shoved out of the way when Elaine Stewart's around.

There are some people who like to sleep and there are some people who don't. Elaine fits into the latter category. She thinks that the middle of the night is too nice to waste in sleeping. Half the time she wakes up about two A. M., pulls me out of bed. and throws my bathing suit in my general direction. If I'm awake enough to catch it, we drive down to the beach and go swimming. If I'm not, I can usually get her to settle for an hour of gin rummy.

Elaine drives like a devil, particularly in the hours before dawn, and sometimes I just close my eyes and hope that there are no other drivers on the road. When I do, she's liable to turn the car around and head for the desert. We don't do anything there; we don't even talk much. We just sit in the car and look at the stars and wonder how anything can be as beautiful as a desert sky.

Elaine was trying to describe it once, and she came close when she said, "The stars seem to topple out of the sky at you like a three-dimensional movie."

Sometimes Elaine starts to cry. Then she turns away and looks for her constellation—Gemini. When she can't find it, she says it's because this is one of the days that Castor and Pollux have to spend in Hades.

She can point out my constellation too—Sagittarius. She is fascinated and guided by the stars. We're living together because she's Gemini, and I'm Sagittarius. They are supposed to blend. They are supposed to blend so well that she is looking for someone born under the sign of Sagittarius to marry. So far she hasn't found the right Sagittarian.

Elaine has had her fortune told, her palm read, her tea leaves looked at, her handwriting analyzed, her electric impulses measured, and the bumps on her head read. The first fortuneteller she ever went to—when she was a model in New York—told her that she would get a contract and come to Hollywood. His other prediction—that she would marry three times—hasn't come true yet.

She blames her impulsiveness and unpredictability on the stars. People who are born under Gemini are supposed to be talented, restless, and mercurial. Elaine is all of these. She does everything in cycles. For weeks she'll date every night. Then she'll stay home for a month, listening to music, reading poetry, or just talking seriously.

Of course that makes life difficult for me at times. When Elaine is in a "people mood" there may be twenty-two for dinner. If she isn't, she may not even be home for dinner. And I never know.

I do all the cooking, and I just have to trust to my intuition, since Elaine hasn't brought home a crystal ball—yet. Sometimes some of the guests eat steak and the rest have hamburger, but it usually works out all right.

Elaine knows where the kitchen is. She even sits down in it and talks to me while I'm cooking. But she looks at the stove as though it were a poisonous snake.

"Cooking would be a wonderful hobby," she tells me every so often, "if I were all alone in a mountain cabin somewhere, snowed in, with nothing else to do. But I haven't got enough time now for everything."

In any case, she loves to eat. If she were left alone, she'd eat nothing but roast beef, malted milks, mashed potatoes, tomato soup—and spinach. She's wild about spinach and even wilder about tomato soup. I can never let her go shopping by herself, because she'll forget what we need and come back with one dozen cans of soup.

She doesn't dislike other foods; she just never thinks of eating them. But she's willing to eat anything that I'm willing to make. And I must admit I've tried some awful experiments on her, including grapes in chocolate syrup.

I forgot one thing she likes—ice cream. Preferably chocolate ice cream. She eats it every time she can, even uses it on her breakfast cereal in the morning.

It's the little things that pile up when you live with a movie star. And when you live with Elaine, pile up is the right word. There are dozens of cakes of soap in the bathroom, because Elaine only likes big, new cakes, and I can't use up the old soap quickly enough to keep up with her. There are dozens of light bulbs everywhere and dozens of lights on, because Elaine can't stay home without turning every light in the apartment on. The place looks like a homemade rainbow at night, because Elaine likes her electric lights to be colored—green, blue, yellow, and pink.

And I'm sure that her cavemen ancestors had more stone axes and more clay

From selling at Saks to love scenes with Curtis—

MEET MARY MURPHY

■ Little, honey-haired, blue-eyed Mary Murphy, who bounced from the bundle-wrapping counter at Saks Fifth Avenue on fashionable Wilshire Boulevard in Beverly Hills into a Paramount contract, says "the dream is getting wilder all the time."

She's just back on the mainland following a month spent on the "garden island" of the Hawaiian group, Kauai, playing with Tony Curtis in Beachhead, for United Artists.

"I'm just beginning to appreciate the breaks I've had," she said. "For the first year or so I was mentally numb. It just couldn't be that it was me, who has no great-grand-uncle or aunt who ever so much as thought of becoming an actor or an actress.

"About a year ago, though, I sort of came to and settled down. Acting can be such hard, hard work! I was scared stiff before I started Hot Blood with Marlon Brando. but he turned out to be 100 per cent. He helped me a lot and he really had the patience of an angel.

"Beachhead was the most fun and the most work I've ever done. When you see me running through the trees and falling flat on my face when Tony, thinking I'm an enemy Jap, grabs my foot—brother, that's me!

"Tony was terrific and his fans are going to love him as a tough, young Marine. This Curtis person is one of the finest citizens I've met—takes his work seriously, loves it, and feels he must do his best in order to work off a debt to his fans that he can never quite repay. The children on Kauai loved Tony and he loved them. He did magic tricks for them. And got up a baseball game between the Beachhead company and a local team.

"As for me, I was in heaven. I was the only girl in the cast and everybody was wonderful to me. Even now, when I look at some of the lovely things I brought back from Hawaii, I have to pinch myself to be sure I'm not day-dreaming behind that counter at Saks."

PUTTING YOUR BEST FACE FORWARD

You can be more than photogenic—you can be a personality!

■ Thirty-five years with Hollywood lovelies!

"It's nice work, if you can get it," says Gene Kornman, ace still photographer at 20th Century-Fox.

With his camera Gene could detect glamour in a stone. Of course Betty Grable and Marilyn Monroe have more to offer.

"No two faces are alike," says Gene, "even those of identical twins. And no one face is always the same. Take Liz Taylor. She has, perhaps, the most photogenic face in Hollywood. Anybody could take a good picture of Liz. But getting the mood behind the face is something else. That takes team work on the part of the subject and the photographer.

"I like a light street make-up if the pictures are to be black and white. Use a little mascara and a touch of eyebrow pencil, unless the brows are naturally dark. Lipstick, of course.

"Sometimes I ask a player to go over her face with a light oil before sitting for a portrait. This is a favorite trick of Gene Tierney's. It highlights her beautiful high cheek bones. Claudette Colbert likes to emphasize her facial structure, too. Patting the skin with damp tissue just before a shot gives a nice texture; and wetting the lips with the tongue adds sexiness."

Gene has no preference for blondes over brunettes or vice versa. They merely take different lighting. But he's mad about color.

"Susan Hayward is just another brunette in black and white," Gene says, "but what you can do with that red hair of hers in color! It's no wonder the girls hit the dyepots these days with so many pictures being made in color.

"I usually ask a player to sit unless the assignment calls for a standing shot. Most people are more relaxed when sitting," Gene explains. "Unless, of course, you're lucky enough to get a Loretta Young. Loretta poses easily and untiringly . . . uses her eyes and hands expressively.

"You expect a dancer to have body grace but Mitzi Gaynor has a face that says a lot, too. I never tire of trying to catch her changing expressions. Girls with long necks should wear something fluffy around the shoulders, not necessarily close to the face. Celeste Holm is an example. Round-faced girls should wear necklines that lengthen the face; thin faced girls vice versa; and Miss Fatty should never face the camera straight on. The girl with the heart-shaped face can wear anything.

"Be careful of your hairdo," Gene advises. "Nothing is more important to a good portrait than a simple, becoming hairdress. Finally, get some extra shut-eye the night before the sitting and be sure you're wide awake—with no puffiness about the eyes—before you face the camera." Gene believes that the average girl can be photogenic.

"If you'll follow these simple suggestions you'll not only get a good picture, you'll be a personality."

Gene, who was head still man on The Robe, had himself a field day there. The ladies in the cast are Jean Simmons, Betta St. John and Dawn Addams.

tablets and more caves than anyone else in the tribe. Because Elaine collects things. It wouldn't be so bad if she only collected poetry. (Even though that means that I'd better get to the magazines first. If I don't I'm liable to find that Elaine has clipped the last page of a mystery story because there was a poem on the other side.)

But she collects bigger things, too. Souvenirs. Records. Letters. She's got every letter anyone ever sent her, including one from her kindergarten teacher asking her to be a toadstool in the class play.

I counted her stationery once, and she has fifteen different kinds. A few are conservative white. Most of them are red; two are black; and there's even one that's red and black. As you may have guessed, red and black are her favorite colors.

"I use the stationery I'm in the mood for," explains Elaine.

That's true about nail polish too. And I can usually guess what's going to happen that night by the color of the polish she wears. If she's going to curl up on the couch and get sentimental, she'll be wearing pink; if she's going out, it can be any shade from purple to platinum; and if she's wearing green—well, I'd better get ready for a pre-dawn drive to the desert.

The funny thing is that she's conservative about clothes and jewelry. The only ring she ever wears is an heirloom that was made in Spain centuries ago and has come down from oldest daughter to oldest daughter in her mother's family. It is a strange ring of beaten silver with five diamonds in the shape of a cross. According to family legend, the diamonds are supposed to sparkle when the true owner meets the man she will marry. According to Elaine, it hasn't sparkled yet.

I'M SURPRISED at that, because our phone never stops ringing. Elaine doesn't have a steady. When she's on a "going out" spree, she'll date a different man every night for two weeks. Most of the time she and her date go dancing.

But she never can decide what she wants to do until the last possible moment. So no date is ever surprised when he arrives in a tuxedo and finds Elaine in slacks. He knows that she has decided to stay home for the evening, even if she told him on the phone half an hour before that she'd love to go to Ciro's.

And there are three boys who'll never talk to her again—at least not for a few weeks. The first one called at six o'clock one evening.

Elaine answered him with "Call me back at eight-thirty. We'll do something, but I don't know what."

Ten minutes later the phone rang again. A different boy, and Elaine told him the same thing. At six-thirty the third call came.

"I'll know what I want to do at eight-thirty," was Elaine's answer this time.

At eight-twenty-five she made up her mind.

"Come on," she said.

She threw me a coat, grabbed my arm, and pulled me out of the apartment just as the phone started ringing. We went to a third-rate neighborhood theatre, ate three bags of popcorn apiece, and saw The Quiet Man for the fourth time.

The occupational hazards involved in living with a movie star are many—but they are not varied. They include pre-picture blues, mid-picture blues, and after-picture blues. When Elaine is in the throes of any of them, she kicks off her shoes, hurls herself face downward onto the sofa, and looks like a cocker spaniel that has just been lost.

"Leave me alone," is all she says. Except sometimes she adds, "I was awful," or EARLY AMERICAN OLD SPICE A. Stick Cologne 1 00; B. Toilet Water 1.25; C. Dusting Powder and Toilet Water 2.35

RIENDSHIP'S GARDEN D. Dusting Powder and Toilet Water 2.35; E. Stick Cologne and Liquid Petals Cream Perfume 2.25; F. Liquid Petals in new gift wrap 1.25

ESERT FLOWER G. Body Sachet 1.25; H. Purse Perfume in gift box 1.50; I. Toilet Water 1.50; J. Purse Perfume and Stick Cologne 2.50

OLD SPICE FOR MEN K. Travel Set: Lather or Brushless Shaving Cream, After Shave Lotion, Talcum 1.50; L. After Shave Lotion and pressurized Smooth Shave 2.00; M. Shaving Mug, After Shave Lotion, Talcum 3.25; N. Men's Shower Soap 1.00

Prices plus tax, except on Soap and Shaving Creams

"I will be awful," or "I feel awful."

When this happened with her last picture, Take The High Ground, I knew exactly what to do. Through trial and error. Because I have tried everything.

I have played her favorite record, "Manhattan Towers"; and I have played her favorite vocalist, Frank Sinatra. They just make her sadder. I have tickled her feet with our only pet, a rubber mouse with long whiskers and red eyes. She only burrows further into the pillows. I have suggested spinach and dancing, water polo and tomato soup. But nothing cures her —nothing except a movie. It must be an old movie that she has seen before, an exciting movie with cowboys or Indians or pirates, and it must be playing in an old theatre where you can buy penny candy and licorice twists next door. In three hours she is cured.

But I don't think that anything can ever cure her of forgetting. She dreams too much in the sun. Or maybe that's what made her a star—the dreaming.

SHE DREAMS about the sea and the novel she wants to write about the sea one day, and she forgets her lunch and the shopping list. She dreams about her future as a star pinwheeling through desert skies, and she forgets to take the laundry. She dreams about the time her ring will sparkle, and she forgets her purse, or if she remembers that, she forgets her key.

It's funny sometimes, the way she forgets. There was the night I woke up to hear noises in the living room. Armed with Elaine's tennis racket, I switched on the lights and prepared to strike. But it was only Elaine, halfway through the window, one foot still on her embarrassed date's shoulders.

She steadied herself on the window sill. "I forgot my key," she said.

I couldn't think of anything to say, so I looked stern.

"I can't help it. I won't do it again."

I started to laugh. I had to. Elaine looked like she always does when she's forgotten something, like a little girl who has been caught with a hand in the cookie jar. In a minute the three of us were laughing so hard we couldn't stop.

Of course Elaine mislaid her key again —and again. Now I'm so used to her that burglars could steal anything in the apartment, and I'd just turn over and go back to sleep, thinking that Elaine had forgotten her key.

And there was the night before Christmas. Elaine was flying home to New Jersey late that night and we had prepared to celebrate by doing the town. She had shopped for weeks to get just the right presents for her family. The presents had been wrapped in the stores, but we spent the whole afternoon putting piles of red ribbon all over them. Finally, hot, tired, and aching, we stepped back to survey our handiwork. Elaine was so proud—until she started to write the cards and discovered she'd forgotten which present was which.

So the nightclubs got along without our patronage, while the four of us— Elaine and I and our two tuxedo-clad dates —sat under the Christmas tree, surrounded by tons of red ribbon, and rewrapped gifts.

Yes, it's funny, the way she forgets. But it's more than funny, too. It means that her feet may be walking along a concrete sidewalk in the city of Hollywood on the planet of earth, but her head is up in the clear, beautiful desert sky, and her hands are reaching for the stars. END

---

song and dance house

(Continued from page 48) singing engagement at the Chez Paree in Chicago, Tony was asked to sing, "Happy Birthday" to a youngster. He obliged and the father of the teen-ager who was having the party turned out to be a lamp manufacturer. He showed his gratitude by sending Tony three of his newest products.

It's a credit to Cyd's good disposition and adroit management that she can still work Tony's acquisitions into their ten-room house. A lesser woman would have given up long ago. But Cyd hardly lifts an eyebrow any more. She simply crowds the old pictures closer together to make room for the new ones. She shifts the furniture around to allow for a few more tables and on them she sets the extra lamps or whatever Tony sends home.

CYD, of course, wasn't always this relaxed and trusting about Tony's spending and his acquisitional idiosyncrasies. Her first doubts were over the purchase of their two-story, California Colonial-style house.

They had been married only a few months in 1948 when she discovered that they were paying an astronomical rent for a modest Bel Air honeymoon home. She was horrified. Her Texas blood began to boil and she decided it was foolhardy to rent a house. She began working on Tony at once, pressing him to buy a house—just any little place with a garden and a pool. Tony was agreeable provided the place wasn't too far from town. He likes to be in the middle of things.

The Martins looked at a great number of handsome new homes with pools to match. But always, either the price was out of reach or the location was too far out. Disappointment settled over the newlyweds like a bank of smog until Tony came home one afternoon with what he called "sensational" tidings. He had found a "buy" on the corner of Beverly Glen and Sunset Boulevard, about the busiest corner west of Hollywood and Vine.

He was wildly enthusiastic. "It's just what we've been looking for! A little old, maybe, but what a location!"

Cyd's ardor was restrained. She had to admit the address was ideal but when she saw the house—well—it had the charm of a mausoleum. The foyer and stairs were paved in red tile. The livingroom was dark and heavily beamed. The whole place looked gloomy and forbidding.

"What do we want with four bedrooms and plumbing from the 1890's? I like the old trees, but honestly, this house gives me the creeps."

Tony wasn't at all subdued. "With some paint and a few kids we can liven it up in no time."

Grudgingly, Cyd yielded to her husband's enthusiasm. A mere four years later, the ten rooms are full and overflowing. With a family consisting of twelve-year-old Nicky, Cyd's son by a former marriage, husky, three-year-old Tony and his nurse, Pauline, the upstairs rooms are completely occupied. Then there are Frances and Casey Casparian to look after the house and Joan Arden, the secretary who comes by the day to work in Tony's office-in-the-home.

"Tone was right," Cyd now admits. "We filled the rooms in short order, and the truth is we could use an even bigger place."

BEFORE the Martins actually moved into this spacious, old, brick house, Cyd corralled a couple of painters and a carpenter and put them to work modernizing the place. She had them paint the exterior brick a fresh white with dark green trim. She hung new brass coachman's lamps beside the front door. Inside, she had the men slap light grey and white paint over all the somber dark beams. She instructed the carpenter to put more shelves in the library and to convert a lavatory into a formica and mirrored bar. The front hall closet became a powder room. To give it a bright finish, not reminiscent of any closet, she had the workmen paper the whole room including (home decorators, please note) the back of the door.

Upstairs in the master bedroom, the carpenters squared off the old-fashioned Spanish arches and built a mirrored dressing table for Cyd. It runs the whole width of the huge bedroom. She put all new fixtures in their Mr. and Mrs. bath. And because Tony is considered one of the best-dressed men in show business, she had to turn an upstairs linen closet into extra wardrobe space. By the time they moved into the fifteen-year-old house, it had lost its dated look, and Cyd was excited and full of ideas about how she would furnish her first real home.

"Most girls grow up with dreams of how to decorate their houses," she says. "They know the kind of bedroom they want or the type of fireplace they'll have. I never gave the matter a thought. From the time I was fourteen I was so immersed in dancing that I sort of skipped over that stage Then all of a sudden I had a home and it was up to me to make it attractive.

"Not having any pent-up desires I simply started from what seemed to be a logical place. The rose beige rug in the living room came with the sale of the house. I wouldn't consider scrapping such a bonus so I found out who had laid the carpet and ordered more of it to cover the stairs and the tile floor in the entrance hall."

The same firm that filled the carpeting order also made custom draperies, so Cyd ordered tailored pull draperies with sel valances for every window in the house.

The previous owners gave them a fireman-red leather chair and ottoman. Cyd and Tony were delighted with the hand-me-downs. They were in excellent condition and made an ideal chair combination for the library. For that reason and that reason alone, Cyd started furnishing the library first.

She did the room in grey and green employing the red as a foil for the quieter colors. She tried to keep the room underfurnished, using only a couch, a leather topped game table with matching chairs and the new bar. She knew for sure that Tony's trophies and gifts would soon crowd the furniture. She was right. Since she first decorated the house, she has had to add a glass case for his collection of miniature liqueur bottles, half a dozen more record cabinets, a built-in radio, and a TV screen.

"The room just can't take another improvement," she says, "but that won't stop Tone. Not one bit. He'll keep buying anything that catches his eye."

BEFORE decorating her livingroom, Cyd sat down and analyzed her needs. She knew that Tony would be working at home with song writers and music arrangers. Experience had taught her that these fellows get carried away in a frenzy of artistic creation and forget everything but their work. They plop their feet on the furniture, drop cigarettes on the rugs, spill drinks, and make a general mess. Of one thing she was sure. She would need a practical livingroom that could withstand "Carry on" plane luggage!

It's small enough to share your seat on plane or train. Gets off when you get off. No waiting! Carries 52 feminine travel needs!

Traveling dressing table!

The top's a big mirror that stays up while you make up. Removable tray holds beauty aids and jewelry. Water-repellent lining.

Matching Vanity O'Nite!

Carries enough clothes for a week-end. A divider keeps shoes from crushing blouses and lingerie! Mirror, deep pockets, luxury lining.

Only $17.50 plus tax.

Don't just hope for it—
int for it! Glamorous

Samsonite Train Case

LL HIM how thrilled you'll be if this at's under the tree, and tagged for u! The fabulous Samsonite Train se is fast becoming woman's most lispensable travel piece. Holds everyng you need for overnight or several hts! Inside and out, it's a master-piece . . . with a removable tray, luxurious water-repellent lining, spacious pockets, fashion-accent locks, and a better-than-leather finish that stays clean with a damp cloth! Tell your Santa it's on sale at all good luggage and department stores—and it's only $17 50 plus tax

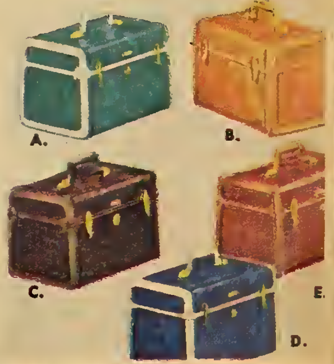
ON TV FOR SAMSONITE!

Don't miss Sid Caesar and Imogene Coca on NBC's "Your Show of Shows."



Choice of 5 other finishes!

Both Train Case and Vanity O'Nite featured in Natural Rawhide finish.

Also available in:
A. Bermuda Green
D. Admiral Blue
E. Colorado Brown
B. Saddle Tan
C. Natural Alligator Finish

amsonite flight-proven luggage

FLIGHT PROVEN PAN AMERICAN WORLD AIRWAYS

RITE-FIT DRESS-of-the-MONTH SELECTIONS

Left: Seeing spots? These are fascinating! They begin in minute fashion at the shoulder and hem, and grow to glamorous heights at the center of interest. A Rite-Fit exclusive print in fine rayon crepe. Purple, peacock, navy, black . . . all with white. Sizes 16½ to 24½. About $9.
Right: A dress of graceful simplicity with an elegant air, in an exclusive Rite-Fit print. A pyramid pattern in penline stripes brilliantly done in fine rayon crepe. Aqua or pink with black. Sizes 12½ to 20½. About $9.

Write us—we'll tell you where to buy them.

Max Wiesen & Sons Co. Inc., 463 Seventh Ave., New York 18

their abuse plus the wear and tear of children.

With this end in view, she had four small couches covered in a dirt-proof, cocoa-colored fabric. She had her tables and piano done in an antique finish and then highly waxed to resist practically everything. And she chose only big, unbreakable lamps.

The task of decorating and filling a large house takes time and effort, as Cyd soon found out. She enlisted the help of her friend, Dusty Negulesco. She is a talented painter and the wife of the movie director, Jean Negulesco. Even so, the job progressed slowly. She and Dusty wanted to keep the rooms comfortable, but original. They spent weeks matching colors and choosing fabrics. They combed odd little shops for the round table that now sits in the center of the livingroom. It has removable, underneath trays that slide out and are used in buffet dinners. They also spent months finding one-of-a-kind pictures and novel accessories.

Midway in their labors Tony took an active interest in interior decorating and decided to make one of his large-scale gestures. This happened one afternoon when Cyd and Dusty had triumphantly finished papering his office and music room. They had found a book of old songs in an antique store and with that as a start, they devised the scheme of using the pages of sheet music for wallpaper. The two girls had papered the yellowed pages on the walls themselves, after which, they had adjourned wearily to the pool. They were stretched out on chaises taking a well-deserved rest when Tony walked in.

"Go take a look at your new music studio," Cyd suggested.

A few minutes later Tony returned. "Gosh, kids. It looks great! You did a terrific job." Then, "I've got a little surprise, too."

There was a pause.

"I bought the diningroom furniture, this afternoon."

"You what?" exploded Dusty.

"I saw a nice table and some chairs and a couple of other pieces in a store right on Sunset," Tony explained. "So I bought them. They'll be delivered tomorrow. Boy. That's another room finished."

Dusty made a choking, clucking sound.

"Darling," Cyd said quickly, "it sounds marvelous. I can hardly wait to see it."

When the furniture arrived the next day it proved to be of fine quality. Nevertheless, it is Provincial and the rest of the house is comfortably contemporary. "But, you know," Cyd says, "I kind of like the change of pace."

For an entertainer who spends more time away from his home than he spends in it, Tony takes an inordinate amount of pride in his residence.

Only a few months ago when he was singing in New York, he was approached by an old nightclub buddy. "Hear you've married a movie star and got a big mansion in Hollywood," the crony said. "How can a foot-loose guy like you take care of such a plushy set-up?"

Tony's mind flashed back over the years when everything he owned was in his suitcase. "It's simple," he said, "I'm married to an angel, and all we need to take care of the house is a song from me every now and then, and a dance from her every now and then."

His friend looked at Tony quizzically. "You been drinkin'?" he asked.

"Never been more sober in my life!"

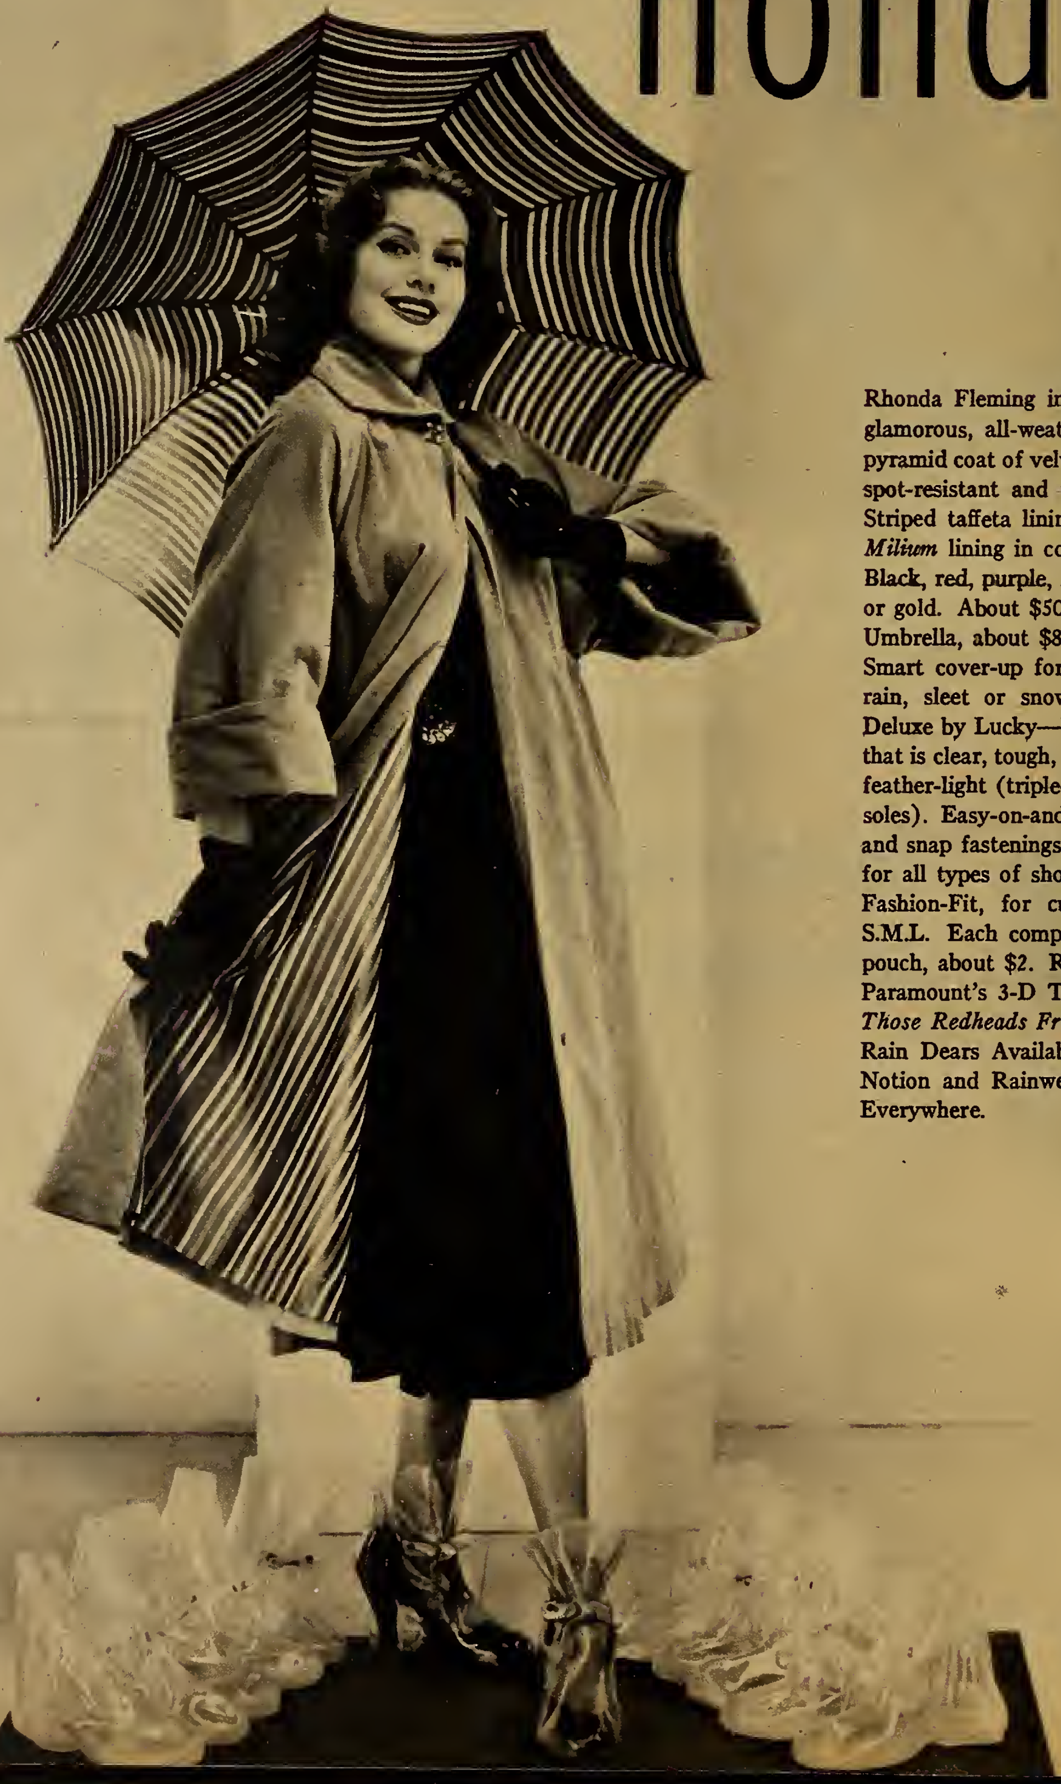
Next day, he bought three oil paintings and air mailed them to Cyd. Right now she's trying to find room for them.

(Cyd Charisse can be seen in MGM's Brigadoon.) END

modern screen fashions

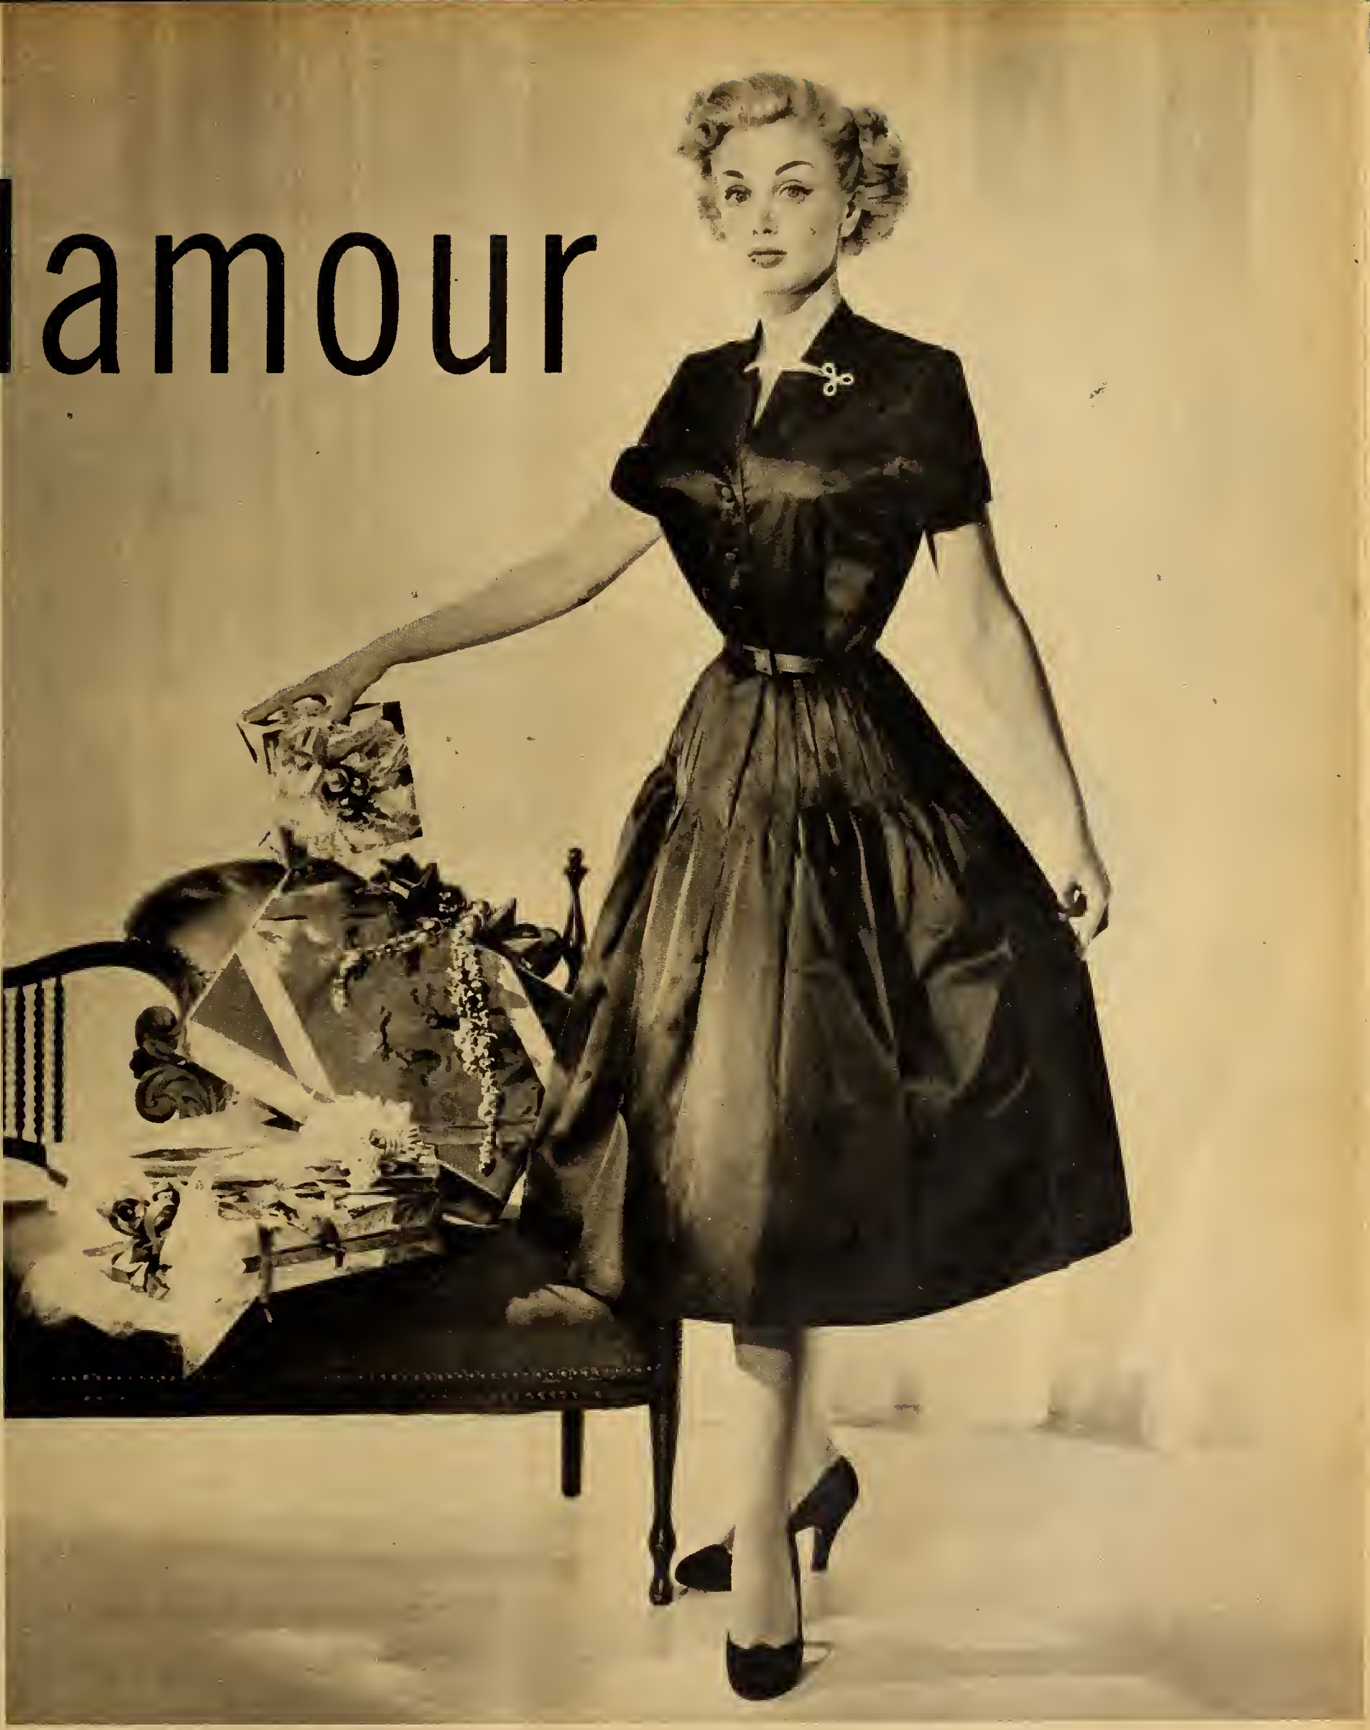
■ Lovely Maureen O'Hara acted as Chairwoman for the voting for the Modern Screen Fashion Star medal awarded to Playtex Magic-Controller girdle by unanimous decision. New and wonderful—favorite of Hollywood stars—this girdle slims you as nature intended and is as comfortable as your own skin. It features a non-roll top, that stays up without a single bone or stay, and invisible "finger" panels for firm abdominal control. It washes in seconds, dries like a miracle. Maureen wears the Magic-Controller girdle under her casual, career and formal clothes. Universal-International's Technicolor War Arrow is Maureen's forthcoming film.

holiday



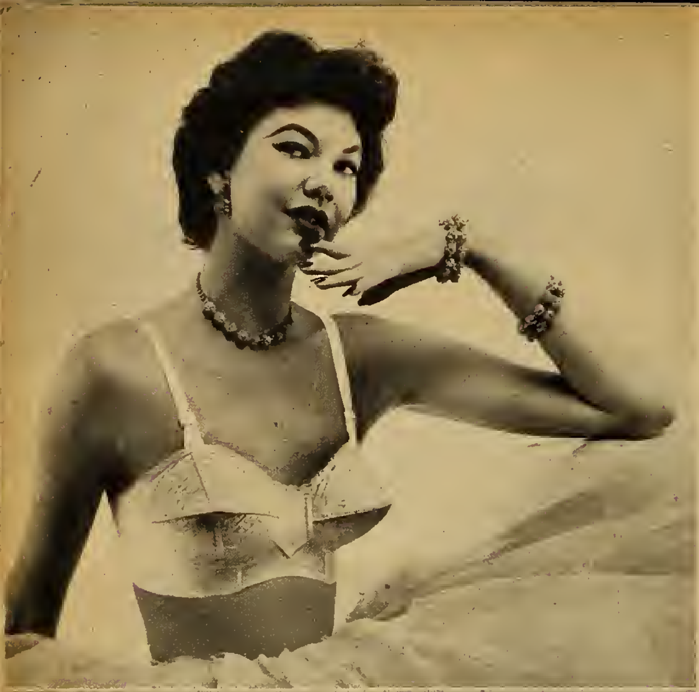
Rhonda Fleming in Sherbrooke's glamorous, all-weather, all-purpose pyramid coat of velveteen that is spot-resistant and water-repellent. Striped taffeta lining—also with Milium lining in contrasting colors. Black, red, purple, turquoise, dusty pink or gold. About $50.
Umbrella, about $8.
Smart cover-up for your footwear in rain, sleet or snow—Rain Dears Deluxe by Lucky—Norlon plastic boot that is clear, tough, long-wearing and feather-light (triple-thick, non-slip soles). Easy-on-and-off bow-tie tape and snap fastenings. Universal-Fit, for all types of shoes, S.M.L. or XL. Fashion-Fit, for cuban or high heels, S.M.L. Each complete with plastic pouch, about $2. Rhonda is in Paramount's 3-D Technicolor film, Those Redheads From Seattle.
Rain Dears Available At Shoe, Notion and Rainwear Counters Everywhere.

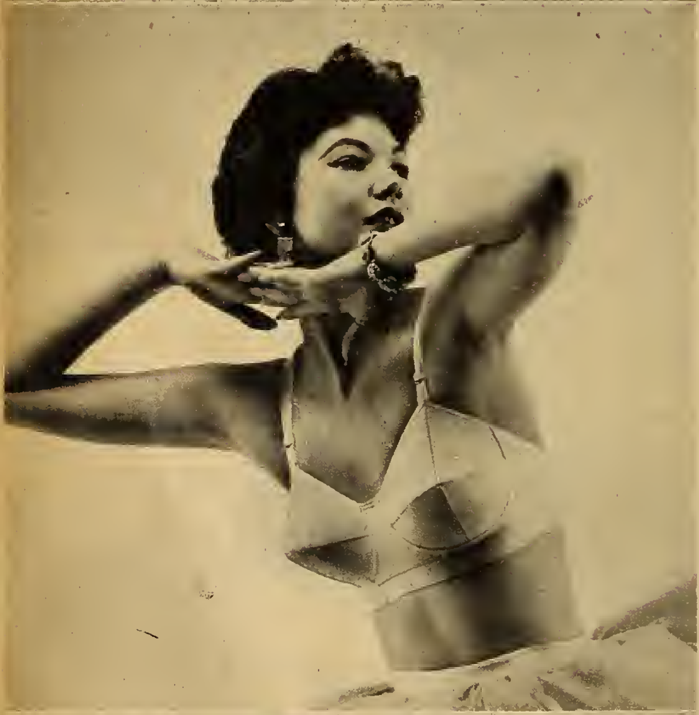
glamour

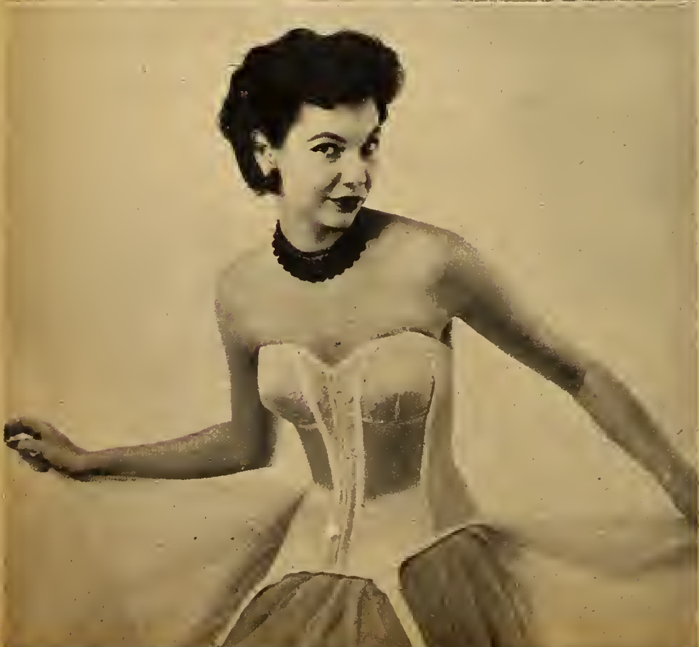


In gala holiday mood—Jan Sterling, currently in Paramount's Alaska Seas, poses in Max Wiesen's date dress of lush rayon peau de soie. A full skirt flares from the flatteringly tucked and molded hipline. A glittering rhinestone shoulder pin accents the cut-out neckline. Self belt. Black only. Sizes 12½ to 22½. About $11 at Bullock's, Los Angeles; Fries & Schuele, Cleveland; Marshall Field, Chicago. Hosiery—the new 12 gauge, 66 denier nylons in the latest Cinerama date-time color, Cine-beige by Gotham Gold Stripe. $1.95.

MORE ➤







the flattering look

■ The season's gala clothes call for true figure glamour—these bra styles by Lovable are the perfect answer. The exciting costume jewelry is by Capri.

Top: This bra called Add-Vantage features smoothly stitched cups that are invisibly lined with soft Foamette and backed with jersey to give a fuller bosom look. Especially designed for the in-between cup size. White embroidered broadcloth—also white or black acetate satin. Strapless, white broadcloth only. About $2. Capri's glittering rhinestone Pavé balls. Earrings, $3* and $6*. Necklace, $8*. Bracelets, $8* each.

Center: For your budget, Budget Beauty, a bra that features four-section cups and circular stitching. Seafoam, white, pink, blue, lilac, black or yellow-rose broadcloth. Also in white, pink or black in nylon or acetate satin. About $1. Fringed, gold-plated mesh String Bean earrings with pearls, $3*. Pearl and rhinestone studded bracelet on gold-plated metal, $6*. Matching necklace—not shown, $6*.

Bottom: new and exciting, Bra-leen, a combination bra, waist-cinch and garter belt. Lined, embroidered nylon sheer bra and front panel, power net sides and back—feather-light boning. Adjustable back closing, removable straps. White only. About $5. Capri's black jet and golden bead necklaces, $2* to $5*. Earrings, $2*. Matching bracelets—not shown, $2* each.

LOVABLE BRAS AND CAPRI COSTUME JEWELRY AVAILABLE AT LEADING DEPARTMENT AND SPECIALTY STORES

Plus federal tax*

DO WOMEN WANT TO BE FOOLED?

Do they want to believe that fancy "salon" creams and fancy prices can actually do more for their beauty? The truth is, as any dermatologist can tell you, it isn't how much you pay for a cream that benefits your skin. One of the most important things is how deep the cream penetrates. AND NO CREAMS AT ANY PRICE CAN PENETRATE DEEPER THAN WOODBURY FACE CREAMS MADE WITH PENATEN. Woodbury now makes a special low-price offer to introduce you to the magic of Penaten!

What is Penaten... what does it do?

As you can guess from the name, Penaten is a penetrating ingredient. It carries the cleansing and softening oils in Woodbury Creams deeper into your pore openings—deeper than these oils have ever penetrated before!

With Penaten at work, WOODBURY COLD CREAM actually loosens hidden dirt and cosmetic particles that would otherwise lodge in your pore openings and cause tiny bumps and blackheads. You'll see your skin cleaner, brighter than ever before — not just in your imagination, but in your mirror!

If your skin is dry and flaky, WOODBURY DRY SKIN CREAM with Penaten penetrates deeper to help replace the natural oils your thirsty skin needs. You'll see rough flakes and dry lines fairly melt away under your fingertips . . . your skin alive with new radiance, new young-looking softness.

What's more, your nights of sleeping with a "buttered-up" face are over. Woodbury Creams, with Penaten, penetrate so quickly — five minutes care is all you need!

GET WOODBURY'S BEAUTY SPECIAL

Woodbury Cold Cream or
Woodbury Dry Skin Cream

$1.00 size 69¢ plus tax limited time only

a faith for my child

(Continued from page 60) own way. Yet I remember from my own early days that children brought into the realm of religion tend to stumble through it in beautiful innocence at first. They make their own interpretations of what they see and hear, such as are suitable to their thinking and make sense in their little worlds.

I remember this story of my husband's childhood. When he was about Melanie's age he was fascinated by the hymn singing in church. Someone, about this time, gave him a teddy bear, one of those fluffy, brown ones with button eyes set close together. A few days later his mother asked him what he had named it. He replied, "Gladly." Curious, she asked where he had gotten such an odd name.

"Why, don't you remember?" he asked. "We sing about him in church every Sunday. 'Gladly my cross-eyed bear!'"

If it hasn't struck you yet, what he referred to was the hymn line, "Gladly my cross I'd bear."

It is perhaps more than just strange that this endearing mistake, born of the love of a child for his toy, is to me as warm and encouraging a sign as any sermon I have heard that there may be a greater beneficence to life than we suspect. The inborn faith of children may yet be our strongest proof that we are not, as our intellects tend to persuade us, just hopeless nomads flickering briefly somewhere and somewhen in space-time.

It seems to me that when I was a small girl we asked fewer questions than children of today; perhaps the perplexities of life entering the home via radio and TV accounts for the greater curiosity of the current crop of youngsters. We of my day were more sheltered and consequently, I sometimes think, more secure.

Of the first church I can remember, an ancient, small edifice with beautiful Norman and Saxon arches in Sussex, England, I can recall not the sermons of the venerable preacher, but only the smells of the musty pews, the burning candle fat and our damp clothes on a rainy Sunday morning. It was not that I wasn't interested, I'm sure, but rather that the reedy voice of the pastor dealt in sentiments phrased in a manner unclear to me, and even when understood, of remote significance. His words hummed and sometimes even sang in my ears, but conveyed very little meaning. Yet out of this came a love for the thoughtful tranquillity of the church. It was nice to go. You felt goodness enter into you and you were sure as you left that you were once more a very good little girl.

I was a much more ardent churchgoer when I was fifteen, but not, I think, as good a little girl. Along with every other young miss in the boarding school I attended, I was in love with the curate, a dark young man of imposing tallness whose sonorous voice held us transfixed.

This was in Bristol and we used to march by twos (in a "croc" as we called it) a full three and a half miles to church every Sunday, but no one uttered a word of complaint. It was the curate's job to teach the classes for confirmation and it was difficult to remember what he said, because we were not listening to his words—just to him. He could have told us anything.

He must have conveyed the right intelligence because we were confirmed as members of the Church of England. Yet just a few short years later I was undertaking to study Catholicism, and just before or after this, Christian Science. This was during the war. I was tremendously moved by what was going on and impelled to find a comforting spiritual foundation for my life.

We were undergoing the bombings in England when it began to dawn on me that I had not seriously considered faith in my plans up to this time. I had gone to church, I had been a believer by rote, but I felt, with some panic, that I had been untouched inside. I think now that this attitude was a phenomenon peculiar to my generation, one brought up between two world wars and witness to a rather deplorable era in man's history. I remember at least one way this affected the young people on our level, the fading middle class gentry of England. It was traditional among us that church socials and tennis teas were the sort of activities through which you met proper young men. But somehow the proper young men were no longer turning up at these functions. You met them now in the outside world, in industry and in professions. Into the outside world we girls went.

But before this happened, and while living in London, an aunt of mine, a woman of deep Episcopalian piety, gave me a prayer book which I accepted thankfully and greedily scanned for solace. My disturbance was great and events were aggravating it constantly. One morning I would see volunteers removing bombing victims from blasted dwellings with calloused preoccupation. The next morning I would be asked in church to join the congregation in prayers for the enemy—the men who had murdered these people.

On Salisbury Plains I stood one afternoon watching our soldiers drill and train. It came over me then that when their sergeants got through teaching them how best to kill, their chaplains would instruct them in love and kindness. To consider men capable of this state of human culture as worthy of God's attention was difficult, to say the least. To rationalize the horror of what my eyes were seeing daily, with the salvation I must spell out on Sundays for those who were committing the horrors, set up a conflict of emotion that left me unhappy and shaken. In my craving for a spiritual lift I not only read my prayer book but touched on both Catholicism and Christian Science. I read what I could, I questioned friends of these beliefs. I would think for a period that I had found what I sought—and then I wouldn't be sure.

I kept asking myself questions I could neither answer, nor allow to go unanswered. Are we but envelopes carrying the seed of life and destined to be tossed aside when we have delivered our quota? Have I, with all my thoughts and inward stirrings, no more significance, universally, than a plant which turns to the sun? In my prayer book, in talking to my friends, I was trying to see past the ritual of the devotions they described to the source of it all. Would I ever?

There was much to muddle my thinking those days. In England we were eating soy bean sausage, powdered milk and eggs, and similar make-do foods on an austerity diet. But when I went to Ireland to make a picture, just across the water a few miles, I saw pictures of a dinner given by the Italian legation there in which fresh mountain trout, rich beef, butter, thick cream and fabulous desserts were among the dishes served. And this was at a time when the Italians were surrendering to us!

I didn't begrudge the Roman diplomats their heavy-laden tables. I have been to Italy and know that for millions there during the war life was just as meager, or even worse than for us in England, and that all of us would eat well if we could. It was just another puzzling aspect of human affairs. Did it make no difference to heaven that of two men who prayed to it, one feasted and the other starved?

PHOTO CREDITS

Below you will find credited page by page the photographs which appear in this issue:

4, 5, 6, 8, 13, 14—The Sands Hotel, Parry, Beerman, Snyder, Scott, Wide World; 31—Wide World; 32—The Sands Hotel; 34, 35—Wide World, Bennett; 36, 37, 38, 39—Trindl and Woodfield, FPG; 40—RKO; 43—MGM (Apger); 46, 47, 48—Beerman, Parry; 49—RKO; 50—MGM; 54, 55—Scott, Snyder, Beerman, Globe, The Ambassador Hotel; 56—Scott; 58, 59—Beerman, Parry; 60—Columbia (Lippman); 67-70—Engsted, Green, Opée.

We were living in an altogether hectic period during those days. Nobody seemed to be sticking to the old values, not even the young man I was planning to marry. He seemed to place no importance at all in using ordinary common sense to keep among the living. A pilot with the British Transport Command at the time, he would send word through from France that he was coming into London for a date. The appointed day would arrive, more often than not foggy and rainy, but in he would fly in a borrowed plane—once in an old crate that had been condemned as unairworthy. Then we would go out to a night club considered "safe" from the German buzz bombs because it had a deep subterranean entrance. We never seemed to notice that after you entered you then climbed upstairs and actually had nothing between you and the sky but a glass roof. That's the way we were. But afterwards I would think about it and tremble at our recklessness.

Despite the consideration I was giving other faiths at the time, when Tony and I were married it was in my old church. The wedding was held at St. George of Hanover in London. I think that in the moments of the ceremony, standing in the lovely old interior of this venerable place of worship, and listening to the time-hallowed service I was more spiritually sound than ever before in my life.

Perhaps I can convey the magic of this moment to Melanie, and of those other moments in our lives when hope and love surge so strongly within us that we are convinced God must be very near.

Perhaps I will tell her of a moment in Hawaii when I was there to work in From Here To Eternity. On the windward side of the Island of Oahu I found a lonely beach where sea and sky melted together in color and form so breathtaking that you could only marvel at it. Lying on the sand as glory streamed across the heavens was like being in church and seeing the music of an organ rather than hearing it.

Here it was soon easy to forget who I was and wonder what I was. Out of my wondering I got no sign, no proof from above. But, something within me seemed to ask, why was I permitted to see this beauty, to be so close to it, if I were not also a part of it? And could such beauty be born out of anything short of Someone's divine love for it?

I had been wondering all my life . . . where shall I go to find Him? How shall I address Him? And here He could be. He had found me out and here He could be. He was spreading the miracle of Himself from horizon to horizon.

Out of these moments, I must tell Melanie, must come the answers to her questions. Perhaps men have known about this for many thousands of years. And this may be why it was written long ago and carried down to us: "Lift up thine eyes to the hills from whence cometh all strength" END

the happiest time

(Continued from page 38) Without a murmur, baby Wilding, whose blue eyes are beginning to turn his mother's shade of violet, fell off to sleep.

"I'm glad there's nothing wrong with him," Liz said.

"He's just tired," Mike said. "After all, we've been flying since Wednesday."

"So am I," Liz said.

Wilding kissed her on the cheek. "Lie down. Have a bit of a rest."

A few moments later, the phone began to ring. Friends knew of the Wildings' arrival from the radio and the afternoon newspapers. Now, they were phoning to welcome them to England.

Wilding, pretty well knocked out himself, bore the brunt of this assault by telephone with his usual calm and aplomb.

The only thing that disturbed him was a phone call from his parents, Henry and Ethel Wilding. "It was supposed to be a surprise," he explained later. "Liz and I brought the baby to England to show to my parents who are really getting on in years. We were going to ring them and say, 'Well, here we are, the three of us.' But they'd heard about our plan before we ever left California."

After talking to friends and relatives, Wilding spoke to the London newspapermen. One of the reasons the actor is so well-liked by the press is that he has always been cooperative and thoughtful.

Unlike many American film stars who use studio press agents to run interference for them, Mike Wilding has never been stand-offish. To him, newspapermen have always been friends, and he's always glad to talk to them.

This time he was no different. When they rang to ask if they could drop by for a fast minute or two, he said, "We'd be delighted."

Liz, of course, loves to sleep—"I'm naturally lazy," she claims—and when the reporters got to the Wilding flat, the young wife was off somewhere in dreamland. But not Wilding.

"How long are you going to stay in London?" he was asked.

"We're over here for six weeks," Mike said. "Strictly a holiday. No pictures."

"How is Mrs. Wilding?"

Mike grinned. "Exhausted. Out cold. Fast asleep."

"Was it a rough trip?"

"Not particularly. Michael is usually so good. Hardly ever cries, but when he gets tired you can't stop him. He was very tired. I'm sure the other passengers will testify to that."

WILDING went on to explain that Liz hadn't had a vacation in six months, that after the birth of the baby she had gone directly into Elephant Walk as a replacement for Vivien Leigh and then she had done Rhapsody for MGM with Vittorio Gassman.

As for him—well, he'd just finished Torch Song with Joan Crawford.

"As soon as we find a nurse," Wilding said, "Elizabeth and I will probably take off for the Continent."

A few days later, Liz hired an Australian nurse for Junior, and the Wildings were ready to embark on their European holiday.

"We tried very hard," Mike says, "to get on the jet to Rome, but all the reservations were filled, so we caught an ordinary aircraft.

"We'd both been to Rome before. In fact, Liz knew the city much better than I. We checked into the Grand Hotel, saw the sights for a few days, and then flew out to Madrid."

Elizabeth Taylor is a well-traveled girl, but she'd never been to Spain before. She

The "moisture-shield" in gentle new Fresh is an extra-effective astringent. This acts like an invisible shield to protect your clothes and stop underarm odor

"L'Elegance"—ball gown of gleaming golden brocade by Philip Hulitar. Her deodorant—sure, new Fresh gentle new deodorant has moisture-shield to keep underarms dry!

Instantly—Fresh Cream Deodorant forms an invisible shield to protect you and your clothes Wonderful news! Gentle new Fresh with "moisture-shield," used daily, ends the problem of perspiration moisture which stains fabrics and causes unpleasant odor.

University scientists have proved that gentle new Fresh has up to 180% greater astringent action than other leading cream deodorants. It's the astringent action in deodorants that keeps underarms dry. Try this creamy-soft new Fresh today.

FRESH® keeps you Lovely to Love

Fresh is also manufactured and distributed in Canada.

Fresh is a reg. trademark of The Pharma-Craft Corporation.

and Mike were looking forward to seeing their first bullfight.

"I thought I was going to like it," Liz says, "but I got sick."

"She just couldn't take it," Mike adds. "Too much blood, too much gore. After the first corrida, she left the arena. I stayed and watched. I'd read so much about bullfights. I wanted to see one."

The next morning, after a week away from little Michael, Liz said she wanted to fly back to London. She was homesick for her baby.

The birth of a son has wrought a marked change in the personality and outlook of Hollywood's most beautiful actress.

She is no longer the flighty, unpredictable girl of yesteryear. She has matured into a steady, easy-going, young woman. Much credit, of course, must go to Michael Wilding for this. In Madrid, for example, when Liz began to worry about Junior, Mike said, "Darling, we'll simply catch the plane to London tomorrow morning."

Reassured by her husband's promise and attitude, Liz stopped worrying and enjoyed a wonderful night. The following afternoon, she was back in Grosvenor Square, and little Michael lay cuddled in her arms.

WILDING is a sensitive man who understands the moods and meanderings of his wife. He never pressures her, never disturbs her with problems or crises. He takes everything in stride. At the bullfight in Madrid when Liz got upset, Wilding merely said, "You go ahead back to the hotel, dear. You'll be all right." No fuss.

Wilding never reports his working problems to Liz. He has well-balanced values and having been married to an actress once before for ten years, he knows what upsets the female histrionic temperament.

He has seen to it, for example, that Liz takes baby Wilding in her stride. There is always the tendency for a young wife to grow irritable and nervous after the birth of her first child. Unsure of herself, she worries and frets at the baby's every sniffle.

Mike has seen to it that Liz enjoys her baby. When she grew anxious about the little boy's typhoid inoculations—Junior was "shot" before he went overseas—Wilding said, "Those things don't bother babies." Apparently he was right.

When Liz expressed some fear that the child might not take to his new nurse in London, again her husband stepped in with a word of assurance. "This baby," he announced, "likes everyone."

In London when Liz expressed some doubt about leaving the child while she and her husband toured the Continent, Mike said, "The baby's much too young to miss us now."

There is never anything patronizing in Wilding's tone or manner. Although he's twenty years older than Liz, he treats her as an equal. He makes all the major decisions but that's only because he doesn't want to trouble his young bride. He was raised in the European tradition wherein the man of the house rules the roost.

When Liz and Mike were married two years ago, the consensus of European opinion was that the marriage would not last long. One writer in Stockholm, for example, told his readers: "Miss Taylor is young, spoiled and unsophisticated. Mr. Wilding is middle-aged, jaded, and continental. This combination rarely works."

Now, read what this same writer had to say after Liz and Mike visited Stockholm on their recent holiday. "Mr. and Mrs. Michael Wilding—she is Elizabeth Taylor, the American film star—arrived in Stockholm today. They are very much in love, and Mrs. Wilding looks more beautiful than ever. The couple do not behave like newlyweds. They seem very well adjusted to each other. In the past two years, Mrs. Wilding seems to have developed both mentally and physically. She is a little heavier than when I last saw her—not only in the body but also in the brain."

In Copenhagen where Liz came down with a supposed heart attack, a formerly critical journalist wrote, "The American film star, Elizabeth Taylor, is a most sensible young woman. When wild newspaper reports insisted that she had collapsed here because of heartstrain, she said, 'That's ridiculous. My back just hurt me a bit and some massages took care of it very nicely.'

"Miss Taylor is not at all the zany, irresponsible Hollywood actress the American journalists would have us believe. She knows every minute what she is doing.

"Miss Taylor and Mr. Wilding went to Kastrup Airport to meet their son and his nurse."

LIZ has come to a very sensible conclusion about the relative worth of her marriage and her career. To her the most important thing is the security of her marriage—which is why you will never hear about her fighting or scheming for any coveted role. Whatever the studio wants her to do is all right just so long as it presents no threat to her family life.

In London, for example, after she and Michael had visited Stockholm and Brussels, she learned that Larry Weingarten, a Metro producer was in town. Supposedly, Weingarten was bearing news about the production of Beau Brummel, a film in which Liz is scheduled to star opposite Stewart Granger.

"I don't know as of this minute," Liz told me, "whether the picture will be made here in London or back in Hollywood. And frankly, I don't care just so long as Michael and I aren't separated." Then she hummed four bars of an old tune, paraphrasing the lyrics into "Michael and me and baby makes three."

As of this writing MGM says that Beau Brummel will be shot entirely in England which means that the three Wildings will probably remain abroad until Christmas or little Mike's first birthday.

"I don't care where I work," Liz repeats, "or if I ever work. I just want to be with two guys named Mike."

Liz Taylor has come a long way since her first marriage to Nicky Hilton. Now she has the satisfaction of a mature husband and a baby, and she is contented.

"Let her have two more children," one of Wilding's London friends says, "and the chances are she'll never make another picture. This girl is beautiful but she also has brains. Compared to her family, her career means precious little to her." END

Come into my parlor

Or more specifically, come into our office and help us plan MODERN SCREEN so that this can really be your magazine. It's easy to have your say about what you'd like to read—all you have to do is fill out the form below—carefully—after you've read all the stories in this December issue. Then clip it out and mail it to the editors at the address listed below. And by the way—a crisp new one-dollar bill will go to each of the first 100 people we hear from. So get started right away!

QUESTIONNAIRE: Which stories and features did you enjoy most in this issue? WRITE THE NUMBERS 1, 2, and 3 AT THE FAR LEFT of your first, second and third choices. Then let us know what stars you'd like to read about in future issues.

☐ The Inside Story
☐ Louella Parsons' Good News
☐ Mike Connolly's Hollywood Report
☐ TV Talk
☐ Sweet and Hot
☐ Happy The Bride . . . (Lana Turner-Lex Barker)
☐ Out Of The Frying Pan (Rita Hayworth-Dick Haymes)
☐ My Side Of The Story (Dick Haymes)
☐ The Truth About Those Continental Flings
☐ The Happiest Time (Elizabeth Taylor-Michael Wilding)
☐ This Is A Monster? (Robert Mitchum)
☐ My Roommate, Elaine (Elaine Stewart)
☐ Anybody Here Seen Mrs. Kelly? (Gene Kelly)
☐ The Song And Dance House (Cyd Charisse and Tony Martin)
☐ The Man Behind The Face (Jack Palance)
☐ Friend Of The Family (Esther Williams)
☐ I'd Make A Lousy Bachelor (Tony Curtis-Janet Leigh)
☐ Now Let Me Tell It! (Terry Moore)
☐ "Actors Are A Dime A Dozen" (Dale Robertson)
☐ The Right Mr. Wrong (Judy Garland)
☐ A Faith For My Child (Deborah Kerr)
☐ Movie Reviews

Which of the stories did you like least?

What 3 MALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.

What FEMALE stars would you like to read about in future issues?

What MALE star do you like least?

What FEMALE star do you like least?

My name is..........................
My address is.:......................
City.................. State.........
Occupation........ I am .... yrs. old

ADDRESS TO: POLL DEPT., MODERN SCREEN, BOX 125, MURRAY HILL STATION, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

now let me tell it!

(Continued from page 54) general, before we get on to the business at hand. Some of you may not like it—it is understandably difficult to sympathize too much with the troubles of the poor, poor movie star—but under certain conditions this is the truth: we are terribly vulnerable to what is called "bad publicity." We are in no position to fight back. Our hands are tied. Our public relations people nearly always advise us to keep still and take it—it'll blow over, sweetie. And if it doesn't blow over sweetie, what then? You're in the public eye, sweetie, the public eye. It's one of the penalties.

Yes, it's one of the penalties. But it's an unjust penalty if you are the victim of false innuendo or the lie, big or little. It can really hurt. It hurts you professionally and it hurts you personally, and I am just young enough—or perhaps naive enough—not to want to take it lying down.

Most Hollywood writers are entirely ethical and conscientious, obligated by their own code to check their facts and not print what isn't so. A few are not. These writers go on the theory that people would rather believe the worst. Virtue and normality, it would appear, are dull subjects.

However, let's go back to Terry Moore, and hear what she has to say about Mr. Cronin's article. Mistaken as I may be, I have no hesitation in taking the stand.

IT BEGAN with a picture, a picture being the part of any article that hits the eye first. It was a picture of Bob Wagner and me on location in Florida for Beneath The 12-Mile Reef, the 20th Century-Fox film we were both working on. It is not an attractive picture but it is a rather sexy one, something I hadn't guessed when it was made. It's the sort of print the studio would destroy. But it wasn't made by the studio. It was made by some photo service or other. I don't remember which one. We'd just finished the day's shooting. I was dead tired. My mother will tell you. But the photographer begged us for just a few shots. And here it was.

. . . Here's a gal with a name that should make her a fine wife: Sayno Moore. Sayno is a parttime secretary to Janis Paige. . . .
Hy Gardner, H. Tribune

Linked to the picture was the first part of Mr. Cronin's article, tying Bob's name to mine, although it did explain that that was merely publicity.

I thought, at any rate, that Mr. Cronin had made that clear. The young man I was going with at the time may have thought so, too, but the consequences were not good, anyway. He is of a social, conservative Los Angeles family. He and his parents did not like either the picture or the tie-up. The result is the end of our friendship.

A little later I read, somewhere, a letter from a fan. She expressed the hope that Bob was not going to marry Terry Moore, that he would wait for someone "sweet and wholesome." Ouch! And I do mean ouch! Please, dear reader, don't confuse what you see on the screen or glean from irresponsible writers with what is the truth. Reading that letter, I felt like a femme fatale, complete with cigarette holder, slinky walk and the rest. I'm not. I'm twenty-three. I went to high school in Los Angeles and dated two nights a week. I live in Westwood, near the UCLA campus, with my mother and father and kid brother. I never do anything unusual unless being in pictures is unusual. And even if I were what this woman evidently thought I was, I'm personality-plus

GIVE YOUR EYES

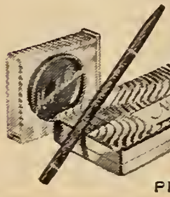
From out of the "ordinary"... into radiant new loveliness. That's what MAYBELLINE does for your eyes—Mascara for longer, darker appearing lashes... Eyebrow Pencil for expressive brows.. and Eye Shadow for a subtle touch of color. It's so easy with Maybelline—just try it and see the difference!



Maybelline

PREFERRED BY SMART WOMEN THE WORLD OVER

MASCARA ★ EYE SHADOW ★ EYEBROW PENCIL

ATTENTION "I Love Lucy" FANS!

Don't miss the current big issue of

WHO'S WHO IN TV & RADIO

with the special giant section on

LUCILLE BALL and DESI ARNAZ

And remember—over 1000 biographies give you all of the facts on all of your favorite TV and radio personalities.

Extra in the current issue—Big Howdy Doody Contest with over 1000 prizes!

get

WHO'S WHO IN TV & RADIO

at your favorite newsstand NOW!

sure Bob Wagner could take care of himself. Bob is a nice boy, certainly, but he is not—and I know he would agree—as naive as some writers have described him.

Mr. Cronin has followed with a brief review of my career to the present, with which I cannot quarrel.

Then he scores me with instigating the "sexy" phase of it, starting with the allegation that, in order to get the part of the girl in Come Back, Little Sheba, I walked into the offices of Hal Wallis Productions with a sheaf of juicy pictures of myself. A moment later, I am quoted as urging publicists that this be the "sexiest publicity campaign on record," then complaining because they wouldn't even let me wear sweaters.

What can I say? Mr. Cronin did not quote me. He did not even misquote me. What he wrote just never happened.

We come now to my marriage to Glenn Davis, a football great; a marriage which has ended in divorce. Here is something on which, I think, I am a greater authority than Mr. Cronin or even than Mr. Cronin's sources, whoever they may have been.

The article states that, "As everyone knows," Glenn was on the rebound from Liz Taylor, nursing a six-foot torch, and so forth. Well, not quite everyone. I didn't know it. Nor do I know it not to be so. But if I may be permitted a guess, if either of us was on a rebound at the time of our marriage, it was I.

In deference to taste, I can say of this only that before meeting Glenn, I had been in love with a man considerably older than myself—and may still have been in love with him. I honestly don't know. I was confused. Many girls know how it is. But if there were doubts, I think you might say the scales were tipped when my friends urged the marriage with Glenn; we were such a cute couple, all that. It didn't last, and I can see no point in dwelling on it.

But the next part of the article annoyed me so that I had an urge to flip my lid.

"Then came a new kind of legend," Mr. Cronin went on. "Once she (Terry Moore) was entertaining some family friends in her hotel suite during a personal appearance in New York. A dignified stranger appeared at the door bearing a lovely mink coat. 'Mr. So-and-So sent this,' he announced. Then he tipped his hat and left.

"A shocked silence followed. Terry hastily explained that her businessman friend had taken her to the airport in Los Angeles. She had left her mink cape in his car, and he dispatched it across the continent by messenger on the next plane.

" 'Hmm,' said the old friends politely. But it was an awkward moment."

No, Mr. Cronin. There were no awkward moments until your little account of the incident appeared. You are inferring, not reporting.

What Mr. Cronin is trying to say is that my friend bought me the mink coat and had it delivered to my hotel in New York. In fact, he might as well have said it. The less interesting, fuddy-duddy old facts of the matter are these: (1) it wasn't a mink coat, it was a mink cape, and it still is—the only piece of mink I own; (2) I bought it from what I made out of my first radio show—nobody else bought it; (3) everything happened exactly as I explained it—and as Mr. Cronin has explained it, only behind his hand and out of the corner of his mouth; nor was the happening so extraordinary; (4) there was no shocked silence; (5) nobody said, "Hmm"; (6) it was not an awkward moment.

The article resumes: "The wealthy friend didn't particularly approve of Terry's all-out sex campaign (sic)—though he'd never noticed her till she embarked on it. He actually put the kibosh on one press agent's stunt. Terry'd been all set to demonstrate that a girl could be dressed—more or less—in one handkerchief if that handkerchief were artfully draped, but the tycoon said it 'wasn't dignified.' Regretfully, Miss Moore declined to pose."

Again I have to fall back on numerical refutation. There is no other way. (1) My friend had, as observed, noticed me a long time before anything resembling an "all out sex campaign" had been bestowed on me; (2) He didn't "approve," but simply in the way no friend would approve of this happening to a girl he liked; (3) there was nothing "regretful" about my declining to pose; rarely, if ever, have I seen the word "regretfully" used with such license or less regard for truth. The stunt was suggested to me. I didn't want to do it and told my friend. "Just tell them you won't," he said. And I told them I wouldn't, and I didn't.

Mr. Cronin's next piece of fiction occurs two paragraphs later. He writes that I said to a woman columnist: "I've got a terrific body, why not promote it?" My best recollection—and a pretty good one, it is—of that incident is this: The woman did report in her column that I said it. My publicity man promptly wrote her a letter to the effect that Terry-never-said-that-why-did-you-say-she-did? The columnist replied that if I would write her a letter denying it, she would retract the item. I promptly did so. The item was never retracted. But neither did I ever make the remark.

And after that, it says here, I became "the favorite of a half-dozen young oilmen from Texas who would fly to Hollywood in their private planes just to have a long date with her." There was only one oilman from Texas—just one.

Later: "She posed for some of the most sizzling art to come out of the studios. She pitched in enthusiastically on the sweater layout to end all sweater layouts, illustrating degrees of sexiness that can be achieved."

The first statement was not documented. As for the second—there aren't many things you can do with a sweater beyond putting it on, are there?

There follows more talk about the sex build-up, an obsession of Mr. Cronin's, together with the observation: "But no Hollywood career has been successfully sustained by sex alone." Mr. Cronin, you force me to say this: I was nominated for an Academy Award; one of the youngest actresses, if not the youngest, ever to be so honored. In all honesty, is that "sex alone"?

It is difficult, it is even impossible, for me to take issue with Mr. Cronin's article in the places where it generalizes. There is nothing to meet head on. But where he has deigned to be specific, it is all very like a screen door; the appearance of solidity—and full of holes.

On a few points, I think that he is right, and here his article taught me something, for which I am grateful. He remarks that I want to be all things to all people, that I try too hard to please. It is true I don't talk football to a musician or vice versa, but still that is an evasion on my part. I know what Mr. Cronin means and maybe I do work a little too hard to keep everybody happy.

He describes the Paramount publicity office as furious at me over insisting all future press material would have to be cleared through my personal agent, then goes on to say that the same publicity office denied me use of a studio dress from Paramount for a party. "Two minutes later, Terry was in (the publicist's) office sobbing . . ."

May I say three things? Permission to wear a studio dress is obtained through an executive named Bill Meiklejohn, not in the publicity office. Mr. Meiklejohn granted me permission. I did wear the dress. Apart from that, Mr. Cronin is batting 1.000.

In Mr. Cronin's next breath, I am in San Francisco on a personal appearance. Nicky Hilton has flown up to see me. (My mother was there, too; Mr. Cronin didn't mention it.) But I have pledged the publicity man accompanying me to secrecy. "I don't want it out that he's up here," Mr. Cronin has me say.

"An hour later," writes Mr. Cronin, "the publicist overheard her (me) on the phone. She was telling Louella Parsons all abou how Hilton had come to San Francisco t see her. It was the same old story of Terry wanting to please."

It was months and months after that Sa Francisco trip that I even met Louella Parsons, let alone talked to her on the phone That is not fascinating, I know; it is merel the truth.

There are only a dozen lines left in Mr Cronin's article. They are all rathe complimentary to me, so I can't very wel a lasting christmas gift

The trouble with Santa Claus is that he only comes once a year. One great day and it's all over—including the excitement of getting presents. But don't feel too let down: we know a way for you to play Santa to all your favorite people every month of the year—and at so little cost! For only two dollars you can give gift subscriptions to America's favorite movie magazine, MODERN SCREEN. It will be Christmas twelve times a year when your friends receive their copies. And it's so easy, too. Just fill out the coupon below, clip it, and mail it with your remittance to the address listed. MODERN SCREEN will do all the rest.

SUBSCRIPTION IN THE U.S.A. AND CANADA FOR ONE YEAR $2.00; TWO YEARS $3.50; THREE YEARS $5.00. FOREIGN SUBSCRIPTIONS $3.00 A YEAR. PLEASE SEND CHECKS OR MONEY ORDERS ONLY.

MODERN SCREEN Subscription Department, 10 West 33rd Street, New York 1, N. Y.

NAME ______________________

ADDRESS ______________________

CITY ____________ ZONE ________ STATE ____________

12/3

either confirm or deny them.

But there is a little more to say. If I were you, I would be asking myself at this point: Well, what Terry Moore says here may be true, but if it is why in the world should a reputable magazine print what is not? What would be the point? And besides, where there's smoke, isn't there fire?

Nor would I blame you for asking. I don't know myself. I can only guess. One thing I am sure of is that MODERN SCREEN would not deliberately distort facts, through malice, to sell magazines, or for any other reason. I know the magazine and its editors too well for that. I think they were convinced that what they had was in essence the truth, and that they regarded it as provocative material. And I imagine it is, to speak realistically, a tribute to shrewd editorial judgment. It was something people would read. For example, I first saw it in Lone Pine in California, on location with Tyrone Power for King Of The Khyber Rifles. A writer showed it to Ty, who laughed at my concern, looked at the picture and the title, and said: "This is one I'd read. Don't feel too bad about it."

Maybe, as I said at the beginning, I should have taken this one: kept my mouth shut or my pen still and let it blow over. But just for once, I wanted one of us to talk back, to see if the consequences will be so dire after all.

So far as MODERN SCREEN is concerned, I'm not afraid of retribution. They have the power to hurt me for sticking pins in one of their own stories, but I do not think they will use it simply because they also had the honesty to let me stick away. What other repercussions may come, I do not know.

But this I do know; so many of us in Hollywood live in fear of antagonizing the press. You can't blame us, any more than you can blame the press for writing what they believe to be so. A star who enters voluntarily into stardom waives her option to a wholly private life. It is part of the game. If you yell every time you're hurt, you're a crybaby. To most misrepresentations and mistaken inferences, you should keep still. But some time, somewhere, the moment comes when you should fight back.

Clifton Webb's film, Dreamboat, is being booked all over France under the title, Le Grand Seducteur, the big seducer. When told of this fact recently, Webb shook his head. "My," he said, "how strenuous!"

I don't know how much Mr. Cronin's essay cost MODERN SCREEN. It cost me the friendship of a young man I liked very much. I don't know how widely believed it was. I have heard that a denial never catches up with an allegation. If that is so, this article of mine won't be very effective.

But there are one or two things, I think, to be said for my side of the Terry Moore legend. Mine is a first-hand account, not a second-hand.

I don't mean to sound holier-than-thou. Mr. Cronin's suppositions about my attitude toward the so-called "sex build-up" (I much prefer to think of it as glamour) are not entirely in error. To be perfectly honest, when I was typed as a 100 per cent Campfire Girl, I looked with envy on this sort of thing. And if I am again fitted for a blue jean bit, I may envy this and want it again. (I am, of course, speaking professionally, as an actress, not as a person; that should go without saying, although it doesn't always.)

No, I am hurt only secondarily by what was incorrect or twisted in this "report." My basic sense of outrage—and believe me, I say this not from personal rancor but from a grievance of principle—is that I was hit from the dark, where I could not dodge or strike back END

"Who'd believe I was ever embarrassed by PIMPLES!"

New! Clearasil Medication

'STARVES' PIMPLES

SKIN-COLORED

hides pimples while it works

Doctors' clinical tests prove this new medication especially for pimples really works. In skin specialists' tests on 202 patients, 9 out of every 10 cases were cleared up or definitely improved.

Amazing starving action. CLEARASIL actually starves pimples because it helps remove the oils that pimples "feed" on. And CLEARASIL's antiseptic action stops the growth of bacteria that can cause and spread pimples. Skin-colored to hide pimples and end embarrassment. Greaseless, stainless... pleasant to leave on day and night for uninterrupted medication.

America's largest-selling specific pimple medication... because CLEARASIL has helped so many boys, girls and adults. GUARANTEED to work for you as it did in doctors' tests or money back. 59¢ and 98¢. At all druggists.

SPECIAL OFFER. Send name, address and 15¢ in coins or stamps for generous trial size to Eastco, Inc., Box 12BI, White Plains, N. Y. Offer expires February 10, 1954.

Clearasil
PIMPLES and ACNE
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

CHARM BRIDAL ENSEMBLES

Dazzling bridal pair aglow with fiery simulated full-cut diamonds. Large blue-white solitaire and wedding ring set in 1/30 14K Yellow Gold Plate or Solid Sterling Silver. SEND NO MONEY. Pay postman on delivery. Or remit with order and save 43c postal chgs. State selection, ring size (or send string). 5 Day Money Back Guarantee.

LEMARC CO., Dept. DS
P.O.Box6,E.Elmhurst69,N.Y.

$1.89 each or both for $2.98 Fed. Tax Incl.

CATALOG WITH 215 PICTURES FREE!

NEW! DIFFERENT! BEAUTIFUL!

For the first time — sensational pictures of your favorite movie stars in professional high gloss finish. Special super-duper offer:

20 for 25¢ • 50 for 50¢ • 120 for $1

FREE CATALOG with 215 PICTURES OF STARS with your order

DeLUXE PHOTO SERVICE, Dept. 624
Box 947, Church St. Annex, New York 8, N.Y.

SAFER ..... from T B

HAPPIER .... thanks to CHRISTMAS seals

Buy CHRISTMAS seals

SHORTHAND IN 6 WEEKS

Write 120 words per minute.
Age No Obstacle—LOW COST

Famous Speedwriting Shorthand. No symbols, no machines; uses ABC's. Easiest to learn and use. Fast preparation for a better position. Nationally used in leading offices and Civil Service; also by executives, students, etc., 120 words per minute—50% FASTER than Civil Service requirements. Over 200,000 taught by mail. The very low cost will surprise you. Typing available. 31st Year. Schools in over 400 cities. WRITE FOR FREE BOOKLET TO:

Speedwriting ®
Dept. 812-3. 55 W. 42 St., N. Y. C.

EASE COLD MISERY

AT ALL DRUG STORES
*
45c and 75c SIZES

Take Tabcin® BRAND

happy the bride . . .

(Continued from page 31) "She was furious. She said she had heard nothing about a scandal. No magazine was going to run her life. If she wanted to kiss Lex Barker off, she'd do it. If she wanted to marry him, she'd do that, too. Who was MODERN SCREEN to tell her what to do?

"Immediately, I bought a copy and read the article. It seemed fair enough to me, because it is true that when Lex and Lana arrived in Europe, many people thought they must be married. When they learned that they weren't, there was a great deal of talk. That's what the article said, and it was correct.

"Lana knew before she left the States that if she wandered all over Europe with Lex there would be plenty of gossip. Her studio warned her against it. Her agent warned her against it. Publicity men told her it wouldn't look good. Schemes were worked out. Maybe Lex should travel under an assumed name. Maybe it should be said that he was going to Europe to organize an independent film company.

"Responsible executives knew that Lana and Lex could not travel together with impunity. But Lana has defied advice all her life. Characteristically, she insisted upon touring Europe with Lex.

"When MODERN SCREEN broke the story of their journey and its effect on movie fans overseas, Lana must have known in her heart that she shouldn't have scoffed at her advisers.

"In the meantime, she started work on The Flame And The Flesh in London, while Lex went to work on a picture in Italy. Now, make no mistake about Lex. He always wanted to marry Lana, and he always said so. I guess he called long distance every day from Italy. Certainly he must have investigated all the legal angles concerning marriage there.

"A funny thing. While Lex was pressuring for marriage, Lana kept telling newspapermen in London that she and Lex were just good friends, that she did not contemplate marriage in the near future. Now, I honestly think she meant that. I don't think she intended to marry Lex. I think the one thing that crystallized her plans was that article in MODERN SCREEN.

"She would marry Lex, and then where would MODERN SCREEN be? I think the magazine helped her resolve the decision. Of course, Lex flew in one weekend and met her in Maidenhead, and I guess that's when they really decided. But I honestly feel that if she hadn't read that story, these two would not be married.

"Maybe I'm crazy but I know Lana fairly well. She's a creature of moods and quick decisions."

HOW much or how little MODERN SCREEN had to do with Lana Turner's decision to marry Lex Barker in Turin, Italy, on September 7, no one will ever know. But after denying for months that she planned to get married, Lana went ahead and did it for the fifth time. She certainly didn't do it to spite this magazine. She did it for love and because she is afraid of loneliness and always has been.

Like her fourth wedding ceremony to Henry "Bob" Topping in 1948, this one was distinguished by confusion. It was supposed to be a secret. It turned out to be as secret as the Alps.

On a Friday, Lex and Lana visited the State Attorney's office in Turin and applied for a marriage license. This move was tantamount to buying spot announcements on every radio network in the world.

It gave the clerks the entire weekend in which to tell their friends that the American film stars planned to get married.

As soon as that license was filed, the news was flashed everywhere. News associations wired their offices in Italy to send reporters and photographers to the City Hall in Turin. They knew the lovers would have a civil ceremony, since Italy is a Catholic country, and the Catholic Church does not recognize divorce.

Incredible as it may sound, Lana and Lex imagined that when they slipped into the City Hall on Monday, the only witnesses to their wedding would be their two lawyers, Luciano Salza and Guido Abrasino, and the man who was performing the ceremony, Municipal Assessor Emilio Bachi.

In fact, they had left their three children (by previous marriages) at the Villa Prima Sole, in order not to attract too much attention.

Lana even covered her face with a handkerchief as she slipped into the City Hall with Lex not far behind. Surprise of surprises! The City Hall was jammed with eager, waiting, clamoring photographers.

Lex raged at the photographers. Lana screamed, "Get out. We don't want any photographers. All of you get out." The photographers merely grinned and began shooting. "If the photographers don't get out of here," she threatened, "I just won't get married." The men bore down on Lana. They ganged up so close to her that she flung herself at an open window to get a breath of fresh air. The Italian lensmen refused to be denied. They began to wave copies of the Italian legal code which permits them "picture rights."

modern screen

gets the new year off to an exciting and early start with lovely janet leigh

on the cover

of the january issue on sale

december 4.

FINALLY Lana agreed to pose for pictures, and the brief ceremony got under way. Emilio Bachi, who officiated, wore a green, white, and red sash—the colors of Italy—and translated the proceedings into English.

Showing very little emotion, Lex and Lana exchanged shield-shaped gold rings. Instead of placing them on the third finger of the left hand, they slipped the rings on the little fingers. They seemed anxious to get the whole thing done.

Lana, who has dyed her hair back to its original brunette, wore a pearl grey dress, a ribbon of the same color tied around her hair, a long, orange topcoat, black, lacquered sandals, and a double strand of pearls.

Lex wore a blue summer suit and a black tie. At one point in the ceremony when Lana said, "I will," she grasped Lex by the wrist and pressed her handkerchief to her mouth. That was the only unusual bit of action in the proceedings.

Lana gave her age as thirty-two and Lex gave his as thirty-four.

After the ceremony, the couple kissed, then hurried into their car, and were driven to the Villa Prima Sole (First Daylight) some fifteen miles outside Turin where Lana's ten-year-old daughter, Cheryl, was playing around a fishpond with Barker's two children, Lynn, also ten, and Alexander, six. The villa is owned by a wealthy Italian textile manufacturer who turned it over to the newlyweds.

They spent their wedding night there, but they were disturbed by telephoning newspapermen. Lex answered the phone.

The following day the United States Consulate in Turin absolved itself of all legal responsibility for the Barker-Turner marriage. It is customary for United States citizens abroad to inform the consulate when they decide to take such a step as marriage. But Lex and Lana, of course, are not customary people.

In fact, several Italian officials are still wondering how Lex got anyone to marry him and Lana in Turin. According to article 89 of the Italian Civil Code, 300 days must elapse before a woman's divorce becomes final and she is entitled to marry again. Lana received her Nevada divorce on December 15, 1952. She was married to Barker on September 7, 1953, two months earlier than Italian law permits.

One Italian lawyer explains that "the law in Italy, particularly as interpreted by the courts in Turin, is extremely elastic. Don't forget that it was in Turin that Roberto Rossellini cleared his way to marry Ingrid Bergman. Besides, Mr. and Mrs. Barker are American citizens, and their lawyers requested an exemption from the statute in question, and it was granted. There is no doubt about it. For better or for worse, these two people are legally married."

All of Lana's fans, and she has millions, certainly hope that the legality of her fifth marriage is never questioned. The legality of her second marriage was. Lawyers discovered that she was married to a man who already had a wife. Steve Crane had told Lana that he was divorced. He wasn't. After legally ridding herself of Steve, Lana married him again in Tijuana.

LANA has been impetuous all her life. This readiness to obey impulse, this constant putting of heart before mind, is the reason for so much marital disaster. But perhaps with Lex, her luck has turned.

Certainly, they enjoyed a good honeymoon. After one night at Villa Prima Sole they put their children on the train to Paris while they drove.

It is rather difficult to have a honeymoon and look after your children properly at the same time. In Paris, Lana had a talk with her mother, Mildred Turner.

Mildred had brought Cheryl over to London and had stayed at the Dorchester with the child. When Lana went off to Turin for her marriage, Mildred had remained behind in Lana's Paris apartment.

"I had a very bad cold," she explained, "and my doctor wouldn't let me go to the wedding. But when Lex and Lana got to Paris, we talked things over, and we decided that it would be best if I flew home with the children. For a while, Lana had thought she would put Cheryl in school in Switzerland, but you know how plans change.

"I took the three children and we lef Paris one Saturday. Sunday, we were back in Beverly Hills. I turned the two Barke children over to their mother, and Cheryl had dinner with her father in his new Luau restaurant. By Monday all three kids were in school.

"Lex and Lana were very happy when I left them in Paris. I don't know how long their honeymoon was, because there were conferences about her new picture, the one she's making with Gable, Th True And The Brave.

"Anyway, she has a lovely apartment. It's a new one, and new apartments are rare in Paris. I certainly hope they're going to be happy. All brides should be happy."

In Hollywood, as usual, everyone is asking how long Lana's fifth marriage will last. One columnist says that disenchantment has set in, already. This particular newspaperwoman believes that Lana married Lex because she couldn't get out of it. She, too, believes that the aforementioned MODERN SCREEN story, plus several others, made Lana realize that she could not flout public opinion. She attributes the marriage to expediency, not to love.

This, of course, is the pessimistic view. Some observers believe that the marriage will last as long as three or four years.

No one—and this is a sorry observation—expects that this will be Lana's last marriage. In fact, one week after the lovers arrived in Paris, Sheilah Graham said in her column: "Lex Barker hired a press agent in Paris to keep his marriage on an even keel. Because, believe it or not, there are rumors already."

At Lana's studio, the official reaction to her marriage was, "No comment."

Arlene Dahl, Lex's second wife, was a bit more talkative. She said, "I'm sure they're going to be very happy. They are exactly right for each other."

When a girl's toes stick out of the shoes, she's in style. When mine stick out I'm a bum.

Arthur Godfrey

One of the basic truths about Lex and Lana is that they are faithful, constant lovers. In each of her marriages, Lana has played fair. She has never flirted, never suffered from a marital disease, known as "the roving eye." The same is true of Barker. With his first wife, Connie Thurlow, he was the epitome of fidelity. Ditto with Arlene Dahl.

WHY then, do these two people count five divorces and one annulment between them?

The sad answer is that Lana never tired of her husbands. With the exception of Steve Crane, they tired of her.

Lex's two wives felt much the same way about him. Arlene Dahl, in fact, claims that she never wanted to marry Lex in the first place, but that she finally and regretfully succumbed to external pressures.

Since Lex and Lana are extremely well attuned to each other, and since they have learned a great deal from experience, it may well be that their marriage will last much longer than anyone expects.

"The key," according to one of Hollywood's leading agents, "may lie in the success or failure of Barker's acting career. Lana, of course, is a big success and has been for years. It is almost impossible for two acting careers to thrive, side by side, in the same household. The rate of progress varies with individuals. And after twenty-five years in Hollywood, I've come to one conclusion; the most dangerous occupation known to man is marrying a successful motion picture star. Look at the men who have tried it. These guys couldn't make a go of it. Is Lex Barker better than any of these, more tolerant, more understanding, more knowing?

"With all my heart, I hope he is. In my mind, however, I know he ain't."

In short, everyone in Hollywood wishes Lex and Lana loads of good luck, and this is not an idle platitude. If ever two people deserved and needed luck, these are the handsome, charming, wonderful two. END

(Lex Barker can now be seen in Warners' Thunder Over The Plains.)

"I THINK THE AUNT MARY PLAN IS Wonderful,"

SAYS Betty Hutton

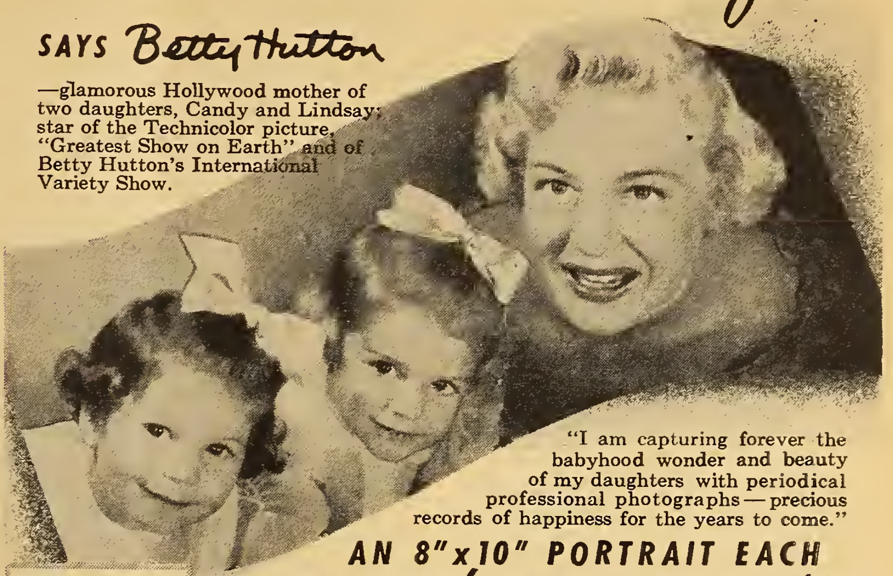
—glamorous Hollywood mother of two daughters, Candy and Lindsay; star of the Technicolor picture, "Greatest Show on Earth" and of Betty Hutton's International Variety Show.



"I am capturing forever the babyhood wonder and beauty of my daughters with periodical professional photographs — precious records of happiness for the years to come."

Aunt Mary BIRTHDAY CLUBS
OF AMERICA, INC.

AN 8"x10" PORTRAIT EACH BIRTHDAY FOR 6 YEARS FOR ONLY $4.94

(LESS THAN 83¢ PER PORTRAIT)

Get a 6-year photographic record of your child for less than 9¢ per month! Your Aunt Mary Membership entitles you to an 8 x 10" lifetime portrait (chosen from 4 proofs each sitting) each birthday for 6 years. Three convenient schedules! Membership good in over 700 professional studios—near you wherever you move! Many other benefits! Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded! Over half a million members coast to coast!

COMMENDED BY THE CONSUMER SERVICE BUREAU OF PARENTS' MAGAZINE

FRIENDLINESS SERVICE QUALITY

For details write to: AUNT MARY BIRTHDAY CLUBS OF AMERICA
1700 DELMAR, ST. LOUIS 3, MISSOURI

Where are all the salesclerks? Look again!

PHOTOGRAPH BY SARRA

Today you can often serve yourself faster and better than someone else can help you—and brand names are the reason!

In some ways brand names are probably the world's most efficient salesclerks. Without them, you couldn't possibly serve yourself so quickly, so surely, and so satisfactorily.

And brand manufacturers, knowing you have your choice of many excellent brands, such as those advertised in this magazine, constantly compete to offer you newer, better products and values. So name your brand—and better your brand of living.

BRAND NAMES FOUNDATION
INCORPORATED
A Non-Profit Educational Foundation
37 West 57 Street, New York 19, N.Y.

this is a monster?

(Continued from page 41) believable. Late in the summer, for example, he was seated in the 20th Century-Fox commissary denying to a reporter that his responsibilities as a husband and father rested heavily on him. He intimated pretty strongly that he went his own sweet way avoiding completely the cares and troubles of domesticity. Just then his wife, Dorothy, phoned.

Like millions of American mothers with frayed nerves, praying for strength to hold out until mischief-laden children were back in their classrooms, Dorothy thought she wasn't going to make it. Their two sons, Jim, twelve, and Chris, ten, had been in her hair ever since they got up. "And I can't stand it any more!" she ended.

Now Bob was in the middle of shooting River Of No Return, with Marilyn Monroe and Rory Calhoun. Because of injuries to both Marilyn and Rory the picture was behind schedule and the whole company was working hard to catch up. Besides, Bob was Bob. Was he going to let Dorothy dump two rambunctious boys on him?

Naturally not. Naturally he would shrug off his wife's plea and say, "Too bad. We all have our troubles. Right now I'm busy and the kids are yours." You leaned back and waited for him to say it.

But he didn't. Dutifully and considerately, he talked to his wife. "All right," he said. "Throw the boys into the car and send them to the studio. I'll take care of them for the rest of the day."

What's this, a new angle on Bob? You ask him and he dismisses your query with a wave of his hand. "Ah, they won't bother me. I won't even know they're here."

But it isn't a new angle. It's an old angle and it's becoming obvious. It's repeated too often. When Bob went to Canada, to Banff and Jasper National Park for the outdoor scenes in River Of No Return, he took Dorothy and their baby daughter, eighteen-month-old Petrene. A Hollywood resident on the same train said he saw Bob many times, holding the baby on his shoulder and lulling her to sleep, seating her on his lap in the dining car and carefully feeding her, and shepherding Dorothy and the baby every time they walked through the train.

"It's a brand new life with every breath I draw," Bob is fond of saying. "Who can worry about things?" This is the popular conception of him—a fellow who lives for himself, who doesn't know what's going on around him, and doesn't care. There was a director on one of Bob's pictures who believed this. When an electrician up on a catwalk accidentally shifted a floodlight noisily during the filming of a scene, the director furiously ordered that he be fired on the spot. No one suspected that Bob, languidly breaking out of his role, was paying the slightest attention to what was going on. But when the electrician walked off the set Bob reached for his coat and lazily strolled away, too.

The director chased after him. "Where are you going?" he demanded. "I haven't called a break yet. We're not through with the scene!"

Bob kept on walking. "You haven't got a crew," he said, without even turning his head. "Can't make a picture without a crew."

"We've got a crew!" the director ranted. "There! Look back."

"Not a *com*plete crew," said Bob. "Can't make a picture without a *com*plete crew."

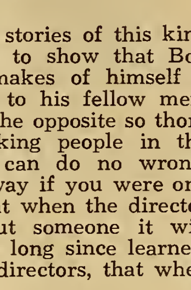
The director wasn't stupid. He didn't have to mull over Bob's words to get the idea, but he was an egotist (which he isn't any more, by the way) and no actor was going to get the best of him. He reported Bob to the studio heads. The studio heads held a meeting and made a decision. Late that afternoon the director's assistant knocked on Bob's door. The crew, a "complete" crew was waiting to go ahead. But Bob hadn't finished yet. The assistant director relayed Bob's question to the director.

"Mr. Mitchum wants to know if it is a happy crew," he said. "Mr. Mitchum thinks it's unwise to work with a crew unless every member of it is happy."

The director threw up his hands and that was the beginning of his reformation. He apologized to the electrician whom he had already restored to his job. Word was sent to Bob who returned without the slightest hint in his expression that anything unusual had happened.

There are dozens of stories of this kind that could be told to show that Bob fabricates when he makes of himself a hard case, insensitive to his fellow men. He has demonstrated the opposite so thoroughly that the working people in the studios feel that he can do no wrong. You'd feel the same way if you were one of them and knew that when the director feels like bawling out someone it will never be you. He has long since learned, as have all Mitchum directors, that when he loses his temper the safest fellow to yell at is Bob himself. All that happens then is that Bob yells back. But if the director turns on someone he doesn't consider important enough to defend himself, and especially when his wrath takes an unreasonable direction, he may have to close up shop. His star may take a walk.

I SAW IT HAPPEN



I was having dinner at my aunt's home in Westport, Connecticut, when my cousin, who is a policeman there, came into the house and shouted, "Ma, put on some more macaroni. We have company."

My aunt was delighted to welcome Tyrone Power and Linda Christian. They were playing at a Westport theatre, and had asked my cousin where to find a good place to eat. Naturally, he took them home!

Joseph Assante
Bronx, New York

This is not the complete story of Bob in his relationship to those with whom he lives and works. This would class him as just another of those stars who defend the small fry because they like to be known as "very democratic." With Bob this sort of pose is unnecessary. Without trying, he is as democratic as an old pair of socks. By instinct, he is for the little guy, but he is not unaware that the big guy has a job to do, too. He has been steadily gaining stature in the eyes of his directors because when the moment comes for the cameras to roll—he delivers.

To say that his acting is good is to enter the realm of opinion. To reveal that he spends from two to four weeks with every script, studying it until he knows not only every word, but all the flavors they could possibly come in, is just repeating somebody's claim. To add that a lot of people think he should have his name on some of his scripts as a writer because he has contributed so much to the dialogue and plot, is quoting opinion again. But there are some facts about his value as an actor which can be given in the form of cold figures.

He practically never misses a line. In River Of No Return he had 184 speeches and delivered every one without a flub. A more exciting demonstration of his amazing memory took place during the filming of White Witch Doctor in which he starred opposite Susan Hayward. The script required that he speak a whole page of dialogue in Bakuba, an African dialect. His speech was typed out phonetically in English and handed to him at nine o'clock in the morning. To one unfamiliar with Bakuba, as Bob was, it meant nothing but a couple of hundred odd, guttural sounds. A half hour later he was in front of the camera, tearing off his speech without a mistake, and without any idea of what any sound meant.

There is no use in trying to get Bob to admit that he is a pretty good fellow, hard working, and with decent instincts in his possession. You can't even trap him into it. "Say, I heard that you had a good record when you worked at Lockheed before you got into pictures," a cameraman once told him—almost accusingly. "You were there more than a year. You couldn't have been as breezy and unconcerned as you keep pretending."

"Aw, they only kept me on because I was frozen on the job by war regulations," Bob replied. "I was horrible."

Yet, some of the fellows who worked with Bob at Lockheed remember that after starting as an unskilled hand he was soon in charge of fifteen men. You don't get supervisory jobs like that lounging around and ducking your responsibilities.

Bob's wild and incriminatory stories about himself give interviewers a weird time. Last winter, a reporter spent two hours with him over a luncheon table and failed to get one statement from Bob that wouldn't be practically libelous if it were printed. He finally put away his pencil and pad with the weary remark that he hadn't a thing to write—the interview was a failure. For the first time since they had sat down, Bob grew serious.

"You're stuck, huh?" he asked.

"Sure," the reporter replied. "There's nothing here I can use."

"Tell you what," offered Bob. "Come to dinner at my home. Sit down with the family. Talk to anyone. Look at anything you want to. Ask anything you like. If I don't make sense ask my wife, the boys, the maid. Somebody ought to give you a straight answer."

Sometime later a friend asked the reporter if he had had the dinner with Bob.

"I did," the reporter said. "I got a good story of Bob as he is with his family, when he is relaxed and at home. And when it was time to go he realized it was cold outside and I had come without a topcoat. He insisted on lending me one of his. But I had to promise not to put that in the story."

All over Hollywood, you run across fellows with little tales like that. There is the publicity man at RKO who was rushed to the hospital for an emergency appendectomy. He knew Bob but didn't hear from him until the day he was getting ready to leave the hospital. Then the telephone rang.

"What do you plan to do now?" Bob wanted to know.

"Oh, go home and recuperate for a week or so before I go back to work," was the reply.

"How are you going to recuperate?" Bob asked. "You're a bachelor and you live alone. You'll probably bust your stitches trying to wait on yourself. What you'd better do is come to my place till you're on your feet. I've got a wife and a maid. They'll take care of you."

It's a typical Mitchum gesture, but typically, nobody knew about it till the publicity man let it slip in an unguarded moment. Anyone who works with Bob knows that these are things he doesn't want spread about. If you ask his secretary, Reva Fredericks, she'll tell you, laughingly, that he is a monster. But Reva is one of the best-informed and most capable secretaries in Hollywood and she doesn't have to stay with Bob Mitchum. Everyone knows she has been called by every agent in town to come to work for one of their stars at twice the salary Bob can afford to pay her. Why doesn't she leave "the monster"? Her answer is "No comment." But other people have already commented. They say her employer is soft and easy-going whereas the average star reacts to professional worries by turning into a nervous, carping taskmaker. No one has ever seen Bob nervous or in a tantrum.

Little by little, Hollywood is catching on to the well known Mitchum and the little known Mitchum. And Bob is becoming aware of it, too. His attitude that nothing is important, much less himself, earns the skeptical stare more often than not. But he still keeps on. A man who has known him ever since he came to Hollywood pointed out that he must keep on.

"Bob, in a sense, is the victim of his intelligence," said this friend. "If he were a less intelligent man he could accept his fabulous rise as a natural consequence of superior artistry and talent. But Bob can't fool himself that way. He remembers exactly how much luck had to do with it and he knows that if it were not for a few fortunate twists of fate he still might be living in the chicken coop he had to clean and cover with tar paper for his bride when they first came to California. When Bob waxes cynical he is hooting at his own success. Bob, the man, loves to rib Bob, the star, maybe to make sure they both keep their feet on the ground." END

---

friend of the family

(Continued from page 51) encroaching jungle of wild orchids and gardenias. Up the street, you must drive carefully or risk getting hit by Bob Mitchum as he backs out the trailer he keeps in front of his $75,000 hut. The next hazard is a pair of oversize dogs, a boxer and a police dog, who roam the area, looking for people who do not belong there. They belong to Vic Mature, who also makes life dangerous for trespassers by pitching practice golf balls up the canyon. Relatively few people are hardy enough to reach the top by the ancient road that leads to the many-acred estate of June Allyson and Dick Powell.

Esther and Ben have the best, the most authentic Early American farmhouse we've ever seen (and we've seen enough to start a new New England.) They don't have a bed George Washington slept in, but they have everything else. They have a pool so big the tides come and go in it. It's a far cry from the one in which Esther broke cement every time she took two strokes.

You've heard about the homes of movie stars? Well, let me tell you!

This one has a television set in every room, a projection room built in for home movies. It has two nurseries for the children. And yet, it's a home where an embroidered sampler would not be amiss.

There's no butler who precedes Esther as she comes into the room, to announce: "Miss Esther Williams, MGM star of Easy To Love and other extravaganzas." No, Esther and Ben are, despite the million-dollar atmosphere, plain "folks."

One time Jim had a golf date with Ben, and he brought along his father, who is a retired businessman from Cleveland. Jim's dad didn't care much for traipsing around a golf course, so he readily accepted Esther's invitation to hang around the pool, while the boys played golf. She entertained him all afternoon, chatting and swimming and diving.

Later, as Jim and his dad were driving home, the elder Backus exclaimed, "Say, that girl who's married to the tall feller with the cigar—she can really swim. Now, if she'd like to come on back to Cleveland for a spell, we might fix it so she could give an exhibition at the Athletic Club. I'd buy her a dinner and maybe she could do herself some good."

ESTHER and Ben are constant party-givers and will use any excuse to invite over eight or ten people. Esther will go out and buy a beautiful housecoat, say, and next thing you know, she's on the phone inviting us over for a costume party: "Everybody come over and wear housecoats and pajamas!"

Then, out of the deep freeze comes a beautiful buffet supper. She's an excellent cook, specializing in American and Americanized dishes. A typical buffet might be ham and turkey, strawberries Romanoff, a salad (we've kidded her by calling it "salad with chlorine roquefort dressing right out of the pool") and later, coffee and a great pie, homemade à la E. Williams.

You can get waffles all day long at the Gages, but one thing you'll never get is seafood. They don't dig it. Once, they found us sitting over a seafood dinner and Esther asked, in awe: "What are you eating? Live bait?"

At a typical party, you may find Janet Blair (whom we all call "Poo") and her new husband, Nick Mayo, Virginia Bruce and Ali Ipar, Donna Reed and Tony Owen, David and Jane Wayne, Dick and Winnie Wesson, the Backuses (who else?) and Dr. Raymond La Scola, the babies' pediatrician. At one party in the backyard, the good doctor and Esther roasted individual squabs for each of us. We had wild rice, garlic toast, that salad and Cherries Jubilee.

The men wore blue jeans and the gals, pinafores. Ben showed up in a white suit. Jim took one look at the long man in white and dubbed him "The Good Humor Man." I noticed his vanilla was dragging. Esther wondered, "Where are your chimes?"

Then we saw some color movies of their trip to Hawaii, and behind-the-scenes film of Esther's two films, Pagan Love Song and Fiesta.

For one Photographers' Ball in Hollywood, Esther and Ben had our whole gang dress up as waitresses and waiters from their restaurant, The Trails. There were eight men and eight girls. We used dark make-up from head to toe, and the girls wore pretty, dainty, revealing costumes. We may not have been the most elegant gals there, but we certainly overpowered the rest of Hollywood's great names by sheer numbers.

Incidentally, Keenan Wynn was in our group. He had worked all day, and then it took him five hours to get his make-up on. He wore white eyebrows and a white mustache over jet black make-up. Jim took a look at him and screamed: "Man, you look like a negative!" A photographer came and snapped our pictures, and then poor Keenan collapsed from sheer fatigue. We dragged him home and off to bed. After five hours of arduous make-up application, he never did get to the party. Esther a tiny lock swings out . .

. . . rings join together!
THEY LOCK
...for greater diamond brilliance!
rings lock in perfect position . . .
No shift, no twist like ordinary rings . . FEATURE LOCK rings lock together in perfect position . . . show diamonds in full view at all times. At your jeweler from $50 to $2500
Feature Lock
Reg U S Trade Mark
INTERLOCKING DIAMOND RINGS
$200
Free Booklet—Write Dept. MS-12
Rings enlarged to show detail
FEATURE RING CO., INC., 130 W. 46 ST., N. Y.

FINISH HIGH SCHOOL AT HOME!
No classes to attend. Easy spare-time training covers big choice of subjects. Friendly instructors; standard texts. Full credit for previous schooling. Diploma awarded. Write now for FREE catalog!
WAYNE SCHOOL Catalog HAF-22
2527 Sheffield Ave., Chicago 14, Illinois

COLONIAL COLLECTION FREE!
Magnicarocious collection of British, French, American and other Colonial stamps. Including Triangles, Commemorative issues, Animal and flower stamps, Pictorials, High Values, all free plus Philatopic Magazine. Send only 5c for postage.
Empire Stamp Co., Dept. DM, Toronto, Canada

DE LUXE Type for Framing
FREE! FREE!
Photo of Your Fovorite
MOVIE STAR
Big Bargain . . . NOT small pocket size, but LARGER ACTUAL PORTRAIT. Also FREE Beautiful Catalog. FREE! Many additional pictures of popular stars on cover. FREE! Tells how to get HOME ADDRESSES, BIRTHDAYS and PHOTOS of STARS' HOMES. Send only 15c for handling. 2 photos for 25c. Rush to HOLLYWOOD FILM STAR CENTER
Box2309, Dept. L-12, Hollywood28, Calif.

DON'T LET UGLY PIMPLES RUIN YOUR LOOKS
Don't neglect an externally caused pimply broken out skin that nobody loves to touch! Apply wonderfully medicated Poslam Ointment tonight—check results next morning after just one application!
Poslam contains all 9 ingredients well known to skin specialists—works faster, more effectively to help you to a finer complexion. Apply it after washing skin with non-alkali Poslam Soap. At druggists everywhere—costs so little.

never runs out of ideas for costume parties. Once, when she appeared to be stumped, Jim laughed her out of it by suggesting she marinate herself and come as a herring.

PARTIES for sheer fun aren't Esther's only hobby. Each year she is hostess for fund-raising affairs for babies blind from birth. All the stars help her, but she is the sparkplug. Moreover, she devotes many hours a week teaching these children to swim, and she donated a pool. Jim does lots of charity work during the year, and when they are needed, Esther and Ben always rally around.

Esther loves to laugh, even at her own expense. Jim once said: "She's the only hostess I'm afraid of. I saw her hug Ben and break three of his ribs!"

And when Jim called her "the world's wealthiest barracuda," her laughter was the loudest.

There's a running gag about Esther's housekeeping instincts. She never comes to our house when she doesn't hang up her coat, roll up her sleeves and start emptying ashtrays, carrying trash to the incinerator and tidying up even where everything has just been tidied. At such times, Jim will say: "Esther, why don't you go down to the garage and bring up two cases of soft drinks? Oh, and on your way back, don't forget to mow the lawn!"

She'll be on her way before she lets out a roar of laughter and cries: "Hey, what am I doing?" Anent the same trait, Jim says, "After Esther started coming to our home, I laid off the gardener!"

She's always lecturing me on what she calls my "silly, New York extravagances." She tells me ways to save money and urges me to be thrifty. For instance, I never have learned to drive a car, so I spend a fortune on cabs when Jim isn't around to chauffeur me. Once, exasperated with me, she said, "Henny is the only person in the world who takes cabs to a drive-in!"

Esther is a great floor sitter, and an articulate gesticulator, waving her arms, jumping up, striding and plopping down again during the narration of an anecdote. She also takes off her glasses when she swings into action. While she is "back-stroking" a story, she has broken a pair of glasses a day.

But neither that, nor anything else, ever makes her lose her temper. She's generally as sunny as a wheatfield in the noonday sun. When she's really annoyed, she may cluck her tongue and say: "Oh, honestly!" She prides herself (and who wouldn't?) on her self-control.

SHE loves to play tricks, but we've never known a practical joke by Esther to hurt anyone. When Jim first became the judge on the I Married Joan TV show, the shooting schedule was rugged. In one episode, I played Jim's secretary while Joan Davis played his wife.

When Esther heard this arrangement, she quipped: "Why don't you announce yourself as Jim's Other Wife from now on?"

During that tough schedule, we usually got home after midnight pretty tired. One night, we shuffled into our enlarged cracker box (really, it's lovely) and found it shipshape. Candlelight softened our dining room. The table was set, and the aroma of good cooking emanated from the kitchen.

Ben and Esther had stopped by, found us not at home, broken into our house, cleaned it, cooked the meal and set the table for our arrival. Now that's a trick we'd like to have played on us every day. If she had the time, don't think Esther wouldn't do it.

When Jim and I returned from summer stock in August, Esther had taken a photo still of a scene from Julius Caesar in which I played the Citizeness, had it blown up to mural size and papered one wall of my studio with it.

Summer stock, too, was Esther's idea.

At the end of last season, Jim broke his toe in a nosedive into our sunken living room. He broke more than that; he broke both our hearts. Jim was to have taken advantage of the summer hiatus of I Married Joan, to appear opposite Judy Holliday in A Name For Herself. The accident killed that golden opportunity and about three other good roles.

We were mooning over our fate in Esther's house, and it was getting late. The later it got, the more morose Jim got. Esther wouldn't let us feel low, but at the same time, this could have been an all-night crying session.

"All right, Buster," said Esther to Jim, "what are you playing now? The Man Who Came To Dinner?" Without a second's hesitation, she continued: "And say, that's a great idea!"

It was. The wheelchair role of Sheridan Whiteside was tailored for Jim, and I went along to co-star as Maggie Cutler in the Rabbit Run Theatre's production of the great George S. Kaufman-Moss Hart play. We broke all records, but we'd have just been sitting and squawking if it hadn't been for Esther.

Esther is very un-movie star with her friends. It's heartwarming. We've never seen Esther "pull her rank" on anybody. Once in a while, she puts on her schoolteacher face, especially when she sees youngsters out very late, hunting autographs. She admonishes them for not being home in bed. Even then, she's more solicitous than stern.

IT HAPPENED TO ME

When I was three years old, I was on a train with my parents. My mother took me into the dining car and ordered our breakfast. Then she had to leave me at the table for a few minutes and go back to our car. While she was away, I started to cry.

When she returned to the table, Robert Taylor was holding me on his lap, feeding me my breakfast.

Patricia McMahon
Washington, D. C.

Once she got solicitous and schoolteacherish about Jim. It was Jim's first day at Metro, where he was making a picture.

Jim was still at the make-up table at eight in the morning, when Esther bounced onto the set and buttonholed the director.

"Now, I want you to let me know how Jim is doing. It's his first day and I want everything to go right. If there's anything he doesn't do right, let me know. If there's anything—" and so on. Jim slipped off the years and felt like a kid on his first day at school.

IF ESTHER is a devoted friend, she is a more devoted wife and mother. You must have read reams about her in this respect. We can only add, "Amen." To us, Esther is a Brahms lullaby played by Stan Kenton.

Esther's children round out the happiest, best-adjusted woman we know. She loves every minute of every day. She loves acting, swimming, her husband, her children, her home life, her social life, doing things with her hands, knitting, sewing, cooking, reading—but most of all, she loves to laugh.

She gets a big boot out of Jim's characterization of "Mr. McGoo" which won two Academy Award nominations for cartoons for Jim. The nearsighted old dodger peers into a washing machine (GE, says Jim), looks at the thrashing water and says: "Oh, that Esther Williams, what a sleek tuna—puts on a fine show." Esther throws back her head and roars.

And we've laughed over "girly" stuff. We discovered that the Gages and the Backuses own the same silver pattern, the same glassware, the same china. Since then, we pool our stuff whenever either tosses a big party. It takes us hours after a party to sort the "B" monograms from the "G". Last Christmas, we received three dozen demitasse cups from Esther and Ben. Jim says it's only because Esther could then borrow them for a big wingding.

Esther is very generous. Every time a new swimsuit comes on the market, she gets one for me. I now have the best swimming wardrobe in the country. For a girl who can't swim a stroke, that's pretty good. (Says Jim: "In fact, I think she sinks.")

When I worked at Metro in Caesar, Esther was on location and she turned over her sumptuous dressing room to me. She'd arrive at five, go into the dressing room and leave notes of instruction (how to behave on the lot, how to turn on the shower, etc.) all over the place. It was an eye-opener each day, to arrive at seven, to find that Esther had been in, and had gone to location two hours before I arrived.

She is always tipping me to rare bargains, for which she has an uncanny nose, has Esther. Her home is filled with good buys in rare antiques, pressed glass and other articles. She does her own marketing when she can, buys her own clothes and every second best-selling book. I buy the other best-sellers, so we can swap. It's a good thing, for neither of us ever gives anything back.

She's the only athlete I know who doesn't particularly care for spectator sports. So, when the men are off golfing, Esther and I are home knitting, chattering or cooking.

EFFICIENCY is another trait of Esther's. She and Ben love to travel, and can be ready to go anywhere in five minutes.

It seems that everything they own zips up and has a handle. She has every conceivable traveling gadget including a lightweight picnic basket, so they can eat on the run. We were at their home once when she received a phone call to fill in at a benefit for someone who just couldn't make it. Within minutes, it seemed, they were on the plane for San Francisco.

Esther can take spoofing; her sense of humor about herself is legend. Yet, she can give as well as take. She doesn't wisecrack at the expense of others. She's too kind to capitalize on another's misfortunes for the sake of a yock. But she can ad lib an unforgettable line.

Once, she was called to do a benefit at which every show business personality was present. There were Berle, Benny, Thomas, Kaye and many another comedy "great" preceding her on the bill. Stars, who just came on to take a bow and flit, were making the audience hostile when there were so many good "entertainers" waiting. It was a tough spot for Esther. She walked out to face the waiting audience. It was awfully quiet out.

"Now," she said, calmly, "if you'll just flood the joint, I'll go into my act!"

She waltzed off to a thunderous ovation.

That's our Esther Williams, the greatest gal in town. And we love her. Why shouldn't we? We're ahead three "G"-monogrammed forks, two glasses, a best-seller . . . and our ashtrays are the cleanest in Hollywood! END

actors are a dime a dozen

(Continued from page 56) Then I might have had High Noon. I don't know. They looked around for years for a young Gary Cooper, then settled on Gary Cooper. But who can tell?"

As for the anyone-can-act proposition, Robertson hadn't meant that anyone can be a star. "What I do say is that workaday acting, journeyman acting, is one of the four or five easiest things in the world, and the people who make a good living from it should say a hundred thank-you's every night before they go to bed. Instead, some of them actually go temperamental and kick up a ruckus, never remembering they won't be missed around here. Now, if you're a cameraman or a make-up artist or an effects man, you might get away with it. Those people are specialists and they would be missed. But actors, generally speaking—except the genius and the established boxoffice draw—are a dime a dozen. So a guy has talent? So has another guy, waiting just outside the door. Besides, what's talent? There are players around this town with exactly one-and-a-half expressions that draw $150,000 a picture, or a hundred thousand per expression, and you know who they are. Me, I'm going to go right on practicing with my left arm."

Robertson apparently was not being self-deprecatory. A man with a rather heavy, masculine face, he has several more than one-and-a-half expressions plus a wide and unquestioned appeal for at least two audiences: the young and the admirers of virile, outdoor fare. They should serve him for a good many years to come.

"I'd play drawing-room stuff if they asked me. They dish it out, I take it. But I wouldn't like it."

Nor is it probable he will be asked to take it or to like it. The present formula is keeping the stockholders happy, both at RKO and at 20th Century-Fox, Robertson's home lot.

"You know something?" Robertson resumed after a moment's thought. "If you see a guy display temperament, you're looking at a stupid guy. And an insecure guy, too. They're like barking dogs. A dog that'll bark at you isn't going to bite you. That's the oldest saw in the world, I know, but what I'm trying to say, is the dog's trying to tell you not to call his bluff because that's all he's got—a bluff. He doesn't want a showdown and that's his way of trying to prevent it. Keep coming at him and he'll beat it. I've worked with a director like that, and there was only one thing in the world wrong with him. He didn't know his business. So he had to keep that showdown at arm's length. The dog to look out for is the baby that just peels back his upper lip and looks at you."

Robertson, as most of his friends know, possesses a cracker-barrel wit, abetted by an adenoidal Oklahoma delivery, not unlike that of a friend and sponsor of his youth, Will Rogers.

He launched into a disquisition on sidearms that for a moment, gave a passing impression that Robertson had got himself mixed up with one of his film portrayals. But his knowledge of pistols and firing techniques is authentic, the product of long study and practice. He said he could beat to the draw a man who had him covered, not because of any special manual fleetness but because his reflex in the matter would be aggressive, whereas the other's would be static. He derided the film gunman who fires like a man hammering nails. Seems you can't hit anything that way.

Robertson may have forebodings of career mortality, but he'll be around for a spell, anyway. Should his business venture set him up comfortably for life, he would not check out of pictures. "Out of acting, maybe. But I'm crazy about this business. I went to enough trouble getting into it so why get out till I have to? There's writing, directing, producing, a lot of other angles. But acting—" He shrugged as his old nemesis rose to confront him again.

On the whole, this represents a change of thinking on Robertson's part. As recently as a few months ago, his intimates believed that pictures to him were strictly a means to an end, the end being to return to Oklahoma and pick up the breeding of horses where he left off. He has not forsaken horses, but the horses will have to come to Hollywood, now. As of the last available returns, he was maintaining only four in California while fifty-odd cavorted on a friend's ranch back home, waiting for him to send them their train fare.

Perhaps the best male authority on Robertson away from the screen is actor Kit Carson, his best friend in Hollywood. The Robertsons—Mrs. Robertson was Jacqueline Wilson—spend a lot of evenings at the Carsons' home, playing canasta or chess or charades, and Carson has deposed at various times that Robertson is pretty fair at the first two and a brilliant livingroom mime—"the only evidence that he is an actor by profession." Despite his light lunches, Robertson eats like a rhino when the mood is on him, having tucked away on a recent evening chez Carson half a chicken, a fried steak, cream gravy, mashed potatoes and two quarts of milk. "He wasn't breathing very hard when he finished," Carson recalled. On the beverage detail, Robertson's a no-liquor-no-coffee man but will belt down a Coke if the party is on the unrestrained side. His golf, which he has been working on for only a couple of years, is good and getting better. Carson believes that Robertson may give his business manager severe headaches. In theory, he lives on a modest allowance his manager doles out to him, but in practice he is chronically overdrawn, due to a weakness for certain charities. He is bitterly opposed to neckties, which he claims shut off his windpipe, but Mrs. Robertson is breaking him to that saddle by stages. The Robertsons have a little daughter, Rochelle, closing in on twenty months. The other day, she said "Howdy," just as Robertson has been drilling it into her.

Today's best laugh: On Bob Hope's show Zsa Zsa ("Moulin Rouge") Gabor mentioned she was wearing a new gown because she might be stepping out. "You," said the wide-eyed Hope, "haven't far to step."
Earl Wilson
N. Y. Post

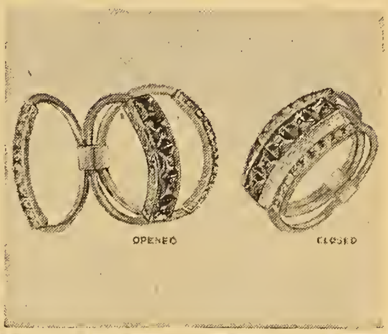
"It used to be," Robertson said over his third flagon of milk, "I'd say 'Howdy' and she'd say 'Daddy.' Now I say 'Daddy' and she says 'Howdy.' We'll get together yet." He had a few seconds of normal parental worry. "You know, you should have seen her at our party the other night. For the first time, I thought she looked beautiful. I've always thought she was a cute baby but never beautiful until then. You know, another thing, I hope she'll grow up to be tall. I mean, five-five, five-six, even five-seven, something like that. Small girls, small women, are cute but the real beauties—" he made an all-encompassing gesture, "—have that height."

Robertson was born with quite a flossy handle—Dayle LyMoine Robertson—which he curtailed and edited "as soon as I was old enough to read."

He went to school in Oklahoma City, graduated from Oklahoma Military College in Claremore, and met Will Rogers, a friend of his parents. Something almost

Modern Screen's ARMCHAIR SHOPPER

Here's a handy way to shop for those Christmas gifts you've been meaning to buy . . . as well as for the things you want for yourself. Just pick out the items you want in this column, send a check or money order to the address shown . . . and the postman will deliver the merchandise right to your door. You couldn't ask for an easier, more pleasant way to shop!



NEW COCKTAIL RING . . . PRESTO, IT'S 3 RINGS! This triple treat is the most versatile sparkler around town. Closed it's a smart cocktail ring, detach the simple clasp and you have three fine bands that can be worn as guard rings or singly. Center band has finely cut simulated rubies, sapphires, diamonds or emeralds mounted in sterling. The two guard rings set with simulated diamonds. $3.95 (tax included).

Sanlys, Dept. MS-12, 545 Fifth Ave., New York 17.

FOR ALL ABSENT-MINDED MEN (and aren't they all) this dapper dachshund is a natural. Made for over-night parking (or even dead storage) our pet Rover has ample room for a ring, watch, keys, coins, bills and a wallet . . . a place for everything that's dumped out of a guy's trouser pockets onto the dresser. In glazed pottery, dachshund color, 6" long from tail to nose. $2.75. Max Schling Seedsmen, Inc., 538 Madison Ave., Dept. 679, New York 22.

Genuine Cultured Pearls

Not imitation, but true cultured pearls from the waters of the deep Pacific. Set in handsome sterling silver mountings. Now available in two styles:

The two-pearl ring......$3.95
The three-pearl ring.....$4.95

Prices include federal tax. Order by mail today. Please mention ring size. Gift boxed. Guaranteed, of course.

H. C. Paulk, Dept. R-18, 304 Kansas Ave., Topeka, Kans.

came of that. Rogers wanted to take the young Dale to Hollywood at a time when he, Robertson, was just learning to rope and bulldog on the family ranch. The upshot was that the Robertsons decided he wasn't quite ready for it but they did mention dramatics school to Rogers, who vetoed the notion so promptly and emphatically that Robertson has shied from the idea ever since.

"They want you natural in Hollywood," Rogers said in part. "The drama coaches will put your voice in a dinner jacket and most people like their grits and hominy in everyday clothes."

At Oklahoma Military, Robertson was a really nervous athlete, racking up twenty-eight varsity letters, all told, at such assorted pastimes as football, basketball, baseball, boxing, tennis, golf, swimming and polo. He even had a little time left over. This was devoted to the study of law. Summers, he was variously a shipping clerk, a jackhammer operator, a cowboy and a trainer of polo ponies.

Most of this came to an end in September, 1942, when Robertson became a unit of the United States Army. Starting as a private, he moved up to first looey with the 332nd Combat Engineers battalion attached to General Patton's Third Army, and by and by took a dose of enemy mortar fire in one knee. That sent him back to Fort Bragg and nine months of treatment, including an excruciating period when doctors thought the leg would have to come off. But two operations fixed it—there is not even a suggestion of a limp today—and in February, 1946, he was back in civilian life, more or less ready to begin beating his head on Hollywood's disinterested portals.

The portals should have been easier to open. In the early stage of his Army career, Robertson was stationed in San Luis Obispo, not far north of Los Angeles, and came down to Hollywood one day to have his picture taken to send to his mother. Well, the photographer, a woman prophetically named Parsons, thought so much of her effort that she stuck it in the window, and right away all these agents began dropping Robertson notes having to do with motion picture employment.

So when Robertson got his separation papers, he immediately wrote the same agents, who couldn't have cared less, now that the first team was back in the lineup.

Robertson had an optional career, but with infinite wisdom he declined it. He might have been a fighter. He was a good amateur boxer in the Army and a fairly good pro later on, and he looks it, but that way of making a living shouldn't happen to a werewolf.

So Robertson went around to the end of the Hollywood line and started all over again.

In all, Robertson made the trip from Oklahoma to Hollywood ten times. The first nine times, he struck out or fouled out or scratched an inconsequental hit down the third-base line, represented by modeling jobs at a cool $40 a week.

But he had been creating a foundation in the event lightning was really looking for him hard. He had made tests at Fox and Metro and Warners, without setting any executives on fire, but not calling for defumigation measures either. In night classes at UCLA he was learning the business—all but acting.

One fine day a producer named Lee Brooks, who had considerable confidence in Robertson but was not making a film at the time, introduced him to agents Ned Marin and Charles Feldman, who signed him, took him over to Fox for a test.

That story has the soggiest payoff of the season. The test was terrible and Robertson wasn't hired.

IT HAPPENED TO ME

I was selling papers at Sky Harbor Airport when a tall man stepped off a plane and paused for a moment while a photographer took his picture. He noticed me standing there, I guess, and said to the man with the camera, "Say, fellow, destroy that picture and get one with this boy and me instead."

He's a great guy, as well as a great actor, that Jimmy Stewart.

Russell McKnight
Phoenix, Arizona

After that, for no very clear reason, Agent Marin brought him around to see his brother, Producer Ed Marin, and Ed Marin, still for no very clear reason, hired him to play Jesse James in an item called Fighting Man Of The Plains.

It was a small part—nearly as small, for instance, as that of Guy Madison in Since You Went Away—but it attracted the same kind of attention.

Well, you can't let a thing like that pass, not if you're head of a studio, and before you could say Find-me-the-chowderhead-who-let-this-kid-go, Zanuck had signed him. Nice seven-year deal, sealed on November 9, four years ago.

Zanuck saw Robertson, correctly, as a star of rugged stripe, nursed him along slowly, and wound up with a straight flush. But he never did instill in him any great reverence for the art of acting—or rather, for acting as an art.

"The man in the street is going to get wise some day," Robertson is reported to have said, "and storm the gates. We'll have to defend our jobs with pikestaffs and grape. It's a wonder it hasn't happened yet."

He has added: "And it's so true that goo looks or great ability haven't much to d with it. It's something no one can define and Joe Blow is just as apt to have it a Ty Power or Bob Mitchum. The lucky thin for us is that this seldom occurs to Jo Blow. If it did, it'd get mighty crowded o this here now island."

Robertson met the present Mrs. Robertson on a picture set. They lobbed how-do you-do's at each other and then forgot a about it. Literally. At their next meetin neither had the faintest recollection of th incident. But that oversight was cancelle in a hurry.

Today they live in Reseda (a part of th San Fernando Valley uncomfortably fa away from anything but Van Nuys) in three-bedroom GI house that Robertso furnished in modern.

There are the German shepher and, within striking distance, the horses Thunder, a Morgan; Tightwad and Do quarter horses; and Jim Dandy, describe by a scholarly breeder as half thoroughbred, half saddle-bag colt.

In the classic tradition, Robertson like to hunt and fish, to ride, of course. The there's this golf deal. That leaves Mr Robertson at separate times a golf wido and a studio widow but never a hunt-anc fish widow because she does those thing with him. And—Robertson's a handy ma with a rope. Authentic ranchero.

He's a big, heavy-set citizen, around s feet, up and down, and very wide in th shoulders. RKO reports that he weighs at 190 but looks heavier than that. He h black hair, a gentle, drawling voice, a yet a certain intimation in his bearing th a man would be ill-advised to fool wi him or get his back up unnecessarily. Th Podnuh-when-you-say-that-smile quali comes through very clearly.

This may be reenforced by the know edge that his pro ring record is twenty eight to two, with the win column on th left.

He has an engaging personality tra rare in Hollywood. To one outside the bus ness, it would appear to be a minor thin but actually it is effective. He does n drop names. That is to say, if he is speakin of Betty Grable, he refers to her as Bet Grable, not simply as Betty. In the sar way, Darryl Zanuck is Darryl Zanuck, Power, Ty Power and Richard Widmar Richard Widmark—not even "Dick." Fi names are not left dangling in the air live or die alone, a shoddy Hollywood ma nerism designed to give the speaker badge of vicarious importance. It is pr sumed from this that Robertson, notwit standing his protestations to the contrar must feel quietly sure of himself.

Besides, you must remember that can light a cigarette with his left ha alone, purely in the event he ever has And most people can't.

There must be a place for such resourc ful planning, particularly among acto who, like Dale Robertson, do not think ac ing is such a much. E

---

the right mr. wrong

(Continued from page 59) right because for the first time in her life Judy used her own judgment, free from the advice of all those friends and relatives who wouldn't let her grow up. And it was this man, producer Sid Luft, who helped Judy renew her courage and her faith in her fellow men, bringing her back to her stature as one of the greatest stars of all time.

Three years ago, Judy Garland's fourteen-year contract with Metro had been abrogated upon her refusal to do the lead, later taken over by Betty Hutton, in Annie Get Your Gun. She and her husband, Vincente Minnelli, were being divorced. Judy was caught up in a whirlwind of doubt, fear and insecurity. From childhood, disciplined in the ways of show business, she had allowed her "elders" to guide her every move. Now they could not realize that she was a mature woman. They couldn't stop meddling in decisions that should have been strictly her own.

Judy turned her back on Hollywood, determined to cut these ties forever. In New York she met Sid Luft, a man who had been somewhat battered, too, thou not defeated, by Hollywood career pro lems. He, too, was divorced.

At the time, their romance broke records for unpopularity. In the eyes self-styled important people in Holl wood, his great sin was that he was alm "nobody." It didn't matter that he and Ju were deeply in love. A not-too-subtle ca paign to break them up began immediate Looking back at that time, Judy reme bers, "We were even criticized for spen ing so much time in night clubs. Sid h to court me somewhere!"

From Sid's point of view, the mount opposition to his love for Judy was equally puzzling. He may have been unknown, but he did have integrity, a word that is foreign to many a Hollywood big shot.

In many ways, Hollywood is a cruel city, for the most "important" of its inhabitants have ways of "crushing" little people who get in the way of their plans. One way is to feed columnists and reporters a series of slanderous rumors about an offender. For instance, the report was circulated that Sid Luft had enlisted in the Canadian Air Force to "dodge" military service in this country—a ridiculous story. To set the record straight, Sid Luft has an enviable war record.

He enlisted in the Canadian Air Force on October 18, 1940, more than a year before Pearl Harbor. With the rank of Pilot Officer, he flew for two years with the R.C.A.F. prior to the entry of the United States in the war. On his release, he joined he Ferrying Command, and flew ships all over the western hemisphere. There was a udden urgent demand for veteran fliers who could take over a necessary and daring assignment—that of test pilot.

Sid Luft qualified. He went to work for Douglas Aircraft Corporation, performing nvaluable service in "finding the bugs" in all sorts of aircraft. It was while pursuing his dangerous job that he test-dived a plane which came screaming out of the kies and crashed. Sid crawled out, critically injured. For several months he was hospitalized, and by the time he had recovered, the war was over. It was only then hat he went back into civilian life. He ook a position with the Marx agency and hen went on to become a movie producer.

This, then, is the "wrong man" who, fter they fell in love, took charge of Judy's problems. His prime concern was not her career, but her happiness. Judy, however, was determined to continue to work—to wipe out the unhappy memories caused by he mounting maladjustments of her long years of doing what other people wanted her to do. So, with criticism from the press ringing in his ears, Sid mapped out a proram for Judy. He convinced her that doing vaudeville would not only revitalize her career, but doing live shows before the public would give her the confidence she o sorely needed. "Forget everything else," Sid told her, "and concentrate on the truth —that millions of people love you."

Plans for the appearance at the New York Palace Theatre were mapped out by Sid and Judy's agent, Abe Lastfogel, with pecial material by the talented Roger Edens and dances by Chuck Walters, who had worked with Judy in several of her est Metro pictures. After ten days of Hollywood rehearsals, the entire group eaded for New York on the big gamble. Hollywood skeptics predicted Judy would op. She was well aware of the attitude of her former friends.

THE DAY of the Palace opening, Judy was so nervous she couldn't eat for the entire day. Despite Sid's assurances, she had o idea how the public would receive her efforts. She needn't have worried. After the first curtain, people stood in the aisles and cheered her through thirteen encores. With tears in her eyes, Judy thanked the eople. That night, for the first time in months, she slept like a baby.

A few weeks later, while sophisticated New Yorkers stood in line every day to hear Judy's songs, she was struck suddenly by an excruciating pain in her chest. The doctor diagnosed the pain as a slight heart attack, called his office and had an electrocardiograph machine rushed to the theatre. When an attendant plugged the AC machine into the DC electrical outlet, it flew up and Judy's nerves went sky high. Dazed and woozy, she insisted on going on with the show.

"I barely remember getting on the stage," Judy recalls. "Then the sea of faces before me began to revolve like a nightmare. I hardly remember singing. Backstage, they saw what was happening, and after the second number they practically yanked me into the wings with a butterfly net. Vivian Blaine, bless her generous heart, was in the audience. She hurried onstage to finish the show, and I was rushed to the hospital."

Sadly, no one really close to Judy was there. Sid was out of town on business. Her manager and her agent were away for the weekend.

"I never needed just one familiar friend as badly as I did then," Judy remembers, "but when I recovered enough to go back to the Palace my wonderful audiences gave me a roaring reception. I felt so completely at home that never again can anything frighten me so badly."

When the Broadway adventure ended, Judy returned to Hollywood. Sid, meantime, had a firm hold on a dream of his he'd never expected could come true—he wanted to film a story about the greatest race horse of all time, Man O' War. The horse had belonged to Samuel Riddle, a successful breeder with a reputation for being extremely difficult in business deals. Everyone told Sid he would never get what he wanted, but Sid went to Riddle's home and persuaded him to sell Man O' War's story rights. About six months later, Mr. Riddle died.

"He was a wonderful guy," Sid recalls, "and I was a little dazed by his sudden passing. I knew that if I had not seen him when I did it would have been almost impossible to buy movie rights from the estate. And it seemed as though, in a way, I had been chosen to do this story. I feel very humble about it."

Tony Curtis is wondering whatever happened to an expensive pair of alligator shoes he ordered. Meanwhile his manager had returned same to the bootery, advising they didn't fit. What the money-watcher meant was they didn't fit into Tony's January budget.

Frank Farrell
World-Telegram & Sun

So, each on a high note of personal triumph, Judy and Sid took their vows in a simple ceremony at Hollister, California, over a year ago. Now they were ready for the next step in their plans, a production company of their own, which Sid set up with the financial and production backing of Warner Brothers. They began plans for remaking A Star Is Born, which won several Academy Awards when it was made originally with Fredric March and Janet Gaynor. The new version was planned as a musical, with Judy and James Mason, the screen play by Moss Hart and music by Harold Arlen and Ira Gershwin.

AT LAST Judy's life has begun to approach fulfillment and she happily has dropped out of the headlines. Judy now begins her mornings as she surveys her domestic domain propped up in the center of her king-sized bed with Sam, her "mixed" German shepherd sprawled full-length at her feet. Liza, Judy's seven-year-old daughter, usually is curled up beside Sam, affectionately scratching his big ears. And from her nearby crib, eight-month-old Lorna pulls the morning bottle from her rosebud mouth long enough to utter occasional delicate and contented burps.

When she's working, however, Judy and Sam rouse the whole family at six A.M., although the dog simply can't understand the sudden frenzy. "I named him Sam," Judy says, "for no particular reason, and I wouldn't part with him for a cool mil-

BLONDES!
Wash Hair Shades Lighter SAFELY!
WITH NEW "LOTION" SHAMPOO that you make at home fresh as you need it!
Takes only a minute—Brings out Radiant Lustrous Color—gives hair a wonderful shine!
If your blonde hair is growing dark or faded, here's good news. A sensational new "lotion" shampoo that you can make at home (FRESH . . . each time you use it), washes hair shades lighter, gives it beautiful new lustre and shine. Called BLONDEX, it is a fragrant powder that needs only water added to it to become a soft cleansing lotion shampoo. BLONDEX lotion's creamy suds work 3 ways: 1. It removes the dull, dingy film that makes blonde hair dark and old looking. 2. Brings back that flattering lightness. 3. Gives hair extra highlights and shine. Blondex is absolutely safe—use it for children's delicate hair. Get BLONDEX today at 10¢, drug and department stores

DESTROY UNWANTED HAIR FOREVER
Temporary relief is NOT enough
Only by KILLING THE HAIR ROOT can you be sure UNWANTED HAIR is GONE FOREVER. Brings relief and social happiness. Do not use our method until you have read our instruction book carefully and learned to use the MAHLER METHOD safely and efficiently. Used successfully over fifty years.
SEND 5¢ TODAY FOR BOOKLET NEW BEAUTY FOR YOU
MAHLERS, INC., Dept. 36-T, PROVIDENCE 15, R. I.

TOWELS
12 Large Size Assorted Colors ONLY $1.00
Money Back Guarantee, Order Now!
MURRAY HILL HOUSE, Dept. 48-E
©52MHH 157 East 31st. St., New York 16, N. Y.
Dealers' Inquiries Invited

LOOK 10-15 YEARS YOUNGER
Why worry because you have wrinkles, lines, baggy eyes, double chin, sagging muscles or other age signs. Be amazed! A full month's supply of TEENSKIN CREAM for only $2.00, incl. taxes and postage. Money refunded if not entirely satisfied. No C.O.D.'s, please.
HARVEY PRODUCTS CO., Dept. A12, 370 7th Ave., N.Y.C. 1

Genuine large size, studio-tone portrait of any movie star. Facsimile autograph. Ready for framing. Send name of your favorite star and 15c—or 2 for 25c—to cover handling costs
FREE STUDIO PHOTO
HOLLYWOOD STUDIOS
P.O. Box 2807, Dept. C-12
Hollywood 28, Calif.

Learn here the TRUTH about
PSORIASIS
IS IT A SKIN DISEASE OR INTERNAL?
Many medical men now agree that Psoriasis is caused by certain internal disorders which, when treated internally by harmless glandular substances, can be cleared up amazingly...so amazingly that clinical results show this wonder treatment completely successful in an astonishing number of cases; with even stubborn lesions of long standing alleviated to an almost unbelievable degree. Called LIPAN, this new treatment is so different that its name is registered in the U. S. Patent Office. Guaranteed absolutely harmless, over 8,000,000 LIPAN units have been sold to date. Ask your druggist for LIPAN or write direct for free booklet. Or send for month's supply (180 tablets) enclosing check or money order for $8.50. SPIRT & COMPANY, Dept. D-12, Waterbury, Conn.

lion. I've always been a light sleeper, and during my pregnancy I had a terrible time resting. That was all right with Sam, who is part night-hound. He took me for long walks and let me talk to him by the hour. When we were both nearly exhausted he brought me home. He is one of the finest fellows I ever knew, but I wish he wouldn't be so much of a one-man dog. When I go shopping, he goes shopping, or you can hear his howls for blocks. Sometimes I even take him to parties. The only time he ever leaves my side is when we all go to the beach, early in the morning. Sam roars off, up and down at the water's edge, snarling and biting at the waves."

While it was easy for Judy to name her dog, she couldn't think of a name for her second little girl. "We went through all the girls' names ever dreamed of," she says, "and for four days the poor darling was nameless. Then Sid came up with 'Lorna.' Lorna Doone happens to be one of our favorite novels, and somehow it seemed just right."

According to legend, movie children arrive with as much fanfare as a première and then retire to a close circle of nurses and governesses, seeing their career-crazy parents by appointment only. Mother Garland is a different type. In one of their few arguments, Judy told Sid that she wanted to let both the nurse and housekeeper go, take care of the baby and run their Beverly Hills home herself. She had nothing against their employees; she simply wanted to be normal. Unfortunately, with so much of her time scheduled for recording, picture and television plans, she simply didn't have the time. Even so, her intense preoccupation with family life caused a columnist or two to break out in a small rash of irritation. One of them complained petulantly in print: "I wish Judy Garland would learn how to arrive on time for dinner parties!" Judy didn't bother to explain that she gives two "lullaby performances" nightly, one for Liza and one for Lorna, before she and Sid can go out.

No offense intended, but the children of Hollywood stars seldom show as much indication of talent as the milkman's or policeman's kids. Born to luxury, they never learn how to work. Judy's little girl, Liza, is a delightful contradiction. Extremely popular with her classmates at the Buckley School, she shows early promise of a tremendous gift for dance. Currently, she is taking lessons from Gene Loring at the American Academy of Ballet. She writes little songs and has already produced a kiddy show with the help of her friends, personally writing the plot, in addition to handling the choreography and working on the costumes.

"On top of that," Judy explains with pride, "she is a second mother to her baby sister. She insists on racing home from school to feed her, and is disappointed if she can't stay up late and baby-sit. The other day, this busy tyke of mine came running into the house to tell me she'd worked out a dance routine for my next picture!"

But Liza isn't one to grab all the family attention. "Lorna is really the general manager of the household," Judy declares. "She gets the admiration of all the guests when she looks at them with her calm, almond, blue-eyed stare. They call Liza 'little old lady,' and I think Lorna should be nicknamed 'belle of the ball'."

Still another member of the Sid Luft household is John Luft, Sid's four-and-a-half-year-old son by a former marriage. John and Liza are the best of friends, discounting the latter's normal urge to boss him by reason of her "advanced" age. For a time, John raised quite a squawk because he wasn't allowed to hold the baby. Judy compromised by announcing he could pick her up when he was five. Net result: for two weeks, Sid received a telephone call every afternoon from his son, wanting to know whether he was five years old yet.

Despite these homey touches, Judy and Sid aren't just another couple like your neighbors down the block. They live in a glamorous, sophisticated world. The pressure of their mutual enterprise, however, keeps them away from Hollywood's more elegant social affairs. They usually have dinners with intimate friends, such as the Cary Grants, Ann Sothern and Peter Lawford.

They have spent a great deal of time with Moss Hart, Ira Gershwin, Harold Arlen, George Cukor and Jack Warner in evening conferences for A Star Is Born. Unlike her earlier years at the studio, when Judy simply did what she was called upon to do, she has had a voice in production planning. Her wisdom acquired in years of show business is so considerable that Warner himself said, "You really don't need me, Judy. You could produce this picture yourself." It wasn't idle flattery. Although most women have been singularly unsuccessful at this sort of thing, Judy may devote herself to it completely as she regains her strength.

listen to modern screen on the air:

HOLLYWOOD STARWAY

starring
Kevin McCarthy

MONDAY-FRIDAY AT 8:30 P.M. E.S.T. OVER MOST OF YOUR LOCAL ABC STATIONS

Many nervous breakdowns occur because people fail to recognize their limitations. They constantly strive for goals they are incapable of achieving. Judy's trouble a few years ago stemmed from exactly the reverse situation. Circumstances had contrived to hem in her talents and prevent her from attaining her natural high level in the entertainment business.

This is all changed now. In addition to the level thinking of her husband, Sid Luft, the confidence that Bing Crosby had in Judy at a time when she was considered a poor performance risk, is something she will never forget. And she had occasion, last year, to partially repay Bing's loyalty. The night before Dixie Crosby died, Bing's brother, Larry, called Judy and told her that Bing was in no condition to do his radio show. Although Judy was seven months pregnant at the time and in about as good a condition to step into a top radio effort as she was to go mountain climbing, she insisted that she be allowed to take over. She did, with only thirty minutes of band rehearsal. Bill Morrow, Bing's close friend and head writer exclaimed, "It was the most remarkable performance I've ever seen."

In a way, this incident is indicative of the one great danger that lies ahead for Judy Garland. In order to achieve a high standard for herself and for her friends, she spends her energy with reckless abandon. Here, however, Sid Luft provides the safety valve, encouraging Judy to slow down and take things easy.

For instance, when they were invited to attend the debut of Jack Warner's daughter last Christmas time in New York, Sid ruled out flying. Instead, they boarded the Super Chief out of Los Angeles on Christmas Eve, carrying with them a small Christmas tree, their presents and two bottles of champagne.

"We had a wonderful Christmas," Judy says. "There were exactly nine people on that whole train, so it was as close to traveling on a Presidential Special as I'll ever get. On top of that, ever since doing The Harvey Girls on the screen, the diners have given me super-de-luxe service. The waiters are always superb, but on this occasion I had a battalion of them and I felt like a queen."

Most feminine stars, having "arrived," turn lazy. After a "difficult" picture, normal physical relaxation is too much effort for them. Instead, their exercise consists mainly of massages by a small army of physical therapists who daily make the rounds of Beverly Hills and Bel Air.

This is not for Judy Garland. When she is not working she can usually be found playing golf at the Bel Air Country Club, or taking tennis lessons at Hillcrest, with Lorna in her carriage, looking on.

Judy first took up golf in Tarberry, Scotland, where she and Sid spent a five-day vacation after her appearance at the London Palladium. Here they played twenty-two holes a day, stopping at the eleventh, which brought them back to the clubhouse for lunch. "Sid brags that I shot a forty-nine for nine holes the first time out," Judy explains, "but I think he must have given me an encouraging audit; I was too busy whacking at the ball to count."

If Judy stays with the game, she has a chance to play in the same league with her husband. Sid plays to a six handicap. Judy is a natural left-hander, but has switched to playing golf and tennis from the right side, a maneuver which usually results in making better players of southpaws.

Recently, on the sixth hole, Judy hit her tee shot, walked to the spot where the ball should be and couldn't find it. She finally located it in a drain pipe, and announced, "A hole in one! Wait till I tell Sid!"

On the next hole, faced with a difficult shot out of a sandtrap, Judy studied the situation carefully, took a wedge iron out of the bag, swung smoothly, hitting an inch behind the ball. For a second, she was lost in a cloud of sand, from which the ball sailed in a high arch, landing two feet from the cup.

Judy grinned with satisfaction. "There's nothing to this game. All you have to remember on each shot is to do all forty-seven things right."

If Judy Garland has one handicap still to overcome, it is the fact that she tries too hard on everything at which she takes a swing. She ought to know by this time that to 99% of the public it is not at all necessary that she do "all forty-seven things right" every time out.

If Judy should ever step up, take a swing and fall flat on her face (which isn't likely) we hope she'll remember this: that she has banked so much entertainment happiness for all of us that from here on in she can do no wrong.

END

(Continued from page 35) the handsome daughters of the French middle class. They do not marry Frenchmen above their station, but they may marry foreigners or rich Frenchmen who have no social pretensions. Parisian models are seen everywhere but primarily as walking ads for the high fashion dressmakers.

Both Bing and Ghislaine understand this, and neither is trying to buck local custom. They have a good time together, but nobody imagines that she would be tickled to death to live on a Nevada ranch, nor that she will be invited to do so.

Ghislaine enjoys some distinction among the mannequins because she is used to show off the creations for Princess Margaret of England. She has the same measurements as the Princess, but Ghislaine is darker and has a round, vivacious face.

Crosby met her in Paris and saw her occasionally, but sidestepping the social errors of his compatriots, he never gave the impression that he was taking this seriously. He was vacationing with his son, Lindsay, and he devoted most of his time to showing the boy Europe. The gossip was that Bing saw a great deal of Ghislaine while Lindsay was in England to see the coronation of Queen Elizabeth.

Bing has loved Paris a long time. "It's one of the few places where I have a little privacy," he says, and it would surprise no one if he returned next summer and took an apartment or a house.

The French, particularly the Parisians, hold Bing on a slightly higher social plane than the other American actors. Crosby, of course, is better educated than some of them, has a larger intellectual horizon, and understands French. He has sparkling wit and joie de vivre. Having made Little Boy Lost in Paris, he knows many of the citizens—Nicole Maurey, Claude Dauphin, Eduard de Segonzac. He has participated in several charity affairs and he has been fought over by social leaders. One of his good friends is Paul Barrelet de Ricou, well-recognized in French society, and through him, Bing has made many friends.

In Paris, they say that Bing loves continental living and that he is sure to return. They say, too, that he is a man of tact, diplomacy, and intelligence, that he never wears his heart on his sleeve, and that he chooses his women with care and discrimination.

"If I did not know that he comes from Spokane," a Frenchman told me, "I would bet that Monsieur Bing could easily settle down into the life of the respectable, middle-aged Frenchman, with good food, good wine, and of course, a good mistress."

From a Parisian, this is high praise.

ALTHOUGH he does not approach Crosby as a social success, Gary Cooper has achieved another kind of distinction. On the basis of his performance with Gisèle Pascal, the French are convinced that he is one of the world's great lovers.

Coop arrived in Cannes last April to attend the Film Festival, and a day after he checked in at the Carlton Hotel, Gisèle, tall, brunette, and thirty-one, was on hand to take care of his social life. These two went everywhere together, and soon the French were curious about Prince Ranier of Monaco, to whom Gisèle supposedly has been engaged for the last three years.

One story was that Gisèle, the tall beautiful actress, daughter of a grocery importer, had given her Prince a wedding deadline. When Ranier stalled, she quickly moved into Cannes, set her sights for Gary Cooper, and took him in a matter of hours.

Another story: Gisèle used Cooper to arouse the envy of her royal lover.

In any event, once the Festival was over, Coop went up to Paris. There he drawled a characteristic denial, "Heck, I hardly know the gal. She was just one of the many I met down there." The denial fooled no one, for Gisèle had gone to Paris, too.

Prince Ranier followed, and there was a big scene with the Prince, also thirty-one, departing in a huff and leaving Paris to Coop and Pascal.

They say Coop had to work fast because his wife and daughter were coming over to Paris. Apparently he did his work well, because to date, Gisèle and her Prince are estranged and it looks as though Gisèle will never become the Princess of Monaco.

Whether she will try to become Mrs. Gary Cooper, no one knows. When Rocky and Maria, Coop's daughter, pulled into Paris last summer, Gary saw to it that they had a wonderful time. He did soft-pedal his relationship with Gisèle, but he had already accepted an invitation to appear at Kermesse des Etoiles, a huge fair where the movie stars sign photographs. The romantic French, not knowing that Mrs. Cooper was arriving, had assigned adjoining booths to Gary and Gisèle. This was titillating until Coop arrived with his daughter, Maria, on his arm!

After Rocky and Maria sailed for the States in September, Coop met Gisèle again, and they did Paris together. Then he checked into the American Hospital, supposedly for another hernia operation, a result of his trying to fight a bull in Spain.

There are three things any woman will make an excuse to get out of: a rainstorm, a tight girdle, and a diet.
Ronald Colman on NBC

Of Gisèle and Gary you can, of course, hear anything: that they are passionately in love, that Coop wants this beautiful woman for his wife, that Gisèle is using Coop to get into American films, that this is just a ninety-day romance, that Coop will never re-marry because Rocky will never give him a divorce.

The truth is that Coop doesn't want to re-marry. He just wants to have a fling. If he wanted to marry someone else, Rocky would have given him his freedom long ago to marry Pat Neal. She has said so.

Gisèle Pascal is lucky enough to have plenty of money. Her family is wealthy, and her Prince reputedly gave her handsome gifts. She may have no intention of marrying Cooper, for she is said to prefer younger men.

AN ENTIRELY different kind of girl is Suzanne Dadolle. Of all of these girls, she seems to be the one most in love and most interested in marriage. She has devoted her time to Clark Gable for over a year, and although he was reserved about her at first, they were later seen together constantly. Toward the end of last summer, you could find them practically any evening, dining out at any of the cafés in Paris along the Champs Elysées.

There are friends who say that Clark intends to make his Suzanne the fifth Mrs. Gable, that as recently as September he was introducing her to friends in Paris as "my future wife." Others insist it's just a fling. "I'll give you even money," a friend of his says, "that when Gable shows up in South America for his next picture—that is, if he does show up—he will be still single. I know the guy and I'm telling you that he was burned in his last marriage and he doesn't want to try it again."

When Gable was in London, however,

1 DOLLAR BRINGS ANY ITEM
Balance in easy payments
IMMEDIATE DELIVERY
10 Day Money Back Guarantee

101
BARGAIN OF THE MONTH Ladies' 14Kt. gold engraved wedding band. Reduced to $4.98 tax incl. Men's heavy gold engraved wedding band special $7.98.

404 405
MEN'S OR LADIES' WRIST WATCHES WITH BRACELETS Written guarantee. Latest model in luxurious gift box. Jeweled movement. Only $17.95 tax incl

303
Genuine diamond engagement ring and 3-diamond wedding ring. 14Kt. Gold. Perfectly matched in gift box. Both $29.95 tax incl. Diamond engagement ring only $22.95.

202
Your Choice Ladies' or Men's Gold Birthstone Ring. Unusual value. Mention month desired with order. $15.95.

SEND FOR BIG 1954 CATALOG. Full line Genuine Diamond Rings. Nationally Known Watches. Lowest Prices. Best Terms Guaranteed. Send 10c to cover handling.

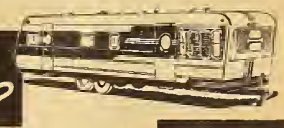
HOW TO ORDER
Send only $1. Balance in Easy Payments. State age, occupation. No extra charge. No red tape. Orders filled promptly ORDER TODAY

ATLAS JEWELERS, Inc.
Dept. E0 230 Fifth Ave., New York, N. Y.

NEW TOWELS
LARGE SIZE 12 for $1.00
Assorted Colors. Slightly Irregular, that's why this price is so low but GUARANTEED to please you in EVERY way—or your money cheerfully refunded! Order NOW! Prepaid or C.O.D.
BARGAIN TOWEL CO., Dept. 384, Box 881, St. Louis 1, Mo.

DORIS DAY

FREE PHOTO
LARGE SIZE of your favorite star
Actual HIGH GLOSS PHOTO suitable for framing
FREE!! MOVIE STAR CATALOG listing thousands of poses and containing 55 ADDITIONAL PICTURES of popular stars.
FREE!! A list giving BIRTHDAYS OF STARS. Send name of your favorite star and only 15 cents to cover handling charge.
MORTON STUDIOS, P. O. Box 2430
Dept. MS-12 Hollywood 28, Calif.



Want a HOME?
Before you choose, be sure to GET THE FACTS about Schult mobile homes. Write or wire Dept. 6712
SCHULT CORP., ELKHART, IND.
SCHULT TRAILERS

PART-TIME
Women to work in their homes. 3-5 hrs. per day.
MAILERS
4043 St. Clair Ave., Dept. F12, Cleveland 3, Ohio

SUFFERERS FROM PSORIASIS (SCALY SKIN TROUBLE)
Use DERMOIL
MAKE THE ONE SPOT TEST
Prove it yourself no matter how long you have suffered or what you have tried. Beautiful book on psoriasis and Dermoil with amazing, true photographic proof of results sent FREE. Write for it.
SEND FOR GENEROUS TRIAL SIZE
©1953 LAKE LAB.
Don't mistake eczema for the stubborn, ugly embarrassing scaly skin disease Psoriasis. Apply non-staining Dermoil. Thousands do for scaly spots on body or scalp. Grateful users, often after years of suffering, report the scales have gone, the red patches gradually disappeared and they enjoyed the thrill of a clear skin again. Dermoil is used by many doctors and is backed by a positive agreement to give definite benefit in 2 weeks or money is refunded without question. Send 10c (stamps or coin) for generous trial bottle to make our famous "One Spot Test." Test it yourself. Results may surprise you. Write today for your test bottle. Caution: Use only as directed. Print name plainly. Don't delay. Sold by Liggett and Walgreen Drug Stores and other leading druggists. LAKE LABORATORIES, Box 3925, Strathmoor Station, Dept. 8009, Detroit 27, Mich.

he said he had absolutely nothing against marriage and that if the right girl came along—"someone sophisticated, attractive, and of course, someone with whom I was in love, I wouldn't mind getting married one bit."

It is difficult to tell whether or not Suzanne Dadolle fills his requirements. Gable has appeared to be a bit of a social climber, and three of his four marriages were to socially prominent women. Perhaps he no longer cares, for Suzanne is a mannequin (although she hasn't turned up at Schiaparelli's even during the busiest season of haute couture) and as such does not occupy an especially favorable position on the Paris social ladder.

Gable, whose sense of humor is limited, seemed more cheerful than ever, last summer. He greeted everyone with a smile, signed autographs left and right, and appared to be completely in love, not only with Suzanne, but with France.

Suzanne, who worked for the Free French in London during World War II, speaks excellent English—a great help to Gable, since he speaks nothing else. She is thirtyish, a tall, handsome red-blonde. One acquaintance said, "She is shy and amazingly naive for a French girl her age. She is placid and utterly without malice. She thinks Clark is the greatest guy in the world and personally, I hope she marries him."

On the other hand, one French social leader explained that she had known several women who had met Gable. "I hear that he is really a frightful bore and quite inhibited. Personally, I believe this Dadolle girl is just perfect for him. I understand he hopes to take her home for Christmas."

Suzanne does not offer alertness or vivacity, but she does offer slavish devotion; she has risked the repeated censure of her family to be with him. Certainly, she is no sophisticate, but neither is Gable, although he has tried to be one sometimes. His marriages to fashionable women have failed. Perhaps this time he will be willing to risk marriage with a woman of average background, average accomplishments, and average tastes. Certainly, in Paris he did not seem to mind being left out of the top-drawer social classification. In Hollywood, as Gable's wife, Suzanne Dadolle would be accorded all the recognition and courtesy owing to her position. But the cynics say that his is just another Paris fling, soon to fade into memory. Possibly that is Gable's point of view. It is not Suzanne's.

WHILE Gable, Crosby and Cooper operated smoothly enough in Paris, some of their younger fellow-citizens from Hollywood were having more dazzle—and more trouble from home.

Gregory Peck has a taste for youth, as evidenced by his friendship with Veronica Pasanie, a half Russian, half French journaliste of twenty-one. She is a part time reporter for the Paris Presse, and she inveigled the Paramount press representative into getting her an interview with Greg. As a result of that interview, Veronica was asked to follow up the story. When Greg took off for Rome, she was not far behind.

Greg says, "She's just a girl I met in Paris." Veronica claims, "I am a professional journaliste. All my contacts with Mr. Peck have been in the line of duty."

Peck has taken out Veronica on several occasions. They have been seen dining in Paris, and while that may be attributed to assiduous journalism, you can't tell it to the French. They don't know whether Greg is separated from his wife, Greta, or not, but they do know that in France he does not lead a monastic life. Even Greta never expected that.

For a time, Veronica hoped that Greg might get a divorce and marry her, but this no longer seems likely. It has been hushed all over Europe that Greg has really been smitten by Audrey Hepburn, his co-star in Roman Holiday. If it's true, Greg is in a difficult spot because Audrey's mother watches her very carefully.

Audrey is scheduled to start Sabrina Fair at Paramount's Hollywood studio. Maybe that's one reason Greg plans to come home by Christmas. Or he may wish to settle his marital problems once and for all.

As a breeding ground of European flings, Paris has one rival. Rome. Only recently Zsa Zsa Gabor said that George Sanders shouldn't be angry about her friendship with Porfirio Rubirosa because, "After all, George had a wonderful time with a girl in Rome."

Kirk Douglas is another star who has been living it up in Italy. Probably, he has dated more foreign beauties than any other American actor. He was seen with a new girl each night at the Cannes and Venice Film Festivals. His reputation in Rome accords him the record, quantitatively speaking.

Errol Flynn is another who is constantly being paired with Italian beauties in the gossip columns. Only a few weeks ago there was a terrific slugfest in his apartment, supposedly caused by a woman. Robert Taylor, you'll recall, got into big trouble with Barbara Stanwyck during the filming of Quo Vadis when it was said that he had become enamored of an Italian bit player, Lia de Leo. A picture of Taylor and de Leo is rumored to have caused Stanwyck's flight to Italy to rescue her mate. It didn't work out that way. Taylor wanted his freedom, and Stanwyck gave it to him, albeit at a stiff price. Now that she is free, Ursula Thiess, the German actress, will be the next Mrs. Robert Taylor.

Because so many motion pictures with American stars are being filmed overseas these days, it follows that these celebrities will seek romance wherever they are. In fact, it is safe to surmise that for Hollywood's stars the days of the Paris fling have just begun. END

---

the man behind the face

(Continued from page 49) burned beyond recognition, even by his mother.

"I don't see much in my life to dramatize," Jack Palance will tell you after the manner of most men chosen by fate to face brutal experiences few of us ever suffer. "It's true that I was the son of a coal miner in Lattimer, Pennsylvania, and that my family was what might be called 'desperate poor,' but we didn't know it. If you grow up in a town which is almost treeless and emphatically black and grey, it never occurs to you that life has played a dirty trick on you. Yes, compared to a town in which there are trees, flowers and lakes, Lattimer could be called a grim place. But the good Lord has a way of balancing the books in favor of people like us. Among the citizens of Lattimer there is probably more of honesty, loyalty, love and pure decency than almost anywhere else on earth."

You could expect a boy like Jack Palance to grow up into a street corner rabble-rouser, or worse, living as he did in a "company" town. His mother had to pay $1.10 a pound for butter. She could buy the same butter in a town just a few miles away for eighty-seven cents, but resisted the temptation to economize for fear her husband would be fired from his mining job.

"We were poor," Jack Palance remembers, "but we were never hungry. When the miners went on strike for months at a time, we didn't have meat on the table. We had all the vegetables we could eat, though. I weigh about 200 pounds now, which ought to be proof enough that I didn't starve to death as a kid."

WITH all his acceptance of a bleak childhood, Jack Palance was not a happy boy. From the time he learned to read, he had an insatiable appetite for books and felt it made him "different" from other kids. To compensate for this, he turned to fighting, climbing into a ring for the first time at the age of thirteen and turning in a creditable performance against a twenty-one-year-old pug. The prize money was $1.50, winner take a buck. They fought to a draw for a split purse—seventy-five cents each.

"That's where I got my nose broken the first time," Jack says. "I did fair as a fighter, but I was scared as hell a lot of the time. The worst night I ever spent was in a ring with a guy by the name of Rough House Williams. I was fully grown before I was out of my teens. Stood six, four, and weighed over 200 pounds. But when I looked across the ring at Rough House I felt like crying. I had watched him work out in the little town near Louisville, Kentucky, where we were fighting, and I'd have preferred to trade left hooks with a gorilla."

As the bell sounded, Palance moved to the center of the ring. Rough House did likewise. Then Palance moved back, but fast. He kept on back-pedaling. The crowd booed. Palance clinched and Rough House tore a hard right through his midsection. Palance broke loose, backing into the ropes. Rough House picked up a left hand from somewhere near the floor.

"When he caught me on the side of the chin, I went three feet up in the air. The bell rang before I could get up. I wished it hadn't. While my handlers were slapping me sensible, the referee came over with a few words of encouragement. He said I'd either have to start fighting or he'd give the decision to Rough House.

"I went out for the second round. Rough House looked even tougher. I told myself to make a fight of it, but all the while I was running around the ring like a monkey looking for an opening in his cage. When Rough House caught up with me, he tore me apart. My eyes popped out like Eddie Cantor's. My hands swung like a couple of windmills. Then everything went blank. I felt somebody holding me up with my right hand ridiculously up in the air, and because I couldn't hold my head up, I stared down at the canvas. There was Rough House, stretched colder than a mackerel in a deep freeze. He didn't know what had hit him. To be frank, neither did I. I'd knocked him out by accident, and if the referee had told me that he'd done me a favor by hitting Rough House with a baseball bat, I would have believed him."

This confession is not to be taken as an invitation for anyone to step up and try his luck with Jack Palance. He's not quite as tough as he looks on the screen, but almost.

As is usually the case with capable men, he doesn't make speeches about his physical prowess and he goes to considerable lengths to picture himself as just an average guy.

Fighting, Palance believes, can be fun.

Not, however, if you have a nose that needs a remodeling job every time it is touched by a soft jab. As for fighting for profit, Palance was never knocked out during his ring career; still, the most he ever earned for one fight was $400. Now he earns more than five times that in a week.

It is necessary now to pry more deeply into the life of this remarkable actor to understand what there is about him, inwardly, that causes his personality to project so powerfully on the screen. To put it more precisely, Jack Palance is a man who has been "to hell and back," within himself. He can't be blamed if he doesn't want to talk about it.

"The little accident" Lieutenant Jack Palance had when his B-24 crashed on takeoff during the war near Tucson, Arizona, was no minor experience. The plane burst into flame. Palance dragged himself out alive and in flames. In the months that followed he wished himself dead. His whole face was a mass of scar tissue. Delicate operations followed, one after another.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

The day was a hot one, and all the pedestrians on Hollywood's main streets were trying to beat the heat by wearing as little excess clothing as possible. Imagine my family's surprise when we saw a cowboy approaching decked out in full western regalia—and a long red beard. At first I thought, "That poor man must be suffering terribly from the heat," but as he came nearer I saw that the beard was a fake and realized that he had inflicted it upon himself. At this moment, my little brother, Buster, looking awestruck, said humbly, "How do you do, Mr. Rogers?" To everyone's amazement the man stopped, removed his fake red beard and said, "For goodness' sake, how did you know who I am?" Sure enough, there was Roy Rogers smiling down at my little brother. For a moment Buster was too overwhelmed to speak, but he finally came out with it. He had seen the initials "R. R." on Roy's boot, and made his own deductions.

Betsy Barron
Yoakum, Texas

Those who see his face now for the first time on the screen are slightly taken aback. The expression is one of gaunt strength and contained fury, which thousands of women moviegoers find highly exciting. If the phrase "contained fury" is inadequate, there are no words that come anywhere near what Palance thought of his face for months after the accident. He avoided looking at himself in the mirror. Despite the fact that those who knew him could notice miraculous improvement, he couldn't. The entire experience was one long nightmare in which he had lost his original face and was being given a new one.

Courage is also an insufficient word to describe the strength with which he emerged from the fear of being seen in public and went again about the business of living, enrolling at Stanford University under the GI bill as a student in radio acting and short story writing. Somewhere along the line, he whipped the complexes about his facial appearance. He went on to New York, by way of such jobs as short order cook, life guard and ice cream salesman, at last landing an important role in the Broadway show, The Big Two, directed by Bob Montgomery. Everybody loved the play but the critics and the audience. It folded in three weeks.

Jack had just enough money left to pay his room rent and get on to Chicago. Here his budding career sank to another depth. He understudied Anthony Quinn in the Windy City company of A Streetcar Named Desire, a job in which he was as important to show business as last week's issue of Variety. Every night he sat in his basement dressing room reading a heavy book called The Anatomy Of Melancholy.

But he was not alone in his misery. In the dressing room next door sat a girl named Virginia Baker, who understudied the Vivien Leigh role. Although Helen Hayes has pronounced her the most capable young dramatic aspirant in New York, then she was as much a "nothing" as the moody Mr. Palance.

One evening, when she no longer could stand being buried beneath the street while audiences cheered the powerful play going on above her head, Virginia went to Jack and said, "Let's go to a movie."

The picture had a title appropriate for the two of them—Sorry, Wrong Number. They felt like a couple of wrong numbers and Jack had the same opinion of the picture. Somewhere along in the middle, he left the theatre. At the final fadeout he came back to his seat. Virginia said, "You're a charming escort. Where've you been?"

"I didn't like it so I went out for a beer."

Virginia made a mental note that Mr. Palance was strictly a foul ball, square type. But a few nights later leading man Tony Quinn was attacked by a strep throat. Now, understudy Palance had his big chance to rise from the dressing room graveyard and face an audience in a hit play.

"I was curious to see if Jack was a more inspired actor than he was a date," Virginia admits, "so I sat out front that night. It was the surprise of my life. He was not just good. He was great. When he walked out from the wings, sparks flew. To my dismay, I fell in love with him."

For Jack, the triumph was short lived. He had the part for two performances, then had to go back to his basement dressing room. Virginia loyally explained, "Maybe Tony heard how sensational Jack was. Anyhow, he got well overnight. As for me, I woke up in a hurry. First, I realized that Mary Welsh was far too healthy for me to hope to step out of the understudy role. Second, and a lot more important, I had to get out of Chicago. I was an actress trying to get started. I had fallen in love with a guy who had shown me that he preferred a bottle of beer to my company. It didn't make sense."

Virginia went back to New York and Jack went on the road with Streetcar. But he suddenly missed the girl who had shared his misery in the Chicago theatre basement, and he followed her with a series of letters climaxed by a Christmas Eve proposal. Virginia was touched and a little frightened. She flew to Detroit to tell Jack why she couldn't become Mrs. Palance.

Then, less than a month later, Marlon Brando, who was playing the role in New York unconsciously took an important part in their romance by breaking his nose. The producers needed Jack Palance immediately. He had quit the road show and nobody knew where to find him. They checked with Virginia, who called all the relatives she knew, finally locating him at

SHAMPOO
WITHOUT WATER!
New Dry Way
Takes Only 10 Minutes!

WAVE STAYS IN! You'll thrill to the way Minipoo Dry Shampoo restores beautiful sheen, without disturbing your wave.

QUICK AND EASY! No water, no suds, no drying. With its simple brush applicator, fragrant Minipoo powder removes excess oil, dirt and hair odors in just 10 minutes. Leaves your hair shining clean and fresh!

IDEAL DURING COLDS when you don't want to wet your hair. Perfect for last-minute dates. Restores limp, stringy, oily hair to shining softness.

Get this marvelous waterless shampoo today! 30 shampoos and applicator brush in every package. Ask for Minipoo Dry Shampoo—at all toilet goods and drug counters.

SILK FINISH ENLARGEMENTS
5x7 SIZE 29¢ each
8x10 SIZE 59¢ each
GOLD TOOLED FRAMES

Check number, size and color of frames
☐ 1—5x7 ☐ 2—5x7
☐ Ivory and Gold
☐ 1—8x10 ☐ 2—8x10
☐ Brown and Gold

Beautiful silk finish black and white enlargements made from your favorite snapshots, photos or negatives. Be sure to include color of hair, eyes and clothing for having your enlargements beautifully hand colored in oil. SEND NO MONEY. Simply pay postman for each enlargement and each frame plus cost of mailing. Additional $1.29 for hand coloring 5x7 size or $1.69 for 8x10 size. Satisfaction guaranteed. Limit 2 to a customer. Originals returned with enlargements. Offer good in U.S.A. only. Prompt service.

HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS, Dept. NF-89
7021 SANTA MONICA BLVD., HOLLYWOOD 38, CALIF.

High School Course at Home
Many Finish in 2 Years

Go as rapidly as your time and abilities permit. Course equivalent to resident school work—prepares for college entrance exams. Standard H. S. texts supplied. Diploma Credit for H. S. subjects already completed. Single subjects if desired. High school education is very important for advancement in business and industry and socially. Don't be handicapped all your life. Be a High School graduate. Start your training now. Free Bulletin on request. No obligation.

American School, Dept. H914, Drexel at 58th, Chicago 37

$10 EACH FOR CERTAIN LINCOLN PENNIES
Certain Indianheads $50.00. Send 20c for NEW BOOKLET listing coins wanted and prices we pay.
LINCOLN COIN CO.
Dept. 84 GLENDALE ARIZONA

MAKE MONEY
ADDRESSING ENVELOPES
OUR INSTRUCTIONS REVEAL HOW
GLENN GLENWAY 5713 EUCLID AVE., CLEVELAND 3, OHIO

IF YOU SUFFER PAIN of HEADACHE NEURALGIA NEURITIS
get FAST RELIEF with ANACIN
the way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend.

HERE'S WHY . . . Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, Anacin contains not just one but a combination of medically proved active ingredients. No other product gives faster, longer-lasting relief from pain of headache, neuralgia, neuritis than Anacin tablets. Buy Anacin® today!

a cocktail party in Greenwich Village. Jack climbed aboard Streetcar again, grateful for Virginia's detective work.

"I don't know exactly when we decided to marry," Virginia went on, "but I think I must have started the proposal. At least I know that I cued him. At any rate, we were married in New York's Little Church Around the Corner on April 12, 1949. By this time we were both out of jobs. Even so, Jack insisted that we have a honeymoon, so we checked in at the Hotel Holley on Washington Square. I didn't realize that we were dead broke until I noticed that Jack began to take his suits to the cleaners and they never came back. He was hocking them to keep us going."

Then the gods of the theatre apparently went into executive session to see what they could do about these two. Immediately they came up with a couple of small parts, then the Hollywood call to play the role of the heroic Marine in Halls Of Montezuma. This, of course, was followed by Panic In The Streets.

During Halls Of Montezuma Virginia was concentrating on motherhood. For weeks Jack had been coming home to say, "Don't you think it's about time you went to the hospital?" One evening, Virginia talked him into going to see the play, Death Of A Salesman, to ease his nerves. When he arrived home at midnight she said, "Jack, the baby's on the way."

"Oh, no," he moaned. "Not tonight!"

Obediently, he backed out the car again and they started for the Good Samaritan Hospital, which isn't easy to find even when you know where it is. He made the wrong turn off the freeway, and after checking with three gas stations finally found the place. "Poor guy," Virginia remembers. "I insisted on a natural birth so he stayed with me almost all night while I tried to prove that it didn't hurt. We decided to name the baby Holley after our honeymoon hotel. I don't know how Jack stayed awake on the set the next day, but the ordeal must have helped because the director told him his work was particularly good."

Father Palance was not too happy about his career, however. It seemed that all the good parts at 20th Century were going to handsome guys. So he chose to make an issue of his being cast in Viva Zapata! to break his contract.

"Probably that was stupid on my part, because Tony Quinn, whose understudy I had been for so many months, took it and played it into an Academy Award. For my part, however, I was lucky. I went back to New York and into Darkness At Noon, which seemed to more or less establish me as an acting commodity."

That's putting it modestly. Audiences shook the rafters with their applause. Television and movie offers, specifically for Sudden Fear and Shane, snowed him under. Jack left Virginia and the baby in their apartment on Central Park in New York and began to commute.

"He was in Hollywood when Brook was born," said Virginia, "and I was glad. Fathers have such a terrible emotional struggle at a time like this. As for me, I simply took a taxi to the hospital. The cab driver was very helpful. He never asked where my husband might be."

Even if movies don't wake up to the fact that Jack Palance is considerably more than the most terrifying "heavy" Hollywood has ever seen, TV certainly has, as evidenced by the fact that Suspense for the first time is splitting itself into two half-hour shows in order to allow Jack to star in Othello. If that doesn't do the trick, persuasive movie fans may help to show producers the way. They certainly haven't been asleep at the post, as witness the letter written by one Modern Screen reader to a movie boss: "Why do you insist on casting Jack Palance as such ugly characters? Sooner or later you'll discover that the public has already marked him as a star. It isn't necessary for him to frighten the first five rows of customers stiff to prove himself a fine actor. It's not the face, but the man behind the face that counts!"

The young lady never said it better. Her letter and hundreds of others may have already turned the trick, for although Jack Palance has been killed in five of his six pictures, a bulletin on his future has just come through as follows: "In his next picture, Flight To Tangier, Mr. Palance plays the hero and wins not one but two heroines."

That you've got to see! END

I'd make a lousy bachelor

(Continued from page 53) one woman could change a man's whole attitude toward life. Take, for instance, my life back in New York. In high school a lot of guys collected girls like trophies. "Look at me," they'd say. "Five dates this week —all with different dames." I never went that route. I had a lot of insecurities, but this wasn't one of them.

I called girls "dames" because that's what all the fellows called them. I knew from nothing about women. With the exception of Mom, my family was made up of males, and if I thought at all about women I regarded them as a sort of foreign race of people without whom I could get along just dandy. No female, I decided, was ever going to drag me to the altar. Marriage was strictly for the birds, and I pictured for myself a long and happy life eating out of tin cans and taking off for South Africa if and when I felt like it. Girls, schmirls, who needs 'em?

By that time I figured I was really living. I never hung up my clothes and I made the bed only when I changed the sheets—or maybe sometimes when it got so rumpled it was uncomfortable. If I forgot to take my clothes to the laundry and was minus a clean pair of shorts or a shirt, I'd go out and buy some clean ones. I hated restaurants, so I'd go to the corner delicatessen and buy a roast squab chicken, a loaf of French bread, a dill pickle and a bottle of Chianti wine, and I'd take the stuff up to my room and eat it sitting on the floor and reading a book. Mom had always harped at me to do better than this, but I regarded such things as the inconsequential stuff of life and couldn't be bothered about it. My socks were the only thing that puzzled me. I'd buy a new pair and wear them and then after I washed them they'd be too small. So I'd send them home to my brother, Bobby. He was always appreciative, thinking they were new, but I guess Mom knew they were shrunk, all right. Anyway, I worried briefly about those socks, wondering what I was doing wrong, and then decided this was the way it was supposed to be—that all guys buy socks, wear them once, wash them and then send them to their little brothers.

After Mom and Pop and Bobby came out and got settled in a house, I moved in to share a place with Marlon Brando, Jay Kantor and Irving Paley. This was even better. Marlon and I used to get up at four in the morning and play records and beat his drums. This was living it up, I thought. I didn't need or want anybody else.

And then I met Janet. I was scared for a long time, scared that I'd be hurt again. She was different, and I didn't want this to end. But I distrusted her just as much as I had every other girl I'd known. When I asked for a date and she said she had another date, I'd spend that evening in the bushes opposite her house. First I'd put a note under the door for her. "What's with this guy?" And when she'd come out of the house with this other joker, she'd be laughing softly to herself. I'd wait there for hours, counting stars and playing she-loves-me, she-loves-me-not with assorted daisies, and when Janet came home with her date she'd find another note. "Don't stay too long with him." The other guy never could figure, I guess, what Janet found so amusing in her mail. And then he'd come out ten minutes later and when I'd notice he didn't wipe his mouth with his handkerchief to take off the lipstick, I'd write Janet another note. "Good girl." She'd find that one when she left the house in the morning. She used to ask me when I ever slept.

She must have had an awful time with me when we got married. I forgot appointments as fast as I made them and I was never on time. My eating habits were nonexistent, and Janet stood over me every morning until I'd stuff down my eggs and bacon and milk. She hid the orange pop. When I painted during the evening and left everything in a mess, I'd hear her tiptoe around after I was in bed, and the next morning I'd find clean rags and clean brushes waiting for me. She was forever picking up my clothes. Once she asked for a lump of stuff on a chair so that she could put it in the laundry and I handed the whole mess to her, whereupon she promptly went down on her knees. Included in the pile of clothing had been some weights I use for lifting exercises, so now I put those away myself.

By this time I'd probably be doing it all myself, but I've learned that Janet isn't happy unless she can be waiting on me all the time. People say she spoils me and I guess she does, but she likes doing it. In any case, Hawaii proved to me that whatever she does, I like it. By this time, I'd make a lousy bachelor.

There I was, on the island of Kauai, bivouacked in a plush hotel, with a room and lanai of my own. If anybody had told me ten years ago that one day I'd be in the Hawaiian Islands, living in such style and being paid for it to boot, I'd have put him in a strait-jacket. If I'd never met Janet, such a trip would have been a highlight of my life. As it was, I spent my free time there mooning around like a Gloomy Gus. I might as well have been quartered in a medieval garret for all the joy I got out of it.

I lived out of my trunk, figuring it made the time go faster. Sort of an illusion that I'd be moving out any minute. Once when I came back from work my pajamas and things had been hung up and put away. It was the maid who did it, of course, but for a fleeting moment I had the strange sensation that Janet had been there.

It was always awful when I got back to the hotel after a day's work. I'd gotten so used to married life that the days seemed empty without the welcome I always get at home. The mail addressed to me is put in a neat little pile. Janet has my folding chair in front of the TV set, and nearby is a plate of caviar and bread and onions, and a big jug of cold root beer. People might say that caviar and root beer is a weird combination, but it's all right with Janet because she knows I like them together. The caviar is expensive, but she's so intent on getting me to eat that she says I should have anything I like, as long as I stuff myself with it. The root beer bit is for two reasons. I think it tastes good with caviar, and besides, it's an equalizer. The caviar might float my head into the clouds but the root beer keeps my feet on the ground.

That's the homecoming I was used to, the kind I loved. But on Kauai, I rushed into the room to get showered and put on fresh clothes, and then into the restaurant to eat and then back to the room to go to sleep as fast as I could. Janet always puts some kind of goop on her face and hands at night—cold cream or something, I guess you call it—and it was amazing how much I missed the odor of that stuff every night. In the morning when I piled out of bed at five o'clock there was always something missing that I couldn't quite place until I realized it was the aroma of Janet's cologne. It was these little things that made me feel I wasn't really alive.

At first I'd had the sneaking thought for five whole weeks I'd be able to eat what I pleased. Janet wouldn't be standing over me and my eggs, and if I wanted to, I could starve myself with complete abandon. The funny thing was that I ate the biggest breakfast of anybody in the company—eggs and milk and flapjacks. I ate well and regularly, and I remembered every appointment. I was even on time. I'd figured, too, that I could blow the budget a little, but it turned out that the only thing I spent money for was a pair of levis. And a Chinese dinner one night when I went out with the gang. The rest of the time I ate at the hotel because I never knew when Janet might telephone. It was almost as though I was behaving myself because if I didn't, God might put the picture behind two or three days. Or maybe it was simpler than that. Maybe it was because I knew it would make Janet happy.

IT HAPPENED TO ME

When my husband was stationed in Wyoming, several movie stars came to the base to entertain the men. Unfortunately, I couldn't go to see them, as I had just come home from the hospital after our first baby was born. The baby was crying and I was feeling terribly depressed. Suddenly, I heard a soothing voice singing a beautiful lullaby. The baby stopped crying and went to sleep. I was cheered and grateful, but I was too sick to get out of bed and meet my husband's guest, Gene Autry.

Mrs. J. A. Moore
La Mesa, California

They kidded me a lot on the set. There were a lot of married men there who were lonely, but I don't think any of them were in such a turmoil as I was. Part of it, of course, was because of the baby we lost. It happened less than a week after Janet had got back home after our ten days in Hawaii together, and being away from her then was more than I could bear. We had put ourselves on a budget by agreeing that I would call every other day, and I remember that Sunday well. I had phoned the night before and was to call again on Monday, but I sensed something was wrong. I phoned our apartment, but no one answered. Then I phoned Mom and Pop's place because I remembered Janet was to go there for dinner that night. Mom told me Janet wasn't feeling well and that her parents had taken her to the doctor. I knew then why I'd had the urge to call. It hit me like a ton of bricks, and even the phone calls to Janet in the next few days didn't help much. I felt I should be there with her at such a time, and I'd have taken the next plane home, job or no job, except that I knew that would have upset Janet even more.

I took to talking with the kids on the island, and somehow that helped me more than talking with adults. Kids seem to understand so much better than grownups. There was a gang that used to hang around the hotel, all of them about six or seven years old, and I used to snitch rolls and cookies for them from the restaurant table and then we would have a long talk before I went to bed.

There were four more weeks to go, and I did everything I could to make the time fly. I'd purposely neglect sending out laundry, thinking maybe by some miracle I'd be ordered to go home. When I did send it out I always asked that it be brought back the next day. "But Mr. Curtis," they'd say, "you'll be here another three weeks."

"I'd better have it tomorrow," I said. "You never know what might happen."

I missed Janet most of all, of course, but it got so I was missing everything and everybody. I missed the fruit bowl we always attack just before bedtime, and I missed our maid Ida May's cooking. I missed sharing with Janet the funny things that happened and the crazy comedy routines we do together. Five weeks without a schticklok is a long time. It got so that when I'd been reading, I even missed Janet's interrupting me.

Coming home on the boat took four days (I sailed because of that crazy feeling I've got about flying), but it wasn't so bad because every hour brought me closer. I spent the days in my cabin, taking my meals there, and at night I would go up on the bridge and chin with the watch officer. Janet couldn't meet me at the dock because she was working, and as soon as we got in I went straight to the studio. Just seeing her, in that brief first instant, took all the misery away.

In no time at all we were back to normal. She finished her picture in time to go to Detroit with me when I began work in Johnny Dark, and before the trip started I got my fill of caviar and root beer, and Janet's cologne, and Ida May's cooking. Nothing had changed except me, and I knew by then that I could no longer exist in a bachelor's life.

Last night is a good example of what I mean. I was sprawled out on the couch and Janet came over and asked if I wanted anything. She always does that and I've learned she's unhappy if there isn't anything she can get for me. So I never have the heart to say no. Last night, though, I shook my head.

"You don't want a peach?" she said. "Or maybe a pear? I'll peel it for you."

"Uh-uh," I said.

Her eyes grew a little wider. "Would you like a glass of water?"

"Nope."

Then it dawned on her that this was a schticklok. She made a slight curtsey. "There must be something? Sire?"

So I waved my hand at the coffee table, ten inches away. "Give me a cigarette, woman," I said. And then we both broke up, laughing, the way we do so often. This is the life for me. END

Shrinks Hemorrhoids New Way Without Surgery

Science Finds Healing Substance That Relieves Pain—Shrinks Hemorrhoids

For the first time science has found a new healing substance with the astonishing ability to shrink hemorrhoids and to stop bleeding—without surgery.

In case after case, pain was relieved promptly. And, while gently relieving pain, actual reduction (shrinkage) took place.

Most amazing of all—results were so thorough that sufferers made astonishing statements like "Piles have ceased to be a problem!"

The secret is a new healing substance (Bio-Dyne®) — discovery of a world-famous research institute.

Now this new healing substance is offered in ointment form under the name of *Preparation H. Ask for it at all drug stores—money back guarantee. *Trade Mark

Marvel
WHIRLING SPRAY
Syringe FOR Women 350
AT DRUG COUNTERS EVERYWHERE
Free Booklet
MARVEL CO. 6012D EAST ST. NEW HAVEN, CONN

LIVING MINIATURES
WOMEN—2 to 4 hours daily at home. Offers exciting opportunity for steady income.
Write Premium Addressing Dept. LIVING MINIATURES, Anaheim 1, Cal.

DANCING SHOES—SUPPLIES
BATON—DRUM CORPS SUPPLIES
SKATING SKIRTS—Roller or Ice.
24 Page Catalog 15¢ (applied to purchase)
Quincon Dance Supplies, Box 422, Quincy 69, Mass.

MAKE MONEY
SEW AT HOME
Ready-cut, RAP-A-ROUND. Easy, Profitable.
Hollywood Mfg. Co., Dept. BE, Hollywood 46, Calif.

LOOKING FOR LOVE?
Success can be yours with the "know how." Cycle-Gram, the terrific new 64 page book, actually teaches you how to help yourself and loved ones. No other book so modern. Contents reveal the answers. Send $1.
Limited gift offer—three copies $2.
CYCLE-GRAM
4809 Hollywood Blvd., Dept. D., Hollywood 27, Calif.

BE A Nurse
MAKE $50-$60 A WEEK
Practical nurses are needed in every community .. doctors rely on them... patients appreciate their cheerful, expert care. You can learn practical nursing at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. 55th yr. Earn while learning. High School not required. Men, women, 18 to 60. Trial plan. Write now!
CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 2312, 25 East Jackson Blvd., Chicago 4, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.
Name
City State Age

out of the frying pan

(Continued from page 33) He was born in Buenos Aires, Argentina, in 1916. As a boy Dick was sent to school in Switzerland. He was admitted to the United States as a permanent resident in May, 1937, when he entered the country at New York City under his mother's passport. At that time he made application for his first citizenship papers.

In 1939, when he was twenty-one and was singing with an orchestra, he fell in love with a girl who was singing in a Chicago hotel. They were married, and a few weeks after the marriage, Haymes requested a divorce.

Strangely enough, Haymes never told his third wife, Nora Eddington Flynn, about this first marriage. A few months ago, a reporter commented to her, "If Dick marries Hayworth, it will be his fourth marriage. That's pretty good for a guy of thirty-seven."

Politely Nora turned and said, "Dick has only been married twice, once to Joanne Dru and once to me."

When the truth finally emerged at Haymes' immigration hearing, Nora was shocked. "He never told me!" she exclaimed. "He never told me. I get more surprises every day."

"Perhaps it slipped his mind."

"Slipped his mind, my foot," Nora said. "I'll tell you this. He is not going to get a divorce in Las Vegas before I file for a divorce in California. He's not going to do that to me. I've been pretty darn cooperative with him and Rita. If Dick tries to marry without my okay, he and Hayworth will be involved in bigamy."

Nora meant exactly what she said. She wanted $8,000 in a cash settlement and alimony of $100 a week until she remarries, or she'd never even file for divorce. Haymes gave her what she asked for, anything to be free to marry Rita.

After his first divorce, an event which he blocked out of his memory, Haymes fell in love with an attractive young actress named Lacock, who later changed her name to Joanne Dru. She is the mother of his three children, currently aged eleven, eight and a half, and five and a half. And it was while he was married to Joanne Dru that he hit his stride as an entertainer, earning more than a million dollars a year for at least three years. During his career as a singer, Dick has grossed about $6,000,000 and spent every cent of it in taxes, expenses, alimony, and living.

DURING World War II, Joanne Dru gave birth to a child. Haymes, who had been classified 1-A by his draft board, asked for a deferment. When it wasn't granted, he filed an application on January 25, 1944, for relief from military service as an alien.

The following sentence is on that application: "I understand that in making this application for relief from military service as an alien that I will be barred from ever becoming a citizen of the United States."

Haymes' attorneys claim that the application which Dick signed was an incomplete document and was never acted upon by Dick's draft board in New York.

The irony of it all is that after Haymes applied for exemption from military service he was notified to report for a physical examination by Draft Board 251 in Los Angeles. He was given a thorough going over and classified as 4-F, physically unfit. High blood pressure.

When that news was sent back to Dick's original Draft Board 31 in New York City, the members couldn't believe it. So Haymes was ordered to appear for another physical, this time in New York. He was shipped to Governor's Island and held there for three days from August 13 to August 16, 1945 (the war was pretty nearly over by then) and again he was rejected for military service.

If Dick had never applied for a service exemption on the grounds that he was a citizen of a neutral nation, Argentina, or if he had waited until he had taken his physical, he would have been classified 4-F and exempted, anyway.

He doesn't think matters through. Take this deportation mess. He didn't even bother to tell his own lawyer about it until he was arrested. Then he called Bob Eaton one morning, and said, "Bob, they've got me here in the pokey. Come on down and get me out."

The lawyer signed a bailbond for $500 and Haymes was released.

DICK Haymes first met Rita Hayworth in an Italian restaurant called The Naples. It is located a few doors up the street from Columbia Studios. Dick was working on Cruising Down The River. One noon he went to lunch at The Naples. So did Rita, who was also working at Columbia. When Rita's companions saw Haymes lunching alone, they asked him to join their table. The crooner took one look at Rita, and wham!

From that minute on he began an ardent, tempestuous courtship. This was permissible since he was separated from his wife who was dating other gentlemen.

All of Haymes' former wives agree on one thing, that Haymes is a good and golden and honorable lover. He is a man of loyalty and fidelity.

Rita liked that. Lonely, unhappy, depressed, suspicious, and doubtful, she suddenly found herself pursued by a tall, young, handsome crooner who wanted only to be with her, to love her, to marry her to make her his own.

Even more than most women, Rita needs love. She appeared to receive little from husband number one, Ed Judson, who was twenty-five years older than she. From husband number two, Orson Welles, she got a daughter, Rebecca, whom she now supports, and a liberal education in fine arts, but again, little or no love. From husband number three, Aly Khan, she got a title, a daughter, Yasmin, whom she also supports, and here again, little or no love

All three of these husbands attempted to improve Rita, to make her over, to play Pygmalion to her Liza. They thought she had potential but no polish. Haymes is the first of her four husbands to love her just as she is.

This unasking devotion is what won him Rita's heart. It is also what lies behind his deportation trouble.

Earlier this year, when Rita flew to Hawaii for location work on Miss Sadie Thompson, Dick simply could not stand being away from his love. He had his agent arrange a concert for him on Oahu.

In fairness to Dick, this must be said: Before he left for Hawaii, he went to the office of the Immigration Department in Los Angeles. He said that he was an alien resident, that he had been born in Argentina, that he was not a United States citizen, and he asked if it was all right for him to make the trip.

He was given permission.

When he returned to Los Angeles, he told one of the Immigration men that he had lost his alien registration card.

The Immigration man was amazed. "How did you get out of the country in the first place?" he asked. He told Dick that under the terms of the McCarran Act, no man avoiding military service by claiming alien citizenship, could legally re-enter the United States once he had left the continental limits of the country. Hawaii was outside the continental limits, and Haymes was liable to deportation. Haymes had sixty days to prepare his defense.

INSTEAD of taking up this matter at once with his attorney in Los Angeles Haymes secretly took off for New York with Rita. There he went to a legal firm which specializes in matters of immigration. These lawyers are said to have made an attempt to have Congress pass a private bill, granting him United States citizenship

The Immigration Department in Washington keeps abreast of all private bills of this nature. When they learned of this there was more trouble. By then, Dick and Rita were back in Hollywood.

One morning, early in August, Haymes was driving along Sunset Boulevard when the Federal boys pulled up alongside his Ford. "Pull over," they said. Haymes was taken downtown and arrested.

Through all this, Rita Hayworth said absolutely nothing, but she went to work behind the scenes. She had her lawyer Bartley Crum, fly out from New York Ostensibly, Crum's trip was in connection with the financial settlement Aly Khan was offering to make on his daughter.

Crum had a conference with Haymes attorney, Bob Eaton, and later told Rita that Dick was in good legal hands. Eaton moved to have the deportation proceedings dismissed on the grounds of an old reciprocal treaty between Argentina and the United States. The judge said the matter merited further study.

ONCE Dick began to make the headlines he suddenly became a valuable box office attraction. For years he had been sliding steadily. Overnight he became, a the agents say, "red hot—a curiosity attraction."

STATEMENT REQUIRED BY THE ACT OF AUGUST 24, 1912, AS AMENDED BY THE ACTS OF MARCH 3, 1933, AND JULY 2, 1946 (Title 39, United States Code, Section 233) SHOWING THE OWNERSHIP MANAGEMENT, AND CIRCULATION OF

MODERN SCREEN, published monthly at Dunellen, New Jersey, for October 1, 1953

1. The names and addresses of the publisher, editor, managing editor, and business managers are: Publisher, George T. Delacorte, Jr., 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.; Editor, Charles D. Saxon, 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.; Managing editor, None; Business manager, Helen Meyer, 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

2. The owner is: (If owned by a corporation, its name and address must be stated and also immediately thereunder the names and addresses of stockholders owning or holding 1 percent or more of total amount of stock. If not owned by a corporation, the names and addresses of the individual owners must be given. If owned by a partnership or other unincorporated firm, its name and address, as well as that of each individual member, must be given.) Dell Publishing Co., Inc., 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.; George T. Delacorte, Jr., 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.; Margarita Delacorte, 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

3. The known bondholders, mortgagees, and other security holders owning or holding 1 percent or more of total amount of bonds, mortgages, or other securities are: (If there are none, so state.) None.

4. Paragraphs 2 and 3 include, in cases where the stockholder or security holder appears upon the books of the company as trustee or in any other fiduciary relation, the name of the person or corporation for whom such trustee is acting; also the statements in the two paragraphs show the affiant's full knowledge and belief as to the circumstances and conditions under which stockholders and security holders who do not appear upon the books of the company as trustees, hold stock and securities in a capacity other than that of a bona fide owner.

5. The average number of copies of each issue of this publication sold or distributed, through the mails or otherwise, to paid subscribers during the 12 months preceding the date shown above was: (This information is required from daily, weekly, semiweekly, and triweekly newspapers only.)

(Signed) HELEN MEYER, Business Manager

Sworn to and subscribed before me this 17th day of September, 1953.

(SEAL)

JOHN C. WEBER
Notary Public, State of New York
No. 03-9560350. Qualified in Bronx County. Certificates filed in the following offices: County Clerk: New York. Register: New York.
Commission Expires March 30, 1954

He was booked by the Sands Hotel in Las Vegas for $7,500 a week. His lawyer began to receive offers from London, Paris, New York, Philadelphia, and they went as high as $15,000 per week.

Things were picking up for Dick who currently is reported to be in debt to the extent of some $200,000.

Simultaneously, Rita Hayworth decided to bare her feelings. "I love Dick Haymes," she announced. "I'm leaving for Las Vegas to marry him. I am behind him 100%."

At the time, Dick still had plenty of problems. His second wife was suing him for back support, an agent was suing him, the Bureau of Internal Revenue was prepared to attach his salary, and his wife, Nora, wanted cash on the line before she would consent to a divorce.

After she filed for divorce, Nora suddenly decided not to sign the waiver granting Haymes permission to marry Rita Hayworth in Nevada.

The next day, she changed her mind. "I just wanted time to read the paper. I wish Rita and Dick every happiness."

Two days later, Haymes, in Las Vegas with his bride-to-be, filed for divorce. The trial took about seven minutes.

"It was just general incompatability," Dick told the judge. "My work takes me out of town a lot, and she didn't want to come with me. We grew further and further apart."

"You mean," interjected Dick's lawyer, "that she actually refused to make a home for you on the road and live with you as your wife?"

"That's right," Dick said.

"And what effect did that have on your health?"

Haymes mopped his brow. "I couldn't tackle my work with a clear head. I lost weight."

The judge nodded. "Judgment granted the plaintiff." And that was that.

An hour later, Dick returned to the courthouse with Rita. Two dozen photographers and reporters followed them into the marriage license bureau. Rita was exceedingly nervous and unusually cooperative with the press. Beads of perspiration broke out on Haymes' face, but he remained calm.

Half an hour later, the couple sat for an interview. "Do you plan a honeymoon?" they were asked.

"No," Haymes said. "I've got to go out and earn some money."

"If you're deported, will Rita go with you?"

"I'm not going to be deported," Dick said flatly. "I'm going to beat this case."

At eleven-fifty A.M. on Thursday, September 24, they were married. After Dick kissed his bride, someone whispered, "He's too nice to be deported."

So far, no disposition has been made of the deportation case against Haymes. Some lawyers say that eventually he will be deported, that it may take years, but in the end, Dick will have no official residence in the United States. Others point out that even if Haymes should be deported, he could enter the country on a visitor's visa and as the husband of Rita Hayworth, who was born in New York.

Dick, before his marriage to Rita, signed an agreement which prohibits his possible inheritance of her money, property, or worldly belongings. He also stipulated that she is in no way to be held liable for any debts previously incurred by him.

The future looks good to Dick and in a short time, he hopes to be free of his debts. All Rita Hayworth wants from him is his undying love.

Right now, that's all Dick Haymes has to offer. Tomorrow, however—well, in Rita and Dick's philosophy, tomorrow never comes. It is always today. They live each day as if it were their last. END my side of the story

by Dick Haymes

Editor's Note: MODERN SCREEN presents Dick Haymes' side of the controversy. Here is his comment on the reputed attempt by the Immigration Department to deport him from the United States.

August 25, 1953

I was arrested three weeks ago for deportation, and since then I have been torn apart by headlines and political statements about my case that have all but prejudiced me as guilty as a murderer.

Since then, I have been pounded by legal and political angles that make me look like a traitor to America on one hand, and like a football being kicked around to prove or disprove political points, on the other.

In a time like this, when a man feels distrustful of factions and legal technicalities, I feel I must make certain facts known to the American public—not as a defense, for I feel no guilt—but rather to get certain things off my chest; to get the strength to fight for the right to remain in America, and to fight for the chance to become an American citizen.

I am not guilty of trying to evade military service for the United States. I was actually notified to report for my draft physical on June 20, 1945, by order number 2136 issued by draft board 251 in Los Angeles.

I reported, the same as many millions of other men, and I was examined at the Armed Forces Induction Station in the Pacific Electric Building, Sixth and Main Streets in Los Angeles.

Shortly afterwards, I received a notice from Induction Station Commander 1st Lt. J. M. Connors, stating that I was "rejected physically unfit."

The reason was high blood pressure or hypertension, the same disqualification which marked several million other men as 4-F.

I was called again in New York and examined at Governor's Island on August 13, 1945, and again rejected for high blood pressure. I still have the original notice of my rejection by Captain Edgar Montville, the induction station commander of New York.

So you see I did not try to evade military service. I wanted to pass my physical because I knew it automatically meant citizenship in ninety days. But I was rejected—just like several million other men.

The fact that I did sign a paper stating I was an Argentina national, previous to that, did not stop me from reporting for my draft notice. I was not rejected for military service and a chance for American citizenship because I was an Argentina national, but because the American Government didn't think I was physically fit for service.

I trust that the public will understand that better than all the legal arguments I can muster to explain my case. I trust the public will also understand that I was given permission to leave the country for Hawaii by the same Immigration Department which today claims I violated the laws by doing that.

The same Immigration Department knew my file, knew my case, and gave me a temporary alien registration card to go to Hawaii, because I had lost my original.

If perhaps I don't make it clear in any future defense in the confusion of a hearing room when the shadow of strict law hangs over the individual, I want to make it clear now to the press and to the public. I was given permission to go to Hawaii by Richard Cody of the Immigration Department and when I got back I was told I had violated the McCarran Act by leaving the country.

I was called an "excludable" although the department knew of my draft rejection. I was called an "excludable" after having been given permission to leave the country, and when I asked why I was given permission in the first place I was told, "Well, the officials can't know everything."

I was then told to prepare my defense or "get the Congress to pass a law that would give me citizenship within sixty days." I was given that word by the Immigration Department.

On the twenty-ninth day, I was called and told to call the Department the next day.

The very next day I was on my way to see a lawyer—a sacred privilege in America—when I was arrested. I did not get the sixty days I was promised by the Department to make legal arrangements. I got no explanation for their actions since then—only tight-lipped silence that keeps burrowing into my peace of mind with suspense and anxiety.

In a short time, I am to appear for a hearing on my case. But politicians' statements have deluded the public into pre-judging me as a criminal, a deliberate betrayer of the wonderful privilege of living in the U. S.

If, in the confusion of official hearings and through the screen of authority, these facts are not properly presented to the press and public or are distorted by the shadows of inference of deliberate violation of the laws of this great country, I will at least rest in the peace of having given my side of the story.

I think the American public, judging from the few letters and handclasps given me so far, will believe that I am right in the conviction to fight this case and that I have not done wrong nor have I betrayed the right to live in America. END anybody here seen mrs. kelly?

(Continued from page 45) lies!"

In the midst of all this hullabaloo, Eugene Curran Kelly was his usual, calm, assured, astute self.

Sitting in the living room of Gene Tierney's home—he had rented it until the lessees who had sublet his own were ready to go—he grinned his broad Irish grin.

"I don't know what the fuss is all about," he said. "Honestly! I took a plane from England and landed at Idlewild in New York. I traveled under my own name. I went through Customs and Immigration just like everyone else. It was a Sunday. Maybe that's why the reporters missed me.

"Then I caught a plane to Pittsburgh. After all, I hadn't seen my folks in over a year. I spent a couple of days with them and, incidentally, had a lot of fun with reporters from the Pittsburgh papers.

"After that, I came out here. Suddenly, there's a lot of fuss. I'm not hiding from anyone. What have I got to hide? It's no crime to take advantage of a favorable tax law. Besides, who cares? I've always paid my taxes. If the Government says I owe them money, I'll pay. If they say I don't, then I won't.

"It's as simple as that. Right now, I'm working hard on Invitation (Invitation To The Dance is one of the three films Kelly made while abroad) and we're trying to work in some cartoon transitions. Betsy and Kerry will be home in a couple of weeks and they can tell you anything you want to know about Europe."

That conversation should give you some small clue to the Gene Kelly personality. Here is a man who has no time for gossip, trivia, or inconsequential small talk. Let others rage at slandering columnists. Let others threaten to file their lawsuits. Gene has no time for legal battles, rumor denials, studio politics, feuds of any sort, or any such manifestations of the Hollywood social game. He and his wife, Betsy, stay out of night clubs, and he is probably the only Hollywood star earning $5,000 a week who doesn't drive a Cadillac.

Most of Kelly's life revolves around his work. Ray Boulting, the talented Englishman who directed Gene in Crest Of The Wave, says, "Kelly is probably the most accomplished player I've worked with. He's absolutely sure of what he's doing. And it isn't just Hollywood slickness. He is a man of profound intelligence who is terribly well-grounded in all the fundamentals. Also, and this is very important, he loves to work."

Friends of the Kellys predict that Gene's obsession with work may yet lose him his domestic happiness, but his wife says, "That's just nonsense. Kerry and I—well, we're part of Gene's work. Gene isn't the kind of husband who divides his life into two segments: on the job at the studio and off the job at home. He spends many hours of the day and night working at home. Our house is filled with all sorts of studio workers. Dancing and directing and choreography aren't something apart from us that Gene reserves for himself. All of us in the family are an integral part of his work. And he wants us to be. Some men shut their families out from their profession. Gene always includes us."

DESPITE this, those who know the Kellys well are of the opinion that Gene should devote some of his time to his wife's career.

"Gene and Betsy have been married for twelve years," one friend explains, "and they've been very happy, but there is one obstacle which may throw them if it isn't overcome, and that's Betsy's frustration.

"This girl has great talent. There's no doubt about it. Ask anyone who has seen her perform. People still talk about her acting in The Snake Pit. When she and Kerry went over to Europe to join Gene, we hoped she might get a break overseas.

"She was offered a good role in England but she couldn't get a labor permit, so she went to work for Anatole Litvak in France and in Italy as a combination coach and script girl.

"Betsy is crazy to have a career. After all, what can she do with her time? Kerry is nine and goes off to school each day. Gene goes off to the studio. Lois is a marvelous secretary and takes care of the mail and the bills. Servants look after the house.

"Betsy Kelly wants an acting job, but it's the same old story. She is handicapped by being married to Gene. Why should any casting director hire her when there are hundreds of other young actresses who really need the money?

"This was the situation when Gene and Betsy left Hollywood almost two years ago. Gene has a great, constantly expanding career while Betsy, loaded with talent, drive, youth, and ambition, has none. We thought the situation would change in Europe, but no luck. Career-wise, Gene gets bigger, she gets smaller."

I SAW IT HAPPEN

I was at a wedding shower in the banquet room of Lucey's in Los Angeles. One girl came in and reported excitedly that Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis were having lunch in the main dining room. We all wanted to see them, but we didn't think it was right for thirty girls to gang up on them. Someone suggested that we ask them to come and see us, and we all agreed but none of us thought they would. To our surprise, they not only came in, but they gave us all autographs, told jokes, and to top it off, they both wished the bride-to-be luck and happiness with a great big hug and kiss!

Anita Bockman
Inglewood, California

Like her husband, Betsy Blair is frank, honest, down-to-earth, and unassuming. Ask her if she's frustrated, and she tells you the truth. "Of course I'm frustrated," she says, "but so are a lot of other actresses. I want to work but I can't find the jobs. Certainly, it isn't Gene's fault. Anything I want to do in the way of a career is all right with him. He never has objected to that."

Kelly knows that his young wife is a fine actress, but he dislikes nepotism, and he would never use his own power or prestige to advance his wife's career. He feels that if Betsy is going to make it to the top, she's going to make it through her own efforts. And he has a deep, abiding faith in her eventual success.

One of Betsy's friends says, "I can't figure Betsy, at all. Why doesn't she give up all this career pretension? Why doesn't she have four or five more kids and raise a big family? Now that Gene has a new contract and all that tax-free money, she isn't going to have any financial worries. Besides, the Kellys have always lived modestly. To my way of thinking, this girl has everything: a successful husband, a beautiful daughter, a nice home, money in the bank. Why does she want to knock herself out?"

The Kellys would like to enlarge their family, but even if they should, Betsy Blair would yearn for a career. She is one girl who has always wanted to entertain. She went to work as a dancer when she was only fourteen. Show business is in her blood, and she cannot drive it out.

She wasn't yet eighteen when she was married to Gene in 1941, and in the ensuing decade she succeeded in sublimating her ambition. As she approaches thirty, however, she feels that her acting career will have to start now or never.

Kelly who doesn't like to discuss his private life, says anything that will make Betsy happy is fine with him. He understands and appreciates her frustration, but he is sure it offers no threat to their marriage.

"Essentially," he says, "Betsy is a very sensible girl with very sound values. She knows that it is virtually impossible for two careers in one family to be equal."

AS FOR his concentration on his work, Gene says, "They'll have to carry me, feet-first, off the dance floor before I retire. Right now, I'm as strong as a horse. I want to act and dance and direct, and I don't ever want to stop.

"Invitation To The Dance was my first straight directing job, but we didn't shoot it for a wide screen, and if they show it on one, they'll ruin it. But I think that from the point of view of the dancer and the choreographer, these new dimensional techniques—3-D, CinemaScope, and the others—are great, because they give the screen what it's always lacked, depth and the illusion of dancing on the stage."

When Kelly started out to make Invitation To The Dance, a full-length feature told only in mime and ballet, several studio executives called him in and said, "Why do you want to make a dance film without words? You must be nuts."

Gene explained what he had in mind, and the studio had such great faith in him that he was given the go-ahead. Two Decembers ago, he flew overseas, made a quickie in Munich, and then began to hire ballet dancers for Invitation. Now finished, the film has several non-dialogue ballets strung together. Theoretically, this picture will raise the aesthetic level of the film musical to an all-time high.

Of all his musicals, Kelly claims, "On The Town is my favorite, although I've danced better in other films than I did in that. I think I did my best dancing in Anchors Aweigh but On The Town was important, a different kind of a musical."

OF THE three Kellys who went abroad, Gene was the first to return. He has been in Hollywood since August. Betsy, Kerry, and Lois McLelland, Gene's secretary, stayed behind in Paris, and a few weeks later, Lois and Kerry flew back to the States. Kerry spent some time with her grandma and grandpa Boger in New Jersey and arrived in Beverly Hills early in September, in time for school-opening. She was elected president of her class.

Betsy closed the picturesque apartment the Kellys had rented in Paris and was the last of the wandering tribe to pull into Hollywood. The family lived in Gene Tierney's home in September and finally got back into their own home in October.

Now that Gene is hard at work, Kerry is going to school, and Betsy is looking for an acting job, it seems to the Kelly trio that they've never left home.

They are still one of Hollywood's truly happy families, and should Betsy get one good break, they will be the happiest. Until then, and this is one of the French sayings the Kellys learned in France, "Plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose." The more things change, the more they are the same.

END

Only Dial Shampoo gives this complete cleanliness, because only Dial contains Hexachlorophene

Now you get a complete cleanliness with new Dial Shampoo that you've never been able to get with ordinary shampoos. Because Dial Shampoo contains a new freshening agent, Hexachlorophene, that gives your hair clean-smelling freshness.

And Dial Shampoo leaves your hair so clean it has a diamond sparkle!

Today, ask for Dial Shampoo in the unbreakable squeeze bottle—so easy to use!

Shampoo this diamond sparkle

into your hair with new

DIAL SHAMPOO

No other shampoo gives this glorious Dial beauty —yet leaves your hair so easy to manage

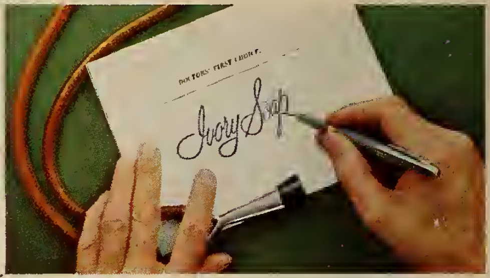
Pure, Mild IVORY SOAP
Doctors' First Choice
For Complexion Care



Every practicing doctor in America was recently mailed this question by a leading medical journal: "What soap is your first choice for skin care?" In the answers doctors, including skin doctors and baby doctors, voted: FIRST CHOICE . . . IVORY SOAP. Yes, Ivory first again! Why don't you try Ivory?

You can have That Ivory Look – a week from today!

Day by day, your mirror will show your skin looking prettier! All you do is change to regular care and pure, mild Ivory. And in 7 days, you'll have a complexion that is dramatically softer, smoother, younger-looking! You'll have That Ivory Look!

99$\frac{44}{100}$% pure...it floats

Mild enough for a baby's skin!

The milder the beauty soap, the better the condition of your skin—the prettier your complexion. And Ivory is mild enough for a baby's skin . . . doctors' first choice for her complexion and yours.

AMERICA'S GREATEST MOVIE MAGAZINE

modern screen

JAN.
20c

THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
SERIAL RECORD
DEC 10 1953
Copy 1

story of the year:

what really happened to DORIS DAY

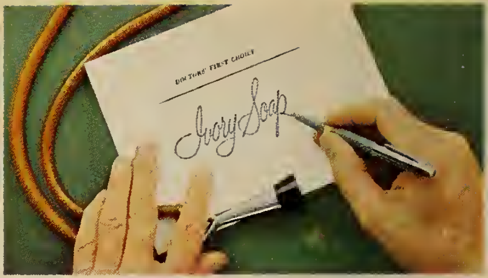
JUNE HAVER COMES HOME

COPYRIGHT DEPOSIT

Janet Leigh

DEC - 4 1953

Pure Mild IVORY SOAP Doctors' First Choice For Complexion Care



Every practicing doctor in America was recently mailed this question by a leading medical journal: "What soap is your first choice for skin care?" By an overwhelming majority the answers from doctors, including skin doctors and baby doctors, said: FIRST CHOICE—IVORY SOAP. Yes, it's Ivory first again!

You can have That Ivory Look – a week from today!

Day by day, your mirror will show your skin looking prettier! All you do is change to regular care and pure, mild Ivory. And in 7 days, your complexion will be dramatically softer, smoother, younger-looking! You'll have That Ivory Look!

Mild enough for a baby's skin!

The milder the beauty soap, the better the condition of your skin—the prettier your complexion. And Ivory is mild enough for a baby's skin . . . doctors' first choice for her complexion and yours.

$99\frac{44}{100}\%$ pure...it floats

First she was afraid he'd stay– then she was afraid
he wouldn't...

JOHN WAYNE

...They called him

"Hondo"

HOT BLOODED WITH THE HEAT OF THE PLAINS
THAT BRED HIM
-SILENT AS GUNSMOKE
-A STRANGER
TO ALL BUT THE SURLY DOG
AT HIS SIDE...

All the vast grandeur of the Southwest shown as never before possible
IN COLOR BY WARNERCOLOR

PRESENTED BY WARNER BROS. AND INTRODUCING
GERALDINE PAGE · WITH WARD BOND · MICHAEL PATE · JAMES ARNESS

SCREEN PLAY BY JAMES EDWARD GRANT · PRODUCED BY ROBERT FELLOWS · DIRECTED BY JOHN FARROW

A WAYNE-FELLOWS PRODUCTION DISTRIBUTED BY WARNER BROS.

Now TWO Great Radio Programs!

MODERN ROMANCES

Intimate, exciting dramas about the problems that people everywhere have to face—based on stories from the pages of Modern Romances magazine

HOLLYWOOD STARWAY

Exciting, revealing dramatizations about the lives of the most popular stars of Hollywood. All material for this exciting new show is selected by the editors of Modern Screen, America's greatest movie magazine.

Listen to these great new radio shows every MONDAY through FRIDAY on the ABC network!

Check your newspaper for local time and station.

JANUARY, 1954

AMERICA'S GREATEST MOVIE MAGAZINE

modern screen

stories

JUNE HAVER COMES HOME......by Jack Wade 19
NO TROUBLE AT ALL (Esther Williams)......by Jim Newton 20
PLEASE DON'T TALK ABOUT ME (Clark Gable)......by Imogene Collins 22
SOLID AS A ROCK (Rock Hudson)......by Susan Trent 24
RUNNING WILD (Debra Paget)......by Alice Hoffman 26
*JANET RULES THE ROOST (Janet Leigh)......by Kirtley Baskette 28
"CALL ME PINHEAD" (Gordon MacRae)......by William Barbour 30
WHAT REALLY HAPPENED TO DORIS DAY......by Jane S. Carleton 32
ANTIQUES ON A BUDGET (Keefe Brasselle)......by Marva Peterson 34
THE TURNING POINT......by Shelley Winters 37
THE MAN FOR MITZI (Mitzi Gaynor)......by Louis Pollock 38
THE WAY CHRISTMAS SHOULD BE (June Allyson-Dick Powell)....by Jane Wilkie 40
CRAZY LIKE A FOX (Victor Mature)......by John Maynard 42
HOLLYWOOD HOT RODS......by Tom Carlile 44
THE HAM GOT RESULTS (Byron Palmer)......by Steve Cronin 46

featurettes

LOVE STORY (Eve Arden)...... 48
THE POWER OF A WOMAN (Lori Nelson)...... 50
GET-RICH-QUICK ROBERTSON (Dale Robertson)...... 59
DISCOVERY CORNER (LANCE FULLER)...... 71
THEY THREW AWAY A MILLION FOR LOVE (Glenn Ford and Eleanor Powell) 72
STRANGE STORY (Keefe Brasselle)...... 74
WHY DO FRANK AND AVA FIGHT?...... 75
HOW DID HE PROPOSE? (Joan Caulfield)...... 76
SOMETHING TO GROAN ABOUT (Bing Crosby)...... 79
DOING A SPLIT (Leslie Caron)...... 81
STORK OVER LANZA-LAND...... 82

departments

THE INSIDE STORY...... 4
SWEET AND HOT......by Leonard Feather 4
LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS...... 6
MOVIE REVIEWS......by Florence Epstein 14
HOLLYWOOD ABROAD...... 61
MIKE CONNOLLY'S HOLLYWOOD REPORT...... 64
TV TALK...... 69

*On the Cover: John Engstead's Color Portrait of MGM's Janet Leigh, currently appearing in Prince Valiant. See page 54 for picture credits

---

CHARLES D. SAXON
editor

DURBIN HORNER
executive editor

CARL SCHROEDER
western manager

PAIGE LOHR, story editor
BARBARA J. MAYER, assistant editor
KATIE ROBINSON, western editor
FERNANDO TEXIDOR, art director
BILL WEINBERGER, art editor
BOB BEERMAN, staff photographer
BERT PARRY, staff photographer
MARCIA L. SILVER, research editor

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS

Changes of address should reach us five weeks in advance of the next issue date. Give both your old and new address, enclosing if possible your old address label.

POSTMASTER: Please send notice on Form 3578 and copies returned under Label Form 3579 to 263 Ninth Ave., New York 1, New York

MODERN SCREEN, Vol. 48, No. 2, January, 1954. Published monthly by Dell Publishing Company, Inc. Office of publication at Washington and South Aves, Dunellen, N. J. Executive and editorial offices, 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y. Dell Subscription Service: 10 West 33rd St., New York 1, N. Y. Chicago advertising office, 221 No. LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill., Los Angeles advertising and editorial offices, 8701 West 3rd Street, Los Angeles, California. George T. Delacorte, Jr., President; Helen Meyer, Vice-Pres.; Albert P. Delacorte, Vice-Pres. Published simultaneously in the Dominion of Canada. International copyright secured under the provisions of the Revised Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. All rights reserved under the Buenos Aires Convention. Single copy price 20c in U. S. A. and Possessions, and Canada. Subscriptions in U. S. A. and Canada $2.00 one year; $3.50 two years; $5.00 three years; Foreign, $3.00 a year. Entered as second class matter September 18, 1930, at the post office at Dunellen, N. J., under Act of March 3, 1879. Copyright 1953 by Dell Publishing Company, Inc. Printed in U. S. A. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Names of characters used in semi-fictional matter are fictitious—if the name of any living person is used it is purely a coincidence. Trademark No. 301778.

Eyes Have Never Beheld Such Wonders!

SPECTACULAR MUSICAL OF FLORIDA'S PLAYGROUNDS!

4 Lavish Water Spectacles!

Breath-taking beauty pageant in a tropical paradise!

100 top ski-jumpers towed by 8 speedboats!

Daredevil jumps over 12-foot ramps!

Esther's 75-foot dive from a helicopter!

IN COLOR BY

TECHNICOLOR

M-G-M presents

EASY TO LOVE

Lilting love ballads from Tony... romantic escapades with Van... a more glamorous Esther than ever!

FIVE HIT SONGS!

"Easy To Love"
"Did'ja Ever"
"Look Out! I'm Romantic"
"That's What A Rainy Day Is For"
"Louisiana"
Available on M-G-M Records!

STARRING

ESTHER WILLIAMS · VAN JOHNSON · TONY MARTIN

Screen Play by LASLO VADNAY and WILLIAM ROBERTS

Story by Laslo Vadnay • Directed by CHARLES WALTERS • Produced by JOE PASTERNAK

AN M-G-M PICTURE

THE INSIDE STORY

Want the real truth? Write to INSIDE STORY, Modern Screen, 8701 W. Third St., Los Angeles 48, Cal. The most interesting letters will appear in this column. Sorry, no personal replies.

Q. What happened to the hot television show Ginger Rogers was supposed to have? —V.L., Dallas, Tex.

A. Miss Rogers does not want to play the same character on TV each week, so a new type of stock company program is being prepared for her.

Q. How come Bob Hope's wife never travels with him on any of his personal appearance tours? —R.U., Cleveland, Ohio

A. Dolores Hope has four children to look after.

Q. Wasn't there a bang-up fight between Dick Powell and Henry Fonda at The Caine Mutiny rehearsals? —T.O., Rochester, N.Y.

A. Powell was signed to direct the stage version. Fonda did not see eye to eye with Powell on his interpretation of the scene, whereupon Powell returned to RKO. There was no fight.

Q. I read in your magazine that Rita Hayworth does not let Orson Welles see their daughter, Rebecca. After the story was published, didn't Welles spend time with Rebecca in Connecticut? —L.T., Darien, Conn.

A. Yes.

Q. What is Bob Wagner's draft classification? —R.E., Tulsa, Okla.

A. 4-F.

Q. What connection does Boris Melonovitch have with Peggy Lee? —W.N., Macon, Ga.

A. He was her second husband under the name Brad Dexter.

Q. I heard over the radio that more motion pictures are currently being produced in Italy than in Hollywood. Is this true? —E.E., Hartford, Conn.

A. True for the month of October, 1953.

Q. Wasn't Van Johnson's marriage to Evie Wynn responsible for his loss of popularity with the fans? —V.E., Des Moines, Iowa.

A. It may have cost some popularity among his bobby-sox following.

Q. I've heard tell that Marilyn Monroe uses a special bust exerciser. Where can I buy such a machine? —T.R., Great Neck, N.Y.

A. Rumor is false.

Q. I've been told that Gene Kelly once got engaged to a Honduran girl in the Bradford Hotel in Boston. Is that story true? —E.R., Swampscott, Mass.

A. No.

Q. In Mogambo, there is a gorilla-killing sequence. Isn't there a law in Kenya and other African territory forbidding the killing of gorillas? —E.R., Darby, Pa.

A. There is such a law.

Q. What ever happened to Howard Duff? —V.L., Portland, Ore.

A. Happily reconciled with wife Ida Lupino, he has signed a new contract with Universal Studios.

Q. Does Jean Simmons really receive $10,000 a week from RKO for doing nothing? —W.G., London, Eng.

A. For paying her that sum, RKO has the use of Miss Simmons as an actress.

Q. Isn't it true that the Nevada State Gambling Commission has refused to okay Frank Sinatra as a 2% owner of the gambling casino at the Sands Hotel in Las Vegas? —G.Y., Reno Nev.

A. Sinatra's application is being studied. No decision has been made at this writing.

Q. I've read that Dick Haymes owes the Government anywhere from $100,000 to $250,000 in back taxes. Exactly how much does he owe? —H.T., New York, N.Y.

A. Haymes owes $49,600 in back taxes for the years 1951 and 1952.

Q. Under what name does Terry Moore attend classes at the University of California. Is she really a Mormon? —G.D., Richfield, Utah.

A. Mormon Terry Moore is registered at the university under her maiden name, Helen Koford.

sweet and hot

Highly Recommended
*Recommended
No Stars: Average

by leonard feather

RECORD OF THE MONTH

JO STAFFORD & FRANKIE LAINE—A Musical Portrait Of New Orleans (Columbia). Here's a recently-released LP that may have escaped your attention, although it contains some of the best work of two top singers. Jo does Jambalaya, Raminay and Shrimp Boats, Frankie handles that fine tune Do You Know What It Means To Miss New Orleans on his own, and they team up for Floating Down To Cotton Town, Way Down Yonder In New Orleans and a rousing Basin Street Blues. For a pair of outlanders, they do a heck of a job!

FROM THE MOVIES

CALAMITY JANE—The Deadwood Stage and Secret Love by Doris Day* (Columbia).

BAND WAGON—songs of Arthur Schwartz and Howard Dietz, by Leroy Holmes* (MGM). This LP contains four songs from The Band Wagon and four other hits from Broadway musicals by the famous team.

BLOWING WILD—title song by Frankie Laine* (Columbia). This minor-key moan, subtitled The Ballad Of Black Gold, was expected to make as big a hit for Frankie as that other Dimitri Tiomkin composition, High Noon, but it didn't turn out quite that great.

THE CADDY—You're The Right One by Bob Santa Maria (MGM); Dean Martin* (Capitol); Paul Weston (Columbia). That's Amore by Dean Martin* (Capitol); Blue Barron (MGM).

FROM HERE TO ETERNITY—Re-enlistment Blues by Merle Travis (Capitol).

GENTLEMEN PREFER BLONDES—When Love Goes Wrong by Hoagy Carmichael* (Capitol).

LITTLE FUGITIVE—Joey's Theme by Richard Hayman (Mercury).

MELBA—The Melba Waltz by Mantovani* (London).

THE ROBE—Love Theme by Les Baxter* (Capitol).

STORY OF THREE LOVES—Eighteenth Variation from Rhapsody (Rachmaninoff) by Jack Pleis* (Decca).

TAKE THE HIGH GROUND—Julie by Les Baxter (Capitol).

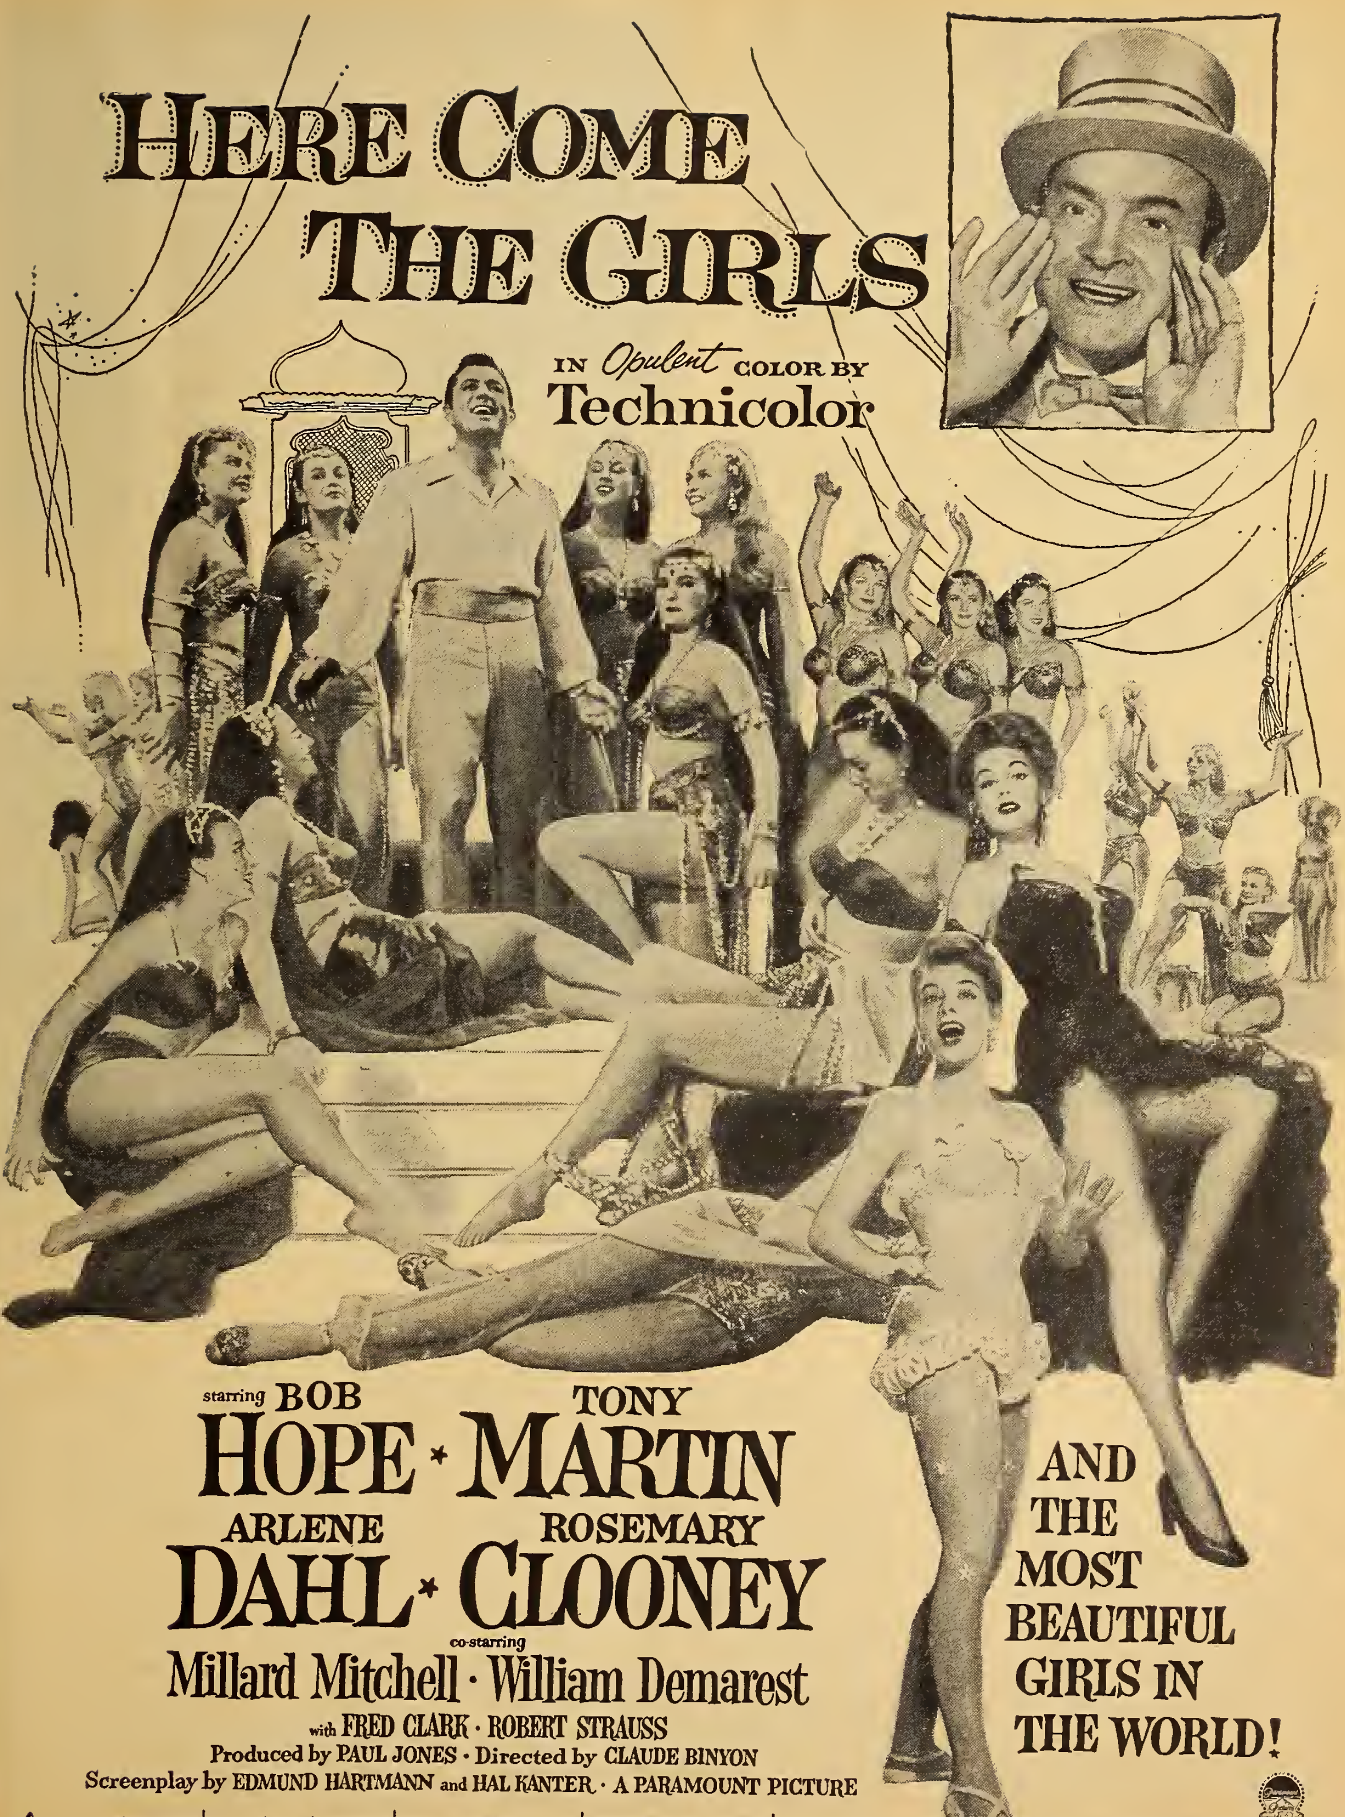
TORCH SONG—LP by Walter Gross* (MGM). This isn't a sound-track album, but it's an effective reconstruction of some musical high points from the film, featuring Walter Gross, who dubbed the piano passages for Michael Wilding. On Follow Me, When A Fool Falls In Love and You Won't Forget Me there are vocals by India Adams, who was Joan Crawford's singing voice in the picture. Also included is Gross' famous Tenderly.

UNDER PARIS SKIES—title theme by Mitch Miller* (Columbia).



HERE COME THE GIRLS

IN Opulent COLOR BY Technicolor

starring BOB HOPE ★ TONY MARTIN
ARLENE
DAHL ★ ROSEMARY CLOONEY

co-starring
Millard Mitchell · William Demarest with FRED CLARK · ROBERT STRAUSS
Produced by PAUL JONES · Directed by CLAUDE BINYON
Screenplay by EDMUND HARTMANN and HAL KANTER · A PARAMOUNT PICTURE

AND THE MOST BEAUTIFUL GIRLS IN THE WORLD!

Everybody will sing . . . "It's Torment" · "Girls" · "Ya Got Class" · "When You Love Someone" · "Ali Baba" · "Never So Beautiful" · "Heavenly Days" · "See The Circus"

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS

Ginger Rogers attended The Robe première with husband, Jacques Bergerac. Ginger's latest is a Paramount comedy, Forever Female, in which she co-stars with Paul Douglas, William Holden and new star Pat Crawley.

AVA COOLS OFF IN THE SUN . . . DADOLLE WANTS THE KING TO COME BACK . . . THE PARTING OF THE WAYNES . . . LARRY PARKS MAKES A COME-BACK BID . . .

Anne Francis, starring in A Lion Is In The Streets, came with husband Bam Price. This pair, who met at an incinerator and spent their first months of marriage in two apartments, are among Hollywood's happiest.

When I was in Las Vegas, Frank Sinatra called and asked, "Louella, may I have a moment of your time?"

I had a hunch he wanted to talk about his trouble with Ava—and that is exactly what he did.

Getting back to the start of this feud in New York, he said, "How could I meet her plane when she didn't tell me she was coming in? I didn't even know she was in New York until a friend told me.

"Our whole trouble started because I couldn't stay with her in Europe until she flew home. I had a show to do and I had to rehearse."

These are the first and only words Frankie has had to say since the start of the longest feud the Sinatras have ever had.

The beginning of the near end for the Sinatras came, not with one of the violent battles splashed all over the gossip columns; not with jealous recriminations; not with the typical shenanigans that usually mark their domestic explosions.

It came with deadly calm and coldness.

Ava and Frankie had driven in from Palm Springs where they had been in the process of making up their New York spat at the home of a friend.

They stopped by a cafe operated by Patsy, a very popular Italian restaurateur and a close friend of Frank's.

Right in the middle of a spaghetti dinner, Ava made an amusing, but derogatory remark about a friend of Frank's.

His face turned white. Pushing back the table, he put down the money to cover the bill, and said with deadly coldness, "That does it."

Ava's mouth flew open. Her jaw dropped. She couldn't have registered a greater expression of "surprise" to win an Academy Award.

From Patsy's, Frank went to a hotel. The next morning he left for Las Vegas for his nightclub opening at the Sands Hotel.

Ava wasn't there, although her own Mogambo première didn't take place until the following night.

The eyes of the gossip hounds watched avidly to see if Ava would fly to Las Vegas. She didn't.

"Why should I?" she shrugged to a friend, "I've heard nothing from him since he left."

With her sister Bea, Ava went back to Palm Springs to cool off in the sun. And yet, I hear the things she had to say about a certain "he" were clearly audible over the little stone wall surrounding her hideaway.

Ava's not a girl to suffer in silence.

Louella took time out from her chores as Hollywood's most famous reporter, confidante of stars and daily columnist for the Hearst papers, to say hello to old friends Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Bergen at The Robe.

Tab Hunter and Debbie Reynolds are seen around town together these days, but not to the exclusion of other dates. Among those in Tab's dating book are Lori Nelson and Pat Crowley—Debbie's is too long to list!

Cyd Charisse and Tony Martin discussed fashion with Olivia de Havilland. Cyd was impressed with the charcoal grey tuxedo Tony introduced to night life; may have a cocktail suit ordered to match it.

Audrey Hepburn, who spent evening with Phil Silvers, is becoming one of Hollywood's most popular young stars. Columnists who have referred to lovely Audrey as "no roving beauty" are now taking a second look.

What does all this add up to? My private opinion is that no matter if the Sinatras do stage a temporary kiss-and-make-up act, as they have many times in the past, this passionate romance is in the ice box.

And the lovers whose torrid highjinks before and after marriage made headlines—have had it.

THERE'S no more flattering background for lovely women in lovely gowns than Edie (Mrs. William) Goetz's confectioner's-blue-and-ivory drawing room in her Bel Air home.

Of course, the fortune in magnificent oil paintings owned by the Goetzes and adorning the walls doesn't hurt anything, either.

The party they gave welcoming Claudette Colbert back to Hollywood after twenty months in Europe was itself a picture of beautiful women in gorgeous gowns.

Imagine this for "entertainment" following the cocktail and dinner hours: Judy Garland and Bing Crosby singing duet after duet!

Bing (this was before the accident in the wee small hours of the morning which wrecked his $12,000 Mercedes-Benz) brought—surprise, surprise—Mona Freeman. As far as I know, this was the first time they had seen each other since Bing's return from Europe.

I'd like to go on record right here as saying that Bing drank little, or nothing, during the evening. He never does when he is working—and he was in the middle of White Christmas. I am sure his subsequent accident after taking Mona home had nothing to do with drinking.

To get back to the party—Danny Kaye was very proud of Sylvia who was wearing a gown many people voted the loveliest in the room, white with the bouffant skirt of many tiers piped in vivid red.

It was a nostalgic moment when Jane Wyman and Freddie Karger and I stopped to remember another occasion when I had been a guest of the Goetzes. I was at the dinner table when Janie telephoned me the "scoop" that she and Freddie had eloped to Santa Barbara.

Everyone seemed especially glad to see Fred MacMurray at a party, his first since the death of his beloved Lily. Fred came with Rocky Cooper, so there's no romance angle here. Gary Cooper is an old friend of his.

Zsa Zsa Gabor, dancing cheek-to-cheek with George Sanders (whom she's constantly on the verge of divorcing) put on her usual act trying to attract attention—and she did!

June Allyson, who can't seem to tear herself away from Dick Powell's side, held his hand all evening, or sat on the arm of his chair. If there ever was a time when the

The Ice Follies brought out a huge crowd of celebrities, among them Donald O'Connor and Marilyn Erskine. Now that Donald is well again, he has resumed TV work and gone into rehearsal for a new movie to make up for losing the role in White Christmas.

June Allyson and Dick Powell took part in Charity Day celebration at Hollywood Park. June's flowers come from her own garden. (Read their Christmas story on page 40.)

Rock Hudson brought his favorite script girl, Betty Abbott, to the Ice Follies. There's no ring now on the hand Rock is holding, but friends predict thot there moy be one soon.

Ann Blyth and her husband Dr. James McNulty saw the Ice Follies with old friends Dinah Shore and George Montgomery. Photographers complied with Ann's request for a let-up on the publicity that ottended her marriage, but got this shot of the happy couple.

Powells were having problems, it is long since past. I don't believe they have ever been so close.

The two "refugees", Claudette Colbert and Gene Kelly (he was abroad even longer than she), had a lot to talk about regarding Paris, London, Rome—and picture making abroad vs. picture making in Hollywood.

Come to think of it, there's not a producer rich enough to hire all the talent under this roof this night—among others, Ricardo Montalbon, Mary and Jack Benny, Gracie Allen and George Burns, Frances and Edgar Bergen.

THE MOST "hated" (so they say) performer ever to play Las Vegas is our gal, Shelley Winters, who got off to a great start with her nightclub act—and then turned temperamental.

What goes with Shell? Is she doomed to be a girl who just can't take advantage of her good breaks—and will she always be her own worst enemy?

When Shelley said she was going to whip up a nightclub act a lot of people, including her friends, thought she was making a mistake.

But she has a lot of determination and when she tried out the act in San Diego the reviews were wonderful. The girl who almost won an Oscar for her dramatics in A Place In The Sun was hailed as a "sock" singer, clever comedienne, and a real star of the swank saloons.

When Shelley moved to the Flamingo Hotel in Las Vegas the critics were equally enthusiastic if not more so.

Then all brimstone broke loose! Whether the reviews went to her head or whether she was cross because Vittorio Gassman flew out for Italy right after her opening night, no one knows.

But Shelley really started exploding right and left. She demanded that a comedian on the same bill cut his time down to fifteen minutes. (The management said he'd play his full time.)

She started complaining about the lights and that customers talked and drank while she was on.

One of the executives of the hotel was quoted as saying: "We've had a lot of temperament thrown around here. We've put up with hot-headed and disagreeable stars. But the worst is Shelley Winters.

"She threatened to walk out. If she does—that's all right. It's for sure she'll never walk back in."

Darn it, I like Shelley. I wish she'd get hold of herself. She has as much talent as any young actress in Hollywood if she just won't insist on ruining her career with these senseless nipups.

FROM FAR OFF Paris comes the wail of Suzanne Dadolle, for many months Clark Gable's favorite doll, "I am heartbroken that Mr. Gable left Paris without calling me.

"I was dreaming of living on his ranch in California and being happily married and

FREE*

Jergens Lotion Dispenser

with purchase of $1.00 size bottle...both for 98¢ plus tax

4 reasons why every woman (who's human) will want it:

1. Because you'll love Jergens Lotion when harsh soaps, detergents, and nippy winds drain natural oils out of your hands. Jergens softening moisture makes hands smooth as silk, never sticky or greasy as some lotions and hand creams do.

2. Because you're an exacting woman, you'll love the way the dispenser taps out exactly the right amount of lotion. You'll be surprised how little Jergens Lotion it takes to make rough hands soft and pretty again.

3. Because you like little conveniences like not having to unscrew and replace a bottle cap every time you need some Jergens Lotion (and that's after every household chore). The dispenser fits right into the bottle and stays put.

4. Because you can't resist a bargain and this wonderful plastic dispenser comes as a free gift when you buy a $1.00 bottle of Jergens Lotion...both for only 98¢, plus tax, wherever drugs or toiletries are sold. Also 10¢, 25¢ and 49¢ without dispenser.

* Money-back guarantee! Buy this offer. Use Jergens Lotion for two weeks. If not delighted, mail lotion back to The Andrew Jergens Co., Cincinnati 14, Ohio. Your money will be refunded. Keep dispenser as your free gift.

Don't wait...get it today. This offer is limited.

LOUELLA PARSONS' good news

Continued

having children."

I'm afraid Suzanne is dreaming about the wrong ranch. My bet is you can't get Clark to another marriage license bureau as long as he lives.

It's been a rocky month for marriages with many of the most circumspect being highly suspect!

The break between the Ray Millands, twenty-two years wed, shocked even the Hollywood cynics and shocked their closest friends.

It seems hard to believe that Ray, who has tried for twelve years to make up to Mal the hurt of a former parting, could again stub his toe over the same problem. The problem? A blonde who need not be identified.

I have no sympathy for her, but I am hoping that before this is printed Ray will have come to his senses and returned to his beautiful, silver-haired Mal and their two children.

Apparently, "the dangerous age" for men applies to actors as well as to other males.

And, speaking of gossip about the married—Deborah Kerr has practically been drowned in rumors since her sexy success in From Here To Eternity and on Broadway in Tea And Sympathy.

Poor Deborah is touted as having had wild flings with a happily married actor, an unhappily married actor, a New York millionaire, a successful agent—and hold on—even Frank Sinatra!

This last is nothing short of ludicrous. But it all goes to show you what can happen to a thoroughly proper British lady when she reverses her field (as they say in football) and bursts forth on the screen as a siren.

Tony Bartley, the "legal" man in Deborah's life, is fit to blow his top. Deborah, on the other hand, dismisses it with a shrug of the shoulder.

Perhaps she realizes that spice mixes well with success.

The most violent marriage eruption, of course, was the mudslinging, front-paged divorce of the John Waynes.

I'm on the Duke's side and I don't care who knows it. I've known him for years, and I've never known him to be other than a gentleman and a kind man even under intolerable conditions.

Wayne offered his wife an enormous financial settlement hoping to save the whole industry from this mess. It's deplorable and shameful.

If there could possibly be any kind of amusing angle in the whole thing, it's this: the most unhappy girl in town when Gail Russell's name was dragged into the Waynes' slugfest was Jane Russell!

Because of the similarity of names (they sound a great deal alike over the radio) poor Jane was a nervous wreck, as was her ever-lovin' husband, Bob Waterfield.

In desperation, Jane's press agent finally called the news broadcasters and asked, in the name of innocence, if they would spell out which Miss Russell was involved!

My story that Larry Parks was coming back to work with the full approval of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, plus a commendation from them for his cooperation, had hardly hit the streets when Gale Storm attended The Robe première with her husband. Gale, whose TV show, My Little Margie, is a hit, looked happy, but not even the success of her film, Lili, New York's longest-running movie, could make Leslie Caron or husband Geordie Hormel smile, though they denied separation.

Jack Palance, who has slid easily from his roles as gangsters and villains into romantic leads, attended with his wife, actress Virginia Baker.

Shelley and her Vittorio are denying talk of a rift, say they want another baby. But friends say Shelley is only grinning on the outside.

Bob Mitchum, who claims to be a big bully around the house, brought Dorothy to the première; proceeded to bully an usher into tears.

Terry Moore and host Mike Romanoff exchanged quips. Terry's necklines may be low, but instructors predict her UCLA grades will be high.

See MAUREEN O'HARA
in "WAR ARROW" Universal-International's technicolor picture

PLAYTEX® White Magic Trade Mark

FABRIC LINED GIRDLE

works wonders in natural figure control

PLAYTEX . . . known everywhere as the girdle in the SLIM tube.

Playtex White Magic . . . Garter Girdle and Panty Girdle with garters, $5.95

PLAYTEX MAGIC-CONTROLLER from $6.95

FAMOUS PLAYTEX GIRDLES from $3.50

Extra-large sizes, slightly higher.

What a gift! Newly slendered . . . you never looked better! And it is a gift . . . a gift that only Playtex White Magic can give so graciously!

For White Magic firms and flattens you without a seam, stitch, stay or bone! It's completely invisible under the most figure-revealing clothes.

Lovely White Magic is a smooth latex sheath, with cloud-soft fabric lining. It washes in seconds and you can practically watch it dry!

Be sure to see it at department stores and better specialty shops everywhere.

©1953 International Latex Corp'n . . . PLAYTEX PARK . . . Dover Del. Playtex, Ltd., Arnprior, Ont., Canada

ontinued

nd Jack Warner chatted at Romanoff's. Despite trouble onges in the staff (even the new, happy Judy gets mad!)
's still underway and may be a great come-back for her.

Jerry Lewis flatly refused to comment on his much-publicized, much-criticized English tour, cheerfully agreed to kiss Patti for commentator George Fisher, covering Hollywood première of 20th Century-Fox' The Robe.

Susan Hayward was unusually gay at Romanoff's with agent Ned Marin, but seems to have accepted fellow-Brooklynite Jeff Chandler's long-standing offer of a convenient shoulder to cry on, should blues return.

my telephone rang.

A soft voice from the other end said, "This is Larry Parks, Miss Parsons. I want to say thank you. Thank you from the bottom of my heart."

Although it has been two years since Larry worked, and nearly three since his testimony that he had at one time been a Communist card holder "through a misdirected sense of pity for the underdog," many of you fans have continued to write letters about him.

For the most part, the writers have been willing to give Larry another chance. I would say the "friendly" letters outnumbered the others by about 70%.

Larry's comeback in a film for television is being sponsored by the Ford Theatre of Television.

It will be made at Columbia, the studio where he made his biggest hit in The Jolson Story and where he lost his last contract.

These two highly reputable companies are willing to gamble on Parks.

What is your verdict?

IF I DID Joan Crawford wrong when I printed in this column that she and Michael Wilding feuded throughout Torch Song, the only right thing to do is to let you look over my shoulder and read excerpts from Joan's letter:

Dear Louella:

I have never had any trouble with Michael Wilding and I think if you'd question him, you'd find he didn't have any trouble with me. I never mumbled anything under my breath during Torch Song—or any other picture—unless I was chiding myself for one of my own mistakes.

Joan Crawford is the only one I'm concerned about when I do a picture.

Now, as far as Mrs. Michael Wilding goes, she was on the set time and time again—we took many pictures—I had her in for tea and cocktails and she was charming and delightful and of course, as you know, beautiful beyond belief.

I don't know who gave you this story, but it is as inaccurate as snow in June in California.

I just thought I'd bring you up to date, Louella. God bless you, and, incidentally, it was good to talk to you the other day. I do hope you are happy.

'Bye now,
Joan

THE FIRST person I ran into entering the Coconut Grove for Tony Martin's opening was Jerry Lewis.

"Now don't bother asking me anything about England," chirped irrepressible Jerry. "Not a word. Not a word!" I didn't.

Tony's first night at the Grove was more than just another popular singing star playing for the homefolks and fellow stars gathered ringside.

It was a big charity night with the Denver Hospital and Sanitarium the beneficiary and Tony was delighted that over $30,000 was raised.

LOUELLA PARSONS' good news

Continued

They say women never notice what a man wears but, believe me, all the girls were taking note of Tony's tuxedo, something new for men—a charcoal grey nylon silk with satin lapels.

"I think I should copy it for a cocktail suit," said lovely Cyd Charisse as I passed her table. As usual, Cyd was beaming with pride over the large turnout for Tony and because of the beautiful way he sang—mostly just to her.

I can't for the life of me imagine why Robert Taylor and Ursula Thiess don't get married. They sat shoulder to shoulder all during dinner. Yet, Bob plans to return to Europe soon and Ursula remains in Hollywood.

Redheaded Greer Garson wore a bright red dress! There's an unusual fashion tip for redheads.

Donna Reed, basking in the glory of From Here To Eternity, looked very happy with hubby Tony Owen—which should stop those rumors.

THE LETTER BOX: Francesca Franklyn, San Francisco, asks: "Did Jeff Chandler break up the marriage of Susan Hayward and Jess Barker? If not, how come she started dating him so soon after her marriage broke up?"

I can assure you, Francesca, that Jeff had nothing to do with Susan's break with Jess. They have known one another since they were struggling young actors in Brooklyn.

They started dating after Jeff broke with his wife and Susan divorced Jess.

At first, they both said there was nothing to it—that they were both lonely and were just "friends."

But, do you know something, Francesca, from where I sit, these two begin to look very romantic.

What may have started out as mere "consolation" dates may very well develop into something exciting between Susan and Jeff.

We shall see what we shall see.

That's all for now. See you next month.

Jane Powell attended the Charity Day festivities at Harness Racing Park with Gene Nelson.

HE'S THE KIND OF MAN WHO'S OUT OF BOUNDS FOR ANY KIND OF WOMAN!
The story of Eddie Darrow, the forbidden woman he wanted and the dangerous bargain he dared to make!
Forbidden
Starring
TONY CURTIS
JOANNE DRU
LYLE BETTGER with MARVIN MILLER
DIRECTED BY RUDOLPH MATÉ · SCREENPLAY BY WILLIAM SACKHEIM AND GIL DOUD PRODUCED BY TED RICHMOND · A UNIVERSAL-INTERNATIONAL PICTURE U-I

PICTURE OF THE MONTH

movie reviews

by florence epstein

KISS ME KATE Here is a real movie jackpot—a musical based on a hit Broadway show that actually follows the original plot and score! It's understandable, considering that Cole Porter is responsible for the music and Sam and Bella Spewack for the book. Kathryn Grayson, who always looks good in Technicolor, is a Broadway star who can't decide whether to play Kate in a musical version of Shakespeare's The Taming Of The Shrew. Trouble is, she'd have to co-star with her ex-husband, Howard Keel, whose new girl friend Ann Miller, is playing Bianca. Kathryn doesn't know whether it will aggravate Ann more if she plays the part or leaves the show flat—but she wants to make sure she gets her, but good. Underneath all that sarcasm, you see, Kathryn is still in love with Howard. Furthermore, under all that muscle, Howard doesn't really care if Ann is playing around with a dancing gambler, Tommy Rall, 'cause he really wants Kathryn back. In the middle of all this intrigue, a couple of talented gunmen, Keenan Wynn and James Whitmore, show up backstage. It's opening night, and they're perfectly willing to open up on Howard unless he pays a gambling debt. So anyhow, everyone, including the gunmen, winds up onstage in a brawling, ad-libbed Shrew that would have Shakespeare rolling, not in his grave, but in the aisles. You, too. (MGM)

PARATROOPER Alan Ladd's training to be a paratrooper in England, but you half expect him to leap out of a plane with no chute on, the way he's acting. Tense, I mean. Sullen. He'd rather knock you silly than bother to say hello. What's eating him, you may well ask. Some old sickness from another country. America, to be exact. He was a pilot there and still feels responsible for a pal's death. Now they want to make Ladd an officer but the thought turns his stomach. He's a leader, sure enough. If you can't see it in his stiff upper lip you can tell halfway through every battle when he starts shouting orders. There's an exciting commando raid on German-occupied Algiers, and stirring scenes of chutes floating down a Technicolored sky. The lavish cast includes Leo Genn and Henry Andrews. Susan Stephen makes her debut as Ladd's patient sweetheart.—Columbia.

TORCH SONG This movie's too slick to believe, but Joan Crawford's too glamorous to deny, which about neutralizes the problem. She plays one of those gorgeous prima donnas dipped in acid and swathed in mink who can tolerate almost anything but people. During rehearsals for her new Broadway musical Crawford shrieks all day and sobs all night in her swank penthouse. The reason is: nobody loves her. Michael Wilding, her arranger, can see why, even though he's totally blind. His blindness may be an asset because Crawford's looks can't dazzle or intimidate him. He only knows what he hears and what he hears is a woman too frightened to set her feelings free. It will be a new experience for Crawford fans who've never seen that lady in black silk stockings. Others in the Technicolored cast are Gig Young, Marjorie Rambeau, Henry Morgan.—MGM.

THE JOE LOUIS STORY It started in Detroit where a big, taciturn teen-ager is on his way to a violin lesson. A friend laughs at him, tells him he ought to learn how to fight instead. Five years later, Joe Louis becomes heavyweight champion of the world. This movie carries Louis over twenty years, shows him on the glory road and on that last lonely walk out of Madison Square Garden after his defeat by Rocky Marciano. The people who were important to him—his mother, his wife, his trainer Chappie Blackburn, are sensitively played. And Coley Wallace, as Joe, bears a remarkable resemblance to the champ. More than a record of an incredible career, this movie reveals Louis as few could have known him. "Joe lost his wife, lost his title, lost his money, lost his beloved Chappie." Cast includes James Edwards, Hilda Simms, Mannie Seamon, Evelyn Ellis.—U.A.

ONLY NEW COLGATE DENTAL CREAM HAS THE CLINICAL PROOF

that brings new hope to millions for Lifetime Protection Against Tooth Decay!

Actual use by hundreds of people has proved the long-lasting protection of New Colgate Dental Cream with Gardol*! Tests supervised by leading dental authorities—for a full year—proved this protection won't rinse off, won't wear off! Proved just daily morning and night use guards against decay-causing enzymes every minute of the day and night!

Now you can get New Colgate Dental Cream—the only toothpaste with clinical proof of long-lasting protection against decay-causing enzymes! The only toothpaste in the world with amazing new miracle ingredient, Gardol!

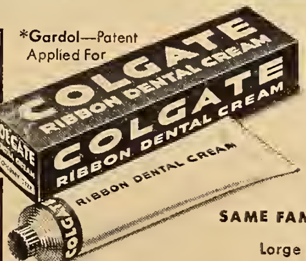
LABORATORY EXAMINATIONS of hundreds of people have proved that New Colgate Dental Cream with Gardol acts immediately to prevent the formation of tooth-decay enzymes—gives you the most complete long-lasting protection against tooth decay ever reported. Because Gardol's protection won't rinse off or wear off all day, just ordinary daily use—morning and night—guards against tooth decay every minute of the day and night!

CLINICAL TESTS on hundreds of people were conducted for a full year under the supervision of some of the country's leading dental authorities. Results showed the greatest reduction in tooth decay in toothpaste history—proved that most people should now have far fewer cavities than ever before! And similar clinical tests are continuing —to further verify these amazing results!

Yes, clinical and laboratory tests both prove it! Millions, who use New Colgate Dental Cream regularly and exclusively, can now look forward to a lifetime of freedom from tooth decay!

A JURY OF DISTINGUISHED DENTISTS HAS EXAMINED THE EVIDENCE! Documented facts, recently published in an authoritative dental journal, have convinced these dentists that Colgate Dental Cream with Gardol is far more effective against decay-causing enzymes than any other toothpaste. And because Gardol is the only long-lasting anti-enzyme ingredient with clinical proof, these dental authorities agree that New Colgate's with Gardol gives the surest protection against tooth decay ever offered by any toothpaste.

*Gardol—Patent Applied For



No Other Toothpaste Offers Proof of Such Results!

SAME FAMILIAR PACKAGE! SAME LOW PRICES!

Large Size 27¢ Giant Size 47¢
Economy Size 63¢

CLEANS YOUR BREATH WHILE IT CLEANS YOUR TEETH!

FOR LIFETIME PROTECTION AGAINST TOOTH DECAY

SO BIG—a sentimental journey into the recent past—is a moving film based on Edna Ferber's Pulitzer Prize-winning novel. It is a portrait of a woman, Selina DeJong, and a plea for true values. Selina (Jane Wyman) believes that only two kinds of people count—the creative ("emeralds") and the productive ("wheats"). She herself is orphaned in childhood and leaves an exclusive boarding school to teach in a rugged farm community and to marry Sterling Hayden who loses his fight with the land. Their son, So Big, and the barren fields are Selina's legacy. Both bloom despite tremendous odds, because Selina's faith in life and its essential beauty is unwavering. A neighbor's boy, Roelf Pool, is inspired by her to become a musician. So Big, however, grows to reject his mother's philosophy, preferring quick success, luxury, and so estranges the one girl he really loves, artist Nancy Olson. Old fashioned, perhaps extreme in its message, So Big is nevertheless an inspired production. Prominent in the cast are Steve Forrest, Martha Hyer, Walter Coy, Richard Beymer, Tommy Rettig.—Warners.

CRAZYLEGS, ALL-AMERICAN This is the true story of an American boy who was fired by a typically boyish dream—to become a great athlete. For Elroy (Crazylegs) Hirsch, the star of this movie, the dream came true. Elroy was a quiet, not very assertive kid whose parents worked hard to send him through school. Part of Elroy's plan was to fix it so his Mom and Dad (Louise Lorimer, Norman Field) could have an easier time. But the big plan was football. It filled his life from high school where his coach (Lloyd Nolan) was, in a way, his sponsor till the afternoon he helped the Los Angeles Rams become world champions. Between times there were major crises in his life. Once, doctors told him he'd never play football again. Crazylegs came back to set new records. On several occasions his wife (Joan Vohs) wanted to give him up completely to the sport. She didn't, though. Probably the qualities that come so strikingly across the screen were the ones that held her, too. For football lovers there are authentic scenes from major games, thrilling as the day they happened.—Hall Bartlett.

CALAMITY JANE Here's Doris Day looking like last week's laundry, riding, shooting and talking like a tomboy. And here's Howard Keel, the legendary Wild Bill Hickok, quick on the trigger but awful slow on romance. Together they make this musical a joy to see. Calamity (that's Doris) is teller of the tallest tales in Deadwood, South Dakota. One day she outdoes herself, promises to bring Chicago's famous star, Adelaide Adams, to Deadwood. Through a small error she returns with the star's maid (Allyn McLerie). The Deadwoodians threaten to shoot her off the stage but Doris browbeats them into listening and Allyn becomes the local siren. Too bad she falls for Lieutenant Gilmartin (Philip Carey). Calamity had him staked out for herself. That's the triangle, but there's more. There's a lot of singing, a kind of happy glow, and Calam turns out to be the prettiest girl in all the Black Hills. The entire film shows the fine hand of director Jack Donahue, veteran director of such New York stage hits as Top Banana, A Night In Venice, and the revival of Of Thee I Sing. Technicolor.—Warners.

BACK TO GOD'S COUNTRY Rock Hudson and his wife, Marcia Henderson, have a schooner full of fur they'd like to sail back to God's country (that's Seattle). But the devil (that's Steve Cochran) won't let them leave Canada. He gets lonely in the winter. Has nothing to do but bully the hapless Eskimos, beat Great Danes into submission and covet other men's brides. The trouble he goes to coveting Miss Henderson is ridiculous, considering how she loathes him. Anyway, he kidnaps Hudson's crew, has them dumped in the great wastes. While Hudson is mushing to the rescue, Cochran is marching on Marcia. Hudson returns to have his leg broken by Cochran's buddy (Hugh O'Brian) and winds up in a dogsled behind which stands Marcia, prepared to push 150 miles to a doctor. This is where Wapi, a Great Dane on whom Cochran has laid an iron hand, and Marcia hit the trail together and when Cochran catches up Wapi strikes—not with snowballs, either. Technicolor.—U.I.

THE STEEL LADY You'll think there's sand in your eyes when you see The Steel Lady. It's photographed in tan, presumably the answer to every other process. The color is appropriate, however. Rod Cameron and his three wild-catters (Tab Hunter, Richard Erdman and John Dehner, acting alcoholic of the group) make a forced landing in the Sahara. They've been looking for oil; now they'll settle for an olive pit if only they survive. That looks doubtful, until Rod stumbles on an old German army tank. It won't work, but Ali Baba! it just has to! Old alcoholic there finds some jewels in a secret compartment. Keeps mum, though—his pals'd think he has D.T.'s. Boy, those jewels get 'em in trouble with John Abbott all wrapped up in a burnoose. Abbott wants those jewels, stolen gems, they are. The wildcatters, crippled, hungry and powerful tired, lock themselves in the tank and spray the area with machine gun fire. Help arrives, but I wouldn't want to hang that long.—U.A.

RECOMMENDED FILMS NOW PLAYING

MOGAMBO (MGM): Ava Gardner switches from chasing maharajahs to hunting hunters when she bumps into safari-leader Gable in Africa. Gorgeous scenery, wild animals, and Gable's love for Grace Kelly can't compete with Ava's Technicolored talents.

A LION IS IN THE STREETS (Warners): Technicolor film stars James Cagney as the lion with corrupt political ambitions plus a wife (Barbara Hale) and a blonde (Anne Francis) to help him attain them. By playing on the needs and emotions of the southern swampland voters, Cagney comes dangerously and excitingly close to the governorship.

TANGA TIKA: Another independently produced gem, this one is a warm and simple love story set in romantic Tahiti, where the island chief's son must earn enough money to wed his girl by capturing the prize in the South Pacific Olympics. Beautifully photographed and acted.

THOSE REDHEADS FROM SEATTLE (Para): 3-D, Technicolor and music! This one is just good fun, as could be expected when singing sister Teresa Brewer, writing sister Rhonda Fleming and loving sister Cynthia Bell arrive in a wild Alaska frontier town.

FROM HERE TO ETERNITY (Col): A brilliant portrait of Army lives and loves adapted from James Jones' best seller. Excellent performances by Montgomery Clift, Frank Sinatra, Burt Lancaster, Deborah Kerr and Donna Reed.

THE ROBE (20th-Fox): This widely-heralded epic of early Christian days tells in sensational new CinemaScope (realism without goggles) the story of Lloyd C. Douglas' best-selling novel. Heading the huge cast are Richard Burton, Jean Simmons, Victor Mature. Technicolor.

LITTLE FUGITIVE. Wonderful newcomer Richie Andrusco as a seven-year-old who thinks he has killed his brother and runs away to Coney Island for a mixed-up, riotous day. Independently produced, this picture took top honors at the Venice Festival.

THE ALL-AMERICAN (U.I.): Tony Curtis as an athlete who shows a snobbish Ivy League College what football and democracy are all about. Also attending: Richard Long, Lori Nelson.

BOB HOPE stars in Paramount Pictures' "HERE COME THE GIRLS"

BOB (Upside Down) HOPE presents the most adorable, practical holiday gift:—

A GAY NEW Playtex HAPPY Pants Wardrobe!

NEWS! Non-Allergenic!
New Texture! Charming Pattern!
5 Irresistible Colors!

From every angle, you see extraordinary Hope—for baby's most novel, beautiful, useful gift: A PLAYTEX HAPPY PANTS wardrobe*!*

For the first time since babies were invented—there's actual texture, color and dainty pattern right in the miracle s-t-r-e-t-c-h latex itself.

Five lollypop colors make a "fashion show" of baby's every outfit. From the bottom up*!*

Now you can keep your baby "Socially Acceptable"* ...and Socially Adorable, too*!*

PLAYTEX HAPPY PANTS stretch to over 4 times their size. That means they won't bind, chafe or irritate. They're so tissue-like, they're transparent. Yet they'll wear and wear and wear. And PLAYTEX HAPPY PANTS won't fade, flake, crack or peel. Best of all, Happy Pants are off, rinsed, patted dry with a towel and on again, in seconds!

For sheer beauty and durability... give the new PLAYTEX HAPPY PANTS wardrobe*!*

98¢ each. Save time, buy 3 for $2.94. At your favorite department store or wherever Baby Needs are sold.

"Prove to yourself," says Bob Hope, "that latex can't cut circulation. Just stretch Happy Pants with your hand, as I'm doing." (Top of picture)

Happy Holiday Package for your Young Hope-ful. 5 luscious lollypop colors mix and match with all baby's outfits—make a complete panty-wardrobe.

More mothers buy PLAYTEX® than any other make!

©1953 *TRADE MARK International Latex Corporation ... PLAYTEX PARK ... Dover Delaware. Playtex Ltd., Arnprior, Ont., Canada

ANNE BAXTER starring in
"CARNIVAL STORY" A KING BROTHERS' PRODUCTION
An RKO RADIO release

The most eye-catching complexions in Hollywood are cared for with Lux Toilet Soap

Isn't Anne Baxter's skin wonderful to look at? Anne takes care of her complexion with one soap and only one—Lux Toilet Soap. 9 out of 10 Hollywood screen stars believe in Lux like Anne does— and such popularity must be deserved.

If you don't agree with the screen stars about Lux, Lever Brothers will give you back the money you paid for it. But we think once you use Lux, you'll love it.

(Remember—you can see the Hollywood stars every Thursday evening on Lux Video Theatre.)

There are no tears today for June and her mother.
They have faith that she will find another way to do God's work.

BY JACK WADE

JUNE HAVER COMES HOME

■ "Hello," said the girl's voice. "Yes, this is June."

It was a friendly voice, warm, strong and confident—and I was glad to hear it. Frankly, I hadn't expected to, not for a while. Because, the word had been passed around Hollywood press circles: June Haver will neither see nor talk to anyone. Since her sudden, startling return to Hollywood from the convent where she had spent seven and a half months as a novitiate hoping to become a nun, and after her unpreventable greeting by reporters and photographers at the Los Angeles airport, June had vanished into seclusion almost as rigid as that which cloaked her at St. Mary's Academy in Xavier, Kansas. This was understandable. She was emotionally confused and physically tired. She was in an extremely delicate position concerning publicity, because of the holy life she had essayed and abandoned and the unpredictable public which faced her again.

She had no precedent. June Haver was the first Hollywood star ever to quit her career at its zenith and retire to a convent. And of course she is the first ever to return to the spotlight, a celebrity again.

This very fact made June news. I had called her mother, Mrs. Andrew Ottestad, to find out, if possible, when MODERN SCREEN readers (Continued on page 49)

BY JIM NEWTON

As families go, the Ben Gages are real gone! They consist of one movie star, one successful business man, two bright boys and a brand-new baby girl—all achieved with

NO TROUBLE AT ALL

■ This time there was no mad, frantic scrambling for the nightbag. No wild, harrowing race to the hospital. No nail-biting impatience for Dr. Bradbury's arrival.

This time, according to Esther Williams, "It was as easy as pie."

A little after ten A.M. on October 1, Esther waddled over to husband Big Ben and said matter-of-factly, "I think I'd better go on in."

Ben nodded, took the little suitcase and dropped it into the car. Dr. Bradbury's office was called and the hospital was notified.

The doctor had predicted that the baby would arrive around October 1. Everything was on schedule.

Ben drove the four miles to Santa Monica Hospital with great care. Esther was admitted at ten-thirty that morning and taken to her room in the obstetrics section.

The nurse who prepared her asked her how she felt. Brown-eyed Esther was bubbling. "Just fine," she kept repeating. "Just fine."

In the afternoon the birth pains began, and they wheeled the long-legged swimming star into the delivery room. The anesthetist gave her an analgesic.

"I hope she gets what she wants," one of the nurses said.

"They want a girl," Dr. Bradbury said.

In the waiting room, Ben Gage, father-to-be for the third time, plopped his six-foot, four-inch frame into an easy chair. He began to perspire like a first-time father.

In the delivery room it was three-forty. Dr. Bradbury was working with his usual competence. At three-forty-three the baby arrived.

A girl! (Continued on page 62)

Gable's gone and Suzy's lost him.
The French say he done her dirt—but forty million Frenchmen could be wrong!

BY IMOGENE COLLINS

Please don't talk about

"I'm his life's companion!" Suzanne told reporters, but Gable says they're just good friends. Who's mis-translating what?

■ Authorities on the love-life of Clark Gable—and who in Hollywood is not?—insist that the tall, temple-greyed Casanova will return to the United States this month with his fifth bride.

Purportedly, she will be Suzanne Dadolle d'Abadie, the statuesque, green-eyed Schiaparelli model with whom he journeyed all over Europe last summer.

In Paris this has been a foregone conclusion for many weeks. French magazines have been running pictures of the couple with such captions as ILS VONT SE MARRIER (They're going to get married) and LES FUTURES MONSIEUR ET MADAME CLARK GABLE and C'EST UNE QUESTION DE TEMPS (It's a question of time.)

A month or so ago, when he was in London with Gary Cooper (their films, Mogambo and Return To Paradise were opening in England) Gable picked up the phone one afternoon and put in a transatlantic call to his private secretary, Jean Garceau, in Encino, California.

"Get the house ready," he said. "I'll be home for Christmas."

Gable has spent the last three Christmases abroad. But the last time he asked that his ranch house be gotten in shape, he brought home a bride—she was Lady Sylvia Ashley, the ex-chorus girl and former wife of Douglas Fairbanks—and everyone in Hollywood was wondering whether Clark would do the same thing this Christmas.

In Paris, on October 12, Suzanne, after returning to work at Schiaparelli's, announced that she and Gable had been engaged, "but informally," for several months, the implication being that never in a million years would she have traveled with him all over the Continent unless they'd had some understanding.

She was also quoted as saying that, "Even a year ago, he asked me to be his companion all over the world (Continued on page 81) me...

Posing for beefcake embarrasses Rock, but he takes his physique seriously, knowing it gave him his start in movies.

THAT HOLLYWOOD BUILDUP TURNED HUDSON INTO THE BEST-BUILT STAR AROUND!

SOLID AS A ROCK

by Susan Trent

With Jane Wyman in Magnificent Obsession he proves to be an actor as well as a muscle-man. Rock isn't quite ready for marriage.

■ Five years ago, when Universal-International studio put Rock Hudson under contract, they signed him with crossed fingers. The shaggy young man had little to recommend himself to the movie business besides basic good looks. His physique was good but he was a little clumsy in the manner of a man taller than other men. At twenty-three, he had shown little sign of becoming a world beater. Research into his background revealed that when in school he had had little affinity to books. In the Navy during the war he had attained the rank of laundryman, third class. Following that, he had spent two years earning his bread as a truck driver, hauling tomatoes and lettuce the length and breadth of Los Angeles. His acting talent was an unknown quantity; his experience in movies had been limited to a handful of bit parts with a minimum of dialogue.

The studio signed him because it was following a policy of building movie stars, signing unknowns and putting them through rigorous training designed to manufacture cinema celebrities. The basic requirement for such a production is a pleasing appearance and Rock had that. He seemed to have little else, but he was signed because at least one studio executive felt that Rock had the potentialities for success as an actor.

Today, Rock Hudson stars opposite Jane Wyman in the remake of Magnificent Obsession. His salary is more than $1000 a week, he has been presented to the Queen of England, he receives 3000 fan letters a month, and is considered one of Hollywood's most eligible bachelors, as well as (Continued on page 52)

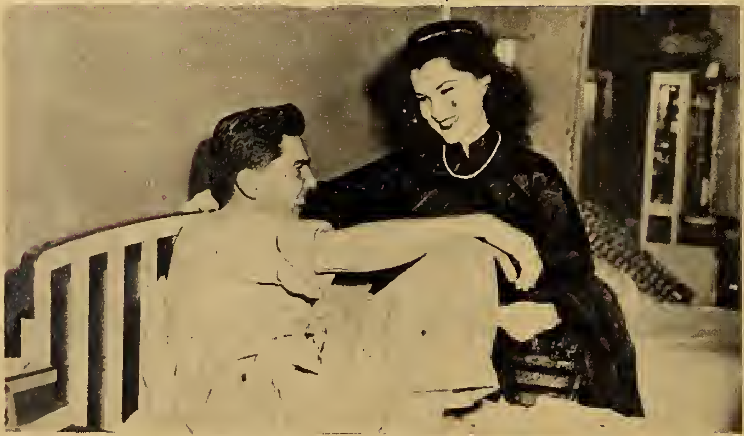
RUNNING

The strange case of Debra Paget is driving Hollywood crazy. Maybe she never leaves Mama's side—but certain rumors are getting around. After all, how shy can a gal in an orchid Cadillac be?

BY ALICE HOFFMAN

Looking at the family album is considered standard dating procedure for cosy twosomes—but Debra does it solo!

Her gowns cling to Debra wherever she goes—but so do sister Lisa Gaye (now a starlet) and brother Frank Griffin.



Debra, who meets lots of fellows on personal appearance tours such as this one in Portsmouth Naval Hospital at Norfolk, Va., claims she dates none of them, would rather stay home with Mom. But who put the ring on that finger?

■ Dan Dailey once pulled to a stop for a traffic light on Sunset Boulevard and found his car next to the pale orchid Cadillac driven by Debra Paget. Girls in orchid Cadillacs can expect whistles from strangers, even if they don't look like Debra Paget, but Dan was no stranger. He was a co-worker on the 20th Century-Fox lot, and in the manner of confreres, he yelled across the intervening space, "Hiya, little one!"

Miss Paget's nose lifted perceptibly as she stared rigidly ahead.

"What's the matter?" inquired Dan. "Aren't you speaking to anybody today?"

Debra's nose went a little higher and her chin jutted with determined hauteur.

"Well, don't sit there and turn blue!" yelled Dailey. "It's only me—old Dan!"

When she turned ever so slightly and recognized him, of course she relaxed to a smile and waved a friendly hand. Dan's story proves that Debra Paget is one girl who drives an orchid Cadillac and does not respond to wolf whistles.

It also paints a rather accurate picture of Debra. She looks like a movie star. She does not leave her home, or even answer the door, unless she is wearing a complete make-up job. She loathes the mere idea of women in slacks. Debra is never seen in public without every accoutrement of glamour, including long earrings. While her clothes are not frilly, they are tailored always with an eye to sex appeal.

It is hard to guess whether Debra actually enjoys such trappings. Only a year ago she was content to whisk through life in peasant blouses and full skirts and simple jewelry, but now that she is twenty, she has blossomed into a full-blown product of Hollywood. Debra claims she loves to be glamorous, that she always dressed up when she was a child, and then in the next breath admits she was a tomboy. "Anything the boys could do I could do better. And I'd still be a tomboy if it weren't for my career." And then, while staunchly maintaining that such frou-frou is second nature to her, she states that movie stars should look like movie stars. "The public builds you up in its imagination. Why let it down?" And Debra's appearance is never a disappointment to her fans.

WILD

Whether or not Debra is happy behind her pancake make-up, her attention to theatrical grooming has accomplished one difficult feat. Having grown up on the 20th Century-Fox lot, she has been wide open to the danger of being considered a child, professionally, long after she outgrew such roles. The majority of stars who began careers in their early teens have had to resort to violent methods to prove to their studio bosses that they have grown up and are able to grace the screen without pigtails. Jane Powell bleached her hair and went into the nightclub circuit with a sexy repertoire. Jeanne Crain, despite her four children, had to dye her hair red and pour herself into decolleté gowns to convince the brass. Debra Paget has managed to escape the teen-age type-casting by attacking the problem in time. At an age when she can very well portray a siren role, she has appeared to everyone outside her family as a sultry and sexy young lady.

This is a noteworthy accomplishment in Hollywood, yet no one knows if the sophisticated appearance comes naturally to Debbie. Those who know her say it is the result of ambition, with which Debra is generously endowed. She has said: "I will do anything for my career. Anything they ask me." She proves it by being prompt, polite, and productive. She goes even farther by contributing her share of glamour to an industry which is tardily realizing that it must have glamour, and not gas stoves, in the public lives of its players. The Cadillac is difficult to top, and for this creation Debbie went to a lot of trouble. In the wardrobe department of the studio she thumbed through fabric swatches until she found the color that pleased her most—a pale, pale orchid, almost white. Paint of this hue was sprayed on her car, which had been an ordinary shade of green, and Debbie was complete—a flawless example of a Hollywood star.

There she draws the line. She feels, and justifiably so, that her cooperation with her job ends with her job. Probes into the more personal aspects of (Continued on page 72)

JANET RULES THE ROOST

When Mrs. Curtis makes up her mind, it's no use putting up any opposition.
Even Tony beats a retreat when "General Leigh" is on the march!

BY KIRTLEY BASKETTE

Hollywood taught Jeanette Morrison to dress and act—and to get the names of cities right on publicity tours. But not even casual Tony can teach her to slow down when Janet Leigh spots a job to be done.

Tony's zany crowd (including Jerry Lewis) brought out Janet's sense of humor, taught her to take kidding.

Tony and Janet adjusted to marriage. She no longer winces at his rootbeer and caviar diet; he has learned not to grind cigarette butts into the rug.

■ The brass of the Sciots' Convention in San Jose, California, was dumbfounded. Before them, on the flag-draped reviewing stand, stood the pretty blonde majorette from Stockton who had just sashayed, strutted, whirled and swirled to win first prize over thirty other band belles in the grand parade. They'd told her to name whatever she wanted as her prize: A gold watch, perhaps? A sterling toilet set? A nice piece of handmade luggage?

And she had told them, "I want a raincoat."

Her friends, her parents and the officials tried to talk her out of it. "Don't be silly, Jeanette. You won it. Take something precious that you can keep." But she only shook her head stubbornly.

"Uh-uh. I need a raincoat. That's what I want." She got the raincoat.

The prize has (Continued on page 66)

Gordon's plans always include Meredith, 9; Heather, 6; and Gar, 5—and of course, Sheila. They also include opera and a Broadway musical.

Energetic and restless, Gordon enjoys his pool with his family but believes vacations are meant to be short. He got an early break by refusing to sit out a CBS contract and be paid for doing nothing.

"I've known for a long time what I wanted to be," Gordon says. "Wouldn't I be a fake looking and talking humble as if I actually felt I didn't deserve it all? That kind of self-deprecation is unhealthy."

"CALL ME PINHEAD"

It's hate at first sight when some people meet MacRae. But those who take a second look find a nice guy who knows where he's going—even if he has to push to get there!

BY WILLIAM BARBOUR

■ Last June, when Palm Springs was baking in 117 degrees of desert heat, the members of the Racquet Club there turned unbelieving eyes to the actions of a muscular young man in shorts. First, he pulled a deck chair out into the full sun. Then he carefully focused a wide reflector on it. After which he lay down in the intensified glare. Gordon MacRae was after a sun tan. Since it was Gordon MacRae, it was going to be a fast tan.

Nearly seven years ago when Gordon started his movie career, an early story about him reported that he was a young man in a hurry, and that what he wanted out of Hollywood was a big house, a swimming pool and a Cadillac. The first part of this was truly descriptive. He is a man who showers, shaves and dresses in well under ten minutes. He is a luncher who puts away his meal with a half dozen impatient movements of his fork, and spends the rest of the hour talking business. He is a golfer who is always asking permission to play through. He makes punctual arrivals at appointments and early departures. Before he came to pictures he had refused a radio contract settlement permitting him to loaf for a year, because to mark time for such a long period was unthinkable.

The second part of the story, about wanting only a house, pool and car out of Hollywood represented an unkind twist put on his answers by the interviewers, who thereby missed the urgency of Gordon's ambition. Ask anyone if he likes a Cadillac and he will reply, "Sure." Who wouldn't? And who would say no to a house with a swimming pool? Gordon has possessed these symbols of affluence for years, but the dirtiest trick you could play on him, his friends ordon met Sheila in summer stock. For six weeks she told her ommate Gordon was a most obnoxious boy, then switched to lling her parents he was great and she wanted to get married!

(Continued on page 78)

story of the year:

what really happened to DORIS DAY

Behind the illness of this beloved star is a story that has never before been told—a tragic history of struggle and heartache for a career she never wanted!

BY JANE S. CARLETON

■ For weeks now, the welter of rumor about Doris Day has been rising and spreading.

Gossip, innuendo, exaggeration—everything but truth—has been advanced to explain her illness, and even her illness has been denied.

When Lucky Me, a Doris Day vehicle scheduled to start at Warner Brothers last October was suddenly canceled, one studio spokesman offered this alibi: "The script isn't ready yet. A few more weeks and we'll roll."

Simultaneously, a Los Angeles columnist wrote, "Doris Day has had what practically amounts to a nervous breakdown and chums claim that difficulties with husband Marty Melcher are a big part of her trouble."

Said husband Melcher when a newspaperman urged him "to level with me, Marty," "Nervous breakdown? That's a lotta bunk. Doris is just tired. She'll be okay. There's nothing wrong with her. Just had a cyst or something removed from her back. Minor surgery. What are they making such a fuss about?"

"I read in the papers that she's going to a psychiatrist," the newspaperman continued. "Supposedly she won't be okay for months. Any truth to that?"

"Of course not," said Marty Melcher. "She's just tired. She's done picture after picture—fourteen pictures in a row. She's beat. Wouldn't you be?"

"That's on the level now?"

"On the level," Melcher said.

Marty Melcher is Doris Day's husband and agent and business manager, and as president of Martin Melcher Productions, her new producer. He loves her very much. In her hour of need, he wants only to help and protect her and if this seems to call for more tact than truth—well then, it's understandable. But the truth has a purifying and clarifying effect, and throughout the world, there are thousands of Doris Day fans who are worried about this tall, talented, freckle-faced blonde who has given them so much joy and warmth and entertainment.

The truth is that Doris Day is emotionally upset and that her neurosis may in part be attributed to what physicians refer to as cancerphobia.

For some time now, Doris has been afraid that she has cancer.

She belongs to a religious faith that holds that disease may be cured by treatment which consists basically of enlightened prayer.

In her own family and in her business circles, she has encountered some disagreement with this belief.

Several weeks before Lucky Me was scheduled to get underway, Warner Brothers insisted that Doris submit to a complete physical checkup. For a while, Doris refused. The studio pressed its point. The executives were (Continued on page 80)

by Marva Peterson

Antiques on a Budget

Keefe turned authentic farmhouse-type dry sink into phonograph cabinet for den—scraped and refinished another, larger one as diningroom buffet. Normie made traditional rag rug herself, hopes to make more.

"Nothing's better for a budget than Early American," claims Keefe Brasselle. And he should Cheerful "bargain livingroom" is almost entirely composed of antiques restored by handyman Keefe; equally handy Norma cleans furniture herself.

Attractive four-poster was reconstructed from dilapidated antique bed. Night-table is old-fashioned sewing machine, and lamp bases cost Keefe $17.50 as crockery set. Normie washes cotton drapes and spreads herself.

The Early American kitchen is located between the diningroom and patio for outdoor eating, has modern freezer and washer. Natural wood cabinets carry out old-fashioned motif besides being hard to soil.

know. It took saving and hard work for Keefe and Normie to make their antique dream come true.

HOUSE OF THE MONTH

■ Out in the San Fernando Valley, the night was clear and crisp with the smell of California winter in the air. A dog's bark cut sharply across the stillness, and the stars looked new and close.

On a corner lot, snug inside a small, unobtrusive house, Keefe Brasselle, star of The Eddie Cantor Story, and his wife Norma, were enjoying the after-Junior's-bedtime peace that only parents can appreciate.

Keefe broke the silence by getting up from the sofa and edging another log into the fireplace.

"Good night for a fire," he muttered. Then he let loose an uninhibited yawn and threw his six-foot frame the length of the livingroom couch. He closed his eyes.

Norma looked up from her needlework and smiled at her boyish husband. "You know what I'm thinking?" she asked.

Keefe opened one eye. "That the firelight makes your hair look like polished brass."

Norma made a funny face. "I've been thinking about this living room," she said. "I'd like to get an antique coffee table in front of that couch. You think our budget might stand that and Christmas, too?"

Keefe Brasselle happens to be one actor who knows a thing or two about antiques. He used to sell them. "Just how much of an antique did you have in mind?" he asked.

Deftly Norma side-stepped the issue. "That's just the (Continued on next page)

Keefe turned a battered workbench into a sturdy coffee table for the livingroom. Opening at one end into the diningroom and at the other into the bedroom hall, the livingroom is an ideal length for his home movie showings.

MORE ➤

Small enough for Normie to manage, Keefe to buy without mortgage, house stands on corner in middle-class area. Oldsmobile convertible was only big purchase when income began to rise.

Keefe spent weekends building the brick barbecue and the cushioned bench. Behind the brick wall he has a badminton court and a basketball ring. Building their home cost the Brasselles $20,000.

Keefe installed movie screen behind wooden valance in diningroom, projects pictures across intervening livingroom from projector installed behind window he cut in sliding door of bedroom hall.

Antiques on a Budget continued

trouble," she answered. "I can't decide what kind of table it should be. We could use a cobbler's bench, but the good ones cost a fortune."

"Normie," her husband chided: "Don't screw up your forehead that way. I'll turn out an early Brasselle for you."

Next evening Keefe drove into the garage and Normie caught sight of an old workbench jutting out the rear window of his convertible. "The antique" looked so old and broken that it might have been one of the rails Abraham Lincoln split. It was dirty and cracked and battered.

Normie stalked out to the garage. "Keefe Brasselle," she said flatly. "Don't you dare bring that dirty thing into my clean house."

"But, darling," Keefe protested, "don't you believe in me?"

"Just don't bring it into the house. It should be fumigated."

The more Norma slandered his prize, the more the young actor was pleased. Once he had a chance to work on his bargain buy, he was sure Normie would melt. For when it comes to repairing and remodeling wooden pieces. Keefe Brasselle is an experienced craftsman. The more hopeless a job looks, the more he enjoys salvaging it.

When he spotted this disreputable-looking bench hiding under a pile of furniture in a junk store, he knew at once that it had possibilities. He cut off the legs to reduce it to coffee-table height. Then he sealed the major cracks with plastic wood. He spent nights sanding the rough edges. Then he stained and waxed until the old wood took on the patina of a well-shined shoe. Only then would he let his wife inspect her new coffee table.

"I give up," she said. "You're a genius." And she flattered him with a kiss and helped him carry it into the livingroom.

That long, narrow (Continued on page 55)

Keefe did early renovating in friend's workshop with borrowed equipment; now owns power tools but hangs curtains without them.

A man and a baby and a young Mexican nurse—these people brought Shelley from pain into maturity—and a fuller understanding of those around her.

the turning point

by Shelley Winters

■ I do not think that any individual can make a bilateral pact with God, an agreement between just himself and God, leaving his fellow men out of consideration. The man's part of the bargain could only be that he would not sin any more. But for some time I have felt that there can be no heaven in the mere avoidance of evil; that this is just a negative approach; that I have not done or will not do any bad does not mean I am good.

Today I have come to believe that faith is positive and that the whole basis of religion is the interlocking of man's responsibility to man. Until this conviction forced itself into my consciousness (and it had to fight its way to recognition) I had lots more trouble accepting myself as a mature person than I have today. When I was in the early stages of childbirth and a young nurse stretched herself far beyond her duties to buoy me up with hope and comfort, I sensed that this extra giving of one's self and time was the only really good work. In that moment, I tried to recall when I had done as much for another human being. When I couldn't, I had time in all my pain to feel the sadness of this realization. And that is how I learned to grow up.

I was in labor three days. There were periods of doubt when I didn't know whether the doctors would proceed or try to wait. The birth itself was of a difficult type. I remember two nurses, I remember them mainly by the phrasing of their words to me. The older one was competent and did what had to be done with brisk efficiency. The other was far less professional in bearing, a young Mexican girl, about twenty, and not very prepossessing in either looks or manner.

The first nurse impressed me (Continued on page 47)

THE MAN FOR MITZI

Jack didn't know who Mitzi was when they met; now she accepts his authority on her clothes and career.

Remember Miss Gaynor's advice on love? "Stay aloof." But Mitzi has become a clinging vine—wrapped around a Bean(pole) named Jack!

BY LOUIS POLLOCK

■ At a Beverly Hills party ten months ago you might have heard the proposal of marriage made to Mitzi Gaynor by a square-shouldered, blue-eyed citizen named Jack Bean. He has reddish-brown hair, a crew-cut, and clothes that are on the conservative side for California. The Beverly Hills host approached Mitzi who was standing with Jack.

"Would you like a drink?" he asked Mitzi.

"No, thank you," she replied politely.

"Would you like a bite to eat?" the host offered.

"No, thank you," said Mitzi.

The host departed and Jack turned to Mitzi.

"Would you like to get married?" he asked.

Mitzi looked at him and her eyes widened. "Yes," she said. "I mean . . . yes, thank you."

That was last March. The two had known each other for little more than a month. They know each other a lot better now, but the proposal and the acceptance, and all the longing for each other (Continued on page 54)

the way CHRISTMAS should be

For June and Dick, this one day has to be perfect—no matter how much work it takes!

BY JANE WILKIE

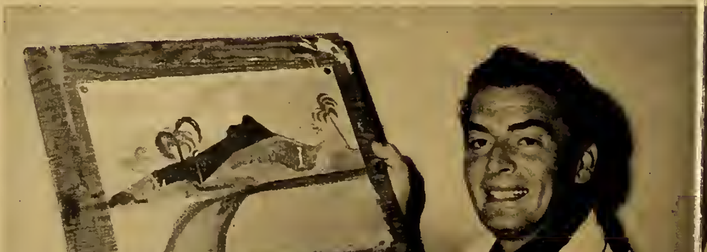
California climate is just about everything it's cracked up to be, so when Christmas rolls around the population would just as soon give California back to the Indians. There isn't a chance for the white holiday that people dream about; no snow on the ground, no nip in the air, and the Christmas tree merchants must keep their wares out of the hot sun lest every needle drop off before the trees are sold. When roses are blooming and sunburn remedies are being discussed, it isn't easy to find the excitement of the Christmas spirit as it was in the old days back east.

June Allyson and Dick Powell, hailing from New York and Little Rock, respectively, are as sensitive as any transplanted easterners to California's unseasonal Christmas. But unlike many other transplants, who hastily trim a two-foot tree and then retire to the pool, Dick and June do something about it. The weather outside may be a somnolent eighty degrees, but once a visitor passes through the Powells' front door, it's Christmas. The air is cool and scented with pine, there are candles and holly and bright red ribbons, the tree's topmost star just touches the ceiling. On dropleaf tables and coffee tables are snowy scenes in miniature—a Swiss (Continued on page 70)

Vic and Dorothy's five-year-old marriage is as secure as his better-than-ever film career and booming commercial enterprises.

CRAZY LIKE A FOX

Famous appellation, "that beautiful hunk of man," was coined by anonymous debutante for early article on Mature. He thought it great publicity—which he would now like everybody to forget.



Like many other stars, such as Tony Curtis and Mona Freeman, Mature' hobby is painting. To foil any possible criticism, he prints "Not Complete' under all his works before showing them off. This landscape is his first tr

Fifteen years ago Mature went shopping in swim trunks, false beard and toga. You say you think he's changed since then?

BY JOHN MAYNARD

■ One summer day, fifteen years ago, Victor Mature ran out of razor blades. At the time, he was scarcely dabbling a toe in the fractious waters of film acting.

It was a warm afternoon and Mature was entertaining at his town residence, a tidy pup-tent in the backyard of a friend. Perhaps it is better to say that he was entertaining on his modest grounds. At any rate, he ran out of razor blades, an emergency to be coped with immediately.

He was wearing swim trunks and sandals; not, even in Hollywood, suitable regalia for a shopping center. Mature, although a certain nervousness over his own lack of social inhibition constitutes his only social inhibition, understood this. It was an easy matter to rectify. With spirit gum, he applied to his face a modest beard that happened to be lying around. About his semi-naked person he wrapped a bedsheet in lieu of a toga. Attired (Continued on page 74)

elmer Daves directs Vic in Demetrius And The Gladiators, equel to The Robe. Since Samson And Delilah, Biblical ovies have been his forte, may bring Oscar nomination.

Hollywood Hot Rods

By Tom Carlile

■ It wasn't spicy enough to be mentioned in the gossip columns. And it probably won't even come out in the divorce testimony. But several of Donald O'Connor's close friends think that one factor which was overlooked in the newspaper reports of his marital difficulties with Gwen was the sleek little Bugatti roadster which he used to wheel around Hollywood at high blood-pressure speeds. Before the Bugatti, there had been a low-slung Jaguar with leopard-skin upholstery and a supercharged engine which emitted a throaty roar every night as Donald wheeled it into the driveway. Before that, there was an older Jaguar which threw a wheel while Donald was barreling it along at sixty miles an hour one fine afternoon.

Donald has always loved (Continued on page 63)

GOING ON A SUNDAY PICNIC WITH A STARLET?

Lance Fuller brought Universal's Kathleen Hughes and Barbara Rush to rally, Hollywood's term for Sunday driving and comparing get-togethers held by most avid sports car enthusiasts.

Pale blue Jaguar XK120 caught the attention of Tab Hunter, Lori Nelson, Barbara Rush, Jeff Hunter, Kathleen Hughes, Lance Fuller and Marcia Henderson. Popular, it costs $3600.

"Buy your sweetie a Jaguar for Christmas," a car dealer advertised—and everybody did! As a resul Ty Power owns a Mark 7 Jaguar and a 1900 cc Alpha Romeo as well as the pictured (and expensive) Duesenberg.

Macdonald Carey's red Sober has Ford-Mercury engine, is impractical for large family who love it anyway.

Jan Sterling drives an inexpensive Simca, Most popular car in Hollywood is $2400 Mark IV MG.

PUT THAT BICYCLE BACK IN THE GARAGE, KIDDIES— IN HOLLYWOOD, THEY TAKE THE JAGUAR!

Seriously interested in autos, Lance bought his white Morris Minor for practical reasons. The English-made car hugs the road, reducing tip-over chances; motor, smaller than a battery, gets 35 miles per gallon.

If it were legal in California, Jeff Hunter could take wife Barbara Rush for a 110 mph drive in this German-made Porsche. A close relative of the popular Volkswagon, the Porsche has a 4-cylinder rear engine.

"You can get more than 135 mph out of that Jag," Lance Fuller said to Tab Hunter, was interrupted by screams from Marcia Henderson and Lori Nelson who discovered both had brought chocolate cookies.

Rallies usually end with enthusiasts prying under the hoods of each other's cars, fighting gallantly over the relative merits of various models. With the girls along this time, the rally turned into a picnic.

Hollywood's famed Sunset Boulevard looks like the Champs Elysees during an international convention.

arbara Ruick and Bob Horton cluded a blue Jaguar in their ll-important marriage plans.

Dick and June Powell's Jaguar XK120 can do 145 mph, Dick claims—but has nowhere to do it!

Gary Cooper, like Frank Sinatra, bought a Mercedes-Benz Model 300SL in Europe, paid $13,000 for it.

By Steve Cronin

the ham got results

ALSO A CONTRACT, STAR BILLING AND A TON OF FAN MAIL MARKED "THAT WONDERFUL BYRON PALMER!"

■ A few years ago, an awfully nice Hollywood boy got himself involved with a dangerous dame. His name was Byron Palmer. Hers was Tokyo Rose.

This liaison took place in what both storybooks and movies paint as a most romantic setting, but you'd hardly call theirs a love affair. Each day this Palmer called Miss Rose some choice names over short-wave radio. Next day she'd return the compliment.

For his part, he'd sign off the tryst with, "This is Station WXLE—your American Expeditionary Station at Eniwetok on the road to Tokyo." And she'd come back, "This is Tokyo Rose on the road to Eniwetok."

Well, one day right after beaming his usual insult, Corporal Palmer almost jumped out of his suntan. A big "Boom!" resounded outside his Quonset hut and the atoll shook like an actor at option time. Bombs went off like strings of cannon crackers, zinging bullets peppered the earth and smoke and flame rolled over the tropical sky until it looked like Dante's Inferno.

Clawing into the flinty coral for cover, Byron Palmer reflected bitterly that, except for his wife, his sister and his mother, women were bad news indeed, and if he lived through this, he would have no truck with any of them. Flashing through his addled senses was the idea that Tokyo Rose had made good her boast and maliciously sent out the whole Japanese carrier fleet just to get him.

Actually, a B-24 (Continued on page 57)

the turning point

(Continued from page 37) with her experience. She said it was too bad the baby was arriving early. She thought it would be best to wait two more weeks. She hoped that it would be a girl because in such cases girls have a better chance than boys. She said more but by this time I was listening to myself worry. Suppose it was a boy?

The Mexican girl talked in another vein altogether. In between pains I might say, "I wonder what the baby will look like." She would reply, "Don't think about that. Think about what it will think and feel, and that it will think and feel, like you think and feel. The wonder of life is happening to you now. Life is coming, this very second, and coming to extend itself into the forever, through you."

When I would cry out sometimes the other nurse would say. "Oh, it isn't so bad. . . . After all, what is happening to you has happened to thousands of others. . . . You're not the only one, you know, to go through this. . . ."

The Mexican girl never dismissed me so lightly. She sympathized and helped me; she lived and thought on a much higher plane and she took me up there with her.

I can hear her now.

"This is not a bad time in your life," she is saying. "These are the finest hours, the deepest feelings, the most touching moments you will ever have. Don't miss them because the pain is big or the pain is small, or because now it is here and now it is there. This is greater, so much greater than all that."

WHAT luck to meet such a girl! What a human being! She clothed me with such a wonderful aura of sublime function that I didn't want to take the pain pills the doctor had left. I didn't need them with her inspiring presence. Even when my pains were finally just minutes apart and I would sleep through the short snatches between them, the lull of her words that would sound when she saw my eyes open, the beat of her warm heart coming to me through her hand which held mine, bathed me in wonderful calmness. I knew I would rather be there, experiencing the birth of my child's life, than anywhere else in the world.

No, I am sure, there will be no heaven except when we are our brother's and our sister's keepers. And there is no greater heaven than that.

These evenings when I see Vittorio sit down with the baby I think of the Mexican girl and her words. Vittorio looks at the baby. She looks at him. They are both so solemn. Then he turns and says, "The baby looks like me, she acts like me!" And what I see in his face is the wonder the Mexican girl spoke about. She never once mentioned God, yet God was in all she said.

HAS all this changed me? Not completely. I fall now and then from the new grace in which I would like to live. Yet I cannot help but try to be more considerate of others. I find no further pleasure, or at least not so much as before, in the displays of sarcastic and cutting wit that are so common in our day. I have a much stronger awareness that all persons are beings of hope and fear and sensitivity, born of mothers who gloried in their births, who have been given love and have love to give.

I always knew this, strangely enough, and yet I didn't. I think that the preaching one hears from another's lips has little effect until, and unless, it is confirmed in one's own experience. All that I know I

Rita Hayworth starring in "MISS SADIE THOMPSON"
A Beckworth Production · A Columbia Picture
Color by Technicolor

RITA HAYWORTH says, "Yes, I use Lustre-Creme Shampoo." In fact, in a mere two years, Lustre-Creme has become the shampoo of the majority of top Hollywood stars! When America's most glamorous women—beauties like Rita Hayworth—use Lustre-Creme Shampoo, shouldn't it be your choice above all others, too?

For the Most Beautiful Hair in the World

4 out of 5 Top Hollywood Stars use Lustre-Creme Shampoo

Glamour-made-easy! Even in hardest water, Lustre-Creme "shines" as it cleans; leaves hair soft and fragrant, free of loose dandruff. And Lustre-Creme Shampoo is blessed with Natural Lanolin. It does not dry or dull your hair!

Makes hair eager to curl! Now you can "do things" with your hair—right after you wash it! Lustre-Creme Shampoo helps make hair a delight to manage; tames flyaway locks to the lightest brush touch, brings out glorious sheen.

NOW in new LOTION FORM or famous CREAM FORM!

Pour it on . . . or cream it on! . . . Either way, have hair that shines like the stars! Lustre-Creme Shampoo in famous Cream Form—27¢ to $2, in jars or tubes. In new Lotion Form—30¢ to $1.

LOVE STORY

Hollywood Has None Sweeter Than Eve Arden's

■ It's surprising that any actress would have so little time that she'd turn down six lucrative picture offers in less than a year. But that's what happened to Eve (Our Miss Brooks) Arden. The filming of her TV show consumes five days a week. On top of that, although she could have done a film during her two-month summer vacation, she turned down offers that would excite a Lana Turner because she and her husband had planned for two years to take a vacation trip to Europe.

This is the key to one of Hollywood's genuinely honest love stories. Although Eve Arden as Miss Brooks is constantly frustrated in her pursuit of Mr. Boynton on TV, her private life isn't like that. Once married and divorced, Eve before TV was lonesome for a husband and a man around the house to be father to her two wonderful children, Connie, eight, and Liza, six. Three years ago, she planned a summer stock tour, asked Barry Sullivan to be her leading man. His Metro contract forbade his taking the job, but he recommended a man he termed, "one hell of an actor." So, sight unseen, Eve had Brooks West of New York signed for her tour. They returned to Hollywood and Mr. West met Eve's children. Little Liza came to a fast conclusion: "I think Brooksie is a fine man. Why don't you marry him?" Eve, who is famous for her snappy comebacks, merely blushed to the roots of her hair and urged Liza not to say the same thing to Mr. West. Liza didn't have to, for he proposed to Eve a few weeks later.

Theirs is a wonderful marriage. They have attended art school together so that they could plan their Early American home together. Altogether a he-man, West does such things as design hooked rugs which Eve finishes. Oddly enough, while Eve still pursues Mr. Boynton on TV, West has the role of Jane's boy friend on the My Friend Irma show, playing a young man as successful with his attractive steady as he is in his business career.

Asked to comment on the current status of her life, Eve answered with a question: "Would it be naive of me to suggest that a woman can find the great love of her life after she's thirty?"

---

have always known, but haven't always believed. When someone told me once that I should have more faith in all things, I listened, but the words failed to register any particular significance. But these words were there, waiting somewhere in my subconscious, and when something happened to prove them true, they came to life in me.

When my baby was born I was happy as a mother, but miserable as an actress. I thought that the important part of my career was over. I could not visualize myself, physically or mentally, as the young woman I had been before. And if I were not she, who and what would I be? I couldn't answer this. I was outwardly myself when I started to work in Tennessee Champ, my first picture after Vittoria's birth, but inside I was uneasy, unsure. Little things gave me more bother than they were worth. Large problems I shrank from facing.

One late afternoon I saw the first rushes of the picture and I became terribly upset. In the first developing, color film generally comes out too dark, and later it is corrected by technical means. But I didn't know this. I just saw a Shelley Winters whom I could hardly recognize and my worst fears were confirmed.

But I wasn't satisfied with just one worry. On my way home I took on others, and none were too small. The baby, who was on an eight-to-eight schedule, had been asleep when I left the house in the morning. I was sure she would be asleep for the night when I got in and I wouldn't be able to hold and fondle her. Vittorio and I had a dinner date at Ginger Rogers' home and I had arranged for my mother to come and stay with the baby after the nurse left so that we could go. Mother would be late, I told myself, and Vittorio and I would not be able to leave on time. Ginger would be offended. I kept nagging at myself in this way until by the time I entered the house I was actually in tears.

But there was mother. The baby was still up and smiling. We had time to get to Ginger's. And then Sol Fielding, the producer of the picture, called to explain about the film and how easily it could be corrected. He said I had photographed better than in the tests and that he was well satisfied with the results. Metro even called and gave me a role in Executive Suite. All my desperation, I realized, had been born of surmises, of lack of faith in myself and in others. I was like a person walking around with her stare fixed permanently on the ground.

I try now to keep my eyes raised. I see more of what is happening to others and less of what is happening to me. This is the "seeing" that counts.

It is odd how this has benefited me as an actress. If you ask anyone in Hollywood about the one thing I have always been most concerned with in my profession they will be able to give you the answer in a word—scripts. There is no picture, no opportunity to act, until it is written. And the way it is written, the quality of the insight into character and human emotion used, is the keystone of any film's success.

Ever since the baby's birth it seems to me that the scripts I am given to read are getting better. How could this be? Are the scripts actually better or am I now able to see more things in them? I can only explain it by saying that formerly I had eyes only for the part I would do. Now I look for the picture of life it paints generally, and not necessarily for the dramatic force I would contribute myself. I am more content to be part of something very good than that the best of it should come only from me.

I feel this about my marriage and my home life. This did not come about as I planned it, nor will it necessarily go on according to any blueprints that might have been in my mind as a girl. My husband, my baby and I all have, or will have, individual desires and somehow these must all be accounted for and allowed for if we are to live within the framework of one continuing home. It is lucky for me that I have come to this realization. Perhaps the old Shelley would not have been able to bend and fit as she must to keep her own together. The old Shelley wished for many things; now these things have become fewer, but just as important.

When Vittorio and I met in Rome, we got to know each other and knew that we wanted each other, but there were problems. We were both actors. Many people do not think this is a good thing. A great many of his interests would always lie in Italy and mine in the United States. Certainly this was not a promising background for marriage. Neither of us were passive personalities and this presaged stormy times.

When we had rationalized about all this and told ourselves we had worked out all the complications, there still remained another—our difference in religion. We didn't dismiss this lightly. We gave it deep consideration and, in effect, this is what we told each other:

If we eliminate the names by which we are known, Protestant, Jew, Catholic, Buddhist, and come down to the actual power we have, we are all the same. We can all do unto others as we'd have them do unto us. We can give even more than we seek for ourselves—unless we will not try. This is the turning point of humanity. We all know this in our hearts. It reads the same in all prayer books.

Vittorio and I were married in Mexico in a civil ceremony. When we were flying back I got a sudden urge that I am sure any girl will understand. I turned to him and told him I wanted to stand in a church with him before we got to Los Angeles.

"What church?" he asked.

"Any church," I replied.

We got off the plane in El Paso and went walking down the street. We saw a church and entered and we stood there together. I felt a blessing on our marriage. I don't know what kind of church it was. END smartest way to say

. Gift-Packed

Holeproof

roportioned Nylons*

amorous, sheer as a breath, and yet so practical, with leproof's snag-resistant Beauty Lock Finish! Three pairs in the r-gold box . . . one or two pairs in a Christmas-card-folder.

gauge, 15 denier—$1.65 pr. 51 gauge, 15 denier—$1.50 pr.

htly higher in Canada

OLEPROOF HOSIERY CO., MILWAUKEE 1, WISCONSIN • IN CANADA: LONDON, ONTARIO

Only hosiery to be awarded*

MODERN SCRE
FASHION STA

june haver comes home

(Continued from page 19) could learn about what was happening to the girl who had always been high in their favor, and still is. But June herself had answered the telephone. She understood right away what was up. "You have an assignment, don't you?" June asked, with the hint of a chuckle in her voice. I said I certainly had.

"I wish I could give you a story," sighed June. "You know I would, if I could. Maybe I can one of these days soon. I don't know. But right now, you can understand why I can't talk. There has been too much publicity about me already."

I said I did understand. So we made simple pleasantries. I said I was glad she was back and hoped she was feeling well. She said she was responding beautifully to rest, good food, and the warmth of her family around her. In fact, she had just got back from a trip to San Francisco, up on a train, back on a plane, with two wonderful days in that wonderful town with her sister, Evvie, and Evvie's son, Brian. "We took in all the sights, like any tourist," continued June. "Fisherman's Wharf, Golden Gate Park and a little boat trip under the bridges out in the bay, past Alcatraz, and everything." She laughed. It was good to hear that laughter.

"And then we went to Chinatown," coninued June, forgetting that she was talkng, because we've been friends for some ime, and I think maybe she enjoyed it as much as I did. "Had a marvelous time, beause it was Ten-Ten festival—that's like our Fourth of July—the day the Chinese Republic was founded. So Grant Avenue was gay with lanterns, perfumed with incense. We ate chow-mein and shopped for silly little things. And then we dropped in to see Anne Baxter—you know she's there in John Brown's Body—look, I'm talking too much . . ."

Very pleasant talk, I thought. "Yes," agreed June. "But," and an anxious tone crept into her voice, "I must stop now. I've already talked to you longer than I have to anyone else . . . no, I have no personal plans at all now, except catching up with myself, building my health and gathering my family around me. Mother's had some family dinners and everybody's been so sweet to me. No, I haven't been out in Hollywood—nowhere. I'm staying between here and my sister Dorothy's. No, I don't know where I'll live. No, I haven't any picture plans. I don't know yet if I am interested. I don't know what I'll do. If," said June, "I should want to go back, I want to act now with dignity and good taste. You see, there's really nothing whatever that I can tell you now and I shouldn't be talking to you at all. In fact, my agent called from Italy and told me not to talk to the press, and Harry Brand at the studio advised the same thing. So—I'll have to say goodbye. But it was nice . . ."

"Goodbye," I told her. "Good luck—and God bless you." And I received a benediction, too.

That was my interview. Not anything to stop the presses or win a Pulitzer Prize—but still—it told me a lot about the present state of the girl I've come to know so well and admire so much.

It told me, first of all, that she was the same sweet, friendly girl I had always known. It told me her outlook was sunny, not defeated, depressed or sad. It told me she was gaining strength, and was physically and emotionally under control. It told me she was interested again in the world around her, able to go on a pleasure excursion and enjoy every minute of it. It told me she still held a deep reverence and respect for the path she had tried to take. But it told me something else, too: She is looking forward, not backward. Right now, what is really happening to June Haver is a profound struggle with herself to determine her future.

There is no one in Hollywood or elsewhere who can make her decision for her. The problem is as personal and private as her decision to desert her career and enter the convent. But this decision is more complex and more pressing than the other, arrived at over a period of years. It is complicated by typical Hollywood rumor and speculation, wild offers and proposals bombarding her. In her position, she cannot reply.

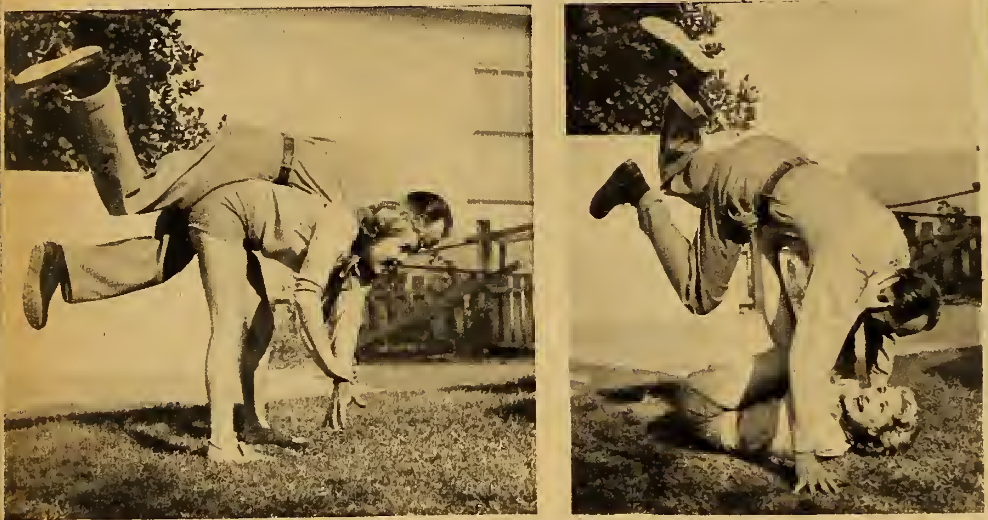
Only a few days after she returned, for instance, a producer who owns the screen rights to the late Jean Harlow's life story, announced that he would try to persuade June to play the part of the platinum blonde bombshell of the Thirties. He explained that he was not attempting to capitalize on June Haver's news value; he had long thought of her in the role. In fact, his lawyers had tried to contact her about it at the convent. If they did, the producer was very much out of line. Even though he declared any profits of such a film would be given to charity, it is an ill-advised, ill-timed suggestion.

Besides the fact that both were blondes and both experienced tragedy, the characters of Jean Harlow and June Haver do not match. The themes of their lives and the auras surrounding them, are completely different. When I asked June if she was considering such a thing, she replied, "Of course not. Someone is apparently trying to exploit the publicity." She said it sadly.

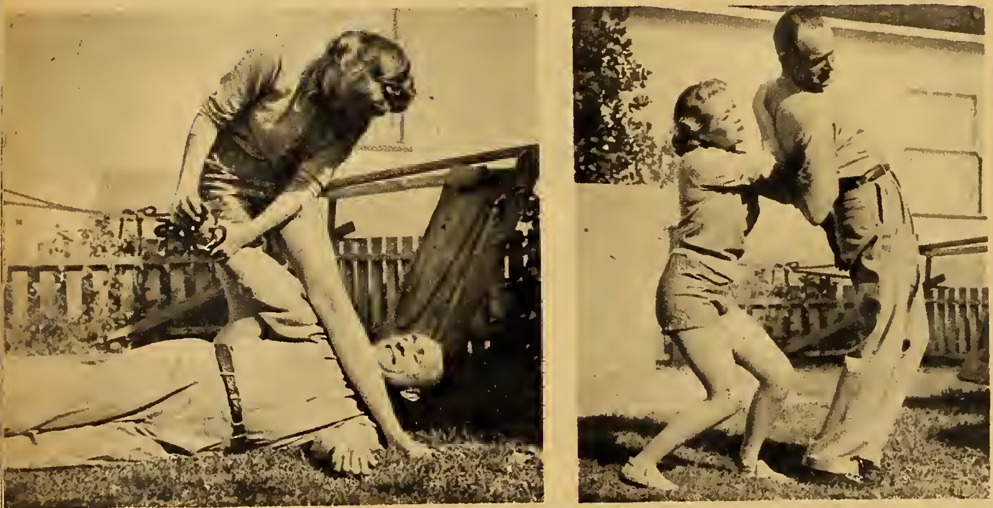
That is only a sample of what June

THE POWER OF A WOMAN

Lori Nelson can hold a man or toss him over with no effort at all!



Lori's motto is "Be Prepared!" Not even judo expert Dad can take her by surprise.



Daughter Nelson gives Papa Nelson a Full Nelson as they practice quick defense.

■ Lori Nelson looks young and pretty and blonde and as helpless as a kitten. Of course this always brings out the chivalry in the opposite sex, as you know if you've seen her two new pictures, All-American and Walking My Baby Back Home. But she knows a few tricks that would be a surprise to a burglar, a purse-snatcher or just a plain wolf.

She's a jiu jitsu expert.

Five feet, three, in her stocking feet and tipping the scales at 103, Lori can throw a 160-pound man over her shoulder and have him helpless and handcuffed quicker than you can say Mr. Moto.

She learned this ancient art of self-defense from her father, Robert Nelson, a civic-minded citizen who is an Auxiliary Deputy Sheriff in addition to being employed as a studio technician. All deputy sheriffs in Los Angeles County are required to know something of judo. Mr. Nelson has taught Lori all he knows about judo and how to handle firearms. She's an excellent shot, right handed or left handed.

"They get up in the middle of the night to go deer hunting," Lori's mother complains.

"I've never had occasion to use judo in either my personal or professional life," says Lori. "But it's fun practicing with Dad. And it might come in handy."

Haver faces in her struggle to return gracefully and discreetly to Hollywood and to plot the course of her future. When she had her close-cropped hair done, the word was out: June Haver is getting herself ready for screen tests. When she buys a few new clothes, which she obviously needs after half a year in a convent, she's re-entering the glamour lists. When she lunches with her former agent, Ned Marin, they are talking picture parts. June's dilemma—how to keep out of the news, comport herself with dignity and fight out her vital decisions alone—looms large and almost impossible to resolve. That's natural and inevitable.

If there are no facts available, reporters must survey the scene and draw conclusions from whatever they see, especially on a subject of such interest and importance to Hollywood and June's devoted fans. What they see, in her case, may be colored by wishful thinking. Everyone who knows June Haver wants her to return to a full, happy and useful life. It may be a wish, but I believe that June Haver will soon come back to the screen, to the career she renounced in good faith, but the one in which I believe she rightfully belongs.

At this writing, June Haver has signed no contracts, talked no picture deals, read no scripts. Yet, already there are straws in the wind indicating that—whether she knows it or not—June Haver is reaching for the threads that lead back to the life she had led and loved since she was eight years old.

The people who have advised June so far—and whose advice she admitted she is heeding—are all picture people. Some qualify as old friends as well. Many former colleagues from Fox have talked to June and, in her mother's words, "offered to help June if she wished to resume picture work." They are friends—June made friends with everyone she worked with—but the advice and assistance which all these friends have to offer June Haver is really valuable only if she is considering going back into the movie business.

Of course, when June alighted from a TWA plane at the Los Angeles International Airport last September 29, she expressed a different intention and desire. "I want to go back," she said then. "I am on temporary leave. I am home to rest and to do God's will." At the same time, she stated flatly, when asked if she'd take up the career she had abandoned, "I gave all that up."

At that time, June was surprised and confused by the swarm of reporters and photographers who surrounded her. A TWA ticket clerk had recognized her and tipped off the press. She was registered on the plane as Junie Flynn (her sister Dorothy's married name) and had planned to slip back home unheralded. "I'm not a celebrity any more," she protested, and after her happy laughter when she greeted her family, she burst into tears when she was asked to pose again and again.

She must have known, even then, that for her the attempt at holy life was ended, and could not be tried again with hope of success. This was strongly hinted by church officials whom newsmen asked to clarify June's status. One, Archbishop Edward J. Hunkeler of Kansas City, said, "I have never heard of such leave being granted novitiates." Another stated, "If she plans to return, she will have to apply through the regular channels. No such action has been initiated." Another pointed out that, except for a death in the family, no "temporary leave" is ever granted from the Sisters of Charity Convent. And as June's own mother pointed out, "The fact that June left in street clothing is proof that her training to become a nun is over."

The reason June gave for her return to secular life was poor health. That was undoubtedly the immediate cause. She suffered severe migraine headaches, and had undergone hospitalization in Kansas. Exhaustive physical tests revealed an enervating low metabolism rate. This was another in the chain of sicknesses and accidents which had dogged June before she left California. She had, for instance, entered St. John's Hospital in Santa Monica four separate times, for an appendectomy, an ulcer, a sprained back and a ruptured abdominal organ. It was the Sisters there, incidentally, who inspired June's own desire to lead a life of service in the Catholic Church. The Girl Next Door took almost two years to film, largely because of June's illnesses.

But one of the requirements for admittance to St. Mary's Academy was a certificate of sound health. June had been in what amounted to physical training for her convent life long before she made it. She never looked better than she did in The Girl Next Door. At the convent she worked hard; all novices do. But even though her chores were in the kitchen and in the laundry, they were not back breaking. June described the way she felt as, "I was just dragging all of the time." But even as she said that, reporters who greeted her were unanimous that despite her plain brown suit, cropped, untinted hair and absence of make-up she looked in better shape physically than when she left. She was heavier, had better color and, even under the tension of that meeting, seemed to be in good spirits.

This is not to cast any doubt on June Haver's reasons for abandoning the personal crusade which she had entered with such hope, zeal and confidence. But it is proper to point out that poor health is not the only reason June Haver missed her goal. Other more complex factors evidently helped frustrate that ambition, too.

It was not disillusionment on June Haver's part. "I found the religious life everything I hoped it would be," were among the first words she uttered back in Hollywood. "It was beautiful. I was very happy there and all the other nuns were wonderful to me." But there is evidence that the psychological and emotional adjustments to her religious life were not entirely successful. "Dragging all the time," is a complaint familiar to psychiatrists.

I remember talking to a close friend of June's when she announced her startling decision. This man is active and experienced in the work of the Catholic Church. He had acted often as a go-between, when June first voiced her yearnings to become a nun. He told me then, "June's frail—but that isn't what worries me about this step of hers. The work won't be too hard for her. She's also very devout; I am not worrying about her sincerity or faith. But you must remember that a girl who enters a convent must change completely, not only in her daily life but in the very workings of her mind. It is hard when you are June's age. I'm hoping and praying for the best, but I don't know. I have seen other inspired girls try for the sisterhood and find themselves utterly unable to handle the emotional transition. I've seen them tragically mixed-up and helpless to understand why they cannot bring this about. . . ."

Archbishop Hunkeler said, "I think the real reason, in fairness to June, was that it wasn't the life for her . . ." Another high Catholic church official agreed, "I'm not surprised she returned. She's a convert and it is difficult to adjust in any way to the Catholic life, especially if the individual is not accustomed to it very early . . ."

June joined the Catholic Church in Hollywood when she was sixteen and already in pictures. According to her mother, June herself soon sensed this insurmountable psychological barrier at the convent. "I believe," she has said, "that June realized almost from the start that she had made a mistake. All her life she has been devoted to her family—a real home girl. You can see how homesick this would make her, and how difficult to adjust to the secluded religious life . . ." June's mother was the most broken up member of the family when her daughter left for the convent.

Whatever the reasons why June Haver abandoned her quest after seven and a half months instead of staying seven and a half years to take her final vows, no shame, disgrace or even embarrassment reflects or should reflect from her action. June certainly doesn't feel that it should. That sensible state of mind is important to her present decision. "Many people seek to do God's will as they understand it," she has said. "That is all I did. I don't think I failed." Nor does anyone else who knows the facts.

June was merely what her rank in the religious order was termed—a novice. She was an apprentice on trial. She had achieved no religious ordainment of any kind from which she defected in returning to Hollywood. Mother Mary Ancilla, Superior of St. Mary's Academy, stated June's position very clearly: "All young women who come here on trial until the time when they take their final vows, are privileged to change their minds from day to day . . ." The Kansas Archbishop cleared her even more officially, "June left in a candid and proper manner," he stated. "She leaves with the good will of everyone."

As far as her church is concerned—a church whose dictates and preferences June, being devout, would always heed—she bears no stigma whatever. Which brings up the strongest argument of all why June Haver will take up where she left off in Hollywood: There is no earthly—or spiritual—reason why she should not. On the contrary, there are many earthly—and spiritual—reasons why she should.

Danny Kaye at Palace opening was cute when he said, "I'll tell you a little secret. There is nobody in the world who likes to hear me entertain better than me."

Earl Wilson
Post

For years in Hollywood before she tried to become a nun June devoted far more of her time, talents and energies to religious and charitable endeavors than she did to her career. Her date book was chronically filled weeks ahead—not with pleasure appointments—but dates for church benefits, hospital visits, appearances to aid charity or church projects. Whether the requests came from an obscure padre with a tiny church that needed help, the football team at Loyola University, whose mascot she was, the Newman Club at UCLA which she sponsored, St. John's Hospital, the Stella Maris Girls' Home, or just a friend who needed comfort—I never heard her say "No." She can serve that way again, if and when she gets back in harness.

Actually, she was more valuable to her church and in a position to do greater good as a screen star than as a sequestered nun. I think she realizes this now and I am sure she will make use of that power again. Certainly, she knows the Biblical parable of the talents, whose moral is: Use them. June Haver has been blessed with great talent since the days when she used to sing, dance and spread sunshine around Rock Island, Illinois.

There are practical reasons, too, why June must do what she can do best. She is not wealthy; she must make her living. In fact, when June entered her novitiate she signed, along with the vows of chastity and obedience, the vow of poverty. Before she left, her furniture was auctioned off, her clothes, jewelry and personal effects distributed among her family and close friends. The apartment house she had built and furnished in West Los Angeles was deeded to her mother. Her savings went into funds for family financial security. They can be returned to June, of course, and undoubtedly will be if she needs them. But June was never rich. Although she made $3500 a week at the tag end of her Fox contract, she had heavy family responsibilities. June, who lived modestly, did not need much money for herself and there is no reason to believe that she will now. But there are others she loves for whom she would like to do things.

What else could she do to support herself? Well, it is possible that she could earn a living with interior decoration. June took that up as a hobby several years ago, decorating apartment buildings and homes, but always as a dilettante. For a while, she thought of studying for a teacher's certificate, but it seems impractical, as she would have to start as a college freshman.

It might be folly for June to attempt a new vocation—after her hard-won, established success as a screen star. She started at fifteen; at twenty-seven it's hard to change your stripes. It is conceivable, of course, that by some special concession coupled with a miraculous gift of new physical strength, and a clear mandate from her spirit and conscience, June could try again the path she traveled so briefly.

What chance has June Haver for second-round success in Hollywood? I asked a prominent agent that question, also a producer. They agreed: June Haver could go to work next week if she said the word. "After all," said the agent, "there's been no time break worth mentioning in June's career. Her last picture is still playing. For months after she left for Kansas her face was in the magazines and on billboards. Seven months is only a tick of the clock, careerwise. A lot of stars take that much time for vacations and nobody knows they've been gone. I wish she were my client. I could sell her tomorrow and she'd be worth as much as ever—maybe more."

The producer said, "Of course, right now the whole thing is a delicate matter. Anyone who puts June Haver into a picture quickly—if he could—would risk being accused of trying to capitalize on the publicity. June's comeback role would have to be selected carefully. Not necessarily a religious role but certainly a wholesome part. June, of course, knows that—that's why she won't say or do anything right now—and maybe not for quite a while. But if and when she comes back, she is sure to succeed."

You can be sure that by now June herself has considered everything from all points of view. Probably she has made her decision, already, or at least, is close to reaching it. In time she will tell it and time is what is necessary to work the unique transition smoothly and tastefully. Undoubtedly the church of her faith feels exactly as June does—that now is the time for her to keep her plans and her thoughts about them to herself. But sooner or later she will have to act.

There are many gifts to offer if they come from the heart, and those that do are peculiarly blessed.

Although the special capacities for Catholic sisterhood seem to be beyond June Haver's present powers, she still has such an offering to make in her young life. There is no reason why she cannot make it right here in Hollywood. END

solid as a rock

(Continued from page 25) one of its best-liked stars.

In a way, the transition is a product of the studio's manufacturing program, but it never could have happened if Rock were not the man he is. About one out of every thirty players who are signed are able to make the grade. The studio gambles on raw material and backs the youngsters to the limit of its wealth and power, but in the long run it is up to the player himself. In Rock Hudson, U-I had a diamond in the rough.

He was told to stand straight and once he had improved his posture, his appearance was perfect. But this was the easy part. The rest is an endurance contest, and Rock had the stamina of a Hercules. He worked every day for two years with the dramatic coach, the late Sophie Rosenstein who kept assuring worried producers that the boy did have talent, but needed work to bring it out. Rock studied diction and drama, doing pantomime and improvisation. Everybody else under contract did the same thing, but Rock went at it harder, perhaps realizing that he had to. He exposed a seriousness and an ambition that nobody was sure he had. He learned fencing, archery, riding, singing, sailing, card tricks, football and "gun work." For his role as a boxer in The Iron Man he trained three months in exactly the same way a professional fighter trains. He submitted to having his chest shaved for Indian roles and to wearing his hair long for frontier parts. He seemed tireless, and he was willing. In 1951 he worked five months without a day off and never once complained. "I asked for work when I signed up," he said. "And I got it."

They put him in one picture after another, with personal appearance tours sandwiched between. A shy young man, he found meeting the public a torturous ordeal, but he persevered and followed instructions. He made friends. He began to acquire poise.

AMERICA's teen-agers discovered him and flooded him with adulation. He took the barrage standing up and without turning his head. One adolescent wrote him of her bitter loneliness without him, and added, "My dearest, darling Rock, I shall die with a kiss on my lips for you." When a sensitive and impressionable young man like Rock gets tons of letters like this, he does well to be able to accept the fact with bewilderment and gratitude, yet continue to wear the same size hat.

He viewed his publicity chores with a similarly sane attitude. He answered the same questions a hundred times over with remarkable politeness and patience, and when asked to pose for beefcake pictures, grumbled only to his co-workers. He knew that such shenanigans were necessary to his career and that his cooperation would, in part, repay the studio for its tremendous investment in him. He has been acutely embarrassed every time he has been asked to remove his shirt for a photographer, yet he has done it with a minimum of complaint. With interviewers, he shows irresistible charm. When asked to talk about women or give advice on the problems of life, he has flinched as politely as possible, declared his lack of authority on the subject and has done his level best to steer it into oblivion.

That Rock had been a solid bet is more and more obvious each day. As for his health, he has cooperated beyond the line of duty. His appendix had been a worry for several years. During his training period there had been no time for an operation, and now came a string of pictures, one after the other. The appendix didn't bother him much of the time, but as Rock said, "Every time I go down in an elevator, my appendix goes up." His doctor warned him that it should come out immediately, but the schedule planned for him by the studio allowed no time. While on location for Gun Fury in a fairly wild spot of Arizona, he had another attack. It was bad enough to make him pause and consider. His next picture was to be Taza, Son Of Cochise, and five weeks of the shooting were to be spent near Moab, Utah, a desolate stretch of country with the nearest settlement more than two hours from the location site. Rock finally submitted to the operation and soon after he was galloping over the plains of Utah.

Home from Moab, he was rushed into rehearsals, fittings and tests for his role in Magnificent Obsession. During his two days off in the midst of the chaos, he went to Laguna Beach and was dashed into the hard sand by a wave. That broke his collarbone. Proper treatment would have included traction or an operation, but Magnificent Obsession was set to roll, and Rock Hudson isn't one to hold up production. He went to work with an improperly set collarbone and a good sized bump on his shoulder.

february's exciting issue of modern screen

takes you through the closed doors of the john wayne divorce—for the truth behind the mudslinging!

At your newsstand

january 8

By now, executives knew that Rock was serious about his career and anxious to make a success of it. This, in addition to good looks, was good news. They had yet to find out about his acting ability. The films to which he had been assigned had not given him much opportunity for acting. They had been blood and thunder concoctions, not depending on dialogue for their success, and Rock's lines had required little in the way of talent. And so, when the first rushes of Magnificent Obsession came through, the studio brass hurried to see them. They were more than surprised at the results. Rock showed up, in his first difficult dramatic role, as a seasoned actor. In previous pictures his love scenes had left a lot to be desired. He had made love like a truck driver or, as he put it, "I just go in and mash the make-up." Now he was different, different in many ways. It was almost as though they were watching a stranger up there on the screen. His delineation was sensitive, beautifully timed, his heavier scenes were professionally underplayed. The brass whooped with joy. Their gamble had paid off.

ROCK had the looks, the ambition and the talent. They couldn't want more. But they got more. They found that Mr. Hudson, who had slipped through his formal schooling with the least possible interest in study, reads incessantly. Their new star is a student in many fields. It is hard to draw him out, but when pressed Rock will admit his deep interest in the ancient philosophers. This is the boy who flunked history in school. It just goes to show that you never can tell about boys who don't study when they're told.

More important than his book learning was his level head. A sought-after bachelor in Hollywood, he had kept out of trouble—a neat trick in the tinsel town. He had reached the age of twenty-eight without marrying; another major feat. Rock anticipates with pleasure having a wife and children and a home of his own, but because he does take it so seriously, he has been cautious. Even girls who would like him for their own have admitted, "Rock is wise not to marry yet. He knows he isn't ready yet and he must establish his career first. He's so serious about marriage that he is marking time. He doesn't want to make a mistake." People who don't know him well have surmised that he stays single because of studio pressure. Bachelor stars are considered more valuable than married stars. The assumption is unlikely because, while Rock cooperates in other respects, he can't stand regimentation and is not a man to brook interference in his private life. When he decides to marry, it is a good bet he will marry despite any objections anybody might have.

It turned out that all in all, the ex-laundryman third class had brains. And he had something else—something perhaps more important than all the other things put together. He had appeal. He made friends both on and off screen, because he is a likable guy.

His generosity covers both the concrete and the abstract. He not only reaches for the check, but likes to take others to lunch. When he goes on location he invites friends to live in his house and enjoy it while he's gone. "And bring the dogs," he says. Thoughtful and considerate, if he likes you, everything he has is yours. He is one of the rare people who inquires "How are you?" and really wants to know. He listens to others' confidences and troubles and plain conversation—really listens. Rock is such a good listener, as a matter of fact, that it contributed to his reputation for shyness. It isn't that. Rock listens and learns instead of talking to make an impression.

These things make other men like him and for a studio it is a happy thing to have on its roster a man's man. Even more important, from a career standpoint, is his appeal for the opposite sex, and in this respect Rock has exceeded expectations.

Why does he have sex appeal? For a woman who is insecure and likes dominant, protective men, the ruggedly masculine Rock fills the bill. He weighs more than 200 pounds, towers six feet, four inches, and gives the impression of suppressed power. A woman whose maternal instincts work overtime, would find Rock's boyish charm all she could wish for. He appeals to both types because he has great pride, and at the same time, considerable humility.

He is innately kind. He loves kids and animals and is soft-hearted. He frets about other people's problems. He lives outside of himself, and except for worrying about his work, he seldom thinks about himself.

He is impressed by those he admires. When he met Jeanette MacDonald for the first time, he recalled how he had adored her on the screen. He impulsively bowed and kissed her hand.

HE HAS been serious only in unguarded moments, seemingly hiding the fact that he can be serious, and for a long time nobody suspected he was more than a big lovable clown. He was so much fun on a date—"so crazy you never knew what he was going to do"—that girls got happy about seeing him hours before he showed up at the front door.

Not only extremely handsome, he is elusive, intentionally or otherwise. He has dated many girls in Hollywood but few have felt they really know him, and the tall, dark and mysterious man has always been a magnet to women. He is forever on the move and hard to find. In five years he has lived in nine houses and is currently looking for another. The result is that his phone number is constantly changing, and even if a girl wants to sink her pride and phone him, the number she has is usually outmoded. More often than not, he is on location. In the past few years he has made pictures in France, in Portland, the Channel Islands, Tucson, Arrowhead and Gallup. If he is in town and working, he's likely to be playing football in the Rose Bowl or a love scene in the zoo. He leads a typical bachelor life in that he spends his days impulsively when not working. A man like this is hard to pin down.

And to add to his appeal, there is always competition. Even during his sojourn at the hospital, Rock gained new fans. According to reports, a good part of the nursing staff was smitten in one degree or another, and when Rock asked for a private room (so that he could study surgery for his doctor's role in Magnificent Obsession), the staff split into two factions. Half the nurses arranged a private room for him and the other half managed to keep him where he was, under their own loving care. The fact that this attention from women of all ages (they write they would like him for a husband, brother, lover, son, and even grandson) doesn't affect Rock's opinion of himself, makes him an even better catch. And all the more exasperating to those who would like to become Mrs. Hudson.

IN THE past six months Rock has settled noticeably. He is not as gay as he was. He has traded in his fire engine red convertible for a more conservative yellow one. His role in Magnificent Obsession has at last allowed him a normal haircut, and the new Rock emerges as a well groomed, mature man with considerably more dignity than anyone suspected. He is looking for a house again, but this time he is searching for a house to buy, rather than rent. For the first time in his life Rock is living alone, and hating it. All signs point to the fact that Rock has grown up and wants to settle into a routine home life. With each passing week, he seems riper for matrimony. He hasn't announced any intentions, and no one knows who the girl will be, perhaps not even Rock himself, but those who know him can see marriage in the offing.

Rock's career seems to be as solid as his name. "This picture will establish him as a star in his own right," says a man who has carefully watched the rushes of Magnificent Obsession. "He's no flash in the pan, and deserves only the best roles from now on." The studio can well claim that they found him and trained him, but it is Rock himself who has assured them a fat dividend on their investment. As the local wags say, he is the best built actor in Hollywood. END

9 OUT OF 10 LEADING COVER GIRLS PREFER

SWEETHEART SOAP

"Its More Luxuriant Lather Keeps Me Fresh All Day"

"Beauty is my business," says Hope Lange, "and SweetHeart is my beauty soap. SweetHeart's more luxuriant lather, so wonderfully fragrant, keeps me fresh all day. Best of all, SweetHeart Care helps prevent chapping . . . keeps my skin soft and smooth as a flower petal."

Try pure, mild SweetHeart for your skin! In just 7 days, see how much softer and smoother your complexion looks.

SWEETHEART The Soap That AGREES with Your Skin

the man for mitzi

(Continued from page 38) that inspired the first and assured the second, is stronger than ever.

Mitzi and Jack Bean will be married. It will be a church wedding. It will take place soon. The couple will make their home in Hollywood. They expect to live there happily ever after. All these things Mitzi has been heard to say; all these things she is looking forward to.

Mitzi isn't wearing a ring yet (or wasn't up to a few weeks ago) but that isn't of any concern to her.

Jack, a graduate of the University of Minnesota, where he majored in psychology, made the varsity basketball team and just missed making the varsity football team. He is with an advertising agency in Hollywood. Six years ago, he was employed as a psychologist in a Brentwood hospital. Then he got interested in the advertising business and then found a niche where a knowledge of psychology can be usefully applied. While he has no desire to get into show business he is a talented pianist. When Mitzi wants to go over a song she doesn't have to send for an accompanist. He's right there—probably holding her hand, in fact.

Mitzi's musical taste has always run to the classical but since she has been with Jack there has been a strong strain of jazz. He is the kind of bug who needs only to listen to a jazz or Dixieland group to tell you who is playing the piano or strumming the guitar strings. He has no aversion to formal concerts but more likely than not when they go out for a musical evening they will wind up in a place like the Lighthouse on the beach where the "blue note" is the good note.

Jack proved to be provocative from the first moment Mitzi met him on the evening of February 9 of last year. He was the "other fellow" on a foursome date, brought in for Mitzi's friend by Mitzi's date. But the friend phoned that she was sick and Mitzi went out with both boys. Somehow, Jack didn't know who she was. "What do you do?" he asked.

"I'm in show business," was Mitzi's answer.

Jack let it go at that, the first man she had ever met who didn't press for details, so that they remained sort of bottled up for the rest of the evening. He seemed content with the fact that she was just a girl he had met and that they got along nicely. And for Mitzi, too, after a while, just being a girl and not being a celebrity along with it, was strangely new and pleasant.

They went to the Cocoanut Grove at the Ambassador hotel that first night. Since Mitzi's official date was an agent who had a client on the show, he spent a lot of time away from the table on business and Mitzi and Jack were left together. The romance went into high from that moment.

There are any number of incidents and stories revealing how important Jack has become to Mitzi—in fact, there are facts and figures that show it. Down in the wardrobe department at 20th Century-Fox Studios, where they keep dummies in the form of every star, there have been some changes made on Mitzi's. Her figure, according to the wardrobe dummy, used to measure thirty-five inches around the bust, twenty-three at the waist and thirty-six and a half inches at the hips. The new measurements are thirty-six, twenty-one and thirty-five. The reasons for this can be traced to several conversations Mitzi had with Jack.

One evening they were looking at a fashion magazine and Jack pointed out a gown he liked. He said he thought he'd like to see Mitzi in it.

"Don't you think I'm a little too round for it?" she wanted to know, and leaned back, waiting to hear him protest that this wasn't the case at all. But when he answered she sat straight up.

"Well, you don't have to be," is what he said.

"Oh?" came from Mitzi, in a small voice.

The subject of bathing suits came up when they were looking at another magazine and he told her the kind he thought she should wear. She tried the same answer—wasn't she too round for that?

"Well, yeah," he said.

Fade out, and fade in on Mitzi doing a lot of thinking. And she has put the resolutions that have come out of her thinking to work. As a result, the wardrobe people had to do some modifying of her dummy so that the gowns selected for her pictures would fit. Mitzi intends to fit nicely into any sort of gown or swim suit Jack fancies for her.

When Mitzi recently went to Durango, Colorado, on location for her newest picture, Three Young Texans, an assignment that was to last two weeks, Jack gave her to understand that he was going to miss her. Mitzi did what she could. Every night for fourteen nights she phoned him and talked forty-five minutes at each session. Cost (even if she did reverse the charges) was $15 a night at the rate of a dollar for each three minutes.

There was a moment in the filming of Three Young Texans when Mitzi thought it would be the last picture she would ever make. She had never done any serious riding before, and her role called for a bit of horsemanship. She had to take lessons, and along with her, as pupils, rode her two co-stars, Keefe Brasselle and Jeffrey Hunter. They, too, were new to western stuff.

In one scene the script called for Mitzi to kick at the sheriff and gallop away. Mitzi kicked—and found herself under the horse's hooves.

"What did you do?" asked Jack, hanging on to the phone in Hollywood when she reported this.

"Nothing," Mitzi told him. "The horse blew his lips at me and danced away as daintily as a ballet queen. It's a little terpsichorean routine I'll never forget!"

Readers of Modern Screen will remember perhaps, that not long ago Mitzi wrote a column in which she gave advice about new boy friends. Somehow, Mitzi isn't following her own counsel in her relationship to Jack. She said that a girl should be very independent and never call up the boy. But when there's been a spat about anything and Mitzi reflects later that she might have been wrong, to the phone she goes, to call up Jack.

Mitzi meant what she wrote in Modern Screen but, as she puts it, "New conditions call for new strategy." She has always held that the best way for a girl to introduce her beau to her friends is to have them all meet him at a party at which he is a sort of co-host. That party to introduce Jack Bean has yet to be thrown. She has been with Jack so steadily, and has made known her thoughts about him so plainly, that an affair to "introduce" him now would be anti-climactic.

She also wrote in her column that she would have a few things to say about the way he dressed—if she thought his taste could be improved. Jack, who runs to the Brooks Brothers type of clothes, quiet, restrained, and who says his hair is getting "shaggy" when the crew-cut gets to be more than three quarters of an inch long, must look perfect to Mitzi. She admits that there are only approving glances from her when he shows up. Maybe that's the way it is when you're in love. Maybe that's why Mitzi didn't root for the University of Southern California at the Minnesota game last fall. Jack took her to see the game; he yelled for his alma mater and so did Mitzi—all the way. It didn't keep Minnesota from being beaten but it made Jack feel better.

Jack had a chance to root for Mitzi when she had her appendix removed some months ago. Friends of Mitzi's at 20th recall that every time they visited her at the hospital there were so many flowers in the room the only place to sit was on the floor—and there Jack was, every day. He kept up her spirits before and after the operation, he took her home from the hospital, and he was in attendance all through her convalescence. "What an operation!" Mitzi sighs fondly when she talks about it.

His inspirational effect on her is something that Mitzi has come to depend on. Like all performers, she is nervous about an impending personal appearance. When the day of her performance at the Hollywood Bowl rolled around last summer, Jack seemed to step right in between her butterflies and herself. They never got to her. With his knowledge of psychology he seems to know just what to say and do—and when.

He has given Mitzi a new attitude toward her work. When she used to complain about being terribly tired after a strenuous dance rehearsal he withheld his sympathy. "Dancing is your business," he told her. "You are trained for it and you should know your capabilities in terms of time you spend in each session and the effort you put into it. Guide yourself accordingly and don't overdo."

This makes sense to Mitzi. She knows she will last longer and do better with such a formula than if she continues to throw herself into her dance until completely exhausted.

Mitzi and Jack are close enough to marriage to have discussed the bad influence Hollywood is credited with having on marital happiness. Jack is not affected. "A place is what you make it," he has told her. "Hollywood has been good to both of us. It's up to us."

The way Mitzi feels about it is that what's okay with Jack is okay with her. She just wants to be with him, she says, from now on. When she is with other people she talks about him. When she is alone she thinks about him. She even likes to drive his car instead of her own better one, because his, she insists, drives just like Jack.

"Everything about it is like him," she says. "It starts, stops, turns, decisively, as if it knows just what it's doing. Just like Jack. It's the next best thing to actually being at his side!" END

PHOTO CREDITS

Below you will find credited page by page, the photographs which appear in this issue:

6, 7, 8, 10, 13—Parry, Beerman; 19—Modern Screen staff; 20—MGM; 22, 23—Modern Screen staff; 24—Beerman, Parry; 26, 27—20th Century-Fox, Modern Screen staff; 28, 29—Beerman, Parry; 30, 31—Parry, Beerman; 33—Modern Screen staff; 34, 35, 36—Beerman, Parry; 37—Modern Screen staff; 38, 39—Modern Screen staff; 40, 41—Modern Screen staff; 42, 43—20th Century-Fox, Parry; 44, 45—Beerman, Parry; 46—Beerman, Parry.

antiques on a budget

(Continued from page 36) table is still crude, design-wise, but it's perfect for the Brasselles' informal room. Sturdy and practical, it holds a raft of magazines, ashtrays and bric-a-brac, and guests put their feet on it all the time without Norma's ever turning a hair.

ALTHOUGH the Brasselles can now afford to pay for genuine antiques (like their cherry-colored secretary and beautiful mantel clock) most of their Early American furniture was collected in the same way Keefe acquired the coffee table. The furniture was bought secondhand and renovated.

Keefe and Normie would poke around antique shops, secondhand stores, and junk yards until they found a good but dilapidated piece of furniture. Keefe would size up the state of collapse. If he felt it was capable of redemption, he'd go up to the dealer and say "You want two bucks for that worthless, rotten, old rocker over there?"

More times than not, the dealers would say yes. Most of the early furniture repair work was done with borrowed tools in a friend's workshop. Finally, Keefe picked up a set of power tools, secondhand, of course, and set up a workroom in his two-car garage.

Two years after moving into their own six-room house, the Brasselles can truthfully boast that not a single one of their antiques is a reproduction. Among antique collectors this is considered a rather hefty claim. The Brasselles regard it as a major accomplishment.

Back in 1946 when they left Elyria, Ohio, to crash Hollywood, they were a young married couple, struggling to get along. Keefe was an ex-G.I., and they had an infant daughter, Erin, whom everyone calls Mickey, and their only stake was Keefe's Army severance pay and a few hand-me-downs from Norma's family such as a patchwork quilt, a brass teakettle, and some little old kerosene lamps which Norma's mother had used as a child to light her way to bed. Their car was also an antique and they had a budget.

This budget changed every day. By the time they reached Hollywood, the Brasselles discovered that their budget had reached the disappearing stage. Impressed with the need for getting work, Keefe hurriedly installed his wife and baby in the only kind of home he could manage at the time. "We used to say in letters home," Norma recalls, "that we were living out of the high-rent district. This is the same pitch you hear nowadays by used-car salesmen on the radio. Actually, we lived in a one-room apartment on North Hoover Street. The rent was $39.50 a month."

While trying to land a movie role, Keefe ranged from job to job, from Christmas card salesman to bartender. Nights, he auditioned for radio roles. Lunch times, he hounded the casting offices. He managed to get one small part in a film called River Gang with Gloria Jean, nothing afterwards for a long time, and then a lucky break. Ida Lupino cast him in her independent production, Not Wanted, and paid him $3,000 for his work.

"Most actors," Norma says, "would have taken this first piece of good luck as an omen. The tendency is to tell yourself that prosperity has arrived, and the temptation to buy all the things you've stinted on is almost overpowering."

"The show business tradition," Keefe points out, "is to live up to your biggest salary. And I must admit Normie and I were tempted to do something extravagant. We'd been poor so long that we deserved

WILL YOUR HUSBAND ALWAYS LOVE YOU?

Here leading experts show that women, unlike men, have to learn to make love . . . and that the answer to your happiness in marriage greatly depends on how much you know

FIRST EDITION
35¢
WOMEN
The Variety and Meaning of Their Sexual Experience
Edited by A. M. KRICH
Introduction by MARGARET MEAD

JUST 35¢

FOR THE FIRST TIME EVER IN BOOK FORM
. . . A NEW DELL FIRST EDITION

Not just cold statistics like the Kinsey Report but a warm, human and understanding book in which 13 experts (both pioneers and contemporary investigators) combine to bring you the whole picture on the variety and the meaning of your entire sexual experience. Women is a thoughtful and thorough consideration of the major aspects of sex in relation to self, society and the species. Inspired by Dr. Margaret Mead, a remarkable scientist and woman, you'll find it a practical and helpful guide to enrich your knowledge and enjoyment for a richer, fuller, more satisfying life.

"Through the ages, women's lives have centered about their sex role. . . . Where for men actual sex activity, however insistently it may intrude upon attention, is a matter of few minutes, for women each of these few minutes is laden with commitment before and commitment afterwards. Where men have to learn to want to be fathers, girls are committed by every cell in their bodies to a more engrossing and time-consuming role. . . . This situation produces a pattern of opposites: women have to learn to say 'no' not only to their would-be lovers, but also to their desires, before they are finally allowed to say 'yes' to a husband who ideally is both desired and desiring, while men have to say 'yes' to their own impulses towards women before they laboriously learn to say 'no' to most of those impulses towards women in general in order to be faithful to their wives."

From the introduction by MARGARET MEAD

NOW ON SALE WHEREVER POCKETSIZE BOOKS ARE SOLD

to have things a little easier. Before we splurged, however, we sat down and talked things over. We both agreed that what I was working for and working toward, was a home of our own. We wanted a house large enough so Mickey might have a room of her own, and we wanted the house to be small and compact so that Norma could take care of it alone. And we wanted it outright so that no matter how our luck changed, a bank or a mortgage company couldn't foreclose."

They talked the subject out from every angle. Normie, who's particularly clear-sighted about this sort of thing, pointed out that they could afford a larger apartment with a "better address" but the accompanying rent would only postpone the day when they'd have enough money for the down payment on a house. There was no avenue for disagreement. They both chose to stay in the one-room apartment with Murphy bed on North Hoover.

They lived there for a year and a half even after Keefe, with fair regularity, began to get some good motion picture parts.

But they did buy a new car, an Oldsmobile convertible.

During those lean years, the Brasselles used to look for inexpensive ways to have fun. One of the ways was to rummage through antique shops and buy nothing that cost more than twenty-five cents. They bought fruit dishes and odd bottles.

When they got their Oldsmobile, they began visiting the model homes that operative builders construct, furnish, and open to the buying public around Los Angeles. It was fun day-dreaming in a glamorously furnished bedroom or trying out the latest kitchen appliances. "We visited every open house," Keefe says, "from Pasadena to Malibu."

On one particularly lovely Sunday they tossed Mickey in the back seat and began the twisting, turning drive through Laurel Canyon to the San Fernando Valley. They told Mickey to keep a sharp lookout for the advertising signs that real estate men put out to attract customers. Halfway through Laurel Canyon they spotted the offices of a builder and land developer named William Mellenthin. On an impulse Keefe stopped the car. He went in and asked if any new houses were available for inspection. Mr. Mellenthin himself happened to be working behind the desk and offered to drive the whole Brasselle family to a couple of new homes.

Keefe and Normie liked what they saw—the modified farmhouse style of architecture, the careful detailing, the outsize patio. In fact, they liked everything but the price—$40,000.

"We think your homes are great," Keefe said. "But honestly, we can't afford them. What we're looking for is a two-bedroom house in a good middle income neighborhood."

"Tell you what," Mr. Mellenthin suggested. "Why don't you look at my model home in the Valley?"

The smaller Mellenthin house located in a beautiful walnut grove the company had subdivided, was priced at $20,000.

"We walked through the model," Norma says, "and we knew our free game of just looking at homes was over. We were sold. The house was the size we needed. It was near a school, a shopping district, and a church, and the neighborhood had children to keep Mickey company. We were so completely sold on the model that we picked out a lot that very afternoon and asked Mr. Mellenthin to duplicate his model for us."

The Brasselle house features many of the good floor-plan details adopted from the larger Mellenthin homes. For example, a long living room with an open dining alcove at one end runs across the front of the house. This one large living area makes the small house seem more spacious than it really is. The two corner bedrooms are square and loaded with built-in closet space. A restful, pine-paneled den with its own fireplace is built at the back of the house leading on to the patio. The practical but picturesque Early American kitchen is sensibly placed between the dining area and the patio for outdoor eating.

While the house was under construction, Keefe and Norma worked hard at getting their furnishings. Norma began to take lessons in rug-making and produced a braided wool rug for the den. Eventually, she hopes to complete two more for the bedrooms.

Keefe located practical pieces like two ancient dough bases on which he put legs so that they could be used as lamp tables. He also found two authentic farmhouse-type dry sinks. He scraped the larger one clean of its blue enamel coating and refinished it as a buffet for the dining room. He outfitted the smaller one with a turntable, transforming it into a cabinet for the record player.

He made the plate rail in the kitchen and wooden curtain valances over all the windows. He also worked out an ingenious way to show home movies. He hung the movie screen behind the valance above the dining room bay window. Then he cut a small projection window in an ordinary sliding door that leads to the bedrooms. By placing his projector in the hall and projecting his movies through the window in the sliding door he achieves the quiet effect of a professional movie theatre.

In the woman's department Norma was equally practical. Wherever she could, she used cotton fabrics—in the curtains, upholstery, and bedspreads. "This makes the upkeep very simple," she explains. "I wash the curtains and spreads at home. When the upholstered pieces get dirty I clean them myself, too. I just take some detergent, a vegetable brush, and warm water. I scrub the soap suds over a small area. As one spot gets clean I blot up the suds with a turkish towel, then move to another area. The whole job dries overnight. You'd be surprised how well it turns out."

A few months after the Brasselles moved into their new home, Keefe got the good luck bonus of his career. He won the coveted role of Eddie Cantor in the screen biography of the famous banjo-eyed comedian.

"Normie and I," he says, "were bursting with pure, unadulterated pride, but about all we could think of doing with the extra money was to budget some for savings and some for wiring and mounting a couple of lamps we've never gotten around to. When you've been poor as long as we have, it takes time to get used to spending money, even a little of it." END

DO YOU FEEL NEGLECTED?

Do you have a favorite star whose picture hasn't appeared in MODERN SCREEN lately? Or are you interested in an off-screen romance that hasn't been getting enough attention? Well, here's your opportunity to change all that. Just let us know who you want to read about in your magazine by filling in the form below as soon as you've read all the stories in this issue. Then mail it to us right away because (just to make it more interesting) a crisp new one-dollar bill will go to each of the first hundred people we hear from.

QUESTIONNAIRE: Which stories and features did you enjoy most in this issue? WRITE THE NUMBERS 1, 2, and 3 AT THE FAR LEFT of your first, second and third choices. Then let us know what stars you'd like to read about in future issues.

☐ June Haver Comes Home
☐ No Trouble At All (Esther Williams)
☐ Please Don't Talk About Me (Gable)
☐ Solid As A Rock (Rock Hudson)
☐ Running Wild (Debra Paget)
☐ Janet Rules The Roost (Janet Leigh)
☐ "Call Me Pinhead" (Gordon MacRae)
☐ What Really Happened To Doris Day
☐ Antiques On A Budget (Brasselle)
☐ The Turning Point (Shelley Winters)
☐ The Man For Mitzi (Mitzi Gaynor)
☐ The Way Christmas Should Be (June Allyson-Dick Powell)
☐ Crazy Like A Fox (Victor Mature)
☐ Hollywood Hot Rods
☐ The Ham Got Results (Byron Palmer)
☐ The Inside Story
☐ Louella Parsons' Good News
☐ Hollywood Abroad
☐ TV Talk
☐ Love Story (Eve Arden)
☐ The Power Of A Woman (Lori Nelson)
☐ Get-Rich-Quick Robertson
☐ Discovery Corner (Lance Fuller)
☐ They Threw Away A Million For Love (Glenn Ford and Eleanor Powell)
☐ Why Do Frank And Ava Fight?
☐ How Did He Propose? (Joan Caulfield)
☐ Something to Groan About (Crosby)
☐ Doing A Split (Leslie Caron)
☐ Stork Over Lanza-land

Which of the stories did you like least?

What 3 MALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.

What FEMALE stars would you like to read about in future issues?

What MALE star do you like least?

What FEMALE star do you like least?

My name is..........................

My address is..........................

City.................... State......

Occupation......... I am .... yrs. old

ADDRESS TO: POLL DEPT., MODERN SCREEN, BOX 125, MURRAY HILL STATION, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

the ham got results

(Continued from page 46) with a bum landing gear had ploughed into Navy replacement planes loaded with ammo and bombs. It was like tossing a torch into a fireworks factory and seventy-eight planes were destroyed, some G.I. lives, too. That night Corporal Byron Palmer turned on the heat more fiercely than ever. Of course he forgot those irate resolves about the feminine sex. It's a good thing he did.

Because as things have turned out, it was girls who made Byron Palmer what he is today—one of Hollywood's top romantic male hopes. Ladies have been delightfully decisive in his past, as they are in his present and obviously will continue to be in his future.

Curiously, even that Tokyo traitress boosted his ambitions by proving he could fascinate an audience with words and music. Later he got his first show business breaks charming the matinee set all over the U.S.A. in dashing roles in romantic operettas. Slightly over a year ago, Byron sneaked into a preview at Inglewood, California, where he wasn't supposed to be, sat long enough to hear girlish squeals and sighs as his first picture, Tonight We Sing, unreeled. Then he eased out, red-faced but happy. That feminine reaction brought him his contract and his buildup at Twentieth Century-Fox.

Any way you look at it, the girls have something for Byron Palmer and Byron has something for the girls. It's pretty simple to see why.

He has a face as clean-cut as Greek sculpture, eyes as blue as the South Pacific and a smile that makes dentists want to toss away their tools. He's got a six, two, 180-pound body with a forty-five-inch chest and a thirty-one-inch waist. His build looks like Johnny Weissmuller's twenty years ago. He's gentle, courtly, gay, engaging—and he sings easily and beautifully. One mesmerized girl wrote to him rhapsodically: "If you put Robert Taylor, Clark Gable and Cary Grant in a bag, shook it well and dumped out the result—that would be you, Byron!"

All this, while reassuring, is a little embarrassing to Byron Palmer. Extravagant word pictures are strictly taboo in his family. When you mention the name "Palmer" around Hollywood, people think right away of the leading town gazette, the Hollywood Citizen-News. By's Dad, Harlan J. Palmer, publishes the paper. His big brother, Harlan, Junior, is assistant publisher and his younger one, Ralph, is the San Fernando Valley editor. His aunt, Zuma Palmer, runs the radio page.

By tradition, Byron Palmer ought to be interviewing Hollywood stars instead of being interviewed. The Citizen-News doesn't write about him. There's a copy desk rule there: No stories about Byron Palmer—at his own request. He's touchy about the home folks' getting any idea that he could or would use the family rag as a puff sheet. He's independent. A boy who calls Hollywood his home town has to be independent to get anywhere in show business. Nobody knows that better than Byron Palmer, who was born there July 21, 1923, in what was really an earth-shaking event.

He arrived at seven o'clock in the morning and that afternoon the California terra was not so firma. It heaved, quaked and rolled; and the more sinful Hollywoodites dashed out of their stucco palaces in repentant terror. It was the worst shake the place had suffered since Gilda Gray hit town.

Of course Byron Palmer doesn't remember anything about this. All that geological upheaval did was rock the tiny guy to sleep. But they've told him about it since. And they passed on a more shattering bit of information: He was supposed to be a girl named Dora. The switch to Byron has turned out to be a pretty happy idea. He has something in common with the great Lord Byron—noble profile, wavy pompadour and all. He's romantic and dramatic, too, and he has even scribbled some poetry, although the less said about that the better. By is a brunette with blue-black hair, inky whiskers, tan skin and flashing teeth.

Byron Hunkins Palmer, as the Presbyterian minister christened him, couldn't have landed in a more solid, respectable and secure setup if he had been born in Minnesota, where his parents came from, instead of Hollywood. His father was a judge before he entered newspaper publishing. Everyone in the whole Palmer clan (eighty-five of them showed up at a recent Fourth of July gathering) were and still are super conservative. The only one in the family who had ever dabbled in the arts was his mother, Ethelyn Hunkins, who once studied operatic singing for her own enjoyment. "We're all just nice middle class people," By sums it up, "all of us, that is, except me. I'm the freak. But I must have been born with this streak of ham. As a kid, Hollywood never gave me any glamour ideas. It was just my home town."

One reason was that while he lived in the heart of Hollywood and used to lose baseballs over the walls of nearby RKO or Paramount Studios, the family sent him to the University Elementary School way out in Westwood Village. University is a pioneer in progressive education and the Palmers were firm believers in giving all their kids a chance to develop any skills they liked. Although he might have been tabbed a maverick (as By says, "a kind of a black sheep and a moron") by some of his relatives when he went in for show business instead of the family newspaper, none of his own tribe ever gave him lectures or tried to tout him off of whatever he chose to do.

"Fuzz" Palmer (he got that still-clinging family tag from an early butch haircut) first reacted to scholastic freedom by falling desperately in love with his pretty blonde teacher. At the same time he fell in love with a curly top his own age and he remembers scribbling passionate billets doux to her when they were only six. He still has a scar on his right eye, collected when he tried to impress her by jumping over five concrete steps, only to crack up on the third. Romance and recklessness were coupled throughout Fuzz Palmer's boyhood.

Once, he slashed his finger half off whittling a doll for a lady fair, and another time, absorbed in making a model boat to sail for another cutie got run over by a two-ton truck, miraculously without being squashed. Doing flips to fascinate a third, he broke his arm.

His ma called him "the middle-sized bear." Between his two brothers, Byron was perpetually embroiled in slugging matches when one or the other muscled in on a romance. Neighboring housewives used to call up his mother hysterically and report that Cain and Abel were at it again in her front yard. The first money By ever earned—three bucks—he socked grandly into a box of Valentine candy for another doll, who most ungratefully carried it home without giving him a piece. That ill-spent stake, by the way, Byron earned acting in his first movie—not in Hollywood, but out at Malibu Lake.

The Palmers kept a summer cabin there—the Hunky-Dory—and By's brightest kid memories center around that shack. Malibu is a lovely lake set in the heart of the coast range and yet only thirty-five

New! Clearasil Medication

'STARVES' PIMPLES

SKIN-COLORED... hides pimples while it works

DOCTORS' TESTS PROVE
9 out of 10 cases cleared up
...or definitely improved

Doctors' clinical tests prove this new medication especially for pimples really works. In skin specialists' tests on 202 patients, 9 out of every 10 cases were cleared up or definitely improved.

Amazing starving action. CLEARASIL actually starves pimples because it helps remove the oils that pimples "feed" on. And CLEARASIL'S antiseptic action stops the growth of bacteria that can cause and spread pimples. Skin-colored to hide pimples and end embarrassment. Greaseless, stainless... pleasant to leave on day and night for uninterrupted medication.

America's largest-selling specific pimple medication... because CLEARASIL has helped so many boys, girls and adults. GUARANTEED to work for you as it did in doctor's tests or money back. Only 59¢ and 98¢. At all druggists—Get CLEARASIL today.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

Now also available in Canada (slightly more)

DESTROY UNWANTED HAIR FOREVER

Temporary relief is NOT enough

Only by KILLING THE HAIR ROOT can you be sure UNWANTED HAIR is GONE FOREVER. Brings relief and social happiness. Do not use our method until you have read our instruction book carefully and learned to use the MAHLER METHOD safely and efficiently. Used successfully over fifty years.

SEND 5¢ TODAY FOR BOOKLET

NEW BEAUTY FOR YOU

MAHLER'S, INC. Dept. 36-A, PROVIDENCE 15, R. I.

SILK FINISH ENLARGEMENTS 5x7 SIZE 29¢ each 8x10 SIZE 59¢ each GOLD TOOLED FRAMES

Check number, size and color of frames
☐ 1—5x7 ☐ 2—5x7
☐ Ivory and Gold
☐ 1—8x10 ☐ 2—8x10
☐ Brown and Gold

Beautiful silk finish black and white enlargements made from your favorite snapshots, photos or negatives. Be sure to include color of hair, eyes and clothing for having your enlargements beautifully hand colored in oil. SEND NO MONEY. Simply pay postman for each enlargement and each frame plus cost of mailing. Additional $1.29 for hand coloring 5x7 size or $1.69 for 8x10 size. Satisfaction guaranteed. Limit 2 to a customer. Originals returned with enlargements. Offer good in U.S.A. only. Prompt service.

HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS, Dept. NF-121
7021 SANTA MONICA BLVD., HOLLYWOOD 38, CALIF.

miles from the Citizen-News. The family moved there en masse every June and stayed until Labor Day while the Judge commuted. Picture companies went out there on location. By earned his three bills for waving from a flimsy dock as Wallace Beery and Marie Dressler pretended to be on San Francisco Bay in Tugboat Annie. It wasn't any special honor that he got in the extra line. All the vacation kids got rounded up and pressed into service, if they were old enough to lift their arms.

While these studio visits were pleasant vacation diversions, they weren't By Palmer's big charges. Those were swimming, riding, fishing and climbing the rocky knobs—with a female audience if possible—and if the easy movie money came along that was swell. What started him off on theatricals were family projects, right in his own conservative, middle-class home. His big brother got a home movie camera for Christmas, and his mother took Byron to see The Desert Song. That did it. Byron asked Santa for a scarlet hood, cape and mask so he could be The Red Shadow from that operetta—all over the place. "I ran around looking like Flash Gordon for weeks," he recalls fondly. "I was a sensation until the thing wore out."

A record of this glory still exists in the Palmer family archives in the form of a home-made film thriller, The Noose Hangs High. Harlan, Jr., wrote and directed it and the whole family emoted. "Dad was the villain. I? Oh, the hero, of course," grins By. That's how Byron Palmer's folks stamped an affirmative seal on any kid project. "They always went along with any crazy notions we had," he says gratefully. "They even bought—and what's more drank—the lemonade we kids squeezed with our dirty mitts and tried to sell. I really can't remember a crackdown in all my life."

With such a free-wheeling homelife it was only natural that skinny, gangling, handsome Byron Palmer should pack few inhibitions once he put on long pants and got out in the world. He immediately became a big operator in school politics, a leading light in shows and a juvenile Don Juan on the side. There wasn't much on either campus that Byron Palmer wasn't in, and looking back, By is pretty sure his successes there are what originally planted the performing bug deep in his noggin. "I was a show-off," he cheerfully admits. "I hammed up everything, but the ham got results." They elected him vice-president of the student body, then prexy, director of talent and head cheer leader, too. A big bloc of his constituents wore skirts—also red roses which Byron thoughtfully took to his favorites each morning. When the outcome of an election looked at all shaky, he instinctively turned on the heat with a fast bit of show business.

Sometimes his gags backfired, like the time he dressed as a nurse in a burlesque male fashion show he staged, tripped over his skirts and slammed down on a big glass bottle he carried. That cut an artery, and they sewed him up with twenty-two stitches. But usually Byron Palmer found that projecting his attractive personality paid off, and too, that he was happiest when he did it. A boy has to shine at something, and usually he likes what he's good at. As By admits, "I wasn't any shakes at sports—just a second string basketball forward and a so-so swimmer. I wasn't any young Einstein either. My kick was performing. I liked the excitement. I liked the applause. I still do."

By graduation time he knew what he wanted. It wasn't the newspaper business. Like all the Palmers, he had already been exposed to printer's ink just to see if it took. Two summers his dad gave him a job on the Citizen-News. The first time he was a copy boy. By the second season he had progressed to cub reporter. Unfortunately, most gems of prose By was assigned to write were in the obituary column. Once, he did break loose on an interview with Sonja Henie and actually saw his byline on the scoop. But none of this excited Byron enough to wink out the stars in his blue eyes.

As usual, his folks backed him up and sent him to Occidental College, which has a top drama and speech course. Byron lasted almost a year, and a pretty good year it was. He turned in fine grades, acted in college radio skits, got a part time job at Station KFAC in Hollywood and made the frosh swimming and basketball teams to boot. All the time something else was crowding his mind and his heart. One of those girls he used to give red roses.

Her name was Joann Ransom, a tall, striking brunette beauty who looked enough like By to be his sister. She had been in his class all the way through high school. There had been others but no one like Joann. He kept his blue Model-A roadster hot, racing back and forth to Los Angeles. When spring filled the air, Byron couldn't wait any longer. One balmy March day he quit school, drove Joann up to Santa Barbara and married the girl. He was nineteen and so was she. All he had to support a wife was his salary of $18 a week as a CBS page boy.

But of course that minor matter didn't bother a pair of nineteen-year-old newlyweds—or the groom's parents either. As always, they were with him. A little family financial help and an extra job at the studio tapping out time signals and station breaks on the graveyard shift took care of the tiny Hollywood apartment where Mr. and Mrs. Byron Palmer started housekeeping. As for entertainment, well, they were in love. The biggest hardship, as By remembers, was leaving his happy home at midnight to sit in a six-by-six booth and drone out endlessly—"Station KNX, Columbia Broadcasting System. It is now two A.M., Bulova Watch time."

I SAW IT HAPPEN

A friend of mine who has a house at the shore lived next door to a young fellow who wanted very much to be a great tenor. Every night after dinner he would exercise his vocal cords on the back porch, and because it was summer, and all the windows were open, the whole neighborhood could hear him. One evening, when I was visiting my friend, she decided she couldn't stand the disturbance any more, so as soon as the young tenor started singing on the back porch, my friend began pounding on the piano as loud as she could. What a good job she did of drowning out the tenor! A little later that evening, the young hopeful came over to the house and inquired about the piano playing. When he was told it was my friend, he replied, "That's the best I've ever heard you play." The young man's name was Mario Lanza.

Dolores Jones
Philadelphia, Pa.

Then Byron had a better idea than sitting up all night telling people the time. He signed up with the Air Corps, and in no time at all he was on the Arizona desert near Tucson at the Marana Air Base, a barren spot which later moved Red Skelton to observe feelingly, "The Army can find places that God forgot!" The Byron Palmers sweated out fourteen months there until Byron was "transferred immediately to Los Angeles for training preparatory to shipment overseas." That's what he got for telling everyone he was a radio announcer.

He learned his stuff at the Armed Forces Radio Service right back in Hollywood where he started, under Colonel Tom Lewis, who is Mister Loretta Young these days. Bing Crosby, Bob Hope, Dinah Shore, Johnny Mercer and about every important Hollywood star who could carry a tune strolled in and out those days for Command Performance and various G.I. transcription shows, but By Palmer had little contact with them. He was in the lower echelons at AFRS and in the end was shipped out ignominiously from Seattle crammed in the steamy bow of a liberty ship. He came up for air in Hawaii, but before he could buy a grass skirt for Joann he was whisked off to Eniwetok.

Neither sheltering palms nor dusky vahinis with hibiscus in their hair swayed on that South Sea isle. Naval shells had thoroughly scalped the place when the Marines landed, and only two palm trunks stuck up like drunken telephone poles. As for women—there wasn't anything in skirts on the whole atoll.

Still, By Palmer looks back on Eniwetok with a special fondness. Not only because it was there he realized what he wanted to do—sing and act—but because he put over his first real man-sized job. Bucking Tokyo Rose wasn't easy. GI's laughed at her insidious guff but they liked to listen; she had a typical American co-ed voice that made pleasant music to girl-starved ears, also a stack of the solid Stateside recordings. When Byron and his buddies set up their transmitter under one of those crazy palm trunks straight news was all they had to compete with T.R. A morale job needed more than that, Byron reasoned. He dug up a Seabee who could pat a piano, a couple of sailors who could sing, and with his own baritone "The Music Mates" went on the air. They clicked. Byron Palmer's trio got more G.I. fan mail than Betty Grable. And that's when he started thinking seriously about his post-war plans.

Byron wrote, produced, acted and sang on his WXLE program in Eniwetok for eight months, cutting Rosie down to size. The mission broke up when an inspection officer took one look at his cadaverous figure—shriveled from 180 to 130 pounds—and hustled him back to Hawaii for recuperation. The climate, canned rations and hard work had riddled his health. He spent six months knocking around Honolulu beaming OWI news broadcasts, announcing G.I. boxing contests and restoring his tissues. Then they shipped him home for a look in at AFRS, where he took over a Bob Crosby show for a while. Next came a reward for pitching in the South Pacific—Officers' Training School at Camp Lee, Virginia. He was almost through the course when V-J Day came and as By says, "I sure wanted those bars, but I wanted a chalk-striped suit a lot more." He came out a staff sergeant.

Young gentlemen in new chalk-striped suits were a penny a pound back in 1946. And Byron Palmer found himself with a wife to support and a baby on the way. He didn't let go his dreams but he took what he could to earn a buck. For a while, that was announcing girlie-girlie shows at Earl Carroll's. Then understudy and bit jobs in operettas like New Moon, The Firefly and Rosalie at the Greek Theatre in Los Angeles, playing things like cadets, soldiers, waiters, and gentlemen of the ensemble. Sometimes he got a chance to sing but not often. All the time though, Byron was polishing his voice with lessons, and it finally paid off.

He hooked on to a touring skate show, Hollywood On Ice as a between-the-acts singer and emcee. In the midwest one of his Hollywood pals sent him a wire, collect. "Hurry back—they're casting Magdalena for Broadway. You'll be a cinch." By quit his job that night and hopped home. But that evening's Hollywood Citizen-News had news for Byron: The show was already cast and gone to New York! "Sorry," said his pal, "guess I gave you a bum steer."

What keeps a guy gambling for a break however, is exactly the kind of crazy reverse that happened to Byron Palmer next. He hadn't been kicking jobless around Hollywood a week until a new agent he hired took him to see tunesmith Frank Loesser and producer George Abbott, cooking up another musical for Broadway, with Ray Bolger.

He sang his medley from Oklahoma that he'd used on the ice show tour and they all said "Fine, fine—we like you very much." Well, Byron had heard that plenty of times before. His blood pressure remained down where it had sunk for the past week. "Just another audition," he told Joann that night and grinned a little wryly, "They said they'd call me." He had no hope that they would.

He didn't know of course that after he'd left, there was a huddle and a quick verdict: "He's our boy." He certainly didn't know that the new agent, who had neglected to get his home address and phone number, was frantically trying to track him down over the weekend without success. It was Monday before he connected—and that was no blue Monday for Byron Palmer.

The show was Where's Charley, which was a hit on the big street for two very good seasons while Byron Palmer fattened up on $300 a week, brought his wife and daughter to New York and lived like a respectable citizen for a change. Studio nibbles arrived but to those Byron Palmer had to say "No" because his contract was for the run of the show. It's one of the ironies of Byron Palmer's saga that he'd never been on a sound stage in his life until he went to work. And another that—up to this writing—the guy hasn't sung a recorded note for the movies, although singing has been his big pitch ever since the Battle of Tokyo Rose.

AFTER Where's Charley? finally bowed out, Byron Palmer spent the next season or so racketing around the country in this musical and that—at Dallas' Starlight Operetta, the Pittsburgh Stadium, St. Louis' Municipal Opera, The Greek Theatre again—San Francisco to New York and way stops. He sang for radio and he sang for TV. He tuned up his lungs on Roberta, Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, Showboat, Girl Crazy, and another Broadway revue, Bless You All, which the customers blessed only two short months. When things slowed and he came back to Hollywood, the only job he could find was selling Christmas cards in the family stationery store next to the Citizen-News at $50 a week! It was the old roller coaster routine—up and then down—with a sinking sensation at every dip.

Now, a stop-and-go budget is not what most marriage counselors recommend, nor is the kind of hello-and-goodbye life that Byron and Joann Palmer led. By was in the service almost four years and most of his post-war years were spent skipping around wherever the chance of a job led him—and usually by himself. Under those strains his marriage broke up—and mended again—three separate times. But it fin-

GET-RICH-QUICK ROBERTSON

Meet a man with one simple goal and a dozen ways to attain it!

■ Dale Robertson wants to be a millionaire. Right away.

This ambition is not unusual in Hollywood, but Dale is giving it all he's got.

From the moment Dale persuaded a couple of aunts to stake him to a start in Hollywood, he has had but one thought in mind—money! Now he's paying the loan back, bit by bit, working hard at his career and figuring up schemes on the side for increasing his income. Scuttlebut around Hollywood is that he devotes so much time to these extra-curricular affairs that the Robertsons have little if any social life. And, whenever you hear a hint about rifts in their household, don't figure it's another man or woman. It's just plain work.

In the first place, there's Dale's career. And he'll be the first to tell you he isn't too keen about romance and musicals, even when he gets a co-star like Betty Grable. He prefers to do Westerns.

"I'm in this picture game for the money that's in it," he'll tell anyone who will listen. "Cowboys are the fellows who cash in, but big. Not only do people like Roy Rogers, Gene Autry and Hopalong Cassidy pull down a big box office and a hefty pay check but look at the fortune they reap from by-products."

Practical Dale figures his horses and dogs might as well add their bit to the family bankroll and he's disappointed when he can't ring them in on a picture he's doing. He managed to get his favorite horse into The Farmer Takes A Wife but lost out when the animal followed him about like a dog from one end of the set to the other and refused to take orders from anyone else. And the wonderful big German shepherd who's Dale's shadow raised such a rumpus during Dale's love scenes with Betty Grable that the dog had to be locked away.

On the extra curricular side, Dale has a tire deal on that should hit the jackpot for him—if it works out! Then there's the waterless hand-cleanser. And there are his horses.

All of these interests take time and thought and investigation. And they take money. Dale isn't a man to gamble away his hard won cash.

To add to his other talents, Dale writes red-hot Westerns for himself to star in. Recently he sold one of his stories to 20th and he hopes to play the leading role.

All of this adds up to what, people ask. Those who know him best suspect that these activities are not only an outlet for his tireless energy but that Dale has a dream.

He wants security for himself and his family. He wants a ranch—a big, big ranch. And he wants both while he's still young.

ally hit the divorce court a year ago last April Fool's Day.

Byron doesn't like to talk about that, because he feels the failure deeply. He'll explain it briefly with, "We were awfully young when we married, me especially. I think Joann tried to mother me too much, but after all, a girl's a lot older than a boy at nineteen—and maybe I needed it. Anyway, all the odds were against us." The ironic part is that just when his home was breaking up, Byron Palmer's best career breaks arrived all in a bunch. In three days he had three studio offers.

The triple play started when a friend took him to Louis B. Mayer's house one evening to sing. Mayer liked what he heard and promised a test at MGM. The next morning producer Leonard Goldstein asked Byron to Universal to look him over for the romantic lead with Lori Nelson in a Ma And Pa Kettle picture—and he liked what he saw. The next afternoon Billy Gordon, Fox's casting director, called By into his office, handed him a record and said, "I know this will be rough—but take this home and make every note on it your own. Come back Monday and George Jessel will listen."

That, Byron knew, was the big payoff —if he could swing it. Jessel was producing Tonight We Sing, based on the life of impresario Sol Hurok. The record was operatic star Jan Peerce going through a tricky aria from La Traviata—slightly out of By's league. The try was for a romantic young concert singer's part with Peerce's voice dubbed in. Not entirely the way he'd have liked it—but when it's strictly from hunger and there's a new movie career at stake—well, By wasn't proud.

That was on a Friday and the weekend which followed is one to remember for Byron Palmer. He had no place to master the operatics except his one-room apartment. He locked himself in, spun the turntable and cut loose with the platter. He kept it up days and most of the nights Friday, Saturday and Sunday. "People pounded on the floors and the ceiling," grins Byron. "I didn't stop. They banged on my door and yelled, 'Turn it off! Turn it off!' but I didn't hear what they said. Luckily, nobody called the cops. By Monday I could sing that thing backwards."

He didn't have to do that. He sang it only once, forward. Jessel nodded, and By knew he was in. The funniest thing about it all was that Mitch Leisen, the director, exclaimed after Palmer had let loose his baritone, "My God—you actually can sing, can't you?" That's how far Byron Palmer's vocal fame had penetrated his home town.

By now the homefolks know it a little better. While he was making Tonight We Sing, Leisen sang his praises so loudly to Mocambo's Charlie Morrison that they canceled Peggy King and told By, "You open in five days." The Mo attracts probably the toughest audience in the world. Though he'd never sung in a night club before, Palmer walked right in and fractured the place. Variety raved, "This is local-boy-make-good week at Mocambo." New York's St. Regis hotel wired him an offer for the Maisonette Room, but he couldn't accept with things popping right at home. One was a chance to show he could act with the title role of Mister Roberts at Hollywood's Las Palmas Theatre. He did that so enthusiastically that he busted his nose in the big fight scene one night.

All this comes under the head of pitching in the clutch, which is what Byron Palmer is dedicated to right now. He is doubling his voice lessons and dramatic lessons. At thirty, Byron Palmer figures he can't coast. He knows he's getting a late start in pictures—and that even the contract Fox handed him after Tonight We Sing is not career insurance these days when studios are dropping contract stars like hot grounders. After all, he's had only that one picture—the Ma and Pa Kettle thing he made first is still unreleased—but Man In The Attic is about finished and The Girl In The Dark Glasses is on deck.

But nobody who knows Byron Palmer expects any of this to send his handsome head spinning off into solar space. Like all the Palmers' heads, his is screwed pretty level to his shoulders. While he made Tonight We Sing, By helped pump gas at a station in Westwood which he owned with his father, and only recently sold. All last year he hustled over to UCLA nights for a course in accounting and business investment, just in case he ever gets his hands on important money. He drives a three-year-old Pontiac, has a rack of carefully mothproofed suits that date way back, cooks his own meals and washes his socks in the two-room furnished apartment where he presently rests atop Laurel Canyon. "I have learned by necessity," he'll tell you, "to be a tight man with a buck."

He isn't kidding there. Right now, although he makes a good three-figure salary a week, Byron has to scratch to put away a bond now and then or collect a few more shares of the family newspaper. His alimony is heavy and his daughter's expenses are growing. Maybe that's why he's such a quiet operator that his landlord next door recently popped his head in and explained, "Just wanted to know if you still lived here." He found Byron deeply absorbed in Rev. Norman Vincent Peale's book, The Power Of Positive Thinking. A night owl by nature, Palmer often stays up all night with a book or a script. Sometimes, too, he'll roll off in his car in the middle of the night for Santa Barbara or south to Mexico, all alone and just for the ride.

I DIDN'T SEE IT HAPPEN

I don't know if it's because I'm near-sighted or just dense, but I'm constantly rubbing elbows with movie stars and not realizing it till hours later. But then, who'd expect stars like Susan Hayward or Mona Freeman to ride a bus like ordinary mortals.

However, you'd think anyone would recognize Eve Arden getting on the crowded Hollywood bus at Warners' main gate especially when she had to stand in the aisle. I stared fascinated at this girl with the flexible features whose face muscles were never still a minute and didn't recognize her till I was thumbing through Modern Screen days later.

While dining at the Smoke House across the road from Warners', I peered earnestly around looking for stars and then became more interested in a familiar-looking family at the next table. Mama and daddy were absorbed in feeding the three well-behaved children. For hours I racked my brain to place them among my neighbors before I realized I'd been staring at Mrs. MacRae, the children, and the back of Gordon's neck.

Next week I'm getting new glasses.
Mrs. Patricia L. Pfau
Burbank, California

That doesn't mean he's a hermit or any kind of a male Garbo. Byron likes all sports—swimming, skiing, tennis and golf particularly. He likes to dress up in tails and dance the mamba too. He's a hot record fan, a devotee of good food and drink. He likes people, parties and fun as much as the next guy. He's as friendly as a pup, has a hard time saying "no" to anyone and is almost impossible to rile.

Success has caught up with Byron as a bachelor, but he's frank in saying he doesn't like it. Once you've been married, you miss it, even if it hasn't worked out the first time. "I want to get married again some day," he admits, "but I'm in no hurry and for heaven's sake don't say I have any plans because I haven't. Of course, the right girl might change my mind fast." There have been lots of girls lately. By's current date list does include names like Denise Darcel, Kathryn Grayson, Joan Weldon, Merry Anders and Wanda Hendrix. How much is for romance and how much for sweet publicity now that he's on the hot list, is hard to say. But when he took Wanda to the Island In The Sky première this fall, By had to have a map drawn to find her place in the Valley. At the same time, Columbia called that a "romance"—but how can you romance with a girl when you don't even know where she lives?

It wouldn't surprise Byron Palmer's close friends if he and Joann got back together one day for another try. Under pressure, even he'll admit they just might. That's happened three times before and there's a deep feeling there, going back to school sweetheart days. There's another tugging attraction in the girl who is Byron Palmer's most regular and adorable date—his daughter, Linda Lou.

This dainty blonde, now seven, is a steady item for Wednesday dinner and an all-day Saturday whirl at the amusement parks. As susceptible as the other lasses are to the Palmer charm, Linda can effectively cool off her old man sometimes. By took her to see some rushes of himself in Man In The Attic and when they had been reeled off, Mistress Palmer asked, "When do you come on, Daddy?"

"That was me. I've been on," he told her.

"Oh," she replied. "You mean that funny looking man with the whiskers?" Last time I saw Byron, he was itching to finish the picture and shave off his cloak-and-dagger mustache—to please a lady.

Pleasing ladies is always attractive work —and now Byron Palmer has it. By now too, he knows it's his business—one that he's made for and one that he likes. He hopes to stay in this business a long, long time, acting and singing right in Hollywood where he was born, grew up and—after a fairly rocky road—came back to make the Palmer name mean something in addition to presses, paper and printer's ink. To make sure that situation sticks he'll knock himself out to please every girl in the world—even Tokyo Rose.

"I'm doing just what I've always wanted to do," By says, "living just where I want to live. I never want to leave Hollywood again. I hope things never change."

Right now, it doesn't look as if they will—with one exception, of course. That ban they've got on Byron Palmer stories down at the Citizen-News will have to be ripped off the bulletin board. After all, an important sheet like the Citizen has to cover the news. Publisher's son or not, Byron is making some and he's sure to make more. Besides, they'll have to think of their feminine readers. END

HOLLYWOOD ABROAD

AN M/S WIRE SERVICE OF LATE NEWS FROM AROUND THE WORLD

JEANNE CRAIN may never again make another picture in Africa. What she went through during the filming of Duel In The Jungle is more harrowing than the most imaginative adventure fiction. One afternoon, for example, on the banks of the Zambesi River, she stood petrified as Assistant Director Anthony Kelly was overturned in his canoe by the swirling rapids. The powerful current carried Kelly into the opened, ugly, waiting jaws of a dozen crocodiles.

Following this death, Jeanne was on the brink of collapse, but director George Marshall insisted upon the immediate resumption of filming. He wanted no brooding. With husband Paul Brinkmàn and actor Dana Andrews on hand to lend moral support, Jeanne went on to finish the picture.

Despite the fact that she worked at close range with lions, elephants, and other native beasts in the Krueger National Park, Jeanne, mother of four, showed no fear. "Maybe I didn't show it," she says, "but I certainly felt it."

LANA TURNER, plagued by the European rumor that she is pregnant, may be back in the States from Amsterdam as you read this. Originally, Lana and Lex hoped to be home for Christmas, but the weather was very bad during the production of The True And The Brave, and the picture was held up. Lex's agent, Paul Kohner, has been in Europe trying to set up some deals for Barker, and if these jell, Lana will remain abroad with her husband.

While The True And The Brave was in production, Barker and Vic Mature tried to play golf each day. The Dutch Resistance leaders insisted that Lana was much too glamorous to be cast as a real secret agent. The film tells the story of the Dutch underground movement. Clark Gable plays the part of a Dutch Army colonel who matches wits against the Nazis. Lana, of course, supplies the love interest.

When asked why the Dutch were objecting to the film, J. K. Douma, one of the heroes of Arnheim, explained that "the first requirement of any underground agent is to be as ordinary-looking and unobtrusive as possible. Do you think," he asks, "that Lana Turner falls into this category?"

FARLEY GRANGER rates as the most eligible bachelor in the Italian film colony. Farley has an excellent musical ear, and now speaks Italian competently enough to help him parry the subtle marriage proposals of Rome's prettiest starlets. He has rented a villa and plans to stay in Europe as long as film work is available. He makes it a policy to go out with no girl more than three times. "I don't want another one of those Shelley Winters buildups," he says good-naturedly.

VIVIEN LEIGH, the beautiful, fragile, international star who suffered a greatly-publicized nervous breakdown six months ago, is now all recovered and back at work. She opened recently at the Manchester Opera House in The Sleeping Prince, a play in which she not only sings, but also dances. Doctors attribute her quick recovery to the constant vigilance of her husband, Sir Laurence Olivier, who never once left her side in her weeks of need. One physician said, "He made her re-entry into public life his cardinal interest."

LIZ TAYLOR, back in London with her husband and son, in fact, hard at work with Stewart Granger in Beau Brummell, is still busy denying that she suffers from heart trouble.

"I really don't know how these stories get started," she said. "If I have a headache or a stomach ache, right away it's heart trouble. My heart is in fine shape. Everything's in fine shape. The baby had some typhoid shots and cried a bit when we first got over here, but now he's perfect."

Liz returns to Hollywood when her picture is finished, probably in December or late January.

GENE TIERNEY continues to scoff at all the stories concerning her alleged breakup with Aly Khan. They are very much together in southern France—they play tennis almost daily on the courts of the Carlton Hotel—and Aly gets on extremely well with Gene's mother and her daughter. Rumors notwithstanding, Gene is very well-liked by the Aga Khan and the Begum.

KIRK DOUGLAS grew a long beard for his title role in Ulysses, and now he lets the girls run their fingers through it. His favorite: Brigitte Bardot.

GREYHOUND'S Tour of the Month!
11 EXCITING DAYS in Florida

with EVERYTHING PLANNED, RESERVATIONS MADE

Sunbright adventure from Jacksonville to St. Augustine, Silver Springs, Cypress Gardens, Miami, Key West; 10 nights' hotel.

$93.40

Plus U. S. Tax—Add Greyhound round-trip fare from your home. Prices subject to change.

GREYHOUND

HUNDREDS OF OTHER TOURS AVAILABLE!
Mail to Greyhound Information Center, 71 W. Lake St., Chicago 1, Ill., for free folder describing 50 Expense-Paid Tours.

Name______

Address______

City & State______ DM-1-54

RING SET Can Be Yours!
A VERY beautiful new "heart" design Engagement and Wedding Ring to match, made in solid sterling silver, set with simulated sparkling brilliants for selling only 4 Rosebud Perfume at 50¢ a bottle. Rings and perfume guaranteed to please. If only one ring is wanted, then order 2 bottles to sell. Order 4 or 2 bottles today.
SEND NO MONEY—We trust you.
ROSEBUD PERFUME CO.
Box 45. Woodsboro, Maryland.

DANCING SHOES—SUPPLIES
BATON—DRUM CORPS SUPPLIES
SKATING SKIRTS—Roller or Ice.
24 Page Catalog 10¢ (applied to purchase)
Quincon Dance Supplies, Box 422, Quincy 69, Mass.

PART-TIME
Women to work in their homes. 3-5 hrs. per day.
MAILERS
4043 St. Clair Ave., Dept. F-1, Cleveland 3, Ohio

IF YOU SUFFER PAIN of HEADACHE NEURALGIA NEURITIS
get FAST RELIEF with ANACIN
the way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend.

HERE'S WHY . . . Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, Anacin contains not just one but a combination of medically proved active ingredients. No other product gives faster, longer-lasting relief from pain of headache, neuralgia, neuritis than Anacin tablets. Buy Anacin® today!

no trouble at all

(Continued from page 21) "My, but she's a long one," someone said.

They held the baby up, and Esther smiled as her third child's infant cries began.

They weighed the baby, measured her, and then sent for the proud father.

"You've got a fine daughter," Dr. Bradbury announced. "Seven pounds, fifteen ounces, nineteen and a half inches long."

Big Ben was all smiles. "We're going to name her Susan Tenney Gage," he said. "If I had been a girl," he added, "that's what my folks would have named me."

PRESENTLY, they wheeled Susan's mother down the corridor and into her private room. They let Ben stay there for a few minutes, then shooed him out as Esther dropped off to sleep. Originally, it was planned to have mother and daughter room together, but there was a shortage of nurses which made the rooming-in system an impossibility. Susan Tenney was placed in the babies' room.

The birth of Esther Williams' third child was a welcome contrast to the birth of her second, Kimball Austin Gage.

Three Octobers ago, Kimmie arrived one month ahead of schedule, and since eight-month babies are difficult to deliver, Esther had a tough time of it.

Her entire pregnancy period with Kimmie had been pretty much of a muddle. She went to Hawaii to make Pagan Love Song and just as production got under way, she thought she was pregnant but she wasn't sure.

She insisted upon waiting until she got back to Los Angeles to make certain. Then there was some question as to the arrival date. Finally, Esther was told that her second child would come in December. In September, she and Ben bought their Mandeville house, and while no one knows for certain, it's entirely possible that by working long and hard to furnish her new home, Esther inadvertently brought on the premature birth of Kimmie. He was born in October.

Esther's first child, Benjie, was also a little early, so that Susan is really the only Gage child to have been a full-time baby.

Esther and her new daughter stayed in Santa Monica Hospital for a week, and on a Thursday, papa Ben, proud and grinning, came and took his two girls home.

When little Benjie, four, saw his sister for the first time, he shook his head in dismay, and turning to his mother, said, "Boy, there sure are gonna be an awful lot of kids around this house."

Benjie and Kimmie used to sleep downstairs in the Gage household, but when Esther announced that another child was en route, Ben got busy and had the attic remodeled. Now, the two boys room upstairs, and Susan has the nursery on the street level.

"So far," Esther says, "she's been a perfect little doll. Just sleeps and eats. No trouble at all."

"No trouble" are the two words which best describe Esther Williams' family setup. Ever since her marriage to Ben Gage after World War II, the tall, leggy, near-sighted mermaid has known practically nothing but happiness.

Over the years she seems to have gotten everything she ever wanted: career, fame, money, security, marriage, and children.

"The trouble with Esther Williams," one reporter said recently, "is that she has no trouble. At the ripe old age of thirty-two, this dame has got it made."

"Wholesome" is the word to describe the Williams personality, and it can be followed by athletic, fun-loving, clean-cut, healthy, attractive, antiseptic, bright, cheerful, and sexy.

No one ever calls Esther sultry or intriguing or fascinating or complex. Supposedly, she is the sparkling, typical, right-thinking, successful young woman you can find in many American neighborhoods.

She was brought up by parents who loved each other deeply and still do. One of five children, she enjoyed a normal, healthy childhood with no apparent antagonisms or soul-searing complexes.

A FRIEND of hers is of the opinion that "the only secret chamber in her mind involves her first husband, Leonard Kovner."

"He was really her first love," he pointed out, "and he is never discussed in their household. As a matter of fact, Ben gets furious whenever a reporter refers to him in an interview. But I'm sure that deep down Esther has never forgotten Leonard.

"She was about nineteen when they were married. Today, of course, he's a successful physician, but then he was in medical school, and Esther was working as a stock clerk at I. Magnin's. I don't think her family particularly approved of the marriage, but Esther has always been a strong-minded girl. She wanted to get married, so that's what she did.

"She and Leonard lived in a small apartment. They couldn't afford any children. Then Esther got her lucky break at Metro, and after that, she was really career-minded. Leonard was, too, and the marriage began to come apart, maybe because they had no common purpose. I think Esther got the divorce in 1944 after Bathing Beauty opened in New York.

"But as I say, nobody mentions the first marriage to Esther. I've never heard her refer to it in any way. I'm sure that she has tried to block it out of her consciousness but deep down, I'm sure the memory lingers. You can't really forget a man who was your husband for four years. Sometimes she must be stabbed by a pang of guilt or a memory of pain.

"Then again I may be attributing to her introspection which she never really experiences. Anyway, with a brand new baby to look after, she doesn't have too much time for reminiscing."

I overheard a woman describing her beau ideal: "The man I marry must shine in company, be musical, tell jokes and dance, stay home, be up on his news, be no trouble, drop no ashes, and shut up when I want him to." Personally, I think she should marry a television set.

John Daly
TV quiz master

Most of Esther's fans have always coupled her with her present curly-headed giant of a husband, Ben Gage. One of them wrote to her at the studio, "You and your husband are a credit to the motion picture industry. Every time the columnists say you are breaking up, you have a baby. Maybe after you and Ben have had five kids, the gossips will know what your fans already know—that you and Ben are one of the most happily-married couples in Hollywood. Why do the columnists refuse to believe that, anyway?"

Most of the columnists do believe that Esther and Ben are blissful. From time to time, however, they predict that the happiness will not last. In Hollywood's long history there are relatively few successful actresses who have managed to hold on to their less successful husbands. In nearly every case, sooner or later, the husband came to resent his wife's success, her greater earning power, her tremendous fame.

GOSSIPMONGERS who predict that Esther Williams will tire of Ben Gage and vice versa after the children begin to grow up, don't seem to realize that Esther and Ben are both intelligent, discerning, and well-adjusted.

By nature, Ben Gage does not happen to be a driving, rabid, ruthless man. He is not particularly ambitious for fame and money. He started out in radio, and he had a CBS television show of his own. It was a good show and he made a personable master of ceremonies, but the program just didn't catch on.

Ben has show business talent. He could have pestered his agent into finding him more work, but as Esther's business deals began to branch out, she began to need a coordinator. And what better coordinator than a sensible, conservative, prudent husband. So Ben took over, and he has done extremely well. He took a broken-down restaurant out on Sepulveda Boulevard in Los Angeles, and reorganized it and re-staffed it. Now, the Gages' Trails restaurant is one of the best family eating spots in the county. And it's doing a thriving business.

Ben Gage happens to be a big hulk of a man and like most tall men, has always been a target for jokes. Ben Gage is the ideal husband for Esther Williams. They are tall and handsome, and in character they complement each other.

One of Ben's outstanding virtues is that he never has attempted to trade on or take personal advantage of his wife's position.

In 1951, when Esther was negotiating a new contract at MGM (she signed at $2,500 a week, fifty-two weeks a year, for ten years) Ben might very easily have said to Eddie Mannix, MGM's general manager, "You know, Eddie, Esther and I could work very well as a team. Why don't you hire me as a producer and let me turn out her pictures?"

Many a husband has refused to let his wife sign a studio contract or make a one-picture deal unless he went along with the package.

And husbands of some movie queens insist upon acting as their wives' agents.

Ben Gage has never wallowed in the quicksand of nepotism. He has never gone to MGM and demanded employment, special treatment, or favors of any sort. He has always gone his own way, a man of independence and self-reliance.

The success of the Ben Gages' marriage lies in the mutual dependence of its constituents. Esther and Ben need each other.

"I rely on him," Esther says, "for his strength and judgment and consideration."

And Ben, in turn, loves Esther because she is capable, competent, decisive, feminine, gracious, and altogether without guile. It is no easy job being a mother, wife, and actress. Ben knows that and admires Esther for being able to pull it off.

He doesn't resent her accomplishments. He glories in them. That's something the prognosticators of marital gloom don't seem to understand.

It has been said of Esther that she is cocky, aggressive, and stubborn. Her father explains this when he says, "She takes after me in certain ways. She has confidence in herself and a sixth sense that everything is going to come out right."

ACTUALLY, the key to Esther's character is her self-reliance. She started working as a salesgirl in Newberry's Five and Dime as a teen-ager. She learned at once that as she made her bed, so would she lie in it. She had no wealthy or influential relatives to make her career easy for her.

Everything she has she has earned, and earned the hard way. Her swimming trophies came as a result of incessant practice. Her so-called lucky break at MGM came only after she was given a screen test at 20th Century-Fox and failed, and after she had worked as a Warner Bros. starlet and failed again.

It has been no bed of roses for Esther Williams. She is still the hardest-working actress in Hollywood. Her pictures take longer to make than any others. They demand strenuous work but Esther never complains—not even when she's pregnant.

She has always worked during the first four or five months of her pregnancies, never babying herself or making outlandish demands.

"It's a funny thing about Esther," one studio executive remarked. "We never seem to have a picture ready for her until she's pregnant. She organizes her life very well, you know, and once in a while I've thought that she purposely becomes pregnant after the picture has begun. In that way she makes us finish it in a hurry. Then she can spend more time with her other kids at home."

Esther who once wanted "as many children as possible," says now that "maybe we'll have another girl—yes, I think we'd like another girl after my next two pictures."

A reporter, overhearing her answer, shook his head in admiration. "You know," he said flatly, "There is absolutely nothing in the world that Esther Williams cannot do. If she says she wants another girl by 1955, I give you my word that she will plan the exact minute of its birth and then make it, give or take an hour." END

(Esther Williams can be seen now in MGM's Easy to Love.)

---

hollywood hot rods

(Continued from page 44) fast-moving sports cars, still does, and probably always will. Gwen never did, doesn't, and most likely, never will. It's fairly certain that Gwen didn't appreciate Donald's spending so many hours out in the backyard with his head stuck under the hood of his car, tinkering with the manifold and frimframming with the carburetor. Nor was Gwen well entertained during the many evenings when the conversation would turn to "twin pots," "valve-in-head" engines and other such technical car chat, which is usually the route the conversation takes when Donald meets someone else who owns a whippy little piece of sports machinery. Where cars are concerned, Donald O'Connor, glittering star of stage, screen, and television, is a hopeless case. Real gone. Lost.

Nor is Donald alone with this fate. In Hollywood, love affairs have come, within the last few years, to be sometimes a matter of "Love Me, Love My Jaguar." Romancing couples, to be on the safe side, should include some serious talk about their preferences in cars in their marriage plans. Bob Horton and Barbara Ruick did just that, and being a modern young couple, decided to start married life with a brand new XK 120 Jaguar. On the other hand, if you will recall, it wasn't too long ago that columnists were pointing out that one disrupting influence in Clark Gable's marriage to Lady Ashley was his predilection for fast, open cars. She showed no fondness whatsoever for the wind and the rain in her hair. When Lana Turner was first married to Bob Topping, she strenuously objected to his race-track tendency that came out as soon as he got behind the wheel of his all-white Jaguar. To pacify her, Bob presented her with its twin for her birthday. It failed to save their marriage. Lana kept only the car, and she came to enjoy driving it very much.

Both the young and old of Hollywood have adopted the sports car craze. Of course, this didn't happen overnight. Just three years ago, any strange foreign sports car parked on Hollywood Boulevard would always attract a curious little crowd in a matter of minutes. But today, the parking lot of every major studio looks like the main assembly grounds of Le Grand Prix, and not even the "craziest" foreign vehicles merit a second look. Sports cars, both as a practical means of transportation and as a symbol of prestige and glamour, have truly arrived.

HOLLYWOOD is probably the only city in the world where a car dealer could (and did) profit handsomely by posting a twenty-four sheet billboard across the street from his Sunset Boulevard showroom which read, with magnificent restraint, "Buy Your Sweetie a Jaguar for Xmas." More than a few movie people followed his suggestion, if not in time for Christmas, at least during the ensuing ten months. The current list of Jaguar owners in Hollywood would include at least one-fourth of the established, big-name stars.

Ty Power garages a Mark 7 Jaguar (as well as an expensive Duesenberg and a 1900 cc Alpha Romeo) at his Hollywood home. In Rome, he uses his sleek 2500 cc Alpha Romeo to travel to and from his movie locations. In all, he has more than a $30,000 investment in speedy transportation, but to Ty, this represents the fulfillment of a youthful dream rather than a sudden splurge on luxury automobiles. When he first started in motion pictures, Ty had to drive an old jalopy that was always breaking down just before every important appointment; he swore that when he became a star, his first purchase would be a dependable automobile. He's had many since, but none that give him as much pleasure as his foreign sports vehicles.

Clark Gable has owned a Jaguar convertible for more than a year, and he'll probably have another fast-moving set of wheels sent over from Europe this year. At the end of her latest Twentieth Century-Fox film, Corinne Calvet celebrated by purchasing a sleek Mark 5 Jaguar, a handsome, swift machine with more curves than Corinne herself. Keenan Wynn is rejoicing in his Jaguar; when he bought it, he put up his motorcycle and he hasn't had a spill since. One by one, the stars are succumbing. Not long ago, columnist Hedda Hopper met Dick Powell, smiling as joyfully as though he had just been nominated for an Academy Award. "Why the big smile?" Hedda asked. "I just got my new Jaguar," Dick replied. "It'll go 145 miles an hour." "That's great," Hedda cracked. "But, tell me, Dick—where in California can you go that fast?"

The answer to that is: nowhere. But speed is not the whole story about sports cars. Most of the wealthier stars who have gone abroad to make a film have come home thoroughly impressed with the elegance and distinction of European automobile design. Both Gary Cooper and Frank Sinatra became so enamoured of the new Mercedes-Benz 300SL model that, with no hesitation, they were able to part with the $13,000, plus freight charges, that it takes to ship one back home to California. Friends of Coop say that he looks ten years younger behind the wheel of his sleek Mercedes, and though it probably was not intentional, the car just happens to blend nicely with the Tyrolean sports clothes which he began to affect some years ago during his skiing period. Later this year, Frankie went Coop one better when, during a visit to Turin, Italy, he bought a racy little Alpha Romeo cabriolet styled by Pinin Farina, the famed Italian body works. Frankie paid for the car on the spot and arranged for its mid-winter delivery in California.

It is almost impossible to appreciate the effects of the sports car bug until you have been bitten yourself. In Hollywood, it has even begun to nibble at the staid family men like Macdonald Carey, until recently a sane, intelligent actor who has never made a wrong headline in his life. "It came upon our family absolutely without warning," pretty Betty Carey recalls. "One afternoon, I had gone over to Beverly Hills to have my hair done. When I came out of the shop, there stood Mac beside this long, sleek, flaming red Saber, grinning to himself like a cat eating cranberries. 'Wow!' I exclaimed, out of sheer surprise. 'I suppose we really shouldn't,' said Mac, apologetically. 'After all, we've got four kids and we've had a good time with our ordinary cars all these years. It's probably silly of me to want this job.'

"'The heck it is!' I replied, noting the gleam of proud possession already settling in Mac's eyes. 'We only live once. You buy that car if we have to hock the family homestead to do it!' He didn't argue any more, and for weeks afterward he got up at six-thirty A.M. in order to be at the studio early to show off his wild red car."

Right now, Mac's in Madrid, making a film called Port Of Africa with Maureen O'Hara. Every time he calls Betty on the transatlantic telephone, the first question he asks is, "How's my car?"

"It isn't that Mac has forgotten the kids and me," Betty explains. "There isn't a more wonderful husband in all of this mad town. But I have to admit that Mac has completely flipped over that car. Before we're through with the sports car craze, all six of us will probably be driving low-slung foreign jobs, if we have to rebuild the garage to get them all in."

JUST how did this wild sports car fad get started in Hollywood, and where is it all likely to end? Pete Peterson is the youthful publisher of Motor Trend and Hot Rod, the magazines which carry all the latest news on automobile trends both here and abroad. Pete knows most of the sports car fanciers in Hollywood, and is frequently called upon to give his advice on a set of wheels before its future owner passes over a bale of the long green in order to call it his own. Pete has a ready explanation for the growing popularity of sports cars in the movie colony. "Hollywood is merely a highly accelerated example of the reaction against production-line automobiles which is taking place all over America," he says. "Certainly, it should be easy to understand why movie people, more than anyone else, are going in for the slick-looking European cars. Back in the silent picture days, stars would spend thousands of dollars to give even their expensive Rolls Royces and Duesenbergs, a custom, out-of-this-world look. Today's stars don't get that wild in their selection of ostentatious cars, but they do want cars which will dramatize their glamorous personalities. As soon as Cadillacs became as common as canned peas in Hollywood, they lost their charm. Then a few stars who had been abroad brought home examples of the advanced car design of Europe, and they started a new fad. It wasn't long before the fad picked up volume and became a trend."

According to Pete, who drives several stylish foreign creations of his own, Hollywood sports car fans could be divided roughly into three categories. "First, there are the serious car addicts. Donald O'Connor, for example. This type of guy is primarily interested in engines and their smooth performance, and he'd rather tinker with his car than eat breakfast," Pete explains. "Then there are the well-to-do stars who like the more expensive European cars with their prestige value, their luxury looks, and their high speed performance. But by far the biggest group of sports car owners are the young players who have been attracted to the less expensive sports cars like the MG, Simca, Singer, and the Morris Minor because they are cheap to run, sharp in appearance, and easy to handle in traffic. This group is growing by the dozens every month."

In fact, Hollywood MG owners are already far too numerous to list. But because it delivers, F.O.B. Hollywood, for about $2400, the Mark IV MG is by far the most popular sports car in the movie colony today. Gene Tierney is so attached to her little MG that she ships it over to Europe every time she goes. Bob Wagner, the handsome young star of Prince Valiant, used to hot-rod his MG around Hollywood like a dirt-track driver. He gave up sports cars for the duration of his career, after cracking it up in a nearly fatal accident. Alec Nichol, who stars with Shirley Booth in The Ex-Mrs. Leslie, fell in love with his MG in London and had it shipped home. Unfortunately, another sports car fancier got at it while the car was sitting on the dock and stripped it of top, wheels, and other vital parts. Now Alec is in the market for general replacements.

Since sports cars have come to be such a common part of the Hollywood scene, many young players have taken to assembling on pleasant Sunday afternoons for rallies. In sports car jargon, a "rally" means a gathering of enthusiasts, dedicated to a brief drive over the hills, considerable snooping around underneath the hoods, and much lying about their cars' performance on the highway. With a group of dyed-in-the-wool car fanciers like Lance Fuller, Tab Hunter and Jeff Hunter, the arguments get pretty heated, except when they are accompanied by the ladies. With a group of beautiful girls like Lori Nelson, Kathleen Hughes, Barbara Rush and Marcia Henderson, a rally is more likely to turn into a gay little picnic, with dainty sandwiches and cold drinks.

On this particular day, Lance Fuller, the handsome U-I discovery whom you will be seeing in Taza, Son Of Cochise, was explaining to Tab Hunter why he had recently sold his American-made car and bought a tiny Morris Minor in its place. "I blew a tire on the freeway doing fifty miles an hour and flipped my car over three times," he told Tab, as they rolled along through the Hollywood hills. "I felt I was lucky to get out alive, and right then, I decided to find a car that would really hug the pavement. This baby is it. It's got a motor like a Swiss watch, gets thirty-five miles to the gallon, and as a conversation trap for pretty girls, it's better than walking the dog."

"Oh, my goodness," said pretty Lori Nelson, who was sitting between the two young men in the car.

"What's the matter?" Lance asked, afraid that his frank talk had shocked her.

"I forgot to bring the pickles for the picnic," Lori gasped. Which may give you some idea of how girls usually follow car talk. But perhaps it's just as well. END

SPECIAL TO MODERN SCREEN:

hollywood report

by Mike Connolly

famous columnist for
The Hollywood Reporter

LONG HUNCH DEPARTMENT:

Their intimates don't think the marriage of Rita Hayworth and Dick Haymes will survive many setbacks in her career, so unless Rita starts getting better roles than she got in Salome and Miss Sadie Thompson, it's 'bye, Dick! A stymied career means no money coming in; no money means rough going . . . Olivia de Havilland, as you know, inherited the sexy role Princess Rita was supposed to play in The Human Beast. So Livvy is now encouraging the same kind of sexy publicity for herself that the Princess—plus Anne Baxter, Jane Powell, Deborah Kerr and other erstwhile goody-goody types—have been "enjoying" of late . . . Everybody in town was saying Shirley Temple was going back into movies and then Shirley confounded the gossips by dating the stork . . . The 1954 Academy Awards are lining up for the big night this coming March. Contenders for the gold-plated Oscars include Frank Sinatra, Monty Clift, Debbie Kerr and Burt Lancaster for From Here To Eternity; Bill Holden, Stalag 17; Audrey Hepburn and Gregory Peck, Roman Holiday; Victor Mature, Jean Simmons, The Robe; Alan Ladd, Van Heflin, Shane; Jane Wyman, So Big; Bing Crosby, Little Boy Lost; and several others still to come. Who do you like for the Oscars?

de Havilland

June Haver's return to acting probably will not be in the lavish type of musical she used to make at 20th-Fox before she entered the convent, but in dramas, which would be the more dignified course for her to take. It's a foregone conclusion that June is back in pictures for good. After all, as her mother points out, "What else can June do but act? She never learned any other trade and, since the life of a nun is not for her, acting is the only thing left" . . . Jeff Chandler keeps phoning Susan Hayward. It looks serious for these two, who were kids together in Brooklyn.

Hayward

SKIRMISHES OF THE MONTH:

Odd wasn't it, that Geary Steffen, who saved Boni Buehler's life when the airline stewardess lost an arm and leg in a speedboat accident on Lake Arrowhead, should be sued by Boni? He had been sending her a rose every day, then wham! that lawsuit . . . Mario Lanza has lost more friends than anyone I know because of his temper. Latest are Andy and Della Russell, the singers . . . When Leslie Caron took off for six months of making movies abroad without her husband, Geordie Hormel, everyone said this was The End. Could be . . . Jeff Donnell said, when both she and Aldo Ray received their final divorce papers, "Everybody is marrying off Aldo and me—but us!" . . . Friends claim Pat Wymore won't continue to put up with Errol Flynn's shenanigans—such as the piggyback ride with the Paris chorine . . . Susan Hayward's ex, Jess Barker, has a pal who burned all of his copies of a book called Wayward Susan. So there! . . . Everything was going serenely with the Marilyn Erskine-Donald O'Connor amouring until a role in the stage revival of Our Town came along for Marilyn. It was no coincidence that Tab Hunter got a part in the same play. How's that for a new twosome? Marilyn and Tab!

Ray

Hunter

Piper Laurie has been playing Eeny-Meeny-Miny-Mo with four fellas, and this is the order in which they rate with Piper: Carlos Thompson is Eeny, Brad Jackson is Meeny, David Schine is Miny and Leonard Goldstein is Mo. In other words, this gal's career comes before romance . . . More than several femme hearts were broken when Terry Moore showed up at Henry Willson's cellophane-wrapped, candlelit garden gala for Annabell and Jim Radford of Texas—with Rock Hudson! Don't take this one too seriously, however. One date doesn't make a romance . . . Van Johnson refused to cover his obvious facial scars with makeup for his role in The Caine Mutiny. The studio criticized him but he stuck to his guns and the results are great.

FUNNIES

My favorite line of dialogue by Marilyn Monroe in How To Marry A Millionaire is: "Men seldom jump hurdles for girls who wear girdles."

Errol Flynn signed his bill in the dining room of a Swiss hotel instead of paying cash. The waiter said, "Please add your room number after your signature, sir—there may be more than one Errol Flynn staying in the hotel" . . . I saw John Wayne rehearsing for a scene in Jimmy Durante's television show and asked, "Are you between pictures, Duke?" Replied he, "Pictures my eye. I've been sued by so many people lately I'm between trials!"

HOLLYWOOD HEARTBEATS

Johnnie Ray has been telling pals he wants to get married again. Meanwhile, the Weeper's ex-wife has been dating Donald O'Connor, whose ex-wife, Gwen, has been bouncing back and forth between Dan Dailey and Liz Taylor's ex, Nicky Hilton. Musical chairs, anyone? . . . Dorothy Dandridge has been driving Farley Granger's convertible around Hollywood while Farl's been in Rome dating Dawn Addams, among others . . .

Hepburn

Audrey Hepburn told me, honor bright, that there is absolutely nothing to the gossip that she and Greg Peck were a "thing" while shooting Roman Holiday in Rome, despite Greta Peck's unhappy announcement of her separation from Greg. Audrey said that the realistic amouring of herself and Greg in that movie was what tricked the blabbermouths in this gossipy town of Hollywood into thinking it was the real thing . . .

SEX APPEAL:

Barbara Stanwyck has been wearing extra short evening gowns so I guess this means she agrees with Christian Dior on the short hem length . . . At Warners', Virginia Mayo's dressmaker is using her dress form as a guide for Virginia's dresses after the baby's arrival . . . I'm one of those who can remember when Jean Simmons didn't act so "actressy" in public—but wasn't she wonderful in The Robe? . . . Tony Curtis' crew haircut in All-American made no hit whatsoever with his fans. They've been bombarding the studio with letters demanding he let it grow long again . . . Scott Brady had to have his hair dyed black and permanent-waved for his role opposite Joan Crawford in Johnny Guitar.

Brady

Speaking of La Crawford, she came to the year's most elaborate première, The Robe, with Nick Ray but didn't wait to see the movie because there was a seat mixup and somebody else had her seats. So Joan and Nick left in a huff. I talked to Joan later and she said she went back to see it with her four children the following Saturday matinee . . . Incidentally, while standing out in the lobby before the movie I heard the announcer proclaim Joan as "the greatest star in Hollywood"—and I was watching several other stars when the announcement came over the loudspeaker. They didn't think too much of it . . . Bob Mitchum, at the same première, said something uncouth to an usherette. She broke into tears, blubbered and said, "That's no way for a gentleman to talk," and fled her post . . . I also heard Stewart Granger complaining that a columnist had separated him from his wife, Jean Simmons, in print. Then Stew said, "Oh, well, we should worry—at least they spelled our names right!" . . . Jerry Lewis looked around at the hundreds of fans seated in the bleachers outside Grauman's Chinese Theatre, got flustered, and blurted to his wife, "I'm very exciting, aren't you, dear?"

FINANCIAL PAGE:

The old-timers still make the most money in Hollywood: Bette Davis asked $150,000 to play the role of Queen Elizabeth in Sir Walter Raleigh and Humphrey Bogart got a flat $200,000 for co-starring with Audrey Hepburn in Sabrina Fair . . . Paul Brinkman, Jeanne Crain's husband, who started his tool-and-die company here in Hollywood on a shoestring five years ago, netted $90,000 this year . . . We've been terribly impressed by Guy Mitchell's quiet determination to fight the $500 weekly alimony demands of his estranged wife, Jackie (Miss America) Loughery . . . Rory Calhoun's salary has just gone up from $1,750 a week to $2,500 a week at 20th . . . Same studio's Bob Wagner has a new contract too. Bob had been earning $350 a week. Now he gets $1,250 a week for the first two years of his new ticket, $2,000 a week for the third and fourth year, $2,500 a week for the fifth and sixth, and $3,000 for the seventh. That ain't hay, hey? . . . With three movies completed and in the can and a nightclub tour on her agenda, Shelley Winters is feeling her old confident self again, almost as though she were still going with Farley Granger and not married to The Gassman! Shell also owns ten percent of a foreign-made movie, Paris Express, that's being released in this country by her uncle, Ben Schrift.

Winters

THE REAL LOWDOWN:

Betty Grable is no longer under contract at 20th, which is why that studio's Marilyn Monroe gets top billing over Betty in How To Marry A Millionaire. This is the first time Betty has taken second place to anyone since Alice Faye got top billing over her in Tin Pan Alley . . . Did you know that Princess Rita was Xavier Cugat's first band singer? She was a mere slip of fourteen at the time, and it wasn't too many years ago . . . Fernando Lamas' locks are so curly MGM has to unkink his hair with a special lotion every day . . . Shirley Booth has lost fifteen pounds since she made Come Back Little Sheba . . . Regardless of her denials, Maureen O'Hara has been dating that Mexican tycoon again—the one who plied her with expensive baubles.

Booth

Were you as upset as everyone in Hollywood over Liz Taylor's collapse in Copenhagen and those reports that she had suffered a heart attack? Actually, Liz has always been delicate.

The Perfect Marriage SHOULD BEGIN WITH A Perfect Diamond

"Eternally Yours"
DIAMONDS

CERTIFIED PERFECT
by the
UNITED STATES TESTING CO.

$135
Plus Tax

The center diamond of every "Eternally Yours" engagement ring has been tested and "Certified Perfect" by the United States Testing Co. 14k white or yellow gold mountings. Drawing enlarged.

Write for Free Illustrated Booklet
"ETERNALLY YOURS" DIAMONDS
702 H St. N.W., Washington, D.C.
Copyright 1953, Advertising Associates, Inc.

FALSE TEETH
KLUTCH holds them tighter

KLUTCH forms a comfort cushion; holds dental plates so much firmer and snugger that one can eat and talk with greater comfort and security; in many cases almost as well as with natural teeth. Klutch lessens the constant fear of a dropping, rocking, chafing plate. 35c and 60c at druggists. . . . If your druggist hasn't it, don't waste money on substitutes, but send us 10c and we will mail you a generous trial box.

KLUTCH CO., Box 5487A, ELMIRA, N. Y.

SEW FOR CASH
Use our patterns, materials, directions in your own home, full or part time. We buy from you.
Wilson Ties, 402 S. Main, Stillwater (2), Minn.

DE LUXE Type for Framing

FREE! FREE!
Photo of Your Favorite
MOVIE STAR

Big Bargain . . . NOT small pocket size, but LARGE, ACTUAL PORTRAIT. Also FREE Beautiful Catalog. FREE! Many additional pictures of popular stars on cover. FREE! Tells how to get HOME ADDRESSES, BIRTHDAYS and PHOTOS of STARS' HOMES. Send only 15c for handling. 2 photos for 25c. Rush to:
HOLLYWOOD FILM STAR CENTER
Box 2309, Dept. L-1, Hollywood 28, Calif.

LIVING MINIATURES
WOMEN—2 to 4 hours daily at home. Offers exciting opportunity for steady income.
Write Premium Addressing Dept.
LIVING MINIATURES, Anaheim 1, Cal.

HANDS TIED?
—because you lack a
HIGH SCHOOL DIPLOMA

• You can qualify for an American School Diploma in spare time at home! If you have left school, write or mail coupon for FREE booklet that tells how. No obligation of any kind.

OUR 57TH YEAR
AMERICAN SCHOOL, Dept. V114,
Drexel at 58th, Chicago 37, Illinois
Please send FREE High School booklet.

NAME..
ADDRESS..
CITY & STATE...................................

janet rules the roost

(Continued from page 29) long since been regretfully consigned in shreds to the junk heap. But the hard-headed, determined and businesslike Scotch nature of Jeanette Morrison has not been altered a whit, althought her occupation has changed, and her name has changed. She's now a movie star called Janet Leigh.

A few weeks ago, Janet bustled into the Beverly Hills salon of the swank hatter, Rex, on a typical movie star's mission. She had to appear at an important party and she needed a new cocktail hat. During the protracted feminine process of picking out a hat, she spied a sweater and slipped it on. It was a cute, stylish cashmere with fur trimming at the neck and cuffs, just her color, just her size. This one was made for her.

When Rex boxed the bonnet, he started to wrap the sweater, too. To his surprise the girl said, "No, wait. I love it, but I don't know that I can afford it. I'll have to ask my business manager and let you know tomorrow." The movietown milliner could hardly believe it. "Look," he exclaimed, "it's just a sweater. You like it. Why not take it along now?"

"Nope," repeated Leigh. "I'll have to check first."

Hedda Hopper happened to be in the shop and when she overheard that exchange she almost flipped her fancy lid. "Now I've seen everything," she gasped. "Tell me what other Hollywood gal wouldn't buy the sweater first and find out if she could afford it later!" Nobody told her.

One day last October, a sharp-eyed investigator from the Bureau of Internal Revenue paid an impromptu call on Fred Morrison, who is Janet Leigh's father, and her private accountant as well. He said he'd like to take a look at Miss Leigh's 1951 income tax return.

Ordinarily in Hollywood—or anywhere else—such a visit is prone to chill anxious hearts and pop out sweat beads on nervous brows. But Fred Morrison grinned happily and replied, "That's a pleasure."

The T-Man sat down and pored over the sheets of data. "This $500 for miscellaneous business expenses," he said suspiciously, "can you document that?" He had a ledger in his hand before he could finish the sentence. There, penned in Janet Leigh's own neat hand, was everything he could possibly want to know—every dime telephone call, every two-bit travel tip, every three-cent fan letter stamp—with dates, with explanations, a whole year of it.

He went through that book and another. Then he slapped them shut. "That's good enough for me," he announced, scribbling "Audit Approved" on the return and rising. "I thought this would take two days. It's taken two hours." He sighed. "I wish they were all like your daughter, Mr. Morrison. Maybe then I could catch up on my golf."

It's a hopeless wish. There aren't many stars in Hollywood as tidily, thriftily and industriously on the ball as Janet Leigh is. In fact, while that quick audit was taking place, the lady in question was charging up three flights of stairs in her Wilshire Boulevard penthouse and then racing down again to her Olds convertible loading in this and that, as panting professional movers tried to keep up with her. Wearing sneakers, a pair of blue shorts, a T-shirt and scarf tied around her blondined mop, Mrs. Tony Curtis was moving, in person and in charge. At times the movers wondered what they were doing there.

It was just the hottest spell Los Angeles had suffered for the past three years, 101 in the shade, if you could find any. This didn't daunt Janet. Nor did the fact that Tony was working and couldn't help, nor that only three months before she had lost her baby and was still shaky on her pins. Moreover, two days before the melee began, Janet had finished Prince Valiant, a long and exhausting job. None of this convinced Janet that she should not do the job during this free week, as planned. Besides, if she didn't, the Curtises would lose a month's rent.

All that week, while other stars not caught in a picture kept their precious skins carefully immersed in swiming pools, Janet carried on the project—a double duty job, because not only did she have to pack up and move out and then in—but before she could do that, she had to pack and store everything in the eight-room Beverly Hills house she rented, because the previous tenants were in Europe.

One evening during the resolute resettling, Tony Curtis came home from his job on Johnny Dark, stripped down to his shorts, cut himself a fat slice of salami, parked in an easy chair and munched reflectively as he watched his wife continue to skim around the room like a bee in a clover patch checking this and that from a fifty-page inventory.

FAMOUS LAST WORDS

"Do you know two show-business careers where two people have been happy? Maybe there are some but I don't know many. One's off on location or in Europe somewhere and the other has to stay in Hollywood. I came up the hard way and it's left a bad scar. Money means a good deal to me. It's hard for me to turn down jobs. I worry about financial security. I've worked like heck for a career and it's just beginning, and frankly, it comes first with me. Really, that's no good for marriage, because in marriage you should be a wife first and an actress second."

Shelley Winters in June, 1951, before she met and married Vittorio Gassman.

"You know what?" he asked at last.

"No, what?"

"You worry too much, Jan, and you work too hard."

"You know what?" his girl friend came back. "I like it."

Tony tried another tack. "You'd better knock off and come up to Reno on this location with me. I might need you. When I get near those dice tables I might lose my roll."

"If you lose your roll," replied Janet, "just don't come back."

Tony grinned. He knew that if he didn't come back, Janet would chase up and haul him home. But behind the kidding was an immutable truth—one that had dawned on him a time or two before. He was married to a very efficient, energetic and capable doll.

Janet Leigh's acquaintances would all agree. Her best friend, Patti Lewis, calls her "Miss Efficiency." Jerry Gershwin calls her "Fussbudget." And her business manager, George Mercader, backed up his opinion recently with an out-and-out offer: "Janet," he said, "if you ever stop acting you can come work for me." But maybe what pleases Janet most is the tag her own family has for her, "General Leigh". Because, what Janet Leigh has become and what she has accomplished since she hit Hollywood represents a string of personal victories which "Marse" Bob himself would be proud of. And it's all from a flatfooted start, or worse.

Seven years ago MGM signed the nineteen-year-old Jeanette Morrison Reames to a stock contract, without even a test and strictly on her small-town-girl cute looks. No greener pea was ever popped into the Hollywood pot. At that point, Jeanette could barely distinguish a dramatic role from a hot cross bun, for which she would have settled almost as eagerly as the first check for $50. The day before her summons arrived (incredibly, on the strength of a photograph which Norma Shearer had spotted at the Sugar Bowl Ski Lodge, where Janet's parents worked) Janet and her husband, Stanley Reames, had spent their very last buck on hamburgers. The fourth-rate hotel on Santa Monica Boulevard where they were camping was getting nasty about the overdue bill and listening in on their conversations to make sure they wouldn't skip. They were awesomely in debt—$10,000, which might as well have been ten million—because Stanley's project of launching a sixteen-piece dance band in Hollywood had backfired.

In the seven years since, the picture has changed radically. Today, she has not only paid off her $7,500 share of the community debt, but has also acquired a healthy annuity, a house where her parents live, a nice wardrobe, including a mink stole, various articles of furniture, a '53 Oldsmobile and some high grade investment type stocks and bonds—all on a cash-and-carry basis. She has learned her craft well enough to list a string of twenty-three hit pictures and a stack of popularity awards which keep right on piling up. Living with her and liking it is a handsome and happy, though sometimes exasperating husband, also highly successful. The family income averages $3000 a week. All this has not been done with mirrors—although for a while the consensus about Janet Leigh in Hollywood was that she had stepped through one of those and was a helpless Alice In Wonderland who should not be let out without a nurse.

Some of Janet Leigh's naive bloopers are still Hollywood classics. One of the best known concerns the time she was informed by Morgan Hudgins of the MGM publicity staff that she was going on location in the Sierra with her first picture, Romance Of Rosy Ridge.

"But I can't possibly do that," Janet protested. "I can't afford the trip!" Hudgins assured her that MGM would assume the expense of an actress sent out of town to make a picture. When Janet first met Van Johnson—America's swoon prince then—she completely lost her voice and gagged in beet-faced confusion. Her first day on a set she blurted to the director, "Oh, I'm so nervous I just don't know what I'm saying or doing,"—and for a while she didn't. She had no clothes to attend her first première so the studio wardrobe department rallied, dressed her up like a doll and delivered her in a limousine. But when Van Johnson spied her in the spotlights, he rushed out, kissed her and boomed before everyone, "My God—you're beautiful!" She went limp with confusion and had to be practically carried inside.

Janet was so shy, uncertain and bewildered by the big league social life into which she was plunged that when a telegram came from the late great Hollywood party man, Atwater Kent, she called Van and Evie and begged them to take her and her husband with them. They had already sent their regrets to Kent but sympathetically changed their plans and accepted, and Evie lent Janet an evening dress. For all this—for everything, in fact, Janet was so grateful and gushing with appreciation that people took her aside and tried to tell her that the photographers who took her pictures, the publicity people who arranged interviews, even the studio cops who let her in the MGM gate did not necessarily have to be rewarded for every gesture with effusive thanks: that was simply their business.

For months, Janet Leigh's unbelievably ingenuous gaffes were laugh lines for the Hollywood columns. There was the time, for instance, when Janet entered the Chicago airport restaurant between planes, en route to New York for her first visit. It was also her first trip outside her native state.

At the counter, the waitress asked her what she'd have and when she couldn't think, suggested orange juice.

"Oh, may I? I mean—do you have oranges here?" exclaimed Janet. "I thought they just had those in California!"

At last, columnists wearied of the Dulcy peg and got a little annoyed. "Who does Janet Leigh think she's kidding?" rapped one. "Come, come Honey—lay off the act. You really can't be that dumb!"

Janet Leigh wasn't dumb and she wasn't staging an act. Actually she was an extremely smart girl although an extremely unsophisticated one, and psychologically unprepared for the sharp world she had landed in. Her gaucheries stemmed from honest, surprised reactions, while she sparred around to get her bearings. When she got them, they were dead level—and have remained so ever since. Ironically, the successful Hollywood operations of General Leigh are still based on the small-town virtues and rock-bottom background which made Janet Leigh seem like a beautiful jasper to Hollywood at first glance.

Born in 1927, Janet was a depression kid. Her childhood homes were tiny apartments with pull-down beds and cramped kitchenettes where often both the light and the gas were shut off for delinquent bills. Her dad, Fred, was a bookkeeper who worked around at such jobs as he could grab—in ice plants, electrical stores and auto agencies. Janet remembers a period when her mother handed her eighty cents a day for the groceries.

"I'd run down to the market and buy one of everything," Janet has recalled. "One egg, one chop, one bunch of carrots, one bottle of milk. I was a fairly big girl before I knew people ever kept food stacked in cupboards."

Besides chasing to the market, the skinny moppet, as early as ten, would fly into the housecleaning and often start the dinner when she came home from school.

Both Fred and Helen were very young parents. Today, they look like Janet's big sister and brother. Their struggle was never kept from their daughter. Janet shared the family financial secrets from the start and they made a deep impression on her. When her mother pawned her marriage ring to buy her a new dress, Janet was aware of the transaction and appreciated the sacrifice. "I never asked for anything I wanted," she remembers. "I always knew why we couldn't afford it."

All this made Janet capable, responsible and actually ahead of herself. Most people thought when she hit Hollywood and some still think—that she was a cotton-headed babe in the woods. That legend was kicked along substantially when she married Tony Curtis, a fascinating, happy-go-lucky clown whose best friends were twice as off-beat as he was. Janet is fast on the uptake and she has given back Jerry Lewis, Danny Arnold, Jerry Gershwin and the rest of the wacky crew who surround them as good as they've dished out, because she has an over-sized funny bone and a sharply honed wit herself. Back of the gags and the zany schtickloks is a serious marriage. As Jerry Lewis' wife, Patti, puts it, "Tony may wear the pants in the Curtis family—but it's Janet who holds them up." The reason for that, too, can be traced right back to Jeanette Morrison's life in Stockton, California.

For one thing, she learned very early in life that there was absolutely no percentage in kidding herself or pretending to be what she plainly was not. This lesson was learned one day at the Weber Grade school when she was only six and already sensed that every other kid in town had more than she had. She picked an easy escape to glamour, which boomeranged.

Walking to the schoolyard, she caught up with a new pupil who didn't know the local score. The rare opportunity to go grand was irresistible, so when the girl asked her where she lived Janet described an elegant mansion and let her imagination ride. It had a swimming pool, she said, tennis courts and stables where she kept her own private pony and cart. Her father owned an auto plant and was very, very rich. In fact, Janet added airily, "I've always gone to private schools, you know, but my parents thought it would be good experience for me to have this year at Weber with the town children."

The newcomer was suitably impressed and fascinated, so that at recess in the tether-ball line, she begged, "Tell me some more about your big house and pony, Jeanette." Whereupon the rest of the kids haw-hawed out the bitter truth and Janet experienced the awful shame of getting caught in a pretentious lie. She hasn't been caught in one since, because she hasn't told another.

Despite her insecurity, or maybe because of it, Janet's activities tend to be constructive.

She early developed the tenacious resolve to distinguish herself, knowing, as she says, "If I wanted anything I'd have to earn it and keep it." That's still her code of operation in Hollywood. Back then it took various forms within her smaller world. Janet was through grammar school before she was twelve, out of high school before she turned sixteen and—if she hadn't left the College of the Pacific in her senior year to marry Stanley Reames, she would have collected her sheepskin before she was twenty. Every year of her school life Janet made an honor society.

Officially, Janet Leigh's religion has always been Presbyterian, as befits a Scotch lass, tinctured nowdays, she'll confess, with some of the practical ideas of Christian Science. And the homely conviction that the Lord helps those who help themselves has always guided her.

When she needed money—which was constantly—she got jobs. She made the sorority she wanted at C.O.P.—Alpha Theta Tau. The lone fiasco of Janet Leigh's girlhood—her elopement at fourteen with a Merced, California, boy—was more than mad romance. It was a desperate attempt to stay in that town with the friends she'd made, after her family moved there one year and then returned to Stockton. That two-day marriage, quickly annulled by her parents, changed Janet's character and outlook not at all.

Neither, basically, has the seven-year honeymoon Janet Leigh has had with Hollywood. Janet has changed, of course, in many obvious and subtle ways. But underneath, probably more than any other star in town, she remains the same article.

Sometimes it seems that not a day has passed since she checked in at MGM. At twenty-six "Janet Morrison Leigh Curtis Schwartz" as she sometimes introduces herself, looks nineteen. She weighed 126 when she signed her contract and her normal weight today is 115. Her waist is still wasp-like and her eyes still sparkle with the zealous eagerness of a Walt Disney beaver. Her hair, of course, is a lot lighter than the brown it used to be. It doesn't seem at all wicked to her, but it did once when on a sorority week-end to the beach, she dipped into a peroxide bottle and came back to Stockton in disgrace. Her chassis has stood up perfectly under the strain of being a star and she's learned by now to trim it more artistically.

Janet has learned plenty of other things, too, about the complex, supercharged business into which she was dropped back in 1946. The ga-ga girlish gratitude, for one thing, has given way to the realization that after all, making movies is a business and one where the in-fighting can get rough at times. There's plenty of evidence that Janet Leigh has learned how to handle her dukes.

At her own studio, MGM, for instance, she has turned down three picture parts, yet never been slapped down with a suspension—certainly a tribute to the convincing arguments she put up each time. When she was loaned to make Houdini with Tony, Paramount promised her studio that if they would loan her for the picture they would build up the girl's part. As the contract wasn't signed until a few days before the picture began, her part was built up as the picture was filmed and Janet huddled evenings with the scriptwriter. She has learned spunkily to distinguish between temperament and sensible self interest.

Not long ago, working at another studio, she was called one evening and peremptorily ordered, "Be in make-up tomorrow at ten. Your hair is being dyed." Janet gasped with indignation and then had news for them: Her hair was not being dyed. She was no puppet, but a sovereign lady and nobody owned dictator's rights to her hair or any other part of her body. Quite a hassle progressed through several departments, finally reaching the studio chief who got the same news. Her hair was not dyed.

Sixteen cross-country trips, a tour through Europe and a vacation in Hawaii have expanded Janet's geographical horizons so that she doesn't catch herself extolling the merits of—say—Milwaukee when she's actually in St. Paul. And on tour these days Janet is poised and prepared. When she went to Pittsburgh, for instance, with Angels In The Outfield the Pirates tossed a dinner at which Janet sat next to the club's prexy, Branch Rickey.

To Mister Baseball's amazement, she rattled off percentages, batting averages, pitching statistics and other diamond lore with such accuracy that Rickey raised his bushy brows and inquired, "Is your father in baseball, Miss Leigh—or your brother, perhaps?" Janet admitted she'd prepped it all up from the sport magazines and newspapers just for this event, before which she had always thought home plate was something you cooked on.

Of course, Janet doesn't do much cooking these days. Having consistently flopped at boiling Tony's eggs and baking the sour cream-and-raisin pie he likes, she lets her maid, Ida May, take over. With both members of the family working, it was obviously silly for Janet to be without household help. But it embarrasses her to ask anyone to do anything for her, servant or not. Her own self-sufficient background rebels. It was quite a problem for a long time, since Ida May is a very capable domestic, but was still no mind reader.

The only way Janet could figure to get things done as she wanted them done was to do them herself. Each evening she'd bustle around fixing this and that, hoping that Ida May was observing the touches. She was. Now she runs things exactly as Janet wants them run, with no orders yet issued.

In acquiring the art and armor necessary to comfort, success and survival in Hollywood, very little of the friendly small town girl has been rubbed off. Janet's favorite line is still, "There's nobody like people." She still personalizes her myriad professional contacts. Each Christmas, Janet writes letters to everyone in every studio with whom she and Tony have worked—a collossal feat. She still scribbles thank-you notes for thank-you notes and worships anyone who's been nice to her. Marge and Gower Champion, who toiled half a year teaching her to dance for Two Tickets To Broadway, have been her idols and close friends ever since. So have Van and Evie Johnson who took her under their wing and eased her on to the social ropes when she first arrived. Lillian Burns, MGM's drama coach, who taught her to act, ("Janet was my hardest-working pupil") is still her mother-confessor for all the technical problems Janet faces wherever she goes. Last year, she pitched all out with Janet to groom her for the Young Bess part which she lost to Jean Simmons. This disappointment, though keen, didn't make Leigh mad at anyone. Very little does, unless her propriety is unjustly put in a bad light. Then she can flare with provincial indignation.

Just before she moved, a Hollywood trade paper columnist stated that, "Janet and Tony are being evicted from their apartment." Mrs. Curtis grabbed the phone and gave him both barrels, although that was probably only his hurried way of saying they were switching homes.

On the other hand, when Janet is really hurt by a barb she says nothing. Last August, when Marge and Gower Champion opened at the Coconut Grove they invited Janet and Tony to their table. At the opening, the Curtises were absent and got promptly rapped in print, like this: "Marge and Gower Champion held prized places at their table for their good friends, Tony and Janet, but the good friends didn't bother to show."

Marge and Gower both knew exactly why Janet and Tony weren't there and thoroughly approved. Janet was at her mother's Brentwood house, rubbing the pain-wracked body of her Grandmother Westergaard, who was dying of cancer.

Janet is still a fervent family girl. Her dad, Fred, keeps her business accounts straight and with him Janet shares her Aunt "Popo" (from Janet's kiddie attempt to say 'Pearl') as secretary. Aunt Popo's two teen-age daughters, Jody and Dee, and Grandmother Kate Morrison, now eighty-three and totally blind, make up the rest of the clan most intimately mixed up in Janet Leigh's affairs. Or vice versa, because as her mother sighs, "Every time Janet comes over she cleans out my dresser drawers and re-arranges the furniture—just as she always has done."

This family circle, now expanded by Tony's folks, is still not big enough to satisfy the expansive personality of the girl who, as an only child, always feared and hated loneliness. Today she's "Aunt Janet" to the underprivileged boys at the LeRoy Boys' Home in the small town of LaVerne, California. Janet adopted the home and its kids a few years ago as her special project. She makes the seventy-mile round trip as often as she can and on Christmas plays Santa Claus with a party and a show, at which Janet's Hollywood star friends, if they're friends, come along, too—in a big bus she rents. After the gifts, songs and show, the big feature of the event is a kiss for every boy, six to sixteen. With typical enterprise, Janet has raised $3000 one time and $2500 another toward a new kitchen by promoting shows and benefits for her boys. In fact, where any kids are concerned Janet's Scotch blood evaporates. She was on the poor side herself, once.

A COUPLE of Christmases ago, Janet and Tony were in Paris during the war orphan entertainment tour they made in England and Germany. It was the first Christmas Janet had ever spent away from her family, and despite Gay Paree and Tony, Christmas Eve at first brought on a homesick touch of the blues. A phone call to Hollywood helped a little and dinner with friends in a little Russian restaurant on the Left Bank helped some more. There, violins played the familiar songs of the Nativity, and Janet and Tony came out on the street still singing them, with gendarmes joining in.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

I have my home in Copenhagen. In the winter when Gregory Peck was here, he was taken down to see the statue of the little mermaid from the Hans Christian Andersen fairy tales. She is sitting on a big stone in the harbor. It was black with people who wanted to see Mr. Peck, mostly young girls, of course. If you want to get close to the mermaid you can take a few steps on the stairway or you can climb the stones. Well, the guide took the stones, so Gregory Peck did the same. He was climbing on wet stones with hundreds of girls watching him. At last, when he was near the mermaid, he took a wrong step and fell into the water! He just sat there! All our dreams about Captain Hornblower were spoiled, and we had to laugh. But we just adored him again, when the long-legged man he arised himself with a smile.

Merete Thejll
Copenhagen, Denmark

They went to church at midnight—a church neither of them belonged to—and when they came out it was raining and the streets of Paris were bathed in the shimmering midnight pastels which John Huston caught in Moulin Rouge. It was so beautiful that neither said a word until a lonesome child of the night passed by with his shabby coat hunched up to keep out the rain. Then Tony said, "Wait a minute. I'm going to do something I've always wanted to do." He pushed a 1000 franc note in the palm of the boy and beamed, "Joyeux Noel!" as best he could say it. "Give me some of those," said Janet.

So they spent the first hours of Christmas Day passing out their money to every waif they passed—until it was all gone. Then they went back to their hotel, wet and broke, but very merry indeed. That was one time when Mrs. Curtis did not lecture her husband about being such a chump of a soft touch.

Actually, there are very few lectures delivered in the Curtis menage these days—from either side of the house. The state of Janet and Tony's union has long since simmered down from its original volcanic state through a lot of living, loving, learning and understanding on both sides. As Janet's dad says. "Janet and Tony have tied down to each other."

The kid from the brawling streets of New York has brought some of the beautiful belly laughs of life to the attention of his girl. And the girl from prosaic Stockton has learned to like them.

Right after they were married, the Curtises tossed a pay-back party for fifty friends to warm up their new apartment. It broke up around three o'clock and Tony, a healthy male animal, promptly dived for the hay. But Janet couldn't shut her eyes with all those plates, glasses, ashes, and party debris around. So she pitched in alone to clean up the mess and when Tony came to next morning she was still at it. Today she's different. She makes Tony stay up and help.

Right now there's one subject they agree on completely: They want some kids in their home—four, to be exact. That's why Operation Stork is the campaign at hand for Janet.

The first chance at parenthood for Tony and Janet ended last July when, after three months of pregnancy, Janet lost her baby. Analyzing that disappointment with typical thoroughness, Janet reconstructed everything and made mental notes. She had just finished a picture and was dead tired. Then she had gone to Las Vegas for a week, on to New York for three more, then off to Honolulu. Two days after they came home, Tony's father suffered a heart attack, and Grandmother Westergaard took a critical turn for the worse, so there were anxious nights. There was Prince Valiant to prepare and house-hunting, too. Janet has good health, but she burns up her energies like a midget racer. As her doctor told her, "You run without a reserve tank." Then there were those three flights of stairs.

Maybe she was wrong in blaming herself and maybe she was right, but next time Janet will take no chances. Already she's gulping vitamins all day long, building up. She has a deadline on late hours, a daily rest schedule. After Laughing It Up with her pal, Jerry Lewis, she'll wait awhile before starting another picture and try to duck extensive tours. And about those stairs—that's the real reason why Janet was in such a hurry to move from their penthouse apartment to a one story place.

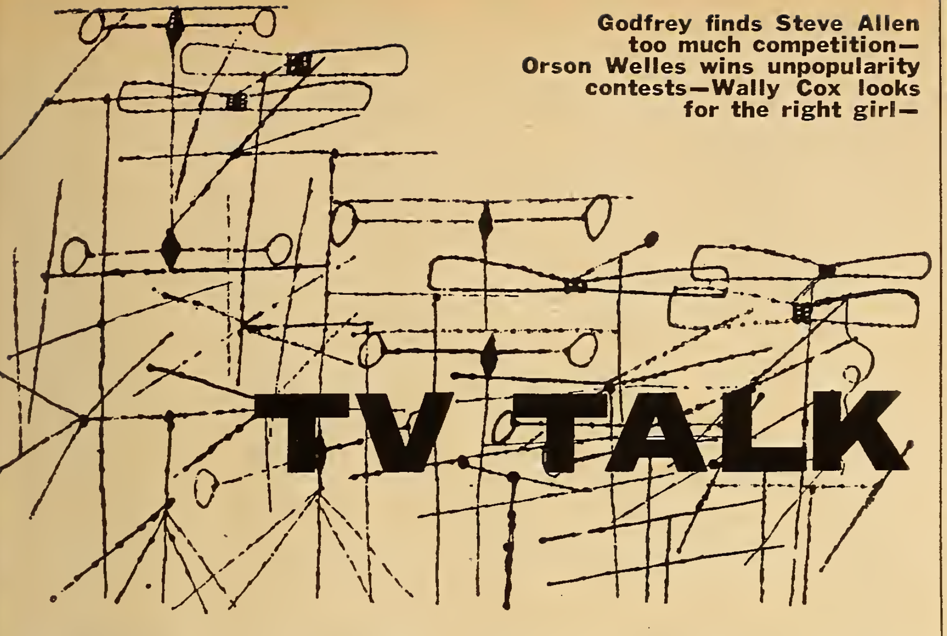
One thing seems certain. If Janet Leigh ever does preside over a houseful of kids, they will be the tidiest, best cared for, most sensibly brought up and most secure moppets outside the National Baby Show.

Meanwhile, Mr. and Mrs. Tony Curtis will have to appease their parental hunger with Houdina, their French poodle, and a mammoth rag doll which invariably sprawls in their bedroom. Tony Curtis gave that to his sweetie 'way back when she was making Two Tickets To Broadway, before they were married. "I Love You" is scrawled across it in big, red embroidered script—where the doll sits down.

It was just another crazy, typically Tony gag when Janet first got the thing. But by now, besides romantic affection, she feels a certain warm affinity for that floppy rag doll. It's really a lot like herself—with emotion and sentiment written all over, but also firmly parked on, where they can't get out of control.

At least, that's the way General Janet Leigh has operated during her first seven years in Hollywood—with success in most departments. There's no good reason to suspect the next seven will be very much different. END

Godfrey finds Steve Allen too much competition—Orson Welles wins unpopularity contests—Wally Cox looks for the right girl—



TV TALK

Steve Allen, who is the perfect addition to the panel of What's My Line? is up and coming in about any entertainment field you can name. His late-night TV show in New York has hundreds of thousands of people sitting up past their bedtime. His he-bop fairy tales are getting more and more popular at the record shops. And don't be surprised if he takes his acting talent to Hollywood. He had to turn down one part—in MGM's Brigadoon—but this boy cares too much about acting to settle for occasional guest appearances on television; he'd like a big Technicolored part. When he did a radio show in Hollywood, he managed to sneak in a couple of minor movies; but now that he has hit the Big Time, he can get Big Movies. (Steve got so popular replacing Arthur Godfrey that, it's rumored, Godfrey fired him because the show was no longer The Arthur Godfrey Show. It had suddenly become the Steve Allen Show.) . . . One of the most versatile guys around, Allen is also one of the quietest. When he talks to you in person, you can hardly hear him. It's always worth the straining, though, for he's just as funny in a casual conversation as he is when he's sitting between Dorothy Kilgallen and Arlene Francis. (Mark Goodson and Bill Todman, who own What's My Line? apparently agree with Allen's fans. They pay him more than any other member of the panel, even though he's the newest one.) Allen, at the same time, is serious and shy. He's very serious about his songwriting and about the music business in general; and actually goes home to his Park Avenue apartment and works on three books he's writing. He has moved the china out of his dinette and moved a typewriter in. When he isn't working, he's out with party-loving Jayne Meadows, the witty Fox actress who shifted to television. The long-haired, lank-haired boy seems, finally, to be getting over his guilt feelings about his ex-wife. She and Steve were very young when they married; and, as in so many similar cases, she had a hard time adjusting herself to his success. Some of Steve's friends think that Steve brooded for a long time that it was his fault, even after the divorce. Now that she's married again—and now that Steve's career is really rolling—he's taken a brighter outlook on life. His three sons pay him long summer visits that pep up him and his conscience . . . Wally Cox really does want to get married, but there are still a couple of hurdles to jump before he will. First of all, he's still going to his psychiatrist. And he maintains the highest standards in town. It takes a while to find a girl who can meet all of them! . . . You'd never believe it if you met The Continental in person. He turns out to be one of the nicest—and most intelligent—guys around . . . Orson Welles, who never won any popularity contests, was once not only blackballed from one of New York's important clubs, but the members got up a round-robin to keep him out! . . . The extra show-business touches on What In The World? are put there by a young man named Bob Forrest, who also happens to be Sylvia Fine's brother. Bob worked for Sylvia and Danny Kaye for a couple of years, but was finally persuaded—by others—to strike out on his own. His friends also got him to change his name at the same time—just to complete the sibling break. Bob's not too happy working in Philadelphia, however, so don't be surprised if Danny and Sylvia get an old assistant back again . . . Red Barber is one of the few TV personalities who really use the products they advertise. When Red exhorts you to buy a certain brand of beer or cigarette, you can bet any amount that Red drinks and smokes nothing else. Red is a staid, suburban, Sunday-school-teaching man; and he's not going to tell his public to do anything he doesn't do . . . Incidentally, the top cigarette-sponsored team on TV smoke their sponsor's brand only during the commercials . . . Just in case anyone still thinks Marion Marlowe and Frank Parker are in love—they're not . . . Brandon de Wilde's father, Frederick, would surely like to be the successful actor his son is . . . Don't ever worry if you can't catch all the episodes in the TV soap operas. The writers fix it so that you can keep up by looking only two or three days out of five . . . A favorite game in TV circles is quoting Jinx Falkenburg McCrary. One of her bloopers: When a guest claimed she was thick-skinned, Jinx quickly demurred, "Oh no, you have a lovely complexion"! . . . Walter Cronkite wears solid gold cuff links that Ruth Montgomery of the New York Daily News and Meet The Press gave him. But it doesn't mean anything . . . Fran Allison looks blonde and medium-sized when she's talking to Kukla and Ollie on their delightful show. But off screen, she is exceptionally tall and completely grey. A very gracious and lovely lady both places.

SHORTHAND
IN 6 WEEKS

Write 120 words per minute—Age no obstacle—LOW COST Famous Speedwriting Shorthand. No symbols; no machines. Uses ABC's. Easiest to learn and use. Fast preparation for a better position and a sound, substantial future.

Nationally used in leading offices and Civil Service; also by executives, students, etc. 120 words per minute—50% FASTER than Civil Service requirements. Over 200,000 taught by mail. The very low cost will surprise you. Typing available. 31st Year. Schools in over 400 cities in U. S., Canada, Cuba and Hawaii.

Write for FREE Booklet to:

Wins Success Through Speedwriting
"Six weeks after enrolling for Speedwriting, I took dictation at the rate of 120 wpm and transcribed it accurately. Through Speedwriting's Placement Service, I was hired for a secretarial position with a leading public relations organization."—Dulcie Kaufman, 25 Central Park West, New York 23, N. Y.

Speedwriting®
Dept. 801-4, 55 W. 42nd St., N. Y. 36

EASE COLD MISERY

Take Tabcin®
BRAND
AT ALL DRUG STORES

"How to Make Money with Simple Cartoons"

A book everyone who likes to draw should have. It is free; no obligation. Simply address

FREE BOOK

CARTOONISTS' EXCHANGE
Dept. 431. Pleasant Hill, Ohio

MAKE MONEY
ADDRESSING ENVELOPES
OUR INSTRUCTIONS REVEAL HOW
GLENN GLENWAY 5713 EUCLID AVE., CLEVELAND 3, OHIO

Genuine large size, studio-tone portrait of any movie star Facsimile autograph. Ready for framing. Send name of your favorite star and 15c – or 2 for 25c – to cover handling costs.

FREE STUDIO PHOTO

HOLLYWOOD STUDIOS
P.O. Box 2807, Dept. C-1
Hollywood 28, Calif.

BE A Nurse
LEARN AT HOME

Practical nurses are needed in every community... doctors rely on them... patients appreciate their cheerful, expert care. You can learn practical nursing at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. 55th yr. Earn while learning. High School not required. Men, women, 18 to 60. Trial plan. Write now!

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 231, 25 East Jackson Blvd., Chicago 4, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.

Name
City State Age

the way christmas should be

(Continued from page 41) chalet, Santa's reindeer and sleigh, the Nativity. There are Swedish bells and Christmas knickknacks from the world over. They all find a place each year, despite the fact that each new Christmas brings more gifts and more novel decorations.

In the middle of last December, Dick came home from work to find the living room sparkling with holiday spirit. There wasn't a square inch of table surface without snow or a manger or a tiny chimney.

"Hi," said June, who was arranging a vase of poinsettias.

"That's all there is to it," said Dick. "We'll have to get a divorce."

"What in the world are you mumbling about?" asked June.

"We can no longer live in the same house. The two of us can't even get into the living room at the same time. Where would you suggest I put my car keys?"

"Hang them on the light switch inside the front door."

"I can't find it. You've got it covered by pine branches."

She laughed and turned to face him. "You do like it, don't you?"

"Sure," he said. "It's like walking into Connecticut. But there are just two things. I'll have to take down the holly wreath over the garage. My antenna got caught in it when I drove in. And where'll I put my car keys?"

June has decided that this Christmas she will restrain her decorating. Not that it hasn't been attractive, but it's grown more crowded every year. Guests at the Powells' annual open house on Christmas Day have been forced to hold their teacups or highball glasses in one hand, their gifts in the other, and have spent minutes furtively searching for an ashtray.

This year, too, they are thinking about taking the children to Sun Valley for the holiday. Sun Valley may not be home, but it invariably has snow, which neither Ricky nor Pam has ever seen. June and Dick remember with particular fondness the Christmas they spent at the ski resort. It was their fifth Christmas together. They hadn't had a vacation for a long time, so after the initial festivities on Christmas morning they left for Sun Valley for one week. They found it so enchanting they stayed six.

An incurable romanticist, June's fondest memory is the day she and Dick set off for a five-mile drive in an open sleigh. The horses' hooves beat a soft staccato on the freshly fallen snow, the bells tinkled and the snowflakes, big as half dollars, fell silently through space.

An incurable comedian, Dick has never forgotten the sight of June on skis for the first time. "Let me tell you about it," he chuckles. It is unfortunate for him that he keeps bringing up this memory, because June can recall a particularly hilarious spill taken by Mr. Powell. This was Christmas the way Christmas should be, and phone calls back to Hollywood, during which six-month-old Pam burbled into the telephone, gave them assurance that all went well at home.

It was the best Christmas, both report, they've ever had. The rest of them, eight in all, have been widely assorted. The first one, in 1945, was spectacularly miserable. They had just moved into their Brentwood home, which had been ripped apart and put together again on Dick's orders. It was improved but the contractor had finished the work much later than he had estimated. So the Powells moved in on December 24, determined to be in their nest for Christmas despite the wet varnish, dearth of furniture, and the strong odor of paint. Dick immediately caught a thumping cold, which put him to bed with a fever of 103°.

After dinner that night, an unromantic repast out of cans, June drove into town and bought what looked like (and might have been) the season's last tree. It was a scraggly affair much in need of trimming, but all it got in the way of decor was what June had on hand—one dozen red balls. Or rather ten, as she dropped two of them. These small crashing sounds were the only noises in the house, besides an occasional muffled sneeze from the bedroom, where Dick was wrapped in flannel. Outside it was raining, and while ordinarily June enjoys the sound and solace of rain, it only served to irritate her this particular evening. She went into the bedroom and gave Dick a hot toddy and a chest rub and left orders that he should go to sleep. With nothing better to do she opened her gifts and then, figuring to be prompt for once, wrote her thank-you notes. She was sealing the last envelope at ten o'clock when she became aware of another presence in the living room and turned to see Dick, her red-nosed husband, wrapped Indian fashion in a blanket.

"What do you think you're doing out of bed?" she demanded.

"The padio is floodig," he announced miserably.

"I beg your pardon?"

"The padio," he said patiently. "The raid. It's comig dowd so hard the padio is floodig."

"So it's flooding," said June. "You can't do anything about it now."

"I was thikig I could bail it out."

"Bail yourself into bed," ordered June.

The next day was Christmas and despite June's logic, Dick spent the day bailing out the patio. By this time she was so angry with him she didn't care. She had presented him with a handsome antique silver stationery chest, which he had promptly declared much too expensive. He suggested that she return it.

Her feelings were damaged, but she has learned in the ensuing years that Dick usually does take back whatever she buys him. This is understandable. June's imagination often runs away with her head, and she has bought him a selection of objects and gadgets which includes everything except a stomach pump. "That," says June acidly, "he'd probably keep."

Gifts from his wife which he has kept include a new Swedish camera, portraits of the children and a Shopsmith set. He takes the camera everywhere but to bed; the portraits adorn one wall of the living room, and the tools hang neatly in his workshop. June has trouble restraining herself from giving presents long before Christmas. She gets into such a pleasurable snit about her surprises (whether or not they are likely to be accepted permanently) that she is tempted to spring them in early December. The Shopsmith was the worst. It arrived in mid-December, in a bulky wooden case, which June stowed in a small room off the garage. Every time Dick went into the garage, which was often, considering his penchant for puttering, June did a nip-up. Should she show it to him, or keep it as a surprise? She always decided on the latter, following him anxiously, whereupon he would turn and ask if she wanted to go with him.

"Go?" she would say vacantly. "Are you going somewhere? I thought you were going to hammer or something."

When he headed for the workbench she would hover around like an anxious hen for fear he would discover the hidden case. "What are you doing?"

"I'm making a cabinet for the new speaker. Why?"

"I just wondered. Let's go some place and play tennis."

"Why do you get so disconnected every time I get in here?" he would demand. "Leave me to a man's work."

Hiding gifts from Dick was difficult enough, but as the children grew older June was hard put to find inaccessible spots. No matter where she puts them, by Christmas Eve each package has suffered the loss of one corner. This is the trademark of Pam who can seldom resist an exploratory gesture, although she never rips anything but the paper and can't peek inside the box. In each new house June devises a cache, but wherever it is, the packages invariably come to light with only three untouched corners.

It seems that whenever the Powells move into a new house, they pick the Christmas season to do it. The first was spent among packing boxes in Brentwood, and on their third they had just moved into the big English house in Bel Air. This time they were more settled by Christmas. While this made things more pleasant, June discovered that year that Dick had fallen into the ways of most third-year husbands.

"Here," he said, handing her a sheaf of papers. "Would you get gifts for these people?"

June cast a bewildered eye over the endless list. "But—I don't even know most of these people. Last year you did all your own shopping. Couldn't you—"

"Too busy," said Dick. "I won't have a free day before Christmas."

"Who's Edward Applegate?"

"I went to school with him."

"But what's he like? Is he married? And what about this Cynthia Pfaff?" June's voice grew hoarse with panic. "How can I—"

Dick patted her on the head. "I'm sure you'll think of something," he said.

It was the same way with trimming the tree. The second year Dick had merrily joined in the ritual, but the third year, the minute he'd dumped the boxes packed with trimmings on the floor by the naked tree, he disappeared. "Where's the *tin*sel!" June screamed after him, but got no answer.

By this time, June has it down to a system. Since the Powells buy literally hundreds of gifts, including about fifty for children they know, June shops all year round for Christmas presents. By the time November has arrived, she has a good part of a room filled with boxes, all neatly labeled. There are large drawers filled with a gay selection of papers, ribbons and small package decorations, and this is on chore June thoroughly enjoys. She insists on wrapping each gift personally, much to Dick's relief, and only lately has had offers of help—from the direction of Pamela. The Powells' seventh Christmas, the last they spent in the Bel Air house, when Pamela was three, June had left unlocked the door to the "wrapping room." Before long there was a small hand tugging at one end of the ribbon with which June was wrestling.

Next, Dick fears, June will enlist Pam and Ricky as aides and plant her own Christmas trees!

"Pretty," announced Pamela, after which she pulled a pile of wrapping papers onto the floor.

"Look," said June. "Mommy's wrapping all these pretty things for other people. Now, if you'll just go into the nursery and—" She was brought up short by Pam's pleading eyes.

"So pretty," said Pam, and offered up her own sash as wrapping material. The upshot was that Pamela hung most of her hair ribbons on the packages, and June ceased all operations when her daughter became imprisoned in an entire roll of Scotch tape.

Their fifth Christmas followed a trip to Honolulu, and on arriving home after the long vacation June had to hustle to complete holiday preparations. It was this Christmas that she said to Dick, after he had sentenced her gift to be returned, "I know one gift you'd keep. I'd like to give you a son for Christmas some time. A little boy who'd look just like you."

Life seldom grants wishes in such detail, but the following December 24, Ricky Powell was born, and despite his five pounds and one ounce, looked exactly like his father. Ricky was the best Christmas present June and Dick ever had, but his coming completely upset holiday plans. June herself was very much in the hospital on Christmas day, and as soon as Dick had helped Pam open her presents, he took off to spend the day with June. He gave her his personal gift that day, a golden baby angel to accompany the angel he had given her when Pamela arrived. The day before, as June was wheeled out of the delivery room, he had slipped on her finger an exact duplicate of her wedding band, a gesture of his love and gratitude.

On each visit he made to the hospital he took one package from under the tree so that they could open their gifts together. It seemed an ideal solution to the holiday and one that helped make the long hospital days pass more quickly, but it turned out to have its drawbacks. Once June was home she asked to see the rest of the gifts. Dick had opened each package and put them all neatly under the tree, with the contents spread carefully to show, but there were no cards enclosed.

"Richard," she said, "where are the cards?"

"What cards?" he said, looking up from his newspaper.

"The gift cards! The cards that—if I could find them—would tell me who sent us what."

"Oh—those. I threw 'em away. Didn't think, I guess."

"I guess you didn't," said June righteously, and proceeded to write a pile of notes which all said the same thing: "Richard and I thank you so much for your lovely gift. It was just what we wanted." Whatever it was, June thought. Some donors were neglected, and some people receiving one of these notes sat down and thought hard, for they could have sworn they didn't send a gift to the Powells.

THEIR sixth Christmas passed, with all its confusion, and left them with a baby boy who grew to look more and more like Dick. The following holiday was a combination of Ricky's first birthday and his first Christmas, and to celebrate the double occasion Dick hauled out every camera, every tripod and every flashbulb in the house. Ricky ignored the flashing lights and delightedly examined the sparkling tree and his shining new toys. He cooed with joy when the new puppy bounded into the room and then he nuzzled his face in the pup's warm fur. "Look at him!" said June with wonder. "He acts just like a boy should!"

Before the children came, Dick and June opened all their gifts on Christmas Eve, but now that they must adhere to The Day for the sake of the youngsters, they save all their surprises for Christmas morning. On Christmas Eve they open only their gifts to each other, after the children have been put to bed. Christmas Eve is always spent with Edgar and Frances Bergen. Frances is June's closest friend, and it has become a habit that the foursome spend the evening together.

Last Christmas was the first in their Mandeville Canyon home, and again they were barely moved in when the holiday rolled around. Nevertheless, the house was decorated, courtesy of June, and by the time Christmas Eve arrived the interior was sparkling with seasonal spirit. A huge green tree stood in one corner of the living room and beside it, on the floor, a spray gun and a can of suitable white paint. Dick wasn't to be found, of course, so as sundry guests dropped in, June smiled her most charming smile and handed them the spray gun. "I'll help," she said, "as soon as I get Pam into bed. I'm tape-recording her Christmas prayer."

Upstairs, she sat by Pam's bed, listening to her daughter's husky voice, which is amazingly like June's, go through the prayer she had been taught. One line included the phrase "in my simplicity," and as Pam came to it she attacked it confidently. "In my simple city," she said. "Amen." June smiled, turned off the recorder and tucked her daughter into bed.

By the time she got downstairs the assembled guests had transformed the tree into a shimmering white. "It looks beautiful!" June exclaimed. "Now, where's Richard? Richard!" Her voice came echoing back to her, but no male voice replied. "He's probably out in the garage," she said. And then she smiled apologetically at her guests and handed them each a bauble for the tree. "Would you please help?"

For this Christmas, June has a plan. If she's to cut down on interior decoration, she has fifty-five acres to fool with on the outside. Unfortunately, all of the trees on the property are oak or maple—anything but fir—but she figures on buying a fir tree and planting it in the front yard. "That way I can hang everything on it," she says. "And besides, if it's good and tall, Richard will have to help." END

(June Allyson can be seen in Universal-International's The Glenn Miller Story.)

DISCOVERY CORNER

Lance Fuller, Hollywood's Answer to the Cry for a Brand New He-Man

■ "Nothing ever happened to me," grinned Lance Fuller, future star who is creating more excitement than they've had on the Universal lot since Tony Curtis was discovered. "Nothing that is, except when I was seven years old I captured a live alligator and thought I was tough. So a few years later I went sailing alone on the Indian River, got caught in a storm and was swept out to sea. The Coast Guard picked me up, bawled me out and I've never thought I was tough since. During my teens I tried ranching in Texas. A mad bull side-swiped me and I wound up in the hospital. I figured I led a charmed life from then on, and I was more convinced of it in 1946 when a bus I was in plunged off a mountain into the Gulf of Mexico."

Movie fans who see Lance with Tony Curtis in All American and in Son of Cochise are going to want to know a lot more about this twenty-four-year-old ex-football star who started out to be a lawyer, but turned actor when his folks told him he had all the elements of a perfect "ham." After his Army hitch he jumped into Little Theatre work and was discovered at the Laguna Playhouse in My Sister Eileen.

Hollywood, badly in need of a new bachelor, will have one in Lance when his divorce is final. He is a lean, 195-pound, six-foot-three-inch Summerset, Kentucky, youth of French, English and Indian descent. Currently, he lives in Beverly Hills with his mother, Mrs. Elizabeth Mathis. Now that Lance is really on his way up, he has transferred his springer spaniel, Baby, from the 1950 Ford convertible he used to drive to a sleek white foreign sports car, perfect for his favorite occupation of "just enjoying the climate, the breaks I'm getting and the gorgeous gals." Before long the gorgeous gals will be standing in line to enjoy his movies.

Is the Glenn Ford-Eleanor Powell marriage too good to be true?

THEY THREW AWAY A MILLION FOR LOVE

■ To put it mildly, Eleanor Ford was miffed at the annual story out of New York that she and Glenn were nearing the end of the matrimonial road. For some reason neither of them can fathom, ever since their marriage in 1943 some New York columnist starts a rumor once a year that they are on the outs—no doubt on the theory that no movie star marriage can last forever.

The facts are that Mr. and Mrs. Glenn Ford spent six months of 1953 in Brazil. It was the first time they had been abroad together. Their son, Peter, now nearly nine years old, went along with them on the combination vacation-work trip while Glenn appeared before the cameras in The Americano. There were dozens of complications, but none of these were domestic—only such minor irritations as waiting for several weeks in that magnificent country while the Mexican-born leading lady learned English. And the financial problems of inter-country movie financing had to be straightened out.

Now, with Glenn's picture, The Big Heat, in which he co-stars with Gloria Grahame just being released, they are back in their Beverly Hills mansion. It has taken them five years to complete the redecorating of their home. The reason? Glenn and Mrs. Glenn don't order anything unless they can pay for it spot cash.

To pursue the truth still farther, let it be known that when these two wed, they decided on a policy that cost them at least a million dollars in potential wealth. Eleanor Powell, before she married, was one of Metro's greatest stars. She could have carried on for years, earning at least a quarter of a million or more, annually. Instead, Eleanor hung up her dancing slippers when Glenn was mustered out of the Marines in 1945, and is one of the few great stars who ever really turned her back on stardom.

No matter what you hear, the truth is exactly as Glenn put it to MODERN SCREEN in November, 1949. He said: "I met her first in Pat O'Brien's living room. I couldn't resist her. Of course, it wasn't my first glimpse of the glamorous Eleanor Powell. Back in New York, when I was stage manager at the Empire Theater I used my day off to see her in the musical hit, At Home Abroad. I admired her charm and talent, but from a balcony a fellow can't do much more. I had to meet her to love her. I had to marry her to know her well."

Today Glenn says: "Nothing has changed. I wouldn't dignify the current rumor with a denial. It's too ridiculous!"

running wild

(Continued from page 27) her life are met with a wall of silence. It is typical that Debra, driving her remarkable car, would not deign to acknowledge a greeting if she thought it came from a stranger. Miss Paget looks at life down an extraordinarily narrow road. The bypaths are the doings of her career, filled with friends associated with that career. The road itself is peopled only by her immediate family. What they do and think and say, the way they live, is considered by Debbie to be their own business. And what Debbie thinks and does is strictly the affair of that narrow road.

It is an attitude that many stars have tried to maintain, but few have been successful. Millions of people feel they have the right to know the minutest personal details of a celebrity's life. It's one of the prices of fame and wealth, particularly in Hollywood. Most stars attain a modicum of privacy only after they have spent about ten years living figuratively in fish bowls and then, once the public seems sated with information, the stars are left to themselves and move into the spotlight only when they are embroiled in divorce, dope or death.

The newer crop of today's stars realizes the value of publicity and sometimes willingly, sometimes grudgingly, answers impertinent questions. Debra has been as cooperative as the next star, and even more aware than the average of the advantages of publicity. She has posed politely for requested pictures and spoken volubly in appointed interviews. Sweet and mannerly, she told scores of reporters about her breakfasts, her reading habits, her nail polish and her pets. If Debbie had been the average new star, this could have gone on forever without a ripple.

It happened that Debbie was different. Reporters heard with surprise that this alluring bit of pulchritude had never been kissed. Indeed, she had never been dated. Much was made of this for a couple of years. Debbie explained patiently to each succeeding interviewer that she would rather stay at home with people she knew and loved than go out with a boy who didn't interest her as much as her family did She pointed out that she was Victorian and believed in love at first sight—even in the well loved wheeze about Prince Charming.

During this time, which was more than a year ago, Debra Paget was known as a fairly shy young thing who had not yet grown wise in the way of interviewing. She never parried questions simply because it wasn't necessary. People couldn't believe that such an attractive girl could be happy with no beaux, and they began to probe for the reason for this state of affairs.

With little searching, they lit on Debra's mother. Mrs. Griffin denied that she had laid down any rules against Debra's dating. Debra and her family insist that they find nothing unusual in a twenty-year-old movie actress who goes out only with her mother.

Debra says reporters made a mountain out of a molehill. She maintains that her early statements on the matter were true, that she simply wasn't interested, and laments the fact that her mother was drawn into it. Mrs. Griffin did some lamenting of her own. "It was pretty awful, the way people pestered that girl. I've seen her tortured with questions. One night a columnist kept her from her dinner one hour, while he tried to get her to admit on the phone that she didn't date because I wouldn't let her. How could the child admit such a thing, when it wasn't true? I married young, and two of my children have already married young, so why in the world would I suddenly decide Debbie shouldn't date any boys?"

Mrs. Griffin was on the receiving end of more criticism because she goes everywhere with Debra. "I'm with her because she asks me to be, and that's all there is to it," said Mrs. Griffin. "Now, take Lisa—she's only eighteen, but she's not the type who needs me like Debbie does. Lisa has her first leading role over at Universal-International, but I don't go running around with her. I go with Debbie because she asks me to. That's what a mother's for."

People wonder why, if this is true, Debra feels the need for her mother's reassuring presence. For a rather quiet and retiring girl she has developed an amazing ability to take care of herself, and a singular talent for side-stepping questions. The new talent may stem from the fact that with these flying barbs—the dominant mother, the dateless girl, etc.—Debra has found need at last for a weapon to keep her private life out of print.

The affair of the ring added to the height of the wall Debra has built around herself. Last year, before her twentieth birthday, she began to sport an immense sparkler on the third finger of her left hand. The diamond was reported to be five and a half carats, and Hollywood, knowing that Debbie's father is a house painter and that her own salary is not astronomical, began to speculate about the source of the ring. Said Debra, "It's a family heirloom," but gossips didn't swallow that answer. When reporters asked, "From which ancestor?" Debbie put her newly-found ability to change the subject into practice.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

When Marilyn Maxwell appeared at Great Lakes she was singing at a dance given for the servicemen. During the act she pulled my husband onto the stage, hugged him, and started to sing "Embraceable You."

Just at that time my nine-year-old son sneaked into the dance and asked a man standing near the stage, "What's my Pop doing up there with that blonde?"

He still teases his father about that!

Mrs. O. T. Carroll
Naval Base, South Carolina

At the same time, Debra admitted she had found her Prince Charming, and descended from the throne of movieland's unkissed queen. Two and two made four, figured Hollywood, and cast about for men wealthy enough to bestow such a bauble. They came up with the name of a producer renowned for his active interest in girls. Debbie vehemently denied that this man was her knight on a white horse, although she appears to fit into his pattern—young, gullible, unattached and ambitious. She refused to name her new heart interest, and inasmuch as she never has been seen in public with him, the rumors continued to fly.

Her mother, who learned lip-reading during the days she worked in burlesque, frequently found herself in the embarrassing position of watching other people discuss the origin of the ring. Mrs. Griffin holds her temper under such circumstances, but she is a candid woman. One day in the studio commissary, after ascertaining the subject of conversation at the adjoining table, she could no longer restrain herself. "If you really want to know where the ring came from," she barked at the tongue-wagger, "it's a rhinestone out of one of my old G-strings!"

Mrs. Griffin feels deeply for Debra in this predicament, and while she occasionally allows herself such outbursts in defense of her daughter, she insists that Debbie hew to a more decorous line.

So Debra continues to be sweet and mannerly during interviews, and willingly tells the lighter facts of her life. She lives with her parents and two younger sisters, plus a sister and brother-in-law and their two children. The house has ten rooms, is on Hollywood Boulevard, and is maintained without outside help. Debra's bedroom is done in white satin with turquoise satin flounces (one whole wall is covered in this way), and there is lavish trimming in strawberry velvet. The bed is seven inches larger than king size, the chairs are white wrought iron, the mirror is tinted in peach and framed in "white baguette," and there is a white television set.

She prefers light perfume, always wears it, and has conquered a nail-biting habit "because I'm not nervous any more." She claims she has never been a good mixer in large groups of people but that her personal appearance tours have helped her learn how to meet strangers. At home she is teased by her father when he sees a glamour photograph. "Who posed for it?" he wants to know. The family lives and lets live, and its members never interfere with each other. Says Mrs. Griffin: "The rest of the family are clowns, but Debbie is quiet. She's the different one—the only one who keeps her mouth shut."

Debra shampoos and styles her hair at home, lately prefers pencil-slim skirts, loves children, is moody when she's working, and dislikes cheap jewelry. "It's got to be the real McCoy or nothing at all," adds her mother.

Debbie will tell you all of these things about herself. She only clams up when the subject is steered to her mother, her Prince Charming or her ring. She likes to kid herself. She says she wears earrings because her face "is too plain and needs to be dressed up," and she admits her temper is growing worse. "I can't tell you why," she smiles. "It's just a million things."

Possibly it's because Debra has lately been badgered to exhaustion by strangers inquiring about things she does not wish to discuss. She feels that her course has been a good one. "I've made a point of looking like a movie star and I think it has paid off. I get a lot of letters from people who've seen me on tour, and they always say, 'You look just like I expected you to.' As for my not dating, lots of people who write to me say they're glad I'm not a sheep—that I don't date just because other girls my age do." About the ring, as well as the other points for discussion, Debra simply says, "People are not going to tell me how to run my private life."

There she has a point to be respected. Yet, when anything about a star's life is out of the ordinary, people are going to talk about it. Until the ring is no longer in evidence, until Debra begins openly dating men, and until she feels secure and comfortable without the presence of her mother—that is, until her personal life falls more into line with those of other girls her age—Debbie is going to have to put up with insolent questions and even saucier rumors. END

(Debra Paget can be seen in 20th Century-Fox's Prince Valiant.)

Shrinks Hemorrhoids New Way Without Surgery

Science Finds Healing Substance That Relieves Pain—Shrinks Hemorrhoids

For the first time science has found a new healing substance with the astonishing ability to shrink hemorrhoids and to stop bleeding—without surgery.

In case after case, pain was relieved promptly. And, while gently relieving pain, actual reduction (shrinkage) took place.

Most amazing of all—results were so thorough that sufferers made astonishing statements like "Piles have ceased to be a problem!"

The secret is a new healing substance (Bio-Dyne®) — discovery of a world-famous research institute.

Now this new healing substance is offered in ointment form under the name of *Preparation H. Ask for it at all drug stores—money back guarantee. *Trade Mark

Want a HOME?

Before you choose, be sure to GET THE FACTS about Schult mobile homes. Write or wire Dept. 6701

SCHULT CORP., ELKHART, IND.

SCHULT TRAILERS

CATALOG WITH 215 PICTURES FREE!

NEW! DIFFERENT! BEAUTIFUL!

For the first time — sensational pictures of your favorite movie stars in professional high gloss finish. Special super-duper offer:

20 for 25¢ • 50 for 50¢ • 120 for $1

FREE CATALOG with 215 PICTURES OF STARS with your order

DeLUXE PHOTO SERVICE, Dept. 625
Box 947, Church St. Annex, New York 8, N.Y.

ADDRESS POSTCARDS AT HOME

MAKE MONEY!! SPARE - FULL TIME

write

LINDO, WATERTOWN, MASS.

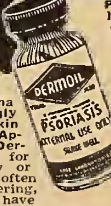
WHY DON'T YOU WRITE?

Writing short stories, articles on fashion, homemaking, hobbies, business, travel, local, club and church activities, etc., will enable you to earn extra money. In your own home, on your own time, the New York Copy Desk Method teaches you how to write the way newspaper women learn—by writing. Our unique "Writing Aptitude Test" tells whether you possess the fundamental qualities essential to successful writing. You'll enjoy this test. Write for it, without cost or ohligation.

NEWSPAPER INSTITUTE OF AMERICA
Suite 5714-A, One Park Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

SUFFERERS FROM PSORIASIS (SCALY SKIN TROUBLE) Use DERMOIL

MAKE THE ONE SPOT TEST



Prove it yourself no matter how long you have suffered or what you have tried. Beautiful book on psoriasis and Dermoil with amazing, true photographic proof of results sent FREE. Write for it.

SEND FOR GENEROUS TRIAL SIZE

©1939 LAKE LAB.

Don't mistake eczema for the stubborn, ugly embarrassing scaly skin disease Psoriasis. Apply non-staining Dermoil. Thousands do for scaly spots on body or scalp. Grateful users, often after years of suffering, report the scales have gone, the red patches gradually disappeared and they enjoyed the thrill of a clear skin again. Dermoil is used by many doctors and is backed by a positive agreement to give definite benefit in 2 weeks or money is refunded without question. Send 10c (stamps or coin) for generous trial bottle to make our famous "One Spot Test." Test it yourself. Results may surprise you. Write today for your test bottle. Caution: Use only as directed. Print name plainly. Don't delay. Sold by Liggett and Walgreen Drug Stores and other leading druggists. LAKE LABORATORIES, Box 3925, Strathmoor Station, Dept. 8109, Detroit 27, Mich.

STRANGE STORY

Keefe Brasselle can hardly believe it himself

■ Because Keefe (Cantor Story) Brasselle practically grew up on the 20th Century lot, he's always wanted to work in a picture at that particular studio. His mother, Marie Brasselle, has been hairdresser to Betty Grable for the last ten years. Although Betty Grable herself championed his ambition and Keefe has said hello to head man Darryl Zanuck almost as often as the gate man has, his ambition hadn't been realized. Finally came the day when he was signed to co-star with Mitzi Gaynor in Three Young Texans. Jubilantly, he called his mother to exclaim, "Mom—I've made it at last—I'm going to work at 20th."

"I know," his mother responded, letting the blow fall gently, "but I have news for you. The picture is going to be released by 20th, but it will be filmed at RKO!"

Keefe's long wait to land in the charmed circle of Hollywood big stars is paying off like the jackpot he hit when he went to the Flamingo Hotel in Las Vegas at $15,000 a week. It's an unheard-of figure for a boy who was almost unknown before playing the Eddie Cantor role. This booming success has made only one change in his personal life. He's building a rehearsal hall as an addition to his Hollywood home, doing most of the work himself. Keefe's Las Vegas trip is one he can't live without. At twenty-one, he broke into show business there as a master of ceremonies at $150 a week. "What a bomb I was," he recalls. "I was so bad, so nowhere, they fired me at the end of the second week." Now he's going back to collect 100 times his first price, and when he's through, as he says, "I'm going to rush home where I belong as fast as I can run. This might be all just a dream!"

crazy like a fox

(Continued from page 43) thus, and with a clear excuse for needing a shave, he drove to the drugstore and got the blades.

Now there are a few points to be made about this drug store foray. One is that Mature has never in his life been a conscious exhibitionist. He simply does not, in the manner of most people, double-check his impulses. The toga-and-beaver junket seemed to him a likely caper and he did not reconsider it. For another thing, none of his friends was especially puzzled by his action, even though they themselves would not have undertaken it. The most analytical among them had long since accepted Mature as unfathomable and special, and all recognized his gift for making the key gesture appear entirely logical. But one of them knew something the rest didn't know.

In the long morning hours before he bought razor blades, starting at dawn, Mature had attended to the following details: (1) combing through a script with a flair for nuance, vision and Victor Mature that then and thereafter was never to desert him; (2) working out the finer points of a small side-enterprise that would net him a nice little kit of money; (3) taking to a veterinarian a stray mongrel that had limped onto the premises the previous evening; (4) sitting beside the hospital bed of a friend for a couple of hours—a friend whose bill Mature would square later.

Granted that the last two points of this agenda may sound a bit mawkish, they happen to be true. That agenda comes about as close as conscientious scrutiny can to explain what's with Vic Mature.

Actually, there is no pat, complete and entirely intelligible explanation. Mature has many intimates in and out of the motion picture industry. They include stars, politicians, millionaires, publicists, newsmen, a dialogue director, a wardrobe man, Coast Guardsmen with whom he served in World War II, dogfaces with whom he didn't serve, grocery clerks, a man (Brian Donlevy) who in the name of art (Kiss Of Death) tried to prevent him from getting shot six times through the belly, and a man (Richard Widmark) who shot him six times through the belly, just the same. None of these professes to understand their friend, through and through. They simply go ahead and like him.

Victor Mature is an astute, spectacularly successful careerist. Some people see him as a staid, hawk-browed, chilly-faced sobersides. Others see him as a citizen who lives in a tent, shops for blades in crepe whiskers, and yields gracefully to being photographed watering his lawn in Prince Albert coat and shorts.

Here, at best, is safe middle ground: Victor Mature is an improbable fellow.

It is fifteen years since l'affaire toga. Mature's pup tent has grown to a handsome Mandeville Canyon estate, L-shaped around a patio and swimming pool. Late last summer around the pool were gathered a dozen or so friends in bon voyage formation—many of them the same friends who were clustered about the tent that day. A studio limousine drove Mature and his wife, Dorothy, to Pasadena, whence the Super Chief transported them to New York, whence the Queen Mary will see that they get to England, whence Holland, whence a loan-out picture (Mature is a 20th Century-Fox star) for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer with Clark Gable and Lana Turner.

Mature's career has grown, too. Behind him is its early lightweight phase, inaugurated with a strange piece of lint titled 1,000,000 B. C. and reaching its gaudy climax with the New York-induced appellation, "Beautiful Hunk of Man." Behind him is the war and his impeccable record, behind him the inexorable post-war growth of his stature as an artist and a no less steady growth of negotiable assets, such as dollar bills, and, immediately behind him, two films representing the full flowering of his professional life: The Robe and Demetrius And The Gladiators.

Well, you can see that the old Mature—or the young Mature, if you like—is a thing of the past as well as a pleasant memory of another era when headstrong youth did what it pleased, and who could care less?

Presently, he made his appearance at that send-off party. He stood for a moment in the fading light just outside the terrace door of his bedroom. He was older, greyer, possibly with a faint spiritual quality in the classic features that once had mirrored nothing but what sort of fun there was to be had around the corner. Then he broke the spell. The new Mature, nearing forty and possibly poised on the threshold of Academy Award honors, dashed across the patio and leaped into the pool, clad in polka dot pajamas and a battered felt hat.

This occasioned no more surprise on the part of his friends now than the toga business had fifteen years ago. This day was not abandoned wholly to fun and games either. Before teeing off at his cherished Riviera Country Club, and well before dunking himself so casually, Mature had helped straighten out the inventories of two of his thriving businesses. He had stopped by the home of Louella O. Parsons for a farewell interview, worked on a third commercial enterprise, and he had done retakes for Demetrius and some final dubbing for a film he had just completed for another studio.

To say that Mature is a self-centered opportunist and nothing else is to be blatantly mistaken. To say he is a handsome clown with naught behind his striking façade is to be idiotic. To say he is a bewildering amalgam of the two, combining the more admirable qualities of each, is to come pretty close. But to give up and start thinking about something simpler puts you at the head of the class.

Victor John Mature was born in Louisville, Kentucky, rather more than thirty years ago, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Marcellius Mature, émigrés from Austria. The elder Mature, who died in 1941, began life in America as an itinerant scissors grinder. By the time his son, somewhat against parental wishes, had flown the nest and headed for Hollywood, the father had parlayed this modest enterprise into a fortune of possibly half a million dollars, mainly from the proceeds of commercial air conditioning. Vic's mother, a handsome woman with a striking resemblance to Mature, still lives in Louisville whence she regards her offspring's achievements with an attitude somewhere between respectful tolerance and bemused disbelief. On a fairly recent trip to Hollywood—her only one—she left Mature with a vague feeling that, "I'm not sure mother knows exactly what I do out here."

Mature left home in 1937 without the formality of advising the family where he was going or even that he was going. He had no wish to worry them—merely wanted to expedite his departure—and patched up this omission shortly with a brief wire to his father from Los Angeles, reading roughly: "Stuck here in a strange city with only a dime." Mr. Mature's reply was even briefer: "Cheer up. I only had a nickel."

As a prelude to a three-part career, Mature enrolled in the Pasadena Playhouse, a truly distinguished establishment but one richer in cultural opportunities than in payroll. Accordingly, Mature, while playing stock and learning the fundamentals of his craft, washed dishes, simonized cars and worked as a janitor to keep body and soul in tandem. His mentor in those days was the highly able Gilmor Brown, who from the beginning gave his student the same "A" for talent that critics were not to concede him for years. Ultimately, after sixty-odd plays and the unexpected revelation of a gift for reading Shakespeare, a gift he has never lost, Mature got the lead in Autumn Crocus (a nice part for a romantic actor) and then in an offering called To Quito And Back. It was in this he came to the attention of film producer Hal Roach.

Mature's first chore for Roach, and his first film chore of any kind, was the role of a gangster in The Housekeeper's Daughter in a company graced by Joan Bennett. It went off all right except that it almost didn't come off at all. Arriving at the lot his first day, Mature was taken to the second floor of the front office into the presence of a Roach executive who took one fast look at him, shook his head dismally, and said: "Won't do. You don't look like an actor."

By the rule book, Mature should have fainted from pure chagrin or maybe shot himself. Instead, he stared back at the producer, set his two palms as a director does to frame a picture, replied finally, "You know something? I'll be damned if you look like a producer either!" and lunged out. The standoff was squared, but never fully resolved until years later when the two worked together again: the executive, Frank Ross, as producer of The Robe, Mature as one of its stars—perhaps its most applauded star.

Mature's next effort for Roach has a more significant place in his biography than it does in motion picture annals. It was the cave-man epic 1,000,000 B. C., opposite Carole Landis. To this day, Mature discusses it as frequently as he does any picture he's ever made. His jaw is apt to sag at the memory but with what particular emotion nobody knows. Certainly he has never been known to deride it. The least that can be said is that it made money and, so far as Mature was concerned, it started things.

It also got him back to Louisville for its première, his first visit since he'd flown the coop. In a hotel room there the night before the showing, there appeared a telltale crack in his practiced insouciance. Mature's habitual surface approach to matters that might be of importance to him is the familiar couldn't-care-less doctrine, be-glad-when-it's-over. Maybe, like many of its practitioners, he is only preparing an escape-hatch for disappointment. Maybe not. But when he was given the speech publicists had prepared for his personal appearance the evening of the show, he was so outraged by its content that he kicked the door of his room. That might have been all right if he'd been wearing shoes. He wasn't. The door splintered a trifle but so did Mature's big toe.

MATURE'S second professional appearance in his home town, with the 1950 picture, Stella, he and Ann Sheridan had made for Fox, was not without incident, either, although his body suffered no contusions. On his way to a radio appearance, Mature and party passed the theatre at which Stella was to open that night. The marquee naturally featured pictures of Victor Mature, and this somehow managed to un-hinge the taxi driver. "All that fuss!" he bellowed suddenly without turning his head. "All that strictly-from-nothing! Listen, I know that guy. Knew him when he was a kid. A nice guy but no

WHY DO FRANK AND AVA FIGHT?

■ Ever since their marriage two years ago, Ava Gardner and Frank Sinatra have fought, feuded and fussed. In fact they have battled so frequently that any news of a tiff between them is about as startling as yesterday's weather report. What is their trouble and why do they fight? The answer, according to Hollywood intimates, is just this: they are very much in love. That isn't as strange a reason as it sounds.

Because they are in love, each has the power to hurt the other and each employs this power with reckless abandon. First step of the current fracas was their refusal to see each other for an entire week in New York last fall, although they were living at separate hotels only twelve blocks apart. A temporary reconciliation was effected at Frank's mother's home in New Jersey, but a week later Sinatra refused to escort Ava to the Hollywood première of Mogambo, and she in turn refused to attend his opening at the Sands Hotel in Las Vegas.

Frank's mother tried to explain their behavior after the ill-fated reunion at her home. When Ava was still in London, Frank had taken his mother to Atlantic City for ten days. While they were gone, Ava planed in from Europe. Frank didn't know which flight Ava would be on. If he had, he would have met her. Ava misunderstood and checked in at a hotel. The newspapers gave a big play to rumors of a split and Frank, who hadn't intended to insult Ava, was confused and annoyed.

"When the ten days in Atlantic City were over," says Mrs. Sinatra, "I started out for home. I was almost home when I thought, 'No, I'm going to go over to New York to talk to Ava and see just what's wrong, what happened.' I called her up at her hotel and she said to please come right over. She kissed me and after a few minutes she began to cry. She had been tired, she said, when the plane came in, and when she didn't see Frank, she felt bad. Then she found out he was in Atlantic City with me and she said, 'Mama, I don't know how to explain this, but I know how little you get to see him. I thought for once you're together, just the two of you, and I didn't want to spoil it. I thought I might spoil it.' Then I said to Ava, 'What are you doing tomorrow night for supper? Because I want you to come over to the house and eat and I want Frank to come too, and for the both of you to talk this over like two grown-up people.' Then Ava laughed like a girl and said, 'I'll come, Mama, of course I'll come.' So that was easy.

"Well, the next step was to get Frank to come," continued Mrs. Sinatra. "I know he can be a little stubborn sometimes and I decided to do this my way. I called him up and told him I was going to make a nice Italian meal the next night, Monday, and would he come over between shows. He was singing at (Bill Miller's) Riviera right then.

"So he says to me, 'Who's gonna be there?' And I says 'Never mind; you just come.' Ava got there first, at about six-thirty. Frank got there at seven. He walked in and I think he almost expected to see Ava there. He looked happy. They both did. But they were just standing there, not saying anything.

"This is where mothers come in. 'Hey,' I said to both of them. 'Come into the kitchen and see what I'm making for you tonight.' They both followed me in and we walked to the stove and I took the big spoon I use for stirring the gravy and I made them both taste it. Then they both began to laugh and talk and before you knew it they were hugging each other and then they grabbed me and the three of us stood there just hugging and laughing and I think we all felt like crying a little bit, too."

Mrs. Sinatra's happy ending lasted just a week. But keeping these two highly emotional people together is no easy assignment, even for a mother. Ava has never been a balanced, well-adjusted young woman, and for years Frankie has been self-centered and temperamental. Mrs. Sinatra is all for Ava. "Ava is one of the most wonderful people I've ever met. She's beautiful, more beautiful than she looks in the movies or on magazine covers. And she's natural." Mrs. Sinatra wrinkles her brow. "But I've noticed sometimes when there are more people than just me and Mr. Sinatra and Frank, Ava gets to acting a little shy. She clams up just a little, like a little girl at a party with a lot of big people. I don't know why. But you still love her, and you still feel her being here in the same room with you, being warm. I tell you—I'd like to tell this to the people who criticize Frank and Ava—I'd like to tell those hypocrites who send me letters without signing their names that say 'Aren't you ashamed, Mrs. Sinatra, aren't you ashamed that your boy divorced his wife and left three children just so he could marry that actress?' I'd like to tell them that Frank loves his three children as much as he loves anything else in the world, that he never fell in love with Ava until after his separation, that I, his mother, am proud that he married a wonderful girl like his Ava."

Ava says that what she really wants is a baby. Friends think she might consider adopting one, if Frank agrees. Other than their tempestuous, unpredictable, nerve-shattering kind of love, what really solid basis do Ava and Frank have to hold their marriage together?

Edward De Blasio

Here's how Joan Caulfield and Frank Ross got around to that big question

HOW DID HE PROPOSE?

■ I was living at Benay Ventua's house, when one day she said, "I want you to meet Frank." I turned to face Frank Ross, the writer and the producer of The Robe. He was in the middle of his divorce from Jean Arthur at the time. I, too, was rather unhappy.

He said, "Will you have dinner with us?" I said, "Yes," and Benay suddenly disappeared with a blithe "See you later!"

Frank gallantly took me to Romanoff's. Benay came along later, and said, "I'll give you the keys to the house, and you come home whenever you want." And she disappeared again.

Frank was really a perfect stranger to me. I had met him two years before, on a golf course, at a time when I was concentrating on golf. (When one is unhappy, one concentrates on something like that.)

Frank took me to hear some music, and home by one A.M. Benay was still up, waiting for my news. "Did he ask you for your phone number?" she asked eagerly. I admitted, unhappily, "No." I believe I had fallen in love with Frank that night.

A week later, Benay called me excitedly at the golf club to say Frank had inquired about me, and that she had invited him to her house for a dinner party. Nothing fussy, of course. Just a party for twenty-four people.

After that dinner, Frank took me out, and I stopped seeing other men. We started to go out two or three times a week, and then every night. Then one day, when I called him at the studio set, his secretary told me that the last time I had phoned, he had scolded her for not calling him to the phone at once. For the first time, I was sure he liked me!

One night we were at a party at the Alan Ladds! It was about eight months after our first date. We were sitting on the patio. The moon was gleaming bright, and I said, "You know, you're the kind of man I'd like to marry!" And, he, being a perfect gentleman, did not deny it.

Benay arranged the wedding at her house, practically at once.

Barrymore, you ask me. So he's in lights now. Me, I'll be home wit' me slippers on when the yokels are givin' him the double-O. Who cares for a movie star? Who cares for Mature?" By and by the cab arrived at its destination and Mature made something of a ceremony of paying the fare himself. The driver looked squarely at him for the first time and appeared to lose consciousness for a moment. When he regained it, his apologies were abject.

"Listen," said Mature, "you stay here till we get out, and keep the flag up. You and me, we talk the same language. And get the egg off your face, for Pete's sake. You're my driver the rest of the time I'm here, and I don't want you looking unhappy about it." Mature was as good as his word. For the whole three days of his stay, he kept the one cab with him, presumably putting the driver up in the middle tax brackets. By the time he left, they were fast friends.

It figured. This rapprochement would surprise no one who knows Mature. Although certain persons and situations, usually those bearing the trappings of phoniness, can rouse his hostility with the quick, hard flare of a scratched match, he is extremely sensitive to unfounded hostility against himself. Yet he understands it—more accurately, he divines it—and instead of meeting it with a challenging truculence of his own, seeks to break it down. This is not because of a quailing of the spirit, but because of a need to overcome glib misconceptions of what sort of individual he is. It is normal for some people to meet a film star on aggressive terms, to display rudeness solely to convince themselves or any onlookers that they are not impressed.

Fortunately, he's a deadly man in this particular clutch. A friend has said, "He can charm the ears off a brass monkey"—and he can. An even closer associate once remarked: "He can walk into a crowded room and feel, right away, if there is a resentment and where it's coming from. He then proceeds right to the source and won't be happy until he has broken it down. And he does break it down. I don't think there's another man in the world who's had said about him so often, in that tone, you know: 'Hell, he's a swell guy! I thought—' And so forth." The Louisville cab-driver was a mild case in point.

Mature and his companions had to make a side-trip to Cincinnati that time, where Mature produced two corollary instances of his persuasive power. One was at a swank Cincinnati rooftop dining room which positively is never open for lunch. Mature stepped in simply to look the place over. Three hours later the entranced maître d' was still serving him special Gallic dishes and carrying on a fervent conversation, interesting in the light of the fact that Mature knows no French. Next day, Mature boarded the Cincinnati airport limousine to fly back to Louisville. But the afternoon was lovely, he had not been in the East, the good, green East, in years, and he thought there must be better ways to travel than by flying. He leaned forward and began talking to the driver—and twenty minutes later sat back, en route to Louisville on Cincinnati airport service wheels.

FOLLOWING the quasi-memorable 1,000,000 B. C., Mature made for Roach an item called Captain Caution and then got an electrifying break. Playwright Moss Hart had written for Gertrude Lawrence a gaudy inspection of psychiatric difficulties titled Lady In The Dark and needed a man who could portray a handsome film actor built like a professional strong man. That turned out to be Mature.

New York, a difficult town to stagger, was staggered. Mature became society's

No. 1 boy, café and otherwise. He charmed the 400 by not being conspicuously charmed by these in return, and for a brief period he solved a severe apartment shortage by sleeping nights stretched out on the banquettes of the Stork Club's Cub Room, most hoity and inner of all Manhattan night club inner sanctums. A picture magazine of vast circulation took note of all this and featured Mature both on its cover and inside the book. The essay has long since been forgotten but one tiny fragment has survived. An unnamed debutante was quoted as saying rapturously: "What a beautiful hunk of man!"

Mature's feeling about it today is that it was a very lucky publicity stroke—at the time. It was the strongest incidental factor ever to militate in favor of his career. If it could be forgotten now, he would not be angry.

On his return from New York, he joined 20th Century-Fox and began the second phase of his climb. Pictures he did there before the war were light but pleasant. One of them, My Gal Sal, made an amazing bundle of money.

He served in the Coast Guard—first the temporary reserve and then the regular—for thirty months during the war, overcoming with ease the short-lived prejudice of enlisted personnel against beautiful hunks of men, and came out of it with much honor, a commendation from the commandant and the will to start making civilian money again.

Besides more housing difficulties, which he solved first by living in his dressing room, and then by buying a cottage in a non-fashionable section of West Los Angeles, everything rolled smoothly. He teed off with the part of gambler Doc Holliday in the John Ford production My Darling Clementine, went from that to the so-so Moss Rose, and from that to his first sound critical success, the luckless criminal in Kiss Of Death.

The graph sloped off a bit then, but never dangerously, and he felt secure enough on February 28, 1948 to marry Dorothy Berry, a non-professional, in Yuma, Arizona. Mrs. Mature, born Dorothy Stanford in Pasadena, is as lovely a stabilizer as a mercurial temperament could ask for.

Despite a small parade of run-of-the-mill pictures, the Mature luck—"Everything breaks right for me; I just relax"—held. Cecil B. DeMille, requiring a Samson for Delilah, could think of no one more desirable than Victor Mature, and Victor Mature he got.

The merits or demerits of Samson And Delilah as art were beside the point—Mature himself, arguing his case for a strong follow-up picture, admitted that his part in it constituted a "freak" success. Its tremendous financial returns were not, nor was the power of Mature's comportment and performance. He did make lesser films after its release, but almost unquestionably he had set the stage for The Robe and Demetrius. That, as it turned out, was what counted.

TODAY, Victor Mature lives a pleasant, slightly chaotic life in his two-year-old Mandeville home with his wife and son, Mike, his friends, his work and his golf. Golf is the most recent of a long series of fickle devotions, but it evidently has the distinction of being with him to stay. Within a year of taking it up, he broke eighty, and he'd only been at it ten months when he shot his second hole-in-one. He is a natural athlete and this outlet serves his abundant energies well. It has also proved to be of therapeutic value. In the middle of one professional crisis, he went out and shot fifty-four holes by himself without thinking anything or saying anything. When it was over, he felt thoroughly cleansed and knew exactly what he had to do.

Some idiosyncrasies, as well as many of the old sensitive points, stay with him. He still eats whatever, however and whenever he wants. He does not balk at enchiladas and root beer for breakfast. Nor can he forsake an odd, touching compassion for the plain, the timid or the lonely. Entering one of the large parties he so rarely feels moved to attend, Mature maintains toward its more influential or beautiful ornaments an air of pleasant reserve. But a neglected, frumpish or anonymous guest is more than he can bear. He spends hours exerting his charm and flattering attentiveness on a wallflower who otherwise would have been stranded. And from whom he has not a thing in the world to gain. In Hollywood, this is maverick behavior. In Mature, it is the norm.

ALTHOUGH any generality about Mature is ill-advised, it is safe to say that he takes his career seriously, himself not at all. He is a master of the self-derogatory. Confronted with a complaint from DeMille during the shooting of Samson, he replied gently: "Yes, but where else can you find anything so big that moves on two feet?" He was likewise embarrassed by the early publicity for the same part, well aware that Samson threw chariots around and pulled down temples. Mature, actually a very powerful man, was moved to confide to a writer: "You know, I'd smoke more if I had the strength to tear the cellophane off more than one pack of cigarettes a day." Barred from admission to a posh local golf club on the grounds that he was an actor, Mature denied the allegation bitterly, averring he was no such thing and that he had his press notices to prove it.

Convention moves him little. Dining one night at the old Trocadero, he overheard a girl with his party order lasagne, an Italian dish. She was told it wasn't on the menu. Without mentioning his intent, he went across the street to LaRue, a more or less competitive establishment, filled the order, and brought it back to the Troc. The waiters were indignant but couldn't have said at just what. Since the problem had never arisen before, there was no precedent for handling it. On another occasion, during a Mature craze for canasta, he, Dorothy and another couple stopped for lunch at an elegant but deserted hotel. It was asprawl like a dead peacock because it was off season. Wishes for canasta began to gnaw at Mature and soon the four had chartered the hotel's super-bungalow, where they stayed for a week, playing night and day in what must have been the longest sustained session in canasta's history.

But if convention does not touch him, human grief and suffering do. When the fiancée of a close but monetarily harassed friend was injured in an automobile accident, Mature footed all expenses, sent acres of flowers and drove miles across town to sit with her at the hospital. When a waitress in the Fox commissary became critically ill at a time she happened also to be critically broke, he very quietly picked up that tab, too. This from a man whose shrewd business sense is indisputable. When a beloved studio publicist died, with interment many long and inconvenient miles from the place he had lived and been loved, only one star bothered to come to his funeral: Mature.

And if Mature should see the foregoing paragraph, there is one thing to be noted: it will gag him.

So we end as we began—in a state of considerable confusion, having come to only one conclusion—trying to describe Victor Mature is like trying to parse an eggbeater. END

PHOTOGRAPH BY SARRA

Competition's Wonderful!

It's one reason we all have so many of the good things that make life worth living!

Johnny couldn't tell you whether Mary's friendlier smile, or her name on the sign, made him choose her lemonade. But he's glad he did! Because let's face it—we all like to have somebody try extra hard to win our good will.

In fact, when so many brand manufacturers compete for your favor, as they do every day in this land of ours—it makes you feel pretty wonderful, doesn't it?

Their keen competition is the chief reason we can all choose today from the biggest line-up of top-quality brands of merchandise ever offered to a purchaser anywhere in the world! It explains why makers of brand-name products never stop trying to improve their brands to increase our satisfaction. And why they keep us up-to-date about them in magazines like this.

Yes, today it is truer than ever before—when you name your brand, you better your brand of living!

BRAND NAMES FOUNDATION
INCORPORATED
A Non-Profit
Educational Foundation
37 West 57 Street, N.Y. 19, N.Y.

"call me pinhead"

(Continued from page 31) all agree, would be to convince him he is a success. "Not to have anything further to attain or accomplish would demoralize him," they say. "He'd fall apart." Gordon is still very much in a hurry.

Gordon had no serious brief against Warner Brothers when he got out of his contract with them last summer. No serious brief, that is, except that working only for them restricted him almost entirely to movies at a time when the whole field of entertainment was widening excitingly. He'll still make pictures. He is one of the leading choices to star in the movie version of Oklahoma! (the other two candidates are Howard Keel and Guy Mitchell). He may also appear on Broadway opposite Jeanmaire (of the Ballet de Paris and Goldwyn's Hans Christian Andersen) in a big musical. He will certainly be shaping up his radio show, The Railroad Hour, for its TV debut, and if he accepts all the offers he is getting for hotel and night club appearances, that schedule will be filled solid for the next five years.

GORDON came to Hollywood as a singer from radio, with a touch or two of theatre experience. If you catch him today in his club routine you will find that he is also a poised actor, a clever impersonator and a surprisingly good dancer. He acquired these additional abilities because each was a challenge that he met head on. His first serious movie dancing was performed in 3 Sailors And A Girl with Gene Nelson. When the scene was originally planned only Gene was to dance.

"You sit it out," the director told Gordon, "because it is a fast and difficult time step."

"I can do it," Gordon protested.

Gene, who is a close friend of Gordon's, advised against it. "You're not a hoofer," he said. "You might look bad. Why take a chance?"

Gordon waved this sort of reasoning aside. "Don't worry about me," he said. "I'll take the chance. I'll dance." And he did.

From that one might conclude that Gordon is not only a hard driving guy, but stubbornly so, and probably a bit egocentric. It's true. The business of being an artist is such a personal one, so much depends on what you are, what you look like and sound like, as well as what you can do, that it is almost impossible not to react to any given situation from a purely subjective point of view. If Gene Nelson hadn't known this, he would have been offended. Many people who come into contact with Gordon don't know it and are offended. That's why unflattering stories about Gordon get printed. Unfortunately, when he proves, as he generally does, that he is utterly without malice, nobody bothers to correct the original bad report.

A well-known designer once walked onto a Warner Brothers studio set carrying a costume for Gordon which she proudly held up before him. He took one look at it and said, "It stinks." She was shocked into tears and ran off to the producer to resign from the picture. Gordon followed her, slapping at his face in disgust with himself.

"The collar is too high on it," he tried to tell her when he got to the producer's office. "I haven't the neck for it. I'd look like a pinhead. Otherwise the costume is fine."

"But you said it stinks!" she cried.

"On me it would, I meant," he said. "I could see that right away and that's all I could think of. I'm sorry."

The producer, long accustomed to the way actors figure, sighed. "He likes it," he told the designer. "But you see just the costume while he sees himself in it. It's a big difference."

She wiped her eyes dry. "Just call me pinhead," Gordon told her. "But don't make me look like one, honey." And then she smiled.

Paul Coates, a columnist for the Los Angeles Daily Mirror, once happened to be at Fort Ord when Gordon, Bing Crosby, and Bob Hope were on the program to entertain the troops. Just as the show started he heard Gordon appeal to Bing and Bob. "Hey, fellows," asked Gordon, his manner impatient, "Let me go on first, will you?"

They looked at each other and shrugged. "Go ahead," said Bing. "Hop to it," said Bob.

The next morning Paul Coates blasted Gordon in his column. How could a younger player be so arrogant as to shove in ahead of two men like Hope and Crosby? he asked. He added that he would hate to be the wife of a fellow like Gordon. "What a life she must live!" he said.

When the column came out both Gordon and his wife, Sheila, were thunderstruck.

Macdonald Carey was once named West Coast chairman of National Sunday School Week. Now this Mr. Carey is not what you'd call the Sunday School type. He's an ex-Marine, but he's the father of three children. It seems that Mr. Carey, who would rather front for something as normal as a church school, instead of the usual crackpot organizations, had a funny experience when he was in the Marines.

He and some buddies heard about an island that still had head hunters on it. So they rented a launch from some Seabees and went to have a look. After a half-day climb up into the mountains, they found the head hunters and they asked the chief whether he'd like to trade a few good skulls for some of their knives and gadgets. The chief, who had been cordial up to then, was horrified. "Why," he said, "that's impossible. This is Sunday and we're all good Presbyterians!"

Carl Schroeder

Gordon wrote a letter to Crosby and Hope immediately, telling them why he had made his request to go on ahead of them. They both told him to forget about it. "If I took to heart all that's been written about me," wrote Bing, "I'd be a total wreck."

PAUL COATES heads a new TV panel show called Our Famous Husbands, and among the members of his panel is Mrs. Sheila MacRae. She has made sure that Paul, too, knows what happened that day at Fort Ord. Gordon's grandmother was desperately ill in the East. His sister had promised to telephone him at eleven o'clock that evening about the results of an operation which would show whether or not her condition was incurable. Only by going on the show first could Gordon get back to his hotel in time to get the call. When he did get back, it was to learn the worst. The death of his grandmother was the first tragedy in Gordon's life. He could have explained the circumstances to Crosby and Hope that night, as anyone else would have done, but to do so as they were about to go on stage seemed to him like a poor time to burden them with his personal affairs.

Last fall Gordon went to El Rancho hotel in Las Vegas, Nevada, to play a two weeks' engagement. Five minutes after he got there, he learned that an act called The Redcaps was on the same show; seven singers whose repertoire not only included some of the very songs he planned to use, but who also did the same type of impersonations he presented. This sort of mistake in booking will send any performer into hysterics. Gordon yelled his head off.

"All right, we'll cancel their act," the manager told him. Gordon quieted down and shook his head. "Wait," he said. "Maybe there is some way to work it out." And he went for a walk through the hotel's public and gambling rooms.

Word of his protest had reached The Redcaps. They had been in situations of this kind before with the inevitable result. They let it be known that Gordon MacRae was a heel and started packing—standard operating procedure for actors when they clash with each other. But when opening night came they were still in El Rancho hotel and working, not in the main room but in the cocktail lounge and later in the gambling rooms. Gordon had come up with this idea. It was so successful that within three days every other big hotel in Las Vegas had copied it.

Gordon didn't do badly, either. He broke the hotel attendance record for his two weeks' stay. On top of that, The Redcaps withdrew their unkind remarks about him. They had spoken too soon.

Among the people who disliked Gordon at first sight is his wife. Sheila was a member of the Millpond Playhouse in Roslyn, Long Island. When she first saw him, she was taking down the names of a line of forty aspirants to a single opening on the cast. He yelled at her from half way back in the line. He wanted to know if she would take his name right away, so he wouldn't have to wait. He said he had borrowed his mother's car and had to get it back soon. She gave him an icy stare.

The next moment he had somehow barged up to the desk and was talking to her. "A. (for Albert) Gordon MacRae is my name," he was saying. "From Scarsdale, New York. I'll be back for the tryouts."

She had to put it down. But when the readings were held for the part that was to be filled, her resentment was still very much with her. The play was Christopher Morley's The Trojan Horse. Only two people voted against Gordon's getting the role. One was Sheila. The other was her roommate whom she had talked into also blackballing him. In fact, the roommate had heard nothing but a steady stream of anti-MacRae chatter.

"He was pushy, he was fresh, he was impudent," Sheila recalls. "For six weeks I couldn't stand him. I kept on pointing out how obnoxious he was. He was all over the place, getting his nose into everything—the scene painting, the seating arrangement, even the cooking in the house where we ate. One morning he sent his eggs back to the kitchen because he didn't like the way they were done. The next morning you'd have thought he would make up for this by not causing another commotion. Instead, he went back to the kitchen to tell the cook how to fry his eggs. From that time on, he used to spend a lot of time back there, leaning over the cook's shoulder and giving her advice. And she loved it! She seemed to sense that he meant no offense. After a while, I got the same feeling about him. He was just so chock full of confidence about himself that any sort of shyness would be sheer pretense."

GORDON will be thirty-three in March, gets $15,000 a week for club work, $5,000 for guest appearances on TV or radio, and will command upwards of $150,000 for a picture. He was twenty years old and earning just $50 a week when he married Sheila. Yet she is certain he was as sure of himself then as he is today. "His band was in Cleveland and I was in New York when he proposed and I said yes," she reports. "He had me take a train there right away. We had no house, no furniture, no funds besides his salary, no plans about how or where we would live. That was what I had gone to Cleveland to talk about. But we didn't get to that conversation until after he marched me down to the city hall, got a license, and had the marriage ceremony performed."

Gordon was under contract to Columbia Broadcasting System and had a year to go on his contract when war broke out and he joined the Air Force. He was in Austin, Texas, when his discharge came through and he immediately wrote CBS in New York that he wanted to finish out his year. They replied that they were so surfeited with singers that they had no place for him. They would simply pay him off for the year his contract had to run. By this time, their first child was born and Sheila was worried. There was an opportunity to work on some small stations in Texas and she thought they ought to look into it. Gordon shook his head. "We're going to New York," he announced.

They went. CBS officials repeated what they had told him by letter. Gordon countered by suggesting that they might be able to use a boy-girl program if they couldn't use single male singers. They agreed to listen. By the next day, Gordon had roughly sketched out some patter he could exchange with a girl between songs. The girl was Sheila, the audition was piped into the offices of William Paley, president of CBS. When it was over, Mr. Paley was on the telephone. He couldn't remember the name of the singer, he told his program heads, "but whoever he is, and the girl with him, put them on a regular weekly spot."

This meant that Gordon's voice was once more to be heard regularly, which was far more important to him than just sitting around and collecting his check regularly. Four months after he and Sheila went on the air Gordon had two more radio shows of his own, Jello and Gulfspray. He had been signed to appear in a Broadway musical, 3 To Make Ready, and had been selected on We The People as the male voice heard most in radio.

"That's what I like," he told Sheila at the time. "Action!" He was to get more. A year after he went back on the air he was signed by Warner Brothers and shipped out to Hollywood.

A writer once asked Sheila if Gordon ever relaxes. She reported that he does, usually on a Sunday afternoon. She finds him sitting out in the yard under a tree, listening to a record player.

The music is always operatic. And in his eyes, she can see that he isn't listening just for amusement. He is making plans. She doesn't waste time wondering whether some day she will see Gordon stride out upon the stage of the Metropolitan Opera House in New York and burst into an aria from La Boheme or Don Giovanni. She knows they won't be able to stop him when he makes up his mind he is ready for it. END

Lady Luck has jilted her favorite. Now Bing Crosby has something to groan about

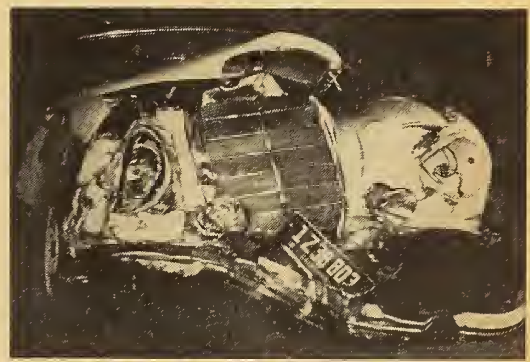
DASHING Mercedes cost $12,250, sports English plates.



SMASHING Mercedes cost $3000 to fix, more in suits.

When Bing Crosby was a young man, thirty or so years ago, he was so irresponsible that to most people he seemed to be unlikely husband material.

But once he was married to Wilma Wyatt, a beautiful thrush from Memphis who sang under the name of Dixie Lee, Bing settled down and became a model family man.

For twenty years Der Bingle has led a charmed life, setting the most phenomenal records in show business. His recordings have sold more than eighty million copies and his forty-seven movies have grossed more than a billion dollars.

Through all this the Crosby name has never once been tarnished by scandal or tainted by rumor. Bing's family has always been regarded as one of the happiest and most wholesome in Hollywood. And until Dixie passed away last year, the household had managed to stay clear of tragedy.

Having counted his blessings, Bing has always referred to himself as "the luckiest guy on earth." In fact, when he wrote his autobiography, he insisted upon the title, Call Me Lucky.

As happens to all men, Bing Crosby's luck ran out a few Sundays ago when at five-thirty-five in the morning, his $12,250 German sports car, a Mercedes-Benz, collided with a late model sedan in a Los Angeles street intersection.

Alone in his flashy, yellow convertible at the time, Bing cracked a vertebra in his back and wrenched his knee so badly that he couldn't report for work on the set of White Christmas for several days.

There were three occupants in the other car, and two of these were seriously hurt. One, a city fireman, suffered a major head concussion and for a while it was touch and go as to whether he would live. Fortunately, he has.

Bing told a State Highway Patrolman, "I slowed down and came to an idle stop when I reached the intersection. I looked both ways, saw no cars and started across. There was a crash, and I lost control. That's all I know."

After Bing made that statement, he left the accident scene in a hurry. His Mercedes-Benz, which he bought in Stuttgart last summer, was so badly smashed that it had to be towed away. Garagemen who later submitted a $3,000 repairs-estimate, say, "He's a lucky guy to be alive. If he'd been driving some ordinary car, it would've buckled like an accordion, and the steering wheel would've gone through his chest. Either that, or he'd have been thrown through the windshield."

In the weeks to come, Bing, who has always been an extremely careful driver, will undoubtedly become the target of several lawsuits. The Groaner has something to groan about, for a change.

Typically, when Hollywood heard about Der Bingle's smashup, no one asked if the crooner was hurt. What the movie colony asked first was, "Where had Crosby been, that he was coming home at five-thirty in the morning? Could he possibly have been visiting the future Mrs. Crosby?"

Bing didn't and wouldn't, say. But Mona Freeman did talk. "Bing was out with me," the young actress admitted. "It was our first date since he'd returned from Europe. We went to a party for Claudette Colbert. When it was over, he took me home. He was on the way to his home when the accident occurred. I can tell you that Bing was cold, stone sober."

what really happened to doris day

(Continued from page 32) worried about her. She looked drawn and tired. They didn't want to start a picture and have her collapse midway. After all, she'd been none too strong when she made Calamity Jane with Howard Keel.

The front office boys talked to Marty. Where Doris is concerned, her husband is the only court of appeal. A new contract was coming up. Why couldn't Doris be reasonable? The studio had worked her too hard. Everyone agreed to that. Yes, she deserved more money. No question about it. How about $150,000 a picture, two pictures a year, a five-year deal? How about Martin Melcher Productions to be released through Warner Bros.? Okay, only let the girl get herself checked over.

Doris went to a doctor, a great doctor, and she was given a complete physical. A tumor was found near the left breast.

She was told honestly, but with tact.

You can imagine the thoughts that raced through her mind. She was sure, first of all, that the tumor was malignant, cancerous. She thought of Dixie Lee Crosby who had been killed by that disease. She recalled other people similarly afflicted. She wondered what would happen to Terry, her young son, if she should die. To die at thirty! Her emotions ran amuck. Tears ran down her cheeks and she cried in her heart.

But her staunch faith in her religion brought her strength. She wondered if the answer didn't lie in prayer. Prayer has brought her great happiness in the past. Prayer has the power to conquer and rectify and cure. And she started to pray, but around her there were people, kind people whom she loved and respected and admired, including the great doctor, and he said, "Look, honey. There's only one way we can tell about the tumor, only one way we can find out whether it's malignant or benign. We've got to take it out. At least, we've got to take out a piece and have it analyzed."

You can imagine the conflict that raged in this lovely girl's soul—the conflict between her religion and medicine.

She was prevailed upon to enter a hospital and on September 24, she was admitted to St. Joseph's in Burbank. A biopsy was performed on the left breast. A small tumor, no more than two-by-four centimeters was removed and taken down to the pathology laboratory. Doris was kept on the operating table.

If they should find that the tumor was benign, then Doris had nothing to worry about. The surgeon would merely suture the incision and home she'd go, good as new.

If the tumor were malignant, a radical mastectomy would have to be performed to stop the possible spread of cancer.

In his laboratory, the pathologist took the tumor and placed it on the microtome, a slicing machine. A blast of carbon dioxide instantly froze the tumor so that it would be firm enough for dissection.

While he worked, the doctor, the nurses, and Doris Day, their patient, waited. They waited and they prayed. Doris, of course, was anesthetized. In the operating room, there was only silence and hope.

The pathologist took a glass rod and picked up a small sample from the tumor. He dropped it into a jar of water and stained the tissue with toluidine blue so that the cellular structure would be easier to determine.

Then he slipped the tissue fragments onto a pair of glass slides. Delicately, he placed them under his microscope. He looked at one, then at the other. Then he smiled.

"Benign," he said. "Benign."

The word was flashed to the operating room. Everyone was smiling. The doctor closed the wound. When Doris awoke she was told the truth. Absolutely no cancer. She could go home with peace of mind.

Physically, she was okay.

But peace of mind did not come easily, and at home she developed an anxiety neurosis, a constant apprehension, a psychogenic illness of sorts, and the doctor recommended that she see a specialist.

Doris complained of nervousness and fatigue and a tendency to be easily upset. To her, this was frightening, because all her life she has been an energetic, hard-working girl and suddenly she had flagging ambition and a disinclination and partial inability to work or even to play.

Fatigability in girls like Doris Day rarely comes as a result of metabolic exhaustion, although Doris has frequently suffered from a marked anemia. More frequently, the fatigue is a result of emotional difficulties, the foundations of which can be traced to childhood conflicts.

I went to grade school with Doris Kappelhoff in Cincinnati, and while I never knew her well, I knew something about her family life.

The Kappelhoffs lived in the ground floor of a three- or four-story brick building, and I think the first-born child, a boy, died before Doris was born. She's the baby, and there's an older brother, Paul.

Her father was one of those rigid, too-strict fathers, a Teutonic mixture of sentiment and discipline. He used to teach music, and I think Doris was afraid of him.

I'm sure that practically all of her nervousness can be attributed to her relationship with her father. Her parents were divorced when she was eleven or twelve, and I think her youth ended then.

Her mother, a sweet and thoughful woman, enrolled her in dancing school and later took her to Hollywood where Fanchon & Marco signed her and her youthful dancing partner, Jerry Dougherty, for a series of kiddie stage shows. I think she was thirteen, maybe fourteen at the time. Already she was becoming a bread-winner.

I am not a physician and I do not know the underlying causes of the psychoneuroses, but in the case of Doris Day I honestly think that this girl is unhappy because she doesn't want a career but is trapped by one. Against her own inclination, she has become big business. Recording contracts, her own radio show, TV rights, a new Warner Brothers deal, the leading light of Martin Melcher Productions.

Marty Melcher looks after all this with the superb competence born of experience. He has been an agent, he has worked in the music game for many years. He has had to learn all the angles, and he's learned them well.

According to some reporters there is no sharper man in Hollywood than Marty Melcher. Doris is indeed fortunate in having such a man to look after her finances.

Unfortunately, Marty looks after everything. When he was going with Doris, he helped move her furniture, he repaired things around the house, he made fast friends with her son, Terry. He advised her mother. In short, he became a father substitute, and psychologically, this may turn out to have been a very bad thing. As I say, it all depends on the childhood relationship between Doris and her father.

There is a psychological process termed, "recall," and it is hampered by another one termed, "repression," but in the weeks to come if Doris can look back into her youth and recall emotional experiences she has sought to repress, the answer to her nervousness and her current instability may be found.

Perhaps she will discover that she disliked her father because he refused to remain with her mother. Perhaps she disliked him for several other reasons. Perhaps in her subconscious, she has transferred that dislike to her father-substitute, to Marty Melcher, the overseer of her career.

Perhaps she refuses to admit any of this to herself and herein lies the basis for her personal conflict.

These are all possibilities and I suggest them because in similar cases they have been found valid.

To my way of thinking, Doris, in her subconscious, not only regards her husband as a father-substitute and a psychological crutch but as a figure synonymous with career. And her career, as I've said, has never been particularly pleasurable to her.

any more home like you?

Yes, you. Up-to-date, fashion-conscious, movie-going you. Bet there are. Bet you can name several kindred souls right in your own family who thumb through your copy of MODERN SCREEN every month—before you even get a chance to look at it. Not to mention your best friend who wants to borrow it and your brother who can't resist cutting out the pin-ups. No need to hunt frantically for the perfect gift for all these perfect people. Just give them a year's subscription to MODERN SCREEN. Fill out the coupon below and mail it to us with your remittance. It's easy. And so inexpensive, you can afford to subscribe for yourself as well!

SUBSCRIPTION IN THE U.S.A. AND CANADA FOR ONE YEAR $2.00; TWO YEARS $3.50; THREE YEARS $5.00. FOREIGN SUBSCRIPTIONS $3.00 A YEAR. PLEASE SEND CHECKS OR MONEY ORDERS ONLY.

MODERN SCREEN Subscription Department, 10 West 33rd Street, New York 1, N. Y.

NAME ____________________

ADDRESS ____________________

CITY ____________ ZONE ________ STATE ________

11/3

Her career was responsible for her meeting with Al Jordan who used to play in Jimmy Dorsey's band. They got married and soon she had a child. When the marriage went to pieces, she had to use her career to support her boy.

One time when she was flat broke, she begged the program manager of WLW to hire her at sustaining rates. He paid her scale, $64 a week.

She sang with Les Brown and Bob Crosby and Barney Rapp. The singing was an economic necessity. She was both mother and father to her Terry and there were long periods of time when she saw neither her son nor her mother. As recently as six or seven years ago, I remember watching her shuffle into the lobby of the Plaza Hotel in Hollywood, (after she had been divorced from George Weidler,) a lonely, weary, tired girl, disillusion on her face.

I've seen Doris Day smile. I've heard Bob Hope call her jutt-butt. I've watched her give out with that gay, deceiving, flip air of enjoyment. But to me, her blue eyes have always been sad eyes. This girl has never hungered for fame or money or adoration. All she has ever wanted is to leave the rat race, to get away from it, to settle down with her husband and family in a nice, middle-class neighborhood.

You may well ask—"Well, why doesn't she do it?"

If she quits tomorrow, if she renounces the whole crazy world of show business, can she retain the love and admiration of her friends, her husband, and her mother?

Doris Day is probably the best-loved actress in Hollywood. She has never harmed anyone. She has never climbed the ladder of success, lad by lad. She has never engaged in subterfuge or underhand politics. She has achieved success through her own effort and talent.

The success she has achieved, however, has brought her fame, money, and position. It has brought her practically everything but the one thing she has always needed most—peace of mind.

In the weeks to come, let's all hope she finds it. A better, kinder, sweeter, more unselfish girl was never born. END please don't talk about me . . .

---

(Continued from page 22) and for the rest of his life."

The press associations picked up the announcement, and next day readers throughout America were convinced that Clark and Suzanne would return to Hollywood as man and wife.

In Amsterdam, Gable was making The True And The Brave with Lana Turner, and Vic Mature. When he was asked to confirm Miss Dadolle's statement, he was stunned.

The actor is not the quickest thinker in the world, but by nature he is a prudent man, so he turned the whole matter over to Paul Mills, his press representative.

Paul gave out with the following denial: "Clark Gable has no plans for engagement or marriage and hasn't given his promise to engage or marry."

In Paris, when Suzanne read this, she was hurt. After all, she was wearing the topaz ring Gable had given her, and while the ring may or may not have been an engagement ring, it showed in a way that Gable regarded her in a special light.

At Wolfheze, Holland, he was asked, "Any truth to these stories about you and Suzanne Dadolle?"

"Stories about what?" he countered.

"About you two kids getting married."

"No truth to that," Clark Gable said. "I'm not getting married."

Uncle Sam gave Leslie Caron's marriage a break, but she and Geordie are DOING A SPLIT

■ When Leslie Caron's husband, Geordie Hormel, was called up by the Coast Guard, the pert little French ballerina clapped her hands with delight and said, "Oo!" I am the happiest girl in the world!"

This was not because her husband was in the service, but because Geordie, heir to the Hormel meat packing fortune, had been assigned to duty in San Pedro, Los Angeles harbor.

This meant that he could spend alternate nights at home, accompany Leslie to previews and parties, and never break the ecstatic rhythm of their marriage. To Leslie this was unheard-of luck, and she enjoyed it to the fullest.

But a few weeks ago, the dancing star suddenly made a puzzling move. She asked MGM for an indefinite leave of absence and left her husband to rejoin and travel with Roland Petit's Ballet de Paris.

Immediately, this gave rise to the rumor that another of Hollywood's young marriages had foundered. Coast Guardsman Hormel quickly denied it.

"I doubt," he said, "if anything can ever disrupt our marriage. Leslie and I have problems, of course. For example, I'm not nearly the artist that she is, and I probably never will be. As a musician, I've yet to make a full-fledged success. Despite stories of my great wealth, Leslie has much more money than I have. In fact, I owe around $40,000. Years from now, I may inherit some money, but only if I go back into the meat packing business."

While Coast Guardsman Hormel is busy with such denials, his cute young Leslie is back in the ballet she loves, dancing all over Europe.

When the Hormels were first married, Leslie said, "Compared to being with Geordie, my career means nothing."

Unhappily, in this household, times have changed.

STORK OVER LANZA LAND

It was all the kids' idea—they want another tenor in the family!

■ It happened at Sunday breakfast a few hours before Mario Lanza was scheduled to fly to New York to negotiate his RCA VICTOR recording contract.

The two little Lanza girls, Colleen, five, and Lissa, three, were sitting at the breakfast table with their parents when Damon, the littlest Lanza, now aged one, was wheeled in by the nurse for his good morning kiss.

Lissa looked at her little dark-eyed brother and pinched his cheek. The baby cooed. "He sure is cute," Lissa said.

Now it was Colleen's turn. She inspected her little brother with approval. "I think," she announced imperiously, "we should have another boy in the house. Don't you think so, Daddy?"

Lanza grinned. "It sure would even things up," he agreed.

"Then Lissa and I would always have someone to take us to dances," Colleen continued. "That's what brothers are for."

"Speak to your mother," Mario suggested. "She's in charge of the baby department."

Betty Lanza looked around at her family, at Mario and her three offspring, and ever so matter-of-factly said, "I think maybe I can get you another brother around June or July of next year."

Lanza spilled his coffee on his trousers.

"Daddy," Colleen cried, "look what you've done." She took her napkin and began to repair the damage.

But Mario could look nowhere but at his Betty. He looked into her soft brown eyes, and almost imperceptibly, ever so lightly, her lovely head nodded and her eyes said yes and that's how he knew.

"Are you engaged?"

Gable shook his head. "Not engaged, either."

"That doesn't square away with Suzanne's announcement in Paris last week."

"What announcement?"

"You know—that the two of you are engaged, that you want her as your life's companion."

There was a moment of silence. "She was misquoted," Gable said.

"Have you been spending any time with her of late?"

"No, she's back in Paris. She returned to work."

"Have you been talking to her on the phone? Or writing her any letters?"

"I've been too busy for that," Gable answered.

"Then how do you know she was misquoted?"

"I'm sure she was," Gable countered. "I know her, and she wouldn't say a thing like that. She probably said she considered me a good friend and some reporter took it up from there."

"That may be, but aren't you in love with Suzanne?"

"She's a wonderful friend."

"Of course, but are you in love with her?"

"We're just good friends."

"Are you bringing this good friend back to Hollywood with you?"

"No, I'm not."

"When do you expect to get back?"

"It's hard to say. Depends on how this picture goes. We should be finished by the end of November. I should get back by Christmas."

"Then you're definitely coming home alone?" he was asked. "Is that right? No chance that you might change your mind and bring Suzanne with you?"

"I don't think so," Clark Gable said. "No."

There you have it, out of the actor's mouth. Will Gable abide by his decision to leave Suzanne in Europe? Will he bring her with him? Will she come to Hollywood herself and join him? Or was it all a summer romance?

Al Menasco, one of Gable's best friends, toured Europe with "the king" and Suzanne a few months ago. He is of the opinion that Gable will never marry Suzanne Dadolle.

"She's a lovely young woman," Menasco concedes, "and they got along very well, but Gable isn't in the marrying mood. My own opinion is that he's had it for a while. Marriage, that is.

"He's fond of Suzanne, but only as a friend. Of course I could be wrong, but that's my opinion."

Another friend of Gable's, a beautiful young woman who dates him between marriages, says, "I know the guy pretty well and unless a girl has money and position, preferably both, Gable won't think of marrying her. He'll go around with her, the way he has with this French babe. He'll take her all over and date her exclusively, but he's not going to slip that wedding band on her finger.

"At his age, you'd think he'd wise up and marry some average doll who'd appreciate him. But no. He marries the society belles. And a funny thing, it's these dames with dough who make him pay through the nose when divorce time rolls around.

"Take Maria Langham, his second wife, and Sylvia Ashley, his last one. These babes were loaded, and they're old enough to know the score. I think Gable's divorce from Ria cost him at least $300,000 and of course he's still paying Sylvia. He tried to get out of it by saying that she was an extremely wealthy woman in her own right. Of course it didn't work.

"You'd think the guy would wise up in his old age and marry some dame who wants to spend her life loving him and taking care of him. But no. He's got to have a show-piece. I guess that's why he's an actor.

"As for this Suzanne Dadolle, I think he just took her around Europe for the ride. His intentions were friendly, not matrimonial."

They are saying in France that if Gable does not marry the Schiaparelli model, not only will Suzanne be disappointed, but the star of Mogambo will lose thousands of fans among his French followers.

A model who accompanied Suzanne to this country a few years ago, when she came over on a tieup deal for a hosiery firm, says, "I feel sorry for Suzanne. So do most of the other models in Paris. She is in a very awkward position. She left her job to travel with Monsieur Gable.

"Furthermore, and this is very important, Suzanne has a family. French families—I guess they are like all families—if in the end the girl gets married then everything that has passed before is of no matter. But if in the end, the girl is left in the cold with just memories—then there is hell to pay and it is the girl who pays it. That's why I hope with all my heart that Monsieur Gable marries Suzanne. Really, she is a very nice person and she has a lot of savoir faire. She worked for General de Gaulle during the war, and she would not shame your Monsieur Gable in Hollywood. She is very much in love with him.

"And well, it is not as if she were one of those girls who can always turn to her work or that ambassador's daughter Gable was going with. When a girl has wealth or prominence, then she can afford these unhappy love affairs. One can say, 'We are still good friends,' and let it go at that, because one knows there will always be more men.

"But right now there is no room in Suzanne's heart for anybody but Clark Gable. I have heard it said that he broke the heart of Grace Kelly and hundreds of other women who have fallen in love with him, and I know it is not his fault. He is a charming, wonderful man, and women throw themselves at him every day. But if he marries Suzanne, I promise he will not regret it."

What from Suzanne herself?

She spoke to one reporter and made world-wide headlines and now, justifiably, she is afraid to talk to others. Gable doesn't particularly like girls who talk to reporters.

Suzanne has gone on record, however, as saying that she and Clark are more than good friends. It is her understanding that she and the actor are engaged and that when he asked her to be his life-time companion, he was thinking of marriage.

One English writer suggests that semantics is responsible for the difference between Suzanne's allegation and Gable's denial.

"What probably happened," this writer offers, "is that he might have said, 'Susie, you're swell. You're my friend for life.'

"Poor bloke. Probably doesn't know that if you say those words to a French girl in France, it's an out and out proposal." END

IF WE SEND YOU A STUNNING $10.98 DRESS WITHOUT 1¢ COST

...will you WEAR and SHOW it in your community?

we want every woman in America to see our lovely dresses!

We have discovered that no amount of advertising can sell our dresses half as well as our dresses SELL THEMSELVES! It's impossible to show in pictures the rich quality of fabrics, the appealing styling, the fine needlework, and the wonderful value we put into our dresses for the moderate prices we charge. So we're being DIFFERENT—we want the women in every community in America to see our actual dresses. What's more, we don't want them to see these dresses on professional models. A style shown that way never gives a woman a true picture of how it will look on her. We want our dresses to be seen on average women of all ages, shapes, and sizes.

So we have perfected this wonderful Introductory Plan, and we want from 2,500 to 3,000 women to wear and show our dresses to their friends and neighbors!

YOUR OWN PERSONAL DRESSES WITHOUT 1c COST—AS A BONUS!

Through this excitingly different plan, you can get your own dresses—a complete, beautiful wardrobe of them—as a bonus, WITHOUT LAYING OUT A PENNY OF YOUR OWN MONEY! You'll have over 150 glorious models to choose from. When your friends and neighbors admire the exquisite styles on you, they'll want to know where they can get these dresses. When you tell them, you'll be helping us in the best way possible to advertise our lovely styles.

NO OBLIGATION—NO EXPERIENCE

It costs you absolutely nothing to investigate this remarkable offer, and you will be under no obligation whatever. Just put your name, address, age, and dress size on the coupon below, paste it on a postcard and mail TODAY! Everything will be sent to you promptly WITHOUT COST! But hurry—we expect a tremendous response to this offer!

PH. MEYERS
3327 Colerain Avenue
Dept. 0-1054, Cincinnati 25, Ohio
(In Canada, write 2163 Parthenais, Montreal, P. Q.

Go-together separates that multiply a "junior" wardrobe!

Sophisticated faille 'round-the-clock coat dress, in rich colors.

Slim-look waist over swirling skirt in "ribbon-weave" striped taffeta.

PASTE THIS COUPON ON POSTCARD—MAIL TODAY!

PH. MEYERS — 3327 Colerain Avenue
Dept. 0-1054, Cincinnati 25, Ohio

Yes, I'd like to be one of the women who get the chance to wear and show your lovely dresses in my community. Without obligating me, please send me everything I need WITHOUT COST.

*Name*______________________________

*Address*______________________________

*City & Zone*________________ *State*________

*Age*________ *Dress Size*________

In Canada, mail coupon to 2163 Parthenais, Montreal, P. Q.

New! a shampoo that Silkens your hair!

Sheer heaven . . . the way your hair will shine . . . so silky soft, so silky smooth, so silky bright . . . with new Drene. Breath-taking . . . that shimmering silkiness!

New Magic Formula . . . Milder than Castile!

Silkening magic! That's what you'll find in Drene's new formula! It lathers like lightning, rinses out like lightning—it's milder than castile! Magic, sheer magic, the way this new Drene silkens your hair. Leaves it bright as silk, soft as silk, smooth as silk—and so obedient!

Lathers like lightning—
no other lather is so thick, yet so quick.

Milder than castile—
so mild you could use this new formula every day.

This is a New Drene!

A PRODUCT OF PROCTER & GAMBLE

AMERICA'S GREATEST MOVIE MAGAZINE

modern screen

LL
ZINE

FEB.
20c

in this issue:

AVA and FRANK tell the truth to LOUELLA PARSONS

behind closed doors—the JOHN WAYNE story

Susan Hayward

B 454407

THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
SERIAL RECORD
FEB 5 - 1954

THERE'S COLD CREAM NOW IN CAMAY

HER PETAL-SOFT SKIN GOES STRAIGHT TO HIS HEART!

CAMAY
THE SOAP OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN
CAMAY

Your skin will love it!

Wonderful new Camay with cold cream for complexion and bath!

Here's the happiest beauty news that ever came your way! Now Camay contains cold cream. And Camay is the only leading beauty soap to bring you this added luxury.

For your beauty and your bath—new Camay with cold cream is more delightful than ever. And whether your skin is dry or oily, new Camay will leave it feeling beautifully cleansed, marvelously refreshed.

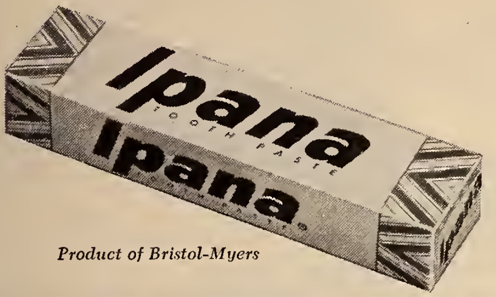
Of course, you still get everything that's made Camay famous . . . the softer complexion that's yours when you change to regular care and Camay, that foam-rich Camay lather, skin-pampering Camay mildness and delicate Camay fragrance.

LOOK FOR NEW CAMAY IN THE SAME FAMILIAR WRAPPER.
It's at your store now—yours at no extra cost.
There is no finer beauty soap in all the world!

NOW MORE THAN EVER...THE SOAP OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN

JAN 25 1954

Best way* to reduce tooth decay . . . stop bad breath

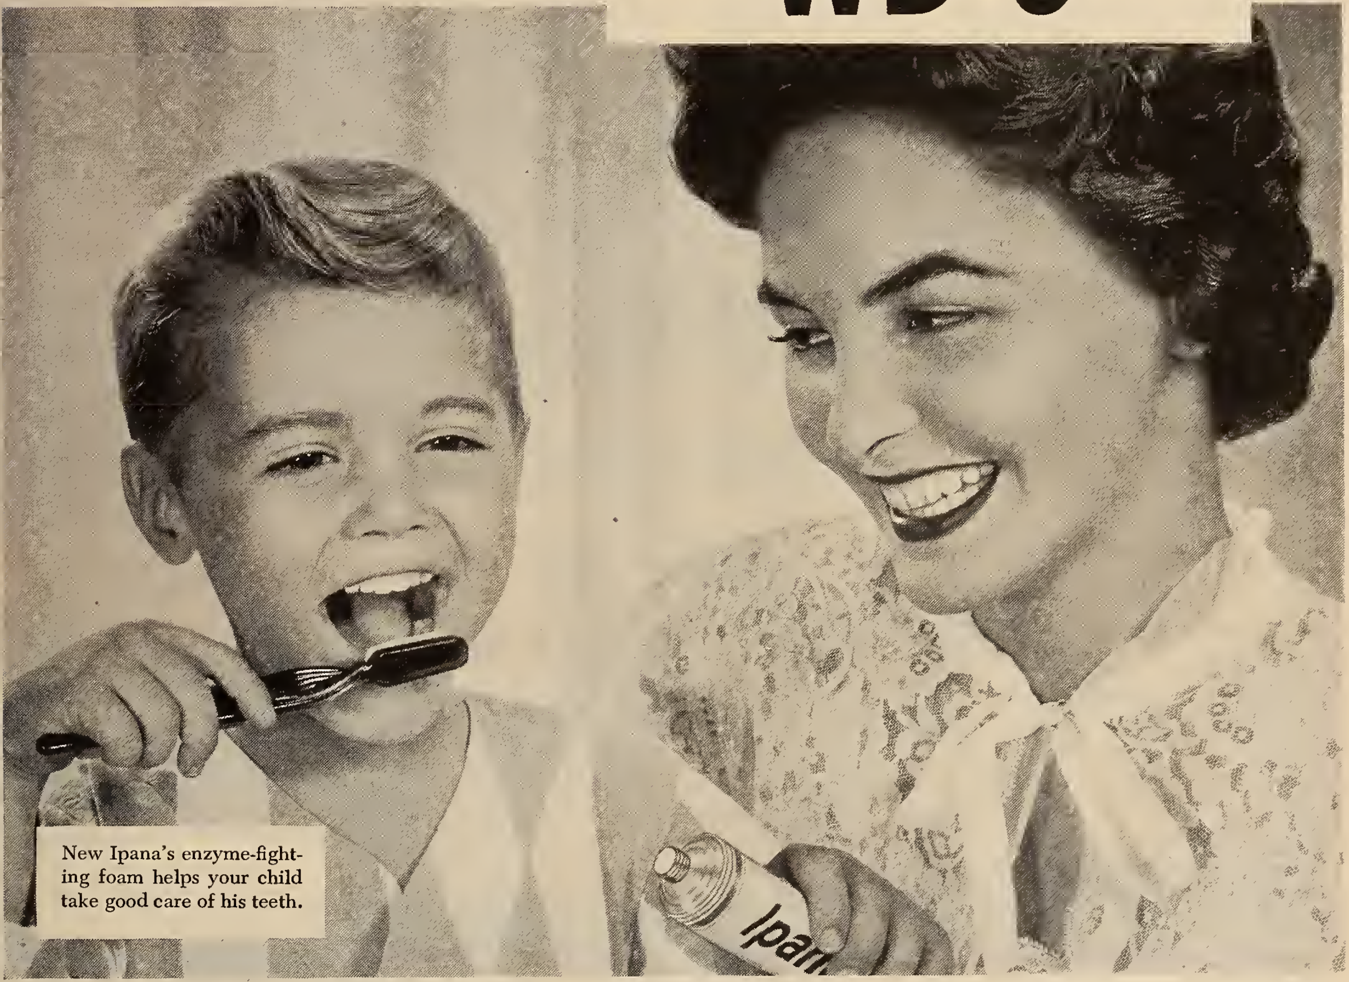


Product of Bristol-Myers

NEW IPANA®

WITH ANTI-ENZYME

WD-9



New Ipana's enzyme-fighting foam helps your child take good care of his teeth.

If excessive cavities bother your family, blame it on bacterial-enzyme action. It is a principal cause of most tooth decay. So you'll be glad to know that WD-9 in new white Ipana is one of the most effective anti-enzymes known.

*Using new Ipana with WD-9 regularly after meals is the best way to reduce decay and banish unpleasant mouth odor all day. And with WD-9, Ipana now has a new minty flavor, new cleansing power. Children love it. Try a tube today.

Every single brushing fights tooth decay!

New Ipana combats the causes of cavities. Don't forget your gums. Brushing teeth with Ipana—from gum margins toward biting edges—helps remove irritants that can lead to gum troubles.

One brushing can stop bad breath all day!

A single brushing with new Ipana containing WD-9 stops most unpleasant mouth odor for as long as 9 hours. Even after smoking or eating anything except, of course, onions and garlic.

All Ipana now on sale contains Anti-Enzyme WD-9

Student nurses are needed . . .
inquire at your hospital.

FEBRUARY, 1954

AMERICA'S GREATEST MOVIE MAGAZINE

modern screen

stories

MODERN SCREEN'S TOP TEN FOR 1953 (Award Winners) 27
THE IRON MAN AND THE REDHEAD (Susan Hayward-Jeff Chandler) by Jim Newton 28
AVA AND FRANK TELL THE TRUTH TO LOUELLA PARSONS 30
JANE'S STRANGE INTERLUDE (Jane Powell-Gene Nelson) by Alice Finletter 32
A FISH-EYE VIEW OF TERRY AND BOB (Terry Moore-Bob Wagner) by Peter Gowland 34
BEHIND CLOSED DOORS (John Wayne) by Imogene Collins 36
CATCH ME COOKIN'! (Jane Russell) by Jane Wilkie 38
THE WAITING GAME (Gregory Peck) by Colette Maurier 40
HESTON'S IVORY TOWER (Charlton Heston) by Marva Peterson 42
GET LOST, CUPID! (Elaine Stewart) by Jack Wade 46
THE "WOLF" AT FARLEY'S DOOR (Farley Granger) by Herb Howe 48
MAMA MAYO (Virginia Mayo-Mike O'Shea) by Susan Trent 50
THEY DID IT THE HARD WAY (Rory Calhoun-Lita Barron) by Steve Cronin 52
STORM OVER HOLLYWOOD (Gale Storm) by William Barbour 54
THE ROAD STRAIGHTENS (Lucille Ball) by Louis Pollock 56

departments

HOLLYWOOD ABROAD 4
LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS 6
JUST FOR THE RECORDS by George Frazier 8
MOVIE REVIEWS by Florence Epstein 16
TV TALK 22
THE INSIDE STORY 24

On the cover: Color Portrait of 20th Century-Fox star Susan Hayward by John Engstead. Other picture credits appear on page 75.

CHARLES D. SAXON
editor

DURBIN HORNER
executive editor

CARL SCHROEDER
western manager

PAIGE LOHR, story editor
BARBARA J. MAYER, assistant editor
KATIE ROBINSON, western editor
FERNANDO TEXIDOR, art director
BILL WEINBERGER, art editor
BOB BEERMAN, staff photographer
BERT PARRY, staff photographer
MARCIA L. SILVER, research editor

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS

Changes of address should reach us five weeks in advance of the next issue date. Give both your old and new address, enclosing if possible your old address label.

POSTMASTER: Please send notice on Form 3578 and copies returned under Label Form 3579 to 263 Ninth Ave., New York 1, New York

MODERN SCREEN, Vol.48, No. 3, February, 1954. Published monthly by Dell Publishing Company, Inc. Office of publication at Washington and South Aves., Dunellen, N. J. Executive and editorial offices, 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y. Dell Subscription Service: 10 West 33rd St., New York 1, N. Y. Chicago advertising office, 221 No. LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill., Los Angeles advertising and editorial offices, 8701 West 3rd Street, Los Angeles, California. George T. Delacorte, Jr., President; Helen Meyer, Vice-Pres.; Albert P. Delacorte, Vice-Pres. Published simultaneously in the Dominion of Canada. International copyright secured under the provisions of the Revised Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. All rights reserved under the Buenos Aires Convention. Single copy price 20c in U. S. A. and Possessions, and Canada. Subscriptions in U. S. A. and Canada $2.00 one year; $3.50 two years; $5.00 three years; Foreign, $3.00 a year. Entered as second class matter September 18, 1930, at the post office at Dunellen, N. J., under Act of March 3, 1879. Copyright 1954 by Dell Publishing Company, Inc. Printed in U. S. A. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Names of characters used in semi-fictional matter are fictitious—if the name of any living person is used it is purely a coincidence. Trademark No. 301778.

Imagine in CinemaScope!

KING ARTHUR'S KNIGHTS IN BATTLE!

Imagine in CinemaScope!

CORONATION POMP AT CAMELOT CASTLE!

Imagine in CinemaScope!

BLACK MAGIC OF MERLIN THE WIZARD!

Imagine in CinemaScope!

BEAUTIFUL GUINEVERE EXILED FOR LOVE!

Imagine in CinemaScope!

LANCELOT'S DUEL AT THE QUICKSAND PIT!

Imagine in CinemaScope!

The Spectacle of the Century!
"KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE"

M-G-M's FIRST GREAT PRODUCTION IN THE GRANDEUR OF

CINEMASCOPE

YOU SEE IT WITHOUT GLASSES!

Knights of the Round Table

starring

ROBERT TAYLOR · AVA GARDNER · MEL FERRER

with ANNE CRAWFORD · STANLEY BAKER

Screen play by TALBOT JENNINGS, JAN LUSTIG and NOEL LANGLEY· Based on Sir Thomas Malory's "LE MORTE D'ARTHUR"

Directed by RICHARD THORPE • Produced by PANDRO S. BERMAN

An M-G-M Picture

The Famed Romance in COLOR magnificence!

Dummies don't perspire
...but real live girls need MUM®
MUM
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF LAUNDERING CERTIFIED

New Mum with M·3 kills odor bacteria ...stops odor all day long

Amazingly effective—just use daily. So sure, so safe for normal skin. Safe for clothes. Gentle Mum is certified by the American Institute of Laundering. Won't rot or discolor even your finest fabrics.

No waste, no drying out. Delicately fragrant new Mum is usable, wonderful right to the bottom of the jar. New fragrance. Get a jar today and stay nice to be near.

For sanitary napkins—Mum is gentle, safe, dependable . . . ideal for this use, too.

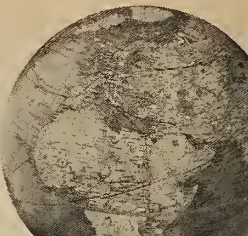
A Product of Bristol-Myers

HOLLYWOOD ABROAD



AN M/S WIRE SERVICE OF LATE NEWS FROM AROUND THE WORLD

ELIZABETH TAYLOR has had more than her share of hard luck in Europe. She not only collapsed in Denmark from nervousness, fatigue, and "an upset heart," but while touring the Continent on vacation, before she started to work on Beau Brummell, she lost or had stolen from her most of the jewelry Mike Wilding had given her.

A pearl, ruby and emerald pin, a gold bracelet and a beautiful pair of jade and gold earrings were missing when Liz arrived at the London airport from Rome.

Whether the jewelry had been stolen in Italy while the Wildings were vacationing in Capri, or whether it had been stolen or lost on the plane, no one has been able to find out. Liz thinks the jewelry was insured but whether or not the insurance coverage takes care of theft outside the U.S.A. she doesn't know.

Her secretary believes that the insurance does not cover it, but whether it does or not, Wilding knows now what he can buy his wife for their second wedding anniversary.

YVONNE DE CARLO, who has made more films overseas in the last three years than any other Hollywood star, keeps giving out information about her new European romance. Newsmen in London, where the actress has just finished O'Leary Night with David Niven and Barry Fitzgerald, are now convinced that Yvonne has no romance either in Europe or in the U.S.A.

One reason de Carlo makes so many pictures abroad is that her agent is able to sell her in London for $50,000 a picture. In Hollywood she has virtually no takers at that price. Involved with many lovers by a hard-working press agent, Yvonne now claims, "I will no longer be a party to those phony love matches." The last one involved actor Carlos Thompson, who finished The Flame And The Flesh a few months ago. This one was played up as a tempestuous love match. It subsequently fizzled. Yvonne is now in the familiar position of the boy who cried "wolf." If she should find a serious romance now, she would have no trouble keeping it a secret.

DAWN ADDAMS, rumored to be engaged last year—both to Farley Granger and French actor Claude Dauphin—announced in Rome that she plans to marry Prince Vittorio Massimo there this spring.

"How about Farley Granger?" someone asked the British-born actress. "Weren't you going with him?"

Dawn shook her head. "At various times," she explained, "a girl gives her heart to various people. Then, when the right man comes along she gathers up all the pieces."

GREER GARSON, a sweet beauty with hair the color of carrots, was in London to plug Julius Caesar, a film which had received rave reviews. Greer disillusioned many of her countrymen. Wrote one critic, "She not only looks as glossy as a Hollywood star, she also talks like one."

What exactly could Greer Fogelson (her married name) have said to the Englishmen?

"Hollywood is misunderstood," she pointed out, "especially by English people who go out there, accept its hospitality, then come back and malign it. There are plenty of people of culture and understanding in Hollywood. There are Hindu groups, musical circles, stamp collecting groups, and psychiatry circles."

Miss Garson was then asked why so many talented Englishmen who had gone to Hollywood at one time now refused to return.

"In all probability," the actress explained, "they did not have good enough offers."

Did Miss Garson miss her homeland at all?

"Oh, yes," she admitted. "I miss the antiquity, the accent, and the green parks. But then I also live a quiet, simple life in my paneled country house in Bel Air. There are two sycamores and a swimming pool. You would think it was England."

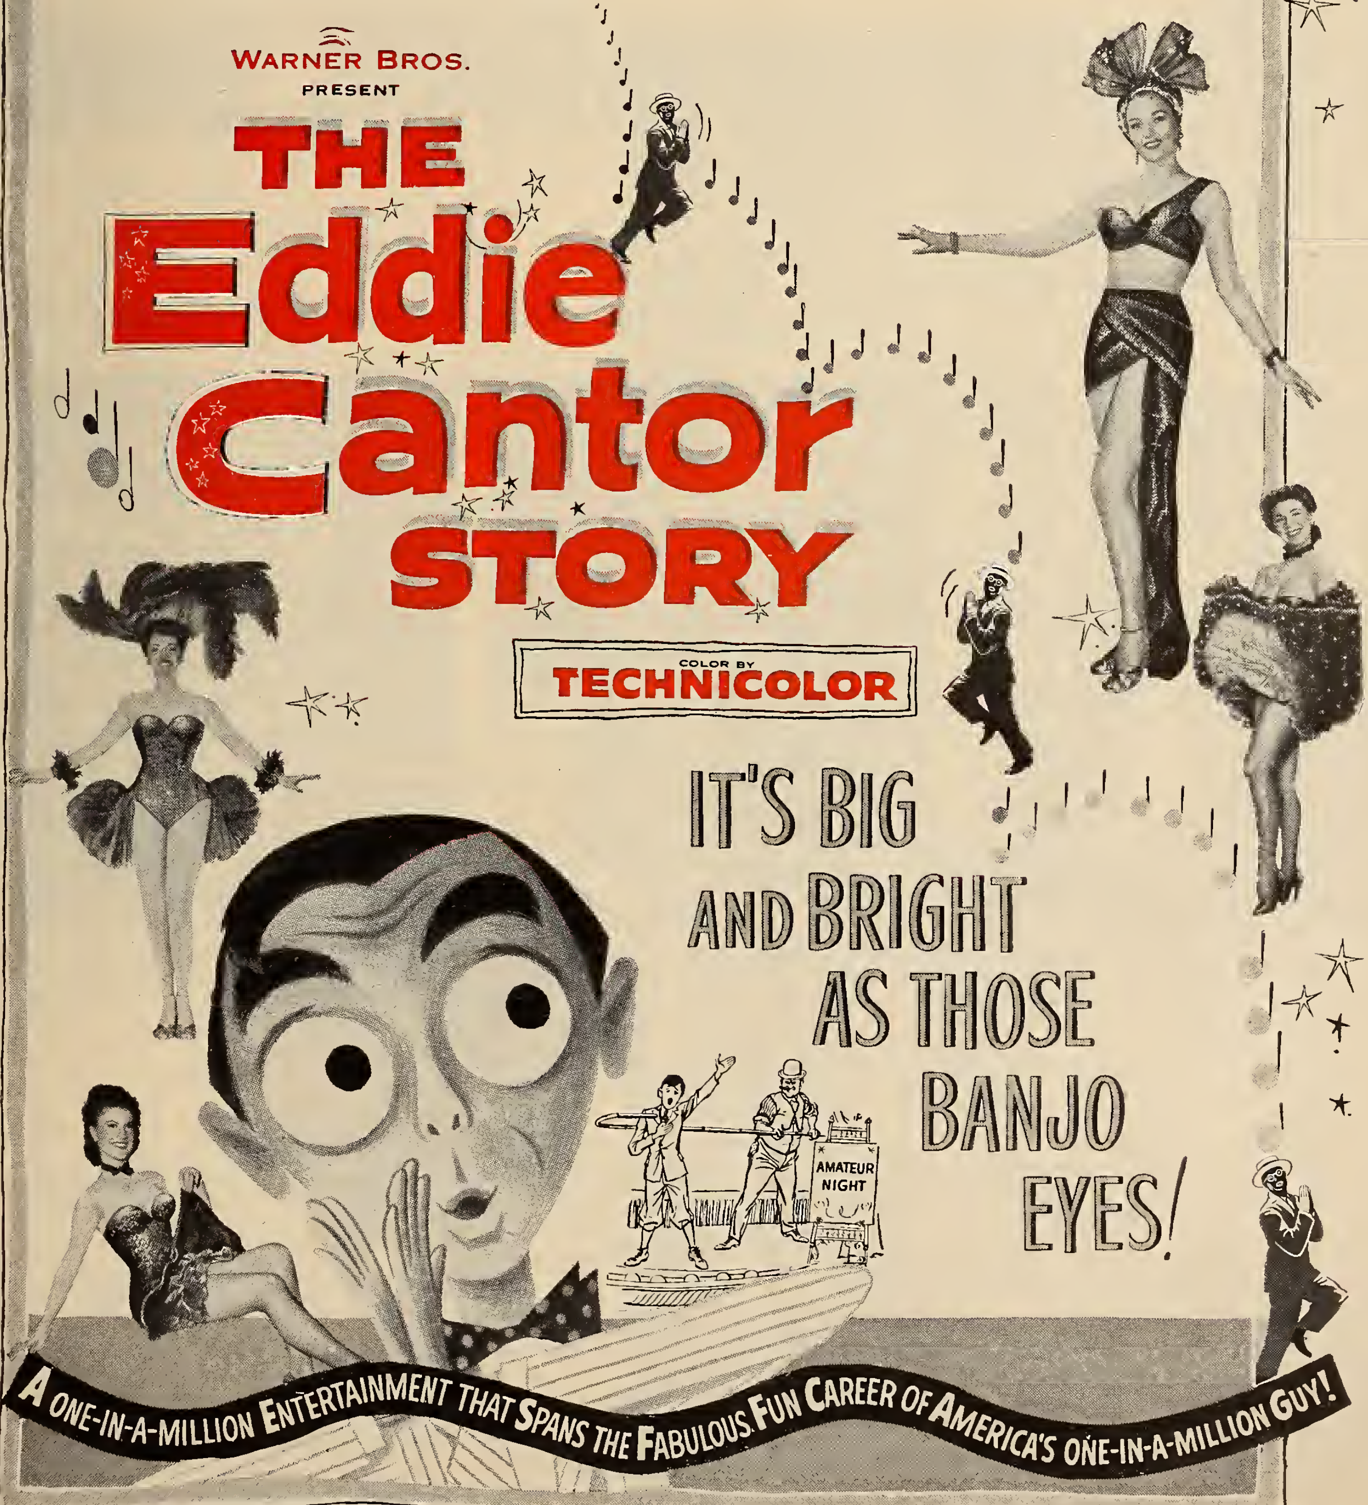
General British opinion of Greer Garson—she is irrevocably lost. She has gone completely Hollywood.

Because Eddie Cantor is more than just the world's greatest living entertainer, this is more than just his fabulous show-business story. Here's Cantor the man — the showman, the human — who carries almost as big a torch for America as that Liberty Lady in New York Bay. Rub the black grease-paint off that eye-popping face and he's all red-white-and-true-blue underneath.

WARNER BROS.
PRESENT

THE Eddie Cantor STORY

COLOR BY
TECHNICOLOR



IT'S BIG AND BRIGHT AS THOSE BANJO EYES!
AMATEUR NIGHT
A ONE-IN-A-MILLION ENTERTAINMENT THAT SPANS THE FABULOUS FUN CAREER OF AMERICA'S ONE-IN-A-MILLION GUY!

STARRING
KEEFE BRASSELLE ★ MARILYN ERSKINE WITH ALINE MacMAHON and WILL ROGERS, Jr. AS HIS DAD

Watch him soar to stardom's heights — as Eddie Cantor!

SCREEN PLAY BY JEROME WEIDMAN, TED SHERDEMAN AND SIDNEY SKOLSKY • Musical Direction by Ray Heindorf • DIRECTED BY ALFRED E. GREEN
Musical Numbers Staged and Directed by LeRoy Prinz PRODUCED BY SIDNEY SKOLSKY

JANE AND GENE BREAK UP . . . BARBARA STANWYCK PREDICTS BOB

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD

The fabulous Press Photographers' Costume Ball brings top stars to balloon-filled Mocambo for social Tony Curtis wore one of Richard Burton's Robe costumes; Janet continued the family classical motif by wearing a Grecian Goddess dress.

Vera-Ellen, who came as a Christmas tree with real lights that could be turned on and off, received a souvenir from m.c. Art Linkletter.

Mitzi Gaynor's belly dance received a lot of publicity; so did her new, slim figure. (Her steady, Jack Bean, had asked her to lose weight!)

Almost more startling than the breakup of Jane Powell and Geary Steffen over Gene Nelson was the out-of-the-blue breakup of Jane and Gene as a romantic team when they seemed so much in love.

Certainly they had paid a high price for their love in the shocked criticism of fans and friends.

Two homes had gone on the rocks.

And yet Jane calmly announced one day, "Gene and I shall not continue seeing each other. It's all off between us."

To ask why is certainly not unreasonable and I must say Jane was honest when she tried to explain:

"I guess I high pressured Gene too much; forced too many decisions he was not ready to make.

"No, not seeing Gene any more won't have any effect on my divorce from Geary. Our marriage was over before I ever met Gene. I mean it was finished in spirit and heart."

Asked if she thought Gene might try to woo back his wife, Miriam, Jane said, "I don't know. I really don't know—" her voice trailed off.

Obviously, Jane feels that Mrs. Nelson asked so much as a property settlement to divorce Gene that his hands (and who knows?—perhaps his heart, too) are tied.

So, if he can't move one way or the other—it's best to say goodbye.

Make no mistake about it, she is a broken-hearted girl no matter how many dates she makes with other men—and she's dating Nicky Hilton, Pat Nerney and Jacques Mapes.

Strange, isn't it, that one of Hollywood's most startling "triangles" should end like this—something a little sad about the whole thing.

P.S. Not trusting Hollywood "triangles," I should say, this is the way it's ending as of now.

Barbara Stanwyck, who was seated on the right of Bob Taylor, looked across the dinner table at Eleanor Parker and said, "I predict that you and Bob will be the next big Hollywood romance*!"*

To say that you could have knocked over the other guests with a cocktail napkin is the understatement of the social season.

Bob had borrowed publicity agent Helen Ferguson's house for the purpose of a little farewell party. MGM had cast Eleanor and himself in The Valley Of The Kings and they were leaving the following day for Egypt.

TAYLOR'S NEXT ROMANCE . . . SUSAN HAYWARD AND JESS CONSOLE CONCILIATOR season's most elaborate party.

NEWS

Joan Crawford arrived in blackface and the greenest, tightest dress of the evening. She wore sequined stockings on those still-famous legs.

Bob and Eleanor had known one another around the MGM lot and were on a friendly basis—and that was all.

Eleanor had been too busy having babies by Bert Friedlob—and more recently, divorcing him—to know any other male was alive.

She had arrived this very evening at the party, her eyes still red from the crying session she had had following her appearance in court divorcing Bert that morning.

Eleanor was so surprised at what Barbara said, she gasped. Bob flushed a bit.

But perhaps Barbara is a better fortune teller than either realizes.

Eleanor is at the end of an unhappy marriage. Bob is at the end of a two-year romance with Ursula Thiess.

At this crucial emotional time in both their

(Continued on page 10)

Jane Powell, now dating frequently, looked happy with Pat Nerney. Friends say she is heartbroken about her sudden split with dancer Gene Nelson although Jane has stated that they may eventually resume their romance. (See story on page 32.)

Marie Wilson received a kiss and a radio from m.c. Art Linkletter while Bob Fallon looked on. Marie's popular TV show, My Friend Irma, takes up most of her time these days, but she found time recently to make a movie, Marry Me Again, for RKO.

A new, exclusive MODERN SCREEN feature: a nationally-known record expert gives you the latest on recording stars, new releases and equipment.

JUST FOR THE RECORDS

by George Frazier

■ The era of the 1920's had its enchantments, but good dance bands were not among them—or at least there were none that still sound fresh and exciting when we play their phonograph records today. The golden age of the dance band did not arrive until the late 'thirties. Anyone who doubts this has only to listen to RCA Victor's new album containing two 12-inch, long-playing records of broadcasts made by Artie Shaw from the Blue Room of the Hotel Lincoln and the Café Rouge of the Pennsylvania during 1938-39. It is magnificent.

These broadcasts are evocative of the barrelhouse (the "cool" of its day) years when the giants in the land were Benny Goodman, Harry James, Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey, Glenn Miller, and Shaw himself.

Those were the years when people shagged in the aisles of the New York Paramount and when Shaw occasioned more than a minor furor by branding his followers morons. Nowadays Shaw, his head shaven and his autobiography, The Trouble With Cinderella, behind him, is a complacent and amiable man. At the time of these broadcasts, he was anything but.

Artie Shaw, who was born in New Haven, Connecticut, came from a poor family and grew up to become one of the most gifted clarinetists in history. He was never less than good copy. He had a habit of marrying extremely attractive girls—Ava Gardner, Betty Kern, Lana Turner, Kathleen Windsor—and divorcing them rather peremptorily. (It should be stated as a matter of record that he is now married, and blissfully so, to the former Doris Dowling. They had a son last July 4.) He was a romantic figure, trim and darkly handsome. Had he wished, he could conceivably have become a successful motion picture leading man. He handled himself with enormous effectiveness in Second Chorus, a movie he made with Paulette Goddard, Fred Astaire, and Burgess Meredith. But he was also, as he would be the first to concede, a complicated and confused individual who was undergoing the pain of psychoanalysis. He always had his talent, though, and that was bountiful. The band that played the Café Rouge and the Blue Room has rarely been equalled. One night without warning he failed to appear for work. The next day it was announced that he had departed for Mexico. Fortunately, before he left he had made the broadcasts you'll hear in this album.

Artie Shaw's clarinet, band produce great LP.

This is vigorous, high-riding music, with the brass biting against the cushion of the reeds, and the Shaw clarinet, and every minute the band swinging like mad. Here are redoubtable interpretations of "Carioca," "At Sundown," and "El Rancho Grande." Here, too, a version of "In The Mood" that runs more than six minutes and is completely out of this world. It is my own opinion that the Shaw band had a greater variety of soloists than Benny Goodman's. This album confirms that impression. Frankly, I cannot imagine anyone's reluctance to spend $8.95—an authentic bargain—for one of the most stimulating albums of dance music ever released.

Mention of the (Continued on page 71)

FOR MODERN SCREEN READERS ONLY:

SPECIAL ARTIE SHAW COLLECTORS' ITEM

The new Artie Shaw Album is going to be one of the most prized additions to your record collection, and we know you'll want to be in on the first edition. That's why MODERN SCREEN has made special arrangements with Artie Shaw to reserve your album in advance, plus a personally autographed inscription page with Artie's photograph and special message to you, made to fit right into your album. This offer is limited, so hurry!

HERE'S WHAT YOU DO: Fill out the coupon below and take it to your favorite record store. Reserve your first edition of The Artie Shaw Album. If you wish, place a small deposit or pay in advance. Have the dealer sign this coupon; then mail it directly to Artie Shaw at the address below. Your personally autographed collectors' page will be sent to you at once.

Artie Shaw
Department M. S.
RCA Victor
630 Fifth Avenue
New York 20, New York

Please send my collectors' page, inscribed to:

I have reserved my first edition of one Artie Shaw Album through:

NAME____________________ DEALER'S SIGNATURE____________________

NO. & ST.____________________ DEALER'S ADDRESS____________________

CITY & STATE____________________ ____________________

The Greatest Hit In Entertainment History

20th Century-Fox presents

The Robe

TECHNICOLOR

CINEMASCOPE

THE MODERN MIRACLE YOU SEE WITHOUT GLASSES!

20th Century-Fox presents The Robe A CinemaScope production

starring
RICHARD BURTON · JEAN SIMMONS · VICTOR MATURE · MICHAEL RENNIE
with Jay Robinson · Dean Jagger · Torin Thatcher · Richard Boone · Betta St. John · Jeff Morrow · Ernest Thesiger

Produced by FRANK ROSS

Screen Play by PHILIP DUNNE
From the Novel by LLOYD C. DOUGLAS
Adaptation by Gina Kaus

Directed by HENRY KOSTER

The first motion picture in CinemaScope is shattering all world records as audiences everywhere hail CinemaScope as the greatest innovation in motion pictures since sound! The Anamorphic Lens Process on the Miracle Mirror Screen achieves life-like reality and infinite depth. The Stereophonic Sound System achieves new heights of participation. You become part of the eternal Miracle...in the greatest story of love and faith ever told.

NEW HELP FOR 4 "YOUNG SKIN" PROBLEMS

If your skin is acting up—it's just nature saying you're growing up!

All at once the oil glands begin to overwork. The skin turns lazy—can't throw off its daily pile-up of dead cells. Soon these flakes build a layer over the pore openings. Then "pores" enlarge, blackheads begin to show.

NOW—if you are tormented by oily skin, large pores, flakiness, blackheads—you will find real help in Pond's special greaseless corrective! Hundreds of girls with "Young Skin" problems said they saw a real improvement in less than 2 weeks!

Cover face deeply, except eyes, with snowy-white Pond's Vanishing Cream. Leave the Cream on a full minute. Its "keratolytic" action loosens, dissolves off that "choking" layer of dead skin cells. Frees the skin gland openings to function normally.

After 60 seconds—rinse off with cold water. Now—greasiness is gone, your skin has a brighter, clearer freshness! Start your "Young Skin" treatments now. See results right away!

"Young Skin" doesn't like heavy make-up! A touch of greaseless Pond's Vanishing Cream makes a fresher powder base!

lives, fate (and MGM) brings them together for a movie to be made in far away Egypt.

Two lonely people . . . two very good looking people . . . thrown together for many months in a strange country, yes, I'm inclined to go along with Barbara and predict that the first new "romance" news of 1954 may very well be Eleanor Parker and Robert Taylor.

I might add that Barbara's prophecy also proves that she knows Bob better than any other human being in the world—and perhaps her real understanding is the reason he always comes back to her friendship time and time again—no matter how many romantic interludes ensue.

There is a tiny little strawberry birthmark on the cheek of Shelley Winters' baby, Vittoria, which Shell says will be removed when her daughter is a little older.

There's an old superstition that babies with birthmarks are destined for unusual and important paths in life—many of the world's geniuses had birthmarks.

I stole a month away from Hollywood—and had a time for myself in New York, even if it was a bit like a busman's holiday seeing all the Hollywood movie stars in their Broadway successes.

Deborah Kerr gives one of the most inspired performances I have ever seen in Tea And Sympathy and of course I went backstage to congratulate her.

We also talked about the absurd rumors linking her with Frank Sinatra and Deborah laughed and laughed about them. (But I must keep most of this for my feature story in this issue on the Frank-and-Ava affair.)

David Wayne got me wonderful front row tickets to his hit, Tea House Of The August Moon, an enchanting play. I'm afraid we've lost David from the movies for a while. He's moving his wife and family East because from all indications the show will run for years.

I ran into Van and Evie Johnson while on a shopping tour. I saw them before they saw me, so I said in a loud voice to the clerk, "Charge my purchases to Van Johnson." He nearly fell over when he saw his old pal from Hollywood.

Ginger Rogers and Jacques Bergerac passed through the big town on their way to Paris where they will make a movie together. Earl Blackwell gave them a party at the Pen And Pencil and there were so many stars present I wondered who was left in Hollywood.

I say it does us all good to get to New York, particularly in the heady-wine months of the autumn. Sort of recharges our batteries—or something like that.

If there had not been so much at stake, the meeting between Susan Hayward and Jess Barker in the Children's Court of Conciliation might have been the comedy highlight of the month.

Jess had insisted that a reluctant Susan be brought to this court where the State of California does everything possible to reconcile divorcing parents for the sake of the children.

At the appointed hour, Susan, Jess and several newspaper photographers arrived and Judge Georgia Bullock stepped down from the bench to be photographed with the movie stars.

With this, Conciliator Margaret Harpstrite who was to have the actual job of trying to reconcile Susan and Jess, broke into tears and rushed from the courtroom weeping:

"She (Judge Bullock) gets all the publicity—and I do all the work. Let her try to reconcile those movie stars. I'm not going to miss my lunch hour again listening to their troubles!"

Suddenly, Susan and Jess who had not previously looked at one another, were around the weeping woman, patting her on the shoulder and telling her they wanted her to hear their troubles!

Susan and Jess sent out for coffee and sandwiches so their "reconciler" wouldn't miss her lunch again and pretty soon they settled down into a discussion—with the sniffles not from Susie.

But apparently, even the smiles the Barkers could hardly restrain when they looked at one another, did not help their private situation.

Susan says she no longer loves Jess.

Jess will file a countersuit asking for half of the $400,000 worth of community property he says Susan has tied up and for half-year custody of the twin boys.

Everyone is hoping this divorce will not become as bitter or black as the John Waynes'.

Not even in March has there ever been a gustier première than the one the California

Marilyn Monroe, Lauren Bacall attended preem of their How To Marry A Millionaire.

June Haver made first public date with Joe Campbell at Screen Producers' Guild dinner.

RITA IN 3D!

On The Prowl...
In The Torrid Story
Of A Lady And
A Hundred Men!

COLUMBIA PICTURES
presents

RITA HAYWORTH

JOSE FERRER

Miss Sadie Thompson

WITH ALDO RAY

SONG HITS
YOU'RE HEARING!
"Sadie Thompson's Song"
"The Heat Is On"
"Hear No Evil"
"A Marine, A Marine, A Marine"

COLOR BY TECHNICOLOR

Screen Play by HARRY KLEINER • Based on a story by W. SOMERSET MAUGHAM • A JERRY WALD Production
Directed by CURTIS BERNHARDT • A BECKWORTH CORPORATION PICTURE

BOTH

these Popular Magazines are now popular

RADIO PROGRAMS

*on the air everyday

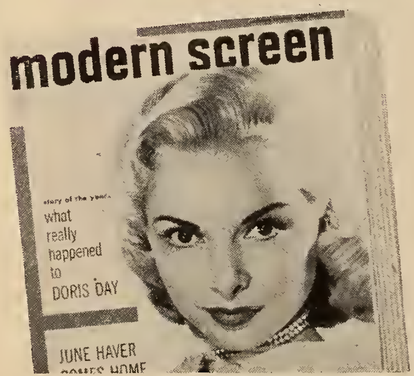
The pages of Modern Romances brought to life! Intimate, exciting real-life dramas of the problems that people everywhere have to face . . . just like those you may have faced yourself . . . on

"MODERN ROMANCES"



The true lives and loves of your favorite movie stars dramatized from the material selected by the editors of America's greatest movie magazine on . . .

"HOLLYWOOD STARWAY"

both* good to read . . .
and good to hear . . .
both on the ABC Network

*Tune in daily—Monday to Friday
Check your local newspaper for time and station weather man blew up for Joan Crawford's Torch Song. By showtime a gale forty-five miles an hour was howling through the lobby of the Warners Beverly Theatre and the lovely gals, arriving in their best finery, were literally "gone with the wind."

Zsa Zsa's (Gabor) white satin bouffant skirt was tossed so far over her head the TV cameras had to hastily turn away!

Jerry Lewis kept running up and down the sidelines sandwiching himself between the gallant, but frozen, fans and squealing in his little high voice, "I'm cold. I'm cold!"

Rory Calhoun took off his overcoat and wrapped it completely around his tiny Lita—already completely wrapped in ermine.

Everybody laughed when the TV camera boys asked Marge Champion to stop long enough to show her new Italian hair-do. A blast of wind hit her at just that minute and her hair stood straight up on her head like a fright-wig or as though it had been stiffened with an eggbeater.

But when Joan arrived, to the tune of much excitement and hurrahs from her loyal sidewalk fans, even the wind cooperated. It died down long enough for her to make a graceful little speech with neither her beautiful gown blowing nor a single hair getting out of place.

ENVY ME, girls, envy me. I had to come all the way to New York to get kissed by Robert Wagner who had always seemed a little nervous and buck-shy about me in Hollywood.

I guess New York just helps us let down the barriers because when I ran into Bob at a nightclub he threw his arms around me and gave me a big kiss.

He said he would take me out on a date and we'd do up the nightclubs except that he had to leave for the coast that same night.

I suppose, back home again, when he sees me he'll call me "Miss Parsons" again.

OF ALL PEOPLE, Marilyn Monroe (who usually is a mouse at social affairs) and Shelley Winters (who isn't) had a "set-to" at Nunnally Johnson's house following the première of How To Marry A Millionaire.

The cause? Bob Mitchum!! No, the girls weren't battling over his favor. Far from it. It was over his ability as an actor and whether he managed his career wisely! I ask you!

Later, Shelley said, "We weren't fighting—it was just an argument—about another actor's work."

Honest little Marilyn agreed, but piped up, "I guess we did raise our voices and talk real loud so it might have sounded like a fight."

HIGHLIGHTS of the Press Photographers' Costume Ball at the Mocambo:

Vera-Ellen was the cutest and most original. She came as a Christmas tree, covered from neck to knees in ornaments and wires. You could switch her on or off by pressing a battery in her hand.

Joan Crawford came in blackface for all the world like a feminine Al Jolson, only her dress was the tightest, tightest and greenest of the season.

Jeff Hunter and Barbara Rush were the most gruesome—ghastly pale, in long, ragged, black garments, straight out of a Charles Addams horror cartoon. Barbara even balanced a stuffed (dead) bird on her hand all evening.

Janet Leigh's Grecian Goddess outfit was just a bit of this in front and that in the back, but what there was of it was beautiful—and so was Janet.

Tony Curtis wore one of Richard Burton's costumes from The Robe.

Debbie Reynolds was a cute clown with a big red nose as bulbous as Cyrano's.

After promising to show up, the boys were a little miffed with Marilyn Monroe when she didn't.

ANN BLYTH, the happiest girl in the world, hopes her baby will be born on the first anniversary of her wedding to Dr. Jim McNulty, June 27.

"The doctor (not Dr. Jim!) says there's a chance," softly smiles Ann.

PERSONAL OPINIONS: The Ray Millands have made up—which is as it should be. The actress who, 'tis gossipped, caused all the trouble between them, has brought her mother to Hollywood to live—just as well, too.

All the redheaded glamour girls, Lucille Ball, Rhonda Fleming, Greer Garson, Arlene Dahl are wearing bright lipstick red dresses. On some it looks good. On others (?).

Donald O'Connor seems to have snapped out of his difficult mood—and high time. He Dawn Addams, Kurt Kaszner chatted with Shelley Winters. Shell later tiffed with the Monroe.

Mother-to-be Ann Blyth hopes baby will be born on anniversary of her wedding to Dr. Jim.

Mrs. Jane Carlsan of New York City is a busy wife and mother, and as pretty as a picture.

"I use detergents 2500 times a year... but I'm proud of my pretty hands!"

Six years ago, pretty Jane Carlsan had never even heard of "detergents." Now she uses them (just like you) thousands of times a year!

Detergents are a blessing when they dissolve grease and grime. But when they dissolve away natural oils and softness from your hands, they're a problem!

But Jane's hands stay so smooth and lovely, you wouldn't believe she ever touched a dishpan or mop. How does she do it? After detergents — after any harsh soap or cleanser, Jane puts pure, white Jergens Lotion on, right away.

A few drops help replace necessary softening moisture. Jergens penetrates instantly, doesn't just "coat" hands. It contains two ingredients doctors use for softening. (That's one reason why it's the world's most popular hand care.)

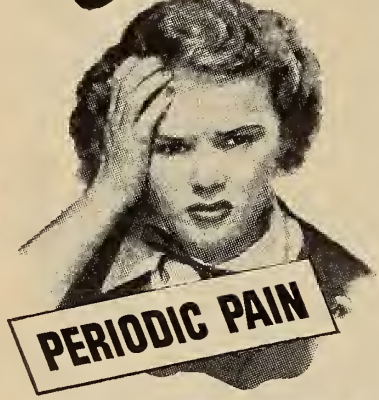
For Jane, the best proof of Jergens Lotion care is the flattery her hands get from her husband.

Detergents are here to stay. Make sure your hands stay pretty, too. Keep Jergens Lotion and use it regularly after each chore. You can do a housewife's job, but it's nice to have a sweetheart's hands.

Only 10¢ to $1.00 plus tax

Use JERGENS LOTION – avoid detergent hands

Bonnie's BLUE



Don't let the calendar make a slave of you, Bonnie! Just take a Midol tablet with a glass of water...that's all. Midol brings faster relief from menstrual pain—it relieves cramps, eases headache and chases the "blues."

FREE 24-page book, "What Women Want to Know", explains menstruation. (Plain wrapper). Write Dep't. F-24, Box 280, New York 18, N. Y.

Bonnie's GAY WITH MIDOL

All Drugstores have Midol

LOUELLA PARSONS' good news Continued

was really getting to be a headache.

Too many of our young stars are not paying the right attention to health: Joanne Gilbert has again dodged an appendix operation the doctor says she needs.

Rosemary Clooney has been working through White Christmas with a severe cold.

Ava Gardner's doctor tells her she must undergo surgery either here or in Rome before starting Barefoot Contessa.

The way Virginia Mayo and Mike O'Shea quickly shifted the "M. C." they'd already had embroidered on the baby things from Michael Christian to Mary Catherine—was pretty cute.

The Letter Box: Lillian De Becker writes such an interesting letter from Ohain-Bragant, Belgium, I'm going to let you peek over my shoulder:

"Maybe the views of a Belgian movie fan will interest you? Well, here they are:

"Are there so few interesting things going on in Hollywood that only Janet Leigh and Tony Curtis and Arlene Dahl and Fernando Lamas supply copy? We like them all, but fear indigestion.

"Unlike (what we read) American fans—we wish Rita Hayworth happiness in her marriage to Dick Haymes and want to see her in more pictures.

"On the other hand, we were definitely shocked by Jane Powell's behavior. Falling in love can happen to anybody—but her cynical attitude is beyond understanding." (Jane is more cynical than ever, Lillian. See our "lead" story this month.)

"We fans here believe that marriage to Michael Wilding has been a fine thing for Elizabeth Taylor whether or not he is 'too old' for her.

"Will you ask Olivia de Havilland why she never answers requests for letters or photographs? Isn't she interested that many of us think she is the finest of all screen actresses?

"Something must be done to get Mario Lanza back on the screen. We really miss this great artist.

"Other stars we hold in affection here are Barbara Stanwyck, Alan Ladd and William Holden—and you, Louella Parsons."

Thank you for your kind and interesting words, Lillian.

If you had three wishes for your magazine, what would they be? A feature story on a new starlet? The inside tale of someone's rise to fame? Or perhaps an article on the happy home and family of your favorite personality. Well, you needn't rub a lamp or bribe a leprechaun. You can have your three wishes—or your three-and-twenty if you like—just by telling us about them. Read all the stories in this issue of MODERN SCREEN and then fill out and mail the form below. Just to make it all a little more magical, a brand new one-dollar bill will go to each of the first hundred people we hear from.

QUESTIONNAIRE: Which stories and features did you enjoy most in this issue? WRITE THE NUMBERS 1, 2, and 3 AT THE FAR LEFT of your first, second and third choices. Then let us know what stars you'd like to read about in future issues.

☐ MODERN SCREEN'S Top Ten For 1953
☐ The Iron Man and The Redhead (Susan Hayward-Jeff Chandler)
☐ Ava And Frank Tell The Truth To Louella Parsons
☐ Jane's Strange Interlude (Jane Powell-Gene Nelson)
☐ A Fish-eye View Of Terry And Bob (Terry Moore-Bob Wagner)
☐ Behind Closed Doors (John Wayne)
☐ Catch Me Cookin'! (Jane Russell)
☐ The Waiting Game (Gregory Peck)
☐ Heston's Ivory Tower (Charlton Heston)
☐ Get Lost, Cupid! (Elaine Stewart)
☐ The "Wolf" At Farley's Door (Farley Granger)
☐ Mama Mayo (Virginia Mayo-Mike O'Shea)
☐ They Did It The Hard Way (Rory Calhoun-Lita Baron)
☐ Storm Over Hollywood (Gale Storm)
☐ The Road Straightens (Lucille Ball)
☐ Tony Throws No Bull (Anthony Quinn)
☐ Her Pool Runneth Over (Debra Paget)
☐ Dawn's Disorganized Nights (Dawn Addams)
☐ Hollywood Abroad
☐ Louella Parsons' Good News
☐ Just For The Records
☐ Movie Reviews
☐ TV Talk
☐ The Inside Story

Which of the stories did you like least?
____
____

What 3 MALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.
____
____
____

What FEMALE stars would you like to read about in future issues?
____
____
____

What MALE star do you like least?
____

What FEMALE star do you like least?
____

My name is..........................
My address is........................
City.................. State.........
Occupation........ I am .... yrs. old

ADDRESS TO: POLL DEPT., MODERN SCREEN, BOX 125, MURRAY HILL STATION, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

Look lovelier in 10 days with Doctor's Home Facial

...or your money back!

The moment you smooth on this remarkable beauty cream, you're helping your complexion look fresher, prettier! For you've taken the first step in the wonderful, new Home Facial, developed by a noted skin doctor.

This Doctor's Home Facial uses Noxzema, the only leading beauty cream that's medicated. See how this unique cream works for you—how fresh your skin feels—how clear and satiny smooth it looks!

Follow Doctor's Home Facial below. It's especially beneficial to dry, rough or blemished* skin. Noxzema supplies a film of oil and moisture that works night and day to help skin look fresher, prettier.

This new, different beauty care helps skin look fresher, prettier—helps you keep it that way, too!

● If you aren't entirely satisfied with your complexion here's important beauty news for you!

A famous skin doctor worked out a different kind of beauty routine—with a special beauty cream. It's actually a new cleansing method and a wonderfully effective home beauty treatment—all rolled-in-one!

Why it's so successful

This new beauty care owes its amazing effectiveness to the unique qualities of Noxzema. This famous greaseless formula is a combination of softening, soothing, and cleansing ingredients offered by no other leading beauty cream. It's medicated—aids healing—helps skin look clean and fresh! Here's all you do!

1 Cleanse your face by washing with Noxzema and water. Apply Noxzema; wring out a cloth in warm water and wash as if using soap. See how stale make-up and dirt disappear after this 'cream-washing'! How fresh skin looks and feels—not dry, or drawn!

2 Night Cream: Medicated Noxzema supplies a protective film of oil and moisture—helps your skin look smoother, fresher, lovelier. Pat a bit extra over any blemishes* to help heal them—fast! It's greaseless, too! No smeary pillow!

3 Make-up base: In the morning, 'cream-wash' again; then as your long-lasting powder base, apply Noxzema. It helps protect your skin all day!

Results are thrilling. Surveys show over a million women all over America have changed to this sensible beauty care. Hundreds of letters praise Noxzema's quick help for dry, rough skin; *externally-caused blemishes; and especially for that dull, lifeless, half-clean look of many so-called normal complexions.

It works or money back! In clinical tests the Noxzema routine helped 4 out of 5 women with skin problems to have lovelier-looking complexions. Try it for 10 days—if you don't look lovelier—return jar to Noxzema, Baltimore—money back!

Look lovelier offer! For a limited time only, get 40¢ size Noxzema for only 29¢ plus tax at drug, cosmetic counters.

NOXZEMA skin cream

PICTURE OF THE MONTH

movie reviews

by florence epstein

KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE. The huge screen of CinemaScope lends itself beautifully to MGM's spectacular Knights Of The Round Table, to the cavernous, baronial halls, the masses of armor glinting in the sun during jousts and battle scenes. The story itself, based on Sir Thomas Malory's epic Le Morte D'Arthur, is rich in romance and sweeping in movement. Mel Ferrer as King Arthur (who easily draws the sword Excalibur from its anvil thus asserting his right to rule) and Robert Taylor as Lancelot, star in the tale of a kingdom rescued from darkness only to be plunged once again into desolation. Arthur ascends the throne, despite the scheming of Modred (Stanley Baker) and Morgan Le Fay (Ann Crawford), with Guinevere (Ava Gardner) as his bride. Guinevere is Lancelot's only love whom he must forsake because of loyalty to Arthur. Lancelot weds Elaine (Maureen Swanson) who lives far from royal Camelot and has a son, Galahad. But Elaine dies and Lancelot returns to have his pure love for Guinevere distorted into a plot to overthrow Arthur's rule. Tragedy follows but Lancelot, tossing Excalibur—symbol of England under Arthur—into the sea, pledges his life and the life of his son to the restoration of peace and union.

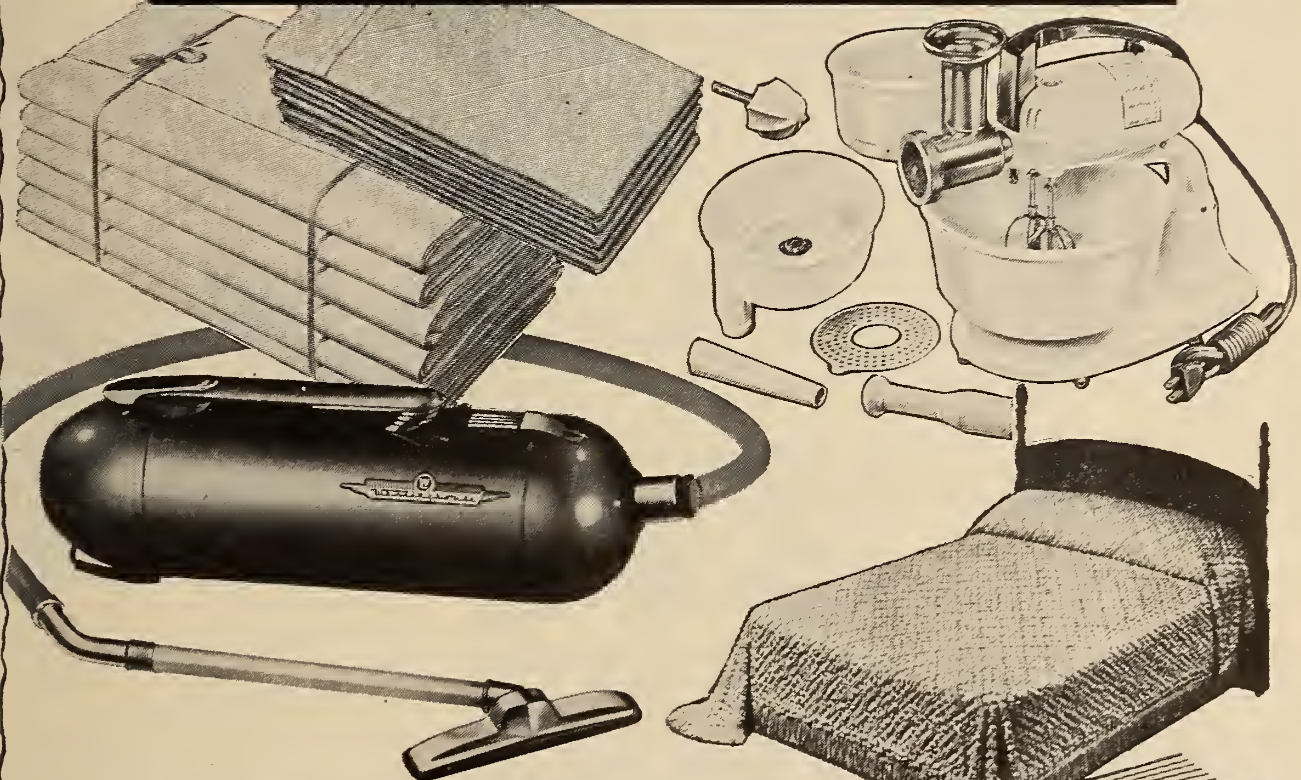
HONDO is a little like Shane but has a charm of its own. John Wayne's charm. He may be a gunman but if he couldn't draw first he'd have been dead long ago. It's the Southwest in 1874 which means he's just lost his horse—and nearly his scalp—to the Apaches when he appears on the ranch of Geraldine Page. My husband isn't here today, she tells him. From the way that ranch looks, he hasn't been there in months. Geraldine's small son (Lee Aaker) likes Wayne immediately. So does Geraldine. And Wayne—tough, cynical, a lone wolf—finds himself changing under their spell. There's still that husband, though, and those Apaches rising like yeast. Chief Michael Pate gallops in after Wayne's gone and looks longingly at Geraldine's blonde hair. Her son saves that day. Wayne saves all the rest in this moving Western. With Ward Bond. Warner-Color.—Warners.

THE MAN BETWEEN is set in postwar Berlin, a city torn in half. Hildegarde Neff lives in the Western Sector with her English husband Geoffrey Toone. They're visited by Goeffrey's sister Claire Bloom who is puzzled by Hildegarde's tense, wary behavior. Hildegarde introduces her to James Mason, an ex-lawyer turned black marketeer. As it happens, Mason is Hildegarde's husband (she had thought he was dead) and he works with a kidnap gang that snatches Claire by mistake. She and Mason fall in love—their feelings heightened by a pervasive sense of doom. In a thrilling flight over the rooftops, through the broken down houses, across the ruined foundations of East Berlin they share a brief if somewhat frantic happiness. This is a poignant film, beautifully acted. In the cast are Aribert Waescher, Dieter Krause.—Carol Reed Production, U.A.

THE EDDIE CANTOR STORY It starts on New York's East Side in 1904 where a lonely runt wants to be part of the Henry Street Sluggers (whose leader winds up in the electric chair). Richard Monda as little Eddie Cantor prohably resembles him more than Eddie did. The runt's grandma (Aline MacMahon) fears he'll grow into a "bummer," reluctantly lets him join Gus Edwards' kiddie revue. The rest is the building of one of the biggest names in show business. Keefe Brasselle (displaying remarkably athletic eyes) plays Cantor, the man whose singleminded devotion to fame almost cost him his marriage and broke his health. You'll hear all the songs, sense Ida's strength (Marilyn Erskine) and the strange emptiness a life in the limelight sometimes brings. Cast includes Arthur Franz, Alex Gerry, Jackie Barnett. Technicolor.—Warners.

Yours FREE!

CANNON SHEETS AND TOWELS • DORMEYER MIXERS • WESTINGHOUSE CLEANERS • TOASTMASTER TOASTERS • FAMOUS BEDSPREADS • CURTAINS • SILVERWARE, etc.



Or Take Your Choice of Any of the Nationally Advertised Products in this NEW 164 Page
FULL COLOR CATALOG

How you can fill your home with luxuries you've always wanted

WITHOUT SPENDING A PENNY!

Yes, it's really true! Without spending one cent you can fill your home with the most wonderful luxuries! Famous brand appliances, rugs, dishes, blankets, luggage, fashions, watches, cameras, furniture . . . all these and many, many more—yours FREE! Just choose the gifts you want from a truly breathtaking array of famous name products, beautifully displayed and described in our big, new full-color 164-page catalog! Here are all the things you see advertised in the leading magazines, featured at the country's finest stores! And they can be yours, without cost!

Incredible? Not at all! Right now thousands of men and women are receiving millions of dollars worth of merchandise without cost under this amazing new Popular Club Plan!

HOW YOU CAN GET MERCHANDISE FREE!

It's simple as A-B-C! Simply form a friendly shopping club among a few of your family, friends or co-workers. Show them the catalog and help them make their selections. They shop at home, at value prices — and on easy payments. They'll thank you when they receive valuable merchandise premiums FREE — with every purchase they make! You — as Club Secretary—pay nothing for your merchandise! You can go on obtaining one product after another — FREE — for as long as you care to continue!

SEND FOR BEAUTIFUL COLOR CATALOG NOW!

Simply mail coupon or write for FREE catalog and complete details of Club Plan. No cost or obligation. But don't put it off! The sooner you act, the sooner you'll have the beautiful things you want — FREE!

POPULAR CLUB PLAN, Dept. B-751, Lynbrook, New York

Popular Club Plan, Dept. B-751
Lynbrook, New York

Without cost or obligation to me, please send your FREE CATALOG of nationally advertised merchandise and tell me how I can get anything I want without cost.

Name...

Address...

City..Zone......State............

Are you in the know?

If a friend's ex-steady wants to date you —

☐ Grab the guy ☐ Get the facts ☐ Be sly

Secretly, you've been green-eyed about him — tho' as Sally's beau he was "mustn't touch." But they've broken up; and now you hear the "all clear" (you t-h-e-e-n-k). Listen again. Get the facts — from Sally. Is she still torching for him? Then he's still off-limits, unless you'd like being the town's meanest moll! You're all clear, confidence-wise, when you rout certain days' discomfort with Kotex. For softness unlimited, Kotex holds its shape.

Who rates best with Brain Boy

☐ A Charleston whiz ☐ Paper doll ☐ Giggler

He's the intellectual type — and you're smitten, but chatter-shy. Don't fret. Days before your date, start scanning the newspapers; get a line on world topics to show you're alert, save the conversation from bogging down. But on calendar days, you need never get a line — the telltale kind. Trust those flat, pressed ends of Kotex. And this napkin gives extra protection.

Is she getting first aid for —

☐ Skiers' backache ☐ School-girl slump

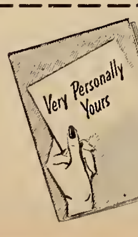
Before those shoulders droop again, here's a posture plan you can really stick to! Put a strip of adhesive tape across your shoulders: good reminder to keep 'em on the square. And next time you need sanitary protection, remind yourself to try all 3 absorbencies of Kotex. There's one just for you . . . Regular, Junior or Super.

More women choose KOTEX* than all other sanitary napkins

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.



Want to get "certain" facts straight?

☐ Ask Sis ☐ See a librarian ☐ Read "V.P.Y."

Hazy about what happens and why — at "that" time? Read "Very Personally Yours" — the new, free booklet filled with easy-to-understand facts, plus lively illustrations. Hints on diet, exercise, grooming . . . do's and dont's a girl should know. Send for your copy today. FREE! Address P.O. Box 3434, Dept. 1024, Chicago 54, Ill.

THE GLASS WEB John Forsythe is a crime writer for TV and an otherwise honorable man. How did he ever get mixed up with siren Kathleen Hughes? How is he going to pay all those thousands she demands to keep his past a secret from wife Marcia Henderson? That's a problem, hut nothing like the one he has to face when Kathleen gets murdered. She had lots of admirers, among them Edward G. Robinson, researcher on Forsythe's show. Robinson's ambitious; he wants Forsythe's job and is so convinced of that boy's guilt he's willing to write a script about it for Crime Of The Week. Go ahead, says director Richard Denning who likes to keep his boys on their toes. Forsythe's mad—but that Robinson is a corker! Anyway, a couple of detectives are in the studio that night. They watch Forsythe, watch Robinson. They're so suspicious they even watch the commercial. The Glass Web is slick and suspenseful.—U-I

ESCAPE FROM FORT BRAVO Captain Bill Holden gets a bad reputation among his Civil War prisoners when he comes into camp dragging a runaway Southerner at the end of a rope. But Holden's not mean—just hard. It would take a woman to soften him—someone like Eleanor Parker who floats into camp for the wedding of the Colonel's daughter (Polly Bergen) to young officer Richard Anderson. Holden falls in love so fast it startles him. That's what Eleanor wanted—while his head is in the clouds her feet are covering ground with Southern officer John Forsythe. She's planned his escape from the fort along with buddies William Demarest and William Campbell. Holden tracks 'em down, would drag 'em back, too, if those crazy Indians would stop shooting arrows. But they don't. Maybe the palefaces are doomed, maybe not. Either way, Eleanor Parker makes those last few moments worthwhile for Holden.—MGM

FORBIDDEN Some girls are just unlucky in love. Like Joanne Dru. Every guy who proposes turns out to be a gangster. Except Tony Curtis—and she jilted him. When her last husband was bumped off Joanne had to leave the States or his ex-partners would've done her in. All around the world she goes, to Maçao where Lyle Bettger pops the question between dodging assassins. Tony follows her to Maçao—not for love, for the money he'll pocket by bringing her back alive to Philadelphia (his boss wishes to lay hands on the incriminating evidence she has tucked in a vault). One look at Joanne and Tony knows he's still nuts about that mixed-up kid. And vice versa. Lyle doesn't take this kindly. And Tony's boss who's having him shadowed by a thug (Marvin Miller) wasn't planning a wedding party.—Universal

EASY TO LOVE There's a water sequence to end all such sequences in Easy To Love, but it won't. Esther Williams comes skimming over the Atlantic Ocean on skis in the company of a flotilla of 4-H boys waving banners. Suddenly she hoists herself up on a trapeze conveniently suspended from a helicopter and dives into what looks like Niagara Falls (if you can picture Niagara falling up instead of down). This movie is spectacular, to say the least. Water, water everywhere and not a plot to speak of. Well—there's Van Johnson. He owns The Cypress Gardens concession in Florida, Esther is the star of his aquacade. She's mad about him but he can't see her for the money she pulls in. John Bromfield, her muscular swimming partner, would wed her. Singer Tony Martin would woo her lavishly (no ring, though). Esther strings them both along for the love of Van. Technicolor.—MGM

FLIGHT TO TANGIER Jack Palance is stuck all the way out in Tangier because the folks at home think he's a war hero when all the time it was some other guy. So here he is flying crates for anybody who'll pay him, and some pretty shady characters have money in Morocco. Lucky for Palance he wasn't flying the plane that just blew up. His friend was flying it, delivering a man who'd bought his way out of Communist territory. No bodies in the debris. Could be Palance's friend forced that poor multimillionaire to parachute right into the arms of Commies. Nice scenery. Corinne Calvet, Joan Fontaine. Joan says she's engaged to the flyer who "crashed" but she didn't flick an eyelash at his disappearance. Corinne is in some funny business with men who have "spy" written across their faces. It gets hot in Tangier for those girls. Also for Palance, who's being hunted by everybody. Confused? Wait till you see the movie! Technicolor.—Paramount

BOTANY BAY Eight months at sea can be real boring unless you have the ingenuity of James Mason. Mason is sailing this load of prisoners to Australia and to pass his time he metes out justice in the form of flogging, keel-hauling, weeks in solitary. You don't have to be guilty to get justice, just handy. Alan Ladd always is. I don't belong on this ship, he keeps crying as they wrap him in rope and pull him under the keel. A lot of people don't belong—like Pat Medina who belongs at the Copacabana. Anyway it's a tough voyage full of small dramas. A little boy (James Hardy) pays for his heroism with death. His mother (Dorothy Patten) tries stabbing Mason but you can't stab stone. Mason gets his, though, in Australia which begins to look like heaven. Technicolor, with Sir Cedric Hardwicke.—Paramount

Now... Control those "Calorie-Curves"!

Imagine! Hidden "finger" panels plus new non-roll top that slim, firm and control you without a single seam, stitch, bone or stay!

New Playtex® Magic-Controller! (FABRIC LINED)

Now available in all 3 styles:

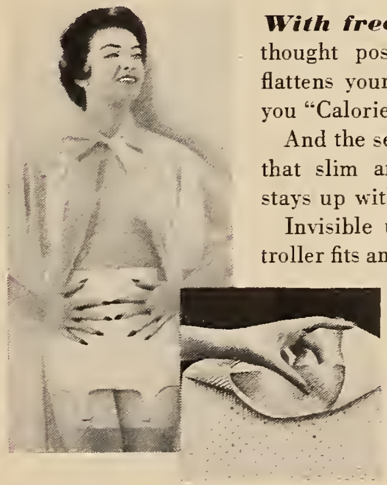
Garter girdle — Panty with garters — Panty brief



With freedom and comfort you never thought possible, Magic-Controller firms and flattens your figure from waist to thighs—gives you "Calorie-Curve Control"!

And the secret? Those hidden "finger" panels that slim and smooth, that non-roll top that stays up without a stay!

Invisible under sleekest clothes, Magic-Controller fits and feels like a second skin. Cloud-soft fabric lining inside, lovely textured latex outside, it's one piece and wonderful! Wash it in seconds—you can practically watch it dry.

Feel that soft-as-a-cloud fabric lining —see the lovely textured latex outside.

Playtex Magic-Controller*... Now in all 3 styles

Garter Girdle . . . with 4 reinforced adjustable garters, $7.95

Panty Girdle . . . with 4 reinforced adjustable garters, $7.95

Panty Brief, $6.95

Fabric Lined Playtex Girdles, from $4.95

Other famous Playtex Girdles, from $3.50

Extra-Large sizes slightly higher.

Playtex . . . known everywhere as the girdle in the SLIM tube. At department stores and specialty shops everywhere.

*U.S.A. and Foreign Patents Pending

©1953 International Latex Corp'n . . . PLAYTEX PARK . . . Dover Del. Playtex Ltd., Arnprior, Ontario

Dahlings, dahlings, don't walk—RUN!!!*
"THAT BOOK" is now only 35¢

"FANTASTICALLY FRANK"
Boston Post

"FASCINATING"
New York Herald Tribune

"BEWITCHING"
Richmond Times Dispatch

"UNINHIBITED"
Atlantic Monthly

"EXPLOSIVE"
Washington Post

"HILARIOUS"
Dallas News

"SIZZLING"
Chicago News

DELL BOOK
"SIZZLING" "INTIMATE" "UNINHIBITED" 35¢
Tallulah
My Autobiography by TALLULAH BANKHEAD

Dahlings --

I've told as much truth as I dare...in the interest of good taste I've not blue-printed all my delinquencies. I've ducked the truth only when it would injure an innocent.

My love life? I've rejoiced in considerable dalliance, and have no regrets. I'm a single-standard girl. I found no surprises in the Kinsey report.

My philosophy of life? Well...Read the book dahlings. I hope you have as much fun as I've had.

Ever your own,
Tallulah

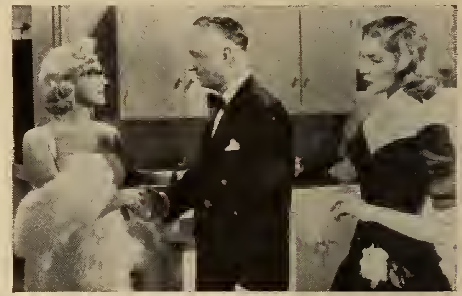
*Run... to your nearest Newsstand, Drug Store or Variety Store

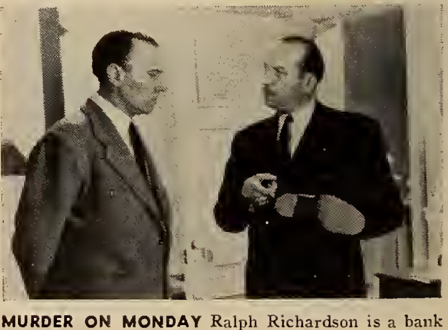
Read the FRANKEST AUTOBIOGRAPHY EVER!
TALLULAH
NOW ON SALE—35¢—EVERYWHERE

DELL BOOKS

THE WILD ONE Marlon Brando is the leader of the Black Rebels Motorcycle Club. What they're rebelling against they can't tell you. Forty of 'em, looking like hopped-up hoodlums, zoom over the highways in an endless flight to nowhere. Violence rides with them into a small town where Mary Murphy lives with her ineffectual police officer father Robert Keith. Brando goes for Mary who is attracted but mainly frightened by this inarticulate, quick-tempered fellow. Another bunch of cyclists led by Lee Marvin roll in. Turns out Lee's bunch are enemies of Brando's bunch. Pretty soon there's a lot of fighting and hysteria. The Wild One is a study of lost men lashing out at a world they can't claim. It's also a graphic account of what happens when others, no less lost, but perhaps more resigned, try to control them. Stanley Kramer production. Jay C. Flippen, Hugh Sanders, Yvonne Doughty.—Col.



HOW TO MARRY A MILLIONAIRE This is 20th Century-Fox's second venture in CinemaScope and all it proves is: a good movie is good, no matter how you serve it. Three models—Lauren Bacall, Marilyn Monroe, Betty Grable—rent a penthouse they can't afford. It isn't the view they like, it's the vision of millionaires. Bacall won't even talk to a man unless he's groaning under the weight of thousand-dollar bills. Marilyn will talk to anyone (she's so blind she can't even tell if it's human) and Betty, the naive, warmhearted type, goes up to a lodge in Maine with Fred Clark on the assumption that it'll be swarming with Elks. The adventures of these three are too long and complicated to relate. For Bacall there are wealthy William Powell and "gas pump jockey" Cameron Mitchell. For Monroe, Alex D'Arcy and nearsighted David Wayne. For Grable, Rory Calhoun. Go see How to Marry A Millionaire. It's lavish and lots of fun. Technicolor.—20th-Fox



MURDER ON MONDAY Ralph Richardson is a bank clerk and so methodical you could wind him instead of a clock. He and his wife (Margaret Leighton) live in a cozy English town, belong to a social club, grow chrysanthemums. One night, precisely at seven, Richardson crosses the threshold of his home into disaster. His distraught wife assures him he's been away for twenty-four hours. Absurd, he says, isn't today Monday? Well, no. It's Tuesday. Whatever happened to Monday? Doctor Jack Hawkins calls it amnesia. Police Inspector Campbell Singer demands a better explanation. Because on Monday the social club's steward was murdered. Richardson hated that steward. He also needed money and it seems that the club's treasury has just been looted. Is Richardson capable of such heinous crimes? With Michael Shepley, Meriel Forbes.—London Films

SINS OF JEZEBEL Paulette Goddard, as "the most wicked woman in history," descends on Jezreel in the 9th century, B.C. to become the crafty bride of Eduard Franz. Franz is King of Israel. Paulette is the Phoenician Princess Jezebel who has some ideas, all of them crazy. Bewildered Franz builds a temple for Paulette's god, Baal, and sits there waiting for rain. As Elijah (John Hoyt) prophesied, there'll be no water in Israel while Baal's burning bright. All Baal's prophets get in a circle on Mt. Carmel and ask the sun to move over. It won't budge. Elijah steps forth, opens his mouth and—Bam! lightning strikes. Shortly followed by Paulette. She orders Elijah and all his followers (Ludwig Donath among them) killed. Franz goes forth to fight the Syrians and that's the end of him. As for Jezebel—her days are numbered. Pity.—Ansco Color, Lippert.

RECOMMENDED FILMS NOW PLAYING

KISS ME KATE (MGM): A glorious, riotous dish that has just about everything—Cole Porter tunes, Kathryn Grayson and Howard Keel to sing them, Ann Miller to dance to them and top comedy performances by everyone in the cast. Technicolor.

THE JOE LOUIS STORY (U.A.): Coley Wallace giving a sensitive performance in this fine film about the great champion. An honest and moving portrait of the Brown Bomber on the Glory Road as well as a picture of the years before and after he earned his title.

CALAMITY JANE (Warners): Doris Day and Howard Keel at their top singing, loving and comic form, straightening out all sorts of improbable and hilarious mishaps involving the charming Miss Allyn McLerie. Technicolor.

SO BIG (Warners): Jane Wyman giving a beautiful performance as Edna Ferber's beloved character, Selina DeJong. The picture takes Selina from young womanhood through her life as a wife and mother on an almost barren farm. Sterling Hayden and Nancy Olson are around to make it all worth while.

CRAZYLEGS, ALL-AMERICAN (Hall Bartlett): The true story of one of the greatest of gridiron heroes, with Elroy (Crazylegs) Hirsch playing himself, assisted by Joan Vohs and authentic football scenes.

TORCH SONG (MGM): Joan Crawford as a spoiled and gorgeous prima donna, rescued from a nervous breakdown by blind, but affectionate Michael Wilding. All this and Crawford's gorgeous gams, too.

MOGAMBO (MGM): Ava Gardner switches from chasing maharajahs to hunting hunters when she bumps into safari-leader Gable in Africa. Gorgeous scenery, wild animals, and Gable's love for Grace Kelly can't compete with Ava's Technicolored talents.

THE ROBE (20th-Fox): This widely-heralded epic of early Christian days tells in sensational new CinemaScope (realism without goggles) the story of Lloyd C. Douglas' best-selling novel. Heading the huge cast are Richard Burton, Jean Simmons, Victor Mature. Technicolor.

LITTLE FUGITIVE: Wonderful newcomer Richie Andrusco as a seven-year-old who thinks he has killed his brother and runs away to Coney Island for a mixed-up, riotous day. Independently produced, this picture took top honors at the Venice Festival.

THOSE REDHEADS FROM SEATTLE (Para): 3-D, Technicolor and music! This one is just good fun, as could be expected when singing sister Teresa Brewer, writing sister Rhonda Fleming and loving sister Cynthia Bell arrive in a wild Alaska frontier town.

He won't—if you don't! And 10 seconds is all it takes to keep your hands soft and smooth and heavenly to hold! Yes, this pretty-pink, Lanolined lotion actually smooths rough skin, soothes dry, chapped skin quicker 'n you can say "Cashmere Bouquet!" 'Specially formulated to vanish instantly... leaving no sticky feel, no oily film... just the flower-fragrance of Cashmere Bouquet.

Beauty Bargain! 9-oz. DeLuxe bottle with handy pump dispenser ... 69¢; other sizes, 25¢ and 47¢

cashmere bouquet
HAND LOTION

millions of women

just like you use Tampax

Don't believe you're different. Some of these women have been using Tampax sanitary protection for more than 20 years—and appreciating its advantages every minute of the time. Here are the reasons it's so popular:

NO BELTS
NO PINS
NO PADS
NO ODOR

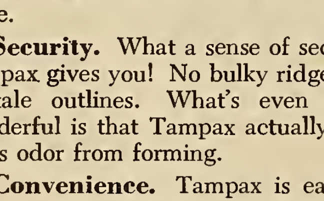
1. Comfort. There's no possibility of chafing or irritation with internally-worn Tampax. Actually it's so comfortable the wearer doesn't even feel it, once it's in place.

2. Security. What a sense of security Tampax gives you! No bulky ridges, no tell-tale outlines. What's even more wonderful is that Tampax actually prevents odor from forming.

3. Convenience. Tampax is easy to carry, easy to conceal (a whole month's supply slips right in the purse), easy to dispose of.

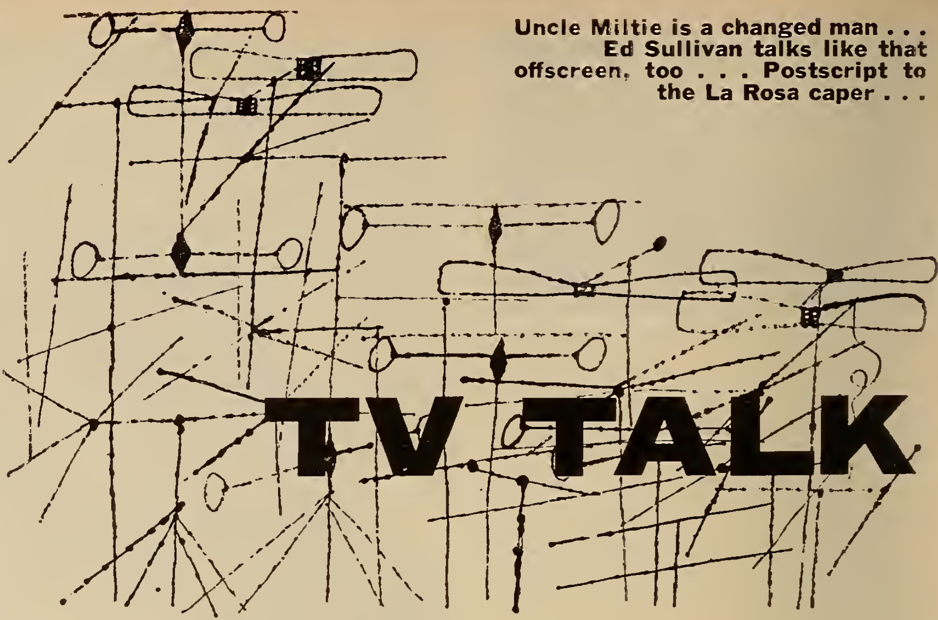
4. Fastidiousness. Tampax is unquestionably the most fastidious kind of sanitary protection. It's simple to insert . . . changing takes only seconds . . . and the user's hands need never even touch the Tampax.

Get Tampax at any drug or notion counter in your choice of 3 absorbencies: Regular, Super, Junior. Economy size gives average 4-months' supply. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.



Sanitary Protection Worn Internally
Regular
TAMPAX
FOR MORE ABSORBENCY SUPER TAMPAX
FOR WANING DAYS JUNIOR TAMPAX
10 TAMPAX—AN AVERAGE MONTH'S SUPPLY
Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association
TAMPAX

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association



TV TALK

Uncle Miltie is a changed man . . . Ed Sullivan talks like that offscreen, too . . . Postscript to the La Rosa caper . . .

Jerry Lester, whose career is not exactly booming, still thinks he's a big star. Jerry is followed everywhere he goes by a small retinue that knocks itself out laughing at all his sallies. The followers look daggers at anyone else around who doesn't double up in hysterics every time Jerry pulls a funny. It's not the way to win extra friends offscreen. . . . Yet someone like Milton Berle, whose career has never been in better shape, has never been so subdued. When you hear about Uncle Miltie's temperament, throw in a few grains of salt. He still blows his whistle during rehearsals and clambers around demanding changes in everything from the cues to the music. But he is a changed man—just as his show is a changed production. Milton knew he was in trouble with his old show, and he pays out of his own pocket every week to Goodman Ace, who writes the new one. He also knows his lines most of the time now. Remember how he used to stumble and ad lib his way through the hour? Watch him closely now, and you'll see that he's learned his lines. He's also learned his lesson: You can't slop through and come through. A few other comics could profit if they'd wake up, too . . . Milton and his steady girl, Ruth Cosgrove, are the center of attention everywhere they go. Ruth—who gave up her publicity job to give more time to Miltie—is not beautiful; she's the handsome, full-blown type. She dresses simply and wears vibrant colors that go with her dark hair and eyes. She's very quiet. One thing's for sure: You can't even hint that he's ever had a fault around Ruth . . . Some of the best reading around is the mail that's written to Dorothy Collins. Some of the Hit Parade viewers want to know if her father was killed in an accident at a tobacco plantation—and if that's why her cigarette sponsor hired her. 'Tain't so, of course. And some people still wonder if the little white blouse she wears is her only one. It used to be, but it isn't now. What with her income, and her husband's (the show's bandleader, Raymond Scott) she can buy a lot more now . . . Eva Gabor is more than just one of the fabulous Gabor sisters. She is also a very kind lady who will pitch in and work for a friend. In her summer stock appearances, she's been known to paint posters, sort tickets, and all but sweep out the theatre —just because she liked the people who were running the place . . . Peter Lind Hayes and Mary Healy almost didn't get married because Peter's mother, the famous vaudevillian Grace Hayes, hated Mary. She's changed her mind now, and they're the best of friends . . . Martin Agronsky is one of the happiest married men in Washington or anywhere else. The little dark commentator lives in a rambling modern house on the outskirts of the city with his ebullient redheaded wife, Helen, and their four young children. It's a casual-seeming household, with the children and the Agronskys' cats running in and out; but Helen can whip up a meal faster than anyone in town. She never has to fix breakfast for her husband, though. Martin's up and out of the house and off to work before the baby cries in the morning. He just grabs a quart of milk and heads for his office . . . One way Theodore Granik gets the high-caliber guests he does for American Forum Of The Air is with his yacht. He takes people sailing on the Potomac, and first thing they know they're on his program . . . Martha Rountree, the thin girl with the so-Southern accent, uses her elegant Washington home to snag her guests. They show up for cocktails and go away committed to the next Rountree show. Most of them are quite happy about it, however, because then they get to spout on television without paying for the privilege. It's a rare Congressman who would pass up that opportunity . . . Ed Sullivan, in person, is one of the slowest-talking gents around. His low-pressure introducing on Toast Of The Town is no act. Ed's just a careful man when it comes to talking. He can take forever to get through a sentence, both on and off the screen. He and his trim wife live in a small New York hotel-apartment. It's so small that it doesn't even contain a diningroom. They don't really need one because they eat out all the time. Ed wouldn't be much fun to cook for anyway. He's had ulcers for years, and his diet is almost as restricted as Fred Allen's (Allen eats hardly anything but fruit and lettuce). The Sullivan apartment is also his office. He writes his column and plans his TV show there. Now that their daughter is married, he and Mrs. S. have no one left when the secretaries go home except Boj, a barking black poodle named after Ed's old friend, the late Bill "Bojangles" Robinson . . . Sarah Churchill's slim and handsome husband Tony Beauchamps (pronounced Bee-cham) watches every detail of her work. When they look at kinescopes together, Tony watches every little camera angle . . . Of all the people making television films, Lilli Palmer is probably the most definite about what she wants. She saves her ladylike charm for when the cameras are rolling . . . The Continental (Renzo Cezana) is one of the most intelligent, unassuming men you could meet. He's likely to carry on a conversation about the 17th century popes if you don't watch out. And, in private life, he doesn't try to impress the ladies. He'd rather talk to the men than court the women . . . Arthur Godfrey is still scared about the public's reaction to him after the firing of Julius LaRosa. One trouble with Godfrey is that he cannot be diplomatic with the press—as CBS well knows. When he starts talking, he talks too much and ends up with his foot sticking in his mouth. The whole incident about Julie would have blown right over if only Arthur had kept still. But he had to go and start talking about "humility"—a word that will dog him forever. He's still sulking, saying that the press gave him a raw deal. He thinks they had it in for him, and some of them might have, too—because for years the great Godfrey had been one of the most inaccessible and aloof of all stars. One thing that no one mentioned during all the publicity was Godfrey's aim to hold a government post. He very much wanted a job in the Eisenhower administration, but he doesn't have a chance now . . . It may be sour grapes, but Eddie Fisher's rivals talk about how he can't stay on key. It doesn't seem to hurt his popularity any, though . . . Ezio Pinza takes his onstage lovemaking more seriously than anyone else, or so the ladies in his show say . . . People are still talking about Orson Welles' temperament when he slipped into New York to do King Lear on Omnibus. He kept everyone hopping with his demands, even sending abroad for certain garments that he could not go on without. The shops in New York were full of the same thing, but Orson had to have his own imported . . . Faye Emerson writes her column in record time. One day she called her lunch date and said she'd be twenty minutes late because she had to do her column before she could leave! She's been the envy of every other writer ever since . . . Another by-product of the Godfrey-LaRosa incident was the publicity about Janette Davis's age—thirty-six . . . Away from the TV screen, Ed Murrow leads one of the most luxurious lives of any of the stars. The main reason, of course, is that he is also a member of the board of CBS—which would help anybody's income. Ed also owns part of his new show, Person To Person, which gives him a nice capital-gains deal. The Murrows—Ed, Janet, and young son Casey—own and live in a very large, quiet apartment on Park Avenue. A subdued place—which suits Ed and Janet—its only really informal note is Casey's room. It's full of the paraphernalia of all boys. The final touch: His electric trains are sometimes set up so that they go from his room into the hall, through the guest room, across the bathroom, and back into his room! The Murrows' home life revolves around Casey, who was born many years after they thought they'd never have a child. The Murrows' country place—which Ed, in his typical understatement, calls a "log cabin"—is a real layout. Now that his shows have been shifted to weekdays, he's free to use it, too. And he's a mean duck-hunter. One of the hardest-working people in the business, Murrow still manages to have his fun . . . Peg Lynch, who writes Ethel and Albert and plays the part of Ethel, is a fanatic gardener—and a good one.

Men found Sue extremely attractive in the clear, bracing outdoors where it* wasn't noticeable, but indoors where the air was heavier and contacts closer, her trouble became all too apparent. Admiration turned quickly to indifference . . . the penalty a girl usually pays when she is guilty of *halitosis (bad breath).

And one of the worst things about halitosis is that it is so easy to offend without even realizing it. Halitosis comes and goes . . . absent one day, present the next . . . and you may never know when. So why rely on lesser precautions when Listerine Antiseptic offers such a record of proven performance.

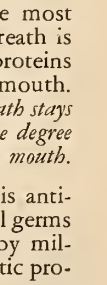
No Tooth Paste Kills Odor Bacteria Like This . . . Instantly

Listerine Antiseptic does for you what no tooth paste can possibly do. Listerine instantly kills bacteria—by millions—stops bad breath instantly, and usually for hours on end.

You see, far and away the most common cause of offensive breath is the bacterial fermentation of proteins which are always present in the mouth. And research shows that your breath stays sweeter longer depending upon the degree to which you reduce germs in the mouth.

No tooth paste, of course, is antiseptic. Chlorophyll does not kill germs—but Listerine kills bacteria by millions, gives you lasting antiseptic protection against bad breath.

Is it any wonder Listerine Antiseptic in recent clinical tests averaged at least four times more effective in stopping bad breath odors than the chlorophyll products or tooth pastes it was tested against?



Listerine . . . the most widely used antiseptic in the world

LISTERINE STOPS BAD BREATH

4 times better than any tooth paste

THE INSIDE STORY

Want the real truth? Write to INSIDE STORY, Modern Screen, 8701 Third St., Los Angeles 48, Cal. The most interesting letters will appear in this column. Sorry, no personal replies.

Q. Is Joan Crawford a tyrant as a mother? Do her four adopted children really love her? —C.L., Findlay, Ohio.

A. Miss Crawford is a well-loved disciplinarian.

Q. What is Zsa Zsa Gabor's real name and when, if ever, was she elected Miss Hungary?—T.W., Woonsocket, R. I.

A. Zsa Zsa's real name is Sarri Gabor; she was runner-up in the Miss Hungary contest of 1938.

Q. Is it true that Lou Costello of Abbott & Costello is slowly dying of a rheumatic heart?—V.E., Colton, Cal.

A. Costello has had several bouts with rheumatic fever.

Q. I understand Humphrey Bogart is renouncing motion pictures in favor of television. True or false? —R.D., Corpus Christi, Tex.

A. Bogart plans to do both. Right now his agent is offering to co-star Bogart and his wife, Lauren Bacall, in a filmed series of TV shorts.

Q. In pictures like Mighty Joe Young and King Kong, are the gorillas real? —M.W., Washington, D. C.

A. No.

Q. I understand that Loretta Young, Mitzi Gaynor, Betty Grable, Doris Day, June Haver, and Betty Hutton were all raised without fathers. Is this true? —T.C., Trenton, N.J.

A. Each of these actresses is a product of a broken home.

Q. I keep reading all the time of the many trips Spencer Tracy takes abroad. Never once have I read of Mrs. Tracy's going with him. What goes with these two? —R.A., Albany, N. Y.

A. Mrs. Tracy has devoted much of her life to the John Tracy Clinic for the benefit of deaf children. She is one of Hollywood's really great women.

Q. Is it true that Glenn Ford wears a girdle?—B.V., West Sacramento, Calif.

A. No.

Q. Is it true that Liz Taylor's hair went straight after the birth of her baby and that she gained fifty pounds? —P.K., Hutchinson, Minn.

A. There was no hair change but an eighteen-pound increase in weight. Diet has now removed this excess.

Q. Will you please tell me why Doris Day puts her tongue against her teeth when she is photographed? Also what happened to her first two husbands? —J.T., Columbia, S. C.

A. Miss Day does not put her tongue against her teeth before being photographed. Her two former husbands are musicians who play with bands.

Q. Did June Haver ever receive a Papal annulment of her marriage to Jimmy Zito? —F. B., Smyrna, Ga.

A. No.

Q. Michael Rennie, James Mason, Stewart Granger, Ronald Colman, Michael Wilding, Ray Milland, Cary Grant—why is Hollywood filled with so many British actors? —E. E., Worcester, Mass.

A. These men are competent, well-trained professionals who like the California climate and the American dollar.

Q. What has Lauren Bacall been doing the past few years? —G E., Des Moines, Iowa

A. She is a busy mother.

Q. I understand that the Nevada Tax Commission has granted Frank Sinatra a State gambling license for a 2% interest in the Sands Hotel, Las Vegas. How much did Frankie pay for that interest and what is his financial condition? —G. T., Reno, Nev.

A. Sinatra paid $54,000 for his 2% interest. He owes the Government $90,000 in back taxes which he pays off at the rate of $1,000 per week when he's working. He also pays his first wife a minimum of $25,000 a year for the support of their three children.

Q. Is it on the level that Ann Blyth and her older sister, Mrs. Dorothy McElligott have had a long-time feud and that Dorothy was not invited to Ann's wedding? —G. E., Needles, Cal.

A. Ann and her sister are not on the best of terms, but Ann insists she sent a wedding invitation to her sister at Barstow, California. Dorothy claims she never received the invitation from Ann.

Q. Does Jimmy Stewart own a cattle ranch next to Bing Crosby's in Elko, Nevada? —Y. E., Denver, Col.

A. Stewart paid $700,000 for a one-third interest in the 150,000-acre Wilkins ranch which adjoins Bing Crosby's.

Q. About the Arthur Godfrey-Julius LaRosa case: they tell me that everyone in show business has known for years that Godfrey is an absolute tyrant on all his programs. Is this true? —B.E., Baltimore, Md.

A. Godfrey has long ruled behind scenes with an iron hand.

Q. Why is it that Shelley Winters can't get along with people? Why was her salary attached at Las Vegas? —E.D., Ellenville, N.Y.

A. Miss Winters is temperamental. Her salary of $15,000 was attached by her ex-press agent Russell Birdwell for alleged unpaid percentage fees due him.

Q. We have a very large bet. Can you tell me who said, "Flowers in Hollywood smell like dirty old dollar bills?" Thank you. —J.F., Chicago, Ill.

A. Writer Dorothy Parker.

Q. What is the exact relationship between Deborah Kerr and a tall dark man named Bert Allenberg? Is that why Deborah plans a divorce? —H.E., London, Eng.

A. Bert Allenberg is Miss Kerr's agent. She plans no divorce.

Q. Did MGM really refuse to take Mario Lanza back for The Student Prince?

A. Yes.

Q. Is it true that Richard Widmark was offered the lead in The Caine Mutiny but that Fox refused to loan him out, whereupon Columbia signed Van Johnson? —V.R., Victor, Col.

A. Yes.

Sought-after models have it... so can you!

"If your income depended on your complexion the way mine does," says famous Mary Killeen, "I'll bet you'd do what I do—wash your face faithfully every day with pure, mild Ivory Soap. Believe me, it works wonders!" Ivory can work wonders for you, too!

That Ivory Look

Young America has it... You can have it in 7 days!

Nursery cuties have it... so can you!

You and Baby Nan Lynn both have reasons for preferring the mildest possible skin soap. And that's Ivory's special claim to fame, mildness! More doctors, more skin specialists advise Ivory for baby's skin and yours than any other soap! Let Ivory baby your skin!

You can have That Ivory Look ... a week from today!

Yes, that's how fast this lovely new look happens! Just change today to regular care and pure, mild Ivory. Then watch your skin grow prettier! In only 7 days your complexion will be dramatically softer, smoother, younger-looking! You'll have That Ivory Look!

99 44/100% pure... it floats

More doctors advise Ivory than any other soap!

New! a shampoo that Silkens your hair!

You—yes, you—can know the thrill of silken hair! After one Drene shampoo, your hair will shine like silk, feel like silk, act like silk—be so obedient! Instantly—thrillingly—Drene silkens your hair!

New Magic Formula . . . Milder than Castile!

Silkening magic! That's what you'll find in Drene's new formula! It lathers like lightning, rinses out like lightning—it's milder than castile! Magic, sheer magic, the way this new Drene silkens your hair. Leaves it bright as silk, soft as silk, smooth as silk—and so obedient!

Lathers like lightning—

no other lather is so thick, yet so quick.

Milder than castile—

so mild you could use this new formula every day.

This is a New Drene!

A PRODUCT OF PROCTER & GAMBLE

June Allyson	1	John Wayne
Elizabeth Taylor	2	Alan Ladd
Marilyn Monroe	3	Bing Crosby
Jane Powell	4	Rock Hudson
Susan Hayward	5	Jeff Chandler
Doris Day	6	Robert Taylor
Lana Turner	7	Clark Gable
Barbara Stanwyck	8	Tony Curtis
Ann Blyth	9	Gregory Peck
Betty Grable	10	Dale Robertson

modern screen's top ten for 1953

■ Modern Screen's editors are devoted to the job of making this magazine exactly what its readers want it to be. We make no bones about it. We ask your advice each month in selecting the stars you want to read about; we ask your criticism of the way we cover your favorites. And you really tell us! This year's list of winners, announced on this page, is your list; you chose the winners and you did yourselves proud. Let's look at the record, as you set it down in Modern Screen's Popularity Poll.

The Duke is King once more. You crowned him for the first time in 1951 and none of the cute youngsters has deposed him yet. The Crown Prince, again, is Alan Ladd; his European-made movies (you're seeing them now) are the latest proof of his consistent top performances.

The Queen this year is our June. She slipped from her seat of state in 1952 after holding it for two years, to make room for Jane Powell—who holds fourth rank this time. And your favorite couple, our figures tell us, is Tony Curtis and Janet Leigh. We couldn't agree with you more heartily.

A newcomer to the poll (but no surprise to anyone, especially to you who put her there) is the most talked-of doll of 1953—Marilyn Monroe. Right now she's busy proving her claim to third place by turning out top-notch comedy performances. Last year, you remember, you placed her on the list of promising new stars. This year you've chosen Keefe Brasselle and Elaine Stewart as the screen's most hopeful discoveries. Next year their names may appear on the Modern Screen Popularity Poll as two of your favorite ten stars. We're sure you're as (Continued on page 65)

THE WINNERS: John Wayne captures the top spot for male stars for third consecutive year; June Allyson regains first place among the women after slipping to second in 1952.

Childhood sweethearts? Tearful twosome? Or Hollywood's hottest new romance? What's with these two from Brooklyn?

BY JIM NEWTON

The IRON MAN and the REDHEAD

■ Jeff Chandler is a nice guy—frank, self-effacing, straight-to-the-point.

Ask him about his relationship to Susan Hayward, and he cocks that handsome, greying head of his to one side and gives you a slow, sheepish grin.

"This is a pretty ticklish spot we're in," the iron man says. "I'm separated from my wife. Susan is separated from her husband. Sure, we're allowed to go out, but technically we're both still married. What do you want me to say? That she's a very fine actress?"

You know that. What you'd like to know is whether or not he and Susan have any plans. How friendly are they?

An actor whose conduct has always been exemplary, Jeff says honestly, "I'm not qualified to talk about anyone's future except my own. Right now, my wife Marge is shopping around for a lawyer, so I can say definitely that in the future I'll be divorced. After that, who knows?"

According to the newspapers, Jeff and Susie Hayward are a big romance. Supposedly, they were high school sweethearts and now that they are both in Hollywood and both getting divorces, they are taking up where they left off in Brooklyn twenty years ago.

Jeff smiled. (Continued on page 64)

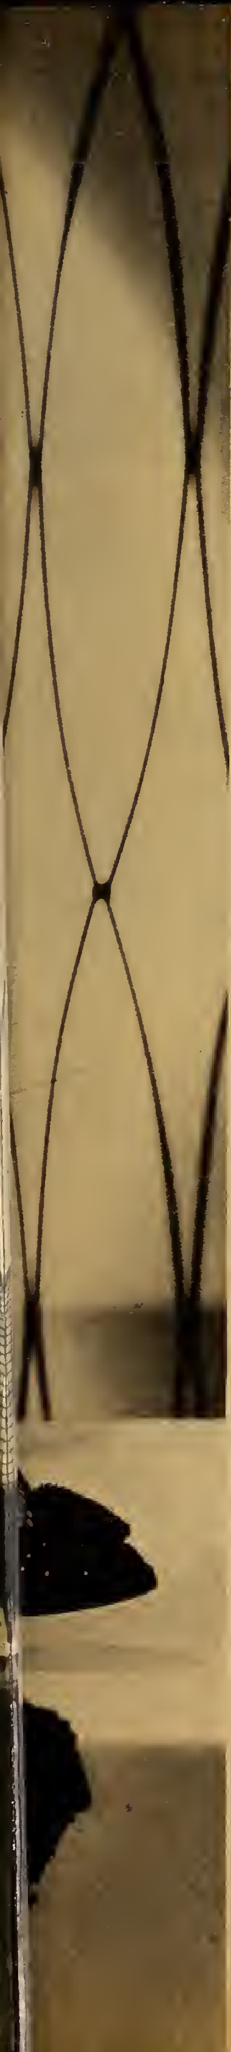
AVA AND FRANK

tell the truth to Louella Parsons



Behind the mocking headlines is the true and tragic story of the Sinatras— too much in love to tell each other so!

"I'd give up my career and anything else to be with him," Ava says. But she failed to appear at his Sands opening, claiming he had not invited her. To Frank's anger and dismay, she consulted a lawyer.

A tragic-eyed clown, Frank said goodbye to fellow-workers in Las Vegas, returned to Hollywood—and separation announcements.

■ If Ava Gardner had only picked up the telephone and talked to Frank Sinatra, or if Frankie had overcome that innate stubbornness and said, "Let's forget it, darling. We love each other," Frankie would not have been in such a state that he landed in Mount Sinai Hospital and Ava wouldn't have consulted a lawyer and threatened divorce.

But this was much too simple a procedure for two people who have always chosen the hard way and let their quarrels become public knowledge. The night before Frankie's doctor put him into a New York hospital, he was in a state bordering on a nervous breakdown. He was so bitterly depressed that he told me he didn't care about his career. He wanted to give it up. He didn't care whether he lived or died. Strangely enough, it was the first time he hadn't berated Ava since their separation. On the contrary, he told me what a great girl she is. But he couldn't understand why she had accepted a picture in Rome that would again put miles between them.

In Hollywood Ava was just as sick and unhappy as Frank but she confided to a close friend that she couldn't stand any more and it was for her own health and peace of mind that she decided she must leave Frankie even though she adored him. So she accepted The Barefoot Contessa that would take her miles away.

But when she heard that Frankie was sick she telephoned him three times—and he rushed to the coast to see her. If they make up again, how long will it last? No one on earth can possibly answer that baffling question.

I was in Las Vegas twice while Frank was singing at the Sands Hotel at that fabulous resort which is becoming the entertainment center (Continued on page 74)

Jane's strange interlude

"Even when they dance," a columnist said, "they seem to be putting on an act." Later, in public, they had nothing to say to each other.

Jane and Gene destroyed two homes, and did it all for love. But now the idyll seems over and Hollywood is asking, "How long is a temporary goodbye?"

BY ALICE FINLETTER

■ The prophets of gloom and the countless members of the I-Told-You-So League have gathered to mourn the passing of the Jane Powell-Gene Nelson love affair. Undoubtedly, you have read their comments

"That Gene Nelson! Why doesn't he marry the girl?"

"Right at the start, I knew no good would come of it."

"I feel sorry for Jane, but it serves her right for leaving her husband."

"Maybe Geary Steffen wasn't glamorous, but at least he loved her. How long can she say the same about this dancing fellow?" That's the kid of post-mortem currently making the rounds in Hollywood.

At this writing, even though they have separated, Jane Powell and Gene Nelson are still in love. Eventually, if this love stands the test of time and the test of separation, they hope to get married.

"We have decided," Jane announced through her studio last November, "that this is the best thing for both of us at this time. We hope that the situation can be worked out, but in the meantime we both will be seen with other people."

The significant part of the announcement is, "We hope that the situation can be worked out."

No one said, "This situation is hopeless. Gene and I have decided that we're finished. We have no intention of seeing each other again."

All of this means simply that Jane and Gene have decided on a trial separation to test their love.

They must find out what their lives would be like without each other. They want to date other people in order to evaluate the constancy of their affection

(Continued on page 70)

IT TOOK A SPECIAL BATHING SUIT FOR TERRY, A STRONG PAIR OF LUNGS FOR BOB, AND AN AQUA LUNG TO a fish-eye view of TERRY & BOB

story and pictures by Peter Gowland

Modern Screen sank a photographer, camera, stars and all, to get these amazing and exclusive underwater color shots.

KEEP THE PHOTOGRAPHER DOWN—BUT NOW WHO SAYS IT'S IMPOSSIBLE TO ACT UNDER WATER?

■ This is the story of one of the wackiest days I ever spent with a couple of actors. Wacky, but instructive, exciting and a lot of fun. I am a photographer, probably because I once wanted to be an actor. After 20th Century-Fox and Universal-International looked at the tests they'd made of me, they turned thumbs down. I had enough sense to pick up a camera to earn a living.

But I still like actors, which leads me to this day with Terry Moore and Bob Wagner. As you know, they appear together in a whale of a good picture called Beneath The Twelve-Mile Reef. When I ran into them in the studio commissary one day, I kidded them about not being able to play their scenes under water.

"Don't be ridiculous," Terry said. "It's just that the love scenes in the script were set above the ocean. We could do the same scenes under water if anybody wanted us to."

So I took up her challenge. It was a lot of work, but I'm right proud of the results. First I had to send up to San Francisco for a French Aqua Lung. Then I had to find the exactly right

(Continued on page 74)

When the shouting was over, John and Chata passed each other without speaking. Accompanying the Duke as he left the Los Angeles courtroom Passibly next Duchess of Wayne is Peruvian beauty Pilar Pallette, John's constant date.

A MYSTERIOUS LAST-MINUTE CHANGE IN BATTLE PLANS BROUGHT

■ A few months ago when the sensational divorce trial of John "Duke" Wayne versus Esperanza "Chata" Wayne began, it was expected that this headlined case would last at least five weeks, so extensive, lurid and detailed was the planned mudslinging. Both Chata's lawyer and Duke's lawyer had filed lengthy bills of particulars.

Chata said that Duke, after drinking to excess, had frequently struck her without provocation. Wayne said his wife was all wet, that she "has consumed intoxicating liquors in such amounts that she frequently became intoxicated and was thus prevented a great portion of the time from properly attending to the customary household duties ordinarily performed by a wife."

The lank, lusty, forty-six-year-old actor also charged his wife with:

1. Staying out all night.
2. Sleeping until three and four in the afternoon.

What really happened at the John Wayne Divorce

BEHIND CLOSED DOORS!

By Imogene Collins

where, on October 8, Judge Allen Ashburn awarded each party a divorce, were John's business manager, Bo Roos, and press agent, Bev Barnett.

THE WAYNES' FIVE-WEEK SIEGE DOWN TO A THREE-DAY SKIRMISH.

3. Spending his money on drinks for strange men.
4. Gambling in Las Vegas to all hours of the morning and then returning home with swollen ankles.
5. Falsely accusing him of striking her.
6. Impolite, discourteous behavior.
7. Periodic intoxication.
8. Extravagance and viciousness.
9. Against his protests and without justification, walking out on their marriage for long periods of time.
10. Drinking bouts and fisticuffs with her mother.
11. Feigning illness and claiming to be in a highly nervous and exhausted state.
12. Staying out all night and returning the next morning with grass stains on her clothes.
13. Entertaining a male guest for one week at their residence in California while Mr. Wayne was working on a (Continued on page 66)

Definitely ex-Duchess of Wayne, Chata lost Cadillac, was reduced to driving truck.

There's nothing wrong with sex appeal, according to Jane. It keeps the world going 'round—and Jane out of the kitchen!

BY JANE WILKIE

She and Bob Waterfield are opposites who attract!

catch ME cookin'!

■ Editors usually send men to interview Jane Russell. Naturally, they like to give the boys a break. But this time MODERN SCREEN sent me. "You've never met Russell? Good. We'd like to know how she impresses another woman. And while you're at it," they said, their eyes gleaming, "find out how she keeps that sex appeal routine rolling along with the years."

"The years" alluded to the ten that have gone by since The Outlaw was released. With the splash of billboard advertising for that film, Jane Russell's name became familiar throughout America. (Continued on page 77)

the waiting game

For more than a year the gossips have asked, "Why don't you leave Greg?" But it isn't divorce Greta thinks about.

A fond father, Greg asked Greta to send their oldest son, 9-year-old Jonathan, to join him in Paris for the Christmas holidays. Greta cheerfully agreed to send him.

BY COLETTE MAURIER

■ According to Hollywood legend the typical actor's wife is a spoiled, fatuous, self-centered zany who has little to do but waste her husband's money on an ever-growing army of leeches—psychiatrists, interior decorators, and cloying perfume salesmen. She is the kind of grating chatterbox Billie Burke used to play so perfectly in the movies.

Admittedly, many motion picture stars have mates who still fall into this caricatured category, but lately Hollywood has produced a new kind of wife—brainy, tactful, understanding, and incredibly tolerant.

Mrs. Gary Cooper, Mrs. Ray Milland, Mrs. Jerry Lewis, Mrs. Mario Lanza, and Mrs. Gregory Peck are all cases in point.

It's been a year now that Greta Peck has been separated from her wandering husband. In those twelve months she has been subjected to the most aggravating and constant questioning about her marriage.

Week after week, friends, well-intentioned acquaintances, and travelers from Europe have been urging her to divorce her tall, gaunt, Lincolnesque actor of a husband.

"How can you let him play around with all those European beauties," somebody asked Greta, "and not do anything about it?"

"Pride, if nothing else," they tell her, "should compel you to file for a divorce."

"What point is there in perpetuating the fiction that in the end everything will work out?"

A few months ago, just before she left for Mexico with Valery and Donald Nelson for a much-needed vacation, Greta gave a small party for Audrey Hepburn with whom Greg had starred in Roman Holiday.

Following the party, one gossip turned to another's receptive ear. "I wonder if Greta knows about all those dinners Audrey and Greg supposedly had in Sam Spiegle's London (Continued on page 72)

Located in new La Brea Towers, the Hestons' apartment overlooks the Sierra Madre mountain range and Hollywood's famous Farmers' Market.

FOUR HOMES IN FOUR STATES HAVE CHUCK AND LYDIA—BUT

HESTON'S IVORY TOWER

by Marva Peterson

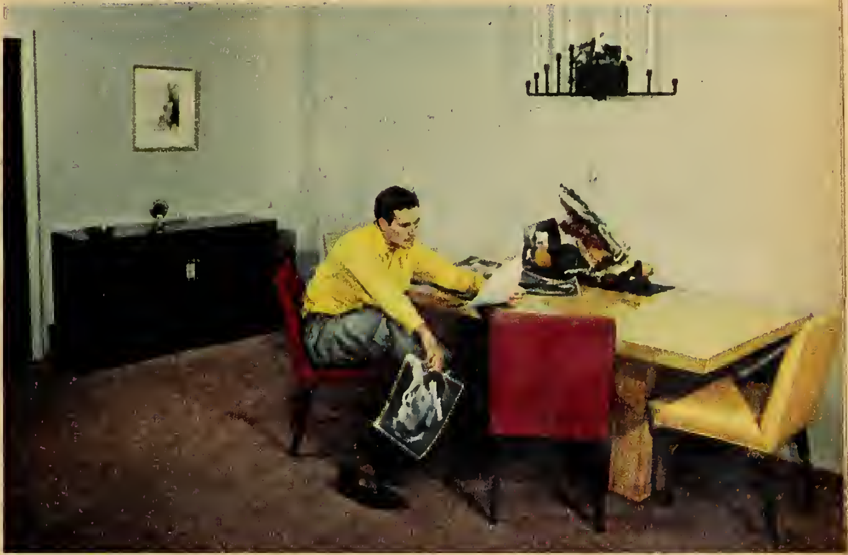
Designed by Gladys Miller, who decorated Washington, D. C.'s Blair House, solidly constructed livingroom furniture was created especially for the huge room. Gladys accented neutral sofas and draperies with bright cushions, hassocks.



The birch dining table was a gift from two friends—actors, whose hobby is cabinet design. The two-color chairs were Lydia's idea, and the simple framed Toulouse-Lautrec original lithograph on the wall is the Hestons' prized possession.

HOUSE OF THE MONTH

IT'S THE HOLLYWOOD APARTMENT THAT HAS THE LIVED-IN LOOK.

■ In Hollywood, there is a relative newcomer who has four homes. His name is Charlton Carter Heston. To the unsophisticated, this broad-shouldered young giant lumbering down Hollywood Boulevard, might give the impression of a young man taking a day off from his milking stool.

Dressed in T-shirt, blue jeans, and moccasins, his customary get-up, Heston looks like a charter member of the Marlon Brando Institute for Sartorial Splendor.

In short, he gives the impression of not owning a bean, and yet he pays rent on a Tudor City apartment overlooking the East River in midtown New York, more rent on a beautifully furnished duplex around the corner from the Ambassador East in Chicago, taxes on a hunting lodge and 1,388 acres of timberland along the Osaba River in northern Michigan, and still more rent for a two-bedroom apartment in Hollywood.

Heston at thirty is a movie star. He has (Continued on next page)

The ultra-modern, convenient kitchen is a necessity for Chuck's all-too-frequent bachelor life when actress Lydia is out of town with a show.

MORE ➤

Chuck and Lydia have spent six of their ten happily-married years apart—usually at opposite ends of the continent. They need and keep homes in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles for under $500 a month.

The dark, Chuck-resistant corduroy spread allows him to read and listen to music comfortably stretched out. The shantung draperies are repeated all over the apartment for spacious appearance.

The spare bedroom serves as a den for Chuck; provides a quiet place for him and Lydia to learn lines. The turquoise cotton covers turn the daybeds into couches when the Hestons have no houseguests.

HESTON'S IVORY TOWER continued

appeared in Greatest Show on Earth, Ruby Gentry, Pony Express, Arrowhead, The Savage, Naked Jungle, Legend Of The Incas, and a few others. His latest apartment is typical of Hollywood apartments leased by successful young actors, and it's the most dramatic and glamorous of the four Heston residences.

You may well ask why a new actor like Charlton needs four homes for his T-shirts.

In addition to T-shirts, Heston owns a wife and an original Toulouse-Lautrec lithograph. This wife, whose name is Lydia Clark, is also in the acting business. Maybe you caught her with Chuck in Atomic City and Scalpel. Right now she's in Chicago starring in a play, The Seven Year Itch.

Before that she starred in several other plays, all of which took her away from her husband.

In the ten years of their marriage, the Hestons have spent approximately six years away from each other. That's why they need all of these apartments.

Charlton and Lydia were college sweethearts at Northwestern University, both scholarship students majoring in dramatics. Lydia's first impression of her husband-to-be was that he should be returned to the cage from which he'd escaped.

Heston, however, who has a primitive sort of appeal and a persistent approach of rustic simplicity, extended the coed a carte blanche marriage proposal.

"I just love you all the time," he once told her, "and whenever you get ready to marry, just say the word."

In 1944 the Army Air Forces had laid claim to the Heston bulk and shipped him off to Greensboro, North Carolina, for a little basic training. Lydia, in a moment of common sense she has never regretted, decided to make life easier for the boy and for herself.

She became his wife. A two-day honeymoon, and Charlton returned to the base and was subsequently shipped off to the Aleutian Islands, nobody's favorite Army location.

Chuck Heston says now that dreams of his Lydia kept him safe and sane, and when he returned to Chicago at the war's end, he was heavier and healthier than ever before. "Only I didn't have any money, so we took a small furnished flat and lived on about ten bucks a week."

Acting jobs weren't numerous in the midwest, so the young couple moved on to New York. They rented a small, cold-water tenement flat in Hell's Kitchen—"it cost us thirty a month and we kept it until the building was condemned"—and then started making the rounds looking for work.

Chuck landed a job in Boston with a play, The Leaf And The Bough. Lydia was signed for the Chicago run of Detective Story.

The Leaf And The Bough had a short run and Chuck returned to the New York coldwater flat. Lydia stayed on in Chicago for over a year, and it was during that year that Chuck Heston caught on in television.

Hal Wallis offered him a job in Hollywood just as Detective Story ended in Chicago and Lydia returned to New York. This exit-and-entrance schedule is an occupational hazard when there are two acting careers in one family.

"Neither of us pretends it's the greatest way to live," Lydia points out. "But Chuck has his work, and I have mine, and somehow geography always stands in the way."

A larger family might take care of geography and do away with the necessity of having apartments in New York and Chicago, but the Hestons haven't got around to children, yet.

THE HOLLYWOOD apartment started with Toulouse-Lautrec. The Hestons' Lautrec lithograph is a sketch of the great actress Sarah Bernhardt playing the role of the tragic character, Phédre. Chuck and Lydia were so thrilled when they found themselves in actual possession of the work that they decided to furnish a Hollywood apartment around it.

"Ever since I saw my first Lautrec in college," Heston recalls, "I've wanted to own one. Then when I really started studying drama I realized that Lautrec was one of the few really great artists who spent a lot of time painting actors and actresses. Just as Degas immortalized the ballet, Lautrec immortalized the theatre. To me he has always represented the perfect alliance of art and theatre. I don't want to sound hammy about it, but owning one of his originals represents a milestone of accomplishment in my life."

The Hestons bought their one great picture with the help of Chuck's agent, Maynard Morris, who for years now has been collecting the works of the French artists, especially the impressionists.

A few years ago when his salary began to hover above the $100-a-week mark, Chuck casually approached Morris. "Maynard," he said, "if you ever run across a reasonable Lautrec, let me know."

Six months later, Morris called Heston to his office on the pretext of reading a script. Instead, he showed the actor the Lautrec. "Take it home," he urged, "and show it to Lydia. Try living with it for a few weeks. Don't rush into buying something you may not want to keep for a lifetime."

Once Lydia glimpsed the beautiful little picture, there was no turning back. The Hestons not only bought it immediately but decided that the time had come to stop traipsing around Hollywood from one hotel to another. What they wanted and needed was an apartment they could furnish in their own way. You don't want to hang an original in a hotel room.

Last January they moved into the La Brea Towers, an enormous housing project erected by the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company. These "Towers" are tremendous apartment houses unlike anything Los Angeles had ever seen.

They are the most un-California-like buildings in California. They look as if they belong in New York or Chicago. They were built tall (Continued on page 72)

Every minute flames with furious action!
Walt Disney's
Rob Roy
THE HIGHLAND ROGUE

Rob Roy struck back at tyranny to save his name, his honor and his people—a true story that became a deathless legend.

REBEL, LOVER, OUTLAW—that was Rob Roy, chief of the fighting MacGregor clan. Fearless Highland warrior, he outfought armies. His true exploits dwarfed the deeds of fiction, kindled the flame of freedom in oppressed men. The story that stirred imaginations for two centuries now becomes a spectacle of rugged grandeur—supreme entertainment!

Torn from his bride on their wedding night, Rob Roy risks the vengeance of his captors to return to her arms.

Starring
RICHARD TODD and GLYNIS JOHNS
An All Live-Action Picture
COLOR BY TECHNICOLOR

Produced by Perce Pearce • Directed by Harold French
Screenplay by Lawrence E. Watkin
Distributed by RKO Radio Pictures
COPYRIGHT WALT DISNEY PRODUCTIONS

Dig this crazy Elaine Stewart!

She takes great pains to avoid the men who fall for her because she's afraid she might meet the right man too soon!

BY JACK WADE

get lost, cupid!

■ Describing her role in an early picture (A Slight Case Of Larceny) Elaine Stewart says, "I fall in love with Mickey Rooney—but not for long." And she sighs thankfully.

Elaine means to cast no reflection on Mickey. She's just shunning the state of emotional bondage known as love. She wants no part of it right now, not even the faintest ache. Serving tea the other afternoon, she remarked, "Marriage—that's all I need! Just as my career is getting started! Please! Let me have just a couple of years as I am."

She was holding a new brown teapot as she said this—holding it fondly. She loves the teapot as she loves everything about her one-flight up, one-bedroom apartment: its random layout, the warm walnut furniture pieces, the gay prints on the wainscoted walls, even the flower-decorated garbage can which she doesn't mind emptying herself. She loves them all; she reminds you of a bride in her new home.

She waves a scoffing hand at such a suggestion. "That's an illusion," she says. "Actually the apartment will help to keep me from becoming a bride for a while. It gives me a chance to express my domestic instincts without going domestic. At twenty-three a girl ought to be thinking of marriage. I'm thinking about it, all right. I'm thinking about avoiding it until I have had a chance to realize my investment—the years and the work I have put into becoming an actress.

"People simply don't take the ambitions of girls seriously unless those ambitions are matrimonial. I can remember my friends laughing at me and my hopes to get on the stage. 'You'll forget all about that when you grow up,' they said. 'You'll meet someone and suddenly the dream of acting will fly out of the window as love flies in.'

"Well, that's no way to treat a dream! Love can fly into my life and love (Continued on page 60)

REPORT FROM VENICE: HOW FARLEY MET THE COUNTESS—AND THE COUNTESS MET "THE WOLF."

the "wolf" at Farley's door

■ Venetian Countess Marina has twenty-eight pocketbooks, loaded.

Accessories to this strategic stuff are titian hair, aquamarine eyes to match her name, a treasure-stuffed palazzo in Venice, a house in Paris, one in Rome, a villa for summers in the Italian hills, another for hibernating among orange blossoms and Arabs in North Africa.

The Countess is not without shelter and carfare.

Of all her treasures, the one attracting the most attention now is her grey chromium, red-leathered convertible. It contains Mr. Farley Granger.

Placed in his service by the Countess, it enables him to highball from location each evening to the crested motorboat waiting in the Venetian canal.

Romances between well-muscled, well-heeled young Americans and European countesses, not so young nor so solvent, are old seasoning for Sunday supplements. This is no such horse-radish.

Countess Marina Cicogna-Mozzoni is nineteen; her title is authentic and she holds it in her own right along with her properties; she is related to the noble Volpi family which can shoot marbles with Rockefellers.

In her palatial bedroom a maid attends her rising in the morning and some twenty others stand by to (Continued on page 62)

ABOVE: Farley left Venice with a wave for the Countess, but a seat beside him for Janet Wolfe: friend, secretary, traveling companion and bouncer. LEFT: 19-year-old Countess Marina called Farley as soon as he arrived, "sick and friendless." He recovered quickly in her motorboat and palazzo. BELOW: But through it all, Janet never left his side.

by Herb Howe

For five years the O'Sheas dreamed of their family-to-be. But baby Mary Catherine was worth waiting for!

BY SUSAN TRENT

MAMA MAYO

■ There's a new baby out at the O'Shea place, name of Mary Catherine. There is also a new house, or practically a new one. For a creature who weighed in at seven pounds and three ounces, Miss O'Shea has displaced more than her share of plaster, roofing, bricks, paint and wallpaper.

It all began quite sensibly, in what Virginia and Mike prefer to think of as an orderly routine. When they got married back in 1947, they agreed that they wanted children but would prefer to postpone them until such time as their careers were on an imperturbable beam. This decision is wise in Hollywood, where careers are easier to build if they are not interrupted by maternity and the consequential inactivity. Said Mike, whose own place in show business had been established with the years, "We—meaning myself and any children we might have—will make way for Virginia's career. It has begun to go, and if anything interrupts it, her success might get sidetracked." In tune with this decision, he turned down a handful of movies in order to stick by Virginia while she was on her way up. When she went to Europe to make Captain Horatio Hornblower, Mike planned to go with her. "But—" his agent spluttered, "but we have pictures for you."

"You do 'em," said Mike. "I'm going to Europe with my old lady."

He believes that marriage thrives when the man and his wife stay together, instead of wandering around the world separately. So when Virginia had chances in Hollywood. Mike turned thumbs down on a couple of Broadway plays (one was the smash hit Goodbye, My Fancy) knowing that if they were successful he would be away from home for at least a year.

So it went, and (Continued on page 58)

"Girls are wonderful," Mike said. "Men want sons as sops to their own egos." "Boy or girl," Virginia added cheerfully, "I want a redhead."

The O'Sheas waited five years for their new daughter, Mary Catherine (Kate), whom they named after a pair of their favorite saints.

They did it the hard way

Some take lessons and some pose for beefcake art. But Rory Calhoun became a star
by letting his wife sing while he laid bricks for a living!

BY STEVE CRONIN

■ Ever work for two years for exactly no dollars and no cents? Ever been accused of ingratitude toward a friend? Been broke, in debt and had the credit company come after your automobile? Or still more incredible, have you ever tried to get out of a job paying you upward of $2500 a week?

Any one of these experiences is enough to send the average citizen into an emotional tailspin. For an actor to go through them all is sufficient to send him bleating to the plush offices of a Hollywood psychiatrist to have his emotional wounds bathed and treated.

It happened to Rory Calhoun—all but the psychiatrist.

He is not trying to be a real life hero when he says: "I guess I could go around finding reasons to snarl at the acting business. Granted, it seems a little crazy, but that goes for any profession, whether you're a sandhog or a sculptor. The breaks come and the breaks go. I've had my share of them, both good and lousy, and now I'm on what you might call my third movie career. There have been some mighty bitter years, and some wonderful comic opera experiences."

Perhaps you have read about Rory's romantic ranch which is situated near Ojai, California, about seventy miles north of Los Angeles. That (Continued on page 80)

Lita mounts Smoky when they ride mountain paths; her own horse, Duchess, is too spirited for trails.

Rory met Lita in Mocambo where she sang with the band. At the time, he couldn't picture her in jeans.

STORM over hollywood

Gale is the hottest star since the California fire—but it took a TV screen and My Little Margie to tell Hollywood so!

BY WILLIAM BARBOUR

Gale (then Josie Cottle) and husband Lee Bonnell won first prizes, movie contracts, new names and each other on a radio talent show.

As a child, she had heard the phrase, "God is your conscience." She had a very active conscience. Whenever she did anything wrong retribution came not in two weeks or two years, but instantly. God seemed to be right there when she went astray, for who else would have found her out so quickly? It was quite natural to acquire the idea that He was never far away. From that idea, the habit of talking to Him was just a logical step, it seemed to her.

The first time little Lucille smoked a cigarette she got sick on the second puff, sick as she never had been in her life. In her earliest attempt to run away from home, the very first person she met was a woman on her way to see Mrs. Ball.

There were other quick failures. Once she had just got out of the house only to have the year's biggest thunderstorm break over her head. No wonder she began to feel that He was right at her elbow always, quick to see when she had a crazy idea and even quicker to make sure she didn't carry it too far.

This youthful conception of God's proximity is still with her, but today she is doing something about it. She is taking a step even closer to Him. By the time this is read, or soon afterward, she will have formally joined the church. Not the church into which she was born, but the church toward which, by marriage and blood ties, she has been moving for some time. Events have proved to her that its spiritual comforts are powerful, its shelter necessary to her. She firmly believes that her happy wifehood, her long desired motherhood, are closely and inextricably intertwined with the faith she is now embracing.

UNHAPPINESS first came into her life when she was four years old. Her father died. The shock and sorrow of her mother caused a real illness and for some time she could not handle the burden of maintaining a home. Lucille was placed in the care of an elderly relative, a woman whose ideas were still those of nineteenth century Europe. She meant well, but under her old-fashioned restrictions, Lucy withered.

Play was sinful. So, certainly was vanity, even if it was but the natural vanity of a little girl. Any boisterousness, any impetuosity or craving for fun was interpreted simply as a sign of nervousness which required, and got, suppression.

She did not like to see Lucy look in the mirror. Girls would get wrong ideas about themselves in this way, she said. She didn't favor Lucy's playing with other children and restricted it severely. Whenever she was active at all, whenever she was caught running or jumping, Lucy was set to cleaning house. This was the sensible way to use up excess energy, her guardian declared. She frowned upon sudden joys.

She thought surprises were not good for a little girl. When other relatives planned a surprise party for Lucy, she told her about it in advance so it wouldn't be too big a surprise!

Lucille was resentful then, but she doesn't resent this treatment now. She still thinks it was wrong, but she can understand the reasoning behind it. In the old country, where custom established that girls could look forward to becoming chattel wives and nothing more when they grew up, they were prepared for a life that their mothers knew would never be too gay. It was considered wise to minimize expectations. Lucy's expectations were minimized plenty. When Mrs. Ball re-established her home and Lucy went back, she was a mess.

She was withdrawn, frightened both of other children and of grownups, and always possessed of an urge to find a corner where she could curl up and not bother anyone. Yet, her return to her mother's house was in a sense something she knew would happen. She had talked to God steadily, asking not why he wasn't going to make a change in her life, but, with all confidence, why it was taking so long.

Mrs. Ball worked hard (and still does) trying to overcome the pretty bad sense of "old country" inferiority Lucille had picked up while she lived with her relatives. She filled the house with other children and kept it filled as Lucille grew up, so there would be young people for her to talk and live with all the time. When she saw that Lucille was interested in plays, she helped organize them—in the house, at school, anywhere people would fall in with such an idea. All of her children had music lessons. They had a piano, violin, and cello going all the time.

Whatever their problems, she was always in there, helping her children to lick them. It was wonderful, and, to Lucille's mind, an illustration of God at work. She knew it was God because, greater than anything else was the fact that her mother had recovered her spirits and the zest for life she had lost when their father died. After years of seeming to be lifeless, she had turned into a person who seemed to be touched with glory—and such glory must be divine, Lucille figured.

Lucille's future, which had been steadily stitched shut before, was now being thrown wide open. One day she tried to tell her mother what she thought that future would be like. She really painted it with extravagant colors.

"Do you think it will really happen?" she asked her mother.

"Will happen?" she answered. "It is happening. You're living it right now in your heart and that's the best place to live anything. The best life in the world doesn't mean anything unless you feel it in your heart and once you feel it there it's exactly as if you have it!" Remembering, Lucille says, "I've never forgotten that in my work I must try to reach through to the hearts of people—the only place where it counts."

I SAW IT HAPPEN

I was thrilled and a bit awe-struck to meet the famous actress, cover girl, and Hollywood businesswoman, Anita Colby. She was as glamorous, beautiful, and brilliant as I had heard. But I was shocked when I noticed that the lovely lady bites her nails—right down to the quick!

Phyllis Warren
Sacramento, California

When Lucille was eleven she was already as tall as she is now, five feet, six inches. "All through high school I seemed to fascinate nobody but short guys. At dances I never had anyone to talk to—just heads of hair." So she fell into the habit of stooping to get down where the faces were.

BECAUSE of her height, because of her old feeling of inferiority (she says "maybe because it was true!") she had always considered herself an ugly duckling. All right, not the ugliest duckling, but no swan, just the same. She prayed about it but when the time came for Lucille Ball to go on the stage it didn't seem to her that any great change for the better had transpired. Whereupon a great thought was born in her busy head. "All right," she told herself, "if you are afraid you are going to be laughed at for trying to pass yourself off as a beauty, beat the world to it. Be a comedienne and go after the laughs.

As far as she can judge, the biggest difference a career makes in a girl's life is that she has four goals instead of three. In addition to seeking love, marriage and motherhood she has the prior (and in Lucille's case continuing) ambition to make good in her work. And the only difference that makes, as far as she can see, is that you have a busier time of it. But one thing is most important—work alone does not make up for the lack of the other three great essentials in a woman's life. Lucille Ball was not a fabulous success when she married Desi Arnaz, but already she knew that with each success and without love, life would be quite empty.

Marriage should mean parenthood, but for the Arnazes it didn't—not for twelve long years. This was certainly something to take up with God, and she did, but to no avail. As time passed, both Lucille and Desi fell into the conviction that they were not fated to have a baby; it just wasn't going to happen, that's all. That isn't an unusual attitude among unblessed married couples, as you may have noted. It is an oddly sad one, a feeling possessing both that somehow they have been shunted out of the mainstream of life and are living their time out in some little lost creek.

In her youth, Lucille had attended variously the English Lutheran, the Methodist and the Episcopalian churches. Desi was a Catholic. Because of that and because they were both on road engagements at the time of their marriage, the ceremony was a civil one. Nine years later they were married again—in the Catholic Church.

Lucille wanted the second ceremony. During all the years of their marriage, she had seen how much comfort Desi derived from his faith and could understand how much more the marriage would mean to him if it were a sacrament rather than a civil arrangement. But almost immediately, and without any intention then of assuming his faith, she felt the warmth of a great comfort. And something happened to their feeling that they would never have a child. It disappeared. They felt sure they would. And they did.

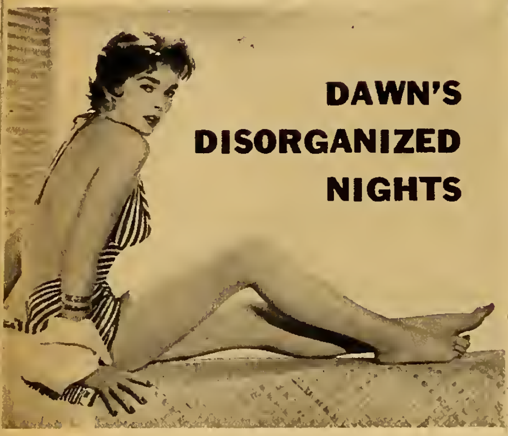
She says, "I am not proselyting, attempting to convert, nor preaching a revelation. I have always known that I could assume any faith if the underlying predication affirmed God. For me the chosen faith became Catholicism. Two years ago, my mother joined the Catholic Church. I am taking instructions now to follow in her footsteps. I think I made the final decision when our second child, Desi, Jr., was born. When I look at him, when I look at our firstborn, Lucie Desiree, I know that for them, and for myself, I am doing the right thing. I know our children came to us from the church. I say this fully realizing that physicians can supply another answer; that there may be a psychological explanation. The effect of having our marriage sanctified could have wrought physiological changes in both of us. But where else, and how else, could such changes have been brought about?"

When people ask Lucille Ball where she's from, she tells them she's a small town girl from Jamestown. Actually, she came from a town just outside Jamestown—Celoron—that Jamestown citizens used to call a "small town." Lucille's way from Celoron to the Arnaz ranch has been a long, wandering trail with some rough stretches here and there. It may still be rough ahead, but there will be no more wandering.

"I've picked a straight road now. And on it I walk with my husband and my children and all the loved ones of my family—all of us together." END

(Lucille Ball and Desi Arnaz are soon to be seen in MGM's The Long, Long Trailer.)

Be it ever so mixed-up, there's no place like Rome!



DAWN'S DISORGANIZED NIGHTS

■ With Hollywood's avenues and boulevards turned into miniature Romes and Parises by the influx of foreign sports cars, it seems only fair that the vias of the Italian capital should be populated by Hollywoodites. Most of these wandering stars are working in Italian films, though some are looking for work and others are just on a holiday.

A reporter on a European assignment, I spotted my first familiar face above a pair of gloves being purchased by Dawn Addams. Picture-making in Rome, Dawn told me, is far less regimented than in Hollywood. At home she is accustomed to working on a schedule; in Rome no one has ever heard of schedules. Pictures just grow. She laughed and admitted that while she has not gotten used to the disorganized days, she loves the disorganized nights.

I was inclined to agree. Evenings there are wonderful. Everybody goes to the Excelsior Hotel around nine o'clock for a drink before dinner. (That's right, the dinner hour is nine-thirty.) In the Excelsior bar you meet your friends from home who are looking for friends from home and a very pleasant evening develops, usually ending at someone's garden or at one of Rome's beautiful outdoor nightclubs.

That evening I saw Dawn again—at the Excelsior bar. William Lundigan came in, looked around, spotted her, went over and kissed her, sat down at her table. After a cocktail, they went out together. As she passed, Dawn stopped and muttered happily, "See what I mean?" I saw.

—Wanda Hale

mama mayo

(Continued from page 50) Miss Mayo eventually was contracted by Warner Brothers and became a fixed star. Five and a half years after their wedding, Mike and Virginia said, "Now is the time."

It happened just like that, as though they had written the order on a sales slip. To this day Mike looks in wonder at anyone who suggests that the O'Sheas were lucky to have their order filled so promptly. This was the way they had planned it, you see. Why shouldn't it happen?

So, things were going along just right. The baby would be born in November. That gave Virginia time to finish Devil's Canyon and Mike the opportunity to clear up some TV chores and make It Should Happen To You. Then all they had to do was sit and wait.

"We ought to get the space problem settled, though," said Virginia.

"Space problem?" said O'Shea. "A baby doesn't take up much space."

"Well, with your room and my room and the housekeeper's room, where shall we put him? Her?"

'Build a room."

"But where? The kitchen's on one side, and our rooms are too close to the property line to put it on that side, and if we put it on the back—"

"We'll build up," announced Mike. "Put on a room upstairs. The foundation should be able to take it."

From that moment, orderliness disappeared from the atmosphere, and a cloud of confusion rolled in. True, a baby doesn't take up much room, but as anybody knows who has remodeled a house, every stone unturned means another $500 worth of work. It began with the foundation. Mike's optimism about the strength of the existing one turned out to be a mistake, and a good deal of shoring up had to be done. This was followed by the problem of slicing off the roof. It had to be sliced low, or the second story would sit up so high that the whole house would look like a shoe box standing on end. So it was sliced so low that Mike and Virginia spent a week of evenings sitting in their livingroom and looking up at the stars. They lived in the diningroom, kitchen and bedrooms, skirting the hole in the middle, and thanking Providence that it doesn't rain in the California summer.

The chimney had to be raised nine feet, so they decided they might as well have the whole thing rebuilt with new brick. The new roof made the old roof look like a stray cat, so the entire thing was recovered. The entrance, in order to match the new facade of the house, was graced by a new porch, and Mike decided they might as well have new screens and new sashes all over the house. The addition had to be painted, spanking new, of course, so they repainted the whole house white.

They agreed that the room and bath upstairs wouldn't be the best place for a baby, that a baby should be downstairs. Mike relinquished his old room downstairs for the nursery and planned the new one upstairs for himself. Virgina's bedroom, redecorated in yellow and shades of brown, adjoins the nursery. This leaves Mike free to continue his night owl habits, reading into the wee hours, while Virginia hits the hay at her customary early hour.

MIDWAY through this Operation Upset, it occurred to them that insulation might be advisable. It would keep the neighborhood noises from the baby's ears and the baby's noises from the neighborhood ear. In addition to new roof, new ceiling, new foundation and new paint, they found themselves with new walls. And, naturally, new paint and new wallpaper.

It was a bumpy, busy four months of construction, and before it was over, Virginia announced that it was time for her appointment at St. John's Hospital. That was on the morning of November 12. On hearing the news Mike made a motion as if to leap for the garage and the car.

"Sit down," said Virginia. "Eat your breakfast."

Mike insists he was not nervous, that in any situation of impending danger he grows gimlet-eyed, his nerves become steel, that the adrenalin surges through his system, making him icy calm. He cannot, however, claim that he was as nonchalant as Mrs. O'Shea. Fatso, as he lovingly called her in those days, ate a substantial breakfast and sat around a while before she deigned to begin the trip. On the way they made occasional stops, at Virginia's request, to ogle the furniture in Wilshire store windows. She wanted a lamp for a table in the front window, and the lush lamp displays could not be ignored. Mike put his foot down when Virginia showed a willingness to tour an open house.

"Oi-veh!" he said, taking his hands from the steering wheel and holding the sides of his head.

"Couldn't we go in?" suggested Virginia. "There's plenty of time."

"No," said Mr. O'Shea, who was silently calling on his system for a fresh supply of adrenalin.

At the hospital they found a substantial group of reporters who had been notified by Virginia's studio that the event was about to take place. The collective press was one jump ahead of a fit. Virginia swirled calmly past, with Mike trailing.

Mike spent almost every minute with his wife before she went into the delivery room. He used the remaining few minutes to case the joint. There were signs here and there which read, "No Admittance," but no one seemed to care, so Mr. O'Shea passed blithely by them and under them. The long row of labor rooms leading to the delivery room sheltered several women in the same boat with Virginia. In spite of their condition, some of these patients took time out to notice that Mike O'Shea was scooting around the corridor. Mike is a gregarious guy, and summoned by some of these damsels in distress, he trotted happily into their respective rooms and chatted briefly with them. As Mike says, "A maternity ward in a hospital is like a jail or the Army—everybody there is everybody else's friend." Nevertheless, he was shaking his head at the fact that he'd been asked for his autograph. Of all places!

VIRGINIA was wheeled into the delivery room shortly before seven o'clock that evening. The doctor, leaving Mike, shook hands and said cheerily, "Well, this is it."

"Don't be nervous," grinned Mike, "whatever you do. Everything's going to to be all right."

It was, Mike says, the greatest performance of his life.

At the doctor's suggestion, he went back to Virginia's room to wait. It may have been an eternity to Mike, but by Greenwich mean time, it really wasn't long before a nurse came in and told him his daughter had been born. Mike went down the hall to the waiting room where the press gang was sitting, minus fingernails. He wore a smug expression and rocked on his heels several minutes, building suspense. Finally somebody giggled nervously, "What's new, Mike?"

"It's a girl," he announced, and when the reporters, half of whom were women, buckled into a mass of sentiment, Mike fled.

He scurried down the hall toward the nursery, and posted himself where he couldn't be seen. By this time he knew the layout and he was sure that the next baby to be admitted to the nursery would be Mary Catherine O'Shea. It was a name chosen by Virginia and Mike as a salute to the grand old names. When they had discussed the problem they had concurred on the fact that people nowadays tend toward embroidery. Names like Snap, Clutch and Katch seem to be fashionable for boys, and girls are being snowed under with tags like Dawn, Sundown and April. The O'Sheas wanted something simple, a name that was a name and not a cereal slogan. "Mary Catherine" seemed to fill the bill. Where did the choice come from? "From nowhere," said Mike, "except from a couple of pretty good saints." Besides, they figured that eventually their child will be called Kate O'Shea, a monicker that tickles Mike because it is the name of the only illustrious ancestor he could dig up—the colleen who was the sweetheart of Charles Parnell, Irish Nationalist leader of years gone by.

Standing near the door, he didn't have long to wait before a nurse wheeled a newborn infant toward him. Mike stepped into her path. "Whose little demon is that?" he inquired.

The nurse stiffened. "This is no demon. This is a beautiful little girl—the O'Shea baby."

Pop O'Shea grinned. "She's mine. Let me have a little look at her." He noted with pleasure that the baby had red hair. This would please Virginia. All these months she had said that, boy or girl, she hoped the baby would be a redhead. Once the nurse had taken the baby inside the warm nursery, she unwrapped her and held up a naked Kate O'Shea for her father's inspection through a big window. Across the baby's derrière was a strip of cloth labeled, "Girl O'Shea". Mike smiled. "Okay," he said. "We'll keep her."

I SAW IT HAPPEN

In Los Angeles on vacation, we saw a grey convertible running right up on the sidewalk. A policeman was standing nearby. We were so curious about who could get away with that kind of thing, that we backed up to look. And there was Spencer Tracy, parked on the sidewalk.

Carmen Allred
Ogden, Utah

He went back to Virginia's room to wait for her, and when she was brought through the door he kissed her and she said, "Mike—she's a redhead." Mike told Virginia he had already seen their daughter and that her first performance had been a strip-tease.

He wandered around a bit after that, visiting various new acquaintances who had become mothers since his first meeting with them in the labor rooms. Being Mike O'Shea, he sat on the beds and shook hands and asked about their babies—and the husbands sat there and beamed. He went back and told Virginia about it—"What a place, a hospital!" When she laughed at him he suggested that if any strange men came into her room, she should throw them out.

The next morning Mike mixed cement for the patio with the air of a man not quite in this world, and for the next few days kept himself so busy with mortar, brick and flagstone between hospital visits that he managed to talk himself out of noticing the emptiness of the house. Mrs. Young, the baby's nurse, arrived before Homecoming Day, and he bragged a bit to her about having a daughter. "Girls are wonderful," he said. "Boys—well, men want sons as sops to their own egos. Give me a girl any day."

He didn't give Virginia a gift. The O'Sheas are not gift-giving people, at least on holidays or occasions. They pick up assorted surprises for each other on odd days of the year, and dislike any custom that makes people obligated to buy presents. When a baby shower was suggested for Virginia, Mike had said, "No, please—she wouldn't like that." Nor did he give cigars after Mary Catherine's arrival, or send out announcements. "That's a corny bit," he said. "It's like saying 'Look at me—Look at us.' It's nothing special to anybody but us." And so, when asked if he gave Virginia a gift, he smiled and said, "I gave her the baby." That is Mike's way of saying that if a man gives his wife love and devotion all through his life, it is the best gift he can give.

One day, several weeks after Virginia and Mary Catherine were settled in the "new" house, Mother O'Shea had a thought.

"You want more, don't you, Mike? More children, I mean?"

"Sure," said O'Shea.

"There will be a space problem."

"Oi-veh!" said Mike.

"What would we do?"

"This one," said Mike, "this one room cost us as much as a complete five-room house. Next time we'll build same, and make it all bedrooms to accommodate the influx."

"Yes, dear," said Virginia. END

Flame-Glo "TRIPLE-STAY" LIPSTICK makes the difference!

Discover for yourself the excitement of "Triple-Stay"...the thrill of more seductive, more alluring lips that stay lovely the Flame-Glo way. In fact, beauty's at your lips three times longer than with ordinary indelible or no-smear lipsticks! You'll love the velvet-smooth Fastenol-blended formula...the dazzling range of shades...the moist color-brilliance that's sealed to your lips till you remove it. Try Flame-Glo today.

3 lipsticks only 25¢
To win new friends for Flame-Glo ...3 convenient purse size lipsticks in different shades for only 25¢...each creating a new mood, a lovelier you every moment of the day. PLUS...exciting booklet of hints on lip beauty.

SPECIAL INTRODUCTORY OFFER

Rejuvia Beauty Labs Inc., Dept. O
P.O. Box 39, N.Y. 12, N.Y.

Please send me your special introductory offer of 3 Flame-Glo Lipsticks, and Booklet on Lip Beauty all for 25¢. (Coin only) Check coloring.

☐ Blonde ☐ Brunette ☐ Titian

Name..
Address..
City........................Zone..........State....................

(This Offer Good in U.S.A. Only)

Flame-Glo®
"TRIPLE-STAY" LIPSTICK

FLAME-GLO IS SOLD EXCLUSIVELY IN CHAIN VARIETY STORES

Ann Pinkham reports*

"Painful cramps of monthly periods stopped

OR AMAZINGLY RELIEVED

in 3 out of 4 cases in doctors' tests!"

"IT'S WONDERFUL news," says Ann Pinkham, "for women and girls who suffer from those functionally-caused cramps, backaches, headaches and 'no-good' feelings of menstruation . . . who feel upset and irritable on certain particular days. In doctors' tests, Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound or Tablets gave complete or striking relief of such distress in 3 out of 4 cases, even on first day of period!"

Yes! Lydia Pinkham's is thoroughly modern in action . . . exerts a calming effect on the uterus without the use of pain-deadening drugs. Its effectiveness is known to millions.

Take Lydia Pinkham's regularly . . . and see if you don't avoid the feelings of tension and weakness that precede your period . . . as well as the cramps and pain of "those days."

Get either the liquid Compound . . . or the new, improved Tablets with added iron — so convenient to carry and easy to take.

25¢ Ann Pinkham Booklet . . . FREE!

Easily worth $1! New booklet (illustrated in color —over 5000 words) tells all about menstruation— answers questions authoritatively, simply. Explains mysteries of female system. Tells what to expect in change of life. For free copy write ANN PINKHAM, 821 Cleveland St., Lynn, Mass. Mailed in plain envelope. Not for children. Offer closes June 11, 1954.

Ann Pinkham, modern-day voice of Lydia Pinkham.*

EASY WAY TO GET $60 IN YOUR SPARE TIME!

Sell Only 100 Boxes New, Exclusive Frostone PERSONALIZED Stationery

Nothing like it! Exclusive 225-piece ensemble of quality stationery with distinctive 3-line customer's imprint sells like magic. You make up to 100% cash profit on big line of new, different All-Occasion Greeting Cards. EXCLUSIVE Gold-Stamped Playing Cards, Pencils, Napkins, other money-makers. No experience needed. Get assortments on approval, 4 imprint portfolios FREE! Write TODAY!

WRITE FOR SAMPLES

HERALD GREETINGS, 1702 Payne, Dept. 25-A, Cleveland 14, Ohio

$10 EACH FOR CERTAIN LINCOLN PENNIES

Certain Indianheads $50.00. Send 10c for NEW BOOKLET listing coins wanted and prices we pay.

LINCOLN COIN CO.

Dept. 284 GLENDALE, ARIZONA

Want a HOME?

Before you choose, be sure to GET THE FACTS about Schult mobile homes. Write or wire Dept. 6702

SCHULT CORP., ELKHART, IND.

SCHULT TRAILERS

Callouses

Pain, Tenderness, Burning Are Quickly Relieved

You'll quickly forget you have painful callouses, burning or tenderness on the bottom of your feet, when you apply Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads. Thin, soft, wonderfully soothing, cushioning, protective. Separate Medications included for quickly removing callouses. Try them!

Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

get lost, cupid

(Continued from page 46) can fly right out again—until I'm ready for it!"

The most sensational brunette to hit Hollywood since Ava Gardner came west from Carolina, Elaine is getting some pained reactions around Hollywood. According to her escorts, she is not kidding.

Among the men who have taken out Elaine Stewart it is pretty well agreed that her dark beauty has an inscrutable "Mona Lisa" quality to it; the better she likes you the less chance you may have of ever dating her again. Any time a friendship gives signs of growing into a romance she makes sure it doesn't. She has admitted it. "I get to thinking I don't want it to go too far and from that point on I shy away, I guess."

As one man reported after he had taken her to a few parties and considered himself a suitor for her hand: "Suddenly I got closed out." Yet this man is better off than some notable eligibles who can't even get a date with her.

More than one fellow has been driven to attempt lyrical appreciation of Elaine's beauty. A rich Hollywood business man felt sure he would win her favor by sending a lovely, gold-backed mirror together with a quatrain about ". . . beauty should see herself in beauty." Elaine returned the mirror, automatically rejecting the poem. When he telephoned her for a reason she gave him an old fashioned answer: "I don't know you well enough to accept presents from you."

Elaine's stand against romantic hanky-panky at a time when she is getting her career under way was apparent from the moment she arrived in Hollywood. It just took a little time for the word to get around. The first male star she met (and a boy she still likes even if it isn't going to go any further than that) was Scott Brady. The circumstances of their meeting were not original. Elaine had been brought to a party by her first agent and was standing alone for a moment when Scott introduced himself to her. There ensued an exchange of dialogue so dull that they both cringe when recalling it. Here's the way it went, word for word.

"I'm Scott Brady. What's your name? I can't believe I don't know you."

"Elaine Stewart."

"Where've you been keeping yourself?" (He stopped the question there—he didn't say ". . . all my life.")

"Around."

"What's your telephone number?"

"It wouldn't interest you."

Scott looked at her as if she were crazy and assured her, "I'll get it!"

Elaine never gave Scott her number and he did get it—through studio connections. He phoned her at least a dozen times before she consented to have lunch with him one day. But from that day to this, when Elaine has control of the conversation, they talk only about the business of acting and the conducting of one's professional life in Hollywood.

When Elaine faced the problem of changing studios (from Hal Wallis to MGM) which eventually became a problem of changing agents, too, it was Scott who came to her rescue and introduced her to her present agent, Johnny Darrow. Darrow, it might be mentioned, is a presentable and successful man, still in his forties, who finds it no hardship to escort his beautiful client to Hollywood affairs. Elaine makes no bones about the fact that she spends a lot of her weekends down at Johnny's Malibu home. The house is almost always filled with many of his other clients, including Jane Powell and Gene Nelson.

The fellow most people talk about as Elaine's steady escort is Johnny Grant, popular Hollywood disc jockey and a leader in war entertainment work. Johnny's comment is, "I wish it were true." They are good friends, but the friendship is without a romantic future.

"Johnny knows it," says Elaine, "and I know it. But no one else seems to be aware of it."

Some of Elaine's friends criticize her for being too systematic about herself. "Maybe you can plan a career but you can't plan love," they say. "Love has to happen. Elaine is trying to live a timetable for success."

To some extent Elaine agrees with her friends. She believes that nineteen is the ideal age for a girl to marry, and that after that her chances for happiness decrease directly as the years increase. "I'm sure that living alone tends to make a girl more and more complete in herself. In that sense, she can become selfish and less qualified for the partnership attitude necessary to a successful marriage."

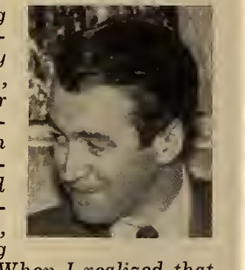
It may be wiser for Elaine to be a twenty-six-year-old bride than to have been a nineteen-year-old one. She has always felt that the ideal husband for her would be a man ten or fifteen years older than she. The reason for this feeling, she thinks, stems from her childhood. She was the eldest daughter in a family beset by debts. In such a situation, children tend to grow up fast, mentally and emotionally. Elaine knew the value of a dollar before she was six years old. If you had it you were safe; if you didn't have it you got bad headaches as her policeman father did.

As a child and as a young girl, the only frivolity about Elaine was her desire to become an actress. Because this seemed most unlikely, she played safe and prepared for another career—as a doctor. She graduated from Montclair High School with a B plus average and a scholarship to Green Mountain College for her pre-medical studies. Had she not become a model in New York, and then an actress in Hollywood, Elaine might be almost ready to hang up her shingle as a doctor—certainly the most beautiful physician in the world.

This tendency to think and plan carefully has not changed with her success. It is not something she can control. On her last trip east she went to the Saturday night party of a college group including some of her old friends from Montclair. She enjoyed seeing them again, she loved the dancing and the songs they sang. Yet in their interests, they were from a different world. Most of these kids had not yet felt the weight of responsibility which Elaine has been carrying for years.

A girl whose duties and plans have nec-

IT HAPPENED TO ME



I was strolling along Fifth Avenue on a lovely spring morning, young and chipper in my Easter bonnet, a saucy froth covered with poppies and bright red net that trailed behind me. A tall, wonderful-looking man passed me. When I realized that it was Jimmy Stewart, I turned to stare after him. Imagine how disconcerting it was to turn and find that he had stopped and was staring at me!

Gene Desmond
Hempstead, New York

essarily been heavy for her age is not going to be lightheaded about romance. Her head isn't likely to whirl because somebody is holding her hand. Since she knows this, Elaine realizes that married happiness for her is possible only if her husband is mature. "I want him to be a man with widespread interests. I don't want to be the only thing on his mind," she says. "From what I have seen of love it dies more quickly from strangulation than from any other cause. I want both of us to drink the same wine, but not from the same glass, as the poet writes. I don't want each of us to live narrowly just for the other, but to live together in a big, wide world."

When Elaine was still in high school in Montclair, New Jersey, she had a long talk about her future with her mother, Mrs. Hedwig Steinberg. Her mother delivered a pronouncement Elaine says she will never forget.

"I don't think it is good for a girl to know too many boys," said Mrs. Steinberg, "because she tends to think that only boys matter and that her happiness will depend strictly on whether she will choose the right one. It should work the other way. First the girl should choose the kind of life she wants to live, and with this to guide her it is easier to decide what kind of man would make the best partner. She already has an interest in life so she doesn't expect so much from her husband. In the second place, her interest makes her a person in her own right as well as a wife, and that adds to her stature in her husband's eyes."

Few men realize when they meet Elaine and take in her warm, dark beauty that her attitude has such a solid, rational foundation. But they soon find out, as do all her friends and professional associates. Elaine considers all of her steps carefully, whether it's a question of getting an Italian haircut (which she didn't) or one of buying a silly-looking but cuddly doll (which she did).

After her fine work as the star of Take The High Ground and the news that her studio had cast her in two of its biggest new pictures, Brigadoon and Athena, many of her friends advised her to change her personality. They thought that she was too approachable and would benefit by taking on a degree of reserve. They suggested a manner somewhere between Olivia De Havilland's aloof sweetness and Greer Garson's regality. Elaine didn't laugh it off. She thought it over and she talked it over. And she decided to remain as she was. She felt she would fool herself more than anyone else if she carried her play acting into real life.

Her salary, heading toward the thousand-a-week mark, has not dazzled her because she knows how to subtract. Take away all the deductions and professional expenses and she has to live quite modestly if she is going to save anything—and Elaine does save regularly. She spends only for essentials. That apartment of hers, in which she lives with a roommate, Suzanne Scheirer, is nice but it's just like hundreds of apartments in Beverly Hills. Any two girls with fairly good jobs could afford to live on the same level. Her car is not a Cadillac nor a Mercedes-Benz nor a Jaguar—it's a '47 Ford. The dress you'll see her wearing is not likely to be the product of a famous couturier, but the handiwork of a girl who can sew and whose name is Elaine Stewart. It was because of their mutual interest in sewing that she and Suzanne first met.

All of this makes Elaine sound like a very sensible girl, the kind of girl who would make a fine, thrifty, intelligent—and beautiful—wife. And that is perfectly true. But the man who wants her had better not show up just yet. The lady is too busy.

END

PUT YOURSELF IN THIS PICTURE—AND WIN A $100 BOND!
SEND YOUR PHOTO TO:
Golden-hued Dirilyte

You may be the girl to win a $100 Bond if your photo is selected by our judges for a forthcoming Dirilyte advertisement. Send in your photograph, which we may use, together with a request (and 10c to cover postage) for a Dirilyte Table Setting Booklet. It illustrates Dirilyte, the luxurious flatware that's the color of gold all through, so beautiful with modern color schemes, and so durable! Dirilyte is solid, not plated — it's LIFETIME GUARANTEED. Send that photo, today!

Fill in coupon and paste on back of your photo. Selection will be based on looks and personality. Judges' decision will be final. Mail no later than midnight, Jan. 30. Photographs cannot be returned. Enclose 10c to cover postage of booklet.

TO: DEPT. MS-1, DIRILYTE COMPANY OF AMERICA INC., KOKOMO, IND.
Enclosed is 10¢—send me the Dirilyte booklet.
Name..
....
....

HER POOL RUNNETH OVER

Debra Paget's all wet —and loves it!

■ Debra Paget has four swimming pools!

One pool is standard equipment, taken for granted. Four pools rate a raised eyebrow even in Hollywood.

But Debra needs four pools. Her folks all live together in one big house, but they can't all swim together in one big pool.

One night Debra read "The Three Bears" to her little sister Meg. You remember about the three bears and their three chairs—big chair, little chair and middle-sized chair.

Miss Paget got the idea. Big bears, big chairs, little bears, little chairs—mama Griffin, papa Griffin, big sister Lezli, little sister Meg, brother Frank, married sister Tela with her husband and two babies, all in the swim.

First Debra got a tiny pool, hardly bigger than a dewdrop for Tela's Kim, aged one. Then she added a wading pool for niece Jeanine, aged three. Little sister Meg, who is six, had to have a slightly larger one and there is the big pool for adults only.

The four pools sit side by side and everybody stays in his own depth.

Extravagant?

"Goodness, no!" says Debra. "The four together cost less than the average pool. And I can even take them with me when we move!"

They're all made of plastic.

the "wolf" at farley's door

(Continued from page 49) assist her through the day.

One evening, telephoning Farley's hotel on location, the Countess was told that Mr. Granger was working that night.

"What do you mean, working?" the Countess inquired.

No snob, the Countess is not so insulated in velvet as to be unaware of work, a curse on man since that sorry affair in old Eden, but she probably thought night work was laying Adam's curse a little heavy on Farley.

The Countess gets around. A cosmopolite, though only nineteen, she knows America and Europe; her name pops into Cholly Knickerbocker's news during the New York shindig season, and last summer she made a safari to Hollywood. On a set at Warner Brothers studio Farley was presented. Neither felt a temblor, they say, though it was earthquake weather as usual in that jungle of steaming passion.

On August 15, Farley flew to Europe to make a picture in Italy. Corks popped salute in Paris, TWA poured vintages in a party to honor him, Zizi Jeanmaire for whom he acted as ballet master in Hans Christian Andersen danced him around the Champs Elysées and Montmartre.

FROM PARIS Farley flew to Venice for the International Film Festival and the annual Venetian regatta. He fell sick in Venice, happily. The telephone rang. Someone said, "The Countess is calling." Farley got well.

They went dancing at the grand ball in the Volpi palace. Then a gondola sequence of luna-looking with music from serenaders floating at a discreet distance.

At the parties in the great Venetian palaces, at the theatre and yachting, tennis and bathing on the Lido, Farley was not alone in the queue winding round the Countess. There were princes, millionaires, playboys. And Errol Flynn. And Orson Welles. These old operators in service amour, bearing wound stripes and service ribbons, with now and then an alimony attachment, make Farley look a rookie although he must have had sound training during his long enlistment with Shelley Winters.

Though Farley had to quit the field before the finals he left in the Countess' car with promise of daily telephone calls.

With all her pokes and palaces you would think the Countess had a clear line, but when she calls Farley she gets Janet Wolfe. Everyone gets "the Wolf." She drives the Countess' car, accompanies Farley to the set, fetches him raw eggs, interprets, sits in on interviews and dines and dances with Farley. She has even climbed on to the screen with him in a newsreel.

Officially she is Farley's "Public Relations." After her newsreel bow, newspapers received an anecdote from her. Seems the hotel maid on seeing them at the movies exclaimed, "Why there is room No. 134 and room No. 128!"

It was corrective news for people who may have thought their rooms adjoined because of always getting "the Wolf" when calling Farley.

An old mug from Hollywood's Tobacco Road dropped into the hotel to investigate the status quo. He called Farley and sure enough didn't get. A buoyant voice said she was too beat up to see him for a couple of hours and then Farley would be back from location.

Turning from the desk phone the mug recognized a round little Italian who was a pooh-bah with the Granger company.

"What goes with Granger?" asked the Tobacco Road bounder.

The pooh-bah regarded him with the baleful eye of a ruffled pigeon:

"Of Mr. Granger I do not speak; Wolfe speaks," he said with clenched teeth. Then, puffing dignity, he added: "For me they are two steps down, Granger and Wolfe. I speak for Mr. Visconti the director, for Miss Valli the actress."

Feeling a rift in Italo-American amity the boulevardier of Tobacco Road suggested a healing martini. Warmed by sentiment and martinis, the little man gave:

"I am at the service of America and Hollywood," he said. "Of Granger and Wolfe I speak nothing. It is because here in Italy, as with Hollywood which we respect much, we do not likes smothers on sets."

The mug melted the Italo-prose in a sip of martini, swallowed a superfluous "s" and said:

"But 'the Wolf' is not Granger's mother."

His pal shrugged, rocked his hands in the air, and said: "Is same—public relations, agents, smothers. We know that in Hollywood it is not permitted these in studio. No?"

"They seep in," said the mug, "guns blazing."

SUDDENLY the little man glowered at the descending ascensore and scurried into a far corner. Out of the ascensore shot "the Wolf" like a guided missile. She had a casing blue eye and she wore a steel blue matching gown. The face was not as young as the voice on the phone, but the body was svelte and rhythmic.

She flung a hand to the mug, gave him her back, raced toward a man sitting elegantly aloof. For him she spread a wide smile which, with her small turned-up nose, gave to her face an Irish urchin look suggesting an elder Jane Withers.

After a few minutes of crouched discourse with the gentleman she raced back to the mug.

"That is Visconti the director. I want the job of dialogue director. He has hired someone, but he likes me," she said, her fingers gesturing to bosom, pleasing in the low cut gown.

A young man drifted unnoticed into the lobby. He wore brown cords and a sport shirt of shrieking greens, blues and dashes of scarlet. It might have been titled "The Battle Of The Parakeets," and it might have set Bing Crosby to gnawing knuckles in envy were Bing not color blind. Personable, tall, bland of face, looking not more than twenty-one, he might be any one of the good looking young Americans prowling around Europe. There was no professional aura about him.

"There's Farley now," said "the Wolf."

Farley smiled and sat down. "The Wolf" ordered drinks. Farley declined. He had only a chance to say he found Italy marvelous, that he was playing the part of a monster which he found marvelous and that he was glad to get away from Hollywood which is chaotic now, when "the Wolf" reminded him that he had a costume fitting upstairs.

He excused himself. "I will come down as soon as it is over."

"The Wolf" flung him a look, said he had other business.

"Then I will say goodnight now," he said, returning to shake hands.

"The Wolf" said she must interpret for him, as the costumer spoke no English. She spun away without a bow or a buona sera.

When she had vanished the little pooh-bah emerged from his corner, a gleam in his eye, not a gleam of triumph but a gleam of sympathy.

"You can talk with Farley on the set tomorrow," he consoled the mug. "You will be my guest. I will send a car for you at noon."

At noon when the car arrived it was the Countess' car, "the Wolf" was at the wheel, and the little pooh-bah was a dump on the back seat.

On the drive to the villa Valmarama, where scenes were being filmed, the little man draped scarves over the bare brown shoulders of "the Wolf," or removed them, according to her temperature and mood. For this he got the free ride and a grazie.

Broken any Yet?

Resolutions, that is. Oh, we know—you made them only a few days ago. But it's so much easier to write them down than keep them up. Nevertheless, there are some exceptions. MODERN SCREEN, for example, has a long record of resolutions faithfully kept—for your benefit! Want to get in on them? Well, if you subscribe today to MODERN SCREEN, we resolve that you will receive your copy every month without fail, that you will save forty cents over the newsstand price and that you will take no more chances on missing the latest issue! Just fill out the coupon below and send it to us with your remittance. It will get your New Year off to the best start ever!

SUBSCRIPTION IN THE U.S.A. AND CANADA FOR ONE YEAR $2.00; TWO YEARS $3.50; THREE YEARS $5.00. FOREIGN SUBSCRIPTIONS $3.00 A YEAR. PLEASE SEND CHECKS OR MONEY ORDERS ONLY.

MODERN SCREEN Subscription Department, 10 West 33rd Street, New York 1, N. Y.

NAME____________________

ADDRESS____________________

CITY__________ZONE_____STATE__________

©/1/4

Italians seem uncertain whether to address "la Wolf" as signorina or signora. She herself murmurs vaguely of having had "husband trouble." Says she was a washout in Hollywood where she did something to scripts in the Fox studio. In 1950 she shook free of scripts and husband trouble by joining up with the Red Cross for service in Italy. She drove a jeep, which she turned bottom up, denting jeep and all occupants except herself. "La Wolf," you feel, is of quality non-dentable and non-shrinkable.

After her distinguished service for the Red Cross she shipped back to New York. There Farley called her up and invited her to join him on his first film expedition into Italy.

"I jumped at the offer to get back here," she said. "I adore Italy."

"And Farley?"

"Old friends," she said. "We've known one another ages."

In the villa Valmarama, a maze of vast rooms frescoed by pupils of the Veronese school with bare-bottomed babies and pink fleshy mamas of the Mae West school, "la Wolf" raced for the director on her campaign, no doubt, for that dialogue director's job.

Farley appeared on the set in the uniform of an Austrian officer of the year 1866 when Italy fought the war of her Risorgimento against Austria.

His natural altitude of six-feet-two was increased by high military cap and accentuated by long white cape. He was as imposing as the Empire State building.

His sky-blue pants were so tight they appeared to be painted on his legs. He lowered himself into a chair with apprehension.

"They say the material is strong," he said. "I hope."

The picture for which Tennessee Williams wrote the script and dialogue is from an Italian novel titled Senso—roughly Sensuality in English. Farley's own current romance so resembles that of the picture a Hollywood press agent would be suspected of cooking it up for publicity. In the film, he makes love to a rich Venetian countess and takes her money.

Of course Countess Marina's twenty-eight pocket books are safe, none missing. Mr. Granger is no monster in person. The Countess did not give him her car though she did offer it for 1,500,000 lire, around $2500, which is three thousand less than she paid for it.

Being no monster, Mr. Granger replies like a gentleman to all inquisitors. The Countess is a friend. A wonderful person. A noblewoman in the true sense of nobility. Telephoning him when he was ill in Venice, a stranger to the city and a person she had met only casually, was in the tradition of noblesse oblige plus the natural kindness of a sweet nature.

"La Wolf" also is wonderful, an old friend, who was invaluable to him in Italy. He calls her Janet.

"Janet!" he howled suddenly. "Janet, get me a couple of raw eggs. I have had no lunch. Janet!"

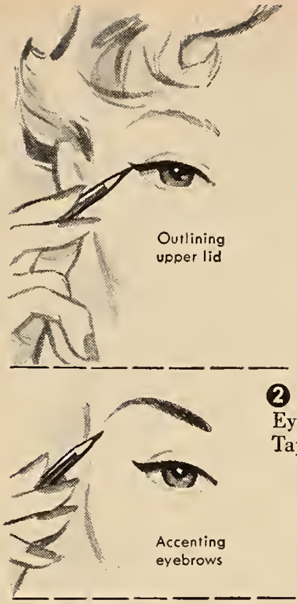
Janet apparently was on business of her own at the moment.

Later when asked if she thought Farley would buy the Countess' car she smiled and shook her head. This led the mug to observe that Farley wouldn't need to buy it if he married the Countess.

"She will not marry him," said "la Wolf" authoritatively. "They marry in their own crowd."

The Countess' car was all right, she said, a special job, but Farley thought he wanted an Alpha Romeo. "La Wolf" thought that foolish.

"We," she said plurally, "are going to buy a Jaguar." END



3 quick tricks to eye beauty

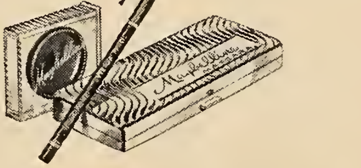
❶ With Maybelline soft Eyebrow Pencil, draw narrow line across upper eyelids, at base of lashes, adding short up-stroke at outer corner. Soften line with fingertip.

❷ Next, use short, light upward strokes of the Maybelline Eyebrow Pencil, to form beautiful, expressive brows. Taper lightly at outer end. Soften effect with fingertip.

❸ Apply smooth Maybelline Mascara from base to tips of lashes, brushing upward. (Hold a few seconds to set "up-swoop.") For an extra touch of mysterious eye beauty, blend a bit of Maybelline Eye Shadow on upper lid.

The world's smartest women depend on Maybelline soft eye make-up for heart-stirring beauty. Today, let Maybelline magic bring out the unsuspected loveliness of your eyes!

Maybelline



Start a Greeting Card & Gift Shop at Home
MAKE $50, $75, $100 AND MORE
EXTRA MONEY

New "Action" Comic All Occasion Ass't.

FREE Color Catalog

Show amazingly different Birthday, Get Well cards, wrappings, home & gift items. Profits to 100%, plus Dormeyer Power Chef, Toastmaster, other famous products as bonus. Write for Free Trial outfit of Feature All Occasion assortments on approval. FREE samples exclusive Personal Stationery, FREE Selling Guide.

NEW ENGLAND ART PUBLISHERS
North Abington 223, Mass.

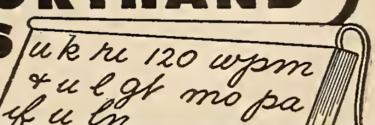
Genuine large size, studio-tone portrait of any movie star. Facsimile autograph. Ready for framing. Send name of your favorite star and 15c – or 2 for 25c – to cover handling costs

FREE STUDIO PHOTO

HOLLYWOOD STUDIOS
P.O. Box 2807, Dept. C-2,
Hollywood 28, Calif.

by Sylvia Herman
41 Lancaster Ave.
Brooklyn, N. Y.
"Because Speedwriting shorthand is based on ABC's, I had a speed of 120 wpm in a few weeks. Speedwriting helped me secure a legal secretary's position."

LEARN SHORTHAND IN 6 WEEKS As I Did!



Speedwriting
FAMOUS ABC SHORTHAND ®
120 WORDS PER MINUTE
IN 6 WEEKS

Typing Available

ONLY SPEEDWRITING can qualify you at home or through classroom instruction for a well-paid position in 6 WEEKS! Because it's an ABC Shorthand—has no symbols, requires no machines—with Speedwriting YOU start taking dictation the very first day!

EARN $10 to $15 MORE Per Week

Don't let a sad experience with symbol shorthand keep you from a better job and more pay. Don't worry about being too young or too old. Over 200,000 graduates have proved that the ABC Speedwriting Shorthand is the easiest, quickest way to qualify for a better job and more pay.

120 Words Per Minute—50% above Civil Service requirements! Typing available. Speedwriters in Top Positions everywhere—in Civil Service and leading business firms.

FREE! Mail coupon TODAY for FREE booklet and FREE sample lesson!

SCHOOL OF SPEEDWRITING 31st Yr.
Dept. 802-4 55 West 42nd St. New York 36, N. Y.

Classroom Instruction in over 400 Cities
in U.S., Canada, Cuba, & Hawaii
(Consult local directory)

School of Speedwriting, Dept. 802-4
55 W. 42nd St., New York 36, N. Y.

Please send me without obligation or expense your new booklet with full information about SPEEDWRITING.

☐ Home Study ☐ Classroom Instruction

Name..

Address..

City..................................Zone......State..................

the iron man and the redhead

(Continued from page 28) He'd heard and read all that before, he said tolerantly.

Sure was funny how some people could louse you up. He had taken Susie out. He'd taken her to a première. Thousands of people saw them together. And he was proud to be Susie's escort. But the very next day, that fact was blown up into a full-fledged romance, and it wasn't so. He hadn't been taking Susie to the nightclubs, to out-of-the-way restaurants, or for long rides up the beach. They hadn't commiserated with each other.

Susan had left for Mexico and the The Garden Of Evil on November 18. He hadn't seen her since.

Then Jeff and Susie were never high school sweethearts?

"Look," the iron man explained. "She attended Girls' Commercial High. No boys allowed. I went to Erasmus Hall High School. Both high schools are in Brooklyn, and they're not far from each other.

"We did go to elementary school together. Public School No. 181. I guess we were about eleven, maybe twelve years old. After that I didn't see her for years.

"When I came out to the coast, we ran into each other a couple of times. Once we were on a Red Cross radio show, and another time on a Hedda Hopper program. Susie and Lew Ayres were playing the leads in Magnificent Obsession. I was in the supporting cast. That was it until a few weeks ago. Then I called her up. We were two people who used to know each other, and I said, 'How are you? Would you like to go to this thing with me?' And she said, 'Okay,' and that's it.

"Right away the newspapers played it up as a big thing, and it became embarrassing not only to me, but to my wife. That's the whole truth."

Jeff is scrupulously honest. When he talks with the press, there are no curves, no wild throws, no fast ones. It's straight down the middle.

Susan Hayward corroborated Jeff's explanation when she appeared at the Court of Conciliation to frustrate her husband's final legal attempt to reconcile their marital differences.

"I've been out with Mr. Chandler once," Susan said, "and it was a purely professional affair. Right now, all I'm interested in is getting a divorce from my husband.

"There won't be any reconciliation. The only reason I'm down here is because I believe the idea of this court is an excellent one. It should be used by more people."

Asked if she still loved her husband, Susan answered with a definite "no." She asserted that she loved only her two children, Greg and Tim, eight-and-a-half-year-old twins.

She was asked to pose for pictures with Barker. At first she refused. Gradually, however, she thawed out and consented to have photographs taken with the husband she has accused of beating her up and Superior Court Judge Georgia Bullock who is responsible for the workings of the Court of Conciliation.

Mrs. Harpstrite, the Conciliation Commissioner, heard both sides of the story. First she interviewed Susan, who told her that a reconcilation was completely out of the question. She had married Jess Barker on July 23, 1944. The twins came along soon after. She and her husband fought incessantly. On several occasions he had slapped her around. They had separated in 1947 and she had hired an attorney to go ahead with divorce proceedings.

Fully dedicated to her marital vows, however, she had even then made an effort to save the marriage by going to the Institute of Marital Relations, where a well-publicized sociologist had talked both of them into trying a reconciliation.

Late in 1953, however, after she and Jess had returned from a trip to Europe, Barker had beaten her so badly that her screams had brought the police to their home.

She felt sorry for Jess, she explained. He was a fine actor, and her career had outdistanced his. His ego had been hurt and his will frustrated.

She was perfectly agreeable to fair visitation rights. If he wanted to see his sons every weekend, that was all right with her, but a reconciliation was out. She had filed for divorce on grounds of mental cruelty. She was determined to get away from Barker once and for all. The divorce would proceed.

Mrs. Harpstrite then interviewed Jess Barker, tall, thirty-nine, sandy-blond and good looking. Jess said he was interested in preserving his marriage. That was why when Mrs. Barker had filed for divorce he had insisted upon a reconciliation proceeding. No effort was too great to save his marriage. He had even switched lawyers. He had gone from the famed Jerry Giesler to Sammy Hahn. All he wanted, he urged, was that Susan try living with him just one more time.

Susan and Jess were then interviewed together. There was no meeting of minds. Finally, their lawyers were called in, and it was announced that "a very amicable visitation arrangement has been reached. Miss Hayward is to have custody of Timothy and Gregory, the twins, and Mr. Barker is to have custody of them each weekend."

That night Susan flew off to Mexico City where Gary Cooper and other members of the cast were waiting to start production of The Garden Of Evil. Her mother, who had arrived from the East, took charge of the boys.

Since Susan had refused even to discuss reconciliation, the very next day Jess Barker asked the Superior Court to deny Susan a divorce and to give him half of their community property, which he estimates as currently exceeding $300,000.

As his lawyer pointed out, "Jess doesn't want a divorce. He isn't asking for one. He claims his wife has no grounds for a divorce. She says he hit her. I say how about all the times she hit him. My client has behaved like a perfect gentleman all through this mess. He hasn't said a word against his wife.

"He is worried about the future of his children. He doesn't want them to grow up in a broken home. He is sure the marriage could work.

Susan and Jess discussed break-up with Mrs. Margaret Harpstrite, of the Court of Conciliation.

"If Miss Hayward is willing to try to make it work, he's willing to renounce all his rights to their community property."

The following is Jess Barker's list of community assets:

Cash savings	$59,878.95
Tax reserve	8,064.76
Accounts receivable	401.90
Unemply. ins. rec'ble.	235.50
Life insurance receivable	4,570.00
Accred. Fed. old age ben.	488.47
Stocks and securities	93,529.83
Bonds	20,150.00
Automobiles	10,923.12
Real Estate	51,577.29
Furnishings	16,702.33
Personal effects	24,252.42
	$290,774.57

Barker also points out that there is "additional community property in plaintiff's possession, the nature and extent of which is unknown to affiant at this time."

Susan has five more years to run on an employment contract with 20th Century-Fox which brings her $5,000 a week, fifty-two weeks a year.

"That contract," according to Jess' lawyer, "is also community property. And my client is willing to waive his rights in that, too."

When Susan first filed her divorce complaint, she stated, "There is no community property belonging to plaintiff and defendant. All of the property, both real and personal, in plaintiff's possession is her sole and separate property."

Miss Hayward's husband has also requested that Susan be compelled to pay the fees for his attorneys since all the community funds are under her control and he doesn't have any.

This divorce case threatens to develop into a no-holds-barred contest, equal in antagonism to the recent case of John Wayne versus Chata Wayne.

Is Jess Barker entitled to 50% of the community property, practically all of which was earned by his wife? That is the crux of the case.

When it comes up on January 19, Edythe Marrener Barker (Susan's real name) is going to offer evidence to the court, a document allegedly signed by Jess Barker, in which he agreed to waive all rights to any future community property.

Susan had Jess sign this document in a pre-marital agreement. Apparently she was well-prepared to safeguard her interests, even ten years ago—if the signature is Barker's.

Jess Barker is determined to fight his wife. Susie is prepared to fight back, and when this girl fights she pulls no punches. Somebody has said Susan Hayward wears brass knuckles on her tongue, and that she has the kind of hard brown eyes which look out but into which no one can look.

One of her few Hollywood friends says, "Don't judge Susie by her exterior. For the last ten years she has been living a lie. She's been too proud to admit defeat. She tried to make people believe that she had everything—a happy home, a great career, a wonderful, understanding husband.

"The truth is that, at thirty-six, she has nothing but a career and some money. They've never brought her any great happiness. Security, yes. Happiness, no.

"She came up the hard way. She fought and scrapped and worked hard. She is a proud girl and her pride is responsible for most of her trouble.

"Right after she married Jess, she knew it wouldn't work. But she was pregnant, so she stuck with it hoping things would grow better. Domestically, they didn't, but her pride held her back. She wouldn't admit failure.

"Now that she has admitted it, she's got a fight for freedom on her hands. I don't know what will happen to her after she gets the divorce. She has many qualities which will frighten the potential husband she wants and needs. After all, you can't find many men who can equal her earning power.

"You read a lot about Susie and Jeff Chandler. Jeff is a well-balanced man, and a strong man. As an actor, he hasn't realized one half of his potential. He would make her a fine husband if in another five years Susan would abandon her career and let him take care of her.

"In another five years she'll be forty-one, and maybe by then she will be ready for domesticity. But for the last nine years, she has not only worn the pants in her house but she has controlled the purse strings."

When Susan filed for divorce, she asked the court to issue a restraining order to prevent Jess from visiting her and slugging her.

"Defendant," she claimed, "has more than once during the last two months inflicted physical harm upon affiant. Since the separation of the parties, defendant came to affiant's residence and used physical violence on affiant. By reason of defendant's conduct, affiant has reasonable grounds to fear that unless restrained, defendant will attempt to see affiant, will attempt to annoy and molest her by physical violence and otherwise." END

m. s. top ten for 1953

(Continued from page 27) right about them as you were about Marilyn and we wish them as much success. For you are discriminating judges. You may promote stars slowly, rung by rung, up the ladder to popularity peaks or you may whirl them high on the strength of only one performance. They have to be good to make it—and they have to be great to stay there.

So don't go away. We're proud to present your choices and we congratulate you on your good taste. The editors join you in congratulating the winners, and extend our thanks to all of you who voted in our monthly popularity poll. Thanks, too, from Hollywood's movie-makers who recognize in your opinions the most accurate indicator of star popularity. They are grateful, as we are, for your judgment. END

I SAW IT HAPPEN

On the night of President Truman's Inauguration Ball in 1949, I was among those gathered outside the back entrance of the Armory, waiting to get a close look at President Truman. After a long time, someone from behind the crowd shouted, "Attention!" And Lou Costello bowed, skipped, and hopped into the Armory. He was such a cute little man I wanted to hug him. And after the long wait he left the crowd laughing and happy.

Delores Ligon
West Paducah, Kentucky

Noted Beauty Authority Advises

"Don't Fool With Pimples"

by
MARCELLA HOLMES
(Former Beauty Editor of "Glamour" Magazine)

"As a beauty editor many people have asked me, 'what should I do for pimples?' I always say, don't try just anything on them! Acne-type pimples are a serious condition that if neglected can permanently mar your looks. So use a medication specifically developed for pimples, and not multi-purpose skin creams or ointments that are claimed to be 'also good for pimples.'

"No general purpose cream or ointment provides in a fast-drying greaseless base the specific medical ingredients so necessary in the treatment of pimples. Fortunately, today, there's a modern, scientific medication developed especially for pimples—actually tested and proven by leading skin specialists. This medication is called CLEARASIL.

New-Type Greaseless "Base"

"The specific medications in the CLEARASIL formula are contained in a new-type oil-free 'base'. This new 'base' material is not only greaseless but is also oil absorbing. Thus this new scientific formula may be said to actually 'starve' pimples because it helps to remove the oils that pimples 'feed' on.

"CLEARASIL is antiseptic, stopping growth of bacteria that may cause and spread pimples. And since it is non-greasy, stainless, it may be left on day and night for uninterrupted medication.

Skin-Colored—Hides Pimples

"This new CLEARASIL medication is skin-colored to hide pimples while it works, and to end the embarrassment of pimples instantly.

"So again I advise, don't fool with pimples. General purpose creams and ointments have their proper uses, but don't depend on them for treatment of pimples. Treat this specific condition with a specific pimple medication."

Proved Effective By Doctors — Guaranteed

In skin specialists' tests on 202 patients, 9 out of every 10 cases were cleared up or definitely improved. And when 3002 nurses tested CLEARASIL, 91 out of every 100 nurses reporting said they preferred it to any other pimple medication. CLEARASIL is guaranteed to work for you as it did in the doctors' and nurses' tests or money back. Only 59¢ and 98¢. At all druggists. Get CLEARASIL today.

Lovely NAILS in A FLASH... with

Hollywood Artificial Fingernails and Quick-Drying Glue

Permanent Dubonet-Rose Color Applied in a Jiffy.
At dime, drug and department stores

ONLY 39¢ SET OF TEN

NU-NAILS CO.,
5249 WEST HARRISON STREET
DEPT. 15-B, CHICAGO 44, ILL.

MAKE $25 TO $100 FAST!

For Yourself Or Group

Sell Big Value $1.00 and $1.25 GREETING CARD Assortments. Leading 21-Card boxes. Stationery. Gifts, Valentines. Over 100 fast sellers. Amazing Profits to 100% PLUS Big Bonus Plan. Write today for SAMPLES On Approval. Free Catalog and full details.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN

HEDENKAMP & CO., Inc.
361 Broadway, Dept. D-12
New York 13, N. Y.

FREE! $1.00 Air Freshener for PROMPT ACTION!

IF YOU SUFFER PAIN of HEADACHE NEURALGIA NEURITIS

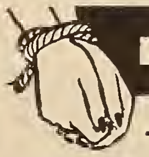
get FAST RELIEF with the way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend.

HERE'S WHY . . . Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, Anacin contains not just one but a combination of medically proved active ingredients. No other product gives faster, longer-lasting relief from pain of headache, neuralgia, neuritis than Anacin tablets. Buy Anacin® today!



HANDS TIED?

—because you lack a HIGH SCHOOL DIPLOMA

• You can qualify for an American School Diploma in spare time at home! If you have left school, write or mail coupon for FREE booklet that tells how. No obligation of any kind.

OUR 57TH YEAR

AMERICAN SCHOOL, Dept. V-214,
Drexel at 58th, Chicago 37, Illinois
Please send FREE High School booklet.

NAME...
ADDRESS.....................................
CITY & STATE...............................

(Continued from page 37) film in Honolulu.

14. Going to Mexican night clubs with men other than her husband and drinking excessively.

All of this, Duke charged, caused him such "grievous mental suffering, embarrassment, and humiliation" that he wanted a divorce at once.

Chata, his thirty-one-year-old Mexican wife, charged America's number-one movie attraction with:

1. Pulling her out of bed and beating her.
2. Dragging her down the hallway of the Del Prado Hotel in Mexico City by the roots of her hair.
3. Blacking her eye.
4. Calling her obscene names.
5. Manhandling her in the presence of guests.
6. Swearing at the servants and thereby causing her great pain and humiliation.
7. Refusing to escort her home from parties.
8. On occasions too numerous to specify covering her body with bruises which her masseuse might readily see.
9. Excessive drinking and resultant intoxication.
10. Violent temper and bad manners.
11. Going out with actress Gail Russell on a party and not returning home until the wee hours of the morning.
12. Giving Gail Russell money for a new car.
13. Throwing towels all over the dressing-room of their residence because he was dissatisfied with the number of towels in his bathroom.
14. Belligerent attitude and demeanor which once manifested itself when at a party he tossed his wife's shawl into the mud.
15. Attending a stag party where call girls were brought in and strip teases performed; "and when defendant returned home in the early morning hours, he was very intoxicated and had a large black bite on the right side of his neck."
16. Throwing alcohol in her face.
17. Forcing her to escape into another bedroom, screaming and calling her vile names through the door.
18. Without her consent, moving her effects out of their large residence in Encino into a small Beverly Hills apartment.

Despite all this potent ammunition, the Wayne trial ran only three days.

What happened? Who called a halt to the proceedings and why? Why, after weeks of fruitless out-of-court bickering, was a financial agreement satisfactory to both parties reached in a matter of hours?

Before they went into the courtroom Duke Wayne had offered his wife $40,000 for two years and $35,000 a year for the next seven years. He had insisted that there was no community property to divide because Chata, in their seven years of marriage, had spent more than he had earned. Chata, in turn, had demanded approximately $9,000 a month in alimony. Whereupon Duke had said, "I hate to do it, but I'm going to fight this one through."

Modern Screen is the only magazine with the inside story of the Wayne case—why it wasn't battled out according to plan, why the trial was cut short and how the settlement was reached.

On the morning of the trial's third day, half an hour before Duke, Chata, the lawyers and witnesses were scheduled to appear in Judge Allen Ashburn's courtroom, Lloyd Shearer, a writer who was covering the trial, rapped on the door of the judge's chambers. He introduced himself to Judge Ashburn, a stern-looking bespectacled man of sixty-eight, and asked permission to use a noiseless wire recorder while Mr. and Mrs. Wayne were testifying.

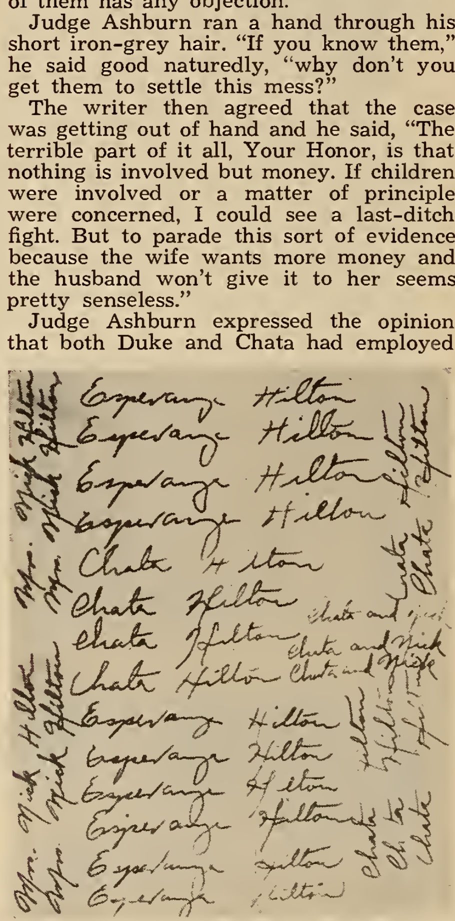
"I'm very sorry," Judge Ashburn said kindly, "but if I let you use a recorder, then I've got to let the newsreel men come in and the TV men come in, and the whole thing will become a circus. It's hard enough to keep order as it is."

Mr. Shearer nodded. "I know, Your Honor," he conceded, "but the recorder doesn't make any noise. I also know both of the principals in this case, and neither of them has any objection."

Judge Ashburn ran a hand through his short iron-grey hair. "If you know them," he said good naturedly, "why don't you get them to settle this mess?"

The writer then agreed that the case was getting out of hand and he said, "The terrible part of it all, Your Honor, is that nothing is involved but money. If children were involved or a matter of principle were concerned, I could see a last-ditch fight. But to parade this sort of evidence because the wife wants more money and the husband won't give it to her seems pretty senseless."

Judge Ashburn expressed the opinion that both Duke and Chata had employed competent counsel. He assumed that every effort had been made to settle their clients' differences out of court.



Esperanza Hilton
Chata Hilton
Mrs. Nick Hilton
Chata and Nick

Chata's doodles, made during Nick Hilton's stay at her home, were produced in court by Wayne.

"There's no doubt about that, Your Honor," Shearer said. "They were pretty close to a settlement at one time. I still think, however, that if somebody puts his foot down and insists that a settlement be reached, such a deal can be made." The writer asked once more for permission to use his wire recorder, and again the judge denied him.

Fifteen minutes later when Chata Wayne strode into court—she was late because she'd been stopped and ticketed for speeding by a highway patrolman—she learned that her lawyer and Duke's lawyer, Frank Belcher, were closeted in chambers with Judge Ashburn.

What Ashburn said in essence to both lawyers was that the case was taking a nasty turn and that he felt a property settlement could be reached if all the parties concerned really got down to business. He was recessing court until two o'clock that afternoon, and he wanted both lawyers to return with a settlement.

While court was recessed, Duke, Chata, their two lawyers, and Bo Roos, Duke's business manager, succeeded in making their way into an adjoining court room. The door was locked and the final settlement conference began.

There was much haggling over financial details. Chata wanted her debts to be paid. She insisted upon having her community property rights recognized.

In the end, Duke agreed to pay Chata approximately $50,000 a year for the next six years, to pay all of her debts (estimated at $22,000), sell the property they own and give her half the proceeds and pay her legal expenses. The settlement ran to $500,000 give a little, take a little.

One reason Duke wanted to settle was that he was afraid his two oldest children might be subpoenaed and asked to testify against their father.

Duke felt sure that if the trial continued, his children would be forced to share his humiliation, that they would be compelled to answer the most soul-searing personal questions, that the battery of photographers and newsmen would descend upon them and that the two children, Mike, eighteen, and Tony, sixteen (the daughter's name is Mary Antonia but everyone calls her Tony), would bear the stigma of this experience and would carry the memory forever.

He was determined to avoid this no matter what the price in cash or future financial indebtedness.

What he did not and could not know was that before the trial got underway, Chata had emphatically told her lawyer, Jerry Rosenthal, "I love Duke's children, all four of them. They are fine children, and under no circumstances must they be called or connected with this trial in any way. If Duke wants to fight, I'll fight him. I'll fight him all the way. But those children are not to be called. Is that understood?"

"I agree with you 100%," Rosenthal had said. "They will not even be mentioned."

"Good," Chata said. "I will fight him alone."

And what a fight this fiery Mexican lady put up. Sparks flew the very first day she and her lawyer stalked into court. The lawyer, shrewd, boyish-looking, well dressed, painted his client as a frightened, innocent young girl from Mexico who came to Hollywood only to find herself enmeshed in an alcohol-saturated net.

"Are you going to show," the judge asked, "that her husband taught her to drink?"

"I surely am," Rosenthal said. "She was swept into a mode of living where life came from the mouth of a whiskey bottle."

He offered to prove that naive Chata came to the United States and lived with her "hard-drinking" actor for two years while he was still married, technically, to his first wife, Josephine Saenz, the mother of his four children.

Chata Wayne then took the stand. She was dressed conservatively in a dark blue suit ($165) a white and blue pin-striped blouse ($15.95) and white gloves ($2.98). She toyed nervously with her fingers as in an almost inaudible voice, she told of Wayne's alleged mistreatment.

Here are random excerpts from her testimony:

"In December, 1946, we went to Honolulu with friends (Mr. and Mrs. Jimmy Grant. Grant is Wayne's writer) . . . We were at the Grants' suite at the Moana Hotel. Mr. Wayne was intoxicated. Mr. Grant was even worse. They were talking and I was tired, so I lay down on a twin bed.

"Mr. Wayne grabbed me by the foot and dragged me to the floor. I said, 'What's the matter?' He just insulted me and berated me and I cried. I was so upset. My eyes were swollen from crying and I was unable to go to another party we were supposed to attend. Mr. Wayne later apologized and asked me to forgive him."

"What did you say to that?" Rosenthal asked.

"That I would," Chata replied. "And then I said, 'If that's what liquor does to you then you shouldn't drink so much.' He said he would never strike or swear at me again."

But not long after when they were in Mexico City where Wayne was producing The Bullfighter And The Lady, they were staying at the Hotel Del Prado, and one night, "He grabbed me and threw me against the wall and pulled my hair. He kicked me, then dragged me the full length of the corridor. He called me terrible things and punched me in the eye. Next morning my eye was black and swollen. I wore dark glasses to hide it."

While Chata was testifying in this nostalgic vein, Duke was shaking his head. He looked around as if to say, "Where is she getting this stuff?" During periodic recesses, he said, "She must be awfully nervous, or maybe she doesn't feel so well. There's no other reason why she should be making up these stories."

Chata wanted more money than Duke was willing to pay, and she was determined to prove that life with the handsome actor had been no bed of roses and that she was entitled to a high standard of separate maintenance. Any sum from $9,000 to $13,000 a month would do.

At the home of actor John Carroll, she testified, she once made the mistake of objecting to Wayne's drinking, "So he knocked me down, hit me while I was on the floor, and kicked me. I was completely bruised the next day. And quite upset, of course. I was sore all over and had to stay in bed."

THEIR FIRST separation came in December, 1951, after they had fought all over Acapulco, Mexico. "He threw a glass of water at me, and then I threw a bucket back at him. Then he threw rubbing alcohol straight into my eyes. It blinded me for a moment and I said, 'That wasn't water.' And he laughed and said, 'Of course it wasn't water. It was alcohol.' I stumbled into the bathroom and splashed my eyes to see. The next morning I packed and left for Mexico City."

On another occasion, Chata testified, she almost shot her husband when he broke a glass panel and let himself into their home in the early hours of the morning after spending much of the night with actress Gail Russell. She thought he might be a robber.

"I asked him if he had been at a motel," she said, "and he said no, that he had actually gone to Miss Gail Russell's house with her alone and spent the night there. He said he left the restaurant with Miss Russell—just the two of them—and went straight to her house.

"I was quite hurt and very upset for two or three days. He apologized but didn't explain why he had done it and asked me to make up."

She then told Duke that she had been given a tip that he had given Gail Russell a new car, and she wanted to know if that were true.

"He said he had given her the down payment. I wondered why unless there was some relation between them, some friendship or closeness. He said there was nothing wrong and that he wasn't running around or going with Miss Russell.

"I told him it was very strange that he would spend the night with her and give her a down payment on the car."

"And what did Mr. Wayne say at this point?" Chata's lawyer asked.

The ONLY Vaginal Suppository for FEMININE HYGIENE

That Can Make ALL These Claims!

Today, modern women everywhere are turning to Zonitors—the greaseless, stainless vaginal suppository which offers so many advantages:

1. Zonitors contain the same powerful and deodorizing type of medication which makes ZONITE liquid so effective.
2. When inserted, Zonitors instantly release this powerful medication which combats germ-life right on contact.
3. Zonitors form a protective hygienic coating which lasts for hours. They are not the old-fashioned greasy type which quickly melt away.
4. Zonitors are ABSOLUTELY SAFE to body tissues. They even have a soothing effect.
5. Zonitors completely deodorize. They keep your person so dainty and feminine.
6. A blessing to fastidious young wives. So convenient. Zonitors require no extra equipment. They eliminate all embarrassment.

Buy Zonitors today. They are packaged two ways: individually foil-wrapped or in separate glass vials.

Zonitors®

Vaginal Suppositories

FREE!

Send coupon for new book revealing all about these intimate physical facts. Zonitors, Dept. ZMO-24, 100 Park Avenue, New York 17, N. Y.*

Name__________

Address__________

City________ State________

*Offer good only in the U. S. & Canada.

get your copy of

SHEILA GRAHAM'S HOLLYWOOD YEAR BOOK

at all newsstands 25c

Thrilling Work COLORING PHOTOS

EASY TO LEARN

Fascinating vocation learned at home by those with aptitude. Thrilling pastime. National method brings out life-like colors. Free booklet.

NATIONAL PHOTO COLORING SCHOOL

835 Diversey Pkwy., Dept. 2362, Chicago 14

"Facts About EPILEPSY"

This most interesting and helpful booklet will be mailed to anyone while the supply lasts. We will send a free copy to anyone who writes for it. Lakewood Neurophen Co., Station A., Dept. MM1 Cleveland 2, Ohio.

SUFFERERS FROM PSORIASIS (SCALY SKIN TROUBLE) Use DERMOIL

MAKE THE ONE SPOT TEST

Prove it yourself no matter how long you have suffered or wha. you have tried. Beautiful book on psoriasis and Dermoil with amazing, true photographic proof of results sent FREE. Write for it.

SEND FOR GENEROUS TRIAL SIZE

©1955 LAKE LAB.

Don't mistake eczema for the stubborn, ugly embarrassing scaly skin disease Psoriasis. Apply non-staining Dermoil. Thousands do for scaly spots on body or scalp. Grateful users, often after years of suffering, report the scales have gone, the red patches gradually disappeared and they enjoyed the thrill of a clear skin again. Dermoil is used by many doctors and is backed by a positive agreement to give definite benefit in 2 weeks or money is refunded without question. Send 10c (stamps or coin) for generous trial bottle to make our famous "One Spot Test." Test it yourself. Results may surprise you. Write today for your test bottle. Caution: Use only as directed. Print name plainly. Don't delay. Sold by Liggett and Walgreen Drug Stores and other leading druggists. LAKE LABORATORIES, Box 3925, Strathmoor Station, Dept. 8209, Detroit 27. Mich.

10 DRESSES all for only $3.45 used

SPECIAL ASSORTMENT! Silk, Wool, Cotton, and Rayon Dresses! All sizes in good condition! PRICE INCLUDES ALL 10 DRESSES! NO LESS! Rush order NOW!

12 CHILDREN'S DRESSES only $3 (used). Good condition. Unusual assortment. ALL SIZES. Order now while they last!

20 PIECE SURPRISE ASSORTMENT—$2.98 (used). Sensational bundles of clothes includes ass't of skirts, children's pants, pajamas, etc. Each bundle different!

EXTRA! Ladies' COAT or TOPPER (used) (up to $75 value) sent with every dress order for only $1.50 additional.

FREE GIFT incl. with $5 order or more! Send $1 deposit, balance COD plus postage.

MONEY BACK IF NOT DELIGHTED!

BEST MAIL ORDER HOUSE

15 Hester St., Dept. DM-1, N.Y. 2, N.Y.

If We Send You this Stunning 10^{98} Dress Without 1¢ Cost

Will You WEAR and SHOW It in Your Community?

No advertising sells our dresses half as well as they sell themselves. So, we want women all over America to see our dresses—not on models, but on average women of all ages, shapes, and sizes. Will you wear and show our pretty frocks to friends and neighbors? Through our excitingly different Introductory Plan you can get your own dresses—a complete beautiful wardrobe—as a bonus, without spending 1c of your money. 150 glorious styles to choose from. Get full details FREE. Absolutely no cost—no obligation. Just send name, address, age and dress size on postcard. Hurry—big response expected.

PH. MEYERS
3327 Coleroin Avenue
Dept.0-2054, Cincinnati 25, Ohio

TOWELS
12 Large Size Assorted Colors ONLY $1^{00}
Money Back Guarantee, Order Now!
MURRAY HILL HOUSE, Dept. 48-G
©52MHH 157 East 31st. St., New York 16, N. Y.
Dealers' Inquiries Invited

128 MOVIE, TV, RADIO STARS PHOTOS
SPECIAL! For Limited Time Only—
All your favorite stars in ONE BIG PACKAGE. New FASCINATING POSES!—Many AUTOGRAPHED! PROFESSIONAL wallet sizes—suitable for framing. Sensational Money-Saving offer. Rush your dollar today! $1
FREE! with your order! BIG SURPRISE GIFT (worth 75¢)—private HOME ADDRESSES, plus other REVEALING INFORMATION of 175 OTHER TOP STARS. Also GIANT NEW CATALOG containing ADDITIONAL HUNDREDS OF PHOTOS AND NAMES of Newest Stars—all is SENT FREE WITH YOUR ORDER if you act now!
HOLLYWOOD FILM STAR CENTER, Studio C2, Box 2309, Hollywood 28, Calif.

Shrinks Hemorrhoids New Way Without Surgery

Science Finds Healing Substance That Relieves Pain—Shrinks Hemorrhoids

For the first time science has found a new healing substance with the astonishing ability to shrink hemorrhoids and to stop bleeding—without surgery.

In case after case, pain was relieved promptly. And, while gently relieving pain, actual reduction (shrinkage) took place.

Most amazing of all—results were so thorough that sufferers made astonishing statements like "Piles have ceased to be a problem!"

The secret is a new healing substance (Bio-Dyne®)—discovery of a world-famous research institute.

Now this new healing substance is offered in ointment form under the name of *Preparation H. Ask for it at all drug stores—money back guarantee. *Trade Mark

"He said," she replied, "that I shouldn't be upset about it."

When Chata finished testifying, one little old lady sitting in the rear of the courtroom, turned to her friend and reflected the general opinion of the fans who had crowded the quarters. "I don't believe a single word that woman has said," she whispered.

Duke Wayne was prepared to take the stand and tell his side of the marital dispute when Judge Ashburn sent for the lawyers and ordered them to reach a final property settlement.

Once it was announced that a settlement was reached, the case was postponed for a week so that the final agreement might be couched in the proper legal terms.

One week later, the property settlement signed and sealed, all the principals returned to the nineteenth floor of the Los Angeles City Hall Building.

This time Chata had amended her plea to include a divorce. She no longer wanted separate maintenance. She wanted to be rid of Duke, and he wanted to be rid of her.

Now that a settlement had been reached and Chata was willing to give her husband a divorce, everyone wondered if Duke would take the stand and elaborate on all the charges he had made against his wife. Or would he say just enough to get a decree on mental cruelty grounds?

Lloyd Shearer, who had been instrumental in bringing about the financial settlement, asked him, "You going to blast her, Duke?"

Wayne shook his head indecisively.

"If I were you," Shearer said, "I wouldn't. Why put yourself in the same mudslinging category. Why don't you just tell the judge that you could say plenty but that you'd rather not. Just give one or two examples of mental cruelty."

"I wish to God I could," Duke Wayne said. "I hate this. The whole mess is repugnant to me. I didn't want any of it. You know that. I offered to give her every buck I could afford, but she was really unreasonable.

"If she had merely testified against me, that would be a different matter. But getting up on that stand and making white look black, dragging in my friends—someone like Gail Russell. You know Gail. The poor kid went to work for us on a loanout from Paramount. She was getting practically nothing. She did such a good job in our picture that we tried to get her some of the loanout money but Paramount said no soap. So what happened? Jimmy Grant—it was the first picture he'd directed—he and I chipped in $500 a piece and gave it to her. Chata knew all about it. Jimmy and I had discussed it half a dozen times.

"Sure I took Gail home after a party. But her folks were there and her brother came in. This attempt to make everything look dirty! I hate to do it, but I'm going to take the stand and tell what really happened. I've got an obligation to defend my friends, and I'm going to do it."

But on this final day of the trial, it was Chata who took the stand first. Having obtained the settlement she wanted, her testimony was now brief and generalized: "He caused me physical and mental grief. I got sick several times. I went to the doctor regularly, and he said there wasn't—well—there wasn't much he could do for me."

It was now Duke's turn.

He was sick with the flu, and his glassy blue eyes showed it. He took the stand and not once in the next forty minutes did he ever sit comfortably on that chair. He leaned forward all the time, playing with his USC ring or his gold king of hearts cuff links and rubbing his left eye. Once in a while when he couldn't find the right word, he snapped his fingers impatiently.

Of his wife he said, "She put me in a position where I had to cover up the fact that she was not acting like my wife. I had to keep up the public relations for us. It was humiliating to have her get drunk, fall down in cafes, cause disturbances at private parties. It affected my work and embarrassed me on many occasions."

One time, Duke testified, after Chata had had too many drinks and called the police, he said to her, "Chata, you are really acting like a bum."

Another time, he continued, when she was drunk and dancing with Bill O'Connell at Charley Foy's Supper Club, she slipped and fell to the floor and then accused Duke who was twenty feet away, sitting at a table, of having thrown her down.

Of his evening with Gail Russell following the party celebrating the completion of their picture, Angel And The Badman, Wayne said:

IT HAPPENED TO ME

It was my first day in the hat-check room at Lindy's. I was only twenty years old, and I was awed by the tradition of the restaurant, famous for its Broadway customers. I was scared.

As I stood alone near the door, I was approached by a very attractive young lady who appeared to be about my own age. She was dressed simply and she wore little make-up on her turned-up nose and freckled face. I was not especially impressed—and not so scared any more. She was just another pretty New York girl.

"My, it's cold out there," she said. I replied easily. She stood there a moment, looking around the restaurant.

"I'm expecting some friends," she said. "If they come in will you tell them where I'm sitting?" And with that, she walked toward the other end of the restaurant.

I went after her. "Who'll they ask for? What's your name?" I stammered.

"Garland," she said, smiling at my embarrassment. "Judy Garland."

Howard Jay Friedman
Tallahassee, Florida

"I offered to drive Miss Russell home in her car. We were following some friends who wanted to stop in a bar for a drink. We lost them in traffic and couldn't find them again. We looked in several bars, then wound up at Carl's cafe on the beachfront.

"We had some food and I saw some old friends from Glendale where I went to high school. They called me Marion (Wayne's real name is Marion Mitchell Morrison) and then an artist did a charcoal drawing of Miss Russell, and I took her home. Her mother was there and we talked. I took a cab home at about one A.M.

Attorney: Were there any improprieties between you and Miss Russell?

Wayne: Absolutely not.

Attorney: Were you together at a motel any time that evening?

Wayne: Absolutely not.

Attorney: What happened when you arrived home?

WAYNE: All the doors were locked. I could hear Chata and her mother inside z-zz-, buzzing all the time, and I said, "Come on, Chata, open the door." But she wouldn't. I rang the bell and she still wouldn't open up. Finally, I broke a glass pane, unlocked the door and went in. I lay down on the seven-foot sofa in the living room. Mrs. Wayne and her mother were in another room blabbing, blab, blab, blab. Then they came charging in with a .45. They talked it over for a few minutes. Then they left.

Wayne was then shown a typewritten list of profanities which he supposedly employed to call his wife from time to time. He studied the list for a moment and then agreed he had called her a couple of them on occasion, but nothing else.

He said, "She had nothing to do but see that the servants kept the house in order and she wouldn't do that. Sure, I got irritated when I stepped out of the shower to find that I had no towels. So I sneaked into her dressing room and took all her towels so she wouldn't have one when she got out of her shower. It was kind of silly, I guess, but I was sore."

As for having "sloshed" his wife in Mexico with alcohol, Duke admitted that one, but only after she had doused him with a bucket of water. "She started to charge me, and I said, 'Chata, so help me, if you come closer I'm going to slosh you with this alcohol,' and she came at me, so I sloshed her, and she ran out crying."

And then Wayne threw the bombshell of the case. After he returned from Honolulu in June of last year, he testified, his butler, Hampton Scott, came up to him and said, "Mr. Wayne, are you sure you're through with Mrs. Wayne?"

When Duke said he was absolutely finished with his Esperanza the butler gave him a piece of notepaper on which Chata had doodled dozens of times such things as "Esperanza Hilton, Chata and Nicky, Mrs. Nick Hilton, Chata Hilton."

Up until that moment, Duke said, he had not known that Hilton, twenty-six, former husband of actress Elizabeth Taylor, had stayed in his house for a week.

That note also conjured up memories, poignant memories, for Wayne. He remembered that before he married Chata, when he was ardently in love with her, she used to practice these same doodles. Only then she used his name. She would write, "Chata and Duke Wayne, Mrs. John Wayne, Mrs. Esperanza Wayne."

Wayne's attorney asked him, "What was your reaction when you saw that paper?"

A look of complete disgust came into Duke's eyes. "I went into the bathroom and threw up."

Later on, just before the trial ended, Mrs. Wayne was called to the witness stand and asked to explain what Nicky Hilton was doing in her house.

This was her explanation: "Betsy von Furstenburg was my house guest. One day she called me from a doctor's office and said Mr. Hilton had been hurt in an accident. She said he lived in a hotel by himself and it wouldn't be nice for her to go to his room and nurse him; so she asked if she could take care of him at my house. I said, 'Fine, yes, so long as you are here to take care of him.'"

After the financial settlement was reached both lawyers agreed to forestall any cross examination; so that Chata was never asked why she doodled Nicky Hilton's name on her stationery if Nick was being looked after by Betsy von Furstenburg.

Reporters asked her that question after the trial, however, and she said, "Oh, I doodle all the time. There was never anything between me and Nicky. He's such a nice boy."

"But didn't you secretly hope to marry him?" one girl reporter asked.

"Not at all," Chata insisted. "I'm an incurable doodler. Only this morning I was doodling the name of my lawyer. I was doodling, 'Esperanza Rosenthal.'"

The reporters laughed, and so did Chata. None of them asked her why Hilton couldn't have called a hotel doctor to treat him, or why Betsy von Furstenburg couldn't have taken a next-door suite to him. After all, Nicky's father, Conrad, owned the hotel. Why did he have to move in on Chata Wayne and impose upon her hospitality?

When Duke had finished his testimony and both sides had spat their venom into the public record Judge Ashburn took a deep breath. "In a case of recrimination such as this," he announced, "the court may grant to each of the parties a divorce. The court finds that this is a case in which it is eminently proper to follow this procedure."

HE REMINDED the couple who were originally married in the Long Beach, California, Presbyterian Church on January 17, 1946, that they would lay themselves open to a charge of bigamy if they remarried before a year had elapsed.

"Do you understand that, Mrs. Wayne?" he asked.

"Yes, sir," Chata said meekly.

"And do you understand, Mr. Wayne?"

Duke nodded. "I do," he boomed, shouting the very same words which had gotten him Chata and all his ensuing trouble.

After the trial, Duke went home where the doctors put him to bed and prescribed a long rest. A week later he was vacationing in Mexico City.

As for Chata, she began living the hectic social life long denied her. She showed up at the première of How To Marry A Millionaire with Steve Cochran.

When asked if she and Steve were serious about each other, the former Mrs. Wayne described him in terms she had previously reserved for Nicky Hilton. "He's such a nice boy," she said.

As she entered the Fox Wilshire Theatre on Cochran's arm, one of the many autograph hunters swarming around the place, pointed to her and said, "There's the dame who dragged John Wayne through the mud for thirty pieces of silver."

A photographer who happened to overhear the girl, tapped her on the shoulder. "You're wrong," he said, "by exactly 450,000 pieces of silver." END

COMIC RELIEF

■ During the entire John Wayne divorce trial there were only three times when the actor managed to laugh: once when a reporter sent him a note saying, "I understand this whole trial is a publicity gimmick for a Wayne-Fellows production entitled I Married A WAC." He laughed again when an extremely ardent female fan brushed against him in the hall outside the courtroom and said, "John, you can give me a subpoena any time you want." The third time, a girl sneaked up behind him while the trial was in progress, threw her arms around his neck, and kissed him on the cheek. Photographers made Kathlyn Koulos, eighteen, a Los Angeles city stenographic clerk, do it all over again. Wayne said he didn't mind one bit, and even Chata laughed.

YOU GET MANY LOVELY THINGS Without Money!

Over 300,000 women have received luxuries, conveniences and necessities for their homes this easy way — without money! You select what you want from our catalog showing hundreds of well-known "name-brand" products as a reward for introducing a few friends or relatives to the famous SIGNET CLUB PLAN. You help them, because they get EXTRA VALUE without extra cost. It's really easy, no experience necessary. Send Coupon today for new 1954 Catalog. No obligation. ACT NOW!

MAIL THIS COUPON TODAY

SIGNET CLUB PLAN (Established 1925)
265 Third St., Cambridge 42, Mass. M-33
Please send me your FREE CATALOG and everything I need to easily form a SIGNET CLUB.
Name..
Address..
Town..
State..
We serve East of Mississippi River only

Take Tabcin® BRAND
TO EASE COLD MISERY
AT ALL DRUG STORES

SEW FOR CASH
Use our patterns, materials, directions in your own home, full or part time. We buy from you.
Tie of the Month Club
216 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago (7), Ill.

LEARN AT HOME

- to be a Nurse's Aide
- Practical Nurse
- or Infant Nurse

Prepare in spare time for a fascinating, high-pay career. Thousands of men and women, 18-60, are graduates of this physician-endorsed course. High school not required. Easy payments; earn as you learn. Trial plan. 55th year.
CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 232, 25 East Jackson Blvd., Chicago 4, Ill.
Please send me free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.
*Name*____________________
*City*____________ *State*______ *Age*____

jane's strange interlude

(Continued from page 33) for each other. Before they plunge ahead into second marriage, they want to be as sure as possible that they are right.

Jane married the first young man who came into her life. Before she met Geary Steffen (Marshall Thompson introduced him) she had a successful career in Hollywood. But that's all she had.

"I have no real friends here," she used to say. "If you don't drink, smoke or go partying, you're left to yourself. I'd like to get married."

She was unhappy at home; her parents were involved in divorce; she was drowning in loneliness, she felt that she was a wayfarer between two worlds; and she unwittingly used her marriage to Geary Steffen as an escape. Maybe that's one reason the marriage didn't last.

Of course there were lots of reasons. Although Jane had been miserable at home, she found that marriage per se is not the answer. From the outside her marriage to Geary Steffen looked idyllic, but Jane didn't find it easy.

THAT WAS the situation when she started working on Three Sailors And A Girl. That's when she fell in love with Gene Nelson. And that's why Jane left Geary and Gene left Miriam.

Jane doesn't want to make the same mistake twice. She doesn't want to try to escape from an intolerable situation by the first route she finds open to her—only to find her situation intolerable again. Gene Nelson agrees.

That's why they are not seeing each other for a while. They have not made a permanent break. The day after MGM issued Jane's statement, Gene telephoned her to say, "Darling, I think I'll go down to Palm Springs for a few days. The phone's been ringing like mad. Everyone wants to know about you and me. You'd think the world had come to an end."

That Saturday, Gene had custody of his little son. He went fishing with Chris in the morning, took him to a horse show in the afternoon, returned him to Miriam that night.

A day later, Gene was down in the desert, away from it all. He takes flying lessons and he managed to add four hours in the air to his log. From Palm Springs he called Janie again, just to find out how she was. Does this sound like a final, conclusive break?

Jane couldn't go to Palm Springs because she was rehearsing for a picture. She went to the Julius Caesar première and the Mocambo and the annual Screen Photographers' Ball escorted by Pat Nerney, the former husband of Mona Freeman.

Twice during the evening, she ran into her former husband, Geary Steffen. Somehow or other Steffen always seems to be seated near Jane. At the Photographers' Ball with Ann Alexander, he sat right next to Jane. Jane asked to be moved.

"I don't mind these things myself," she says, "but it is sometimes embarrassing to my escort and the other people around."

If Jane wanted Geary back, she could probably have him. Apparently, however, Jane is determined to maintain her freedom for a while.

It cost her a great deal. In the divorce settlement, she gave Geary three lots worth $15,000 adjoining their apartment house in North Hollywood. She gave him a $16,000 note which she has been paying off at the rate of $200 a month plus interest. She agreed to assume all the financial obligations and liabilities of the marriage, including income tax. Geary got his insurance business (in which policies on Jane's life are a major asset) stock in an automobile business, and some other financial advantages.

Jane Powell's lawyer was against this kind of financial settlement, but Jane was adamant.

She believes in making firm decisions and plans and acting on them at once. She cannot abide temporizing and indecision. Gene Nelson goes slowly.

At the cost of half her worldly goods and some debts, on August 6, 1953, Jane obtained an interlocutory divorce decree scheduled to become final on August 6, 1954. She assumed that Gene would follow suit and that his wife would file for divorce a few weeks later. At this writing it hasn't happened. That's the "situation" which Jane mentioned in her announcement.

GENE NELSON has been discussing divorce with his wife for months. Through her attorney, Bernie Silbert, Miriam Nelson has agreed to give Gene a divorce "but she wants a fair and equitable settlement for herself and their child." She wants 25% of his gross earnings and a minimum of $450 a month as a guarantee.

Gene says, "The way my lawyer figures it out, that comes to about 65% of my net income. I think that's a little too stiff. I don't see how I can pay that and have enough money left to support another household. I don't want to go into another marriage and get behind the eight ball, psychologically, because I can't hold up my end of the expenses."

In other words, Nelson doesn't ever want to find himself in Geary Steffen's position.

"I can't commit myself to an agreement," he says, "in which I am prevented, financially, from re-marrying."

What does Miriam Nelson have to say about all this? "I'm not talking to anyone about Gene and me," she states. "Ever since he and Jane decided to stop seeing each other for a while, my phone has been buzzing every few minutes. Reporters want to know if Gene and I are reconciling. They should ask Gene, not me."

Just before Gene took off for New York to appear on Omnibus, he said, "There's been no breakup between Jane and me. We sat down and had a heart-to-heart talk. We've been seeing an awful lot of each other, maybe too much. I've got problems to solve and at the same time I've got to go on making a living and planning for the future.

"I want to do what's right for everyone. I explained that to Jane. She's a wonderful girl. She understands. She's willing to give me time to put my house in order and to take the steps that have to be taken.

"Under these circumstances, it wouldn't be fair for her to sit around, twiddling her thumbs, waiting for me and my lawyers to reach a decision, if a decision can be reached. She's entitled to do anything she wants to do. It certainly is not fair for

Did Gregory Peck ever get you out of a jam?

IT'S WORTH $10

Did you know Rita Hayworth when she sang with a band?

Did you watch Bob Wagner when he used to caddy for Bing Crosby?

IF IT HAPPENED TO YOU . . . AND IT WAS AMAZING . . .

IF YOU KNEW A STAR WHEN...SHE HADN'T STARTED SHINING...

IF YOU SAW IT HAPPEN . . . AND COULD HARDLY BELIEVE IT . . .

Then we want to know about it! Write up your experience with a movie star—any movie star—we love 'em all!—and make sure that you tell your story in 250 words or less. If you took pictures of (or with) the star, be sure to include them. Then mail it all to the Feature Editor, MODERN SCREEN, 261 5th Avenue, New York, New York. Sorry we can't reply personally, but we've just doubled the ante, so we're now paying $10 for every incident we print. Tell us about it now—but remember—it has to be unusual!

nopolize her time, and I know it.

"We decided that until I straighten out my affairs, it will be best if she dates other fellows. She's a free agent now, and perhaps she'll come across some guy she's nuts about. Then again, maybe she won't. But certainly, she's entitled to the opportunity."

Jane, on the other hand, would be satisfied to continue dating Gene on an exclusive basis if only he would reach some financial settlement with his wife.

JANE DOESN'T say this but it's hard for her to understand why—since she was willing to give Geary Steffen practically everything he asked for—Gene isn't willing to do the same thing. She feels that Nelson should give Miriam what she's asking for, get his divorce, and then make plans with her for a 1954 marriage.

Gene, on the other hand, knows that he must be able to support two households. But his lawyer and Miriam's had reached an impasse and Jane, having divorced her husband, ostensibly to marry Gene, was finding her position untenable.

Gene asked for the right to work things out in his own way without pressure.

Jane said okay, but she just wasn't going to be caught holding the bag. Suppose Gene didn't get a divorce? Suppose the financial settlement was never reached? What was she supposed to do?

It was then that both Jane and Gene decided to stop seeing each other until Nelson can work out his problem. Once he decides what he wants to do, he and Jane can take up where they left off, provided Jane finds no new loves in the interim.

Once they reached this decision, Jane, forthright as ever, said, "I'm not going to sit around the house waiting for Gene to make up his mind. I know he can't help feeling like this about things. I know he wants to be sure, and maybe I've been pressing him too hard, but while he's making up his mind, I'm certainly going to have other dates.

"Stories to the effect that we've had a big fight are not true. It's just that the timing has been bad. Our agreement not to see each other for a while was a joint decision. We're not mad, and we feel friendly toward each other. I speak to Gene on the telephone all the time."

Gene Nelson may well worry about his financial status. Last year, after grossing $43,000, he had a net of only $14,000. If he were to give his wife 25% of his total earnings, he would wind up with about $8,000.

Now, $8,000 is not an awful lot of money for a Hollywood star. As a single man Gene might get along on that sum very well—he has gotten along on much less—but that $8,000 annual income would look extremely small in comparison to Jane Powell's earnings. Her Metro salary is $2,500 a week and in night clubs she's good for as much as $10,000 a week.

Gene has no intention of becoming "a kept husband." He is also worried about having two careers in one family. Miriam obligingly broke up her career to give all of her time to being Mrs. Nelson when Gene got his Warner Brothers contract. Jane has had a career all her life and she has no intention of renouncing it.

Jane feels that love and the togetherness of marriage will solve these problems. She's impatient, but she's willing to give Gene all the time he needs to make his final decision.

If he takes too long, he may lose her. This is a risk they are both willing to take. Jane is gambling that her presence will strengthen Gene's resolve to get a divorce. If her strategy doesn't work, she is prepared to take the consequences.

As a friend of hers recently remarked, "it's better to have loved and lost than to have lived only in a vacuum." END

(You may see Jane Powell in MGM's A Bride For Seven Brothers.)

---

just for the records

(Continued from page 8) Shaw album brings up the trend of which it is a successful part—that is, recording broadcasts by bands rather than having them recorded in studios. Broadcasts, as this album shows, are greatly superior in several ways. A recording studio has no audience to encourage the musicians. And in a studio a band is supposed to play a number for three minutes. An inspired extra chorus or two is verboten, and lost to the customers. Naturally, the spontaneity and vigor and enthusiasm of such recent albums (all made from performances during broadcasts, concerts, or dances) as the superb Columbia sets by Goodman, Harry James, and Turk Murphy, the Louis Armstrong jobs for Decca, M-G-M's Woody Herman album, and certain of the "Jazz At The Philharmonic" compendiums on Mercury, would be impossible to catch if these same bands had tried to do the tunes in a studio.

The record industry is changing, expanding, and, I believe improving. I think it is all to the good that Ava Gardner took her assignment to make some MGM faces with George Shearing so seriously. I think it is good that the record companies have finally recognized the value and appeal of movie music—not hit songs, but background music. Background music is sometimes very, very good, as in Limelight, Moulin Rouge and The Robe. But most of all I am taken by high fidelity—or, as it's usually called, hi-fi.

Not the least of its delights is that it is not necessarily expensive. It would, of course, be misleading to suggest that a custom-built set costing more than a thousand dollars doesn't have a considerable edge over cheaper models produced on a mass basis. It would be equally unfair not to point out that for less than $150 one can buy an impressively good set. RCA Victor sells its excellent "Victrola" Table Phonograph for $139.95. Columbia has one—the 360 Table Columbia—for the same price, and for $24.95 more, you can buy the X-D roving speaker attachment. The Webcor, another splendid brand, costs $149.50. I am also greatly taken with the qualities of the celebrated portable known as the Libertyphone, which costs $199.50. This set plays both sides of records in sequence, and the price is an agreeable surprise.

Since price is always a vital factor, there should be plenty of interest in the new Camden label, which is being produced by RCA Victor. An EP (which plays at 45 rpm and includes some seven minutes of music on each side) retails at only 69¢, while a 12-inch LP costs $1.89. There have been inexpensive labels before, but none I can remember that offer as much as Camden does. This is absolutely top quality stuff, most of it taken from the RCA Victor catalogue. To prepare it, they made tapes of the old masters, edited the tapes, equalized the levels and increased the frequency response. The Camdens are marvels of technology as well as of music. I have one quarrel with the project. Victor is saving Marilyn Monroe, whom it has under contract, for its own more expensive label. I believe that Miss Monroe, who doesn't sing badly, should be made available to the largest public possible. END

BLONDES are so popular!

Natural blondes whose hair bas darkened, brunettes or redheads—with Marchand's Golden Hair Wash you can lighten just a little or turn sunshine bright! Have flashing highlights or one dramatic streak. Not a dye. Complete home hair lightener famous for over 40 years. Lightens arm and leg hair, too.

60c and 90c, plus tax

OR if you don't plan to lighten–

Use a Marchand's RINSE after each shampoo for flattering highlights and temporary color . . . to blend gray streaks. 12 shades. 6 Rinses 25c 2 Rinses 10c

NEW TOWELS

LARGE SIZE! Assorted Colors. New! Not seconds. Money-back guarantee. Order Now! Supply limited. 12 for $1.00

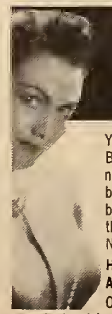
TOWEL SHOP, Dept. 106, Box 881, St. Louis 1, Mo.

"How to MAKE MONEY with Simple CARTOONS"

A book everyone who likes to draw should have. It is free; no obligation. Simply address FREE BOOK

CARTOONISTS' EXCHANGE
Dept. 432, Pleasant Hill, Ohio



"HONEY BUMPS"
Newest Hollywood Rage!
BUST PROFILES

You can't have a full-busted figure? Nonsense! Honey Bumps perform bosom miracles! They're softest, aerated, non-crushable, washable "foam-tone." Worn inside your bra and "real as life." Can't slip or slide—they cup and blend perfectly with the curves of your body because they're anatomized—looking exactly like Nature's own. No embarrassing store fittings.

HAVE MOVIE STAR GLAMOUR INSTANTLY. A NEW BUST PROFILE... PREPAID ONLY $3

Order today. State size . . . A (small) B (flat) C (sagging). Prepaid in plain wrapper, $3.00 per pair or C.O.D. $3.00 plus postage. "Honey Bumps," Dept. T. 5864 Hollywood Blvd., Hollywood 28, Calif.

heston's ivory tower

(Continued from page 45) and sprawling, because that's how profits are made in rental units.

The La Brea Towers are near all the motion picture studios. This is particularly convenient for Chuck since his contract with Paramount is a very special one. He not only has the right to appear on as many TV shows as he can crowd into his schedule, but he also has the right to do outside pictures. He doesn't have much opportunity for outside work since Paramount suffers from a dearth of contract players who can play straight dramatic leads.

Last January, the Hestons signed the lease for their new apartment and had worked themselves into a fever of enthusiasm about furnishing it when Paramount decided to shoot The Legend Of The Incas in Peru.

"Just think of it," Chuck was told. "You can take Lydia to Peru with you."

"But she wants to furnish our apartment," Heston pointed out. "After all my time out here, we finally got a place of our own."

"Let her stay behind," someone suggested. But the only trouble with the Heston marriage has always been the separation of wife and husband. Now, they had the opportunity for a trip together.

There wasn't a doubt in Lydia's mind. "I'm going with you," she said, and with that, she called up three friends and turned over the job of decorating the Heston apartment to them.

Two of the friends, Milburn Stone and Walter Sande, are actors who own a custom cabinet shop on the side. They made all the major furniture pieces in the apartment. They designed the intricate music cabinet that houses all the electronics devices—the TV set, the wire recorder, the high fidelity unit. They made the simple birch dining table and the marble-topped coffee tables in the living room, also the all-inclusive headboard that goes with the Hestons' over-scale bed.

This fine example of well-wrought cabinetwork contains everything but a towel rack. There's a speaker that connects to the hi-fi system. Reading lights snap on when you open the little compartment doors; and night tables are integral parts of this whole surprisingly utilitarian unit.

The third friend helping to decorate the Heston apartment was Gladys Miller, an interior decorator who was responsible for doing over Blair House in Washington, D. C. and supervising the decor of the new Statler hotel in Los Angeles.

Before Chuck and Lydia left for Lima, they told her that "what we like is good contemporary furniture, solid colors, and things without legs."

"I hate chairs with thin, pipestem legs," Chuck said. "I have a feeling they'll never be able to support me."

For Gladys Miller, decorating the Heston place was no snap. Every time she found some exciting new fabric or an interesting lamp base, she'd have to fly samples and snapshots to South America for her clients' approval.

The intercourse was extensive but eventually it was agreed that she would furnish the living-dining room in two contrasting woods: dark mahogany and birch. Gladys covered the contour couches in neutral grey and saved the splashes of solid color for the two oversize hassocks and the dining chairs.

For economy and for a pleasing uniformity throughout the apartment, Gladys used one continuous carpeting, and she repeated the same shantung draperies at every window.

In the extra bedroom which also serves as Chuck's den, she slip-covered two day beds in eye-opening turquoise cotton. She arranged them at right angles with a lamp table at the head of both beds. When the Hestons have no houseguests, these serve as couches.

Knowing Chuck's habit of stretching full-length while listening to his recordings, the decorator used a wonderfully practical bedspread of moss green corduroy on the master bed.

Through the years the Hestons have been traveling so much that they've made it a point to acquire few belongings. Now that they regard their Hollywood spot as "more or less permanent," they've begun to acquire modern candelabras of wrought iron and brightly colored ceramic ashtrays, and other bric-a-brac.

Up to now, they have tried to limit their possessions to clothes, books, recordings, and a camera.

When Chuck and Lydia returned from Peru, their apartment was just about done. They had moved in and settled down when Lydia was offered the irresistible lead in the Chicago company of The Seven Year Itch.

The same old story. Only this time, Lydia had such fond memories of the Hollywod apartment she'd left behind that she rented one in Chicago and had it redecorated.

The three great centers of show business in the U. S. are New York, Chicago, and Hollywood. Between them, Chuck and Lydia have all three centers covered. No matter where he's working, whether it's on screen, stage, TV, or radio, Chuck Heston has a home for his T-shirt. It is more economical for the Hestons to pay rent than it is for them to pay hotel bills.

All three apartments cost him less than $500 a month, and the way the big boy from the Michigan backwoods has been going lately, five bills a month is not extravagant. On Hollywood's success ladder Charlton Heston is climbing quickly and he's getting close to the highest rung. END

---

the waiting game

(Continued from page 41) apartment? I understand she and Greg took up in London from where they left off in Rome."

Greta Peck has been accused of being dull, blind, skittish, naive, stubborn, foolish, fearful, and unknowing. Actually, she is the world's number one authority on the loves, the trials, the thoughts, the moods, and the ways of Eldred Gregory Peck.

No one need tell her about Audrey Hepburn, Hildegarde Neff, Veronica Pasanie, Jane Griffiths, or any of the women with whom her husband has been linked. She knows about all of them. She knows which of the affairs were professional, which were innocent, and which were flirtatious. And she holds none of them against Greg.

Audrey Hepburn, she asserts, is as sweet and honorable as any young actress who has ever stepped in front of a camera. Audrey is, in fact, much closer to Greta than she is to Greg.

In Mrs. Peck's own words, "She is one of the nicest persons I have ever met. My house and hospitality are hers whenever she cares to use them.

"As a matter of fact, I refuse to be disturbed one bit about Greg's social life. We've been separated since last January. The separation was by mutual consent. There's nothing legal about it. Neither of us has consulted a lawyer."

"But what about all those stories," Mrs. Peck was asked, "to the effect that you admitted that you and Greg had separated?"

"I think I did say that," the Finnish-born Greta conceded, "but I didn't mean that Greg and I had decided upon any legal separation, or that we were angry with each other."

"But isn't it true that last winter before you decided to take the three children back to the States you and Greg had a slam-bang fight in Paris? Isn't it true that you blew your top because of his indiscretions and started throwing plates at him? Isn't it true that when you left Europe you weren't on speaking terms with him?"

Greta Peck laughed. "I've never thrown plates in my life. That's for a Mack Sennett comedy. None of that is true.

"Here is what I know and most people don't understand. Greg has never had a fling. He's the child of divorced parents. As a boy he wasn't very happy. He went to school on a scholarship, never had much money. He came up the hard way, and he's always worked long and hard.

"In Europe he decided that he wanted his fling. I think he has a terrific right to it. He would never deliberately hurt anyone. Neither of us discussed anything pertaining to a divorce.

"I think he should have as much time as he wants to think things out. It's not as if he were some foolish young playboy. I think his conduct abroad has been circumspect. He has been working, working, working. He has been going from one picture into another. I know it sounds very romantic here, but jumping from London to Berlin to Munich to India isn't exactly a picnic.

"Wherever he has been, he has thought of his family. He writes frequently, and as you probably know, he's an extremely generous man. When his agent, Lou Wasserman, flew over to Europe a few months ago, Greg loaded him down with all sorts of wonderful German toys for the boys.

"I think Greg is entitled to do whatever he feels he must do at this point. No matter what you hear or what you read, we're perfectly good friends. Anything I can do for him, I certainly will do. He is still my husband, and I am still his wife."

There is no rancor in Greta's heart, no hate in her soul, no bitterness in her mind. Many people in Hollywood, petty and smug and venomous, cannot understand the fundamental goodness of this woman. They cannot abide her patience and understanding.

They say, "She just doesn't know anything about men. She is letting Greg have his cake and eat it, too. Anything he wants is all right with her. Just imagine her sending the boy over to Paris to spend Christmas with Greg!"

They were referring to the flight of Jonathan Peck, age nine, across the Atlantic a few weeks ago to see his father.

Late in October, after he had finished Night People in German, Greg wrote to Greta, saying he was scheduled to make The Purple Plains in India early in 1954. He was wondering if Jonathan might spend the Christmas holidays with him in Europe before he pulled out for Asia.

Greg has always been close to his three sons. They used to take long hikes together, go on beach parties, and attend ball games. Apparently, none of the children has any idea that there is any strain between their mother and father.

Had Greta Peck been a vengeful, predatory sort of woman she could have said to Greg when she received his letter. "If you want to see Jonathan, you can catch the first plane home. You've got some nerve asking that a nine-year-old boy fly the Atlantic both ways alone!"

But Greta Peck answered, "Jonathan would love to go."

And then she began to make the arrangements. Her first-born who looks very much like his father, took off from the Los Angeles International airport on December 6. He was met in New York by Greta's sister, Ann Whalen and a TWA representative. A little while later, thrilled and excited he was winging across the ocean, bound for Paris.

Greg was waiting for his son at Orly Airport and took him to his apartment, a fashionable flat in a fashionable building on the Avenue d'Iena which he had sublet from an English friend, Rodney Soher.

As for Greg, you can imagine what the sight of his son did to him! You can imagine how he felt as Jonathan told him tales of his other sons; of Steve, six, and Carey, four, and of how they missed him, especially on Saturdays and Sundays when they all used to go down to the beach.

IT HAPPENED TO ME

I was operating the elevator in a big department store in Miami. One busy morning I glanced at the floor and was startled to see two beautifully manicured bare feet and two nice masculine bare feet! My own feet were killing me, and I looked up to see who could be courageous enough to go shopping barefoot. Gail Russell and Guy Madison smiled pleasantly at my dumbfounded stare.

Mrs. William S. Wiebur
Miami Springs, Florida

GREGORY PECK is a complex introvert and a man of conscience. Words don't form rapidly on his tongue. He launches them one by one, and when he is asked such questions as: "What, exactly, is the status of your marriage?" he thinks for a moment, starts to answer, and then, as he answered in Berlin recently, he says, "I'd rather not talk about it. Any word on the subject should come from Mrs. Peck."

When pressed, he does answer. Of Hildegarde Neff: "You can take my word for it. That's all nonsense, just nonsense. The only time I met her was in London, before the Christmas of 1952. We met at the première of Snows Of Kilimanjaro. I haven't seen her since."

Of Audrey Hepburn: "I haven't seen Audrey for months and months. She's been in the States and I've been in Europe. We played together in Roman Holiday. She's a wonderful girl and a talented actress and a friend of the whole family."

Of Veronica Pasanie: "Well, sure I know her. I've seen her in Paris a couple of times. But there's nothing to it."

"Nothing to it," Gregory Peck says—but how about a few months ago at the Villa Sunshine in Sardinaux on the French Riviera? How about a few months ago at Cannes? How about last year in Italy? He was always with Veronica Pasanie.

When he had to fly back to London, who drove him to the airport from St. Tropaz? Who met him the last time he arrived in Paris? Who flew into a rage at photographers who took her picture?

It was twenty-one-year-old Veronica Pasanie, the half-Italian, half-Russian journaliste, who knows how to slip into a resort unobtrusively, who has no fame, arouses no attention, and lives seemingly only for Gregory Peck.

ONE OF Veronica's friends who lives not far from her on the Avenue Franklin Roosevelt in Paris, says, "Veronica is one of those European girls who has lived more in a few years than most American women live in a lifetime. She speaks half a dozen languages, and her eyes have seen many sights, some good, some terrible. She hopes that Gregory Peck will marry her.

"But she is too smart to broach the subject of marriage. She is content to do whatever Greg says. If he says, 'Meet me at Cannes,' she will meet him at Cannes. If he says, 'I think I'll go to St. Moritz', she will turn up at St. Moritz.

"In France, except for Paris, there are no such creatures as career women. That's true of most European countries. In America, they say at least 20% of all married women work. In Europe, wifehood is a girl's career. If Veronica can ever marry Gregory Peck, that is all she wants.

"Why does Peck like Veronica so much? She is not nearly so attractive as Mrs. Peck. She is younger, maybe more knowledgeable in a way. She never talks of marriage, and she wants only to please him. It is flattering.

"I have seen him and I have talked to him. He is a prudent man, and I don't think he will ever marry her. But he is tremendously fond of her, all the same. She never nags, never complains that he does not want to go to night clubs or prominent hotels, or that he won't have her around while he is working.

"When he was in Berlin and Munich with all those people from Hollywood, the 20th Century crowd, Veronica was back in Paris.

"Maybe she will show up in India when he goes. The chances are good. But I don't think she will win him from Mrs. Peck. This Mrs. Peck is a smart woman. I guess it is because she has a European background. She was born in Finland, you know, and in Finland, too, they teach young girls that marriage is not one eternal glow of sunshine.

"If Mrs. Peck were the typical Hollywood wife, shouting and screaming and threatening to ruin her husband, the contrast between her and Veronica would be so great that Greg wouldn't have so much to think out. But she is not only the mother of his three sons. She is behaving like the Christian lady she is. No temper tantrums, no outraged interviews; only impenetrable calm.

"He wants to see his son; so she sends his son. He wants to come back to Europe after Purple Plains to do Moby Dick with John Huston, so she says, 'Fine. Do whatever you think best.' There is no traditional American high-pressure.

"I know Veronica Pasanie and I have seen her operate. She is very smart, but not the smartest young chick can triumph over a tolerant wife. The wife who finds inconstancy intolerable usually loses.

"Greta Peck is not such a wife. She knows what all European women know, that transgression is a factor in most marriages, and that it must be handled with tact, forbearance, and forgiveness.

"Greta knows that fundamentally her husband is a good man, a kind man—and such men are hard to find.

"I predict that some time this year Greta will have her husband back, and Veronica will have her memories." END

Yes, this new 21-card assortment is really yours for 1c, just to prove how easily a little spare time can earn you $50.00 or more in cash! Just see these lovely All-Occasion Greeting Cards—and you'll want to start showing them to friends and neighbors. You make up to 50c profit per box. Make extra profits with a complete selection of Name-Imprinted Greetings, Personal Stationery, Gift Wrappings. Prices as low as $1.00 per box.

Only One to a Family! Limited Offer!

Just send postcard and ask for the 1c box. Send no money! We will send the 21-card box, for which you will owe us 1c. We'll also include additional assortments ON APPROVAL, together with Money-Making Plan and FREE Personalized Samples. Hurry. We have only a small quota of 1c boxes. Write postcard to ARTISTIC CARD CO., INC.

215 Way Street, Elmira, N. Y.

New, Easy Way To Get Your
HIGH SCHOOL DIPLOMA!

Your chances of getting ahead are so much better with a high school diploma! Now you can finish high school at home, without interfering with your job. Simplified Wayne training offers your choice of the approved subjects you need. Diploma awarded. Act now. Send for FREE catalog today!

WAYNE SCHOOL Catalog HAF-23,
2527 Sheffield Avenue, Chicago 14, Illinois

DE LUXE Type for Framing

FREE! FREE!
Photo of Your Favorite
MOVIE STAR
Big Bargain . . . NOT small pocket size, but LARGE, ACTUAL PORTRAIT. Also FREE Beautiful Catalog. FREE! Many additional pictures of popular stars on cover. FREE! Tells how to get HOME ADDRESSES, BIRTHDAYS and PHOTOS of STARS' HOMES. Send only 15c for handling. 2 photos for 25c. Rush to:
HOLLYWOOD FILM STAR CENTER
Box 2309, Dept. L-2, Hollywood 28, Calif.

DANCING SHOES—SUPPLIES
BATON—DRUM CORPS SUPPLIES
SKATING SKIRTS—Roller or Ice.
24 Page Catalog 10c (applied to purchase)
Quincon Dance Supplies, Box 422, Quincy 69, Mass.

GIRLS 18-28 . . . BE AN
AIRLINE HOSTESS

Trainees urgently needed by major airlines, earn top-flight pay, vacations, benefits! NOW, TRAIN IN YOUR HOME. . . for a career flying the airways to the glamour capitals of the world; Paris, London, Rio De Janeiro. Meet exciting and interesting air travelers, celebrities. Romance and adventure can now be yours.

DON'T WAIT, SEND FOR DETAILS NOW! FREE!!!

NATIONAL AIR INSTITUTE UNIT #10241
Hostess-Stewardess Division, Dept. D-1
International Airport, Los Angeles 45, Calif.
Name..................Age..........
Full Address..................

He's a hard guy with a car or a cow but

TONY THROWS NO BULL

■ When Anthony Quinn arrived in Rome he soon found that he had to have rapid transportation from one studio to another for the three pictures he was working on simultaneously. He asked the director of one of the films to help him buy a car.

The director took Tony to a popular automobile agency. The first car he was shown was a beauty, costing four and one-half million lire, approximately seven thousand dollars. Tony was flabbergasted, trying to conceal his shock by saying nonchalantly, "That's a little more than I want to pay."

The next car Tony looked at cost about six thousand dollars in American money. He said, "Too much money." The director seemed a little upset but he took Tony to another agency where they found a pretty snappy car for about five thousand bucks.

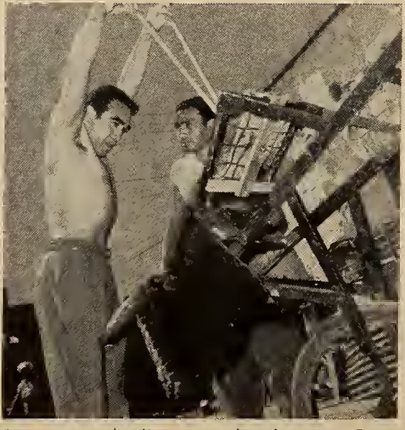
Tony told his friend that he did not have that kind of dough, either. The friend exploded. Throwing his hands up he said, "What's the matter with you? A big American movie star can't go riding around Rome in a cheap car! You have to make a good impression in a suitable car. I give up. You can find the automobile you want without embarrassing me!"

Tony let the matter drop. When he went to Paris for a short vacation, he happily bought a secondhand Jaguar. When he returned to Rome, he didn't have the nerve to tell his friend that he had purchased a used car. His story is that a friend in Paris who was going to America for six months lent him the Jaguar. And he sticks to it.

In a Mexican bull fighters' training schaal, Tany learned haw ta hold a muleta.

Instructars Paca and Pepe Radriguez taught him the technique af paso depecho.

Pepe helped Tany with the chicuelina, described the star as a very apt pupil.



As a grand climax ta his lessans, Paca taught Tany the way ta "put in banderillos." terry and bob

(Continued from page 35) swimming pool, because most pools are not clear enough for color photography. Finally I found it—an oval, forty-foot pool on the estate of author John Tucker Battle, who wrote The Frogmen and is now working on the Walt Disney epic, 20,000 Leagues Under the Sea. Then I called Terry and Bob, my wife packed a picnic lunch and we set off on our undersea adventure, deep in the heart of Encino.

Me, I never had it so easy. With all my equipment, including the watertight French Undiphot camera case, I just sank to the bottom of the pool, ready to take pictures. With Terry and Bob, it was different. First we had to find the right bathing suit for Terry—a special tank suit, designed by Jo Lathwood. It's sort of like the suit that famous oldtime swimmer, Annette Kellerman, used to wear back in grandma's day, except without the skirt. Bob was no problem, except that he put one toe in the water and yelled, "Wow!" I didn't blame him; Mr. Battle's pool is completely unheated, and no matter what they say about the famous California climate, the water in December out here is so frigid the fish sometimes come up to shore hoping to spot a bonfire.

At any rate, my two actor folk jumped into the ten feet of water and began to act. These two kids are terrific swimmers. I don't have to say this; the pictures speak for themselves. My wife timed them as they went under water, and they stayed down as long as a minute, enabling me to shoot two color pictures at a time. We started at ten-thirty, then broke for our roast beef sandwich lunch and fifteen minutes later we were at it again. I know you're supposed to wait for an hour before going back in after eating, but these kids had studio work to do and couldn't play all day.

Fun? Bob and I turned blue, but that incredible Moore girl—while we climbed in and out to get warm, she stayed right in there, splashing merrily around between shots.

I just wish we could have had an audience down there with us, but the next best thing is to have these pictures reproduced in MODERN SCREEN's terrific color. Any resemblance between these pictures and honest-to-pete love-making is real and not coincidental, but I promised both Bob and Terry after it was all over that I would make this announcement.

Once someone announced the engagement of Terry Moore and Bob Wagner. It wasn't true. "Don't," they said in practically one voice, "let it happen again."

I won't. The editors of MODERN SCREEN won't. But can we blame you for suspecting that it might really happen one of these days? END ava and frank tell the truth

(Continued from page 31) of the west. Ava was in Palm Springs, but she and her crooner husband were much more than miles apart. They were widely separated by that ole debbil "pride."

I saw Frankie many times during his singing engagement in Las Vegas. At his opening he sang his heart out. Never had he sung love songs with such feeling. He was singing right to Ava. This we all knew. He expected her momentarily and he was a happy boy. He was also proud that he had put on weight. Every time I saw him he said, "I think she will be here any hour." But the hours lengthened into days and no Ava. The impulsive, unpredictable beauty chose to go to Palm Springs instead of joining Frankie. After their reconciliation in New York, he had expected her. Ava says Frankie had never invited her to come to Las Vegas.

Finally, when his tension had built up to such a point he couldn't stand it any longer, Frankie opened his heart to me.

"I can't eat. I can't sleep. I love her."

"You should be telling that to Ava, not to me," I told Frankie. "Why, in heaven's name, don't you telephone her and tell her how you feel? I know she's carrying a torch for you a mile high."

Frankie's lean jaw became set. He shook his head and said, "No, Ava doesn't love me any more. If she did, she'd be here where she belongs—with me. Instead she's in Palm Springs having a wonderful time."

In vain I argued that Ava was just as unhappy as he was and had poured out her heart on more than one occasion.

"C'mon, Frankie," I said, "why don't you telephone?"

"No," he replied. "Ava's wrong this time. I've been wrong other times, but this time it's all her fault. She'll have to call me."

"Why 'wrong'?" I queried.

He hesitated a moment as though he were afraid that what he was going to say might sound foolish. Then he blurted out like a small, hurt boy, "She doesn't understand that I've got a career to worry about, too. Why, Louella, she didn't even come to my opening here! Why would she do a thing like that to me?

"That's only part of it," he continued. "Ever since our marriage, I've been at her beck and call. No matter where she's been, Louella, I've flown to her regardless of the fact that I also had some important engagements. But I was willing to neglect them for her."

I said nothing—just listened. Frankie has a way of disappearing when he doesn't want to talk, and then I defy anyone to locate him. Now he wanted to talk. In fact, he had sought me out. It isn't the first time he's told me his troubles.

Perhaps he wouldn't have been so eager then to unburden himself if he hadn't been so deeply hurt by Ava's failure even to send him a word of greeting on his opening night at the Sands. Frankie is much more sensitive than you'd think. He takes every little thing to heart.

This wasn't a little thing. It was his love for his wife. But a series of little things had piled up until they became veritable mountains in his mind.

"Things happen. The public reads about them and in time forgets them," he said sincerely, "but it isn't as easy for those who experience the supposedly trivial incidents to forget about them.

"For instance, that incident in Italy, at the theatre," he explained. "I've never told anybody what really happened there. I'll tell you so you can see why I wasn't very happy in England afterward."

I knew Frankie was referring to all those stories about how he refused to go on and sing in Naples.

"I was already singing," he said. "My representative in the wings beckoned for me to get off the stage. Seems he had a disagreement with the management over money. I walked off when he called me. The press said I didn't keep my part of the bargain. Then when we were in England, I was upset about it."

"Well, Frankie," I said at the risk of his walking out on me, "you can't blame Ava for that!"

"I'm just trying to show you," he said defensively, "that I needed her sympathy and understanding.

"She wanted me to stay on in London. I didn't want to leave her, of course, but I had to get to New York to rehearse my act at the Riviera. I only had three weeks to get it ready. Ava had to stay in England those three weeks to finish her picture. She simply couldn't understand why I wanted to fly home without her."

I nodded sympathetically. Career vs. Career is an old, old story to me after my years in Hollywood.

"You see what I mean," Frank said eagerly. "My career didn't seem important to her. We were cool when I left England, but I didn't know it was a definite break. Then when I read in the New York papers that Ava was in town and hadn't even let me know when she was arriving, it made everything worse. She didn't come out to the Riviera when I opened. We didn't talk. Finally, she saw my mother. My mother said to her, 'All this fighting is no good. Why don't you telephone Frank?' "

I didn't get out of Frankie whether it was he who first called Ava or whether it was she who telephoned him. The important thing was that they did make up in New York. Ava went to the Riviera and became a wild Sinatra fan. When she's with him, she never can resist him.

So once more they made up. Ava and Frankie always reconcile in the most spectacular manner. I remember well when they were separated in Hollywood about a year ago. Frankie was on the Adlai Stevenson Committee and attended a Democratic Rally. I didn't happen to be there, but those who were did a double take. There were Frankie and Ava on the stage together as happy as happy could be. I have learned through years of experience to stand on the sidelines and watch with the rest of the world for their next move.

All I know is what Frankie and Ava tell me. They both say that they love each other. Well, this is a curious kind of love, but I suppose when two people are so madly in love anything can happen.

When he repeated to me that this time it was all Ava's fault, that she would have to be the one to break down the barrier between them, I took his hand. "Frankie," I said, "you're wrong. Ava's no more at fault than you are. You're proud. She's proud. You're both acting like teen-agers. If you love a girl and she loves you, forget about the things that have happened and try to salvage your life together."

Shortly after that, I returned to Hollywood. I telephoned Ava. She had been avoiding me, saying, "Oh, you're all on Frank's side and wouldn't understand my side of the story."

"You're making the mistake of a lifetime, Ava," I told her. "Frank loves you dearly."

Her voice trembled. "Do you mean it? Do you think he does really love me?" she asked again in wonderment, more like a shy school-girl who isn't sure of herself than a famous movie star and one of the most beautiful women in the world.

"You know he does," I said.

PHOTO CREDITS

Below you will find credited page by page the photographs which appear in this issue:

6,7—Beerman, Parry; 10—Beerman, Parry, Wide World; 12,14—Beerman, Parry; 28—Universal; 29—Engstead; 30—MGM; 31—Wide World; 32—Snyder; 33—Beerman; 34,35—Gowland; 36,37—Wide World, Beerman, Parry; 38,39—Kahle, RKO; 40,41—Bosio; 42,43,44—Beerman, Parry; 46,47—FPG; 48,49—RKO, INP; 50,51—Warner Bros., Beerman, Parry; 52,53—Beerman, Parry; 54,55—Beerman, Parry; 56—Davis.

YOUR FAVORITE VARIETY STORE HAS

Crinkle Tie

TRADE MARK REG.

"The Gift Tie That Curls"

IF YOU WANT TO TIE BOWS LIKE THIS . . .

GET THESE TWO GUIDES TO GREATER GIFT-GIVING SUCCESS!

Be Prepared for Every Gift-Giving Occasion! Buy the King Size Spool for Economy!

This booklet tells you how to tie dozens of bows and special effects!

This booklet tells you how to make scores of expensive-looking gifts easily and quickly from inexpensive Crinkle Tie!

MAIL THIS COUPON TODAY!

CRINKLE TIE
2314 W. Logan Bl., Chicago 47, Ill.

☐ Send me booklet on tying beautiful bows.
☐ Send me Crinkle Craft booklet.

I enclose 10c coin for each booklet I ordered.

Name ....
Address ....
City ....Zone....State..........

DORIS DAY

FREE PHOTO

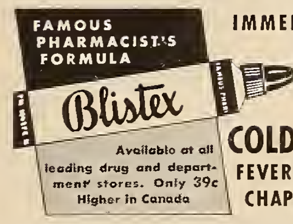
LARGE SIZE of your favorite star

Actual HIGH GLOSS PHOTO suitable for framing

FREE!! MOVIE STAR CATALOG listing thousands of poses and containing 55 ADDITIONAL PICTURES of popular stars.

FREE!! A list giving BIRTHDAYS OF STARS. Send name of your favorite star and only 15 cents to cover handling charge.

MORTON STUDIOS, P. O. Box 2430
Dept. MS-2 Hollywood 28, Calif.



FAMOUS PHARMACIST'S FORMULA

Blistex

Available at all leading drug and department stores. Only 39c Higher in Canada

IMMEDIATE EFFECTIVE RELIEF FOR COLD SORES FEVER BLISTERS

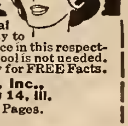
CHAPPED LIPS

BABY SHOES Preserved on

PICTURE FRAME

Baby's precious shoes preserved in metallic bronze-like finish together with photo on handsome 8 x 10 picture frame. ONLY $5.95 Baby's first name engraved IN GOLD! 3-16 in. plate glass for photo supplied. Magnificent lifetime keepsake! Send No Money! Mail shoes & name. Pay postman plus postage on delivery. Satisfaction guaranteed.

Duramic Products, Dept. A-7B
1493 Clybourn, Chicago 10, Ill.



...Train At Home For A WELL PAID CAREER

PRACTICAL NURSING

Help fill the urgent need for Trained Practical Nurses. If you are between 18 and 55, it's easy to train at home in your spare time to take your place in this respected calling. Many earn while learning. High school is not needed. Nurse's equipment included. Mail this ad today for FREE Facts.

Wayne School Of Practical Nursing, Inc.,
2525 Sheffield Ave., Desk K-88, Chicago 14, Ill.
Please rush FREE FACTS and Sample Lesson Pages.

NAME______________________________

Full Address__________________________

"If he really loves me and thinks my career interferes, I'd give it up and anything else, just to be with him," she said softly. "He means more to me than anything else in the world."

As things happened, Ava called her attorney, Neil McCarthy.

That added fire to Frankie's already burning resentment. The finality of consulting an attorney and the resulting publicity made Frankie more adamant than ever. He was right and she was wrong.

There are those who say that both Ava and Frankie are glad to be out of a bad situation. Ava is reported to have said, "You can't compete with three children." She never said it to me. Frank does love his children dearly but Ava has never objected to his seeing them.

Perhaps Ava is right. Perhaps the shadow of Frank's three beautiful children is too much to forget. He took me aside one night in Las Vegas and said, "Have you seen the kids?"

I told him I had seen the children.

"Aren't they wonderful?" he said. "Did you ever see anything cuter than little Tina? She's a smart one!"

Little Frankie has inherited his father's talent and plays the piano beautifully. Nancy, Jr., thirteen, feels keenly any adverse publicity about her adored and adoring father. Perhaps Ava is right.

Yet I firmly believe that Ava also is so much in his heart that he can't forget her. I believe that Ava loves him, but she's so jealous she believes everything people say.

Maybe it seems incongruous that a girl as beautiful and famous as Ava Gardner could be jealous or unsure of her own ability to hold a man. Yet it happens all the time in Hollywood. The make-believe lives these glamorous actresses portray in movies are over when they leave the studio. Offscreen, they can be scared and uncertain about their ability to hold a man.

Ava was jealous. She believed everything she heard or read about him. The most ridiculous story was the one about Deborah Kerr's being the girl Frank was in love with and the real reason for his split with Ava.

Deborah talked to me about this. She scoffed at the gossip and said how foolish it all was. She and Frankie did talk together. Deborah knew he was unhappy and miserable over his estrangement from Ava and he told her his troubles. Deborah and Frank became friends when they worked together in From Here To Eternity."

"We were never anything more than friends," Deborah told me. "I tried to comfort Frank about Ava."

Unfortunately, Ava believed that Deborah and Frankie were talking about their love for each other.

When I was in New York recently, I saw Frank several times. We first met at a party. I thought he looked bad. His nerves were on edge and although every woman in the place had her eyes on him, he chose to draw me aside and sit on the stairs with me so we could talk. Frankie, however, was as stubborn as ever.

"Let me call Ava," I suggested.

"You can't," he said, "I don't know her number. She changed it. My mother telephoned me yesterday," he told me, "and said she had talked with Ava.

"I asked my mother, 'Why didn't Ava call me?" She still thinks Ava and I should get together again.

"'Why don't you telephone Ava?' my mother said."

"Why don't you, Frankie?" I asked him.

"She has to come to me first," he said.

"You mean you want to wreck your whole life just because you're stubborn and she's stubborn?" I asked him. The time and place were different but the situation had not changed. Neither had Sinatra.

What can you do with two people like that? I read that Ava had said to some reporter that she couldn't take Frank any longer, that he was ruining her life. Ava never said that to me. She was a very unhappy little girl who spoke of her love and her problems.

Ava and Frank have had anything but a peaceful marriage. After several delays, they were married in Philadelphia in November, 1951. Almost from the beginning, there were bickerings and quarrels. Frank would leave home in a burst of temper, and reports that Ava had said it was all over between them, that she had all she could take, reached my ears.

Before they were married, Ava went to Spain to make a picture and the papers were full of the love letters and poems dedicated to her by Mario Cabre, the handsome bullfighter, actor and poet.

Cabre was crazy about Ava. Many men have been crazy about her. When Frank heard about this competition, he hurried to Spain, taking along an emerald necklace as a bejewelled token of his love.

It was then that the tempestuous romance between the singer and the actress came out into the open. They had to overcome many obstacles, both legal and financial, before they could marry. But marry they did. No price was too great.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

Last summer in Oslo, Sonja Henie was backstage at the ice show describing the robbery of her furs and money in London.

"Oh, it was awful! He came right into the room and took everything and I woke up and chased him—" Then she turned quickly and whispered joyfully, "But did you see the headlines?"

Marilyn Scarbrough
Fort Worth, Texas

As beautiful as Ava is, I've never known her to look twice at any other man since she married Frank. He seems to think she does, but he's wrong. Ava's whole heart has belonged to Frankie from the time they discovered they were in love. She has told me again and again of her love for him.

Curiously enough, Ava was much more tender, kind and thoughtful when everyone was against Frank. She worried over him and worked as hard as I have seen anybody work to get him the part of Maggio in From Here To Eternity.

Frank wanted to play Maggio more than anything in the world. He paid his own way to the coast to take the screen test. He received only $10,000 for his work. That is comparative chicken feed to Frankie who's earned over $50,000 a week in theatre appearances. He seemed to have an intuition that Maggio would save his career.

And it did. He needed that success.

Frank had throat trouble shortly after his marriage to Ava. His voice seemed to have left him. He couldn't get a job making a picture. He had one terrific flop, Meet Danny Wilson, an embarrassingly bad picture, a sort of semi-biographical story of Sinatra's own career.

Frankie, who is very sensitive, felt he was finished after this film venture.

But happiness, not only with Ava but with his career, brought back his voice. He started to sing as the old Frankie had sung. As one critic said, "There hasn't been anybody as good as Sinatra since Sinatra."

It had been a bitter pill for this boy born in New Jersey to feel he was losing his grip on the fancy of the public. When everyone was asking, "Is Sinatra finished?" no one was more anxious to know the answer than Sinatra himself.

Ava, who stuck by him so closely during those worried months, never for a moment doubted that he would recapture his hold on his fans.

After Eternity, Sinatra's stock soared. Offers poured in. His voice which had troubled him so long was better than ever.

Despite this, Ava insists careers had nothing to do with their troubles. She said, "Will you please say that careers had nothing to do with our separation? There were many things leading to it, but they are all too personal to even tell you. Our problems are our own affair. I won't say I won't make up, but I can't go on with the war we're having."

That was as much as Ava would say, as much as she ever said about her troubles; beyond assuring me she loved Frankie, adored him and would give up everything for him.

I'm sure she meant that. Frankie's high temper and his many quarrels with her were too difficult to take. On the advice of her lawyer, she has said little, but what little she has said had a lot of meaning.

Ava has always felt I was completely on Frank's side. That's because I know Frankie so much better. I've known him so much longer and I've been so much closer to him. He was a friend of my late husband and used to come to the hospital to see Dr. Martin, bring him a book and tell him a story. I could never forget that.

This hasn't influenced me, however, in trying to be fair to Ava. I know she has her difficulties but I do think Frankie needs her and she shouldn't let little silly things break up their marriage. In Hollywood, the town is sharply divided. Frankie's friends are all for him. Ava's friends think she got a raw deal. As for me, I'm on both their sides.

Ava, like Frankie, has tasted the sweet nectar of adulation and success. That's a thing that's hard for any man or woman to give up. There have been instances in which an actress retires at the height of her career but I've never heard of any woman's being really happy about it.

Giving up her career doesn't seem to me to be the solution to Ava's problem. It's not that simple. I know that these two high-strung, highly emotional people believe now that it's all over because this is the first time an attorney has been consulted. The fact that Ava did consult an attorney hurt Frankie deeply and every time I've seen him since, he has mentioned it with great bitterness.

I asked him one night to go out to a nightclub with a group of us.

He reached over and kissed me and said, "I love you, but I'm not going any place in New York where someone will say I'm out on a party where there are girls."

How can you figure out a man like that? He didn't want to hurt Ava by being seen with another girl, no matter how innocently, and yet he is hurting her much worse by his stubborn silence.

Once more I said to him that Ava was miserable and that she, too, hasn't been seen with anyone.

"Then why is she going to Rome to make a picture? How are we going to make up if she's going to be so far away?" he pleaded.

"Do you want to make up again?" I asked.

The look he gave me would have melted Ava had she been anywhere in sight. END

catch ME cookin'!

(Continued from page 39) Whether or not people saw the picture, they were actually aware that Miss Russell was the new queen of sex appeal. Hollywood sweater girls come and go. The turnover is so rapid that most of them barely get accustomed to their claim to fame before a new doll steps into the spotlight and sweeps away her predecessor. This didn't happen to Jane. Through the years she has remained the epitome of the lusty bustline, maintaining a reputation that has defied competition. When she landed opposite Marilyn Monroe in Gentlemen Prefer Blondes, Jane not only held her own, but in many cases copped the better reviews.

As a matter of fact, critics on the whole seemed slightly dazed by the fact that Miss Russell, after all these years of hullabaloo, gave a solid performance marked by a definite talent for comedy. "And," Hollywood screamed in delight, "she can sing! She can even dance!" So they put her in a picture called French Line, in which Russell digs deep into the talent she's had all along and comes up with a performance that runs the gamut and will again snap heads to attention. She has been a myth in America for a long time and has finally come into her own.

Jane Russell doesn't look like the girl next door. She looks like a movie star. I don't mean that she sashays into a cafe dripping with diamonds and mowing down headwaiters. The day of our interview she wore a black velvet vest over a red silk blouse opened at the neck, and matador pants with some kind of gold print. But you don't pay too much attention to her clothes because the first thing you look at (if you're woman) is Jane's face. In repose it is aloof, giving a split second impression that this is a haughty creature. The illusion is dispelled the minute she speaks, and then her face is saucy and friendly and filled with humor. The contrast makes it an interesting face, but the most fascinating thing about it is the smolder. That's the only word for it—a kind of smolder that comes from the eyes, tip-tilted and dark amber in color, that seem to reflect an inner fire. This face has done more than its share in giving Jane Russell her long-standing reputation.

"What about this sex-appeal business?"

She threw up her hands. "I've had it for ten years," she said. "It can be overdone. It's like—well, it's like too much of one thing. You've got to have something else. I think a person who has nothing but sex appeal might as well drop dead.

"Maybe I'm just resigned to it by now. I get awfully sick of it—and of those awful Jane Russell jokes—but I have to remind myself, where would I be without it? No place, probably. So I go along with it." Still, she isn't the kind of star one photographs in an apron.

She laughed. "I'm never in the kitchen. And even if I did slave over a hot stove I wouldn't want to talk about it. Me, I'm just as big a fan as anybody else, and I don't like to know about my favorite movie star's talents with mixing spoons, or how much starch she puts in her old man's shirts. You couldn't catch me in the kitchen if you tried."

"Do you want to kill the legend of Jane Russell?"

"I guess you can't kill it. I don't think I'd want to, not entirely. But I want to do something besides curl my lip and slither."

"You've already done it. I should think you'd consider Gentlemen Prefer Blondes a milestone, because in it you proved you can handle comedy. And now they've given you French Line, which ought to prove even more to a lot of doubting Thomases."

"It was a milestone," she said. "For years I've wanted to do a musical comedy, and from now on it looks as though I'll get my wish."

"Is that all you want to do? Musical comedy, I mean?"

She picked up a fork and banged it on the table with the exuberance for which she is famous. "I want to do *every*thing! Musicals—comedy—tragedy—"

"Tragedy?"

"Sure!" She laughed. "I probably can't do it, but I want to try. I was reading yesterday about another actress and the writer said she was smart because she knows her limitations. I don't! I'll tackle anything to find out if I can do it, even if I fall flat on my face."

"Have you noticed any difference in other people's attitude toward you since Gentlemen Prefer Blondes?"

"Lots. The mail is a lot heavier. And people keep coming up to me and saying, 'Gee, Jane, I didn't know you could sing! Gee, you can carry a tune!' And you know something? All this back-slapping comes a little too late to please me. I've known I could sing since I was in high school, but nobody would give me a chance to prove it. By the time people have found out about it, I'm ready to make another move. Do a Camille, or something like that. If people compliment me on something I don't know I can do, I curl up in appreciation. But that doesn't go for this amazement at my singing. Singing's old hat with me, and I'm not even gracious when people mention it."

Asked if she'd always wanted to be an actress, she shook her head. "Nope. Because my mother was an actress. When I was in high school I came near to flunking anything that bordered on mathematics, but I got top grades in art and music and drama. So I thought I'd do one of those three. I picked on designing and started three different times to designing school but always ended up going to a dramatics school with some buddy of mine." She grinned. "I don't say I learned anything in dramatics classes. It was just the line of least resistance, and okay as long as Mother wasn't pushing me into it.

"I guess I was doomed for it, though. I used to raid Mother's old trunks full of show clothes and dress up in all those silks and satins. I even put make-up on my brothers and draped them in all that stuff and we'd give shows in the back yard."

There is one question I consider a clincher; its answer can tell a lot about a girl. "As a rule, do you like other women?"

"Sure, I like 'em. I think women are real great—I have a lot of friends. Some, though—you know the type—" Here she grimaced. "The kind that drop broad A's when they didn't grow up with them, the kind that put on airs and are real grand and call me 'Miss Russell.' I'm not Miss Russell to anybody. I'm just old Jane."

As I went on talking with her I found out a lot about this girl whose name has become a household word. I learned that Jane Russell says what she thinks and has about as much subterfuge as a mirror. She is uncontrollably honest. If she likes someone they sense it immediately, but if she dislikes a person she can shed them before they are aware of the great void. She has little conceit. When asked if she is easily recognized she said, "Only when I look like the devil and am trying to scuttle from one place to another without being seen. When I'm dressed up, they think I'm somebody else."

Hand Made in AFRICA
Original, Unusual and Beautiful Multi-coloured Beadwork Belts, Bracelets and Necklets, skillfully made in fascinating primitive designs by African Tribesmen.
SOLD BY MAIL ORDER ONLY
Duty approx. 10% of purchase price of goods ordered. (No C.O.D.s please)
MONEY BACK GUARANTEE BELT—
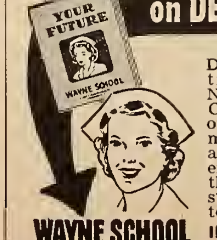
Approx. 2 ins. width $5.00
3 ins. " $6.00
(Please state waist measurement)
BRACELET $1.00
NECKLET $2.00
For quick delivery send your order by air mail today, enclosing check, money order, postal order or notes to:—
Trader Africa Dept. MS, P.O. Box 6018, Johannesburg, South Africa

Amazing New Creme RE-COLORS HAIR IN 17 MINUTES..
Now change streaked, gray, gray-ing or drab hair to a new lustrous youthful-looking color, try Tintz Creme Shampoo-Tint today. It's a new hair coloring that re-colors hair at home as it shampoos. Takes only 17 minutes. No waiting for results. It's easy to use—no messy mixing. Won't wash or rub out. Your choice of 13 natural appearing colors ... GET TINTZ AT YOUR DRUGGISTS NOW.
Tintz CREME SHAMPOO HAIR COLORING

WHY DON'T YOU WRITE?
Writing short stories, articles on fashion, homemaking, hobbies, business, travel, local, club and church activities, etc., will enable you to earn extra money. In your own home, on your own time, the New York Copy Desk Method teaches you how to write the way newspaper women learn —by writing. Our unique "Writing Aptitude Test" tells whether you possess the fundamental qualities essential to successful writing. You'll enjoy this test. Write for it, without cost or obligation.
NEWSPAPER INSTITUTE OF AMERICA
Suite 5714-B, One Park Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

CATALOG WITH 215 PICTURES FREE!
NEW! DIFFERENT! BEAUTIFUL!
For the first time — sensational pictures of your favorite movie stars in professional high gloss finish. Special super-duper offer:
20 for 25¢ • 50 for 50¢ • 120 for $1
FREE CATALOG with 215 PICTURES OF STARS with your order
DeLUXE PHOTO SERVICE, Dept. 626
Box 947, Church St. Annex, New York 8, N.Y.

Amazing New STAR-BRITE
SHINES SILVER AT A TOUCH
PAYS YOU TO SHOW IT TO FRIENDS
Show the unusual . . .
make big extra income spare time. Sensational selling Star-Brite banishes rubbing—shines silver instantly, safely, automatically in dishwater! Many other unique, new money-makers. Profits to 100%. Big value Greeting Card Assortments. Secret Pal, Name-in-Skirt Notes, Stationery. No experience needed. Samples on approval. Write TODAY.
GET SAMPLES ON APPROVAL
Midwest Card Co., 1113 Washington Ave., Dept. B-17, St. Louis 1, Mo.



Send for FREE BOOK on DENTAL NURSING
Describes fully WAYNE training for DENTAL NURSING — X-Ray, Lab, Chairside assisting, glamour and personality development. It's a Big-Pay field, and the Wayne Plan shortens class room attendance through preliminary home study. Send for free book today.
WAYNE SCHOOL INC. 2521 Sheffield Avenue Lab. D-18, Chicago 14, Ill.

In clothes she prefers opposite extremes, loving slacks or shorts around the house, but favoring the exotic when she puts on glad rags. "When I dress up, it's got to be the end. Then I'm still in my mother's trunk."

The decor of her house stems from Jane's vivid imagination, and here again her taste leans toward the exotic. Her bedroom is sparked by a headboard and tables in an old Chinese pattern of silver leaf. The walls are mauve, there is an immense couch in deep purple, and the cushions are assorted colors which Jane terms 'strange.' It is a job, done entirely by herself, that is admired by professional decorators, and Jane says she will turn to decorating if the day ever comes when she leaves the movie industry. "This is a house," she says, "that looks as though I should go dripping through it in gold lamé and a long cigarette holder. But I don't. It's blue jeans for me."

She admires feminine women, and periodically determines that she will surround herself in a cloud of trailing chiffon and perfume, but somehow there is never time. She adores perfume, but keeps forgetting to use it, and the weeks stretch into years without her buying that chest full of lacy lingerie she has promised herself. Beauty salons? "They take too much time. You have to get gussied up to go to them and drive there and back. So I do my hair and nails myself unless I'm working in a picture. Then the studio takes care of these things for me."

Jane Russell has been known for some time around Hollywood as a character. She is dimly aware that such is her reputation, but does not comprehend the reason for it. The reason is that Jane's personality is refreshing; she is honest and direct in everything she does. She says what she believes, does what she feels like doing, without giving a thought to the consequences. She moves fast, with a characteristic forcefulness. The saying goes that if you are behind a door when Russell makes an entrance, you will be knocked flat by the door when she bursts in. She enjoys an occasional tantrum, not because she wants to hurt anyone, but because she likes to hear herself howl. There isn't a drop of malice in Russell, and if anyone is ever cut by her she is completely unaware of it. There was once a new publicist assigned to one of her pictures—we'll call him Jim Jones. He was ready and willing to work with Russell, but it so happened that every time he got near her she went barrelling off in another direction. After a few weeks of this, during which Jim Jones was growing an ulcer and barking at his wife and children, someone broached the subject to Jane. "I wish you'd be nicer to Jim Jones," they said.

Jane's eyes opened wide. "Who is Jim Jones?" she said.

She is unconscious of time or space, with resulting confusion. She never wears a watch, figuring that somebody else can tell her the time. Once she agrees to do something she can be depended upon to do it. This is accomplished by her informing everyone—her husband, her mother, her Japanese houseman and the studio personnel—of the appointment. Russell herself would never think of keeping an engagement book.

Hers is a one-track mind that concentrates on the job of the moment, while everything else flies out the window. It is the mind of a creative person who cannot be bothered by details, and in many ways she is like the proverbial absent-minded professor. She will tackle any chore with every confidence that she will accomplish it. This, despite repeated proof that her stamina is not sufficient for constant physical strain. She wakens in the morning like a bronco released from a chute and goes through her day like a whirlwind until she suddenly collapses. Production of her last two pictures has been held up because of a brief illness, yet she is anxious to do musical comedies. This type of movie requires twice as much work as the straight drama, with long weeks of song and dance rehearsals. Is Jane aware of this? "Sure, but I'll do it anyway. Just give me a week in the middle of the picture to break down, and I'll be okay."

She once went on a fox hunt in Georgia, replete with red coat and bowler hat, despite the fact she had never been on an English saddle in her life. "They asked me if I could ride, and I said sure I could ride. I'd grown up with horses in the west, I told them. So I got up on this thing that was no bigger than a service plate."

She is the same way with all sports—determined and filled with drive. "I like the hammy kind of sports, the kind of games I can get into myself. Football? Well, I live with football, of course, and there's a kind of psychological security that goes with it for me. I'm interested in the Rams of course, or whenever Robert plays, but I wouldn't walk across the street to see a game if I didn't know anything about the teams. In other words, I can't play football, so I leave it alone. I like tennis and swimming and skiing because I can dig in myself. But there's never enough time for these things."

I SAW IT HAPPEN

While I was at Alfred's Italian Restaurant in Atlantic City last summer, I saw Eddie Fisher come in. A newsboy came in and Eddie bought a paper from him for a dollar. As he left, he saw the newsboy again, bought his stack of papers and started selling them. The customers were delighted when they recognized their newsboy.

Mary Anselmo
Brooklyn, New York

There's never enough time because Jane Russell can't say no. If she's asked to appear at a benefit, pin up a hem for a friend or model for charity, she can't refuse. Chaos is the result, with days jammed to the hilt with things to do. Between French Line and Jane's next movie, she called up a friend and screamed, "I'm getting sore! I don't understand it, but I'm busier between pictures than I am when I'm making one! And I'm not going to do anything more! I'm gonna rest!" This resolution lasted until somebody asked her to help hang some new paintings.

She is an inveterate pill taker, not because she needs them but simply because she can't stand to see anybody else take a pill and leave her out of the act. A friend once swallowed an aspirin reinforced with codeine, and Jane held out a hand automatically. "Give me one."

"They're pretty strong," cautioned her friend. "They have codeine in them."

Jane waved a hand in disgust. "I don't care what they've got. Give me one!" And a half hour later she almost passed out.

She and husband Bob Waterfield don't travel much. Once in a while there's a jaunt to New York, where Jane joins Bob in seeing a few football games. The rest of the time they go their separate ways. She likes to swim—swimming isn't good for football muscles. He likes to hunt—she can't bear to shoot a deer. She likes New York shows—Bob can't stand New York or shows. He likes basketball—she can't play so she doesn't go. "It's a good thing," she says, "that opposites attract. Robert and I have little in common when it comes to hobbies, so it's sort of to each his own. Home is our center, with the kids—and we're nuts about the house—and this is our real life together. We're not really happy unless we're at home."

So when they're in New York Bob goes off on a hunting trip with other men, or to play golf with other men, or to see a basketball game with other men. And Jane goes to shows, gussied to the teeth every night while in New York. Afterward she gathers a group of cronies and goes to the rathskeller bistros of Manhattan where the top jazz musicians jam into the wee hours. Russell can sit for hours in these smoky dens, paralyzed with happiness at the moan and blare of Dixieland and bop. Aware that her energy depends on at least eight hours of sleep, she anxiously consults somebody else's watch about eleven P.M. "Let's see," she says, counting on her fingers to compute the hours, "appointment for lunch tomorrow—whee—I don't have to go to bed until three A.M.!" And some of her cronies sigh in their beer.

Jane gets very positive ideas, not all of which make sense. Such as her refusal to fly on a night flight. "I can't sleep on a plane," she announces. "A night flight makes me lose my sleep." So she always leaves California at eight in the morning, and the minute she lands in her seat makes preparations that have become ritual. She takes off her shoes, puts on an eye shade, plugs her ears, wraps a blanket around herself and, wearing slacks, curls up in the seat. "Wake me when we get to Chicago," she tells her companion, and then knocks off for eight hours. The stewardess comes and goes with trays of food, but Russell sleeps on. Stewardesses invariably assume that the lump under the blanket is airsick, and they pass by in clucking sympathy, never knowing that the bundle is only Russell, who claims she can't sleep on a plane.

These are the things she does that build her reputation as a character, but she is blithely unaware that she does anything differently from other people. She is an avid fan of show business celebrities, and when she appeared on Talullah Bankhead's Big Show, was wildly happy that she could observe at close quarters such people as Bankhead, Oscar Levant, Toni Arden, etc. It never occurred to her that they might be interested in her.

The fact that a fan mail service in Hollywood reports Jane Russell's mail now ranks second in the long list of Hollywood personalities helps prove that Jane has at last arrived. There has been a long interim between The Outlaw and this arrival, a period during which Jane felt she was coasting. "I was waiting for the chance to spring," she says with a laugh. She is kidding when she says it, but it is the nearest Jane Russell comes to blowing her own horn. She has been quiet about it, but she has known all along that she could turn out a professional job that would fuse the myth of her name and the reality of her personality into one.

There are some who claim that Russell's drive, her force and her personality have only begun to be tapped for the screen. They say she has greater potential than most people realize, and that given the opportunity, she can become a truly great personality in the entertainment world. Certainly, Jane Russell has more than sex appeal and a reputation for being a character. She is a great dame. END

storm over hollywood

(Continued from page 55) That's what Gale Storm did to Las Vegas. In Hollywood she has spent some mediocre years since 1940. She was delightful a couple of years back in a picture with Donald O'Connor called Curtain Call At Cactus Creek, but all she got out of the studios were little six-month contracts and parts in "B" pictures.

Today, with or without Charlie Farrell, her television daddy, Gale is as "hot" a girl as there is in movies. She is not excited about all the furor. She is concerned about something more important.

"What worries me," she said recently, "is whether my sons should have a mother who works. You know—whether I am really able to give them the right amount of attention. Nothing, but nothing, has gone wrong, you understand. Honestly, I think I see more of them than a lot of mothers who go to bridge parties or play canasta see of their children. Every hour I'm away from the studio goes to them. Every night, and Saturdays and Sundays, particularly, they come over to the studio lot with me."

This is an incredible note. As a rule, Hollywood mothers never bring their offspring to work with them except for publicity photos. But then, much of what Gale does happens to be different from the things most Hollywood actresses do. Working or not, she rises about six-thirty A.M., does a few light setting-up exercises, feels momentarily debilitated as a consequence, and goes back to bed again. By seven, Mrs. Bonnell is at the table. Her husband gets up at dawn, too, and they tuck away a steeplejack's breakfast. Life as Margie can be strenuous.

The Bonnells live in Sherman Oaks, part of the San Fernando Valley, and Miss Storm is honorary mayor out there. It's a thirty-five minute drive to the Roach lot, which makes Miss Storm precisely five minutes late each morning. She never has figured a way to get around that. The best she has been able to come up with is to set the shooting schedule ahead five minutes, but there seems to be a slight flaw in that somewhere. More logically, they might shorten a few of the curves.

Gale Storm takes all of Margie's wacky stunts in her stride. She is a Texan, born in a place named Bloomington and moved to Houston before she was old enough to say anything about it. She was the youngest of five children and never did get to meet any oil well folks or even any ranchers.

"I did, however," she says with a sly grin, "once hear of a neighbor who struck it rich and decided to collect miniatures as a hobby. The first thing he bought was Rhode Island."

By and by, Miss Storm, who was then Josie Cottle, quietly started working in amateur theatricals. One fine day she won a statewide competition for her appearance in a number called Madame President, a one-act affair. She was a good student, too, walking off with first prize in a Houston declamation contest. It was about then that show business stepped up and introduced itself in the form of a nationwide talent hunt radio show titled Gateway To Hollywood. Gale won the girls' title, and just like in the movies, the winner for the boys was a fellow from South Bend, Indiana, who turned out to be her future husband, Lee Bonnell.

Part of the contest's gimmick was that the girl winner was to be re-named Gale Storm, the boy Terry Belmont. Terry Belmont does not translate into much and could be scored as "too corny" for a movie star name. Gale Storm, however, means roughly the same thing as Frightful Hurricane or Helluva Wind. At the time she would have taken any of these names without a fight, even though she was not ashamed of being Josie Cottle. "The thought of becoming a girl named Gale Storm sort of bucked up my morale," she recalls. "I needed a change of name, but bad."

Be that as it may, Terry Belmont fell in love with Gale Storm and vice versa, which is how come Mr. and Mrs. Lee Bonnell today. Gale was a spirited girl and it wasn't long before she realized that winning a chance to act in Hollywood is a long way from becoming a movie star. She had a contract at Monogram Pictures which at the time was shooting its films almost as fast as TV films are shot today. Since she was a married woman happily adding to the population, Gale was a lot of trouble to her bosses. One of them called to ask her bluntly, "Can we cast you in a picture, or are you pregnant again?" Gale remembers that one picture was shot so fast that they never did bother to finish it. On the last scheduled day of shooting, time was up, so they just rolled up the film and released it. "No one," she swears, "ever noticed the difference."

Happily, not being a top star never bothered Miss Storm. More happily, being a top star doesn't bother her now. She has an idea that she is lucky enough without being a star of any kind, and that her success with My Little Margie is just so much gravy.

That is about the way she says it. And she says it without the heroic sighs and misty looks that usually accompany this kind of declaration from a Cinderella in show business.

"Here's what you're supposed to say," someone reminded her crossly during an interview: "It's all like a wonderful dream. I have to keep pinching myself to make sure I'm awake."

"It's all like a wonderful dream," said Miss Storm. "I have to keep pinching myself to make sure I'm awake."

MRS. LEE BONNELL is a very happy woman whose professional life is now in the middle of a staggering turn for the better. But she does have a few minor crosses to bear.

There is the matter of socks. She busies herself in her spare time by (what did you expect?) knitting socks for the electricians modern screen's dramatic

March issue

blows onto your newsstand on february 9

with that lamb

among lions,

marilyn monroe

on the cover

Takes only a minute—Washes Hair Shades Lighter Safely—gives it Wonderful Shine!

If your blonde hair is growing dark or faded, here's good news. A sensational new "creamy" shampoo that you can make at home (FRESH . . . each time you use it), washes hair shades lighter, gives it beautiful new lustre and shine. Called BLONDEX, it is a fragrant powder that needs only water added to it to become a rich, creamy, cleansing shampoo. BLONDEX Creamy Shampoo works 3 ways: 1. It removes the dull, dingy film that makes blonde hair dark and old looking. 2. Brings back that flattering lightness. 3. Gives hair extra highlights and shine. Blondex is absolutely safe—use it for children's delicate hair. Get BLONDEX today at 10¢, drug and department stores

Make Money and Friends as a
PRACTICAL NURSE

LEARN AT HOME—EARN WHILE LEARNING

FREE Nationally recognized resident school of practical nursing now offers approved training at home to women and girls to help fill waiting demand for nurses. Thousands needed at once. High school not necessary. No age limit. Sample Lesson Free. Rush name on 2c postcard.

POST GRADUATE HOSPITAL SCHOOL of NURSING
5B24 Auditorium Bldg., CHICAGO 5, ILL.

Large size photo of your favorite

MOVIE STAR

FREE! FREE!

ALSO FREE a handsome catalogue containing names and addresses of 150 STARS including various pictures and POSES. Send name of your favorite STAR and 15c, 2 for 25c to cover handling and mailing.

Studio of Stars, Box 1278, Dept. D1
Studio City, California

NEW TOWELS

LARGE SIZE! Assorted Colors. New! Not seconds. Money-back guarantee. Order Now! Supply limited. 12 for $1.00

TOWEL SHOP, Dept. 105, Box 881, St. Louis 1, Mo.

MAKE MONEY
ADDRESSING ENVELOPES
OUR INSTRUCTIONS REVEAL HOW
GLENN GLENWAY 5713 EUCLID AVE., CLEVELAND 3, OHIO

HAIR OFF & OUT

Remove hair instantly above and below the surface of the skin. Everyone loves hair-free skin. BE ATTRACTIVE INSTEAD OF ATTRACTING ATTENTION. Remove that ugly unwanted hair at once. Return this ad with $1.20: regular package of a true, tried and tested hair remover. Sample size 25c. Results guaranteed.

LECHLER HAIR REMOVING SPECIALIST, 560 Broadway, New York 12, New York

RUPTURE-EASER
T. M. Reg. U.S Pat. Off. (A Piper Brace Product)

Double...4.95

Right or left Side $3.95

No Fitting Required

A strong, form-fitting washable support. Back lacing adjustable. Snaps up in front. Adjustable leg strap. Soft, flat groin pad. No steel or leather bands. Unexcelled for comfort. Also used as after operation support. For men, women and children. Mail orders give measure around the lowest part of the abdomen and state right or left side or double. We Prepay Postage Except on C.O.D.'s.

PIPER BRACE CO.
811 Wyandotte Dept. OG-24 Kansas City 5, Mo.

on the set. But knitting is a slow business, and up to now, she has only finished one pair each for the boys upstairs—the ones up on the catwalk. That leaves the boys downstairs walking around in their bare feet. So the boys downstairs have delivered Miss S. an ultimatum: no socks, no lights! That would leave Miss Storm lighted only from above and looking like Dracula's stepdaughter.

She has something to do with her spare time, what there is of it, besides knit. She likes oil painting, when she can get around to it, which isn't often. Maybe that's why her oils aren't turning out well, at all. She says she painted a landscape and it looked like an impressionist interpretation of a barbed wire fence. She painted a pine cone and it looked like a wicker basket. She painted a friend's portrait and he looked like a drunken mastiff. She tried a gouache, too. Gouache is not easy painting. Her gouache was terrible.

Well, besides awkward painting, has Miss Storm any vices? Non-punctuality? Furtive gnawing on marshmallows? Taking a little dollop of cooking wine now and again?

"I can't keep a checkbook," conceded Miss Storm. "Few things bother me more than addition. Three things, to give you a round number."

Would she tick them off?

"Gladly. Subtraction, division and multiplication."

So she messes up the family accounts?

"Certainly not. I don't go near them. Lee does them."

Doesn't she believe in something revolutionary—like woman's place is in the nightclub?

"What's a nightclub?" said Gale Storm.

YET, WHO is to say Miss Storm's life has been so much whipped cream? By and large, things have worked out nicely, but there's been adversity to push along the growing and maturing.

Sometime ago, her oldest son, Philip, suffered agonizing burns from hot oil from a vaporizer. His mother was panic-stricken at first, but mercifully his father was home, and his father is the kind who becomes calm and efficient in a crisis.

"One glance," Miss Storm recalled, "told Lee what had happened. He stripped off Philip's night clothes and sent me for white vaseline. The child was burned front, back and middle. And screaming. Lee applied the vaseline and quickly rejected an idea I had about wrapping him in a bath towel. Too rough. Lee knew that. He asked for a sheet and my woolen comforter. Maybe there's not much to it, but I want to tell you. So we wrapped him in the sheet and the comforter, and the doctor who gave emergency treatment told me later that what Lee had done was exactly right. The wrappings didn't chafe but kept Philip warm when shock set in. Do you see what I'm trying to say? It has never occurred to me to be bitter or cynical because Philip was burned. I never felt anything but gratitude because Lee was home and he did know what to do, and Philip was saved. I didn't pray for his life but I didn't think God would mind if I asked Him for some surcease from the pain. And I guess He didn't. Do you see my point?"

That, in general, is the way Miss Storm likes to regard things. When the good breaks come, they are something to be grateful for. Success, fame, nice meaty contracts—they're all wonderful, but they are not to be confused with the parts of living that make up real happiness. Those are stable and sure, like her husband and her children. And when the bad breaks arrive—well, you have fun at Monogram and think cheerfully and hopefully about the days when your options may be picked up in slightly plushier style. For Gale, that day has come with a bang—and has now fitted itself quietly into the smooth, happy pattern of her life. END

---

they did it the hard way

(Continued from page 53) ranch has been one of his pet dreams ever since his grandfather used to take him prowling over the ten-acre place years ago. Much later, when the big movie money began to roll in, and Rory had himself a bride, he acquired that property and a lot more—some 150 acres.

"I'll admit that I didn't consult my bride about it too carefully," Rory recalls. "I guess I was afraid to. Lita didn't look or act too much like the outdoor type. I couldn't picture her in blue jeans, but I felt I had to get the ranch, as a matter of self preservation. Growing up with the land does something to a man; he never forgets it, and while he may be bored as a boy—as I was with milking cows and feeding pigs—he learns in manhood that being close to the land is mighty important."

To cut a long story to simple tragedy, Rory managed to buy his ranch. Many were the pictures taken there. He even planted a hay crop which almost paid the running expenses when he was eased out of his contract with David O. Selznick. He had a lot of ground to keep his feet on.

Let Rory tell it: "When the contract was gone things were no picnic. I had an agent who worked hard, but every time he suggested me for a part producers sneered politely. 'Rory Calhoun? He hasn't learned to fall off a log yet.' Meanwhile, I didn't cave in with remorse. I went up to the ranch and put in some more crops while I hoped an acting job would turn up.

"Then one day a guy with a breezy suit and a stormy manner turned up at the front door to inform us that unless a payment was made the credit company would take away our car. Simultaneously, the telephone rang to inform me that Monogram wanted me for a picture. In those days working for Monogram was like being planted in a cemetery, but I was grateful. Good old Monogram gave me two that year, and I've never been so happy about getting jobs. It's a funny thing; some people can owe a mountain of bills and be nonchalant about it. Not me. It hit me hard to learn that my credit wasn't good any more.

"Thank heaven for Lita. She went to work a couple of times and grabbed off large hunks of money as she always does. I didn't ask her to, but I've never felt that it's a sin for a man's life partner to pitch in and help if she wants to. After all, Lita has been in show business ever since she was four years old. She enjoys it, and I would have been selfish, also a snob and a slob if I had tried to stop her. I knew I didn't have to stick to acting and could have started pumping gas again. Only now we had the ranch, and I put every spare minute into working the ground so that it would begin to pay for itself."

I SAW IT HAPPEN

In May, 1950, the big race at Indianapolis Motor Speedway was only a few weeks away. To add to the excitement, MGM was hopefully trying to shoot scenes for To Please A Lady. The cameramen were trying to get shots of Barbara Stanwyck coming down the back steps of the Pagoda, but they couldn't get into the correct position because of the crowd.

Suddenly everybody started moving infield, and I, wondering what ruse they were using to distract the crowd, followed and saw four State Troopers. Walking in their midst was the handsome, smiling Clark Gable. This enabled MGM to shoot their scene, and enabled me to see my favorite actor.

Mrs. Daniel M. Root
Indianapolis, Indiana

IT WOULD BE nice and cozy to say that with all this hard work between the two of them, Lita and Rory saved the day and paid the mortgage, but ranches and real life don't seem to work out that way. Rory's luck changed, and he became an important star at 20th Century-Fox. Recently, that studio shaved a lot of actors off the payroll in switching over to CinemaScope, but they kept Rory on at big money for such pictures as River Of No Return and How To Marry A Millionaire. He was kept so busy that he decided to turn the ranch into a sort of guest hotel.

That should have been great. But all of a sudden there was no water. For two whole years Rory and Lita had been making personal appearances and tucking the money away in a sock in order to buy enough pipe to irrigate the whole place. Net result: two years of hard labor for nothing. There wasn't as much as a single glass of water to give to a guest, simply because a big oil company and a neighbor above his property had drained it all off. Not intentionally; it was just one of those mix-ups that happen to ranchers.

"I was sore as hell," Rory confesses, "and I felt like suing somebody. But nobody ever seems to win anything in a courtroom, so we're talking it over. Meanwhile, the ranch is a big, sprawling, bone dry dream."

In the beginning actors are humble. Later on, as the bank account fattens, so, frequently, does the head; the star begins to feel that he reached his position strictly by his own efforts and against the deadly opposition of producers and reporters who separately conspired to keep him from becoming famous. In this respect, Rory Calhoun is refreshingly unique.

"The truth is," he says, "that my career was an outlandish accident, more or less. I didn't contrive to meet Alan Ladd, way back in 1944. But Alan did happen to meet me on a bridle path when I was down from Santa Cruz to see my great-grandmother. While we were getting acquainted, he wanted to know if I happened to be an actor. 'No!' I retorted, rudely, and I guess he was a little miffed by the way I said it. But he just grinned and began talking about my working in movies. I figured I might as well take a fling at it even if it kept me working indoors a lot. Then, it wasn't long before I had a contract, which was so unimportant you could have squeezed it into the barrel of a water pistol. And even though my scenes with dialogue were cut out of the picture, it brought in eating money. I wasn't a good actor, and I wasn't the only one who knew it. The studio soon dropped my option and I found myself fairly broke—far away from the country I loved."

Now, you've heard of actors who used to be bookkeepers or lifeguards or lumberjacks, but you seldom hear of one who has the courage to go back to menial labor once he has had a taste of the soft life.

"When I was out of my contract I could have taken a job as a miner or something, but I liked acting and decided to hang around. When some people say they are busted, it means they have no job and only a few thousand dollars in the bank, plus a few stocks and bonds and a paid-for mansion in Beverly Hills. When I say I was broke I mean that I didn't own anything except the clothes on my back and I was in hock $300. So I worked during the day at a brickyard, where I stacked and fired bricks. Then at night I slung gas in a service station. A few people I knew in Hollywood thought I'd gone off my rocker. 'You're an actor,' they said. 'You shouldn't do menial jobs like that.'"

It strikes Rory as funny that people should figure that way. In the first place, just because he had been slapped in the face a couple of times with greasepaint didn't make him, he figured, a full-fledged actor. Besides, as he puts it, "If a guy's got two arms, why starve?"

Rory admits that he's had his low spots. And that they really got him down. Once he poked a guy in the nose when he was feeling lousy and admits that it was a foolish thing to do. But if he makes mistakes, he alone is responsible for them. Criticism of the way he lives doesn't bother him.

RORY CALHOUN says that his becoming an actor, making good and finding the great love of his life was just one big series of lucky situations.

"From the time I left high school I'd been banging around the western part of the United States, picking up jobs wherever I could. There was logging and cowpunching, hauling nets for fish, truck driving and fire fighting. When I got fed up with one of them I'd count my money and run off with it to some new place. I had a bad case of wanderlust. The picture of my life didn't have any focus at all until my friend, Les Gumm suggested that I try my hand as a forest fire fighter. I didn't go for that because it paid a lot less than what I got at logging. Les was a friend of my dad's, too—a California ranger who'd been popping up at our dinner table ever since I could remember. Maybe it didn't pay as much money, Les pointed out, but the war was on and they needed men badly. It offered more opportunity and if I could swing the financial end of it, I'd learn a lot more that might come in handy to a man. That part got me. I started thinking that if I learned about woodcraft and botany and how to take care of myself in the wilds, I might use the knowledge some day to go exploring. I was just a kid then, and I was a real dreamer, but I wouldn't have dreamed anything so fantastic as doing my exploring in the wilds of Hollywood. Anyway, with the dreaming and the working, six months later I was a foreman with six men in my crew.

"It was during that time that I came to Los Angeles because my great-grandmother got sick. And then I met Alan Ladd. You should have seen the letter I got from Les after I wrote him that I was going to stay down in Hollywood and try for the movies. He called me six kinds of a dog and then, being the great guy he is, wound up with, 'If you can't make the grade you can always come back here.'

"I haven't taken him up on it yet, but there were times when I was tempted. I forgot about the drawingroom scenes I'd been in and kept on breathing brickdust by day and gas fumes by night, adding up sixteen hours of work every day.

"Then came the break (Alan and Sue gave a dinner for me and invited agent Henry Willson) that got me a contract with David O. Selznick. This one was considerably fatter than the pact I'd had with Fox. I learned more about acting and got better parts, but I never really got very far there. In those days my pal Guy Madison was getting the super star build-up at the studio, and it was Guy who made the big splash. I only got wet around the edges.

"Funny thing, Guy kept telling me that I should be getting the breaks he was and that it just didn't make sense. In the passing years I've often thought that the public ought to know as much about the guys who don't land the big fat acting parts as the ones who do. For instance, my big break came when I grabbed off a part in The Red House, starring Eddie Robinson. It meant my whole future. But do you know who tested for the part and did a much better job than I did? Bob Horton. And Bob is just now getting the attention he deserves. The fact of the matter is that I felt so acutely that he should have had the part that I looked him up and apologized for getting it myself. I'm not trying to make myself a swell guy—Bob did a better job; that's all." All of which leads us to the spectacle of Rory's asking 20th Century to release him from his present contract. There are a couple of hundred actors who would give their eye teeth for a regular pay check. But Rory feels that swell as it is to be on a studio contract list there's an awful lot going on that he'd like to explore—like television and other aspects of show business—but he can't as long as his plays have to be called by studio bosses. He knows he can see tough times again if he goes it on his own, but there'll be water on the ranch again soon, so he won't starve.

HE AND LITA have their first home now—a two-bedroom place in Beverly Hills. They have lived in assorted apartments, none of them elegant, and one of them consisting of a single room. They kept moving around, but Rory liked to putter and when they finally achieved the house they weren't in it two days before he began to panel the den.

"The house isn't anything elegant; it isn't so big that we're slaves to it. Lita is busy decorating, and between pictures and on Sundays we drive up to the ranch.

"It took her about a year to get used to the rugged life. I bought her a little horse and a saddle, and now she rides with me. I think she's pretty well converted. Guy Madison and I took her duck hunting for the first time last fall, and she bagged her full quota. Not only that, but when we got home she announced that from now on she's going to insist that I go duck hunting at every opportunity. 'And I'm going with you,' she said. So I bought a fourteen-foot boat and built a half deck on it. Lita and I have spent many a night aboard it, tucked in sleeping bags up in the duck country.

"The ranch is coming along nicely, too. With water I can plant a crop of alfalfa, and as soon as we can get the feed, we'll raise calves on spread. There isn't enough land to graze cattle, but we'll have sheep. I'll share crop with the man who lives on the place, and it will be a place to go if times get tough again.

"We're hoping to have children, and already Lita has decorated our extra bedroom as a nursery. I figure three boys would about do it, and I have daydreams about the time when they'll be working the ranch and I'll be an old man, sitting in a boat all day long and fishing.

"Things have been difficult at times, but right now we're on top of the world. Once I was insulted at being mistaken for an actor; now I'm insulted if people think I'm not an actor. To top off my blessings, Lita looks wonderful in blue jeans." END

New Style Craze Puts HUNDREDS OF EXTRA DOLLARS
In Your Pocket!

FLEXICLOGS sweep nation! $1,250 in one month! $900 in 3 months! These spare time records of some of our dealers show you your big opportunity with FLEXICLOGS! New hinged wooden sandals that flex with your foot are breaking sales records everywhere. Colorful models for men, women, children plus complete accessory line will triple your profits. No experience, no investment. Get FREE Sales Kit and Sample Offer now!

SEND FOR FREE OUTFIT!

FLEXICLOGS, Box 24-S,
New Holstein, Wisconsin
Please rush FREE Sales Kit and Sample Offer without obligation.

*Name*____________________
*Address*____________________
*City & Zone*____________ *State*________

DESTROY UNWANTED HAIR FOREVER
Temporary relief is NOT enough
Only by KILLING THE HAIR ROOT can you be sure UNWANTED HAIR is GONE FOREVER. Brings relief and social happiness. Do not use our method until you have read our instruction book carefully and learned to use the MAHLER METHOD safely and efficiently. Used successfully over fifty years.
SEND 5¢ TODAY FOR BOOKLET
NEW BEAUTY FOR YOU
MAHLER'S, INC. Dept. 36-B. PROVIDENCE 15, R. I.

MAKE MONEY DRESS SHOP IN YOUR HOME
Fifth Avenue, New York firm desires ambitious women to sell Dresses, Suits, Lingerie in and from their home. As seen in "Vogue," "Mademoiselle." Experience unnecessary. Good Commissions. Free Dresses too for personal use as EXTRA BONUS. No investment. Write for Sample Book.
Modern Manner Clothes, 260 Fifth Ave., Dept. D-2, New York

MONUMENTS
PETERSON
HILDA 1899 1940
JOHN 1895 1940
DIRECT TO YOU
EASY TERMS
$14.95 UP
Rockdale Monuments—Markers. Satisfaction or money back. Freight Paid. Lowest Prices—FREE CATALOG.
Rockdale Monument Co., Dept. 743, Joliet, Ill.

CORNS REMOVED BY MOSCO
also Calluses. Quick, easy, and economical. Just rub on. Jars, 35¢ and 60¢. Buy Mosco at your druggist.
Your money refunded if not satisfied. The Moss Company, Rochester, N.Y.

ADDRESS POSTCARDS AT HOME
MAKE MONEY!! SPARE - FULL TIME
write
LINDO, WATERTOWN, MASS.

SILK FINISH ENLARGEMENTS
5x7 SIZE 10¢ each
8x10 SIZE 29¢ each
GOLD TOOLED FRAMES
Check number, size and color of frames
☐ 1—5x7 ☐ 2—5x7
☐ Ivory and Gold
☐ 1—8x10 ☐ 2—8x10
☐ Brown and Gold
Beautiful silk finish black and white enlargements made from your favorite snapshots, photos or negatives. Be sure to include color of hair, eyes and clothing for having your enlargements beautifully hand colored in oil. SEND NO MONEY. Simply pay postman for each enlargement and each frame plus cost of mailing. Additional $1.29 for hand coloring 5x7 size or $1.69 for 8x10 size. Satisfaction guaranteed. Limit 2 to a customer. Originals returned with enlargements. Offer good in U.S.A. only. Prompt service.
HOLLYWOOD FILM STUDIOS, Dept. D-24
7021 SANTA MONICA BLVD., HOLLYWOOD 38, CALIF.

Amazing offer to new DOLLAR BOOK CLUB members

Any Three

OF THESE NEW FULL-SIZE, HARD BOUND BEST SELLERS

Up to $15.30 Value
IN PUB. ED.

for only $1.00 when you join

Thomas Costain
THE SILVER CHALICE
THE story of the young sculptor assigned to make a decorative case for the cup Christ used at the Last Supper, and the two women, one good, one evil, who diverted him. Top hit! Pub. ed. $3.85

KISS ME AGAIN, STRANGER — Daphne du Maurier. The newest best-seller by the author of "Rebecca" and "My Cousin Rachel." Eight new stories of suspense, drama and romance for which du Maurier is famous. "Her best writing." — Boston Post. Pub. ed. $3.50.

STORY OF AMERICA IN PICTURES. 472 big pages, nearly 500 vivid pictures with narrative text, spread the whole thrilling story of America before your eyes—from its earliest beginnings right up to Korea and President Eisenhower. A lifetime book for all the family. Pub. ed. $7.50.

WILD ANIMALS OF THE WORLD. Wm. Bridges & Mary Baker. 272 pages, 252 pictures, 100 in gorgeous full color. Intro. by Roy Chapman Andrews. Called the most beautifully illustrated wild animal book published. Fascinating reading. Huge 7½" x 9¾". Pub. ed. $3.95.

QUEEN'S GIFT — Inglis Fletcher. Two women wanted the same man: Lady Anne Stuart who enjoyed only the thrill of conquest, and her servant, lovely Sylvia Hay, in the flood of first love. Romance of early Carolina. Pub. ed. $3.75.

THE OUTLINE OF HISTORY
H. G. Wells
New, greatly enlarged, up to date edition, 1,300 pages. The whole exciting story of mankind from earliest times to our own day. More than 200 maps and illustrations. One of the most acclaimed books of the 20th Century. Pub. ed. $3.49.

HAMMOND-DOUBLEDAY WORLD ATLAS AND GAZETTEER. A huge 9⅜" by 12¼" volume. Brand-new! Covers U. S. and all foreign countries! 90 up to date maps, 32 full-page, full-color. Latest boundaries, population figures, etc. 154 photos plus 94 pages of valuable facts on the world's people, industries, customs, etc.

THE DEVIL'S LAUGHTER—Frank Yerby. Newest hit by the author of "A Woman Called Fancy." Fiery story of Jean-Paul Marin and the tawny-haired beauty he adored, in a world gone mad with the wanton excitement of the French Revolution. "Flaming story of action, passion, revenge."—Chicago Trib. Pub. $3.50.

Why the Dollar Book Club Makes this Amazing Offer

THIS offer is made to demonstrate the wonderful values in book entertainment which you enjoy as a member of the Dollar Book Club. If not delighted when you receive the 3 books of your choice, return them without further obligation. Otherwise, pay only $1.00 for all three, and continue to enjoy member's bargain privileges!

Save up to 75% on the New Books
(Compared with pub. editions)

Imagine—the very same best-sellers costing $3.00 to $3.95 in publisher's editions come to Dollar Book Club members for only $1—an incredibly big saving averaging up to 75% on each selection. These savings are possible because of the huge printings made for nearly a million members!

Take as Few as Six Books a Year!

Membership in the Dollar Book Club requires no dues of any kind. You do not even have to take a book every month; you may buy as few as 6 per year.

Accept This Introductory Offer Now!

When you mail the coupon you will be sent ANY 3 BOOKS YOU CHOOSE FROM THIS PAGE FOR ONLY $1, plus a few cents shipping cost. Two books are your gift for joining, and one is your first selection. Thereafter, you will receive regularly the Club's Bulletin, which describes the forthcoming $1 selections, also occasional extra-value books up to $1.49. Buy only the books you want.

Send No Money — Just Mail Coupon!

When you see your introductory Three-Book package—and think of the book bargains you will continue to receive from the Club—you will be delighted to have become a member! If not, return all books and your membership will be cancelled, without further obligation! Mail the coupon now.

DOUBLEDAY ONE DOLLAR BOOK CLUB
Garden City, New York

MAIL THIS COUPON

Doubleday Dollar Book Club, Dept. 2DMG, Garden City, New York

Please enroll me as a Dollar Book Club member. Send me at once the 3 books checked below and bill me ONLY $1 FOR ALL 3, plus a few cents shipping cost.

☐ The Devil's Laughter
☐ Hammond-Doubleday World Atlas
☐ Kiss Me Again, Stranger
☐ The Outline of History
☐ Queen's Gift
☐ The Silver Chalice
☐ Story of America in Pictures
☐ Wild Animals of the World

Also, send my first issue of The Bulletin, telling me about the new forthcoming one-dollar* selections and other bargains for members.

I may notify you in advance if I do not wish the following month's selections. The purchase of books is entirely voluntary on my part. I do not have to accept a book every month—only six a year. I pay nothing except $1 for each selection I accept, plus a few cents shipping cost (unless I choose an extra-value selection).

NO-RISK GUARANTEE: If not delighted, return all books within 7 days, and membership will be cancelled.

Please Print

Mr.
Mrs. ....
Miss

Address ....

City &
Zone .... State ....

*In Canada $1.10 plus shipping. Address Doubleday Book Club (Canada), 105 Bond St., Toronto 2. Offer good in U. S. & Canada only.

Shampoo this diamond sparkle into your hair with new

DIAL SHAMPOO

No other shampoo gives this glorious Dial beauty —yet leaves your hair so easy to manage!

Only Dial Shampoo gives this complete cleanliness because only Dial contains Hexachlorophene

You get a complete cleanliness with new Dial Shampoo that you've never been able to get with ordinary shampoos. Because Dial Shampoo contains a new freshening agent, Hexachlorophene, that gives your hair clean-smelling freshness.

And your hair is so clean after a Dial Shampoo it has a diamond sparkle!

You'll like the unbreakable squeeze bottle, too—it's so easy to use.

© ARMOUR AND COMPANY

You see dazzling results after a Dial Shampoo—the natural brilliance of your hair comes shining through because it's so clean. Wouldn't it be exciting to shampoo a diamond sparkle into your hair?

Why did you change to Camels, WILLIAM HOLDEN?

"With so many people smoking Camels, I figured they must be good! So I tried them — found their cool mildness and swell flavor suit my taste to a T! You ought to try Camels yourself!"

WILLIAM HOLDEN, star of "Forever Female", is another on the big list of Hollywood personalities who prefer America's most popular cigarette, Camel! Some others are John Wayne, Lizabeth Scott, Maureen O'Hara, Alan Ladd, Maureen O'Sullivan.

for Mildness and Flavor

R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co.
Winston-Salem, N. C.

CAMELS AGREE WITH MORE PEOPLE than any other cigarette!

Make your own 30-day Camel mildness test — you'll see how well Camels' mildness and flavor suit you.

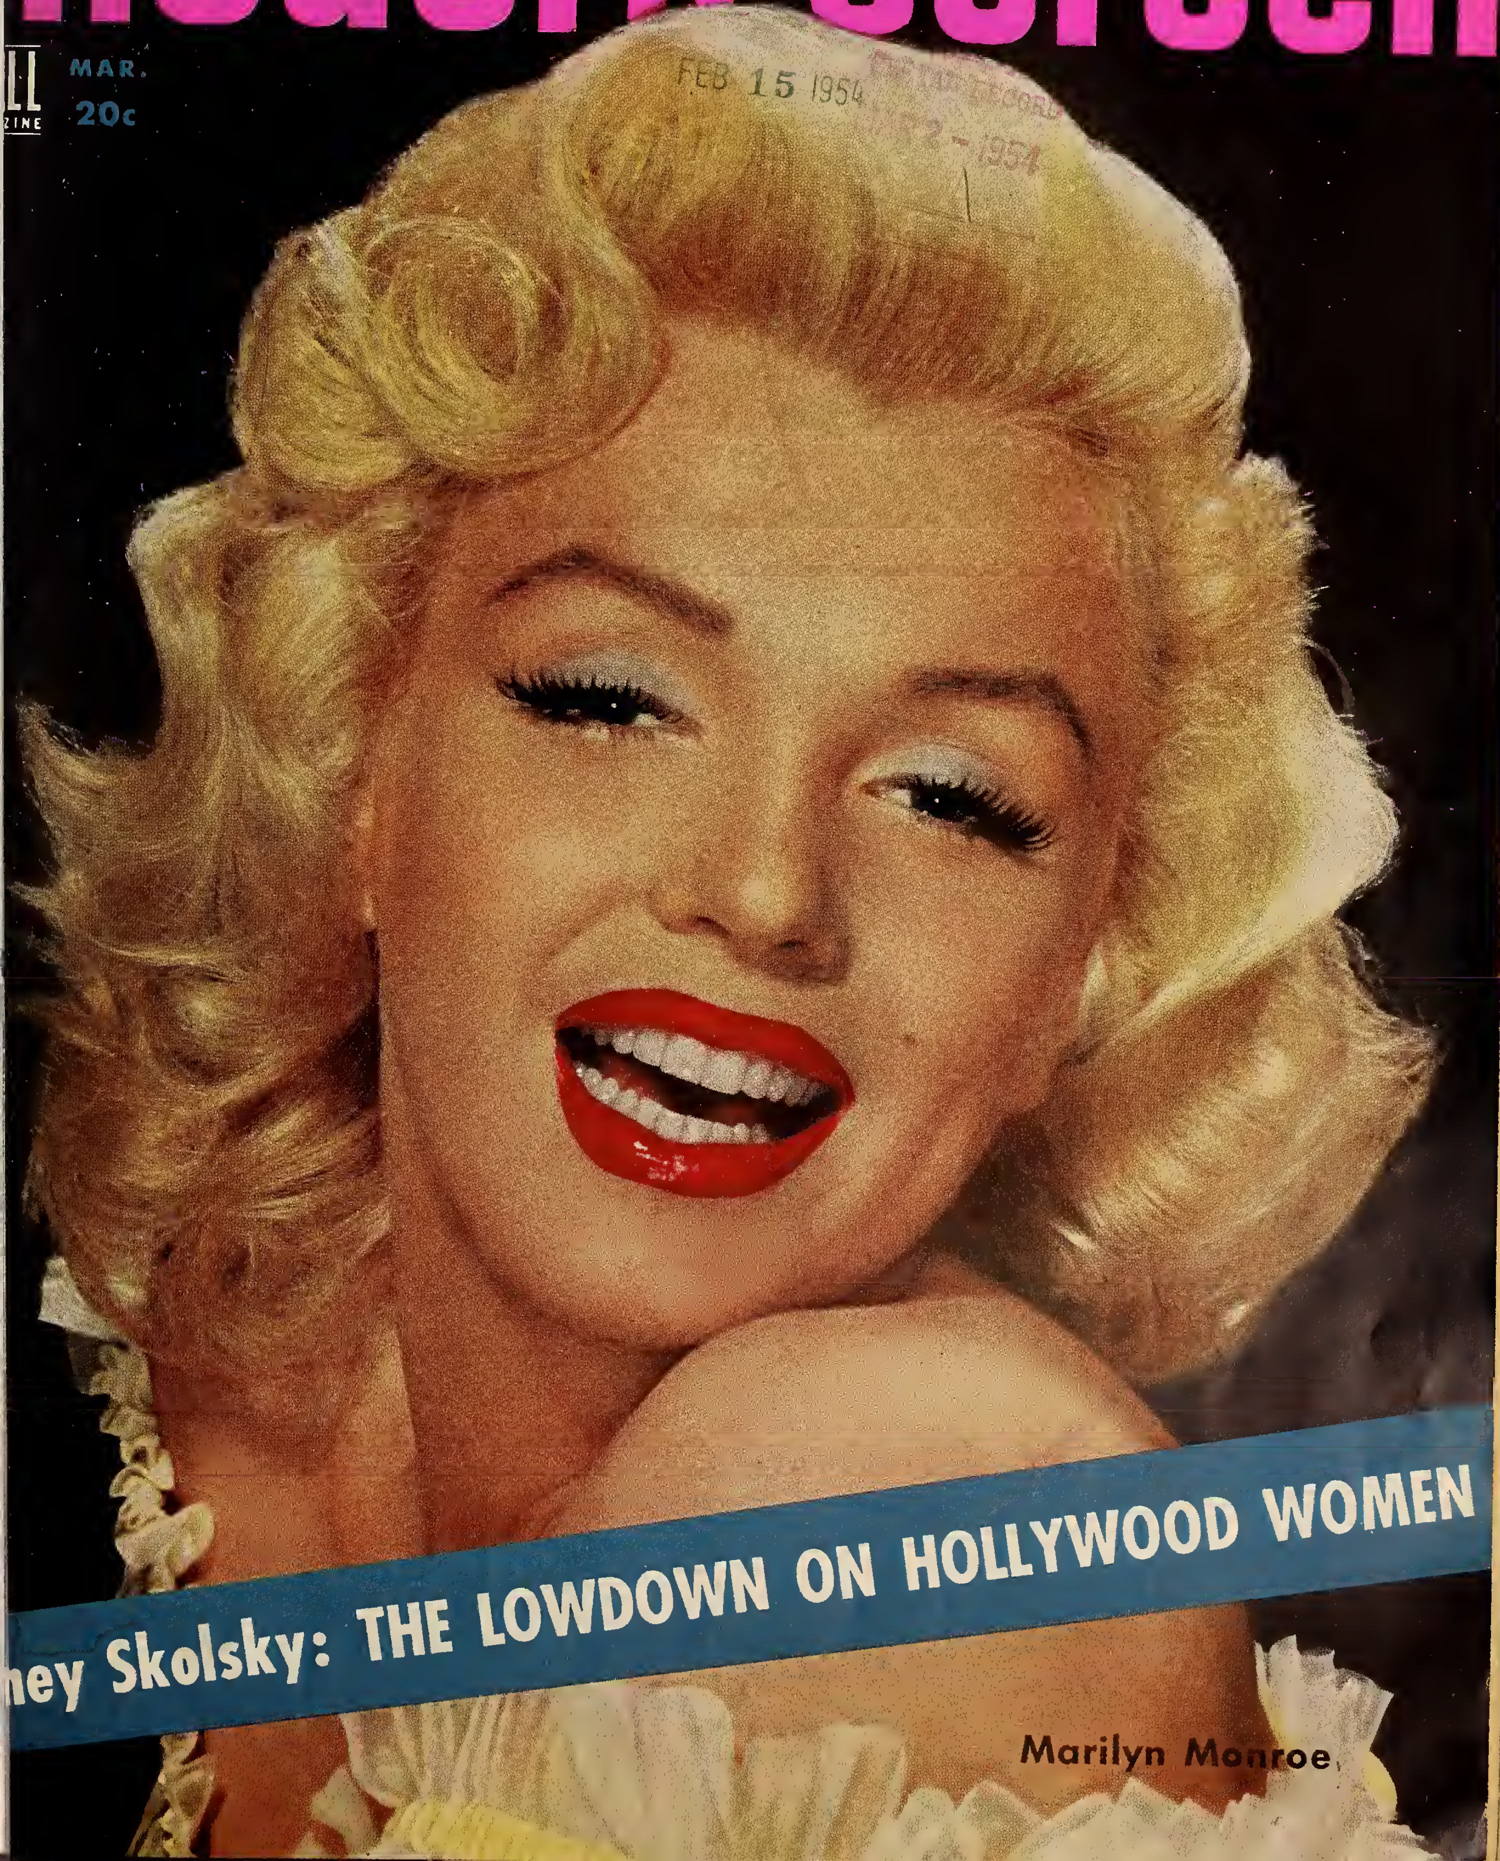
YOU, TOO, rate the cigarette that rates best with the most smokers! After all, Camels' costly tobaccos assure you a cool, cool mildness, a rich, exclusive flavor that other brands can't match! So try Camels — today. Smoke only Camels for 30 days. Let your own sense of good taste tell you why Camels' flavor and mildness agree with more people than any other cigarette!

AMERICA'S GREATEST MOVIE MAGAZINE

modern screen

LL
ZINE
MAR.
20c

FEB 15 1954



ney Skolsky: THE LOWDOWN ON HOLLYWOOD WOMEN

Marilyn Monroe

That Ivory Look

Young America has it...
You can have it in 7 days!

Babies have That Ivory Look . . . Why shouldn't you? The milder the beauty soap, the prettier your skin. And Ivory is mild enough for a baby's skin . . . in fact, doctors everywhere choose it ahead of all other soaps for baby's complexion and for yours.

$99\frac{44}{100}$% pure...it floats

In just one week, you can have That Ivory Look . . . a complexion that attracts attention. Simply change to regular care and pure, mild Ivory Soap. One week later your skin will look prettier, fresher, younger. You'll have That Ivory Look.

Doctors' First Choice For Your Complexion

FEB 15 1954 B 458626

AN IMPORTANT MESSAGE TO YOU ABOUT TOOTH PASTE

No dentifrice can stop all cavities —but...

you can reduce tooth decay up to 60%* with new Ipana® containing Anti-Enzyme WD-9

Easy directions on every package. Based on 2-year clinical tests.

If you are one of the many people who have been confused by recent promises of tooth-paste "miracles," here are two facts we think well worth knowing:

1. No dentifrice can stop all tooth decay. This includes our new Ipana with WD-9.

2. But if you want to have far fewer cavities, no other dentifrice—tooth paste or powder—has ever been proved more effective for helping you.

And you can be sure of this:

Two-year clinical tests showed that brushing teeth after eating can reduce tooth decay up to 60%. This means when you use new Ipana with WD-9 this way, the Ipana way—you can expect the same results.

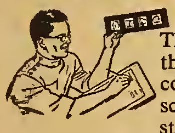
What's more, if you do this, there's an excellent chance that you will never have to worry about excessive cavities again.

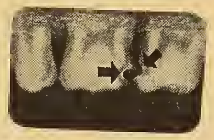
How independent scientists proved the Ipana way works



The tests which proved the Ipana way best were conducted by university scientists, leaders in the study of decay reduction. Ipana had no connection with them or with the tests.

Over a two-year period, half the subjects tested brushed their teeth the usual haphazard way. The other half used the Ipana way, clearly stated on every package. X-ray examinations showed the difference.

In 2-year test, X-rays showed 60% fewer cavities than from ordinary methods



ONE OR MORE NEW CAVITIES FOR ALMOST 2 OUT OF 3 PEOPLE USING ORDINARY METHODS.

NO NEW CAVITIES FOR ALMOST 2 OUT OF 3 PEOPLE USING THE IPANA WAY.

Here is proof that there is a sure way of reducing tooth decay.

The way most dentists recommend

We make these statements confidently because the benefits of the Ipana way were proved by two full years of clinical testing. Most dentists recommend this way (ask yours). And the directions are right on every Ipana package.

Important to new Ipana's effectiveness is its anti-enzyme ingredient, WD-9. In stopping the bacterial-enzyme action that produces tooth-decay acids, WD-9 is one of the most effective ingredients known.

Children enjoy new minty flavor

As you know, your youngsters don't like to use a tooth paste if it doesn't taste good. But Ipana has a wonderful new minty flavor so that children will enjoy using it. It has new built-in foaming and cleansing power to reach "danger spots" the tooth brush doesn't touch. For refreshing your mouth, we think you'll find that no other tooth paste is quite like it.

Don't forget your gums

Ipana with WD-9 does much more than help reduce tooth decay. Brushing with Ipana from gum margins toward biting edges of teeth helps remove irritants that can lead to gum troubles. And as for bad breath, a single brushing stops most unpleasant mouth odor as long as 9 hours.

When you can get a tooth paste that does all this without paying a penny extra for it, why not make your next tube Ipana?

SAME PACKAGE
NO INCREASE IN PRICE

Reduces Tooth Decay up to 60%
...Stops Bad Breath All Day

Product of Bristol-Myers

ALL IPANA NOW ON SALE CONTAINS ANTI-ENZYME WD-9

Dummies don't perspire
...but real live girls need MUM®
MUM
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN
AMERICAN INSTITUTE OF LAUNDERING CERTIFIED

New Mum with M-3 kills odor bacteria ...stops odor all day long

Amazingly effective—just use daily. So sure, so safe for normal skin. Safe for clothes.. Gentle Mum is certified by the American Institute of Laundering. Won't rot or discolor even your finest fabrics.

No waste, no drying out. Delicately fragrant new Mum is usable, wonderful right to the bottom of the jar. New fragrance. Get a jar today and stay nice to be near.

For sanitary napkins—Mum is gentle, safe, dependable . . . ideal for this use, too.

A Product of Bristol-Myers

MARCH, 1954

AMERICA'S GREATEST MOVIE MAGAZINE

modern screen

stories

OUT OF THE SHADOWS (Suzan Ball) . . . by Alice Hoffman 19
THE LOWDOWN ON HOLLYWOOD WOMEN . . . by Sidney Skolsky 31
THEY FIGHT FOR EACH OTHER (Granger-Simmons) . . . by Steve Cronin 34
I'M GONNA QUIT (Dale Robertson) . . . by Thelma McGill 36
STILL SLUGGING (Susan Hayward-Jess Barker) . . . by Imogene Collins 38
THE TROUBLE WITH SINATRA . . . by William Barbour 40
THE QUEEN AND I (Debra Paget) . . . by Lisa Gaye 42
RETURN FROM NOWHERE (Guy Madison) . . . by Robert Moore 44
LIVING ON WHEELS (Lucille Ball-Desi Arnaz) . . . by Marva Peterson 46
NEW BABY—NEW HAPPINESS (John Derek) . . . by Susan Trent 50
MISS GRABLE STEPS OUT (Betty Grable-Harry James) . . . by Carl Schroeder 52
WHAT I LEARNED FROM WOMEN . . . by Tab Hunter 54
CRAWFORD MEETS THE CRITICS (Joan Crawford) . . . by Jack Wade 56
BIG NOISE FROM FRISCO (Guy Mitchell) . . . by Louis Pollock 58
WHATEVER HIS PURPOSE . . . by June Allyson 60

featurettes

SHELLFIRE (Shelley Winters) . . . 28
I SAW IT HAPPEN (Bing Crosby) . . . by Joy Arch 67
MR. TRACY: KEENER THAN MOST PERSONS (Spencer Tracy) . . . 71
THE ONE THAT GOT AWAY (Jean Simmons-Robert Mitchum) . . . 80
NO OLÉ FOR AVA (Ava Gardner) . . . by Wanda Hale 87

departments

THE INSIDE STORY . . . 4
LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS . . . 6
MOVIE REVIEWS . . . by Florence Epstein 12
JUST FOR THE RECORDS . . . by George Frazier 16
TV TALK . . . 26

On the Cover: Color Portrait of 20th Century-Fox star Marilyn Monroe now appearing in River Of No Return. Photograph by Beerman and Parry. Lingerie by Arlene Dahl. See page 74 for other photo credits.

CHARLES D. SAXON
editor

DURBIN HORNER
executive editor

CARL SCHROEDER
western manager

PAIGE LOHR, story editor
BARBARA J. MAYER, assistant editor
KATIE ROBINSON, western editor
FERNANDO TEXIDOR, art director
BILL WEINBERGER, art editor
BOB BEERMAN, staff photographer
BERT PARRY, staff photographer
MARCIA L. SILVER, research editor

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS

Changes of address should reach us five weeks in advance of the next issue date. Give both your old and new address, enclosing if possible your old address label.

POSTMASTER: Please send notice on Form 3578 and copies returned under Label Form 3579 to 263 Ninth Ave., New York 1, New York

MODERN SCREEN, Vol. 48, No. 4, March, 1954. Published monthly by Dell Publishing Company, Inc. Office of publication at Washington and South Aves., Dunellen, N. J. Executive and editorial offices, 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y. Dell Subscription Service: 10 West 33rd St., New York 1, N. Y. Chicago advertising office, 221 No. LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill. Los Angeles advertising and editorial offices, 8701 West 3rd Street, Los Angeles, California. George T. Delacorte, Jr., President; Helen Meyer, Vice-Pres.; Albert P. Delacorte, Vice-Pres. Published simultaneously in the Dominion of Canada. International copyright secured under the provisions of the Revised Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. All rights reserved under the Buenos Aires Convention. Single copy price 20c in U. S. A. and Possessions, and Canada Subscriptions in U. S. A. and Canada $2.00 one year; $3.50 two years; $5.00 three years; Foreign, $3.00 a year. Entered as second class matter September 18, 1930, at the post office at Dunellen, N. J., under Act of March 3, 1879. Copyright 1954 by Dell Publishing Company, Inc. Printed in U. S. A. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Names of characters used in semi-fictional matter are fictitious—if the name of any living person is used it is purely a coincidence. Trademark No. 301778.

At last all the might and magnificence of The Unconquerables and their Seven Days of daring that forged the American Frontier.

WARNER BROS. TELL IT AS IT CAN BE TOLD ONLY WITH THE SWEEPING SPLENDORS OF

CINEMASCOPE

THE COMMAND

IN WARNERCOLOR AND
THE ENGULFING REALISM OF STEREOPHONIC SOUND

"THE COMMAND" STARRING GUY MADISON · JOAN WELDON · JAMES WHITMORE · WITH CARL BENTON REID · HARVEY LEMBECK SCREEN PLAY BY RUSSELL HUGHES MUSIC COMPOSED BY DIMITRI TIOMKIN PRODUCED BY DAVID WEISBART DIRECTED BY DAVID BUTLER

Tampax
can even be worn in tub or shower

If you're used to bulky external pads, this may sound unbelievable. But the reason Tampax sanitary protection can be worn in tub or shower is because it's worn internally.

Everything about Tampax is small and dainty. The throwaway applicator, for instance. The fact that Tampax is easily disposed of. The discovery that a whole month's supply slips into the purse. Yes, once you change to Tampax, you're due for many pleasant surprises.

One of the pleasantest is the way Tampax protects you against odor. Another nice thing is that it eliminates the whole cumbersome belt-pin-pad harness. (Tampax doesn't show; once it's in place, you can't feel it; you almost forget it's there.)

Tampax is a doctor's answer to all these monthly problems, and everything about it strikes millions of women as ideal. Get it in your choice of 3 absorbencies—Regular, Super, Junior—at any drug or notion counter. Economy size gives an average 4-months' supply. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

THE INSIDE STORY

Want the real truth? Write to INSIDE STORY, Modern Screen, 8701 W. Third St., Los Angeles 48, Cal. The most interesting letters will appear in this column. Sorry, no personal replies.

Q. Is it true that when he first came to Hollywood, Marlon Brando moved in with his agent, Jay Kantor? And is it true that a little while later, Kantor's wife, actress Roberta Haynes, divorced her husband, hoping to marry Brando?
—R.M., N. Y. C.

A. Although Jay Kantor is now divorced from Roberta Haynes, he is still one of Brando's few close friends, and he still handles him for MCA, a talent agency.

Q. Can you give Zsa Zsa Gabor's exact age?
—E.D., CHICAGO, ILL.

A. No. According to some of those who knew her in Budapest, Zsa Zsa is somewhere between forty-two and forty-seven.

Q. Are Walter Pidgeon and Irene Dunne grandparents?
—F.E.R., MUSKEGON, MICH.

A. Pidgeon is; Miss Dunne is not.

Q. Before Michael Wilding married Elizabeth Taylor wasn't he a chorus boy in London musicals?
—S.A., SALEM, MASS.

A. Yes, seventeen years ago in Home And Beauty.

Q. Would you please give me the name of the Paris plastic surgeon who performs uplift breast surgery on Hollywood actresses?
—J.G., MEMPHIS, TENN.

A. Dr. Jean Boivin.

Q. I knew Gail Russell when she was the prettiest girl in Santa Monica. Will you please tell me why she has turned so frequently to alcohol?
—G.V., SANTA MONICA, CAL.

A. Insecurity and unhappiness, according to friends.

Q. I understand that Bela Darvi is scheduled for a tremendous buildup at 20th Century-Fox, that she will play the top feminine role in The Egyptian, that she is a Polish refugee. True or False? —Y.M., ANCHORAGE, ALASKA

A. True.

Q. Why has Janet Leigh bleached her hair?
—E.L., STOCKTON, CAL.

A. She considers it attractive.

Q. Is this a good time for a young actress to try her luck in Hollywood? Who are the biggest agents there?
—G.F., DANTE, ILL.

A. This is not a good time. The largest talent agencies are MCA, William Morris, and Famous Artists.

Q. Why does June Allyson refuse to have anything to do with her father?
—J.R., PATERSON, N. J.

A. June and her father have been estranged for years.

Q. Is there any possibility of Bob Wagner's marrying Barbara Stanwyck?
—H.R., FRESNO, CAL.

A. Practically none.

Q. Is it true that Jacques de Bergerac cannot get a top role in a Hollywood movie unless his wife, Ginger Rogers, plays opposite him?
—R.O., SYRACUSE, N. Y.

A. That's about it.

Q. What lies behind the Martin & Lewis-Abbott & Costello feud?
—B.L. SEA GIRT, N. J.

A. Costello once advanced Martin some money for surgery, had him sign a personal management contract, later threatened a law suit. It's all been amicably worked out, and the feud is no more.

Q. Can you tell me what part a girl by the name of Edna Murphy played in the life of director Mervyn LeRoy?
—T.E., SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

A. She was his first wife.

Q. Isn't true that for the past several years Robert Taylor has been seeing Gary Cooper's old friend, Countess Di Frasso? Haven't they secretly met in Rome? How old are they, anyway?
—B.I., WASHINGTON, D. C.

A. Taylor is forty, the Countess Di Frasso is sixty-five; they have met in Rome on a purely social and business basis.

IT'S A PLEASURE*

YOU'LL BE ALL SMILES AND SINGIN' WHEN YOU SEE THESE WONDERFUL YOUNG STARS IN THE YEAR'S HAPPIEST, NEW MUSICAL!

RED GARTERS

Color by TECHNICOLOR

starring
ROSEMARY CLOONEY
JACK CARSON
GUY MITCHELL
PAT CROWLEY · GENE BARRY
CASS DALEY and introducing
JOANNE GILBERT

Produced by PAT DUGGAN · Directed by GEORGE MARSHALL · Written by MICHAEL FESSIER
A PARAMOUNT PICTURE

She's a delight in her most heartwarming role, singing not one, but six wonderful hit numbers!

He's the glad guy that all the gals are going goofy over as the singing stranger from the wide open spaces!

Introducing a new ray of screen sunshine, in her screen debut! When this romantic honey charms you with a song, your heart'll really love it!

A fresh, exciting, young girl with joyful personality that will win you right over. She's the All-American girl!

The most likeable young cast that ever was corralled! And in the warmest musical story ever to come gallopin' out of the old West. More whoopin' and hollerin' than at a Saturday night Wyoming steak fry . . . More romancin' than on a Sunday Picnic Grounds in Iowa . . . An unusual story that's bigger than all of Texas! And it's in the kind of beautiful color that you never, never see in real life, darn it! It's the sort of happy show you call wonderful, 'cause that's how it'll make you feel!

* PLEASURE: (Webster) State of gratification; delight; enjoyment and joy.

ESTHER WILLIAMS VOTED UNCOOPERATIVE . . . JANE POWELL'S NEW ROMANCE . . .

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD

A gala studio talent show, "Inside Universal International," brings the charms and skills of the lot's young

Susan Cabot plays a scene from The Fourposter with Rock Hudson. Rock is an outstanding example of U.I.'s successful star-making policy; an unknown when he started there, he is now a top box-office draw.

After the show Kathleen Hughes and Hugh O'Brian confer with their pleased coach, Estelle Harmon, who directed the production. Hugh's two humorous skits got a big hand and lots of laughs from the audience.

Susan Cabot, Barbara Rush, Mamie Van Doren formed a trio. Appearing before live audiences gives the performers poise; U.I. believes that these shows, drama lessons, rigorous training can produce good actors.

Barbara Rush, of Magnificent Obsession, joined her co-star Rock Hudson and Mamie Van Doren, of Yankee Pasha, for a scene. Besides acting many U.I. hopefuls take courses in diction, fencing, riding and singing.

SANTA CLAUS: HOLLYWOOD STYLE . . . KARGERS RECONCILE . . . THE YEAR'S ASTOUNDING STATEMENTS . . .

NEWS

stars to Hollywood attention

Universal-International's annual show drew praise (and parts) for its talented participants.

Kathleen Hughes and Sara Shane check their shoes before the grande finale of the show, which consisted of scenes from famous plays plus songs and dances. Sara's latest movie is Magnificent Obsession.

Susan Cabot is now playing in Ride Clear Of Diablo; she has had more acting experience than most of the youngsters in the show. Her companion at the mirror is Ruth Hampton, who has a role in The Glenn Miller Story.

WHEN ESTHER WILLIAMS was alerted that she had won for two years running the dubious title of "the year's most uncooperative actress" from the Hollywood Women's Press Club, she glanced at her brand new baby daughter asleep in her bassinette.

"Anyway," she cracked, "I'm cooperative with my husband!"

But make no mistake—Esther is deeply hurt.

I must say, myself, I am a bit puzzled by Esther's getting the raspberry in 1953. I am sure the press girls have their good reasons for voting the way they did—Roy Rogers and Dale Evans as the "Most Cooperative,"—Dale Robertson and Esther as the booby-prizers.

But I took a little time out to investigate and here is the Swim Queen's record for 1953:

For two months she was out of the state making Easy To Love in Florida.

She was pregnant when she returned and went on automatic suspension from MGM—which means off-salary during which time studios are prohibited from calling stars for publicity.

Nevertheless, during the time she was pregnant, Esther granted eight interviews.

After the birth of her baby daughter, as soon as she was able to be up and around, she gave nine interviews to newspaper and magazine writers.

It's an unwritten rule that publicity departments do not ask stars to pose with new babies until the infants are three months old. Esther posed with her daughter when the baby was two months old.

And I doubt if you would get the men in the various branches of the service, stationed near Hollywood, to vote her uncooperative.

At the invitation of the Navy, Esther officiated at the launching of the newest sea plane in San Diego.

She has also appeared twice in shows at the Veterans Hospital in Long Beach.

Not a bad record for "Miss Non-Cooperation of 1953," I would say, not bad at all.

THE LOOT was terrific this year. The Hollywood wives and sweethearts opened Christmas gifts more like booty from the Arabian Nights tales, and this is supposed to have been an off year for many stars.

Ray Milland's combination Christmas-and-reconciliation present to his lovely Mal was a huge square-cut diamond ring.

Tony Curtis did no economizing on his gift to Janet: an antique silver cigarette case from London encrusted with diamonds.

Janet gave Tony a 35-mm imported German camera with all attachments and a hand-tooled leather carrying case.

On the romantic side, Pat Nerney commissioned artist Paul Clemens to paint an oil of Janie Powell.

Lucille Ball and Desi Arnaz gave each other a week's vacation trip to Honolulu, with Lucy wearing a beautiful new diamond link neck-

"Believe me!
Paying 60 CENTS
is SIMPLY NONSENSE!"

Nothing Out-Wears--Out-Shines--
Out-Glamours CUTEX

HERE'S POSITIVE PROOF!

U. S. TESTING CO. PROVES*: Regardless of price, you can't beat Cutex for lasting wear! Case-history results of tests made by this impartial laboratory prove that even expensive 60¢ nail polishes don't outwear the sensational new Chip-pruf formula brought to you by Cutex!

THE REASON—ENAMELON! Only Cutex, world's largest selling nail polish, contains this miracle ingredient that prevents chipping and peeling . . . keeps fingertips lastingly beautiful!

WHY PAY MORE? When Cutex gives you long wear—prettier colors—plus the safe Spillpruf feature, not available in the 2 tested polishes!

Pearl Cutex, 39¢
Chip-pruf Cutex, 15¢

Prices plus tax.

*U. S. Testing Co.
Report No. 66174—11/18/53

LOUELLA PARSONS' good news

Continued

lace with her cocktail gowns.

Even the sunglasses went snazzy. Debra Paget gave her ever-present mama, Margaret Griffin, a pair framed in pearls and rhinestones.

Didn't sound too much like the Michael Rennies are separating, either: he wrapped up a Black Mist mink coat and sent it to her in London.

Jeff Hunter surprised Barbara Rush with two complete outfits, including accessories—one for daytime, one for formal evenings.

JANE WYMAN and Freddie Karger separated (for a week) while I was in New York and as they were still apart on my return, I called Janie on the phone.

"Come on over here and tell mama all your troubles," I said to my girl friend. "Don't you know you're almost like a daughter to me and I'm not going to have you unhappy?"

Jane arrived about five in the afternoon. For the next two hours we sat talking, or rather, she was talking and I was a'listenin.'

When she had finally poured out all her woes, she looked at me for my reaction. I promised her I wouldn't reveal what she said. But I didn't promise I wouldn't tell what I said:

"Honey," I told my favorite star-child, "you've been making mountains out of molehills. None of this is really important. I can't think that Freddie has done anything terrible, and if you stop to think it over, I'm sure you'll agree."

Just at this moment the doorbell rang and who should walk in but Freddie? Now how in the world did he just happen by at this particular time? I couldn't have been less surprised.

For about five minutes there was a bit of a strain. Then suddenly we all broke out laughing. "Mother," chided Jane, "you planned this."

"How could you ever think such a thing," I protested as modestly as I could under the circumstances.

Anyway, the important thing is that when they left, the Kargers walked out hand-in-hand and the next day I broke the story that the Kargers were back together again.

I'm not saying that Janie and Freddie are completely out of the woods, maritally speaking, yet.

But, if they just use a little common sense,

Terry Moore dressed conservatively for party; her bathingsuit (p. 29) was banned in Korea.

sprinkled with some good, old-fashioned give-and-take, they can save their marriage.

If they don't—it will break up again, and I would feel as bad as they. I love Janie and I have grown fond of Freddie, too.

JANE POWELL is trying to play it cozy with her new romance, Pat Nerney. "I don't want to fall in love again," says the little blonde singer who got her fingers burned in l'affaire Gene Nelson.

But, from the looks of Jane and Pat when they are together, maybe she can't help herself.

There's no doubt that the Janie of these days is a disillusioned girl. She doesn't want to be hurt again—but I repeat, there's a warm, warm gleam in her eyes when she looks into Pat's.

SOME ASTOUNDING STATEMENTS OF 1953:

Esther Williams: "I will have many more children. I have them so easily. Ben (Gage) and I are the best baby-making factory I know."

Robert Mitchum (after speeding away from a traffic cop giving him a ticket): "Sorry, Dad. I thought you might be a bandit."

Arthur Godfrey anent Julius La Rosa: "He's lost his humility." What a cloud of dust that blew up!

Dolores Donlon, new starlet: "My husband owns a medical building he could fill with just psychiatrists—they are so busy taking care of Hollywood people crazy for fame!"

Jane Powell about her break-up with Gene Nelson: "I suppose I high-pressured him too much, forcing him to make decisions he didn't want to make."

Ava Gardner after her estrangement from Frank Sinatra: "I wish he had left me with a baby to remember him by."

Errol Flynn, describing his co-star Gina Lollobrigida: "What a department store! Something desirable on every floor!"

I CRIED SO HARD at The Glenn Miller Story première that it's a good thing I looked around before the picture started to see who was there. I was too busy sniffling and wiping my eyes when it was over.

Jeff Chandler and Marilyn Maxwell sat behind me, holding hands.

"What happened to your engagement to Jerry Davis?" I asked Marilyn, not too tactfully as I look back.

Jeff looked real pleased when she shrugged, "It didn't work out."

All the way inside the theatre you could hear the fans screaming and yelling as Jimmy Stewart and his lovely Gloria arrived. In fact, Jimmy was pushed so many ways by radio announcers, autograph hounds, photographers and press agents that he got separated from Gloria.

"My wife, fellas," yelled Jimmy, "Let me get my wife!"

Of all things, Donald O'Connor, with Sheila Connolly, forgot his tickets! "Just wait till the house fills up," he told the usher philosophically, "and just put us where there's a gap for two!"

Whoops! Was Shelley Winters in a low-cut gown? She was half in and half out of a startling gown of salmon and gold. Cute old Charlie Coburn's monocle almost fell out of his eye as he stood up to let Shell get to her seat.

Debbie Reynolds was surprisingly subdued (for her) with Richard Anderson.

And what's all this steady dating with Rock Hudson and Julia Adams? This is beginning to look very serious.

I thought Janet Leigh looked beautiful but much too thin. Tony's on the thin side, too.

After the delightful musical was over I kept thinking how sad it was that little June Allyson, who is so wonderful as Mrs. Miller and who gives her best screen performance, had to miss the première. She was in the hospital following an appendectomy.

Bravo, Junie and Jimmy! You are both great.

TERRY MOORE looked cute as a button when she dropped by to tell me goodbye before taking off for her Christmas show in Korea.

She was wearing a white jacket trimmed with white fox collar and cuffs, a white skirt with red and green Christmas trees of sequins, red and green jewelry and a tiny white hat.

"Terry," I accused her, "did you ask to go to Korea because B. Johnson is stationed there? And are you going to marry him?"

"Maybe," Terry dimpled, "if he asks me."

If Terry does become Mrs. Johnson she'll become a member of the fabulous Texas family which owns the even more fabulous King Ranch.

FRANK SINATRA celebrated his birthday dinner with his three kids at home.

His thirteen-year-old glamour girl daughter, Nancy, Jr., baked him a cake, coconut, with six candles.

"What's the six for?" asked her old man.

Mitzi Gaynor, Jack Bean attended Jay Robinson's party for Terry Moore, Susan Zanuck.

Host Robinson chatted with Anne Francis. Party was among year's most enjoyable events.

wears best...costs less!

CUTEX

Stay Fast

stays on...

stays creamy

...longer!

America's longest lasting—creamiest lipstick! Stays on after eating, smoking, even kissing. So rich in creamy lanolin, Stay Fast with "Moisturizing Action" keeps lips soft as a rose! Choose from the latest, loveliest colors.

WHY PAY MORE?

Stay Fast in a golden case, only 59¢ or 29¢ plus tax.

WRINKLES?

Lanolin Plus LIQUID

DOES WONDERS FOR YOUR SKIN

The very first time you smooth in this golden liquid, premature wrinkles due to dryness and tiny lines seem to fade. For Lanolin Plus, with its precious esters and cholesterols, is most similar to Nature's own skin lubricants. Only $1, plus tax.

Get-Acquainted Bottles
ONLY 25¢ EACH

SEND COUPON NOW!

LANOLIN PLUS
Dept. 1233
30 West Hubbard Street
Chicago 10, Illinois

Gentlemen: I enclose.......in cash for the following guest-size bottles of:

☐ 15-facial bottle Lanolin Plus Liquid........... 25¢

☐ Guest-size bottle Lanolin Plus Liquid Cleanser... 25¢

☐ Month-supply Lanolin Plus Hand Lotion...... 25¢

☐ 10-shampoo bottle Lanolin Plus Shampoo........ 25¢

☐ 15-application bottle Lanolin Plus for the Hair...... 25¢

☐ Special All five Only $1.00

Name............................

Address...........................

City.............Zone......State.....

We pay postage and federal tax

"Oh, it's just a good round number," replied the eldest Sinatra offspring.

Frankie groaned, "Isn't it bad enough that your brother is another George Burns? Do you have to be Gracie Allen?"

All in all, it was a very festive occasion. After dinner, Nancy, Jr., and Frankie, age ten, played piano duets for Daddy—and very good, too.

Five-year-old Tina Sinatra sat on Frank's knee during the recital and suddenly piped up with:

"I can't play the piano. I can't even tell time!"

P.S. All right, all right. I know what you're wondering—where was Nancy Sinatra, Sr., while all this was going on? She was very much present and a charming behind-the-scenes hostess at the children's party for their father.

LANA TURNER and Lex Barker slipped back into Hollywood so secretly they had time to move into Lana's house and get the phone number changed before friends and business associates realized they were here. Obviously, they didn't want any welcoming "Hellos."

Steve Crane, father of Lana's little Cheryl, didn't like that unlisted telephone number business. "Maybe they want to be alone," he said, "but no one is going to keep me from being in touch with my little girl."

Cheryl and her father became fast friends during the time Lana was making two movies in Europe.

Almost every night she was having an early dinner at his cafe, the Luau, with Steve and Lana's mother.

As of this writing, Lana has taken her $200,000 home off the market. It was for sale during her absence, but apparently she's changed her mind for a couple of good reasons:

First, no one came up with $200,000 even for the privilege of living in a glamour girl's house.

Second, Lex is assuming the payments on the house—his Christmas gift to his bride.

WENT TO LAS VEGAS to see Marlene Dietrich in her nightclub debut, and believe me, no one can see more of Marlene than is on display in a gown that creates the impression of being completely nude on top. It isn't—it's net covered chiffon—but it might as well be.

It isn't often that Hollywood people are too shocked about things, but Frances and Van Heflin and little Joan Evans and her handsome husband who sat with me at the Sahara, were—well, disappointed—that the fabulous Dietrich would resort to such burlesque-type costuming.

I covered all the Las Vegas spots before I returned home. Vic Damone was on the same bill with Jimmy McHugh and his singing stars at the Sands, and between shows I had a talk with Vic.

He told me there's no real, serious romance in his life these days. He is devoted to Joanie Benny, Jack and Mary's sweet daughter, "but, we're just pals now," is the way Vic puts it, "more like brother and sister than the engaged pair we've been rumored to be."

THE LETTER BOX: Marie Priffer writes from New York to thank me for the two fine friends she has made, via letters to Korea, through names of service men I have printed from time to time in this department. And, thank you, Marie, for making it happier for two G.I's in the bitter loneliness of Korea.

In this season of assorted polls, I got a kick out of the letter from "ten grade schoolers" in Baton Rouge, Louisiana, who sent me the results of a poll of the fifth, sixth and seventh grades as follows:

Favorite actor: Bob Wagner
Favorite Girl: Susan Hayward
Most Beautiful: Ava Gardner
Favorite Musical Girl: Betty Grable
Favorite Musical Boy: Donald O'Connor
Favorite husband and wife team: Roy Rogers and Dale Evans, Marge and Gower Champion, Lucille Ball and Desi Arnaz, tied.

Amusing, in view of the above, that Mrs. Pia Szymkiewicz, Stoughton, Mass., writes: "Frankly, I'm sick to death of opening movie magazines and reading about Robert Wagner, Robert Wagner, Robert Wagner. What has he done on the screen to rate all this ballyhoo? He is just a fair actor—and just fairly good looking."

Mrs. S., let me refer you to the winner of the grade school poll as to why Bob rates all the attention.

Rosemary Clooney goes out with brother Nicky when husband José Ferrer cannot squire her.

Shirley Temple, now expecting her third baby, attends a première with husband Charles Black.

Mr. and Mrs. Tyrone Power (Linda Christian) with daughter Romina in the Bahamas

"Why Be Fat?" says Mrs. Tyrone Power

"I Lose Weight Without Any Trouble!"

Nowhere in the world will you find women so figure conscious as in Hollywood. You know that Ayds really works when lovely women like Linda Christian tell you how it has helped them lose weight easily, pleasantly and safely!

Proved by Clinical Tests!

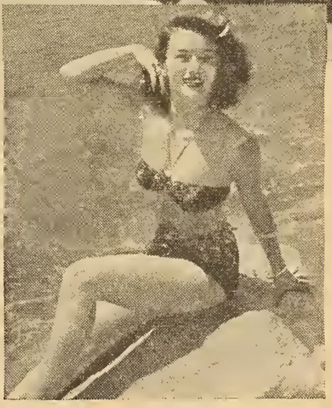
With Ayds you lose weight the way Nature intended you to—without dieting or hunger. A quick natural way, clinically tested and approved by doctors, with no risk to health. With the Ayds Plan you should feel healthier, look better while reducing —and have a lovelier figure.

When you take Ayds before meals, as directed, you can eat what you want—all you want. No starvation dieting—no gnawing hunger pangs. Ayds is a specially made, low calorie candy fortified with health-giving vitamins and minerals. Ayds curbs your appetite—you automatically eat less—lose weight naturally, safely, quickly. It contains no drugs or laxatives.

Guaranteed—A Lovelier Figure!

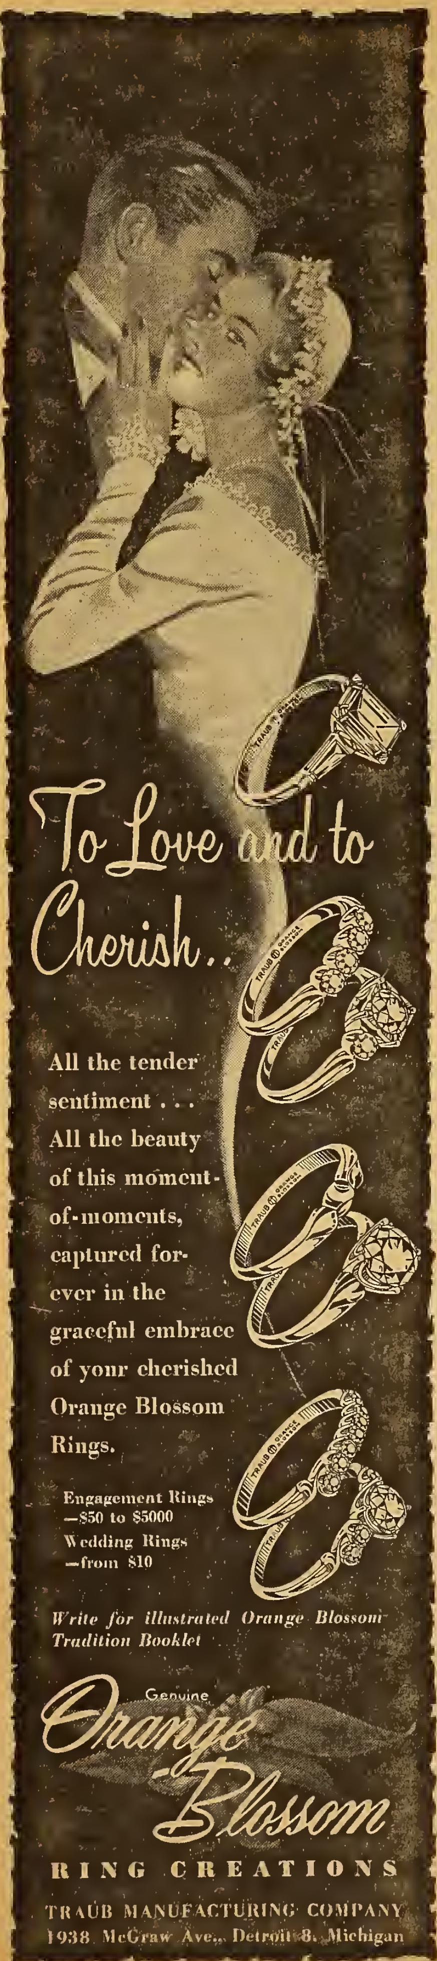
Users report losing up to ten pounds with the very first box. Others say they have lost twenty to thirty pounds with the Ayds Plan. You, too, must lose pounds with the very first box ($2.98) or your money back.

Ayds has helped many famous Hollywood stars to a lovelier figure. It can do the same for you! At drug or department stores.



Linda Christian vacationing in Acapulco. "I discovered for myself that by taking Ayds I could lose pounds easily," says Linda.

Linda loves the sea, the surf and the sunshine. "I recommend Ayds," says Linda. "It has done wonderful things for my figure."



To Love and to Cherish..

All the tender sentiment . . . All the beauty of this moment-of-moments, captured forever in the graceful embrace of your cherished Orange Blossom Rings.

Engagement Rings —$50 to $5000
Wedding Rings —from $10

Write for illustrated Orange Blossom Tradition Booklet

Genuine Orange Blossom
RING CREATIONS

TRAUB MANUFACTURING COMPANY
1938 McGraw Ave., Detroit 8, Michigan

PICTURE OF THE MONTH

movie reviews

by florence epstein

Jimmy Stewart plays title role of Glenn Miller.

June Allyson plays the wife Glenn left behind to entertain service men all over the world.

THE GLENN MILLER STORY. In the early forties when everybody went wild about dance bands Glenn Miller's name was on top of the heap—and that was no accident. Here's his story to prove it—the story of a musician who was searching for a sound he couldn't recognize until he heard it, a sound no other band had. Five years after he'd found that sound and with it opened the door to fantastic success, he disappeared somewhere over the English Channel in a single-engined Norseman C-64. That was in December, 1944; he was on his way to Paris to lead his service band in a Christmas Day program. This film is a tender, moving tribute to his memory. James Stewart's performance as Miller is so subtle and sensitive he actually seems to resemble him physically. June Allyson, as his wife, reveals a warm, courageous spirit. Their crazy courtship, their marriage, their struggle not to compromise and finally, their coming into their own, is the fabric of this sentimental but never mawkish tale. If you liked Miller's music, you'll enjoy the soundtrack—it took work to make any band sound that much like Miller's old crew. Louis Armstrong, Gene Krupa, Ben Pollack, Frances Langford and The Modernaires are around, and they, too, make some pretty noises. The cast includes Charles Drake, George Tobias, and Henry Morgan, all of whom do justice to a carefully researched script—which, by the way, had to have Mrs. Miller's approval of every page before production was begun. You might be interested to learn that the trombone Jimmy blows was the one Miller actually used, and even the glasses he wears were copied from a pair worn by the band leader. Technicolor.—U.I.

how to be fitted comfortably in

YOUR BRASSIERE

Measuring

It's worth a lot to get a comfortable brassiere—so be sure to get the right size. Your trained corsetiere will measure you around the diaphragm. Add 6″ to that measurement and you have your brassiere size. Say you measure 28″—add 6″, and your size is 34. If you measure an odd size and you like your brassiere snug, try the next size smaller. If you like it loose, try the next size larger.

Most brassiere cups are sized A, B and C—"A" being the smallest. Your corsetiere can best tell you which of these sizes you need. The cup size is right when the bra rests close to the body at the breastbone.

Pull down in back

When you put your brassiere on, be sure that it is pulled down in back to follow the bra's natural cut. If you don't it may gap at the armpits. Adjust the shoulder straps comfortably. When you try on a "Perma·lift*" Bra the support comes from the base of the bra cups and not from tight shoulder straps. If you follow these simple steps, you'll get more bra wear and comfort than you've ever had before.

Tight straps

The Magic Inset

A "Perma·lift" Brassiere has one very important exclusive feature—the patented Magic Insets at the base of each cup. The Magic Insets gently support your breasts from below—and, best of all, neither washing nor wearing will ever affect its uplift or support.

"Perma·lift" Brassieres are priced so reasonably—from $1.50 to $7.50. You'll find them in most fine Corset Departments, so be sure to get yours soon.

*"Perma·lift"—A trade mark of A. Stein & Company Chicago—New York—Los Angeles (Reg. U.S. Pat. Off.)

Perma·lift
REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.
BRASSIERES
THE LIFT THAT NEVER LETS YOU DOWN

Are you in the know?

If your hero's cronies leave you cold—

☐ Hold your fire ☐ Demand a showdown

Though your new Sigh Man's old friends may be sterling characters—seems to you they could do with plenty of polish! Of course, you could ignore the guys. Yet wouldn't it be nicer to try winning them over, for his sake? (You'll boost your rating!) And win yourself an A for "assurance" at problem time, with the comfort of Kotex. For Kotex is an old friend you trust for softness that holds its shape; absorbency that saves panicky moments.

What can't a sharp dresser do without?

☐ A wolf call ☐ Knit wit ☐ Cashmere

You needn't put all your cash in cashmere! Just put your wit to knitting your own sweater wardrobe: those new, long, bulky jackets that copy-cat your beau's. Nylon and wool; won't stretch; wash easy. So, for a "purl" of little price—needle up! But on certain days, bulk's what you don't want—napkin-wise. Choose Kotex. Those flat pressed ends prevent revealing outlines. And Kotex gives extra protection.

How to cut a gabby phone belle short?

☐ Drop dead ☐ Disconnect ☐ Thank her

Connie's got you hooked—for hours. Just when you're expecting a Very Important Call! Wriggling off the line would be easy, if you knew her better. But try this: At the first semicolon, thank her for calling; say you'll see her soon. To free yourself from calendar dilemmas (such as which absorbency of Kotex to choose)—try Regular, Junior, Super. You'll find the very one you need.

More women choose KOTEX* than all other sanitary napkins

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Which of these "steadies" does most for you?

☐ Romeo & Juliet ☐ Kotex and Kotex belts ☐ Moon 'n' June

Made for each other—that's Kotex and Kotex sanitary belts—and made to keep you comfortable. Of strong, soft-stretch elastic . . . they're designed to prevent curling, cutting or twisting. So lightweight you'll hardly know you're wearing one. And Kotex belts take kindly to dunking; stay flat even after countless washings. Why not buy two . . . for a change?

OTHELLO When Orson Welles puts his hand to something it's often overwhelming. Grandiose, ponderous, sensually sating are ways to describe his production of Shakespeare's Othello. You know the plot—Othello, a Moorish general woos Desdemona, daughter of a Venetian Senator and marries her against her father's will. He takes his bride to the Isle of Cyprus and with great good will puts Cassio (Michael Lawrence) in charge of a general celebration. This enrages Iago (Michael MacLiammoir) who is ambitious and hates Othello. That very night Iago plans to destroy Othello's love for Desdemona (Suzanne Cloutier). Patiently, cunningly, he arouses Othello's jealousy which grows very quickly into a towering rage. He murders Desdemona, then learns of her complete innocence and kills himself. At the state funeral given them Iago is imprisoned in a cage hoisted in the air, prey to circling vultures. The photography is magnificent, the settings are vast, gloomy, lordly. The acting is sweepingly rhetorical. Perhaps you'll be impressed. Cast includes Robert Coote, Milton Edwards, Fay Compton, Doris Dowling.—U.-A.

MISS SADIE THOMPSON Rita Hayworth in 3-D is a heck of a lot of Hayworth, and when she starts to sing her sultry songs you dig them, brother. Miss Sadie Thompson is based on W. Somerset Maugham's famous short story, Rain. Hollywood's done it before—but now they've brought it up to date which doesn't mean it's an improvement, but still, it's new. A bunch of Marines stationed on a tropical island are transported with joy when Sadie—bejeweled, perfumed and awfully democratic—lands. (The boat that was to take her from Honolulu to New Caledonia is quarantined.) Also landing, though, is Alfred Davidson's party. Davidson (José Ferrer) is a fanatic reformer bent on keeping "evil" out of the island. One look at Sadie tells him he has a job. Sadie and Marine Aldo Ray get romantic. This agitates Ferrer to the point of apoplexy. He digs into her past, confronts her with accusations, arranges to have her deported and finally agrees to save her soul. Poor Sadie is overwhelmed with guilt and submits to Davidson—until he stops acting pious and, to her horror, starts making passes. In the cast are Harry Bellaver, Russell Collins. Technicolor—Columbia

IT SHOULD HAPPEN TO YOU One of the most delightful comedies of the normal screen, It Should Happen To You stars Judy Holliday, Peter Lawford and Hollywood newcomer Jack Lemmon. The scene is New York, the gimmick is that Judy, who appears to be a startlingly average girl, has a terrible yearning for fame and fortune. With her hard-earned one thousand dollars she rents a huge billboard overlooking Columbus Circle upon which she has her name emblazoned. Gladys Glover, it says, for all the world to see. Peter Lawford's soap company has traditionally used this billboard and to get it back Lawford offers Judy half a dozen other signs strategically located throughout the city. Soon her name is a byword, although no one knows for what. Until Michael O'Shea makes her his client and they rocket to giddy heights of notoriety. The humor is so fresh, the romance between Judy and Jack Lemmon so charmingly real, the acting so deceptively natural you're sure to love it. With Vaughn Taylor, Connie Gilchrist.—Columbia

Jackpot Of The Month

THE BEST YEARS OF OUR LIVES In 1946 the war was over and fathers and sons came home. That was when The Best Years Of Our Lives was released and almost everyone who saw it felt personally involved. Now, eight years later the movie is back and a lot of people won't even notice it was about another war in another decade. They'll be thinking of Korea. Fredric March, Dana Andrews and Howard Russell are the tired heroes who discover that fighting was almost easier than re-adjusting to civilian life. March is a family man, a banker. Andrews is a soda-jerker for whom the Air Corps opened new vistas. Russell is an amputee. The lives of the three intermingle as each searches for his identity. Pathos and drama are still powerful in The Best Years which threatens to become not only an American classic but a perennial best seller. Cast includes Myrna Loy, Teresa Wright, Cathy O'Donnell, Virginia Mayo. —RKO

ACT OF LOVE A once gay, always romantic Paris is brought to nostalgic life in this film based on Alfred Hayes' novel The Girl On The Via Flaminia. Written by Irwin Shaw, directed by Anatole Litvak, Act Of Love is a poignant story haunted by the knowledge that if these lovers had met somewhere else at some other time they would not have lost each other. Kirk Douglas, an ex-soldier, sits on the terrace of a Riviera hotel and his thoughts go back to 1944 when he sought one thing of beauty, one moment of peace amid the coarse, ugly monotony of war. He meets Lisa (Dany Robin) a waif of exquisite, child-like loveliness. She accepts his offer of food and shelter which necessitates her sharing his room. Frightened and resentful, she nevertheless falls in love. But a broken city full of angry or apathetic people, full of black markets, suspicious police and an army of men leaves little space for fulfillment. Prominently cast are Barbara Laage, Serge Reggiana, Robert Strauss, George Mathews.—U.-A.

THREE SAILORS AND A GIRL When you join the Navy you're supposed to see the sea and not come messing around Broadway with $50,000. These three sailors (Gordon MacRae, Gene Nelson and jolting Jack E. Leonard) gathered the loot from their crewmates, planning to invest it in stock. In stock! cries scheming Sam Levene. You mean show business! And proceeds to outline a script that will shortly lose them all their money. We're with you, say the sailors three, after sighting Jane Powell, Levene's star. Jane feels guilty about involving the boys, especially when she falls in love with MacRae. But a girl's got o eat and life is tough and oh, does that show flop in Boston (or New Haven). But bark! One of the mobs can sing and one has feet that fly and one is so fat and funny you'll faint. I didn't faint. Technicolor. With Archer MacDonald.—Warners

(Continued on page 24)

Never let them go!

He won't—if you don't! And 10 seconds is all it takes to keep your hands soft and smooth and heavenly to hold! Yes, this pretty-pink, Lanolined lotion actually smooths rough skin, soothes dry, chapped skin quicker 'n you can say "Cashmere Bouquet!" 'Specially formulated to vanish instantly... leaving no sticky feel, no oily film... just the flower-fragrance of Cashmere Bouquet.

Beauty Bargain! 9-oz. DeLuxe bottle with handy pump dispenser ... 69¢; other sizes, 25¢ and 47¢

cashmere bouquet
HAND LOTION

What to do when "Young Skin" problems attack your face

Try to cover up with heavy make-up? "Operate" on blackheads yourself? Give up and hope you'll outgrow it?

If your face has started sprouting blackheads, excess oil, enlarged pores—you can find remarkably quick help in Pond's special greaseless treatment. Hundreds of girls with complexion troubles like yours tell us how amazingly effective Pond's treatment is!

Now— a greaseless corrective for oiliness, roughness, blackheads, large pores

In Young Skin, the oil glands often become over-active, the skin sluggish. Flaky particles pile up, roughen the surface. Dirt and oil, trapped by these dead skin cells, clog and stretch the pores. Then—blackheads and "bumps" are on the way.

Do something about "Young Skin," now! Just cover your face deeply, except eyes, with snowy-cool Pond's Vanishing Cream. Its "keratolytic" action loosens, dissolves away clogging oil and dead skin cells . . . frees tiny skin glands to function normally. After 1 minute, wipe off, rinse with cold water. Girls who use the treatment say: "Pores look much smaller" . . . "My skin looks so soft, so clean!"

"Young Skin" doesn't like heavy make-up! A powder base of Pond's Vanishing Cream gives a fresh, unshiny look.

A new, exclusive MODERN SCREEN feature: a nationally-known record expert gives you the latest on recording stars, new releases and equipment.

JUST FOR THE RECORDS

by George Frazier

■ The last time I spent much time with Joseph Frank Lavecchio, a former Chicago choir boy better known as Frankie Laine, was when we went together to Johnnie Ray's opening at the Copacabana in New York City. As things turned out, it was a rewarding experience. At the end of the floor show, Laine and I dropped back to Ray's dressing room to offer our congratulations.

Frankie said, "Johnnie, you were wonderf—" But before he could finish, he choked up and suddenly began to sob.

Obviously, this was the behavior of an enormously emotional man. Watching it, I realized more than I ever had before why Frankie Laine is one of the most successful vocalists of our time. For one thing, he believes what he sings and, for another, he is marvelously capable of communicating his own feelings to his listeners. It explains why he has won seven gold records (which are awarded to an artist when one of his records sell one million copies) and is one up on Perry Como.

Some months after our visit to the Copacabana, Laine underwent surgery in order to relieve severe throat congestion. It was far from a minor operation and many people believed that he would never sing again. But he did sing, and he sang spectacularly. The first record he made after leaving the hospital was the affecting best-seller, "I Believe." It was a reaffirmation of his deep faith.

Frankie is a balding and chunky thirty-nine-year-old man. Since the operation, things have never been so good for him. Happily married to beautiful Nan Grey, he only recently signed a fat contract to make three movies for Columbia. Meanwhile, he also managed to score a resounding hit at the Palladium in London. This month he is on hand with a Columbia album called "Mr. Rhythm" that is immensely exciting.

"Mr. Rhythm" demonstrates that while Laine is a good singer to watch—one of the greatest of all so-called "action" singers—he is also quite, quite moving even without benefit of his physical exertion. "Mr. Rhythm" proves that his singing is impressive even if you can't see him thrashing his arms and stamping on the floor as though he were trying to break through to the basement.

This album contains some lovely songs. One is a heartbreaker out of the 1930's called "A Hundred Years From Today." Then there are such classics as "Someday, Sweetheart," "After You've Gone," "Lullaby In Rhythm," "Laughing At Life," "Willow, Weep For Me," and Hoagy Carmichael's memorable "Judy." In them, Frankie gets wonderful support from his regular accompanist, a Cherokee pianist named Carl Fischer, and a fine orchestra conducted by Paul Weston, who is probably more celebrated for the skilful collaborations he has made with his wife, Jo Stafford. All in all, "Mr. Rhythm" is a good addition to anybody's record library.

RCA Victor has finally brought out its long and eagerly awaited 12-inch LP called "Show Biz." Aside from its infinite appeal as undiluted entertainment, this is an altogether remarkable document, spanning, as it does, the annals and personalities of show business from, according to the notes, "Caruso to Pinza, Smith and Dale to Milton Berle, Nora Bayes to Dinah Shore, Vaudeville to Movies to TV to 3-D." Based on the monumentally informative book of the same title by Abel Green and Joe Laurie, Jr., "Show Biz," which is narrated by George Jessel, is a cavalcade of fifty years of one of the most exciting and resplendent occupations imaginable.

One of the "hottest properties around today," as the expression goes, is Frank Sinatra, who, only a year or so ago, appeared to be finished. His performance in From Here To Eternity helped to reestablish him, of course, but so did his singing. Like Frankie Laine, Sinatra sings with immense conviction. If he is happy, his singing reflects it. If he is sad, it is almost impossible for him to conceal it in his voice. His new Capitol album is touching proof of this. It was made at the height of his difficulties with Ava and the fact is apparent in almost every selection. Here, in a collection that includes such enchantments as "Funny Valentine," "The Girl Next Door," "A Foggy Day," "Little Girl Blue," "Like Someone In Love," "I Get A Kick Out Of You," "They Can't Take That Away From Me," and "Violets For Your Furs," is one of the best Sinatra presentations in a long, long while. It is also an authentic torch song by a man who wants the whole world to know that he's in love.

The success of Universal-International's The Glenn Miller Story (in which Jimmy Stewart sometimes manages to strike an uncanny resemblance to the late orchestra leader) has, as was to be expected, inspired a number of record companies to get in on the act. Far and away the most successful of the efforts to capitalize on the movie's appeal is, of course, RCA Victor's "Glenn Miller Limited Edition," which includes many Miller broadcasts and costs a staggering $24.95 per album. It has astonished practically everybody by selling close to 100,000 copies.

(Continued on page 86)

YES, BARBARA STANWYCK uses Lustre-Creme Shampoo. In fact, in a mere two years, Lustre-Creme has become the shampoo of the majority of top Hollywood stars! When America's most glamorous women use Lustre-Creme Shampoo, shouldn't it be your choice above all others, too?

For the Most Beautiful Hair in the World 4 out of 5 Top Hollywood Stars use Lustre-Creme Shampoo

Glamour-made-easy! Even in hardest water, Lustre-Creme "shines" as it cleans . . . leaves your hair soft and fragrant, gleaming-bright. And Lustre-Creme Shampoo is blessed with Natural Lanolin. It doesn't dry or dull your hair!

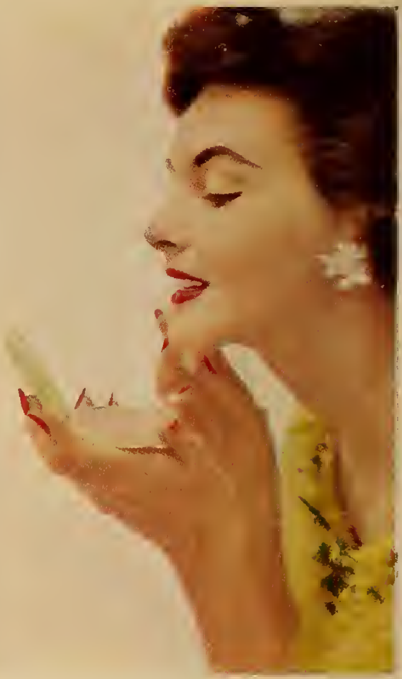
Makes hair eager to curl! Now you can "do things" with your hair—right after you wash it! Lustre-Creme Shampoo helps make hair a delight to manage—tames flyaway locks to the lightest brush touch, brings out glorious sheen.

NOW in new LOTION FORM or famous CREAM FORM!

Pour it on . . . or cream it on! . . . Either way, have hair that shines like the stars! Lustre-Creme Shampoo in famous Cream Form—27¢ to $2, in jars or tubes. In new Lotion Form—30¢ to $1.

At Last! The make-up that keeps its promise!

Only Creme Puff makes you look so pretty so quickly . . . stay so pretty so long!



JUST THE kiss of a puff and this magical make-up—Max Factor's wonder blend of creamy make-up base and powder—brings a soft, lovely look to your skin.

It veils tiny imperfections instantly . . . yet always feels fresh and light.

Yes, Creme Puff is the smoothest of make-ups . . . blended to super smoothness with lanolin-rich creams. It can't dry your skin. It can't absorb the natural skin moisture that causes other make-ups to streak or turn orangey.

That's why only Creme Puff by Max Factor looks so lovely—so long.

Creme Puff comes in 7 complexion-true shades. In star-studded compact, $1.25 plus tax; in De Luxe goldentone compact (refillable), $3.75 plus tax. At department and drugstores.

Smooth, lasting loveliness—with just the kiss of a puff.

Creme Puff

made only by MAX FACTOR
HOLLYWOOD

Creme Puff (trademark) means Max Factor Hollywood creamy powder make-up.

The heroic story of Suzan Ball is one to be read and re-read for its message of courage and honesty—and the faith that can move mountains.

BY ALICE HOFFMAN

Extensive treatment, operations, have not injured the beauty that gave Suzan her start.

out of the shadows

■ Fate wrote a bitter script for Suzan Ball.

It marked her early as a beauty, it let her grow into a striking young woman with a record of small and large successes. She won recognition in Hollywood, and then, unbelievably, though she was only eighteen she was struck down by cancer.

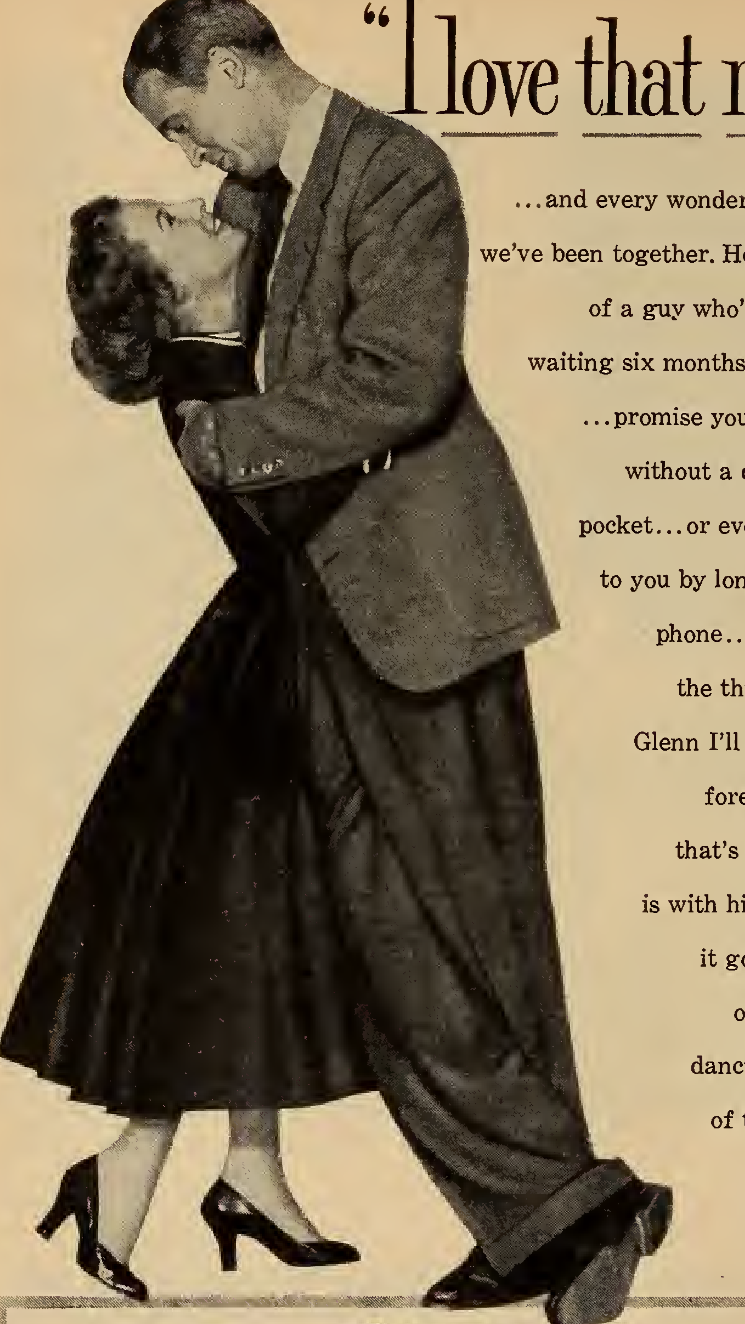
The excitement of her proximity to fame faded. The loneliness that loomed ahead overshadowed everything else in her life.

That was the script—but that isn't the way Suzan Ball is playing it. Out of her courageous wisdom, and the new love that came to her, the will to rewrite fate was born. The new scenes are not filled with despair but with hope, not death and the dread of death, but life and the special joy of new life.

Suzan Ball was born in Buffalo, New York. She remembers running through the streets there when she was a child with such a surge of life that she once cried out aloud: "I'll just never be sick. Not in my whole life I won't! I won't even get old. Not me!"

When her parents came to southern California (Continued on next page)

Dick Long met Suzan when she was still using crutches; his love and his faith in her helped to speed her recovery.



"I love that man!

...and every wonderful minute we've been together. He's the sort of a guy who'd keep you waiting six months for a date ...promise you the world without a dime in his pocket...or even propose to you by long distance phone...These are the things about Glenn I'll remember forever...and that's the way it is with his music... it goes on and on...in the dancing hearts of the world!

Universal-International presents

JAMES STEWART · JUNE ALLYSON

The GLENN MILLER STORY

COLOR BY Technicolor

with

CHARLES DRAKE · GEORGE TOBIAS · HENRY MORGAN and these Musical "Greats" as Guest Stars!
FRANCES LANGFORD · LOUIS ARMSTRONG · GENE KRUPA
BEN POLLACK · THE MODERNAIRES

HEAR THESE MEMORABLE GLENN MILLER HITS:

"MOONLIGHT SERENADE"
"LITTLE BROWN JUG"
"IN THE MOOD"
"PENNSYLVANIA 6-5000"
"STRING OF PEARLS"
"TUXEDO JUNCTION"
"CHATTANOOGA CHOO CHOO" and many, many more!

Directed by ANTHONY MANN • Written by VALENTINE DAVIES and OSCAR BRODNEY • Produced by AARON ROSENBERG

(Continued from page 19) she was delighted. She attended North Hollywood High, won fair study marks and with her dark-haired, hazel-eyed beauty won a new beau every two weeks. She discovered she had a good singing voice. After her graduation at seventeen her parents wanted to move again, this time to northern California, but Suzan refused to go with them. There was a family scene.

"I've got a future here!" she cried. "I know I have. I'll succeed." She hoped to get into musical comedy. Finally she won. She went to live in the House of Seven Garbos from which Ruth Roman and Linda Christian and others have gone on to success in motion pictures. Her family went off to northern California.

She sang with small orchestras . . . sometimes for as little as $15 a show. She took a job in a Beverly Hills cleaning shop, taking bundles in over the counter. And, incredibly, she got into pictures! The husband of a girl she knew was a writer. He arranged an interview for Suzan at Universal-International. They liked her, signed her and started her training.

Then in a dance routine in the studio, her foot slipped and her knee was hurt. Two months later, on a personal appearance tour in Boston, the same knee was hurt again in a minor automobile accident. Last April after a thorough examination, she heard the frightful diagnosis—not just the possibility of cancer, or the beginning of cancer, but cancer fullblown and raging through the bone of her right leg just above the knee. Her life was in danger unless the leg were amputated. The time for decision was short.

So much of the bone had been invaded by the tumor that if the malignant tissue were removed there would not be enough bone left to support her weight, she was told. Unless surgically removed the cancer would spread, leaving her, perhaps, only a few months more of life. This would be the risk she would take if she sought to treat the tumor with X ray: the chance of curing her leg would be slight, and the chance of fatal consequence unless she had surgery was considerable.

SUZAN had to take it from there alone. Roughly her choice seemed to be to lose the leg and live, or to keep it and die. Besides pure horror, she experienced then her first entirely honest moments with herself.

"After eighteen years of self-concern," she recalls, "the prospect I faced was so awesome as to seem impossible. Already, there was a dirge in the air. It came in the form of condolences. 'Gee, Suzie, I'm sorry to hear about it. If there is anything I can do . . .' they'd say, and then they would be gone. There was something frighteningly familiar about these phrases. And then it struck me. They all sounded just like I used to sound when I professed sympathy for someone and immediately forgot about him.

"It proved to me that I was worrrying about what was actually a small indrawn life, this one I had led. It must have been so if I had not been able to muster up an honest sentiment for another person. Really, I asked myself, did my life amount to enough to be worth saving? Not until this question failed to shock me more than the fact that I had cancer shocked me, did I believe I was getting properly objective about my problem. You see, if I overrated Suzan Ball I might talk her out of taking a chance she perhaps should take."

This little conference with herself took place last April when she had been at Universal-International Studios for a year and a half. Even though Universal had high hopes for Suzan and had starred her in several pictures, she felt that she still had a long way to go.

Now that she had taken a good square look at Suzan Ball, Suzan Ball decided she was not so important that she couldn't take the risk of X-ray treatment. Her doctor's plan was to control and eradicate the cancer by X ray and then restore missing bone structure by the process of calcification. It might take a year or more and Suzan would certainly have to wear crutches through all this period.

Having made up her mind to go ahead, Suzan also decided there would be no dramatics about it, no living with pent-up hysteria ready to burst forth if she found that she had guessed wrong and the malignancy became general. To be even more thorough in her self-reformation she did not permit herself to brood. Rather, she sought ways of keeping herself busy.

INSTEAD of avoiding the studio and curious stares, she reported regularly. She began a course of study in English, Spanish and French. She even tried to talk writers into creating wheelchair parts that she would be able to play.

She talked to everyone and overcame her sensitivity about her misfortune. She didn't, as she first thought she must, avoid running into Tony Curtis. His favorite greeting to everyone was always "Hi'ya, Gimpy!" and he would be sure to forget himself and say it to her. She was right. He did forget. But she was able to laugh it off, much to his relief, too. She was able to do more than that.

Anthony Quinn and his lovely wife, the former Katherine DeMille, attended a cocktail party given by Kirk Douglas at his villa on the Via Appia Antica outside Rome. The Quinns, with their four children, planned to take over the villa when Kirk left. In preparation for the move, Kirk showed Katherine around, pointing out the beauties of the place, the grounds, flower beds, rose gardens, swimming pool, terraces, and the spacious house with its Italian architecture, art and furnishings.

"Well," he said to his guest at the end of the tour, "pretty great, huh?" "Lovely," Katherine said quietly, "but you left out the most important part of our tour. Where is the linen supply? And is there a place in the back yard to hang diapers?"

—Wanda Hale

Her parents were divorced after they left North Hollywood. Her mother stayed in northern California with Suzan's younger brother, and her father came to live with her. Suzan needed help now and she advertised for a maid, staying home one afternoon from the studio to talk to applicants. The bell rang and on her crutches Suzan went to open the door. A young girl stood in the hall. Seeing Suzan she involuntarily cried out, "Oh, you're a cripple!" Then she looked terribly embarrassed. "I'm sorry. I didn't mean to say that."

Suzan felt the blow but she was delighted to find herself smiling and answering easily. "Yes, a cripple, but just temporarily, I hope," she replied. They talked and the maid is with her to this day. She is a fine person and a mainstay at Suzan's apartment.

Suzan achieved an air of self-sufficiency despite the fact that she had to depend on her crutches—an air that stood her in good stead when she began to feel that a tall, brown-haired fellow around the studio was taking more than a passing interest in her.

Richard Long had come to Universal as an actor before Suzan but had left in 1950

Pretty housewife Mrs. Dolores Dalzell uses detergents daily — but doesn't take chances with her hands.

"I scrub 1600 sinks a year... but I'm proud of my pretty hands!"

Only 10¢ to $1.00 plus tax

Dolores Dalzell's shining home is proof of the good detergents can do. She uses them to scrub over a thousand sinks a year. (You scrub that many, too!)

While detergents cut through grease, they can rob her hands (and yours) of natural oils, and leave them rough and red.

Dolores' solution? Right after detergents — after using any harsh soap or cleanser, she puts on pure, white Jergens Lotion.

It penetrates instantly (instead of just "coating" the skin), with two softening ingredients used by doctors.

You'd never guess how often Dolores uses detergents. Her hands are as soft and pretty as the day she was married! Use the world's most popular hand care — keep your hands safe, too!

Use Jergens Lotion – avoid detergent hands

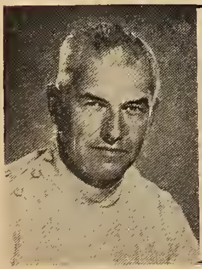
Here is proof of the greatest scientific discovery in toothpaste history—proof that Colgate Dental Cream with Gardol,* Colgate's exclusive, new, miracle ingredient, gives lasting protection against tooth-decay enzymes!

ONLY NEW COLGATE DENTAL CREAM HAS THE CLINICAL PROOF

that brings new hope to millions for

Lifetime Protection Against Tooth Decay!

Actual use by hundreds of people has proved the long-lasting protection of New Colgate Dental Cream with Gardol! Tests supervised by leading dental authorities—for a full year—proved this protection won't rinse off, won't wear off! Proved just daily morning and night use guards against decay-causing enzymes every minute of the day and night!



A JURY OF DISTINGUISHED DENTISTS HAS EXAMINED THE EVIDENCE! Documented facts, recently published in an authoritative dental journal, have convinced these dentists that Colgate Dental Cream with Gardol is far more effective against decay-causing enzymes than any other toothpaste. And because Gardol is the only long-lasting anti-enzyme ingredient with clinical proof, these dental authorities agree that New Colgate's with Gardol gives the surest protection against tooth decay ever offered by any toothpaste.

*Sodium N-Lauroyl Sarcosinate

No Other Toothpaste Offers Proof of Such Results!

Cleans Your Breath While It Cleans Your Teeth!

LARGE 27¢ GIANT 47¢ ECONOMY 63¢

For LIFETIME PROTECTION AGAINST TOOTH-DECAY ENZYMES

for two years in Korea and Japan with the Army. While he was in Tokyo he saw a picture called Yankee Buccaneer, made by his old studio. Suzan was in the cast. He made up his mind to meet her as soon as he got back to Universal.

When he resumed his career, playing a featured role in the Barbara Stanwyck-Richard Carlson co-starrer, All I Desire, he saw Suzan in the studio commissary, got an introduction and talked to her for a minute. The next time he saw her they talked for ten minutes, the time after that for an hour and the fourth time they lingered at their table for three hours after lunch was over. It was then that Dick found the courage to ask Suzan what was wrong with her leg.

Suzan remembers this as the first crucial test of her acquired policy of honesty—to others as well as to herself. She felt a temptation to soften her answer, to lead up to the truth by speaking about a treatment which gave every promise of curing something that might have been serious. She finally gave a one word answer: "Cancer."

It shocked Dick all right. He'll tell you that. "But also," he recalls, "I felt an admiration I had never felt before for anyone I knew personally. I detected no self-pity in Suzan's face nor heard a trace of it in the tone of her voice. I said to myself that when I saw her on the screen in Tokyo I considered her beautiful, merely beautiful, but now I had found dimensions to her character and nature that made her, well—inspiring!"

After a beginning like that neither of them was going to stoop to kid each other about anything, about themselves or their romance. When Dick worked in a scene and wanted honest criticism he knew just where to go for it. And he knew that was what Suzan wanted from him; her fling with pretense was over.

Handicapped as Suzan was, she was far from a restful influence on Dick's life. "She has a dynamic nature," he reports. "She is always on the go, impetuous, eager for every moment of life." But Suzan's impetuosity had its limitations, Dick learned, when he asked her to marry him last October. Before she could answer that one, she told him, she would have to do a lot of thinking. She didn't have to tell him that her thoughts would include the question of survival. Was she going to be around for any length of time? Up to now there had been medical reports that bone calcification was proceeding satisfactorily but there was no assurance that cancer was gone. So Suzan kept saying no.

Late last November Suzan's dog, a brown, miniature French poodle named Cezanne, brought on the hour of decision in Suzan's life when he knocked over his drinking bowl on the kitchen floor. Suzan entered a few minutes later, slipped on the wet tile and broke the twice-injured leg in the very same place where the process of bone building had been going on for such a long time. She remembers being conscious just long enough to think of this with a great pang of regret. Luckily Dick was present in the livingroom and heard her fall. He picked her up, telephoned the doctor and Suzan was in the hospital before an hour had passed. There, after an examination made on the operation table, she got the finest news she had heard in a year. There was no trace of cancer. Surgery could now be used to graft bone from her hip to the leg and within a few months she could be back on her feet. Cezanne had in effect told his mistress, "If you're going to be well, let's take the shortcut." There was another shortcut. Dick, who had been proposing on the average of every other Thursday, suddenly woke up to the fact that Suzan was saying yes.

"When?" he asked.

They went a little crazy and decided Suzan would be spirited out of the hospital somehow and flown to Las Vegas that very weekend for the marriage. But good sense prevailed. Instead, that weekend, just a fortnight before Christmas, the bone-grafting operation was performed. When Suzan came out of the ether, the doctor told her the surgery had been successful and there was nothing more to worry about. She remembered a quotation from Dickens' Bleak House—"A person is never known till a person is proved," and understood for the first time what it meant. She felt wonderfully strong and sure of herself, and certainly Dick had proved himself.

Then she and Dick made their plans, according to which they will have been married for weeks by now. She will be back at the studio, ready and able to work in a picture, and they plan an interesting future, perhaps eventually combining their careers on the stage. But whatever their professional success, or their lack of professional success, it is not to interfere with their personal lives.

Suzan and Dick want children. They want a baby of their own as soon as they can have one, and they plan to adopt one. They want their real life to go on with no interference from their efforts to interpret life on the screen or stage. They mean this even though they kid each other about it, and about the fact that with Suzan now able to hobble about they are everlastingly on the go.

"You see, like I said, Suzan is dynamic," commented Dick. "She doesn't want to miss a thing."

"I've been marking time. Don't you understand?" countered Suzan. "I'm well now."

"Yeah," said Dick, teasing her. "You had your chance and you had to get your leg well and pass it up."

"Chance for what?" asked Suzan, puzzled.

"To be a second Sarah Bernhardt, of course. She did her best acting on crutches!" said Dick—and then ducked. Suzan had pretended she was going to throw Cezanne at him. Instead she threw herself into his arms.

That's the way the script reads now . . . in the life of a girl who lived with death for months—to earn a chance to live with real happiness. END

IT HAPPENED TO ME

The year was 1924 and I was visiting Los Angeles. Funny man Ben Turpin was the first movie star I met. I chattered, "It must be wonderful to be able to make millions laugh as you do. It seems so easy for you."

To my amazement, I saw that his comical eyes were full of tears and his face had a pained expression. I thought he was clowning until, with a little catch in his voice, he said, "No, it isn't easy. You see, I love my wife very much, and she is dying a lingering death. I have to keep working or hold up production. Besides, we need the money. But it's very difficult." Then, two big tears rolled down his cheeks.

Since then, whenever an audience howls with laughter at a fine comedian, I always wonder if some secret sorrow may not be eating at his heart.

Maurine Hathaway
Omaha, Nebraska

Richard Hudnut reveals two secrets of Truly beautiful hair

Try this famous 2-step hair beauty treatment today!

STEP 1...a gentle thorough non-drying cleansing with Richard Hudnut Enriched Creme Shampoo. It's made with real egg formula. And egg is a natural beautifier for hair. This rich, golden lotion creme sudses quickly even in hardest water. Completely rids hair of loose dandruff scales and dust. Gets it really clean!

STEP 2...a quick after-shampoo rinse with Richard Hudnut Creme Rinse takes only a minute more, and gives your hair a fragrant beauty-finish! It leaves your hair soft and curlable; tangle-free, easy to set, easy to keep in place. Do as Richard Hudnut advises, and you'll be proud of your new hair beauty!

by RICHARD HUDNUT of Fifth Avenue

It's a real BENDIX...

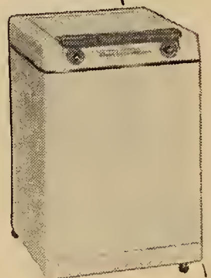
the kind you just fill and turn on!... and it only costs...

$169.95*

why, that's even less than lots of wringer washers!



It washes or rinses, drains, damp-dries, turns itself off . . . all automatically!

It's wonderful! Does a full-sized 8 lb. wash, with new Super-Agitator cleaning action! Floataway-Flushaway draining keeps dirty wash-water from straining through clothes to re-soil them. Completely portable. Rolls anywhere, stores anywhere. New Flexible Metexaloy Wondertub is so durable, it's guaranteed, in writing, for 5 full years! Honestly, what other machine could possibly give you so much for your money? *MODEL-WDN

BENDIX HOME APPLIANCES

PIONEER OF WORKLESS WASHDAY

BENDIX HOME APPLIANCES, AVCO Manufacturing Corp., Cincinnati 25, Ohio

"GO, MAN, GO!" You don't have to be a basketball fan to know about or enjoy The Harlem Globetrotters. Like all champions, they're bigger than the game; they use the game to express themselves. Many years ago in Chicago there was a man named Abe Saperstein who could think about basketball the way other men dream of music or painting. He was driven to create a team that would be the best in the world, that would function like a perfect machine. It would be his work of art. The team had its beginning in barns, dry swimming pools, hilly courts all over the states with Saperstein looking for men who loved basketball more than food and played that way. But perfect teamwork wasn't enough for the big leagues when prejudice, slick operators and phonies called the plays. What made the difference, what pushed The Globetrotters over the barrier was Saperstein's frenetic energy, his stubborn defiance of all odds. Dane Clark plays him with boundless charm. The Globetrotters appear as themselves in this unique and rewarding film. With Patricia Breslin, Sidney Poitier—U.A.

BAD FOR EACH OTHER Real inspiring story about a fine young man (Charlton Heston) from Coalville, Pa., whose fingers keep itching for money. He's a doctor, late of Korea, who returns to his natal coal pit to be socked on the jaw by an old friend. What'd I do? he says. Not you, says this old friend. Your brother. Not only did he die in the mine explosion, he was responsible for it. My brother? says Charlton. Yes, says Mildred Dunnock, mother of both, your brother. I'll make up for it, says Charlton, falling into the silken arms of Lizabeth Scott. Liz is such a vampire her father (Ray Collins) must trot around warning boys away. She endears Heston to the idle rich and pretty soon he has an all-leather office. But in the back of his mind lurks an old sickness. That mine. That rotten brother. And Heston's nurse, big-eyed Dianne Foster, keeps looking at him sadly. Go back to Coalville, her eyes say, that's where you belong, boy. A mine explosion brings him back and nevermore does this fine young man wander from home.—Columbia

WAR ARROW Out in Texas the Kiowa Indians are having a ball. They can't build tepees fast enough to hold all those scalps. But do you think Colonel John McIntire is doing anything but holding his head? He is not—which is why Major Jeff Chandler arrives. Chandler's plan is to enlist the Seminoles' aid. However, the poor Seminoles had the fight knocked out of them years ago and now roam about quite listlessly. McIntire sneers at Chandler. Maureen O'Hara doesn't. She lures him on to a proposal which, strangely enough, engenders in her a feeling of absolute hate. Chandler can't worry about that. He has the entire state of Texas to save and several dozen Seminoles to stir up and one Seminole (Suzan Ball) to simmer down. Chandler manages fairly well. With Charles Drake and Noah Beery, Jr., assisting, he gives the Kiowans a run for their wampum. McIntire objects to his tactics until the bloody end, though. As for that O'Hara lady, she has a dead husband to worry about. That is, she hopes to heaven he's dead. Technicolor.—Universal-International BORDER RIVER I always thought the right side won the Civil War but now they show us a Confederate (Joel McCrea) who's got more guts than Dick Tracy and I'm thinking someone's putting the wrong slant on American history (even though most of my best friends are southerners). Anyway, McCrea divests a Union mint of two million dollars and swims all the way to Zona Libre which is on the other side of the Rio Grande. Smirking Pedro Armendariz rules this little province (but his days are numbered) with his captain, smiling Alfonso Bedoya. And Yvonne De Carlo runs a little cafe to which repairs every renegade of almost every country. Like Baron Kurt von Hollden (Ivan Triesault) whose days are also numbered. McCrea wants to buy arms from Armendariz. Armendariz wants McCrea to believe he'll sell when actually he, Pedro, is waiting to lay his hands on the two million and sink McCrea in the Grande. Therefore there is much secrecy, much moving among the brush at night, much suspicion and intrigue afloat in the Early Cosmopolitan air. Well, McCrea gets his supplies—and Yvonne DeCarlo. But history maintains it didn't do much good. Technicolor. —U.-I.

RECOMMENDED FILMS NOW PLAYING

KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE (MGM): Mel Ferrer as King Arthur, ruling the heroic Knights; Ava Gardner as Queen Guinevere ruling the romantic heart of Sir Launcelot (Robert Taylor). Also decorative in costume, CinemaScope and Technicolor are Ann Crawford and Maureen Swanson.

HONDO (Warners): Another big western, this one stars John Wayne, Geraldine Page, Ward Bond and lots of Indians. Wayne defeats them all with the help of a small boy. Warner-Color.

THE MAN BETWEEN (U.A.): James Mason and Hildegarde Neff meet and fall in love in postwar Berlin. Like most pictures turned out by Carol Reed, this one has excitement, suspense and a little more—fine acting and a poignant, tender story.

THE EDDIE CANTOR STORY (Warners): Sure to be one of the year's big hits. The story of Eddie's rise to fame stars Keefe Brasselle and Marilyn Erskine as the understanding Ida plus Cantor's own singing on the sound track. Exceptionally fine performance by Aline MacMahon as Grandma Esther. Technicolor too.

THE WILD ONE (Col.): Newcomer Mary Murphy falls for Marlon Brando, but he and his crowd of restless, motorcycle-happy friends bring brawling and hysteria to her small town.

HOW TO MARRY A MILLIONAIRE (20th-Fox): Another lavish CinemaScope production, this one stars Marilyn Monroe, Betty Grable, Lauren Bacall in a raucous story of three models who rent a penthouse as headquarters for their man-trapping expeditions into New York's night life. David Wayne, William Powell, Cameron Mitchell get trapped. Technicolor.

MURDER ON MONDAY (London Films): Ralph Richardson, Margaret Leighton in a tight, well-plotted English murder mystery, about a bank clerk who may be an amnesia victim—or a murderer.

KISS ME KATE (MGM): A glorious, riotous dish that has just about everything—Cole Porter tunes, Kathryn Grayson and Howard Keel to sing them, Ann Miller to dance to them and top comedy performances by everyone in the cast. Technicolor.

CALAMITY JANE (Warners): Doris Day and Howard Keel at their top singing, loving and comic form, straightening out all sorts of improbable and hilarious mishaps involving the charming Miss Allyn McLerie. Technicolor.

THE ROBE (20th-Fox): This widely-heralded epic of early Christian days tells in sensational new CinemaScope (realism without goggles) the story of Lloyd C. Douglas' best-selling novel. Heading the huge cast are Richard Burton, Jean Simmons, Victor Mature. Technicolor.

As Laura read Jim's old love letters, she had no idea what had broken their engagement. She spent many a lonely evening before she discovered that sometimes there's a breath of difference between "ex" and "exquisite". Once she corrected her trouble, she gradually won Jim back. And exquisite she was as he carried her across the threshold . . . exquisite in every detail.

Listerine Antiseptic stops halitosis (bad breath) instantly . . . and not just for minutes but usually for hours on end.

No Tooth Paste Kills Odor Germs Like This . . . Instantly

Research shows that your breath stays sweeter longer depending upon the degree to which you reduce germs in the mouth.

Listerine Antiseptic does for you what no tooth paste can possibly do. Listerine instantly kills bacteria—by millions—stops bad breath instantly.

Listerine Clinically Proved Four Times Better Than Tooth Paste

No tooth paste, of course, is antiseptic. But Listerine kills bacteria by millions, gives you lasting antiseptic protection against bad breath.

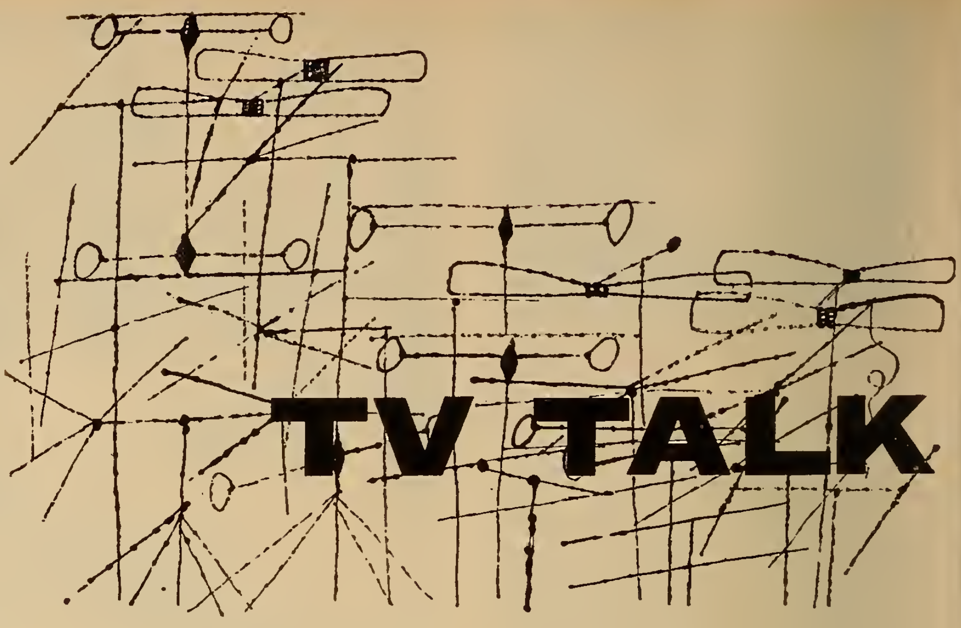
Is it any wonder Listerine Antiseptic in recent clinical tests averaged at least four times more effective in stopping bad breath odors than the chlorophyll products or tooth pastes it was tested against? With proof like this, it's easy to see why Listerine "belongs" in your home. Every morning . . . every night . . . before every date, gargle Listerine . . . the most widely used antiseptic in the world.

Product of The Lambert Company

LISTERINE STOPS BAD BREATH

4 times better than any tooth paste

Kilgallen is not for beguiling . . . What makes Linkletter blush? . . . Tallulah is svelter than ever.



TV TALK

Did you notice Tallulah's brand new figure when she played Hedda Gabler a couple of months ago? If you missed it, watch for it the next time La Bankhead appears on TV. She may do a weekly panel show à la Groucho, so you'll have plenty of chances to catch her. She's proud of her svelte new look, which she achieved by dieting and by surgery . . . All the talk about the Gary Moores breaking up was misinterpreted. As usual, everybody figured the husband was the one who wanted the end of the marriage. 'Twas on the contrary. But it's all straightened out, and the Moores—who have been married for years—will stay that way . . . Have you noticed how Burr Tillstrom, the creator and the voice of all the Kuklapolitans, always appears at the end of Kukla, Fran, and Ollie with one of his puppets? Next time notice how careful Burr is to make sure the puppet is still behind the stage while he stands to one side. He refuses to be photographed holding or maneuvering any of his creations because he's afraid it will spoil the illusion that they are real. This insistence may be one reason why people talk about Kukla and Ollie and Dolores and all the gang as if they were friends instead of puppets. Both Burr and Fran Allison talk about all the Kuklapolitans as if they were real people, and they want all the viewers to have that attitude, too. Kukla, by the way, has a bright yellow face and a red nose. And Ollie's hair is a chic shade of auburn. You'll all see for yourselves when you get a look at color television. It's not as perfect as Technicolor yet, but it adds a lot to shows . . . Many people are relieved that Mike Wallace is appearing without his wife, Buff Cobb. Buff is a cute little blonde whose looks complement Mike's tall, dark handsomeness. But when they were together on TV, she outtalked him and upstaged him. Now he's getting a chance to work by himself, and he's making a real hit . . . Dave Garroway is seen around New York with more good looking women than any other unmarried man in town. But he isn't hunting for a second Mrs. G. . . . When Joan Crawford works in television, she takes more pains with every little detail than any other actress. She watches all the camera angles and all the costumes and all the staging. If more stars had this conscientiousness about their TV work (instead of looking down on it as an easy way to make a fast buck), they'd be bigger TV hits—and get more jobs on the small screen . . . Carleton Carpenter, who left MGM before his contract was up to appear on Broadway, has a couple of routines reminiscent of his old ones with Debbie Reynolds. But he certainly could use Debbie to add that wonderful pep . . . The reason Dorothy Kilgallen seems to ruffle so many viewers is the same reason she was hired—to get the right answers. She's a smart girl—very quick and very shrewd—and she's on the panel of What's My Line to guess the occupations. The others members are around for charm and humor. So don't hate Dorothy. She isn't getting paid to beguile you. That's Arlene Francis' job . . . Marlin Perkins really loves those snakes he fondles on Zoo Parade, and Jim Hurlbut really loathes them. Jim can't get used to working with the crawling things, but Marlin has been batty about snakes ever since he was a kid. The happiest time of the year for him now is when he can go out in the field and hunt for rare specimens . . . Alistair Cooke is one of the most debonair men around town. He's much more casual on TV, however, than he is in person. Off screen, he plays his cards pretty close to his chest. He's more consciously charming than anything else. You get the feeling, when he makes a bon mot, that he's made it before and liked it—so well he memorized it . . . Mrs. Milton Berle is an old and dear friend of Henry Morgan. They used to be seen together all the time—for years. And there probably aren't two comics less alike than Henry and Miltie. Ruth has always been able to be all things to all men. With one, she'd seem shy, with another, smart. Maybe that's how she finally got Milton . . . Don't let anyone try to tell you Maria Riva is as gorgeous as her mother, Marlene Dietrich. She never has been, and she isn't now. Marlene's unique, and not even her own daughter can match her. Maria, who is the mother of two young children, is a clothes horse just like her old lady—but no one has the class grandma has. Maria's marriage, by the way, is not as steady as it used to be . . . The rumors about Red Buttons are growing and growing. A year ago you couldn't have found a more humble lad. Now a week doesn't go by without another tale of how he's changed . . . Have you ever wondered why Ethel Merman never looks as good on TV as she does in the movies? There's one reason, of course, that holds true for everyone: movie lights are kinder to the older stars than TV's. But Merman also doesn't seem to care about how she looks. When a wardrobe woman gives her a dress to wear, she puts it on and wears it. She never even looks in the mirror to see if it's flattering. As a result, it isn't . . . Another girl who could look better if she tried—and easily—is Nina Foch. Nina seems to go out of her way to look bad. She wears hardly any lipstick—and no other make-up at all. If she just wants to look "interesting," she succeeds . . . You'd never guess it to hear him talk, but John Henry Faulk has a Master's degree and used to teach English in college! His heavy Texas accent (which is heavier than any Texan's in Texas) is an acquisition—on purpose. Although he was born in the Lone Star State, he never drawled that much until he was teaching in the University of Texas. Then he found out that the easiest way to hold his students' attention was to be corny and lay on the drawl with a trowel. He even keeps it up in his private life. Every now and then he slips back and talks like the rest of us; but then he suddenly remembers and starts layin' it on ag'in . . . Mark Stevens was recruited from Hollywood to become Martin Kane, Private Eye for one main reason—to add "class" to the program. The producers decided they wanted "high class" murders—whatever that means—and so they needed someone like Mark to give the show a glamorous touch. He has succeeded, too: the rating's higher than ever . . . Did you know that Sheldon Leonard, whom you've seen in a thousand movies, is now directing the Danny Thomas show? Leonard has given up acting for work on the other side of the camera. This big switch has long been standard with established movie actors—it could become a TV fad, too...Nobody has ever seen John Cameron Swayze looking messy, disheveled, or even casual. He is always as neat as that proverbial pin. And he's so fond of ties that he sends them as presents to women! . . . Art Linkletter pretends to be embarrassed every time anyone says anything risqué on one of bis shows, but there never was a man less embarrassed—nor more frank-talking. The best acting he does is when he ignores a faux pas from a contestant. There are one million gay retorts on the tip of his tongue. But Art knows which side of his bread is buttered, and he keeps up the wholesome routine. He can even manage to look as though he's blushing on black and white TV. And that's a neat trick, too!

First time in Technicolor and 3-D... and 3 times funnier!

DEAN MARTIN and JERRY LEWIS in the hilarious story by

DAMON RUNYON

Here's the wildest chase, the craziest race, the funniest pace that ever rocked you with laughter!

MONEY FROM HOME

A HAL WALLIS production... in color by TECHNICOLOR and 3D*

Hear ♪ Dean Sing

co-starring

MARJIE MILLAR · PAT CROWLEY · RICHARD HAYDN

with Robert Strauss · Gerald Mohr · Sheldon Leonard · Romo Vincent

Directed by George Marshall · Screenplay by Hal Kanter

Adaptation by James Allardice and Hal Kanter · A Paramount Picture

* WILL NOT BE SHOWN IN ANY THEATRE IN THE UNITED STATES UNTIL AFTER COMPLETION OF THE SPECIAL 3-D SHOWINGS

For $15,000 a week, Shelley sang and made eyes at capacity crowds, lost friends, influenced managers to threaten murder.

Shell demanded (and got) attention. Annoyed at comedian's act, she demanded (but didn't get) changes in it.

Practice shots at dice tables are strictly against the rules —but Shelley, who makes her own laws, took one anyway.

Slot machines refused to shell out for Shell—but more easily intimidated cashier came across with the money she used.

SHELLFIRE

On stage, Shelley was Las Vegas' biggest hit. Off stage, everybody wanted to hit Shelley!

■ "I won't stay another minute in this hotel!" Shelley Winters stormed at the fabulous Flamingo in Las Vegas.

"That's all right with us. We'll send up a man for your bags."

No hotel management sends a movie star packing. It isn't done. But this time the man meant what he said and amazingly, Miss Winters calmed down. Shelley had had a great deal to say about the comic who appeared on the show with her. She didn't like the way he kidded her act, nor the way the orchestra played, just for a start. According to the management, by the time she had finished ranting, they weren't too sure who was running the hotel.

About this time a MODERN SCREEN reporter-photographer arrived in Las Vegas to find out what the fuss was all about. There was no fuss at all, after Shelley kept him waiting a couple of days for his pictures. Then she showed up with her little daughter, Gina. They were all smiles, and not once did Gina show any evidence of the tornado temperament of her mother. After Gina had smiled for enough pictures, she was put to bed. Then Shelley set sail to investigate the wonders of Las Vegas gambling.

First stop: the dice table. Shelley barged in, picked up the dice and announced, "This is a practice shot."

The croupier turned grey. "Look, lady. There are no practice shots at any table anywhere in Las Vegas. Nothing is for free."

"This is a practice shot," Shelley announced, ignoring him and tossed the dice. The cubes came up seven and everybody winced. The customers egged her on, but Shelley would play n more. "The hotel is paying me a lot of money now; if I too any more away from them, they might start charging me fo ice water."

Grabbing the photographer by one arm, she dragged him t the nearest quarter slot machine. She didn't have a purse and th photographer didn't have a quarter. She walked up to the cashie and said, "Gimmie some money!" The cashier nearly swallowe her gum. She looked at a house man standing nearby. "I said," Shelley repeated, "gimmie some money." The house man shrugge and the cashier shelled out two quarters. Shelley planted the in the slot machine. There was the usual grinding of the wheel but no payoff.

"See?" Shelley exclaimed. "This is no way to get rich!" Wit that she disappeared to rest for her evening show in whic louder and longer than any performer in months, she sang an swayed to rocking applause. Evidently, although she was a thor in the side of the show managers, she did please the customer and she was well worth the $15,000 a week they paid her.

One boss said: "Next time I hear that doll is headed this wa I'm heading for Paris—fast." He'd better not; Shelley may ta her show to Paris. With all her startling behavior, she is belove by the press, because she makes news a mile a minute. That' the press. As for her press agent, he's suing her. He claims sh hasn't paid all the money she owes him, and he hints privatel that she has exploded once too often.

Shelley retorts, "I'm the easiest girl in the world to get alon with. What's wrong with everybody?"

it's a secret...

(but soon it will be on everybody's lips)

Max Factor discovers a way to put "stay-on lustre" into a lipstick

Now at last the secret's out! After years of research, Max Factor has developed an amazing new non-smear type lipstick with "stay-on lustre" that won't blot away, won't fade away, won't wear away. You smooth on this lanolin-rich, creamy, non-drying lipstick. Hours later . . . after dinner, after coffee, after that last kiss . . . its satiny "stay-on lustre" will still be on your lips! In 9 glowing fashion shades. Only $1.10 plus tax.

you can't blot away the lustre

MAX Factor's Color-fast lipstick

THERE'S COLD CREAM NOW IN CAMAY

HER PETAL-SOFT SKIN GOES STRAIGHT TO HIS HEART!

Pampered your beauty with new Camay!

Wonderful for complexion and bath!

Here's wonderful news about complexion care! Now Camay contains fine cold cream. It's yours at no extra cost, and Camay alone among leading beauty soaps brings you this luxury ingredient.

More delightful than ever before! Whether your skin is dry or oily, new Camay leaves it feeling exquisitely cleansed, wonderfully fresh. And Camay with cold cream brings new luxury to your Beauty Bath, too!

You still get everything that's always made Camay a treasure . . . the softer complexion that's yours when you change to regular care and Camay, that velvety Camay lather, famous Camay mildness, and delicate fragrance yours only in Camay. There's no finer beauty soap in all the world!

NOW MORE THAN EVER . . . THE SOAP OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN

At last one of Hollywood's most popular reporters (and man-about-beautiful-women) bares his soul. For the first time, Sidney Skolsky tells all about his love-life—and the private lives of his loves—including some of Hollywood's hottest stars!

Sidney Skolsky gives the lowdown on Hollywood Women

Mr. Charles D. Saxon
Editor,
Modern Screen
261 Fifth Avenue
New York 16, N. Y.

Dear Chuck:

Once upon a time in a Marx Brothers picture, Chico, having a lot of trouble with Harpo, said to him: "I'd like to buy back my introduction to you."

I'm tempted to say the same thing to you, Chuck, because when you asked me to write an article exposing the Hollywood female, I thought you must be kidding. Who am I to be exposing these lovely creatures? Besides, anyone who tells you he knows all about women is either a fool or a phony, or both. The only thing I know about women is that (Cont'd)

TURN PAGE FOR COLOR PORTRAITS OF FIVE OF SIDNEY'S BEST GALS →

I don't—and it took me many years to learn this.

So I'm wising you up fast and cheap, Chuck. I'm a real friend and I don't like to see you buying an article from me about Hollywood women just because I know Marilyn Monroe so well. After all, Marilyn isn't the only girl in town.

During my years of covering Hollywood I guess I've come to know Lana Turner, Ava Gardner and Joan Crawford, as well as a lot of others among them, maybe better than some of their husbands. It's part of my job and I learned a long time ago that life is much sweeter if you like what you're doing.

One of the beauties of my job is that I'm not always aware that I'm working. Take Lana Turner, for instance. When I first knew Lana, she had only one sweater to her frame, and if I had told my readers what I knew about her they wouldn't have known who I was talking about. It takes every glamour girl a little while to become Somebody. For instance, Chuck, when Lana was in the first flush of her popularity a famous European visited (Continued on page 81)

ABOVE: When Ava kissed Sidney, he thought a truck had hit him. Few love harder than Ava; only real heartbreak makes her admit romantic failure.

LEFT: One of Marilyn's closest friends, Sidney pinch-hits for DiMaggio when the ball player is out of town, finds The Monroe bright and honest.

the lowdown

on Hollywood Women continued

Actresses are not like the girl-next-door. Stars are dolls with a malady—more than any other women, they want to be loved!

Terry Moore posed for Sidney in the white ermine bathing suit later banned from Korea. The reason: confused authorities thought Terry was doing a strip! So she finished tour in slacks.

Bathing suit by Rose Marie Reid

ABOVE: Elaine Stewart will probably be a blow to many a masculine ego, Sidney predicts; like other glamour stars, she may be more flattered by her own pictures than by her men.

RIGHT: Debbie Reynolds' real nature was a surprise to Sidney; he knew that she led a Girl Scout troop, but didn't dream that she also led her crowd of Hollywood sophisticates.

Jean cries "Peace! Peace!" and there would be

They Fight for each Other peace—if folks wouldn't call her home a bloody British battleground! ■ by STEVE CRONIN

■ While her towering, lusty, free-talking husband was hard at work with Elizabeth Taylor making Beau Brummel in London, Jean Simmons was out on the town. With Frank Sinatra and her agent, the dashing Bert Allenberg, the bewitching, brown-eyed little actress dropped in at the Coconut Grove to hear Lena Horne.

Jean Simmons loves nightclubs and Stewart Granger hates them. So while he was in England, Jean was indulging herself —and enjoying herself.

The very next day Hollywood was trying mightily to blow the Sinatra-Simmons item into an incipient romance. Ava had called it quits with Frankie and flown to Rome, and Granger was in England. Otherwise, Sinatra and Simmons do not seem to have much in common.

Hollywood seers have always insisted that the Stewart Grangers' marriage simply cannot last.

Is it because Granger is seventeen years older than his wife?

Is it because he does the cooking and all the planning?

Is it because he is over-protective and masterminds his wife's career?

Is it because two careers in one family rarely mix?

Is it because he is an intellectual and Jean is a talented child?

Is it because eventually Jean

(Continued on page 85)

I'm gonna quit

When a top star decides to give up his career, a lot of people want to know why. His studio, for example, his public . . . and his wife.

BY THELMA McGILL

■ No matter what people say about Dale Robertson—that he takes himself too seriously, that he won't cooperate with his studio's publicity department or that he is a horse-crazy, frustrated cowboy, the fact remains that he always tries to tell the truth about himself. When this drawling young giant tells you something, he means what he says.

When he says, as he did a few weeks ago, "I'm gonna quit acting in another two years," he means it. He isn't reaching for a headline or a mention in a gossip column.

Robertson has always insisted that, "I came to Hollywood with one goal in mind. Wanted to get me enough money to buy a horse ranch.

"The way I figured it back then, the way I still figure, is that anyone can become an actor. I reckon you can walk out on Hollywood Boulevard right now and make good actors out of the first ten folks you run into. I'm not saying they'll develop into stars. Nothing like that. It's the public who makes the stars, not Hollywood. But anyone can act. When I learned that, I decided to do something about it."

So he went out and raised all the money he could and bought interest in a manufacturing concern called Everlast Laboratories. Now he's president of the corporation.

His business manager, Morgan Maree, who used to limit his spending money to $20 a week, tried to persuade Dale not to buy into this business. "Why don't you invest in an (Continued on page 73)

From the first, Susan felt her marriage was a mistake. Now she's paying in public heartbreak for ten years of hidden bitterness.

BY IMOGENE COLLINS

still slugging

TOP: Even in supposedly happy days before marriage, Susan had Jess sign a waiver renouncing his right to community property he now claims. BOTTOM: Susan has granted Jess weekend visits with his sons; her lawyers now claim he has been seeing them illegally.

■ All married couples fight. Some verbally. some physically, some in subtler ways.

In the last ten years Susan Hayward and Jess Barker have tried them all, apparently. Some of these fights have resulted in temporary separations followed by loving reconciliations.

A few months ago, just after Susan had finished Demetrius And The Gladiators at $5,000 a week, she and Jess were sitting in the livingroom of their Longridge Road home.

The atmosphere was frigid. Whatever love they had once had for each other had now turned into a battle of the sexes. The only bond which held their marriage together was the twins, Timothy and Gregory, who will be nine years old this month.

Susan Hayward, as Hollywood knows, is an iron-willed, tenacious young woman of thirty-six, who has long been suggesting that her husband give up his not-too-successful acting career. For years she has been advising Jess to "get into something else."

Jess has demurred.

"After all," one of his friends explains, "How could he possibly take a job in a filling station? People would drive up and say, 'See that guy over there? He's Susan Hayward's husband.' "

On this particular night, Susan again brought up the unpleasant subject of Jess and a new job. According to intimates, she salted her conversation with one or two aspersions on her husband's manhood.

Provoked, Jess slapped the beautiful redhead. She bit his hand. He cuffed her again. "He has slapped me many times," Susan said later, "but this time I could tell it was going to be worse, his face was so distorted with rage—"

Susan began to scream. Jess, according to her version, came after her again. She tried to get (Continued on page 78)

Despite co-workers' reports that Frank's career has hit new peaks and his disposition is remarkably cheerful, he suffers "nervous exhaustion."

■ Ever since last November when he was admitted to Mt. Sinai Hospital in New York, because of "nervous exhaustion," Frank Sinatra has been the target of suicide rumors.

It was whispered of Frank then that when he learned of Ava's determination to divorce him he grew depressed and in a subsequent fit of despondency tried to slash his left wrist.

Sinatra's physician said there was no truth to this report and that his patient had been suffering from fatigue.

Although Sinatra is not indefatigable, he is close to it. Thin, wiry, with an almost inexhaustible supply of energy, Frank has burned the candle at both ends for years with practically no sign of physical deterioration.

The one exception has been his hair. Despite consistent and expensive treatments it is thinning and he will probably be as bald as his father is.

When Frank checked out of Mt. Sinai Hospital on November 19, one of his acquaintances said, "With him suicide is always a possibility. He is a volatile person. He is either way up on top or way down on the bottom. No medium level for him.

"But I don't believe he would ever commit suicide because of a woman. He has known too many and he is too much in love with himself to love anyone so desperately that her withdrawal would make his life meaningless.

"A year or so ago, he was really low, and maybe he contemplated it then. As an entertainer he seemed to be all washed up. He made Meet Danny Wilson at Universal for practically no money, maybe $10,000 and a percentage, and it laid a bomb. His recordings were selling almost zero. His attempt to buck Milton Berle on TV was hopeless and the network dropped him. He had left Nancy and the three kids for Ava. Then he fought with Ava all the time. He was in hock to the Government for back taxes. Besides a few gambling characters, most of his friends and employees had pulled out.

"If Frank had put a gun to his head then I could have understood it. But now? I don't think so. Maybe he scratched himself or took an extra pill in order to (Continued on page 66)

His friends say lost love could not make life meaningless for Frankie. But this is not the first time Sinatra has touched tragedy.

BY WILLIAM BARBOUR

The Trouble with Sinatra...

Frank laughs with Eddie Cantor, Eddie Fisher, but scar on wrist hints at suicide attempt.

FRANK'S ONE SECURITY IS HIS LOVE FOR HIS CHILDREN.

Despite the fact that much justifiable criticism has been launched against Frank Sinatra and his personal life, his singing, and his negative attitude toward friends and press, he has always been an exemplary fathe

When Frank divorced Nancy Sinatra in 1951 to marry Ava, he never once quibbled about the resulting financial settlement

He agreed that his family was entitled to a minimum of $50,000 a year and a percentage c his earnings. Since his divorce from Nancy, the crooner has alway provided well for his three children and their mother.

Last Christmas he took his children holiday shopping in Hollywood and spent more time with them than he had the entire previous year when he was traveling in Europe and Africa with Ava.

All three children resemble their father physically. In background and bringing up, however, they are very different from Frankie. For this he is profoundly grateful.

"I had a helluva youth," he has sometimes remarked, realizing that in many ways his boyhood was responsible for his being the restless, intense, driven, unpredictable firebrand he is today—though it also contributed towards making him a charming, popular and hard-working public idol.

For Sinatra's children, perhaps life is better in Hollywood than it might have been for them in Hoboken.

When little sister becomes big competition, hair-pulling usually results. But Debra isn't scalping me—she says her throne is big enough for two.

by Lisa Gaye

THE QUEEN AND I

The only time people recognize me on the street (that's me on the left, you know!) they think I'm Debbie. In fact, I got my first break in movies when Debbie suggested me for a part originally scheduled for her.

■ If my sister, whose name is Debra Paget, ever plays the part of a twin in a movie the role won't be too unfamiliar to her. Once she was a near-twin. I, born eighteen months after her, was the other. That was the closest our mother ever came to getting the twins she had always wanted. She made the best of it. She dressed us alike and as soon as my size caught up a bit with Debbie's we actually began to get the kind of stares twins get. There was a resemblance, of course. The report on my first movie test (the first of nearly a dozen!) was unfavorable because I looked too much like Debbie to be accepted as a personality in my own right.

I can still remember that Debbie and and I liked being twins. There was a special allure to it because we had our big secret (that we weren't twins really) and any time we wanted to be individuals again we could. That time came permanently for Debbie when she was nine years old. She fell in love with a pink and white dress which could not be duplicated for me and that was the end of our "twin" period.

Almost everyone asks me, sooner or later, what Debbie is like to live with. I guess what they have in mind is the question one girl put to me bluntly. "Is she like a queen or something?" she wanted to know.

Well, if by "queen" she meant someone who floats around in an aura of unapproachable regality, the answer is no. It's nothing like that. In fact, the queen is no queen. She is more accurately described as one of four sisters or as a girl who is interested in two things—her family and her (Continued on page 67)

DEBRA PAGET

RETURN FROM NOWHERE

■ Contrary to the prediction made by Hollywood almost ten years ago, Guy Madison does not live in oblivion. In those days people said his popularity was a freak in show business, that his appeal was based only on the fact that he was young and handsome. They said that since he couldn't portray emotion much more effectively than a wooden Indian, his burst of fame would shortly dwindle away.

The prophecy came close. Guy's wave of publicity subsided, he dropped out of sight, and for a long time hardly anyone knew what had happened to him. Then last summer Warner Brothers gave him a contract which pays him $100,000 per picture and guarantees him at least five pictures at this remarkable salary. The brass hats who run movie studios have been known to make costly mistakes, but the promise of a half million dollars for the services of one young man implies confidence backed by solid reason.

The reason is Guy himself. He is different from the boy of eight years ago, but he hasn't lost his appeal. Gone is the roundness, the stolid muscularity of the curly-headed youth who attracted thousands of bobby soxers during the last years of the war. Guy is thinner, harder, a powerful man of thirty-one. His face is lean and his body has matured into a lithe suppleness. On the surface his personality has changed very little. He is even more taciturn, limiting his conversation to terse "yups" and "nopes." Outwardly, he is developing into a young edition of Gary Cooper, with the same quiet appeal of a man who is happiest out of doors.

Naturally, there is more to Guy than meets the eye. In these last years he has learned that life is a difficult and exacting school. There is an old wheeze in the theatre that a man must have suffered in order to be an actor. Guy is living proof. He not only has the Warner contract in his pocket, but also the Wild Bill Hickok show, on radio three times a week and on television every Sunday. The long climb back to the top has been difficult for him, yet it is perhaps because of it that Guy has found his niche in acting.

At the beginning, it wasn't easy for him. His picture on the cover of a Navy magazine attracted the attention of an agent who eventually interested David Selznick in the young sailor. Guy was given a role in Since You Went Away, appearing in his Navy uniform for three minutes on the screen. The three minutes were enough to bring tons of mail to the studio, inquiring about the "handsome (Continued on page 75)

Guy shares his love of outdoor living with Rory and Lita Calhoun, his friends for years. For some time, his Wild Bill outfit constituted his entire wardrobe.

3-D hit Charge At Feather River re-established Guy as a top ranking star and solid actor, brought him a good role in director David Butler's The Command.

It takes guts to fall from phony stardom and climb back to the top again. Guy Madison made it the hardest way—but this time, it's for real!

BY ROBERT MOORE

Now separated, Guy and wife Gail Russell look back on early days of marriage with tenderness. Guy hopes for eventual reunion.

Forty feet long and built of polished aluminum, the New Moon, as Lucy and Desi call their trailer (right) handles like a baby carriage. Living-room (above) is tailored to Lucy's coloring, has two extra-big windows.

Drop-leaf table, matching chairs, seat six in livingroom. Partly hidden by partition, Youngstown Kitchen (below) features Florence Stove with window allowing Lucy to watch her cooking without opening oven door.

LUCY AND DESI WORKED WITH IT IN AN

■ One afternoon after she had finished her umpteenth I Love Lucy television film, Lucille Ball, in her delightfully addle-pated but highly efficient way, decided to organize a weekend vacation trip to Palm Springs.

In the livingroom of her ranch house out in the San Fernando Valley, the tall carrot-head began to check a list of essentials required for the desert holiday. Bed linen, spice cabinet, stationery, canasta decks, paints and easel, and scrapbooks.

As she checked off each item, Lucy added it to the pile of paraphernalia in the front hall. As the pile mounted, the hall receded until Desi, coming in from the sunlit outdoors, tripped and fell across the fishing gear.

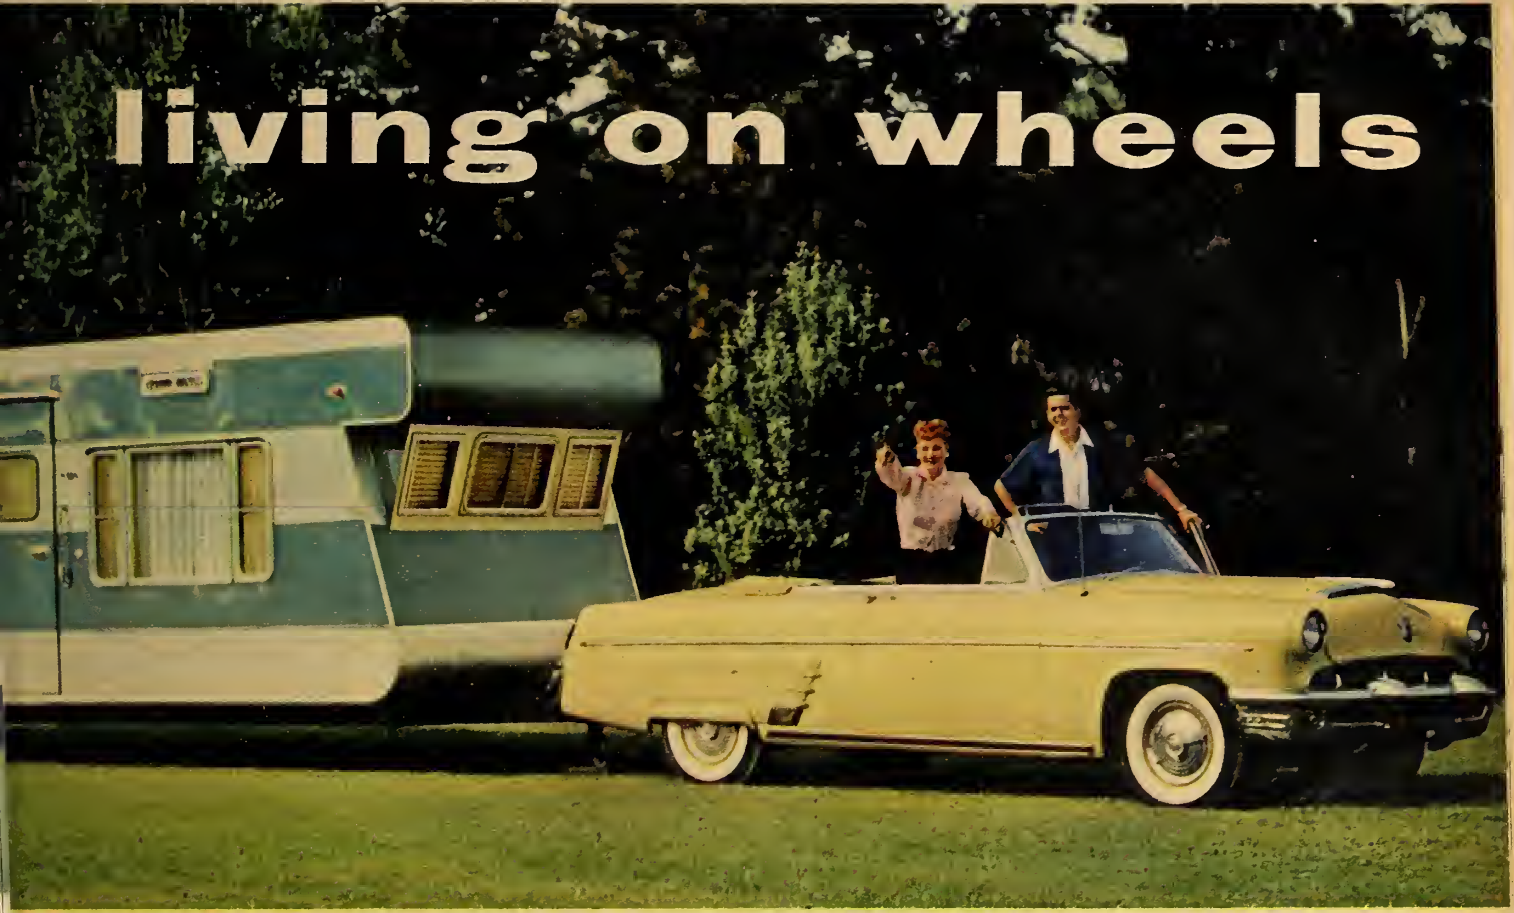
"Lu-cee," he shouted ominously.

From the kitchen: "Yes, dear?"

"Wha's all thees stuff?" Desi demanded, his Cuban accent growing hotter with the throbbing in his ankle. "Is pick-up time for the Salvation Army maybe?"

The preoccupied housewife, Mrs. Desiderio Arnaz shook her head. "We don't have time for jokes," she said. "Get up on your feet and load these things into the car." (Continued on next page)

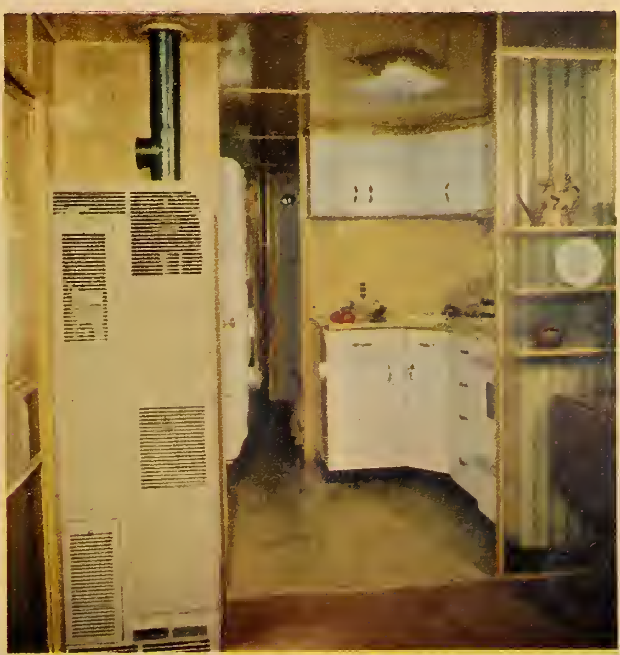
living on wheels



MGM MOVIE—AND LIKED IT SO MUCH THEY GOT A TRAILER OF THEIR OWN!

BY MARVA PETERSON

Compact Crosley Shelvador refrigerator boosts extra storage room in door; freezer holds 28 pounds. Ingeniously recessed, refrigerator door opens into kitchen, doesn't block entrance.



Even the floors are warmed in winter by the Coleman heater standing unobtrusively near door; in summer the unit becomes an air cooler, circulates fresh outside air through the trailer.

MORE ➤

HOUSE OF THE MONTH

living on wheels continued

In answer to New Moon queries, Desi requested combination tub and shower in their completely equipped bathroom.

Favorite parking spots, when Lucy and Desi vacation, are near the golf course in Palm Springs and by the dock in Newport.

Yellow, white and grey kitchen has more cupboard and drawer space than many Hollywood apartments.

In simulated agony—after all, he is an actor—Desi slowly raised himself. He looked at the pile of equipment Lucy had stacked for the trip. He looked twice because he couldn't believe it the first time.

"I'm not going," he declared. "I'm not going to Palm Springs, have people say, 'Look those crazy gypsies. Everything they have they take with them!'" Pointing an accusing finger at his wife, he continued, "Last time you promised that if we take a trip, we travel light. You call thees"—his arm swept the room—"light?"

"All I promised," Lucy said sweetly, "was that I would bring the bare essentials. And if I'm going to enjoy my vacation, these things are essential."

"But, honey, we can only stay three days."

"Three days or three months—I need my home right along with me to be happy."

Desi muttered something dark and bitter and husbandly. To Lucy, however, he said, "Why don't you put thees house on wheels? Maybe then you be happy?"

Many months later when he and Lucy had signed to star in The Long, Long Trailer at MGM, Desi recalled this particular conversation with his wife.

He was talking to director Vincente Minnelli. Vincente said, "We're having a forty-foot mobile home driven here from Alma, Michigan. What you've got to do for the picture, Desi, is to practice parking and driving the trailer before the actual camera work begins."

Desi's eyes popped. "Did you say 'mobile home?'"

Minnelli nodded. "That's a fancy name for a trailer."

Desi smacked his hands with glee. "That's exactly what we need," he said. "Lucy and I—whenever we take a trip, she has to take everything. How much do thees mobile homes cost, Vince? Where can we get one?"

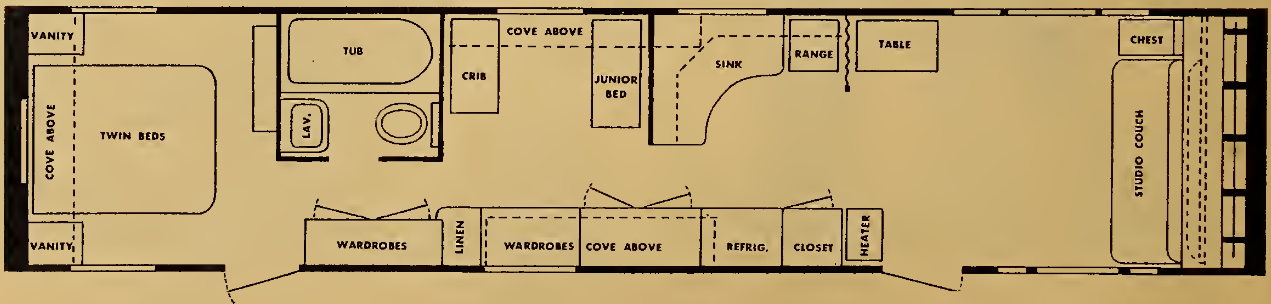
Minnelli shrugged a shoulder. "I don't know much about them," he said. "There's a fellow on the lot somewhere who represents the New Moon people. Maybe you can talk to him."

"You say his name is New Moon?" Desi asked.

"That's the name of the company that makes these trailers."

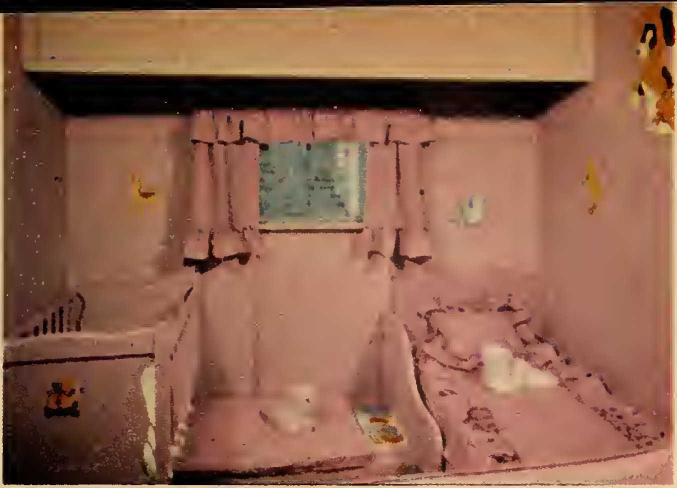
Two hours later, Desi Arnaz walked out of MGM with a smile as wide as the east gate. Via long distance telephone he had arranged with Jim Redman, president of New Moon, Inc., to have one of their (Continued on page 62)

THE AMAZINGLY COMPACT FLOOR PLAN OF THE EIGHT-FOOT WIDE NEW MOON MOBILE HOME:



Divided into four rooms, the trailer has extra sleeping space in livingroom where full-scale daybed stands; wardrobes and closets line one wall, are easily accessible from all sleeping quarters.

On Metro lot Lucy and Desi use trailer as office, guest lounge, private diningroom when Lucy wants to cook.



The children's room has nursery-size beds instead of the usual double-decker, allows Mr. and Mrs. Arnaz to take the kids on otherwise impossible trips.

The cheerful master bedroom has windows on three sides, ample space for either a double bed and nightstand or the twin beds Lucy and Desi prefer.

Lucy's much-used theatrical make-up mirror and dressing table were installed along one wall of the bedroom by Doris Christensen, New Moon decorator.

The years of fear are over for John Derek. The birth of his daughter has ended the anguish that made him Hollywood's moodiest guy.

BY SUSAN TRENT

new baby-
new happiness

When Pati ended career to marry John, she was a Zanuck European discovery, John an unknown. They quarrel occasionally but believe trouble solidified their marriage.

Born with a split esophagus, 4-year-old Russell underwent major surgery when 14 hours old, still chokes dangerously sometimes. New daughter Sean is completely healthy, brought John new outlook on life.

■ One of the advantages of having a child by Caesarean section is that the mother-to-be can call her own shots. She can make an appointment for the birth of her baby. This method of delivery is also extremely convenient for such nervous husbands as John Derek. His wife doesn't wake him at three or four in the morning. There is no sudden panic, no mad race to the hospital trying to beat the stork. Everything is placid, measured and arranged before time.

John Derek's wife, a beautiful, pixie European named Pati, took care of all the details. Last October she called on Dr. Benbow Thompson, an obstetrician who has delivered the babies of more screen stars than any other Hollywood physician.

"I wonder, Dr. Thompson," Pati said, "if I could have my baby at eight or nine in the morning. Then John and I could have a good night's sleep."

Born in Turkey of Greek and Russian parents, Pati Derek has been in the United States less than ten years. Her English grammar is perfect but she still speaks with a soft foreign accent.

"You can have your baby any time you want," Dr. Thompson told her. "Have John drive you in tomorrow and we'll do it then."

Early the following morning—a little after six—John loaded his wife into their 1952 Cadillac convertible and drove the eighteen miles from their home in Encino to the Hollywood Presbyterian Hospital.

At eight A.M. on October 16, his second child, a seven-pound, three-ounce girl, later christened Sean Catherine Derek, came bawling into the world.

A few minutes later the twenty-seven-year-old actor, one of Hollywood's most handsome men, was called to the delivery oom. His daughter was held up for his inspection. He was permitted to count her oes and fingers, to see that she was born in perfect shape. As John Derek looked at is red-faced, black-haired infant, he smiled as all fathers smile, but in his heart he prayed that this tiny girl would be saved the near-tragic suffering of his first-born.

You must have read or heard at some time that John Derek is immature, moody, difficult and humorless; that he is as tense and high-strung as an overtrained colt; that he is quick to anger and easy to annoy.

For the most part these stories are true, but John is not like that naturally. There was a substantial reason behind his displays of nervousness and irritability.

Four years ago his son Russell, a good-looking child, was born with a split esophagus.

The esophagus or gullet is the food tube in the body which delivers the chewed-up food, after swallowing, from the throat to the stomach. About one-half an inch in diameter, it extends from the pharynx to the opening of the stomach and is located behind the windpipe.

A few days before Russ was born the nurses at the (Continued on page 64)

miss Grable steps out

■ Just outside Barstow, California, a sleek streamlined train called the Super Chief made its brief stop after picking its way slowly through the Los Angeles slums and suburbs. Here, this de luxe train with a cargo of business tycoons and show world celebrities takes on ice and provisions for its swift dash across the Mojave desert. Inside, insulated against the withering heat, Betty Grable fell back luxuriously on the great sea-green cushions and exclaimed, "Think of it! Nobody to disturb us for the next thirty-five hours. Harry, what a blessing! The telephone won't ring an even once!"

No? On the heels of Betty's happy statement came a loud prolonged beep! It was the compartment door buzzer.

"That's something we'd better have disconnected," Harry James suggested, answering the summons.

"Telegram for Mrs. James," a grinning porter announced.

Into the outstretched hand, Harry dropped his usual oversize tip and closed the door. He dropped the Western Union message on Betty's tummy.

"I don't even want to look," Betty said, keeping her eyes closed.

"You'd better," Harry advised. "It could be important."

"Nothing," Betty intoned, sleepily, "could be more important than you."

"Than me. And the kids?" Harry asked.

Betty Grable sat bolt upright, clutching the yellow envelope and tearing it open. Wordlessly she scanned the message. She snatched a (Continued on page 88)

Unlike some movie stars on tour, Betty and Harry took their act seriously, rehearsed eight hours a day for four weeks before opening in Chicago. Harry's famous drummer, Buddy Rich, was on hand, too; despite slump in the bond business, Harry kept his top artists with him, found this policy paid off in their show.

LO! THE POOR BETTY! SHE LEFT HER STUDIO, LEFT HER CONTRACT. NOW SHE HAS NOTHING LEFT BUT HARRY, HOME, HORSES AND HER HEPPED-UP CAREER! ■ BY CARL SCHROEDER

Pat Stanley, who played in Broadway's ill-fated Carnival In Flanders, is one of the girls Tab takes to Mocambo on twice-weekly nights out.

Debbie Reynolds is a favorite date. Tab finds her gay and lots of fun, but capable of real warmth and sympathy when the occasion calls for it.

Good listener Lari Nelson is the girl Tab likes best, but there will be no going steady for him until he feels that he is really ready for marriage.

A lot of girls in Hollywood are keeping tabs on

Tab. And as for him, his motto is simply

"Love and learn!"

What I learned from women

by TAB HUNTER

■ About women they say, "You can't live with them and you can't live without them." That first part I wouldn't know about, because the only woman I've ever lived with was my mother and I get along pretty fine with her. Once in a while she forgets herself and starts ladling out small warnings and reminders to me. Things like "Drive carefully" and "Don't forget your keys." When that happens I turn the tables.

"Say, Mom," I tell her, "you're getting too thin. Are you eating enough?"

She flusters a little and then looks straight at me and says, "Stop treating me like a child!"

"Okay, okay," I tell her, "and you let go of me."

It's my only kick against Mom, so it rolls off my back. For the rest of it, my mother is a rare woman. Once she felt my brother Walt and I had the necessary upbringing, she adopted a hands-off policy and contented herself with cheering from the sidelines and giving advice only when asked for it. So Mom has been pretty easy to live with.

As for the tag part of the bromide, "you can't live without 'em," I am inclined to agree. I suppose I would have lived, all right, but if it weren't for the girls and women I've known I wouldn't know half as much as I know now. Not that I know a lot—if you talked to me about suspension bridges, for instance, you'd find me silent—but I feel that the fair sex has done more than its share of teaching me (Continued on page 90)

irls like charming Gloria Gordon have given Tab, once hy, the self-confidence he needs, taught him to look behind asual impressions for the full character of an individual.

crawford meets the critics

When Joan indulges in three feuds in eight months, even her best friends say it's time to stop telling people off and start telling people why!

BY JACK WADE

Nobody can please everybody. For a long time Joan Crawford came close. She has more fans and more friends than most of Hollywood's headliners, but she has enemies. Her fans are legion, spreading to every cranny of the world, of all nationalities and ages. Closer to home, she is treasured as a friend by many people, commendably including perhaps more "nobodies" than "somebodies."

There are others who feel that Miss Crawford should be put under wraps, and it is noteworthy that lately this small band of dissenters has some new members. Crawford is a smart woman in the ways of Hollywood, and it is surprising that at this stage of her career she should suddenly begin to create ill will.

Hollywood never was an easy town for making and keeping friends. Competition is wicked; jealousy and temperament spill through the tinseled air; feuds are rampant. For many years Miss Crawford did a remarkable job of staying off the battleground, and except for a long-standing miff with Claudette Colbert which was entirely personal, Joan managed to keep peace.

Then in the spring of 1953, eight years after her latter day movie life had been assured by the award of an Oscar, Joan burst out of her shell of security and her role of Hollywood's First Lady by blasting Marilyn Monroe. It would be more exact to say that Miss Crawford blasted about Marilyn for she had no idea that her searing criticism of Miss Monroe's plunging gowns and ungirdled curves would be repeated, much less printed.

It happened when an AP correspondent interviewed Joan. They talked about a recent award dinner and he asked as an afterthought if Miss Crawford did not agree with him that Marilyn's dress had been vulgar, also her behavior. This opinion was shared by many in Hollywood. Marilyn's own studio was trying to quiet the storm of protest arising over the Monroe's projected voluptuousness. Most people thought somebody ought to tell Marilyn, for her own good, that things were going too far. Which is precisely what Joan Crawford replied to the AP correspondent. She said, among other things, "It was like a burlesque show. The audience yelled and shouted and Jerry Lewis got up on the table and (Continued on page 92)

Big noise from Frisco
GUY MITCHELL

A bronco-buster at 14, Guy surrounds himself with animals even at work. Now he has added guitar-playing and acrobatics to his talents.

At Hotel Flamingo Guy thrilled fans with voice that made famous "My Heart Cries For You," "My Truly, Truly Fair," other hit discs.

Here seen with co-workers at the Flamingo, Guy is separated from wife Jackie Loughery, former Miss U.S.A.

Guy's own saddle pony, Scotch Boy, was brought from his parents' ranch so that he could do some riding between songs.

One morning last fall the middle-aged owner of a small ranch in Tarzana, California, prepared for a trip. From his stable he led a brown saddle pony into a horse trailer which he hitched behind a maroon sedan. When all was secure a woman came out of the house and joined him in the front seat of the car. They drove out of the yard and headed for the first mountain pass leading out of the valley to the east. Mr. and Mrs. Albert Cernik were on their way to Las Vegas, Nevada, to see their eldest son. The happy, husky boy who had always wanted to be a cowboy had somehow become the newest singing sensation of the entertainment world.

He wasn't called Albert Cernik, Jr., any more. Now he was known as Guy Mitchell. They knew that all over the country, in big theatres, hotels and nightclubs, his singing was in demand. He had even sung in England. They knew that he made records which sold by the millions and they knew that he made pictures in Hollywood. Mr. and Mrs. Cernik were still a little dazed about all this and about the Tarzana ranch he had bought them because he wanted his father to retire from work.

Sometimes they even found (Continued on page 71)

The gone-est of Guys is Mitchell—and he's going far and wide!
You can't fence in a crooner who busts broncos on the side!

BY LOUIS POLLOCK

SOMETIMES WHEN TRAGEDY STRIKES, WE CANNOT SEE THE BLESSING BEHIND IT.

BUT IT IS FROM OUR MOST DESPAIRING MOMENTS THAT TRUST AND LOVE CAN GROW.

whatever His purpose...

by June Allyson

To my daughter Pam, God is a friend of the family and prayer is as natural as a phone call.

■ I don't think I have ever made an entrance on the stage, or walked in front of a motion picture camera without the security of having prayed for confidence and command of myself—and having gotten it.

That habit was a great help to me when I first came out to Hollywood and ran into a curious problem. It was all due to my efforts to avoid being known as a "Five-line Actress." A five-liner, if you haven't run across the term before, is a girl who can remember just about five lines of dialogue at a time—no more. After she has said them, the filming of the scene must be interrupted, and everybody waits while she tries to commit to memory another bare five lines. I didn't want to be like that so I went too far the other way!

I learned my scripts so well that when the director ordered changes in the lines, as he generally does at the last moment, I couldn't change. I had the original words ground into my memory and those were the words I spouted out when my cues came!

It may seem silly but actually it was serious. It made me feel as though I were dense. The director would explain to everyone in a scene how he was changing the dialogue; everyone except me would quickly absorb the corrections and remember them when it was time to speak. Then, I, Cement Head, would talk and we were back where we started.

It began to look as though I needed more than I had in talent, self-control and, particularly, in elasticity of memory, to make good in Hollywood. There was a lot I could do to help myself, mostly technical things, tricks of acting, to give myself greater freedom from the script and yet not violate it. But the biggest thing I did, and that which gave me the greatest help, was to pray like mad!

The feeling that there is greater-than-mortal help to be had if one asks for it, and particularly if one has lived so as to deserve it, has been in me from earliest memory. I don't think there is a man or a woman in the world who doesn't, somewhere within, feel the same.

The first prayers I ever said were not so much prayers as conversations with God. I was hardly out of kindergarten and I was suffering my first tragedy. My grandmother, who had frankly made a pet of me to the disgust of various cousins, died suddenly. I heard it from one of these cousins when I came home after school.

"Now you won't be so smart!" she cried, running to meet me. "Grandma's dead!"

I didn't fully know what dead meant. It took me two days to find out, two days locked in my room most of the time and carrying on a running talk with God to find out what had happened. At the funeral they let me see Grandma. She didn't look right and I was convinced she wasn't happy because God hadn't taken her to Him. Back I ran to my room to plead with Him about it and it seemed to me that Grandma looked happier and more at peace after that.

I didn't know it, of course, but I was about to have an opportunity to get really chummy with God. This opportunity fell on me in the form of the limb of a tree which cracked off as I was walking under it. My back was broken, my skull and a leg and an arm were fractured, the rest of my body crisscrossed with scratches and bruises. When my mother came running to the hospital all she could see of me that wasn't bandaged, plastered or tied up in pulley arrangements was my right eye. This must have looked none too healthy because my mother fainted.

I lay there, eight years old and sort of screened off from the living world for weeks in my cotton, canvas and plaster of paris cocoon. I kept asking God why He was mad at me. It seemed incomprehensible to me that He would cause half a tree to fall on anyone He liked!

I can recall going over my past and checking for sins I might have committed of such a grievous nature that they required me to be all but shattered in the course of penance. I was puzzled and I had to ask my mother to interpret the ways of God. Where was the divine justice she had told me about? What was His purpose?

"I don't know," my mother told me. "It is between you and Him. It is plain that He wants you to bear things."

It's funny. I was rather complimented by her answer. And I can still remember that in my own childish way I saw that He was getting at something worthwhile. He was teaching me to think with clarity and depth which had never marked my hinking before, and which was born of my very questioning of Him. In time I realized that whatever His purpose in decreeing that I should be under the tree when it split, He has made it up to me ver since!

Really, I know that it is given to few people that their dreams come true as mine have. I know, or rather I have reason to know, what life is really like for most of the millions of people on earth. Most of us wish for something we never attain. I, for no reason that I myself can fathom, did attain what I wanted. Believe me, I am more grateful than proud, more wondering than smugly sure I deserved it!

Lying in my bed of pain at the hospital I was inspired to become a doctor. I marveled at these fine men who came to me every morning (the doctor and the internes with him) and concentrated all their skill and great knowledge (and handsomeness, I must put in here!) to ease my pain and get me well. No life, it seemed to me, could be finer than one devoted to healing the sick. And with this purpose as my secret, I gloated for weeks and months—a skinny, cracked-up moppet, lying content in her bed of pain because she visualized herself curing the lame and the halt and bringing ease to the sick of heart. I don't know a better way to suffer than to imagine curing the suffering of others. It not only makes you forget your own pain; it makes you glory in it. And time and again I saw myself as a physician, stethoscope hanging from my neck, patting the hand of a patient as I told him comfortingly, "Yes, yes, I know just how you feel. I, too, have suffered!"

With the aid of a metal and leather back brace I finally left the hospital. Since I was now a person with an important mission in life I expected to be greeted with respect by my old playmates. It didn't work out that way. They were a little awed by anyone's having been kept so long in a hospital. At the same time there was that funny brace I was wearing—certainly something to laugh at. And they did.

I resented their jeers and I came to resent my brace as well, I suppose. At any rate, it was a challenge to me and as soon as I could, I stopped wearing it. Not only that but I tried to teach myself dancing to prove to myself and to the kids that I was far from being a cripple. I still had dreams of a medical career but I realized my mother didn't have the funds to finance medical training, and I made a slight switch in plans. Instead of treating people I would entertain them. I would go into show business. Before I really decided on my future I had two oddly unrelated ambitions for which I constantly solicited divine cooperation:

1. I would be a great doctor.

2. Some day I would dance with Fred Astaire in a movie.

I never even made a start toward medicine but, you know, I almost did dance with Astaire! We were talking one day at the studio and he said, "We must make a picture together." I thought he was kidding. Not long afterward I was told that he wanted me to play opposite him in The Royal Wedding. It was one of the biggest thrills I ever had and I was just on the point of cheering when I suddenly became sick at my stomach. The timing for this role which I wanted so much was very bad; I was on the way to motherhood at the moment and this was the first hint that I was not going to have a serene pregnancy.

When this dismaying fact became pretty well established and it was clear that working was out of the question, Judy Garland was named to replace me. By the time the picture was started Jane Powell had it. I had Richard Powell, Jr. God knew what He was about. I really needed my son. He was a blessing to me, an education, and the tie to the future which every woman needs.

Because of the curiously personal relationship I had with God as a child, it seems natural to me that my children speak of Him as someone close to the family. For instance, after we had entertained at dinner for a series of evenings, little Pamela casually asked when we were having God over to dinner.

The only answer I could think of was that God is always with us.

If Pam prays and doesn't think her prayers are being answered she talks of it as people will talk about a telephone call that didn't go through. "I don't think God is home today," she will say. "I'll have to try again tomorrow."

Sometimes I, too, have to try again, and there are times when I have been filled with misgivings as to whether or not I have been keeping in tune with Him. I am afraid I have had renegade moments. When my husband Richard was seriously ill more than a year ago, and seemed to be getting worse after his operations, I suddenly became terribly afraid. There was a period in which the doctors said nothing could be done and time must decide whether he would recover. I was seized with the feeling that unless treatment was continued he would die.

I remember this crisis as the one time in my life when I withdrew into myself so deeply that I cut even spiritual ties; I know that in my anxiety I became resentful of what had happened and there was a morning when I told myself there could be no God. We all seem to have an instinct to blame someone or something for personal tragedy. Looking backward, I realize I was blaming myself for not being a better wife—just as I blame myself for not being a better mother whenever one of my children is ill.

Just the same it was prayer to which I finally turned. I am convinced Dick's recovery was due to this and to my urge to get a new doctor and follow his instructions completely. The situation reminded me of a picture I made with Margaret O'Brien called Music For Millions.

I was telling a writer how the story stayed in my mind. He said that when the greatest novel is finally written it will consist of a prayer recorded as it comes straight from the heart. I am inclined to agree with him. In my scripts I sometimes run across bits of such prayers and they always give the picture its most glorious moments.

This, then, is my form of worship—prayer. And it may take place at any time in my life and at any place I happen to be. If I do not get His response I am resigned to the fact that I am not going about it right—principally because I am not right with Him. Pamela has asked me about this, too.

"How do I know when I'm doing the right thing?" she'll ask.

Here I try to associate her conscience with God, the conscience being the pointer in God's hand, so to speak, showing her what is right and what is wrong. Like all children, Pamela is well aware that when mischief is afoot there is an inner prompting which wants to be heard, but which won't be heard unless one keeps listening for it.

To follow your conscience, even to the extent of going back and rectifying a wrong you have made, may seem irksome, but it has its compensations. You appreciate it during those moments in your life when you are alone and perhaps assaying your worth in terms of human values. It's funny how much satisfaction there is if you can honestly conclude that you are a pretty nice person. If ever you are close to God, and if ever He loves you . . . that is the moment! END

June Allyson can now be seen in Universal's The Glenn Miller Story.

living on wheels

(Continued from page 48) deluxe trailers driven to Hollywood. The $5,500 gift was to be a complete surprise to Lucy. In answer to a few company queries, Desi had specified that he preferred twin beds, twin sinks, and a combination tub and shower in his mobile home. Instead of the customary double-deckers, he requested two nursery-size beds for his children.

"As for the decorating," he told Redman, "I leave all that up to you. Just remember: my wife is a redhead."

Lucy's surprise package was timed to coincide with her arrival for work at MGM. Under the guise of showing his wife where he had been taking trailer-driving lessons, Desi drove out between the sound stages to the extremely realistic small town street known at the Metro lot as Andy Hardy Village.

Parked in front of Judge Hardy's white clapboard house was forty-one feet of streamlined, polished aluminum on wheels.

"It's a beauty," Lucy said, "but can you really drive that giant, Desi?"

Arnaz grinned. "Handles like a baby carriage." And taking the ignition key out of his pocket, he slipped it into Lucy's hand. "Go ahead," he suggested. "Try it."

Attached to the key was a tag reading, "To Lucy, with Love. Desi."

Lucy read the tag. Eyes brimming, she turned to her husband. "Does this mean that—"

Desi took her in his arms and kissing her near the ear, he said, "Surprise for you."

Lucy pulled back. "I don't believe it. This must be a gag. That trailer can't be real. It's a studio mock-up."

Desi howled. "Go inside and make sure."

To Lucy the interior of the trailer proved twice as exciting as the gleaming exterior. Within its bright framework, it boasted four separate rooms and a full bathroom.

Each section of the Desilu mobile home is scientifically engineered for maximum comfort, livability and beauty. It was the beauty of it all that first took Lucy's breath away.

The livingroom, which is located at the trailer's front end, is decorated in shades complimentary to a redhead—rust brown, coral, and turquoise. The accessories add a bright, cheerful note—brass lamps, planters, and serving dishes. Although the trailer is only eight feet wide, the livingroom also boasts a full-scale couch tastefully upholstered in a durable tweedy fabric. The bolsters of this piece are easily removed so that it makes up into a single bed. A wing chair and a wrought-iron swivel chair make up the main conversational grouping.

Another corner of the same room features a drop-leaf table with matching chairs that form into an expandable dining unit, capable of seating four to six people. Unobtrusively beside the door stands the compact Coleman 3 Cond-Air combination heater and air cooler. In the winter it keeps the mobile home as warm as a house. In the summer the blower cools the trailer by a continuous flow of fresh air from outside.

When Lucy first stepped into her trailer and looked around, she was impressed that in such a compact area so much furniture did not look crowded. Knowledgeable planning has prevented that. Two large windows on opposite sides of the trailer give the room a look of spaciousness. The mirror behind the couch creates an illusion of extra length and even the storage shelf which now holds Desi's collection of brass cooking pots, is adroitly spotted above eye level so as not to crowd into the room. The total effect is a triumph of design, or as Lucy puts it, "For a livingroom, it's the greatest."

"The greatest" is the phrase she used and still uses in describing every room in the mobile house. The yellow and white kitchen is partly hidden behind a corrugated partition of plexiglass. When the talented comedienne saw that, she was charmed.

"If this isn't the most compact, utilitarian kitchen!" she bubbled. "Really, this is absolutely the greatest!" She looked into the four-burner stove, then ran her hand over all the kitchen counters which are finished in grey formica. She opened the six-foot refrigerator which also has freezer space for twenty-eight pounds of food, and finally, as her eyes drank in all the furnishings, she turned to her grinning husband and said with amazement, "This kitchen has more drawers and more cupboard space than you'll find in most Hollywood apartments."

when april's issue

of modern screen

comes your way

lovely liz taylor

will be on the cover.

Watch for it at your newsstand

march 5.

It so happens that Desi and Lucy are both good cooks which means that they can appreciate their carefully designed Youngstown trailer kitchen. Through the years, even before they got their mobile home, many of their meals were joint creations. Desi specializes in well-seasoned salads and steaks while Lucille attends to the garlic toast they both love, and concocts too-rich desserts.

Because she is a mother, Lucy also appreciates the care and thought that went into her trailer nursery. Here is a room with two little beds, frilly curtains, and cute stuffed animals. When Lucy first entered it, she let go a scream of pure delight. "No, Desi!" she cried. "This is the end. The absolute end. Have you ever seen anything so darling?"

Of the four rooms in the trailer, the nursery probably means the most to Lucy and Desi, because they've always felt that their immediate family of four should spend lots of time together without the benefit of a nurse or a well-intentioned grandmother.

"There's something about the plain physical fact of being in small quarters that seems to give our children a feeling of warmth and family solidarity," Lucy says. "Before we got the trailer, it was always a federal case to take the children with us on any trip, no matter how short. We had to move cribs, play pens, clothes, baby food, the whole works. Now, life is much simpler. We keep the trailer well-stocked and ready to roll at a moment's notice. If Desi wants to take a few days off and go to the desert or do some fishing off Balboa, we just toss the children into the nursery and we're set.

"At one time we thought seriously of building a weekend house. First, we thought we'd build it in the desert near Palm Springs. Then we changed our minds and decided to build one in the mountains. Then Desi said he'd like to have a house near the ocean.

"For us the trailer came as the perfect answer. In Palm Springs we own a piece of land near the golf course and connect our New Moon to the club's electric outlet. At Newport we park in the grounds of the Villa Marina Motel where we've always stayed to be near the dock. While Desi fools around on his boat, I can be at home with the children."

The trailer is more than a vacation home to Lucy and Desi. For the last several months they've used it constantly in their work. At Metro it followed them around from stage to stage, from back lot to special locations. They used it as an office, snack bar, private diningroom, and lounge for visiting guests.

As soon as The Long, Long Trailer was finished, they had the mobile job moved to their home business location at Motion Picture Center where from Monday through Thursday of each week, they labor on I Love Lucy.

Here again, it serves mulitiple purposes. The trailer's master bedroom has enough floor space to accommodate twin beds or a double bed and night stand. Windows on three sides keep the room light and well-ventilated. But what Lucy likes best about the room is the theatrical make-up mirror and dressing table which Doris Christensen, the company's decorator, had installed along one wall especially for the busy Lucy.

"I've worked in lots of studios," Lucy says, "but I've never had a dressing room I wanted to live in before. This one's got everything."

By joining the ever-growing fraternity of trailer owners throughout America, a fact which MGM publicized during the production of their film, Desi and Lucy have attracted a whole new group of fans who write to them regularly. Letters pour in daily from itinerant workers who use trailers on special construction jobs, from servicemen and their families who live in trailers and move from post to post, and from newlyweds whose futures are so undetermined that they have invested in a mobile home rather than a stationary one. And of course there's plenty of new fan mail from the retired couples who live well and simply in trailer camps throughout the country.

All of these correspondents have complimented Lucy and Desi on making a picture about trailer life, and several hundred have volunteered to act as technical advisers on any future trailer film.

Only last week the Desilu organization received a letter from an old-timer who had been having a wonderful time trailer-touring the United States for the last thirty years.

"Dear Desi and Lucy," he wrote, "I understand by the morning paper that you two folks have bought yourselves a trailer. For folks who live in Hollywood that shows a lot of good common sense. I've owned a trailer on and off for the past thirty years and I can tell you that you only live once and that a trailer is the best way to see th world before you leave it."

Lucy plans to frame that letter and han it in her New Moon trailer. EN

CELEBRATING M-G-M's 30TH ANNIVERSARY

M-G-M SCOOP!

Announcing the first appearance on the big, big movie screen and in color of America's most mirthful married couple!

Their first picture together since they became the nation's love-and-laugh favorites! And what a wonderful story! It thrilled millions as a best-seller and in Reader's Digest!

Lucille Ball and Desi Arnaz

"The Long, Long Trailer"

It's fun on a honeymoon with Lucy and Desi driving a house on-wheels into hilarious adventure!

WITH
MARJORIE MAIN · KEENAN WYNN
Screen Play by ALBERT HACKETT and FRANCES GOODRICH · Based on the Novel by CLINTON TWISS
Photographed in ANSCO COLOR · Print by TECHNICOLOR
Directed by VINCENTE MINNELLI · Produced by PANDRO S. BERMAN · An M-G-M PICTURE new baby—new happiness

(Continued from page 51) hospital were given a lecture which included the symptoms of a faulty esophagus. In a new-born child the tip-off is the inability of the infant to swallow anything.

On the day Russell Derek was born, the nurse noticed that he couldn't swallow his sugar water. She reported her suspicion to Dr. Louis Earle, the pediatrician, who promptly examined the infant. He confirmed her suspicion. Russ had been born with a damaged esophagus.

Unless major surgery could be performed at once, John and Pati Derek would have no son to take home from the hospital. And even if surgery were performed, the chances were only fifty-fifty that the child would survive.

Pati Derek lay on her hospital bed, chatting happily with her husband. John sat beside her, holding her hand and telling her what a great horseman he would make of their son. He was proud of his son. Both he and Pati had wanted a boy. Then the doctor walked in to speak to the unsuspecting couple. "I sensed something was wrong," John now recalls, "but I didn't know what it could be."

"I want you to brace yourself for a shock," the doctor warned Pati. Then he told them. Their little son was dying. No food of any sort could pass down the baby's gullet. Intravenous feeding might keep him alive for a little while, but not for long. There was only one thing to be done. The infant would need an operation immediately. He recommended that Dr. J. Norton Nichols, who had specialized in that particular technique, be called in to perform the operation.

Pati looked at John. She could not speak of the anguish in her heart and the fear in her mind. John was immediately decisive.

"Let's get him," he urged. "For God's sake, let's get Dr. Nichols here at once."

They called the surgeon and he came. Fourteen hours after he was born, little Russell Derek was wheeled into the operating room. He was anesthetized, and then the nimble fingers of Dr. Nichols went to work. The scalpel cut through the baby's chest, laying bare the trachea and the gullet. Dr. Nichols found the break in the esophagus and repaired it. The chest incision was sutured. The surgery took hours. Pati and John waited in Pati's room. They hardly spoke. They sat looking at each other, silently praying. Waiting was eternity, a seemingly endless torture.

Finally, the doctor came in. "I think he's going to be all right. But he'll need a lot of care for a long time."

They kept Russell in the hospital for weeks. And even now that he's four, Pati and John have to be careful that nothing gets stuck in his throat and that he doesn't gag on food.

This vigilance is part of the reason John Derek has been so edgy and nervous. In the last four years he has made many a wild dash to the doctor's office with Pati clutching her son, seeing the boy's face turn blue, afraid that he would strangle on a piece of bread before they could get relief for him.

With this kind of trouble you can understand John Derek's worries when he was about to see his baby daughter for the first time.

"Was she really perfect?" he asked himself. Maybe she just looked fine and then when the pediatrician came, he'd find something wrong. Maybe it would be Russ all over again; the near-tragedy, the surgery, the countless hours and weeks of strain and worry.

There's nothing like that. Sean is a healthy, happy baby. Her big brother is coming along fine, and now that they've weathered their first big crisis together, John and Pati Derek seem to be more in love than ever.

"Quarrels and differences that we had in the past," Pati says, "now seem so small, so insignificant, just part of our adjustment."

People used to say that John and Pati quarreled incessantly. They predicted the marriage would never last. Too many differences in background, taste and outlook. For instance, John likes meat and potatoes. Pati, born in the Near East and brought up in Paris, was a gourmet. She loved to prepare elaborate dishes, garnish them with rich sauces.

A few months after they were married, John came home from the studio to find that Pati had worked all day preparing a gastronomic delight—crêpes suzette, chicken cooked in wine, some other tasty delicacies.

Her husband took one look at the lovingly prepared food. "Looks great, honey," he said. "But this sort of stuff isn't for me. Throw on a steak. I'm all in."

Pati, discovered by Darryl Zanuck after World War II when she was dancing in a Paris nightclub, had given up her career at 20th Century to marry John.

IT HAPPENED TO ME

I was just a cub reporter on a San Antonio newspaper a few years ago when Dorothy Malone and the stars of Two Guys From Texas came to the Alamo City to promote the film.

It was Miss Malone's biggest role until then and, since she was a Texan, she rated an interview. I got the assignment. I was excited. It was my first press breakfast with a real movie star.

"I hope you'll excuse my nervousness, Miss Malone," I blurted out. "But you're my first movie star!"

I'll never forget her smiling response. "I know just how you feel," said Dorothy Malone. "You're my first reporter!"

Keith Elliott
San Antonio, Texas

Now she wondered why. In no uncertain terms she voiced her doubts. John said he couldn't help it if he happened to like steaks. This gooey French stuff just didn't settle well in his stomach. Tears, temperament, recrimination.

Pati finally accepted the fact that her husband is strictly a meat and potatoes man. Nowadays that's what the Dereks eat.

"Actually," she says, "it took me about two years to get adjusted to John, to understand his ways. He has an enthusiastic nature. If he likes sailing, then he will buy a sailboat. Maybe he doesn't know how to sail and will wreck the boat the next day, but it's best to let him have his own way. I've been told that I spoil John, that I have the European woman's attitude toward marriage. You know, that the man of the house does not belong in the kitchen, that he shouldn't wash dishes and make beds.

"Well, I believe that. Certain things in the house are women's work, and do not fit a husband's dignity. In an emergency if a husband loves you he will do everything, but it is not fair to make him share the housekeeping chores after a days' work.

"Not that John hasn't done these things. When I was pregnant with Russell, I had to stay in bed for many weeks. John would get up at six in the morning to take care of my dog and make breakfast for me. He would serve it to me in bed. At night he would carry me a dinner tray and he would clean all the dishes and straighten the house. That's when I learned that what counts most in a husband, what counts most in any man, is the way he acts in an emergency when his family really needs him.

"Like the trouble with Russell. I don't know what I would have done had John turned out to be a weak man. It was his strength, his how do you call it?—his drive, his will power—that has made things turn out well. It is very difficult for an actor to work and concentrate and at the same time to realize that he has a baby son at home and that maybe the son can die any minute.

"It has not been easy but I think we are now out of the woods."

In contrast to Pati who is quick to express her feelings about anything, John Derek has lived within himself for so many years that he finds it extremely difficult to talk about the crises in his life.

When you ask him to tell you about the solidifying effect of Russell's illness on his marriage, he comes up with, "Well, it was a little rough with Russ. Had some trouble with his esophagus, but he's okay now."

He cannot bring himself to talk about the terror he experienced in the hospital as he waited for the doctor to bring some news about the success or failure of the operation on his son. He cannot talk about his suffering, physical or mental.

Instead, you hear that John was worried sick about the big mortgage on his home, that he sat up nights wondering if he could pay his bills. Derek could talk freely about financial matters, but such discussions were substitutes for the major worry in his life, the health of his son.

Nor did he ever talk about the monthly trips with Russ to the hospital. He never described how the little boy's esophagus was stretched with a glass tube. He never told about how long it took to feed the child or what nerve-racking meticulous care was necessary. He never told how, despite this precise care, the baby would sometimes choke. Pati would scream, clutch the infant to her breast, and they would race to the car. Then the life-saving dash to the doctor's office.

John Derek is an only child and the child of divorced parents. He was born into the motion picture business. His mother was an actress and his father a director. They separated when John was five.

The boy was passed from parent to parent. He was insecure because he didn't have the kind of home other children had. Children need to conform. When circumstances make this impossible, they develop defenses or compensatory reactions. John became withdrawn.

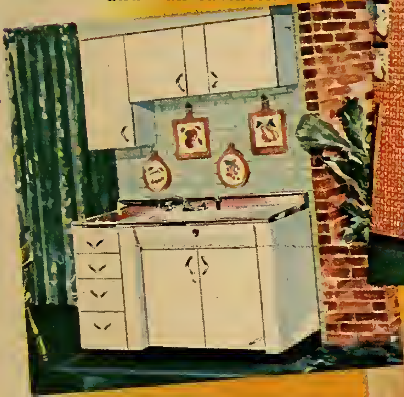
Later, he tried to kid people into believing that he was the happy-go-lucky type, but he never succeeded. In his youth he never got the love and discipline he needed. He went from one school to another in Los Angeles and Santa Monica but didn't graduate from high school.

Fortunately, he was handsome. He had the friendship of Russ Harlan, a photographer at the studio where his mother worked. Harlan was a kind of father to John. "He taught me how to ride, how to box, how to hunt, how to do all the things every kid wants to learn. My son is named for him."

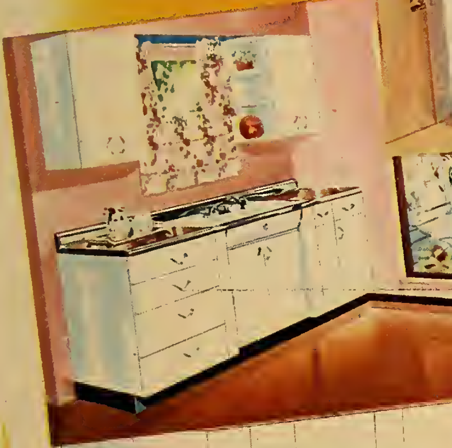
One night when he was bowling at an alley in Westwood, John was spotted by

New Diana-style Youngstown Kitchens

Beauty in an L-shape kitchen! Includes cutlery base cabinet, 36" Diana ensemble sink and rotary corner base and wall cabinets.



Beautiful, compact, efficient. A 42" Diana ensemble sink combined with other units for plenty of work surface, storage space.



A compact kitchen in 72". Includes 24-inch Diana ensemble sink, cutlery base cabinet, tray cabinet, base cabinet.

Storage space, work surfaces aplenty. 42" Diana ensemble sink flanked by 4-drawer base cabinet, tray cabinet, base cabinet.

Cabinets of steel for lasting appeal.

This trailer kitchen includes a 42" Youngstown Kitchens cabinet sink, a base storage cabinet, and four wall cabinets—one of them a rotary corner cabinet.

The luxurious NEW MOON MOBILE HOME from the MGM movie "The Long, Long Trailer," features a colorful, compact Youngstown Kitchen, with surprisingly large storage space.

The first all-new kitchen advance in 19 years can be yours now, for as little as $2.25* a week!

The revolutionary new concept in Diana-style Youngstown Kitchens is the first major improvement in kitchens since the cabinet was put under the sink.

You start by planning the sink itself . . . choose the new Diana ensemble sink model with bowl arrangement best for you. Add base and wall cabinets from a wide variety of widths and styles, at low prices made possible by mass-produced steel units.

Whether your kitchen is large, medium, or small, your new Youngstown Kitchen will have that streamlined, built-in look which results from full custom planning. You can also include the Youngstown Kitchens Jet-Tower Dishwasher and Food Waste Disposer.

Let your factory-trained Youngstown Kitchen dealer show you your dream kitchen in perfect miniature. If building or buying, specify a Youngstown Kitchen—you'll save!

*Installation extra
Reg. U. S. Pat. Off.

Youngstown® STEEL Kitchens

MULLINS MANUFACTURING CORPORATION
WARREN, OHIO
World's Largest Makers of Steel Kitchens

SEND COUPON NOW!

Youngstown Kitchens, Mullins Mfg. Corp.
Dept. MS-354, Warren, Ohio
Please send newest kitchen-planning, decoration ideas. I enclose 10c to cover cost of mailing. (No stamps, please.)
I plan to build a house ☐ I plan to buy a house ☐
I plan to modernize ☐

NAME (Please print)

ADDRESS

CITY ZONE

COUNTY STATE

© 1954 Mullins Manufacturing Corporation

Henry Willson, a talent scout who has discovered more than one handsome young man. Willson was working for Selznick then and he signed Derek at $150 a week.

John attended drama classes and was given a bit in I'll Be Seeing You. "He loused it up real good," a director recalls, "but he was only a kid then."

After serving with the Paratroops in the Pacific, after eleven and a half months in the Philippines, the kid returned to Hollywood a man. Again his face, not his acting ability, got him a contract—this time at 20th Century.

It was here that he fell in love for the first time in his young life. He fell in love with Pati Behrs, a young dancer Darryl Zanuck had discovered in Paris.

"Pati was making a good salary," John says. "She was living it up in the Bel Air Hotel while I had a crummy little apartment, and it looked as though the studio meant to make her a big star. They kept her around for three years, gave her a few bits, and then out.

"We took a liking to each other while we were in dramatics class, and then we began going around. Down to the beach, rides around town, a few shows. No night clubs. I hate night clubs. And then one night in 1949 we decided to drive over to Las Vegas and get married."

With his marriage, John at twenty-three found screen success. He had read a novel, Knock On Any Door, and was convinced that he was born to play the role of the juvenile delinquent. He begged his agent to get him in to see Humphrey Bogart who was producing the picture independently.

The agent tried to high-pressure Bogart. "You'd better sign this kid right now," he told Bogey. "He's so hot Metro is dangling a big fat contract in front of him."

"Nobody is dangling anything in front of me," Derek interrupted. "I just want to play this part, Mr. Bogart. I want to play it real bad."

Bogey took a chance on the kid, and as he says, "He was tops. Just tops. Gave the part everything he had. The kid's okay."

Columbia Pictures signed John to a seven-year contract (with options, of course) on the strength of his performance and then cast him in All The King's Men which won the 1949 Academy Award.

Anxious to capitalize on his popularity with the teen-age crowd, Columbia cast Derek in a couple of Grade D pictures. He didn't like them but he was in no position to complain.

When Alfred Hitchcock wanted to borrow him for a role in Stranger On A Train and the studio said no, John began to gripe. A few weeks later, Paramount, having been notified of Alan Ladd's intention to leave the lot, tried to buy up Derek's contract as a protective move. Again, Columbia said no.

This time, John gave vent to his feelings. The studio boys accused him of getting the "fat head."

"The kid should take it easy," one of them explained. "This high-pressure routine won't get him anywhere. He's doing okay."

Only John wasn't doing okay. Russell Andre Derek had been born. The medical expenses were astronomical. The repeated operations, the special care. This was an ordeal that was almost impossible for outsiders to fully appreciate.

Not only did Pati and John see this ordeal through together but they decided to have more children and face another kind of ordeal. John was determined to get out of his contract with Columbia.

All during Pati's second pregnancy he clamored for his release. The studio refused. They loaned him out to Republic for Thunderbirds. Then they cast him in two adventure spectacles, Posse and Prince Of Pirates. Then they made him star in a TV film for the Ford Theatre. And only when the video picture was completed would they finally consent to give the young man his freedom.

Now that he has his occupational freedom and a healthy new daughter, John's entire behavior pattern has changed. He is again the relaxed, cheerful young man he was before he came close to losing his son. And he is again ready to devote himself unreservedly to his career.

"I've already done one picture for Republic on my own; Fortune Hunter it's called. I've got confidence in myself after working in fourteen pictures and I know I can make a go of it. I like this business and I want to work hard in it.

"In four years of marriage, Pati and I have had more than our share of worries. With Sean's birth, I've got a feeling that our luck is changing. When that little girl was born she brought glad tidings with her. From here on in, the keynote around our house, as long as the children have their health, is going to be happiness." END

the trouble with sinatra

(Continued from page 40) frighten Ava into returning to him, but the chances are he wouldn't."

That was on November 19, 1953.

The next day Sinatra flew into Los Angeles, seeking another reconciliation with Ava Gardner. At the airport he was surly, irritable, and unsmiling. He wore a long overcoat, completely covering his wrists. Reporters who questioned him were brushed off with "no comment."

On November 26, Ava announced that she had talked to Frank and had decided finally and definitely to divorce him. Then she took off for Rome where she is starring in The Barefoot Contessa.

On November 29, after moving into a suite in the Beverly Hills Hotel, Sinatra reported to El Capitan Theatre in Hollywood for a rehearsal of the Eddie Cantor television program. He was to be a guest on Eddie's show along with singer Eddie Fisher.

At the rehearsal where visitors are allowed, a fan of Eddie Fisher asked if she might take a photograph of Sinatra talking to the two Eddies. Permission was granted, and the girl, Mary Nogueras of San Bernardino, California, began to shoot. In one of his poses, Sinatra put his left hand up to his jaw, thereby exposing his left wrist.

When Mary developed the film and made a print she noticed the inch-long scar on Frank's wrist, a scar which, you can see, looks as if it were the result of a knife wound, perhaps a superficial slash, but a slash deep enough to have drawn blood.

Mary sent her photograph to a Los Angeles newspaper. The paper sent reporters around to talk to Sinatra. As he had previously refused to talk to the representatives of MODERN SCREEN, Frank at first refused to talk to reporters from the Los Angeles Mirror. Later, however, he agreed to talk, spoke to them over the hotel house phone.

"Is it true that you recently attempted suicide?" he was asked.

"That's ridiculous," Sinatra snapped.

"Don't you have a deep cut on your left wrist?"

"No," the crooner said.

"But we have a photograph showing your wrist with a slash mark," Sinatra was told.

"Oh, that," Frank suddenly recalled. "I got it when I bumped into a corner of a desk and scratched it—and that's all there is to it."

"When did it happen?"

"Don't remember."

"Where did it happen?"

"I told you," the singer repeated. "I don't remember and that's the truth. Why should I lie about it?"

Actually, there are several reasons why Sinatra should lie if he had made a suicide attempt.

First and most important of all, it could reveal an instability, a neurosis, great unhappiness, and an inability to adjust to circumstances.

In fairness to Sinatra, however, it must be said that besides Ava's loss, he has no apparent motive for suicide and had none as far back as November 15.

Frank's career, in fact, has rarely been better than it is now.

His role in From Here To Eternity has sent his film stock soaring. His salary for guest appearances on TV has jumped from $5,000 to $7,500. His agent is asking and getting a minimum of $75,000 per picture. He has a new recording contract with Capitol Records. His nightclub salary has jumped to $10,000 a week. He owns 2% of the gambling casino at the Sands Hotel in Las Vegas. He has been offered a new CBS radio show.

Moreover, people who are currently working with him on the set of Pink Tights say he has never been more jovial, has never worked harder, and has never been more cooperative in his life.

Yet this is not the first time that rumors of Frank's attempted suicide have reached the newspapers. A few months before he and Ava were married, they had a fight at Lake Tahoe. Then Frank took a few too many sleeping pills.

Sheriff's deputies and other persons who were present said that it looked like an attempted suicide.

Los Angeles newspapers duly reported the news. Frank said the stories were not true and threatened to sue.

"The rumor that I took an overdose of sleeping pills last Tuesday," he insisted, "just isn't true. Last Sunday night Ava and I and Mr. and Mrs. Hank Sanicola went to the Christmas Tree restaurant. When I got back to my quarters I found that I didn't sleep well. I took two pills.

"When Ava went to Reno to take the plane back to Hollywood I drank two brandies and later broke out with a rash. That's all there was to it."

That was in August, 1951.

Most of Sinatra's unhappiness might be dated from the time he first began to go with Ava. Miss Gardner has a way of sending her lovers to great heights and great depths.

Howard Duff, for example, who was her steady before the "Thin Man" moved in, was desperately in love with Ava and made no secret of the fact that he wanted to marry her.

Ava's attitude was to refer to him as "Puppy," a dog she might lead around on a leash. Duff has never recovered from this humiliation and the mention of Ava Gardner still inspires his friends to say bitter things.

There is no doubt that Sinatra had a tremendous and overpowering love for Ava. Otherwise he never would have defied convention, the church and the public by leaving Nancy and his three children.

There is no doubt that he still loves Ava and would do practically anything, short of killing himself, to get her back.

One actress who knew Frank well ex plained his behavior when she said, "This boy specializes in the dramatic approach. I don't think he really attempted suicide. I think maybe he was just rehearsing—firing blanks.

"I do think these rehearsals were done well enough to fool his friends who picked up the phone and called Ava from New York.

"'You've got to take Frank back,' they probably screamed. 'He tried to kill himself. We got him in time, but you're the only one who can save him.'

"It's my guess," this actress said, "that Ava refused to fall for this routine after it had been worked a couple of times, and called it quits.

"Ava is a soft-hearted dame, a good dame and a nice dame. And I'll give you dollars to doughnuts that when she returns from Europe, she and Sinatra will announce a reconciliation. Unless, of course, she finds someone in Italy she likes much better than Frankie. Chances are against that.

"When Frankie wants to pour on the charm, he is absolutely irresistible. I think he is the greatest charmer the world has ever known. He has a tremendous ego, too, and because of that I think his suicide is completely out of the question.

"He would never think of suicide, genuine, complete, death-producing suicide, unless maybe he could do it in the Los Angeles Coliseum before 120,000 people and be promised a twenty-year contract in heaven." END

the queen and I

(Continued from page 42) work. She is quiet. She not only does her chores regularly (cleans her room, dressing room and livingroom and cooks dinner if she is the first one home) but she loves to do them and does them well. (Maybe I ought to list my chores: the two upstairs baths, the playroom, my father's room and also the cooking if I get home first.)

She doesn't parade her likes and dislikes, nor her ability. She talks less about boys than I do, but it is pretty well agreed around our house that she knows a lot more about them. She is more analytical about men than I am. She can tell the true from the false more readily.

I can remember having dozens of crushes when I was in high school—some so devastating that I would go running to my mother convinced that "this is it!" Debbie had few, if any. Today I can't remember what half of my mad crushes looked like, and I can't imagine what I saw in those I do remember. All this waste motion (and emotion) was something Debbie didn't have to go through. She already knew puppy love for what it was (it was "for the birds," she said) and saved her energy for more important things.

She thinks a girl, particularly one whose career places her before the public, should always be self-possessed. I don't know how she does it, but Debbie keeps her head even when she has lost her temper. What I know about handling a flirt I think I've learned from observing her. She likes good-humored kidding, but she hates the hand patters. ("Hand pattery is a disease," she says.)

Some of our friends think Debbie is a little too serious in her relationship with people; not easy to meet and certainly not easy to get to know. The answer to that is simple—Debbie, whom I can recall as a regular tomboy in her childhood, has had sobering responsibilities for a girl of her age—both as an actress and as an elder daughter in her family. The

I SAW IT HAPPEN

Bing loses a match and takes a town!

Bing accepted a toupee from Arthur Anderson of Everett, Washington, mc of ceremony.

The Groaner interrupted his vacation at Hayden Lake to drive over for the fund-raising match.

■ Know what an "eagle" means to a golfer? Bing Crosby does, and he ought to! It's a hole-in-two—exactly what Der Bingle shot on the third hole at an exhibition match he played in Wenatchee, Washington, to raise funds for a new municipal golf course. The club that done the deed, lifting the ball over 110 yards, was a nine iron.

Just luck? Maybe. But every one of the spectators crowding the galleries felt it was luck well deserved. Bing was playing with spectacular golfers. His partner was Washington's own Jack Westland, Congressman and National Amateur Golf Champion for 1952. Opposing them were a pair of youthful champs, Bruce Cudd, Northwest Open Champion for 1953, and Eddie Draper, Washington State Amateur Champion for the same year. These three thrilled the gallery with long drives, good approaches and phenomenal putting. But it was only Bing, Mr. Lucky of the day, who took time to chat amiably as he walked down the fairways, turning every fan into a personal friend. It was Bing who despite the blistering August heat joked good-naturedly when he was introduced to the crowd and when he was presented with a toupee! "Thanks for the divot!" he quipped, and then spoke briefly about his love for golf. "If it helps a little," he finished, "I'm happy to be here."

Maybe it did help. Maybe it helped not only the fund drive and the spirits of the perspiring spectators—but Bing himself. Maybe it was just this air of casual, friendly good nature that made it possible for him to beat three top golfers on the third, fourteenth and eighteenth holes and sink that beautiful eagle. Bruce and Eddie took the match that day. But it was Bing who took with him the hearts of the crowd. And that takes more than luck!

Joy Arch
Wenatchee, Washington

SEE

New Moon

MOBILE APARTMENT HOMES

featured in
M-G-M's
Technicolor Hit

See PHILIP MORRIS'
CBS-TV SHOW
"I Love Lucy"

"The Long, Long Trailer"

Starring

Lucille Ball and Desi Arnaz

AT YOUR FAVORITE THEATRE SOON!

Learn how you too can enjoy Carefree Living . . . at a new, low cost

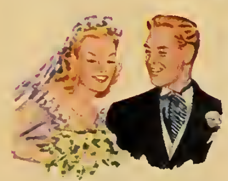
GET YOUR

Free Copy

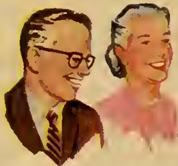
Read how thousands of folks are enjoying new economic security and living freedom in a completely furnished New Moon Mobile Apartment Home



Newlyweds find New Moon Living the answer to facing an uncertain future with complete confidence. New low cost effects lower living expenses. Complete mobility permits moving to top paying jobs.

Men, whose work requires periodic moving, now take their families with them as they move from job to job. Their New Moon homes make it possible for them to enjoy real family life—and the kids love it too!

Servicemen find New Moon Living makes it possible to keep their loved ones with them, enjoy home comfort near-the-base as they move from camp to camp, and be all set for living after their discharge.



Retired folks rave about New Moon Living as the answer to realizing lifelong dreams. They travel, vacation, visit with their families, live North in the summer, South in the winter—in their New Moon Homes.

Your Passport to New Moon living!

Learn all about the advantages of New Moon mobile living—how you can enjoy complete living comfort and convenience in a New Moon mobile apartment home that is completely furnished and available in a variety of sizes to fit your living needs. This colorfully illustrated fact-packed book tells how you, like thousands of folks from all walks of life, can enjoy New Moon ownership at new low cost on our "like-rent" payment plan.

YOU TAKE YOUR HOME WITH YOU WHEREVER YOU GO---FOR SEMI-PERMANENT LIVING, TRAVEL AND VACATION FUN!

WRITE TODAY FOR YOUR FREE COPY

to: NEW MOON HOMES INC.
563 Bridge St., Alma, Mich.

WITHOUT OBLIGATION, please send me a free copy of "Planning Guide," describing the advantages of New Moon Mobile Apartment Living.

Name: ____________________
Address: ____________________
City: ____________________ State: __________

work she has had to do and the decisions she has had to make were at the expense of her playtime girlhood years. She has always known that her career is not only important to her but can mean (and has meant, for that matter) a lot to all of us. I'm in pictures simply because Debbie got me into them. She encouraged me, she helped me study, and she practically placed me in my studio.

Actually, Debbie has gone to a great deal of trouble to keep from growing away from people. I can remember when she decided to give up going to school in the studio, even though it was so convenient, because she thought she would develop more normally if she went to a regular high school. Even today few of her friends even know she ever made such an attempt. She applied at Beverly Hills High, was admitted, and attended classes there for exactly three days! The girls there just wouldn't accept her!

We realized later they couldn't understand why a girl who could spend all her time at a movie studio would want to waste any of it in a school. They were actually suspicious of Debbie, as if they felt there must be something wrong with her! And Debbie, who just wanted friends of her own age and the kind of life that went with them, was broken-hearted when she had to give up the idea.

I am pretty sure that our twinship, even thought it didn't last, set a pattern of close relationship that is with us even today. We do a lot of our dreaming and planning together, and certainly our working and playing.

Many nights we talk acting; we concoct wonderful roles and then the stories to go along with them. No writer has ever worked according to the formula we follow! We start creating for ourselves the kind of role we feel we can best portray; then we fit in the plot any old somehow! The way we figure, Shakespeare was wrong when he said "The play's the thing!" (You know I'm just kidding.)

We do a lot of ballet practice and vocalizing together; that takes some of the monotony and hardship out of it. And if you want to go bicycle riding and the nearest place is a city street you know how silly you can feel by yourself, whereas it becomes fun when there is another girl along.

As we grew older Debbie and I learned that we were different in a number of ways—including one that really hurts me. I shall refer to it as our rates of metabolism. Debbie, who has a wonderful shape, can eat what she likes when she likes without gaining an ounce. The food gets burned up and disappears without burdening her down in any way. What I eat, however, just wants to stay with me forever. Consequently I must diet while Debbie doesn't.

If only my appetite were small! But it isn't. It's titanic. I have to work at dieting. Only once a month do I indulge my craving for sweets. The whole family generally goes along and we head for a place famous for its hot fudge sundaes. A half hour after everybody else has finished I am still nursing my sundae along, trying to make it last.

We differ in our philosophies, too. Debbie has her sights always set on the future, mine are usually extended no further than maybe a half day beyond the present (in other words not past the next meal)! While I cotton to people more quickly than Debbie does, she is the one who likes to have visitors at our home on Sundays when we are not working. (I just want the family around.) Quiet as Debbie is, and ready to do anything to avoid a commotion, she occasionally sets off a riot around the house by getting an impulse to play a practical joke. The biggest scare I ever had in my life I got from Debbie one night when I was watching television and thought I was all alone.

The program was a suspense play and I was already enjoying goose pimples when Debbie sneaked into the house. She went to her room and pulled a silk stocking over her face so that her features were fearsomely distorted. She covered her hands with white cream. Creeping up behind me, she lifted the hands in front of my eyes as if she were about to choke me. I screamed and looked around to see a horrible brown smear of a face and my heart nearly exploded. If ever I was sore at Debbie and if ever we had a real fight, it was that night!

Ordinarily, we get along beautifully. Once in a while something comes between us—something, say, like the two peasant-style slips bought for us by mother. One was black and the other white. We both wanted the black one. We talked about it at night without settling the matter, and when I got up first in the morning it seemed only sensible to put on the black one. Why argue further?

IT HAPPENED TO ME

I was chosen from the audience at a radio show as the amateur to appear with a panel of experts. Most charming of the experts was Vincent Price. As we sat backstage in the last few minutes before show time, I gathered my courage to remark with a smile, "Mr. Price, I saw you in House Of Wax, and you were such a villain that I just hate you."

"Madam," replied the tall, handsome actor with a bow, "that is the nicest compliment I have ever received!"

Gene Desmond
Hempstead, New York

Of course, just as I was leaving the house somebody had to think about it and somebody had to call her mother to call me back, and then we had to go into it all over again, the talk running something like this:

MOTHER: Lisa, which slip did you put on?

ME: Who, me?

DEBBIE: She put the black one on and I'll need it today because I'm wearing my Moulin Rouge gown. (This gown was created for Debbie by Nikki, of Hollywood, and is a semi-cocktail and evening gown.)

ME: I'm wearing my strapless gold and the white slip won't do for that. Goodbye.

DEBBIE: Mother! She's going!

MOTHER: Lisa!

ME: Who, me?

MOTHER: Take it off.

ME: Who, me?

MOTHER: Take it off, take it off, take it off!

And so I sniffed at everybody and said something about some people who are so inconsiderate just over a little old slip. And I took it off and I was sore. But when I got back from the studio that night I'd forgotten all about it. And the same with Debbie. I mean in cases where she has lost the argument, and sometimes she does, she harbors resentment no longer than I do.

Of course Debbie can get really angry if sufficiently provoked. Then she is something to handle! Nobody who knows her quiet ways today would ever believe that as a youngster she was a tree climber, a dare taker and a yelling leader of the neighborhood gang. For that matter, no one who knows my reputation as an extrovert (by comparison to Debbie, anyway) would believe that I spent most of my spare time in school writing poetry.

I wish I could let you read a sample so you would know I'm not kidding and because none of my stuff was ever printed!

Debbie gets some ideas out of my poems, she says. Also some laughs. I love to hear her laugh. When Jimmy Stewart and Debbie played in Broken Arrow, a Technicolor picture, she had to wear contact lenses over her blue-green eyes to make them look brown because she played a brown-eyed Indian maiden. In a scene that ended with a clinch, Jimmy was supposed to whisper, "I love you." He did. Then he added, "but your right eye is slipping." Debbie howled so loudly that Jimmy claimed she disgraced her whole tribe.

Debbie had less trouble getting started in pictures than I did. She made it on her second test, but not until ten terrible days of waiting had passed. I'll never forget the night we got the news. We were having a spaghetti dinner and were half way through when the telephone rang and someone asked for Debbie. She went to the telephone, talked quietly for a few moments, and then returned to the table to announce, still quietly, that Billy Gordon of 20th Century-Fox said she had been accepted because the studio had nobody like her.

Two years later I took my first test at 20th and was turned down because the studio already had someone of my type —Debbie, of course. From that day nearly five years ago, until last year, I was tested periodically by every studio in town. The answer was always no. Then one day my present studio, Universal-International, wanted to borrow Debbie from 20th for a picture. She couldn't accept but she suggested that they test me for it. They did and signed me, but not for the role they were going to give Debbie. I didn't care. I was started. Since then I have had small roles in a half dozen pictures but, in my last film Drums Across The River, I play opposite the star, Audie Murphy. Next on the list for me is Francis Joins the WACS with Donald O'Connor. From now on nothing can stop me except, maybe, hot fudge sundaes. (And how I wish I had one!)

It is still much easier for me to meet people and talk to them than for Debbie, but why shouldn't it be? People don't get that odd "Oh!-she's-a-celebrity" look in their eyes when they see me. They don't recognize me at all most of the time. When I do seem familiar to them it's because they think I'm Debbie.

But anyway, Debbie is no queen, and I shall never be a queen either—mainly because of the lady who is our mother. Margaret Griffin (Mother's stage name) knows what life is about and has given us the benefit of her knowledge. One of her big lessons is that pretense belongs strictly on the stage—not off it. She can spot false temperament, or even just plain temper, while it is still aborning. That is why Debbie is no queen in our domicile and that's why I'm not even a princess! We're just two of mother's four daughters—the middle two. Let us know if you want to come to see us. We'll ask Mother if it's okay.

Debra Paget can now be seen in 20th Century-Fox's Prince Valiant.) END

This new star will steal your heart!

Easy on the eyes—on the driver, too.

Mercury Sun Valley—newest under the sun and the stars.

From Hollywood to New York, the news is out: the stunning new 1954 Mercury is a dream car come true.

You'll love Mercury on sight for its longer, lower lines and fresh, trim air of modern smartness—for the way it takes the spotlight wherever it goes. Inside, you'll find still more excitement in Mercury's glamorous new color combinations, striking upholsteries, and rich appointments.

And Mercury's trend-setting styling is complemented perfectly by Mercury's new 161-horsepower engine—new ball-joint front suspension, and 5 optional power features to make your driving as easy as you wish.

Mercury's years-ahead Sun Valley—America's first transparent-top car—joins Mercury's smart convertible as the nation's new stars of road and boulevard. See and drive a 1954 Mercury soon.

MERCURY DIVISION • FORD MOTOR COMPANY

Be sure to see Lucille Ball, Desi Arnaz, and Mercury in M-G-M's "The Long, Long Trailer" —coming soon to your favorite theater.

NEW 1954

MERCURY

guy mitchell

(Continued from page 58) themselves thinking of this Guy Mitchell as maybe a stranger. That's why, when he had telephoned them to be his guests at the Flamingo hotel in Las Vegas where he was now playing, they were secretly pleased when he also begged them to bring his pony along so he could do some riding. That boy, always crazy over horses, they knew well, no matter what you called him!

That's Guy Mitchell, a surprise to most people, even to his own folks—but a pleasant one.

You'd think that a boy who actually broke wild horses to the saddle at the age of fourteen would be a rugged-looking customer by the time he reached his middle twenties. Guy Mitchell is. He stands medium tall, weighs 175 pounds, has a heavy cast to his features and probably the biggest pair of fists in show business. Extraordinary fists which can probably check a horse dead when wrapped around a pair of reins. But the face smiles easily into blond, blue-eyed friendliness and those fists open to become unusually expressive hands when he is singing in a baritone that can boom or croon over a range of two and a half octaves. Most characteristic is a wholehearted impulsiveness about everything he does. When his mother and father got to Las Vegas he not only fell on their necks with joy but had to run back to the trailer and kiss his horse, Scotch Boy, as well.

This combination of outer strength and inner warmth makes for a telling personality when he is before the public. He bounces onto the stage and hits his full singing stride within the first three notes. As an English theatre manager put it: "He works close; he reaches right out from the stage to tap the shoulder of the fellow sitting in the last balcony seat." In his first two movies, Those Sisters From Seattle and Red Garters, it was quickly decided by his producers to let him be his natural self rather than make him conform to any specifications of the writers or directors. Even when he is not seen, but just heard, as in his recordings, most of his personality comes through in his voice. "He sings inside of you," the song experts say when talking about his style.

Guy's first real taste of success came only three years ago when he recorded "My Heart Cries For You," his sixth platter for Columbia Records. It has sold almost two million copies. Since then, with such hits as "Sparrow In The Tree Top," "The Roving Kind," "My Truly, Truly Fair," "Feet Up, Pat Him On The Po-Po" and "She Wears A Red Feather," the cumulative sales of his records have reached the ten million mark. Figures of this kind, including the multi-thousand dollar salaries he receives today for his radio, TV, theatre and nightclub appearances still awe him. He wants nothing to do with the business end of his work; the figures mentioned in the checks and contracts are always for amounts of money which convey little meaning to him. After all, just before he made good as a recording artist his income was in the sub-low brackets; he used to find it difficult to pay a New York landlady who asked only $5 a week for her room. She would be sad for months about him, generally two months' worth of sadness or $40 in back rent.

When he was in New York his only income came from making demonstration records for songwriters who nowadays prefer to submit their compositions to music publishers in this form. Guy made his

He's the quiet kind you suspect is really a Man of Mystery—

MR. TRACY: KEENER THAN MOST PERSONS

World War II gave him a break when leading-man shortages let him get the girl!

■ Funny thing about Spencer Tracy. He's made more big, quality motion pictures than any other star in Hollywood. Yet in the last decade, practically no lengthy stories about him have appeared in the magazines.

Tracy, with his practiced understatement, says, "I lead a quiet, simple life."

Known to directors as "the quiet type of lover" or "the kind of husband most women want their husbands to be," Tracy's favorite home is his San Fernando Valley ranch.

When he is working, he keeps an apartment in a Beverly Hills hotel convenient to MGM. He gets up at five A.M. and with the help of a pot of black coffee he goes over the day's dialogue. He is on the set by eight-thirty, ready for work and sore at players who turn up late.

His heart is as soft as custard. His ranch is stocked with horses, turkeys, hunting dogs, and two or three polo ponies. The horses never race. No one ever kills the turkeys because Spencer likes them for pets. The dogs haven't hunted for years, and the polo ponies haven't seen a mallet since Tracy gave up the game before the war.

He loves to worry. He insists that his last role was always "my worst. I did a really lousy job." He has said this so many times, even about Captains Courageous and Boys Town, his two Academy Award winners, that no one pays attention to him any more.

After he finished a picture, he used to drive up the coast highway, park his car, and do a little painting. "It's good, nerve-soothing occupational therapy," he used to say.

The last few years, however, he has left for Europe upon completion of films. He has a son, John, and an eighteen-year-old daughter, Susie, who looks very much like him.

He is with them practically any night he's in town. He usually takes them to dinner at Chasen's or Romanoff's in Hollywood.

He began his acting career almost thirty years ago and he has never been out of work for more than two consecutive weeks.

When he first came to MGM, he was placed in a series of films in which the other fellow always got the girl, "the other fellow" usually being Clark Gable. Tracy wasn't handsome enough to sweep a beautiful woman off her feet, they said.

During World War II, however, when most of the lovers had gone to war, Tracy tried their parts.

In Cass Timberlane he snatched Lana Turner. In State Of The Union he won Katharine Hepburn, and as a Romeo, he's still winning, although he is now fifty-three years old.

His hair may be white and his weather-beaten Irish face lined and he may be as he says, "on the verge of retirement," but he generates enough quiet sex appeal to make him one of the most reliable box office attractions in the country.

headquarters on the sidewalk in front of the publishers' offices on Broadway and you could get him to sing for five dollars a song—less, if you cared to bargain. One afternoon he cut his regular rate to help an impecunious songwriter with a novelty tune. The writer sold the song and it became one of the biggest hits in the history of popular songs. It was "Rudolph, The Red-nosed Reindeer." The writer made a small fortune out of it. So did almost every artist identified with it. Guy, the first man ever to sing it, got two dollars for his efforts, and as he says, "I could use the money, too."

Guy, whose folks are Yugoslavian, was born twenty-seven years ago in Detroit on Washington's Birthday, but he has been caught telling lies in his time. His mother was the victim of one of his biggest fibs. While attending Mission High School in San Francisco after his family came west he would come home day after day with various injuries—skin lacerations, muscular sprains and even suspected concussions. His story was that he sustained all of this damage in football practice. The truth, as she found out years later, was that he had taken up bronco busting.

He was spending his spare time at the local stockyards, helping the cowboys in their corral work and trying to ride the wild horses which were occasionally shipped in. As Guy's skill grew, he seriously decided to take up rodeo riding.

He was only fourteen when he spent $25 for an outlaw colt headed for the glue works because nobody could break it to the saddle. A month later he was able to sell it for $100. It was a well-behaved animal, amenable to final training. That summer and the next he found cowpoke work on ranches in the San Joaquin Valley.

Guy lied to his mother because the family had agreed that his destiny was singing. Whenever there was a spare dollar or two it was used to pay for singing lessons. This didn't bring much training because spare dollars were rare, but the idea was there. He knew his parents wouldn't consider it a bit sporting of him to go around courting a broken neck with his horse wrangling.

But he could not stop. He had western fever and he still has it. He even apprenticed himself to a saddle-maker when he was in his teens because he loved the feel of leather. He still makes all his own riding gear. Playing anywhere in the west he will usually be seen sporting riding garb. If he happens to be missing in a new town his road manager, Marty Horstman, checks saddle and leather stores first. Invariably, he finds Guy at one of them. That little ranch he bought for his parents in Tarzana is not the last land transaction Guy plans; there will be another one some day, in Nevada probably, and it will be for a real cattle outfit, he says.

Guy's family moved from Detroit to California when he was eleven, living in Los Angeles for a year before going on to San Francisco. At that time Guy's singing, overheard by a scout while he was riding on a Greyhound bus, won him a grooming contract at Warner Brothers Studio and regular singing assignments at the studio's radio station KFWB in Hollywood. Nothing came of this nor of subsequent radio work as a singer in San Francisco with Dude Martin on his KYA and KGO radio shows. Guy left Dude to join the Navy in 1945 and returned to Dude in 1947 feeling that nothing was any different except the feel of a horse—he hadn't been on one for sixteen months. He decided he could never stay away from horseflesh this long again. During his tour of England, playing London and the provinces, one of his manager's principal duties was to hire horses and bring them to the stage door. Guy hadn't the time to go riding but at least he wanted the satisfaction of sitting a mount once in a while. When there were no horses to be had the manager appealed to mounted policemen for their co-operation. They would always understand and plod their steeds to the stage door to dismount and let Guy climb on.

Late in 1947 Guy switched from Dude Martin to Carmen Cavallaro's orchestra as a male vocalist. The next summer when Carmen's outfit went to New York for its annual engagement at the Astor hotel, a date Guy had been looking forward to all year, he had a serious attack of laryngitis and a bad case of ptomaine poisoning. Cavallaro gave him two weeks' salary and a plane ticket home to San Francisco for a rest. Guy cashed in the ticket, and with a total bankroll of more than $500 figured he had enough to invade the sanctums of those who control the music world and prove to them that he deserved their support. For a long time he got no closer than the busy curb outside their offices.

There were moments of glory. One night, while singing in a small night club, a $50 bill was thrown at him by a customer. In the fall of 1949 he placed first on an Arthur Godfrey Talent Scout Show. This seemed to impress nobody and he was soon back at his sidewalk stand.

One day a tunesmith named Ned Washington asked Guy to make a demonstration record of a song called "My Foolish Heart." It was accepted for publication by Eddie Joy, vice-president of the Santly-Joy company, who liked Guy's voice and wanted to meet him. Joy also manages singers and is credited with master-minding Mindy Carson to top recognition. He placed Guy under personal contract and told him to study the leading vocalists for guidance toward achieving a warmer and more personal style of singing.

Joy obtained the Columbia Records contract for Guy and his career really got under way when "My Heart Cries For You" began tear-jerking buyers into the record stores at the rate of a quarter million a month. Guy, who was still faithfully trying to figure out what a successful singer did to a song to make it a hit, was told he could stop now; all he had to do was sing like Guy Mitchell.

If you are a young American citizen, male, who can sing like an angel and ride like the devil, you might as well start house hunting in Hollywood—you'll be out there sooner or later. Guy's records caused talk and the talk got to the ears of talent heads at Paramount Studios. Both of his pictures

What's eating you?

No, we're not being belligerent . . . we just want to know. Do you have a mad on—or a crush? Who do you think should get bigger roles, more publicity, better breaks? Whether you're in the mood for bestowing bouquets or giving vent to your gripes, we'd like to hear about it. So fill out the form below as soon as you have read this March issue of MODERN SCREEN. Then mail it to us at the address given—and do it right away, because we're sending a crisp new one-dollar bill to each of the first hundred people we hear from!

QUESTIONNAIRE: Which stories and features did you enjoy most in this issue? WRITE THE NUMBERS 1, 2, and 3 AT THE FAR LEFT of your first, second, and third choices. Then let us know which stars you'd like to read about in future issues.

- ☐ Out of the Shadows (Suzan Ball)
- ☐ The Lowdown on Hollywood Women
- ☐ They Fight for Each Other (Granger-Simmons)
- ☐ I'm Gonna Quit (Dale Robertson)
- ☐ Still Slugging (Hayward-Barker)
- ☐ The Trouble With Sinatra
- ☐ The Queen and I (Debra Paget-Lisa Gaye)
- ☐ Return from Nowhere (Guy Madison)
- ☐ Living on Wheels (Lucille Ball-Desi Arnaz)
- ☐ New Baby—New Happiness (John Derek)
- ☐ Miss Grable Steps Out (Betty Grable-Harry James)
- ☐ What I Learned from Women (Tab Hunter)
- ☐ Crawford Meets the Critics (Joan Crawford)
- ☐ Big Noise From Frisco (Guy Mitchell)
- ☐ Whatever His Purpose (June Allyson)
- ☐ Shellfire (Shelley Winters)
- ☐ I Saw It Happen (Bing Crosby)
- ☐ Mr. Tracy: Keener Than Most Persons (Spencer Tracy)
- ☐ The One That Got Away (Simmons-Mitchum)
- ☐ No Olé for Ava (Ava Gardner)
- ☐ The Inside Story
- ☐ Louella Parsons' Good News
- ☐ Movie Reviews
- ☐ Just for the Records
- ☐ TV Talk

Which of the stories did you like least?

What 3 MALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.

What FEMALE stars would you like to read about in future issues?

What MALE star do you like least?

What FEMALE star do you like least?

My name is..........................

My address is..........................

City ....

Occupation..........I am.....yrs. old

ADDRESS TO: POLL DEPT., MODERN SCREEN, BOX 125, MURRAY HILL STATION, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

are Technicolor musicals. In Red Garters he co-starred with Rosemary Clooney, Joanne Gilbert, Pat Crowley and Gene Barry. The cast of Those Sisters From Seattle included Rhonda Fleming, Agnes Moorehead, Teresa Brewer and, again, Gene Barry.

During his months at Paramount he got to know everyone in the studio and had only one unhappy day. This was the afternoon he was handed his new cowboy outfit, made in resplendent white and tan, for his role in Red Garters. Strictly a blue jeans man himself, Guy was ill at ease in his new costume. He slunk in and out of doorways and killed time on the set in dark corners.

HIS PARENTS and his younger brother, Donald, who is seventeen, paid him a visit at the studio. They met Bob Hope and afterward Guy thanked him for being so affable with them. "That's all right," said Bob. "You just be nice to my folks when they come. I'm no fool." This, according to those who know Bob, is no mean compliment to Guy's talent and his future, even if it sounded like kidding.

It is fairly certain that for the next few years he is going to be a busy boy; he is one of the most solidly booked entertainers in the world, and in every medium of show business. Working so steadily and with so many different kinds of performers has extended Guy's talents. He used to confine his work to singing. Now he has added some dance steps, does nice things with a guitar and has developed an easy, conversational relationship with his audiences. There may be more to come. He has been caught practicing tumbling tricks, acrobatics and bouncing about on a trampolene like a circus clown.

His only serious illnesses occurred before he was seven years old when he had pneumonia a couple of times. Since then his health has been perfect. He can sleep up to fourteen hours a night, preferably on what he calls a "basketball court"—two three-quarter beds shoved together. He likes to read, but because he hasn't much time he reads only best sellers. He insists that he was a good student in school but his mother remembers him as "just a passing one." He was a half credit short when he left Mission High School in San Francisco. He recently went back there and sang for the students in the assembly hall. Afterward, principal Alvin C. Morse awarded him the missing half credit.

In October, 1952, he married Jackie Loughery who was Miss U.S.A. in the annual Miss Universe contest at Long Beach, California. The cast and crew of Those Sisters From Seattle gave a surprise luncheon for the couple at Paramount on their six months wedding anniversary. Five months later they had separated. Jackie is suing for separate maintenance, charging cruelty. Guy has said, "I want to be married. I want children. When I get my ranch my life won't be complete until I have a wife and children on it." END

I'm gonna quit

(Continued from page 37) apartment house?" he suggested. "Why don't you buy some real estate?"

"That's not for me," Dale said. "Whatever money I've got saved up, I reckon I'll put it in this Everlast setup. I like the looks of the place. I've talked to the chemist down there. We can turn out some wonderful products, products the country needs."

Other friends listening to Dale told him he was nuts. "Look," advised one, "it's only been a year or so that you've been earning a thousand bucks a week. Why

Fabulous fashion for '54: Chandelier earrings, tipped with crystal raindrops

DRY underarms have no odor
DRY underarms can't stain

only FRESH has this "Moisture-Shield" formula to keep underarms DRY!

What's the use of looking so enticing ... wearing fashion's new crystal-tipped earrings . . . if your allure is spoiled by underarm moisture.

For sure protection, protection that lasts, trust Fresh Cream Deodorant.

Fresh has a special "Moisture-Shield" formula—up to 180% more effective in astringent action than other leading cream deodorants tested. And it is this astringent action that keeps your underarms dry!

- Trust your loveliest clothes to Fresh.
- It's fluffier! Never sticky or gritty.
- Be lovely to love always—use Fresh every day.

Fresh is also manufactured and distributed in Canada. Fresh is a registered trademark of the Pharma-Craft Corporation

Lewella

FITS YOU

and

YOUR BUDGET
too!

POWER GLIDE

the GIRDLE
that bends and blends with every move!

- Fabulous 2-Way Stretch Power Net
- Embroidered Nylon Marquisette
- Reinforced Front Panel
- 2½" Waist-Nipping Elastic Band
- Featherlight Stay-Put Boning with Snug-Fit Feature
- Girdle For Dress . . . Panty For Sport

About

AVERAGE GIRDLE	$3.00	AVERAGE PANTY	$4.00
LONG GIRDLE	$4.00	LONG PANTY	$5.00

Send for your FREE COPY of "Lewella's Secrets of Figure Loveliness." Give name of store nearest your home.

Lewel Mfg. Co.

149 Madison Ave., New York 16, N. Y.

don't you invest that dough in blue chip stocks? This manufacturing business is too risky."

Robertson had heard that kind of talk before. After World War II when he returned to Oklahoma City and told people he was going to try his hand in Hollywood, they gave him the same routine. Too risky, you'll spend all your money.

Dale drove out to filmland. It was plenty rough before he got his break. "But once I made it," he recalls, "they all became back-slappers. 'Knew you'd make it, boy.'

"Same with this Everlast thing. We're turning out an innertube rubber coating, makes the tires on your car absolutely puncture proof. You squeeze the stuff into your tire tubes. They do it for you at filling stations. Costs $2.50 a tire. An' for ten bucks you've got yourself four puncture-proof tires. It's a good deal.

"We've been selling the compound all over the country. Safety Seal. It's our own secret formula. And we've been in the black since we got under way.

"Funny thing. All these folks telling me I was plumb crazy, now they're coming around. 'Dale boy,' they're saying. 'How about buying in with you? How about selling some stock?' Nothing doing. There's no stock left. I hocked myself to get things going. Now I reckon I'll just sit back a bit and see what goes.

"In this company of mine, we got lots of plans. We propose to turn out a special hand lotion for secretaries. Then we got a face cream. We got big plans but we're moving slow. Maybe I shouldn't say this, but I'm getting as big a kick out of this business as acting in films."

The thirty-year-old Oklahoman explained that acting was pleasant and exciting. He was grateful for the opportunity.

"Only thing about it," he pointed out, "is there ain't no one can tell you how long you gonna last."

When Dale was first signed at 20th Century-Fox some of his fellow employees were Linda Darnell, Anne Baxter, Betty Grable, Joanne Dru, Bill Lundigan, June Haver and Gary Merrill. Today, for one reason or another, they are no longer there.

Early this year when Robertson's contract came up for renewal, it was touch-and-go whether or not his option would be picked up, despite the fact that for the last three years he has been ranked one, two, three in fan mail popularity. He began to look for additional income.

He had met a chemist, an elderly European, who said he had worked out formulae for many salable products. Dale decided to do some careful investigation.

It all seemed very complicated and anyone else might have dropped the whole thing to concentrate on acting.

After all, he did have a good job. He did have to report to the studio and he did have to learn his lines. Could he possibly do two jobs well at the same time?

But then he decided as did others such as Bing Crosby, that every star should have a financial pillow to weather bad times. His friend Betty Grable had her Baby-J ranch with seven race horses, three of which, Big Noise, Laughin' Louie, and James Session, have won more than $150,000 in prize money. What did Dale Robertson have?

"The answer," Dale says, "was nothing. So I decided to get me into something just the way all the smart money men have done. I got me into Everlast Laboratories.

"I brought my brother Chet out from Oklahoma, hired my old buddies, and we went to work." Dale's factory in West Los Angeles is a fairly large plant. It employs twenty-odd people and it is growing.

One of the employees who prefers to remain nameless, says, "I've worked for an awful lot of men in my time, but I've never worked for anyone like Dale Robertson. He's a new breed of boss. You can knock off at three or four in the afternoon. He doesn't care just so long as the work is done.

"He wants you to get that work done, and if you can do your job in three or four hours that's fine with him. You'll do anything for a boss like that. He's a regular guy. I'm telling you Mr. Robertson is going to be a big success in business. He's a man of his word. When he tells you something, that's it.

"He himself keeps strange hours. Comes in ten or ten-thirty; sometimes doesn't come in at all when he's working in a movie. But the work gets done.

"He's got a big office with all the trimmings but I've never seen him wear a tie yet. First president of a company I've seen without a tie. Doesn't mind working with his hands either. He's loaded the truck. He's run the canning machinery. He's done everything."

How does Dale's wife, Jacqueline, feel about her husband's business venture? The Robertsons still live in a $52-per-month G.I. tract house.

Her friends say that Jackie deserves better. "After all, she was accustomed to a much better standard of living as a single girl. Her father is Sering Dunham Wilson, of the social Philadelphia Wilsons and her mother is Fairy Burney, the actress. Jackie was born in Paris, brought up in Princeton, and sent to private schools.

"I wouldn't say that she married beneath her, exactly, but I would say that now that Dale is making some good money, he should have moved his family into a more comfortable home. Instead he takes everything and plunges it into this business. After all, he is making a thousand dollars a week. If he were my husband, I'd demand a higher scale of living."

But Jackie Robertson is not the sort of wife who makes demands.

Her faith in Dale is limitless. He is not an easy man to live with; he tends to be moody, opinionated, and a little spoiled. But Jackie is very much in love with him, and now that she understands what makes him tick, they have made a satisfactory marital adjustment.

Dale Robertson does not come out of the mould that usually makes an actor. He is no self-centered exhibitionist. He is a man who loves the outdoors and a great deal of action. He likes to work with his hands as well as with his mind. He knows his first responsibility is his family.

He likes being an actor but he dreads being a "has-been" actor at forty.

When Rochelle grows up and people ask what her dad does for a living, Dale doesn't want her to stammer and pause and finally say, "Well, my father used to be a movie star."

He'd much rather have her say something about the old man not only having been a great movie star, but also president of Everlast Laboratories.

"Reckon that's why I'm beating out my brains," he explains, "holding down two jobs at once." END

PHOTO CREDITS

Below you will find credited page by page the photographs which appear in this issue.

6, 7, 8, 9, 10—Beerman, Parry; 19—Universal, Beerman, Parry; 28—Parry; 31, 32, 33—Beerman, Parry, 20th Century-Fox; 34—INP; 38—Engstad, Beerman, Parry; 40, 41—INP, Nogueras; 42, 43—Beerman, Parry, Universal; 44, 45—Warner Bros., Beerman, Parry; 46, 47, 48, 49—Beerman, Parry; 50, 51—Beerman, Parry; 52, 53—Beerman, Parry; 54, 55—Globe, Beerman, Parry, Snyder; 56—MGM; 58, 59—Desert Sea News Bureau, Paramount; 60—Beerman, Parry; 67—Arch.

return from nowhere

(Continued from page 44) new actor.' The Selznick studio immediately went into action, giving the youngster a class A (colossal) publicity buildup.

If they weren't prepared for such an overnight sensation, neither was Guy. He had never given acting a thought and knew nothing about it. He had thought he might go into forestry after the war. And here he was, suddenly made a star by public pressure, and soon afterward bumped into a leading role opposite Dorothy Maguire in Till The End Of Time. It was a frightening experience for him, shouldering half the responsibility of a top budget picture along with a star of experience and magnitude. He knew that he was becoming the butt of jokes around town. 'As good as Guy Madison' became a standard gag, and Guy tried to shrug it off. "What am I supposed to do?" he asked. "If they want to give me the work and pay me the money, I'd be crazy to turn it down."

DESPITE his wooden performances his popularity increased, and along with Frank Sinatra and Van Johnson, Guy became the idol of the teen-agers. He had hit the movies at the right moment. Most of Hollywood's actors were away in the service, and those who weren't needed 4-F papers to excuse themselves for being loose. Guy was in the service, and therefore a double-dyed hero. He was exceedingly good looking, and twenty-one, a proper age for the adulation of girls whose lives were so empty of young men.

He was loaned to RKO to make Till The End Of Time following his discharge from the Navy, and then to make Honeymoon with Shirley Temple. Selznick never used him in a picture after his brief appearance in Since You Went Away, but instead cashed in on him as a popular property. Possibly Selznick knew how unprepared Guy was for starring roles and preferred to let other producers take the chance. At any rate, Guy was released in 1947 from his Selznick contract. On his own, he found that the going was not easy. Producers had seen him struggling with his lines and concluded that Guy Madison was, after all, only a flash in the pan.

Guy had mixed emotions about it all. He figured the publicity was still heavy enough to insure future movie roles, but if anything drastic happened, he thought, he could always go into commercial fishing. He hadn't asked to be let in, and now if they wanted to let him out, he could find something else to do. But in his heart he wanted the movies to be his livelihood, and braced with optimism, he married Gail Russell in July, 1949, after a courtship of three years. That the two were deeply in love no one doubted but in April of the following year they had their first spat. There was an argument at a party, after which Gail moved to an apartment and Guy went hunting. "He always goes hunting when he wants to think," she said when they were back together again. The rift lasted only a short time, but it was the first indication that all was not well with their marriage.

At that time, Guy had been a year without work, and shortly afterward Gail asked to be released from her contract with Paramount. Gail never wanted to be an actress, any more than Guy wanted to be an actor. Her sultry beauty had been discovered while she was in high school in nearby Santa Monica, and she had been booted to stardom, much as Guy had. Both of them, but especially Gail, lacked self-confidence. After years of leading roles she left Paramount. It was a Blemishes*: "Noxzema helped my rough, blemished* skin look much smoother, clearer," says Cathy Brown, Toledo, Ohio.

Dry skin: "Noxzema's new routine helps keep my dry skin looking smooth and fresh," says Eleanor Jones, Brooklyn, N.Y.C.

Look lovelier in 10 days with DOCTOR'S HOME FACIAL or your money back!

This new, different beauty care helps skin look fresher, prettier —helps keep it that way, too!

● If you aren't entirely satisfied with your complexion, here's important beauty news! A famous skin doctor worked out a different kind of beauty routine—with a special beauty cream.

Why it's so successful

This new beauty care owes its amazing effectiveness to the unique qualities of Noxzema. This famous greaseless formula is a combination of softening, soothing, and cleansing ingredients offered by no other leading beauty cream. It's medicated—aids healing—helps skin look clean and fresh!

Letters from all over America praise Noxzema's quick help for dry, rough skin; externally-caused blemishes; and for that dull, lifeless, half-clean look of many so-called normal complexions.

Start tonight! Just do this:

1 Cleanse your face by washing with Noxzema and water. Apply Noxzema; wring out a cloth in warm water and wash as if using soap. See how stale make-up and dirt disappear after this 'cream-washing'!

2 Night Cream: Noxzema helps your skin look smoother, fresher, lovelier. Pat a bit extra over any blemishes.* It's medicated to help heal them—fast! It's greaseless, too! No smeary pillow!

3 Make-up base: In the morning, 'cream-wash' again; then smooth on Noxzema as your long-lasting powder base. It helps protect your skin all day!

It works or money back! In clinical tests Noxzema helped 4 out of 5 with skin problems have lovelier-looking skin. If you don't look lovelier in 10 days—return jar to Noxzema, Baltimore—money back!

Look lovelier offer! For a limited time you get the 40¢ size Noxzema only 29¢ plus tax. Get this trial jar, then get the economical 10 oz. size for only 89¢ plus tax at all drug, cosmetic counters.

*externally-caused.

NOXZEMA skin cream

Join the Millions

who listen

in daily . . .

monday

tuesday

wednesday thursday

friday

to 2 popular RADIO PROGRAMS on your ABC network, based on 2 of America's most popular monthly magazines.

"MODERN ROMANCES"

Taken from the pages of Modern Romances . . . intimate, exciting true-to-life dramas of the problems each of us face.

"HOLLYWOOD STARWAY"

From material selected by the editors of Modern Screen . . . dramatizations of the lives of Hollywood's most popular stars.

Check your newspaper for local time and station move that helped their marriage. But Guy wasn't doing well. He did theatre work around the country and made a few pictures for independent producers, notably Red Snow and Drums In The Deep South, but without the backing of a major studio these films were scarcely noticed.

In 1950 a pilot test film was made of Wild Bill Hickok, with Guy in the title role. The series was planned for television, but as is true with every TV program, it took time, and lots of it, to find a sponsor. Because the show might be sold at any time, Guy couldn't make other commitments, and the doldrums made a lean and hungry period of waiting.

Ironically, this was the period during which Guy, for the first time since finding himself within the gates of Hollywood, had confidence in his own ability. During the years of erratic employment he had been working with dramatic coach Eda Edson, who after talking with him two hours gave him his cue. Guy was not an actor, per se, but he had the makings of an excellent performer. And so Miss Edson told him, "To thine own self be true." That was a valuable bit of advice for Mr. Madison. He began to realize that if he felt out of place wearing a tuxedo in real life, he would be unconvincing in a tuxedo on the screen. He learned that if he wanted to be a success in Hollywood or in the theatre, he must seek out roles he could understand, parts in which he could react naturally. It is a method that has paid off handsomely with many of Hollywood's top performers—John Wayne, Gary Cooper, Esther Williams—the list is endless. Guy had his cue, at last, and chafed with impatience for the chance to prove himself to his former critics.

When Gail went home from Paramount to be Mrs. Madison, the budget was taut. Guy's income was sporadic, yet his new confidence gave him the courage to hang on and wait and hope.

Perhaps all would have worked out had it not been for Gail's tragic addiction to drinking. It was a habit brought on from long years of insecurity and a childhood that left much to be desired. Gail was, and still is, one of the best-liked girls in town, and her friends have understood the fact that she was a sick girl much in need of help. Modern medicine has proved that the alcoholic is not to be blamed, but rather the circumstances which have led him to drink. From those who knew her secret there was no censure, but understanding and sympathy for Gail in her battle to conquer the habit. She tried hard, with Guy at her side to do all in his power for her.

This sort of thing is tough on any marriage. With this friction, their incompatabilities began to show more each day, and soon Hollywood was speculating on how long the marriage would last. No one wanted to see it break up, as both Gail and Guy, despite their retiring manners, were liked and respected even in the extrovert town of Hollywood. People knew they were in love, but there was trouble. Their friends were not surprised when they separated a year ago.

In the time that has since passed, they have remained the best of friends. This is a speech worn thin by Hollywood divorcees, but it is true of the Madisons. They have deep feeling for each other, but they cannot make a go of marriage, and have given up trying. The decision wasn't made without a great deal of effort. Only last August Guy said in one of his rare statements to the press: "I admit I am heartsick over our separation, but for various reasons we can't seem to make a go of it. I am still devoted to Gail and anything she needs from me she will always have. I have only appreciation for the wonderful years she made possible. I have no regrets. After all, I'm lucky—I had the chance to experience a strong and honest emotion."

At this writing there is no legal separation but chances are that Guy and Gail will make the situation legal, either by separation or divorce. Whatever happens, there will always be a bond between them, and Guy's continued support of Gail, acting still as a pillar of strength to bolster her extreme insecurity, is one of Hollywood's most admirable stories. Whatever happens, both of them have the respect and good wishes of the whole town.

By the time the Madisons had separated Guy had become known once more to the public, this time through his TV role of Wild Bill Hickok. It had been rolling for a year, and Guy in buckskin was a familiar sight to the kids of America. Many of their mothers, seeing him ride across the screen in their living rooms, remembered the days when they too had been fans, and felt a renewed interest.

The Hickok role brought him his chance for a movie comeback. During the first

We Can't Tell A Lie

Honest, we can't. Not with Washington's birthday staring us in the face. So when we tell you that a subscription to Modern Screen means a saving in cold cash for you—we are definitely not fibbing. There will be forty extra pennies in your piggy bank if you subscribe, and besides that—yep, there's more—you will receive your copy promptly every month with nary a walk to the newsstand for it. Sounds too good to be true? Just try us and see. All you have to do is fill out the coupon below and mail it to us with your remittance. We'll take care of the rest because as we said (cross our honest little hearts) we can't prevaricate!

SUBSCRIPTION IN THE USA FOR ONE YEAR $2.00; TWO YEARS $3.50. IN CANADA, ONE YEAR $2.00; TWO YEARS $4.00. FOREIGN SUBSCRIPTIONS $3.00 A YEAR. PLEASE SEND CHECKS OR MONEY ORDERS ONLY.

MODERN SCREEN Subscription Department, 10 West 33rd Street, New York 1, N. Y.

NAME________________________________

ADDRESS________________________________

ZONE________ STATE____________ CITY________________

2/4

9 OUT OF 10 LEADING COVER GIRLS PREFER

SWEETHEART SOAP

"It's More Luxuriant Lather KEEPS ME FRESH ALL DAY"

lovely cover girl
CATHY MONAHAN

"Beauty is my business," says Cathy Monahan, "and SweetHeart is my beauty soap. SweetHeart's more luxuriant lather, so rich and fragrant, keeps me fresh all day—even when I work long hours under hot studio lights. And best of all, SweetHeart Care leaves my skin baby-soft and smooth."

Change to regular care with pure, mild SweetHeart! In just 7 days, see how much softer, smoother, younger your complexion looks!

SWEETHEART The Soap that AGREES with Your Skin

flaring of 3-D fever, Warner Brothers studio planned a batch of these films and one of them, to be called Charge At Feather River, was hurriedly prepared for production. The stumbling block was the casting of the leading man. Gary Cooper, John Wayne and many of the screen's outdoor men had been approached but none of them could take the role because of other commitments. Only one week before start of production Warner executive Steve Trilling mentioned the problem at home. His eleven-year-old daughter said, "Why don't you get Wild Bill Hickok?" Trilling took his child's suggestion, and Guy was brought to the studio.

His performance in Charge At Feather River surprised everyone, not the least of whom was director Gordon Douglas, whose serious reservation about Guy changed to astonishment. After working with him a few days, Douglas saw to it that the script was strengthened to give full play to Guy's surprising new ease before the cameras. Television experience had made movie work much easier for him, and he stuck to his cue from Eda Edson and acted like Guy Madison would act. It was important, too, that Guy's new job came only two weeks after his split with Gail. To erase his unhappiness he dedicated himself to doing the best job possible, and as a result the press did nip-ups of surprise the night the picture was previewed. As one young fan put it in a letter to Guy, "I have seen all your TV shows plus Charge At Feather River. My big sister said she didn't think you could make love until she saw you in that movie. Now she says gee."

Guy's appealing love scenes were only a small part of his charm for his new-found public. They discovered another quality—the lithe, panther-like way he moves. Director Douglas told him, "You give the most beautiful action since Tom Mix," and director David Butler has nicknamed him "The Cat." Women were quick to notice this agility, and the fan letters once more poured in for Guy, this time more than 3000 a week.

His appeal stems from the fact that he is a man's man, and therefore a woman's man, too. He is quiet, not in the shy way of ten years ago, but in the way of a lone wolf. He is the kind of man who gets along more easily with children and animals than people his own age, and greatly prefers conversation with a man to that with a woman. Still ill at ease among strangers, he doesn't talk much when he's with a crowd. Some say Guy wishes he could unbend, but he doesn't know how. He has been known to be closely associated with people for more than two years before they feel they have broken through one small part of the wall that surrounds him.

Without knowing what he is thinking or what makes him tick, they do know he is generous, thoughtful and sincere. He is completely unaffected, deeply sensitive, and has a horror of hurting people's feelings, though he hides the sensitivity and shies away from obvious sentiment.

His thoughtfulness is shown by his refusal to help his brother break into movies. "There are too many people out of work in town," he told Wayne. "If I went in and pitched for you it would only create resentment." Instead, Guy invited his brother to visit him at the studio, and when his directors saw Wayne they put him to work as Chad Mallory.

GUY THINKS nothing of appearance for appearance's sake. He drives a pick-up truck "because it's useful for hunting, and for the rest of the time it takes me where I want to go." He has been criticized for wearing his cowboy clothes around town. "Guy Madison is taking the Wild Bill Hickok thing too seriously," was a typical comment. The reason was that Guy had no other clothes. One afternoon he kept an appointment at a swank restaurant with Louella Parsons. He had come directly from work, wearing a dress cowboy outfit, and somebody said they wished he had taken time to go home and change into street clothes. "I wish I could," said Guy, "but I don't have a suit. I've been too busy to grab time to buy one."

He pals with men who also shun the elegant life of Hollywood—Rory Calhoun, Andy Devine and Howard Hill—with whom Guy often goes hunting with bow and arrow. It remains his chief interest in life, besides his work, and because of these two things Guy is seldom home. He lives in a small Westwood apartment which is sparsely furnished. The living room contains only a television set and his archery equipment. He sleeps and showers at home, and sits on the floor to watch television. He eats at the homes of friends or in restaurants and doesn't even make coffee in his kitchen.

He has a new respect for money—"A couple of bad years taught me"—and his way of living allows for a nest egg which he hopes to apply some day to the purchase of a ranch up near Marysville. "Some people spend money on Cadillacs," he says, "but I probably put just as much into hunting. It's more important to me."

Last November he went on a month's hunting trip in Idaho, packing in twenty miles up in the mountains, and except for eight free days in the previous six months, this was his only time off. Guy devotes himself to his work and allows little time for living. Now that he is so earnest about acting, he is showing a surprising understanding of plot, script and dialogue. After reading the script for The Command, his

Ann Pinkham reports*

"Painful cramps of monthly periods stopped

OR AMAZINGLY RELIEVED

in 3 out of 4 cases in doctors' tests!"

"IT'S WONDERFUL news," says Ann Pinkham, "for women and girls who suffer from those functionally-caused cramps, backaches, headaches and 'no-good' feelings of menstruation . . . who feel upset and irritable on certain particular days. In doctors' tests, Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound or Tablets gave complete or striking relief of such distress in 3 out of 4 cases, even on first day of period!"

Yes! Lydia Pinkham's is thoroughly modern in action . . . exerts a calming effect on the uterus without the use of pain-deadening drugs. Its effectiveness is known to millions.

Take Lydia Pinkham's regularly . . . and see if you don't avoid the feelings of tension and weakness that precede your period . . . as well as the cramps and pain of "those days."

Get either the liquid Compound . . . or the new, improved Tablets with added iron — so convenient to carry and easy to take.

25¢ Ann Pinkham Booklet . . . FREE!

Easily worth $1! New booklet (illustrated in color —over 5000 words) tells all about menstruation—answers questions authoritatively, simply. Explains mysteries of female system. Tells what to expect in change of life. For free copy write ANN PINKHAM, 821 Cleveland St., Lynn, Mass. Mailed in plain envelope. Not for children. Offer closes June 11, 1954.

Ann Pinkham, modern-day voice of Lydia Pinkham.*

WANT TO BE A PRACTICAL NURSE? EASY TO TRAIN AT HOME

ACT NOW—HELP FILL THE NEED

Now you can prepare for practical experience as a Trained Practical Nurse in spare time. Many earn while learning. Ages 18 to 55. High school not necessary. Easy payments. Write for free information and sample lesson pages.

WAYNE SCHOOL OF PRACTICAL NURSING, INC.
2525 Sheffield Ave., Desk K-89, Chicago 14, Ill.

★ WRITE SONGS FOR HOBBY OR PROFIT

Your words examined free. Write today.
PHONOGRAPH RECORDS MADE
FIVE STAR MUSIC MASTERS, 205 BEACON BLDG., BOSTON, MASS.

HOME SEWERS

Make good money—75c hour possible. We furnish everything.

FILMLAND NECKWEAR
Buena Park 15, Calif.

SHEETS, TOASTERS, TOWELS, MIXERS, etc. GIVEN TO YOU FREE!

Hundreds of famous, nationally advertised products to choose from—furniture, rugs, lamps, slip covers, silverware, china, draperies. You get $50.00 — $100.00 and more in merchandise just by being Secretary of a Popular Club you help your friends form. It's easy! It's fun! Nothing to sell, nothing to buy. Write today.

Send for Big FREE FULL-COLOR Catalog

Popular Club Plan, Dept. B-795, Lynbrook, N.Y.
Name..
Address.......................................
City.............................State..........

second film for Warners, he wrote producer David Weisbart a letter which began, "It's been my experience that to come across believably I have to be able to believe that I, personally, could act and react the same way as the character I am playing." He followed with ten suggestions, including long scenes full of dialogue. The studio considered his changes valuable enough to be incorporated into the script.

"I'm not inclined to try sophisticated roles," he says now. "Before, I went too far too fast and had roles beyond my capacity with the result that my work wasn't up to my publicity. I don't go for false publicity. I think it should be angled according to what you're trying to accomplish.

"From now on I'm going to concentrate on Wild Bill Hickok on the radio and TV, plus the movies for Warners, and I'm free to produce one picture a year on my own."

This is a long statement for Guy Madison, but it neatly summarizes his plans. It shows a man who is devoted to his work, certainly through deep interest and careful training and possibly because of heartbreak. The last five years have been full of pain for both Guy and Gail, but out of it all each has found some happiness. Gail is doing what she has always wanted to do; she is using her remarkable artistic talent to illustrate a book. And Guy has come into his own as a performer who, from the look of things, is here to stay, this time. END

---

still slugging

(Continued from page 38) away but he caught her outside at the edge of the swimming pool and lashed out with a short left jab to the cheek.

Her screams of "No, Jess, no!" and "Somebody, please help me!" aroused the neighborhood. The neighbors called the police. By the time they arrived, Susan's eye had begun to turn black and blue. She looked like a battered passenger emerging from a wrecked car.

Now there are some wives who don't mind an occasional beating. They absorb the punishment as a manifestation of their husband's love. Susan is not this type.

She called her lawyer, Martin Gang.

"This is the end," she wailed, "the end, Martin. He almost killed me. I want you to file for a divorce as soon as possible."

Like all good lawyers, Martin Gang tried to discourage a divorce. Before this, he had recommended that the Barkers consult Dr. Maurice Karpf, a marriage counselor in Beverly Hills.

Susan and Jess had gone to see Dr. Karpf rather regularly. Their problem was a simple one; for Hollywood, an ordinary one. The wife was the breadwinner, and an uncommonly successful one. She was earning $250,000 a year while her husband was earning $500.

This situation would hurt any man's vanity. Jess' ego was suffering badly. While Susan was at work in the studio, he was staying at home and taking care of the children.

In short, their marital positions were reversed. Jess was playing the mother and housekeeper and Susan was playing the dominant wage-earner.

The solution, of course, was for Jess to take any kind of a job that would restore his self-respect and Susan's.

But that brings up the other problem of pride. When Susan and Jess were married they were equally successful movie actors. Although Susan has far outstripped him, professionally, Jess is still an actor.

At thirty-nine, he thinks he is too old to canvass new employment fields. He has no second profession and of course he would have a difficult time finding a job in a field in which he has no training.

Gradually, he began missing his appointments with Dr. Karpf. Then came the fist fight with Susan.

In living with Jess Barker for almost ten years, Susan Hayward was deceiving herself. She must have known that she didn't love her slender, handsome husband.

Susan might have divorced Barker after a short marriage, but the twins came along in the first year and she decided to make the best of what she already considered a mistake. She hoped that things would improve. Instead they got worse.

By 1947 she had decided that life with Jess was impossible. She went to see her attorney, then Kenneth Chantry, and divorce papers were filed. Chantry suggested that Jess and Susan talk things over with Dr. Paul Popenoe, the Institute of Marital Relations counselor.

This advice prevented a divorce but never reached the heart of the Barkers' marital problem, possibly because Susan failed to tell the whole story of their marriage.

Anyway, as Susan's marriage disintegrated, her career reached new heights. In 1947 she was nominated for an Academy Award on the basis of her performance as an alcoholic in Smashup. She has always been single-minded about her career and as she achieved more and more prominence, she didn't have much time to worry about her domestic difficulties.

Once those difficulties deteriorated into fist fights, Susan decided that she could not stay with her husband any longer. She filed for divorce, claiming that there was no community property and that Jess was entitled only to visitation rights.

Jess' lawyer, Sam Hahn, countered, "My client is not interested in a divorce. He is thinking of his children. He wants to preserve his marriage. Miss Hayward has no cause for divorce. We want this case to be heard by the conciliation commissioner."

You all know what happened then. Susan agreed to go to the Conciliation Court with Barker but she was adamant about giving up any idea of divorce.

"I just want to be free of him," she said. "There is absolutely no chance of reconciliation. I simply do not love him."

She asked the court for an order forbidding Jess to go near her property or bother her. She also agreed that he might have the two boys every weekend.

After putting her mother in charge of the twins and the house, she flew down to Mexico to star in Garden Of Evil.

A few days later, in violation of the court's restraining order, Jess Barker moved back into the house.

According to Mrs. Cleo Miller, the housekeeper, Barker said, "I'm back and I want you to start cooking for me as well as for the boys. Do you understand that?" He demanded to see his sons.

"It's past their bedtime," Cleo told Barker.

"Don't you worry about that," the actor allegedly announced. "I'm the boss."

Barker picked his boys up at the Buckley School one afternoon and didn't bring them home that night. Aggravated and agitated, Mrs. Marrener, Susan's mother, called the lawyers.

Immediately, they filed a show cause order asking that Barker be cited for contempt of court and punished for violating the previous restraining order. It looked as though Jess Barker might go to jail.

Jess explained his violation of the restraining order. "I returned home because I learned that my son Timothy was sick. When I dropped by to see how he was feeling, I found that the person left in charge of the house was not in and the children were not under proper supervision.

"My wife's mother wasn't on the premises when I arrived and she hadn't been at the house for two days.

"I am as fully concerned about my children as any normal and right-thinking parent would be. And I think any parent has a perfect right to be with his children —especially since the other parent is in a foreign country."

Susan was in Mexico unaware of the goings on at home. Her mother and her housekeeper were ordered to appear at the California Superior Court in Burbank for a new battle against Jess Barker.

When Barker, nattily dressed in a brown glen plaid suit, yellow shirt and brown tie and carrying a thick red-bound law book under his arm, showed up in the court lobby with his lawyer, Susan's lawyer engaged them in out-of-court conversation.

"Now, look," he said, addressing himself to Barker's counsel, "you promised the last time that your client would not occupy Miss Hayward's premises. You said he'd stay away. As soon as my client left town, Mr. Barker was back.

"We don't want to get tough, Sam. We don't want to ask the judge to throw Mr. Barker in the jug, but please understand this, Miss Hayward is afraid of her husband. She's afraid that he's going to beat her up. That's why we got a restraining order. We don't want him around."

"We understand that very well," Sam Hahn said. "But there are extenuating circumstances in this case. My client learned that his son was sick. This was an emergency. As an emergency move he went back into the house. He wanted to make sure that his son was taken care of.

"The mother-in-law was supposed to look after the boys. But where was the mother-in-law? Don't forget that Miss Hayward is in Mexico and that these boys are entitled to some parental love and attention."

Susan's lawyer said he realized all that but Barker had been granted visitation rights. Moreover he had the boys every weekend and could take them wherever he liked in California.

"I know," he went on, "that Mr. Barker hasn't been getting on with his mother-in-law, but I don't want to get into that angle of the case. All I can say is that she was in the house when he was there. Mr. Barker wouldn't even let the boys talk to their grandmother. All he would let them say was 'Goodnight, Grandma,' and then they were shooed off to bed.

"I'll tell you what, Sam. We are willing to drop contempt proceedings against Mr. Barker this time, but I'm going to ask for a new restraining order keeping him away from the property and making it mandatory that he obey the temporary custody agreement. We'll drop contempt proceedings, providing you agree as his agent to accept subpoena for any of his violations."

"It's a deal," Sam Hahn said. And then the principals in the case filed into the court room.

Susan's mother, Mrs. Kate Marrener, sat in the front row.

"I just wish," she muttered to a reporter, "that they'd give me a chance to testify. Boy, I could tell them some things. Tried to kill her. Yes, kill her. That's what he did."

"Really wasn't that bad," a reporter said, "was it?"

"Just shows what you know, young man," Mrs. Marrener sniffed. "Fell into a tub of butter. That's what he did. Never had it so easy in his life. My girl going to work every day while he hung around the house. Unnatural, that's what it was.

"Who'd believe I was ever embarrassed by PIMPLES!"

New! Clearasil Medication

'STARVES' PIMPLES

SKIN-COLORED

HIDES PIMPLES WHILE IT WORKS

Doctors' clinical tests prove this new medication especially for pimples really works. In skin specialists' tests on 202 patients, 9 out of every 10 cases were cleared up or definitely improved.

Amazing starving action. CLEARASIL actually starves pimples because it helps remove the oils that pimples "feed" on. And CLEARASIL's antiseptic action stops the growth of bacteria that can cause and spread pimples. Skin-colored to hide pimples and end embarrassment. Greaseless, stainless...pleasant to leave on day and night for uninterrupted medication.

America's largest-selling specific pimple medication...because CLEARASIL has helped so many boys, girls and adults. GUARANTEED to work for you as it did in doctor's tests or money back. 59¢ and 98¢. At all druggists. Get CLEARASIL today. (Available in Canada, slightly more.)

DE LUXE Type for Framing

FREE! FREE!

Photo of Your Favorite

MOVIE STAR

Big Bargain . . . NOT small pocket size, but LARGE, ACTUAL PORTRAIT. Also FREE Beautiful Catalog. FREE! Many additional pictures of popular stars on cover. FREE! Tells how to get HOME ADDRESSES, BIRTHDAYS and PHOTOS of STARS' HOMES. Send only 15c for handling. 2 photos for 25c. Rush to:

HOLLYWOOD FILM STAR CENTER
Box 2309, Dept. L-3, Hollywood 28, Calif.

Amazing New STAR-BRITE

SHINES SILVER AT A TOUCH
PAYS YOU TO SHOW IT TO FRIENDS

Show the unusual . . . make big extra income spare time. Sensational selling Star-Brite banishes rubbing—shines silver instantly, safely, automatically in dishwater! Many other unique, new money-makers. Profits to 100%. Big value Greeting Card Assortments, Secret Pal, Name-in-Skirt Notes, Stationery. No experience needed. Samples on approval. Write TODAY.

GET SAMPLES ON APPROVAL

Midwest Card Co., 1113 Washington Ave., Dept. C-17, St. Louis 1, Mo.

Shrinks Hemorrhoids New Way Without Surgery

Science Finds Healing Substance That Relieves Pain—Shrinks Hemorrhoids

For the first time science has found a new healing substance with the astonishing ability to shrink hemorrhoids and to stop bleeding—without surgery.

In case after case, pain was relieved promptly. And, while gently relieving pain, actual reduction (shrinkage) took place.

Most amazing of all—results were so thorough that sufferers made astonishing statements like "Piles have ceased to be a problem!"

The secret is a new healing substance (Bio-Dyne®) — discovery of a world-famous research institute.

Now this new healing substance is offered in ointment form under the name of *Preparation H. Ask for it at all drug stores—money back guarantee. *Trade Mark

SHORTHAND IN 6 WEEKS

Age no obstacle—LOWEST COST
Write 120 words per minute—

Famous Speedwriting Shorthand. No symbols; no machines. Uses ABC's. Easiest to learn and use. Fast preparation for a better position and a sound, substantial future.

Nationally used in leading offices and Civil Service; also by executives, students, etc. 120 words per minute—50% FASTER than Civil Service requirements. Over 200,000 taught by mail. The very low cost will surprise you. Typing available. 31st Year. Schools in over 400 cities in U. S., Canada, Cuba and Hawaii.

Write for FREE Booklet to:

Wins Interesting Position With Well-Known School

"Speedwriting rescued me from the tedium and long hours of the selling jobs that I had before taking the course. I now have a wonderful and interesting job as secretary to the President of a well-known school."—Melva Front, 182 E. 93rd St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Speedwriting®

Dept. 803-4, 55 W. 42nd St., N.Y. 36

And those poor little boys. All mixed up. The Lord knows what ideas he puts into their head.

"He's spent so much time with the boys. He's been mother and father to them. Of course they love him. I came home. The boys were gone. Didn't know where he'd taken them. He'd picked them up at school. I was worried sick. I called the lawyers right away.

"I hope my daughter doesn't hear of this. Think she'd hear down there in Mexico? My poor girl. What a life she's had! Lord knows how long this has been going on, his beating her. Too proud. Too much pride. That's the trouble with her. Tried to keep everything to herself. Should've left him years ago, years ago."

Roy L. Herndon, the presiding judge, entered the courtroom and looked at the calendar. The case of "Barker versus Barker" was called.

Both attorneys stood up and asked the judge for a private conference in his chambers. Jess Barker went with them. After fifteen minutes, they returned to the courtroom.

Barker was given a seat at a desk next to the judge and told to listen carefully.

"Your Honor," began Milton A. Rudin, speaking on behalf of Susan Hayward, "we are prepared to drop contempt proceedings against Mr. Barker at this time, pending two stipulations. We want him to stay away from the premises at all times except when he is calling for his two sons.

"We have agreed, Your Honor, that Mr. Barker is entitled to have custody of his boys from Saturday at ten A.M. until Sunday at six P.M. until such time as a definite custody ruling is made.

"With reference to the Christmas holidays, we agree that Mr. Barker is entitled to pick up the children when the holiday commences on December 18. He is to keep them until ten A.M. Christmas Day. Their mother is flying up from Mexico where she is currently employed on a picture, especially to spend Christmas Day with them. She is to have them until December 27, after which Mr. Barker is to pick them up again and return them when school begins, which I believe is January 4, Your Honor."

The judge turned toward Barker.

"You understand you are restrained and enjoined from occupying the premises?"

"Yes, Your Honor, but I've got my clothes there. I'd like permission to go back there and get them."

At this moment, Mrs. Marrener jumped up and whispered something to Rudin.

"I've been told, Your Honor," Rudin interrupted, "that Mr. Barker's clothes are no longer at the residence. They've been packed and moved to Bekin's Warehouse."

In a second, Barker's little lawyer, Sammy Hahn, was on his feet.

"See, Your Honor," he shouted. "It's the mother-in-law's fault. Right away as soon as my client's back is turned—gone! The clothes are gone. This is pretty unfair, Your Honor. My client is a professional man, needs his clothes. She has no right to move them out. A man's house is his castle. My client is a professional. You see what I mean, Your Honor? This trouble with relatives. Right away the mother-in-law. Who asked her to send his clothes out?"

Opposing counsel grew angry. "Your Honor," he said, "we're not arguing a custody case here. Neither is Miss Hayward's mother on trial. We entered into an agreement with Mr. Hahn to drop contempt proceedings against his client who was definitely violating an existing restraining order. Now, all of a sudden he wants to try my client's mother."

The judge agreed with Susan Hayward's lawyer. "Eventually," he said, "the conduct of relatives will be considered by the court in granting custody of the children. But right now, Mr. Barker, I want to impress upon you the importance of giving complete obedience to the pending court order. You are not to occupy Miss Hayward's premises and you are to have visitation rights with the children only as previously stipulated. This Court will view any violation or breach of that order as a very serious matter and will take suitable action. I want to impress that upon you. Is it understood?"

"Yes, Your Honor," Barker said, "I understand."

"But how about his clothes?" Barker's attorney asked. "How does he get his clothes?"

"After this case is over," Rudin said, "I'll go to the warehouse with Mr. Barker or have someone go with him and see that he gets his clothes. I realize, Mr. Hahn, that he's a professional man."

Jess Barker got his clothes and custody of his twins during the Christmas holidays, and when Susan Hayward found out what had happened during her absence, she saw it as another manifestation of her husband's antagonism.

Unfortunately, the divorce trial is going to be ugly. Susan refuses to give her husband one cent of their community property which comes to about $350,000.

Susan maintains that she made Barker sign a waiver to all his community property rights before they were married. In a deposition given to Miss Hayward's lawyers, Barker says that perhaps he did sign such a document, but he signed it without reading it and without benefit of counsel.

The question arises as to what sort of woman, in love and about to be married, would expect her fiancé to sign such a document.

The Hayward-Barker marriage, according to one friend of the family, "was a mistake to begin with. Susan has paid for that mistake in pain and heartache. Now, she doesn't want to pay for it in money."

The battle rages on. No matter who gets what, the twin boys of this marriage will wind up the losers. In this kind of struggle, it is the innocent children who suffer, always. END

THE ONE THAT GOT AWAY

For Jean and Bob, loan-out oft loses both itself and role.

Jean Simmons lost Roman Holiday role to Audrey Hepburn.

Bob Mitchum lost role in From Here To Eternity to Burt Lancaster.

■ Two of the most coveted roles of 1953 were Burt Lancaster's role in From Here To Eternity and Audrey Hepburn's part in Roman Holiday.

These two roles were originally scheduled for Robert Mitchum and Jean Simmons.

Mitchum was sent the script of Eternity and was so excited about the part offered him that for two months "I tried to get RKO to loan me out. I called the man in charge of those things every single day for sixty days. I never could get him. I even went to Las Vegas looking for him. No soap. After weeks of waiting for me, Columbia gave up and signed Burt Lancaster. Burt did a bang-up job, just great."

Jean Simmons has a similar story to tell. She was offered the lead in Roman Holiday opposite Gregory Peck. The start of the picture was even delayed for her. She was doing nothing at the time, and she begged her own studio to loan her out.

"Sorry," they said, "we have something big coming up for you." It never came, and Audrey Hepburn was signed for the role of the princess.

When the film was released, Jean went to see it, living every moment of it, so well did she know the script. When the screening was over she drove home with her husband, Stewart Granger, and telephoned Audrey Hepburn.

"For weeks," she confessed, "I've wanted to hate you, Audrey. But I couldn't. I've just seen you in the picture, darling, and you were wonderful. I'm glad you got it."

Gives your hair that "cared for" look...
WITHOUT OILY AFTER-FILM

(Suddenly things begin to happen!)

No other hairdressing leaves hair so natural looking...

(You look prettier than you have in months!)

See! Beauty is catching! And no other hairdressing adds so much sheer beauty to your hair! For only SUAVE contains amazing non-greasy Curtisol*. . . relieves dryness, frizz, split ends. It's romantically good for your hair! Keeps it in place, lovely to behold all day long!

HELENE CURTIS
Suave*

the HAIRDRESSING women prefer 7 to 1

50¢-$1
(plus tax)

Gives your hair healthy-looking glow ...relieves dryness lowdown on hollywood women

(Continued from page 32) this country, and he asked, "What is a Lana Turner?" It sounded like a gag and it made the newspapers. But it really wasn't so funny. And what's more, it isn't easy to answer.

If I really intended to expose Hollywood females for Modern Screen, I'd have to explain that a long time ago I was well acquainted with Lana's best friend Zelma, who worked in the studio publicity department. Zelma lived only a few doors from Schwab's drugstore, my real home. And it happened that I had a friend in Zelma's apartment house who shared her telephone party line. It was only natural that while visiting my friend I'd pick up the telephone and find myself in the middle of Zelma's conversations with Lana. Normally, I'm not the sneaky type, but a sort of paralysis would set in, and I couldn't put the telephone receiver down. That's how I happened to learn that Lana was rather fond of a young attorney by the name of Greg Bautzer—and that her mother wasn't. And I got all the news about Judy Garland and the other MGM kiddies they talked about.

So I could tell you what a Lana Turner is. She is a good kid, for one thing. I've seen her pick up the tab often when she was on a date back in the good old days at Sugie's Tropics restaurant. Frequently, her escorts couldn't afford to. I've watched and listened in on her romances with not only Mr. Bautzer, but with Artie Shaw and a few others. Off the record, let me tell you about Lana, Chuck, but don't you go printing it. In her romances, Lana has always been the aggressor, even with that Tarzan fellow who is her husband. When Lana decides she wants a man, she goes out and gets him. One night Lana defended her method, saying, "Ever since Eve chased Adam with an apple, women have pursued men—in a way to make men pursue them." This may be true, but to Lana's misery it generally happened that her pursuit of a man either made him too sure of her or frightened him away, leaving Lana without the love and affection she sought.

Just between us, the majority of Hollywood females suffer from a common malady—the most beautiful of them and the most glamorous became actresses because they wanted to be loved. Maybe if you printed that they'd be offended, but it's the truth.

Marilyn Monroe admits it. She told me only recently that she realized the basic reason she became an actress was she was seeking a love she never got from her parents. "I didn't go into movies," Marilyn explained, "to make money. I wanted to become famous so that everyone would like me, and I'd be surrounded with love and affection."

It takes a mighty bright girl to discover a fact like this about herself. On the other hand, dozens of actresses go to psychiatrists to learn that their unhappiness stems from their struggle to find approval in some form—the love of family or the admiration of friends. They learn that their lives are lonely because they depend on applause and the love of an audience to feed their emotional appetites which are hangovers from childhood.

That's why when anyone says an actress is like the girl next door, I want to laugh. No matter how hard they might try to be ordinary, actresses are different. This was brought out in the movie, All About Eve. One of the characters had a speech which went something like this: "Once in a while somebody writes an article saying that actors and actresses are just like other people. We're not. It's because we're not that we are actors and actresses."

See what I got into with this little letter trying to explain why I can't do a piece for Modern Screen exposing the Hollywood female? First thing I know you'll be calling me Sigmund Skolsky. Little did I think I'd ever be discussing females in this manner. I like to be with them and prefer their company to that of males.

Besides, most actresses are good talkers. Sometimes, though, I manage to get my word in with these gals. Like the time I told Ava Gardner not to worry, she'd be a big movie star. A fellow wouldn't have had to be very bright to predict this, but in Hollywood such a forecast will make you a genius and get you a friend for life.

I gave Ava this pearl of wisdom while she was a nobody divorcing Mickey Rooney. Ava lived over on Fountain Avenue, also close by my residence at Schwab's drugstore, with her friend, Peggy Maley. Now, there's a character! Peggy is the blonde, you remember, who made the front pages a few years ago when she toured Buckingham Palace and stepped out of line to have herself photographed sitting on the throne. Peggy is featured in Marlon Brando's new film The Wild One and could provide plenty of copy.

Well, Ava had a stock contract at MGM at the time and was actually afraid that the studio would keep her only so another studio wouldn't cash in on the Mickey Rooney name. She was a scared chick. I used to go over to her place, sit on the floor and play gin rummy until the early hours of the morning. I'd listen to her, look at her and blitz her.

More people eat more CHEEZ-IT than any other CHEESE CRACKER

GOOD any old time!

JANE POWELL

FREE PHOTO
LARGE SIZE of your favorite star
Actual HIGH GLOSS PHOTO suitable for framing
FREE!! MOVIE STAR CATALOG listing thousands of poses and containing 55 ADDITIONAL PICTURES of popular stars.
FREE!! A list giving BIRTHDAYS OF STARS. Send name of your favorite star and only 15 cents to cover handling charge.
MORTON STUDIOS, P.O. Box 2430
Dept. MS-3, Hollywood 28, Calif.

NEW TOWELS
LARGE SIZE! Assorted Colors. New! Not seconds. Money-back guarantee. Order Now! Supply limited.
12 for $1.00
TOWEL SHOP, Dept. 176, Box 881, St. Louis 1, Mo.

SEW FOR CASH
Use our patterns, materials, directions in your own home, full or part time. We buy from you.
Tie of the Month Club
216 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago (7), Ill.

HANDS TIED?
—because you lack a
HIGH SCHOOL DIPLOMA
- You can qualify for an American School Diploma in spare time at home! If you have left school, write or mail coupon for FREE booklet that tells how. No obligation of any kind.

OUR 57TH YEAR
AMERICAN SCHOOL, Dept. V-314,
Drexel at 58th, Chicago 37, Illinois
Please send FREE High School booklet.
NAME..
ADDRESS.......................................
CITY & STATE..................................

Ava has much in common with Lana. They're very buddy-buddy. Their taste in men is often alike, and they both go after what they want when shopping for emotional response in men. The difference is that after Ava makes her conquest, that's it until the roof falls in. The fun for her is in the chase, after which she becomes almost a peasant-type, one-man woman, and puts up with an almost endless amount of grief before she will admit the failure of a romance or a marriage.

Lana and Ava are both ex-wives of Artie Shaw. As if this didn't give them enough in common, Lana, you recall, went with Frank Sinatra for about a verse and two choruses. Ava's marriage to Artie Shaw was a real jam session. Artie was always urging her to read a book, smarten up. Then, late one afternoon, Artie returned to their apartment and found Ava proudly curled up with a real book, Forever Amber. Artie grabbed it from her, hurled it across the room and shouted, "How can you read such junk?"

Artie's next wife was Kathleen Winsor, the author of Forever Amber. A few years later, Ava told me that the incident, coupled with Artie's marriage, helped her to regain her composure after the shattering effect of their divorce.

Of course Ava went right on to stardom, which makes me a great man with a crystal ball. She had some other romances, climaxed by her marriage to Frankie Sinatra. You'll have to admit, Chuck, that in her latest breakup with Frankie she has conducted herself in a fashion that approaches real dignity and maturity.

It happens that I was present and a participant, so to speak, with Adlai Stevenson in the first makeup after the first breakup of the Sinatra-Gardner marriage. Ava adores Stevenson's blue eyes and wouldn't stay away from the big political rally, even though she knew Frankie, who was campaigning for Adlai, would be there. Ava gave me the story. I was there when she kissed and made up with Frankie. She also kissed me, and I want to tell you that no actress in Hollywood kisses as hard as Ava. It has the impact of a truck backing into you, and with her, non-smear lipstick smears.

As editor of Modern Screen, Chuck, you have been around actresses for a long time, too, but you aren't on hand every day to watch them struggle. Statistics and even honest stories in your magazine can't record the real sweat and tears the effort to stay on top takes from these girls with the angel faces.

How many times have I heard a young unknown actress say she should play the leading role in a current best-selling novel? "I'm the girl!" she declares, and she probably is right. "The author had me in mind when he wrote it." She sincerely believes this, aware of the fact that you know she has never met the author.

I've sat in theatres and watched movies with many struggling actresses and heard them wish they were up there on the screen in the role. When Shelley Winters was a nobody I went to a movie with her. She suddenly pinched me and exclaimed indignantly, "I belong up there! I can play that part better than she does. But nobody will give me a chance!"

That was true at the time, but I knew nothing could stop Shelley. It would be easier to stop Niagara Falls. There is no possible way to halt the drive, determination and singleness of purpose in a Shelley Winters. Sadly, too, there is nothing to be done about the unhappy private lives of these sexy volcanoes while they are in the midst of their struggles. They know what they want and go after it, while at the same time their inner beings struggle desperately to stay normal. Observing these battles, you have a feeling that you should run for the hills. A lot of men don't, and they get hurt.

No matter how many people put Shelley on the pan, I always wait to hear Shelley's side of the story. Mind you, I don't always say she's right. But for the most part, I buy Shelley. Most actresses are over-age children. They are using the screen to show themselves off, using their dramatic ability to hold attention and win approval. Shelley made her first appearance when she was five years old, and it was right in line with her present kind of behavior.

She was taken by her mother to see a vaudeville show in St. Louis. The main act featured an amateur contest. Shelley watched several of the performers and then whispered an excuse to her ma. In a matter of minutes Shelley's mother was watching her daughter on stage in the amateur contest, singing Shirley Temple's "On The Good Ship Lollypop." She finished a chorus, then put her hands on her little hips and yelped to the orchestra leader, "Can't you play it faster?" He did and she romped through another chorus. Then she took her bow and before the applause could die down she was onstage singing some more. They had to give Shelley a prize to get rid of her. "That taught me something," Shelley told me. "The louder you do a thing, the better it pays off." And the only thing in Hollywood that is louder than Shelley is a pair of Van Johnson's socks.

Now, on the private life side, let me tell you what goes with Shelley. Once, long before she had even heard of Vittorio Gassman, whom she married, she went on a date with a fellow by the name of John Hudson who had just come to Hollywood to do his first movie. I joined them in a booth at Googie's restaurant, along with Director Jerry Epstein. All of a sudden, a stranger in a nearby booth began to make disparaging cracks about Shelley, both as an actress and as a person. We all ignored the fellow up to a point. When he went past it, Jerry said to him, "Why don't you keep quiet?"

This was all the guy needed. He hauled off and punched Jerry in the nose and then picked up a table knife. Johnny Hudson stepped in with his face carefully averted because he didn't want his career ruined before it started. It was a comic sight and I had to laugh. The knives at Googie's would have a tough time cutting butter.

After it was all over, Shelley invited us to her hilltop house where she gave Jerry a glass of wine to calm his nerves. After that she sat on the floor and proceeded to demonstrate how she had played the role of Billie Dawn in Born Yesterday in summer stock. Mr. Hudson read the leading man's part and the party broke up around four in the morning.

When I woke up in my own bed around noon, I reached for the morning newspapers and there was a full front-page story with all the details. An unknown assailant had pulled a knife on Shelley. So I called her and asked if she had seen the papers. Had she seen them? She had given out the story before she went to sleep! She honestly believes that the worst thing in the world is a secret about Shelley Winters.

On the other hand, Chuck, you editors of Modern Screen have had plenty of experience with the exceptions among actresses. You recall the time your photographers went over to Elizabeth Taylor's house and managed to put a sweater on her while an editor kept mama upstairs engaged in conversation. And how Liz, who had not yet experienced her first romance turned to photographer Bob Beerman and said, taking a deep breath and filling out the sweater, "What sort of an expression do you want on my face—like I'm waiting for time to go by?" That should have been the tip-off right then. Liz was and is more interested in her personal emotional life than she is in being a big movie star. Maybe she'll change, but I doubt it.

WOMEN seldom change from the form into which they are molded in the beginning. Take Terry Moore. She told me: "Ever since I was four years old I have wanted to be an actress. Like some girls want to marry a millionaire, I wanted to be a movie star. Not for money and not for love. I did it because I wanted to express myself. I've got all the love I can use in my young life."

And how this young lady expresses herself! She believes not only that one picture is worth a thousand words, but she believes that one sexy picture is worth thousands of words in a movie contract. Terry started out by playing sweet little girls, but she didn't really get anywhere until she turned sexy. This got her the role in Come Back, Little Sheba, and an Academy Award nomination. When people commented on how she changed by acquiring sex appeal, Terry replied, "I've always been the same. I guess it's just how you sell it."

To draw a significant comparison, Terry works as hard as Shelley Winters at the career game, but without being as bombastic, and by curbing the frankness which can get a girl in a jam. Terry hears about new pictures before they are written; she visits producers and directors and flatters them. She can call every photographer covering night clubs by his first name. Terry is hep. She's not afraid to argue with a reporter, but she will always leave him loving her.

Not long ago, I asked Terry if she'd give up her career for marriage. She looked at me as though I'd said something obscene. She explained that today's woman can mix marriage and a career successfully, and that if a man truly loved her he wouldn't want her to stop acting. "I want," she said blandly, "to be swept off my feet by a man I can dominate!"

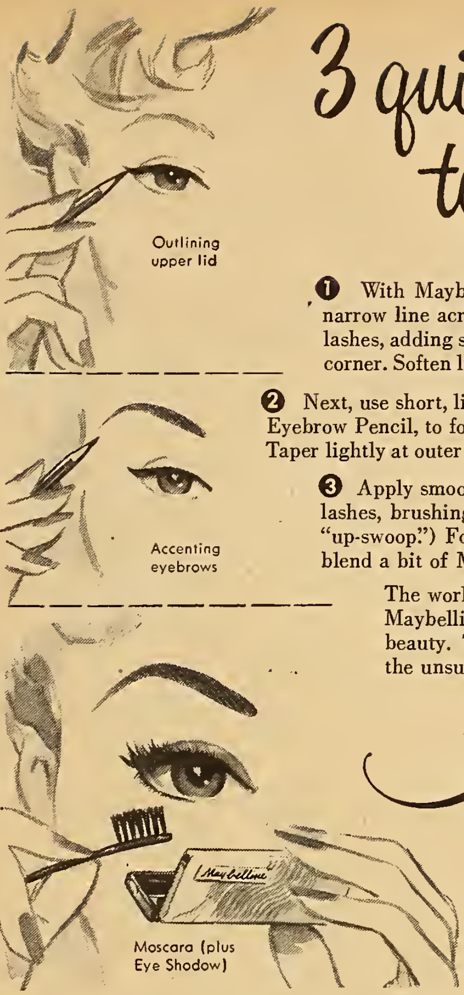
YET, WITH ALL this concentration on self, Terry can take a look around at her sister stars and admit that they have class, too. "Little Debbie Reynolds," she says, "is one of my best friends, if not my best. And I admire the way she usually gets what she wants. She is a born leader. She was a leader in the Girl Scouts, and she is a leader now. When our crowd gets together, we find ourselves going where and doing what Debbie suggests."

I told Terry I had never suspected this of Debbie. "Of course not," Terry retorted. "That's why it's so wonderful. Debbie's ambition is looked upon as enthusiasm, pep, youthfulness. I've often told Debbie I wished I had her qualities."

I could hardly keep from smiling, listening to Terry on this "youth" bit. She went on to tell me that Debbie knows exactly what she wants, professionally. She said that Debbie's goal is to become another Lucille Ball. "And that Debbie won't miss," Terry continued. "She's a strong character. Once she wanted to go to a première real bad. Bob Wagner had phoned her to invite her that very afternoon. But as much as Debbie wanted to go, as much as it meant to her, she turned Bob down to teach him a lesson for calling so late. I admire her for it. I couldn't have done it."

You see the type of stories I'm liable to start telling if I ever do a piece for you exposing the Hollywood Female. Mr.

3 quick tricks to eye beauty



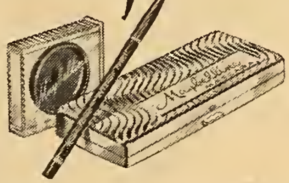
❶ With Maybelline soft Eyebrow Pencil, draw narrow line across upper eyelids, at base of lashes, adding short up-stroke at outer corner. Soften line with fingertip.

❷ Next, use short, light upward strokes of the Maybelline Eyebrow Pencil, to form beautiful, expressive brows. Taper lightly at outer end. Soften effect with fingertip.

❸ Apply smooth Maybelline Mascara from base to tips of lashes, brushing upward. (Hold a few seconds to set "up-swoop.") For an extra touch of mysterious eye beauty, blend a bit of Maybelline Eye Shadow on upper lid.

The world's smartest women depend on Maybelline soft eye make-up for heart-stirring beauty. Today, let Maybelline magic bring out the unsuspected loveliness of your eyes!

Maybelline



what is hollywood doing to its children?

how honest about divorce?

how generous with love?

how intelligent about adoption?

Don't miss this important issue on the problems that all today's parents face . . . now on sale at all newsstands

Hollywood Family Album • 25c

Dahlings, dahlings, don't walk—RUN!!!*

"THAT BOOK" is now only 35¢

"FANTASTICALLY FRANK"
Boston Post

"FASCINATING"
New York Herald Tribune

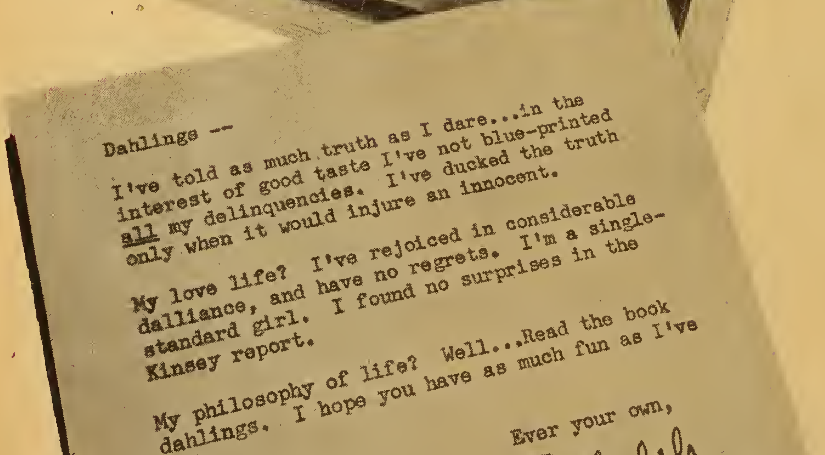
"BEWITCHING"
Richmond Times Dispatch

"UNINHIBITED"
Atlantic Monthly

"EXPLOSIVE"
Washington Post

"HILARIOUS"
Dallas News

"SIZZLING"
Chicago News



Dahlings --

I've told as much truth as I dare...in the interest of good taste I've not blue-printed all my delinquencies. I've ducked the truth only when it would injure an innocent.

My love life? I've rejoiced in considerable dalliance, and have no regrets. I'm a single-standard girl. I found no surprises in the Kinsey report.

My philosophy of life? Well...Read the book dahlings. I hope you have as much fun as I've had.

Ever your own,
Tallulah

*Run... to your nearest Newsstand, Drug Store or Variety Store

Read the FRANKEST AUTOBIOGRAPHY EVER!

TALLULAH

NOW ON SALE — 35¢ — EVERYWHERE

DELL BOOKS

Editor? While I'm at it, let me ask you another question. You've been to Hollywood, Chuck. Did you ever try to romance a movie actress? (If your wife is looking over your shoulder, don't answer that.) If you have tried, you probably understand why so many movie romances don't last. You understand the behavior of a Jane Powell or a Rita Hayworth.

This is what a man is up against when he starts a romance with any actress, from Debbie Reynolds to Joan Crawford. The minute an actress comes to the studio, she is pampered and catered to. No queen in history ever had it so good as a movie queen. There's a wardrobe woman to hand her all her clothes. There's a make-up man to powder her face. There's an assistant director to run and get her a container of coffee, somebody else to answer her telephone. The director is courteous no matter how sore he might have been about yesterday's temperament, and these are only the heads of the big parade of people who start to compliment her at seven in the morning and don't stop until six in the evening.

It's pretty tough, as a result, for a movie queen to go home and be treated like a civilian. The gal's got to be supremely well-adjusted and smarter than a psychiatrist to pull the big switch and start bowing down to just one lone male to whom she happens to be married.

Sooner or later that male ego is going to explode and then there's real trouble. But how can you hold the interest of an Elaine Stewart, for instance, when she's used to seeing herself on the screen five times as big as she really is? No offense to Elaine. She can't help it. She's going to be even bigger. So are a lot of others. With CinemaScope they're all going to be bigger than ever and maybe even more difficult to get along with.

Now, you take our girl Marilyn Monroe. I include you in this, Chuck, because of the cover picture of her that you requested for this issue of Modern Screen. As you suggested, I asked her if she'd pose for it and she was pleased. I even went over to the gallery to watch the job being done.

The posing started at twelve-thirty and was still going on at a little past four P.M. when I left. I was tired just from watching. Maybe your readers would like to know that when you see a photograph of Marilyn or any other actress on a cover it isn't just a case of "hold it, honey" and "thank you very much—that's all." To illustrate, Marilyn brought along her favorite hairdresser, Gladys, and her own make-up man, Whitey. She wanted to look her best and these efficient people understand her. Marilyn made several costume changes to get exactly the right pose for Modern Screen's cover and when I told her I never realized how much trouble a thing like this was, she said, "I act when I'm posing. Just as hard as I do when I'm playing a role in front of a movie camera. I think of something for each pose so I'll have the right expression." (I don't know what she was thinking of for this cover, but wow!)

I know what Marilyn said is true. When Marilyn is making a picture, she doesn't care to go out. She often forgets to eat and she completely forgets such practical things as time and money. She is almost in a trance. Let me give you a for instance:

She telephoned Schwab's to send over some toothpaste, face cream, etc. By the time the boy arrived, Marilyn had forgotten all about it. She was surprised to see him, but she took the package, looked at the bill which amounted to $7.95 and said, "Wait a minute, I'll give you a check."

When the delivery boy returned to the store, Leon Schwab looked at the check and said to him, "What's this? The tab is $7.95 and the check is for $2.50. What happened?"

The boy said, "I'm sorry. I never looked at the check. I couldn't take my eyes off Miss Monroe."

So he had to go back for another look and another check. Marilyn told me that when all this happened she was reading a new script and there was a line in it about two dollars and fifty cents. So she wrote the check out for that amount, naturally.

She just never wants to get out of her dream world. And this place called Hollywood is a dream world for the girls who come here and for those who don't. It will always be that way in spite of the nightmares most of our Hollywood females go through, sooner or later, even though these nightmares are public gossip.

Need I say more, Chuck? I hope that you will finally get it through your head that I would rather write you a letter like this than to try to sell you a story for MODERN SCREEN. Exposing the Hollywood female, my hat! If I tried to sit down at my typewriter and come off with anything like that I'd tense up and hand you a mess of wordage that would wind up with the tons of publicity copy you receive every day—right in the wastebasket. I'm sorry I goofed, but then who cares about money? And who could expect me to sit alone at my desk figuring out words about Hollywood females when I can be out on the town with one of the real live articles?

Sincerely,
Sidney Skolsky

EDITOR'S NOTE: With no apology to our readers, we publish Mr. Skolsky's letter. Only next time we hope he will put enough postage on his letter. An editor has to complain about something! END

---

they fight for each other

(Continued from page 35) Simmons will revolt against a marital setup in which she is treated as an innocent child who requires strong supervision?

Undoubtedly all these and many more reasons are the basis for the prediction of a short marriage.

Right now Jean Simmons and Stewart Granger are more in love than ever and they are fighting for each other with such verve and loyalty that it looks as though the prophets of marital dissension have made another error.

STEWART GRANGER has been reformed. When he first came to Hollywood a few years ago, he was known as "Snarling Stewart," the most unpopular actor in motion pictures. He fought with practically every director assigned to his films. He seemed to have appointed himself the leading authority on matters cinematic. He refused to see London visitors. He frightened newsmen away from his young wife. In no time at all, he succeeded in making himself as popular as a leper.

He spoke of hunting trips in Africa, of buffalo, of his adventures with Michael Wilding of Her Majesty's Regent Street Rifles, and he sought to prove that he was more Hemingway than Ernest himself.

It wasn't long before Hollywood newsmen were giving Mr. Granger a wide berth. They believed that Granger was an uncooperative blow-hard. True, they appreciated his protests. "I'm sorry. My wife and just can't be demonstrative in public places. I simply can't move myself to keep kissing her in a restaurant so that photographers might have visible proof of our ffection."

Yet if a man is a motion picture star, earning his livelihood from his public folowing, that public is hungry for knowledge of his private life. Surely such a star might drop some crumbs of information.

Not Stewart Granger. Perhaps the drop n Granger's popularity with movie-goers as the result of his staunch defense of his privacy. One month he was ranked number one on MODERN SCREEN'S popularity poll. Sixty days later he was down to wenty-seven.

Granger receives the same salary from GM whether he is ranked one or forty. He is not the sort of man who will comomise with principle, but the fact remains that his general attitude was rected in the press. It may have cost him ousands of admirers.

His youthful, girlish, incredibly talented Jean sometimes gives the superficial impression of being a flighty, irresponsible, absent-minded wife. But Jean Simmons is a sensitive, perceptive girl. Loving her husband and knowing him better than anyone else, she has tried to tell people about him as he really is and not as the press sees him. She is the best press agent Stewart Granger could have. Certainly, she is helping to make friends of his former enemies.

Like everyone else who knew Granger when his name was James Stewart, she refers to him as Jimmy.

"Jimmy is really a shy man. Now, I know," she'll say, "that sounds strange. But he really is.

"When he is afraid of something or merely nervous about it, he hides his nervousness by going to the offense. He attacks with gusto. He argues furiously.

"Some people resent this behavior, but only because they don't understand what motivates it. It is purely defensive.

"I've heard that Jimmy is rude. I have honestly never heard him or seen him in any rude behavior unless someone provokes him. He does retaliate in kind. After all, he is a man who believes in speaking his mind. But he is not the sort who will ever go out of his way to start a fight.

"They say he doesn't particularly like people. He does, but here again he's shy about making friends. One must not forget that our backgrounds are British, not American. When Jimmy makes a friend he keeps him forever. Michael Wilding is an example. They've known each other for twenty years. He was best man at our wedding.

"As for these stories about our quarrels, Jimmy and I have our tiffs. I'll scuff his hair and he'll nip my neck, but ours is a wonderful marriage. And Jimmy is really a fascinating man. But you do not get to know him easily, and you can't pass judgment on him fairly until you do know him."

THIS SORT of exposition has persuaded Hollywood to take another look at Stewart Granger.

At first he seemed to be too high-handed in his treatment of his wife. In America wives are treated as equals. In Europe they are not.

In Stewart's first marriage his wife was about ten years older than he. At the outset of their life together, she was a successful actress and he a neophyte. Probably his ego suffered because of that. Anyway, he has come full circle. The next time he married, Granger chose a hero-worshipping girl who had loved him since she was fourteen.

Cuticura...

A WORLD LEADER FOR OVER SEVENTY-FIVE YEARS . . .

Makes Skin Lovelier as Pimples* Clear Up

Softer, Smoother Skin starts in 7 days . . . or money back!

Hundreds of doctors use and prefer Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Here's why:

Cuticura Soap, alone of all leading soaps, is superfatted—the mildest, best kind of soap for the skin. And emollient Cuticura Ointment actually improves your skin as it helps clear up blackheads, oiliness and *externally caused pimples. In 7 days you'll see the start of thrilling new softness, freshness, radiant new tone.

Use Cuticura Soap several times daily, Cuticura Ointment at night. You'll get the "all clear" sign in record time! Get Cuticura at your druggist today!

Cuticura

NEW! For faster results, use new "invisible" Cuticura Medicated Liquid during the day, under your make-up.

JUST FOR THE RECORDS cont'd

As this is being written, nobody knows what will happen to the sound track of The Glenn Miller Story, which was made by a band carefully rehearsed in the Miller manner. Miller's widow, who still keeps her late husband's bed made, has flatly refused to permit the soundtrack's being released in any way that might lead the public to be hornswoggled into thinking it was by the original Miller outfit. Meanwhile, of course, several current bands are not averse to exploiting the fact that they can boast of a connection—even of the vaguest sort—with Glenn. RCA Victor, for example, lets it be known that Bill Finegan of the Sauter-Finegan assemblage once arranged for Miller. Capitol does the same in the case of its top band, Ray Anthony's. Anthony, who faintly resembles Cary Grant and who used to blow trumpet with Miller, has come out with an LP called "I Remember Glenn Miller." Although I think it leaves something to be desired, particularly when compared with the "Glenn Miller Limited Edition," I must report that it is an appealing and, on the whole, efficient job that is worth your hearing.

What most movie reviewers have failed to note is that Miss Sadie Thompson offers, in addition to the beguilements of Rita Hayworth, some wonderful jazz in the sequence which has Rita entertaining the Marines with a sensual dance. The open cornet in particular is exciting. In any case, by the time this review reaches print, some company may have put this music on a record. If so, do not miss it. As for Miss Hayworth's husband Dick Haymes, there is little to report except that he seems to be destroying his career by his lack of responsibility toward his public as well as toward his employers. This is a great shame because Dick has one of the most exciting baritones around.

In the instrument field this month there are several items of more than ordinary interest. Two especially merit your attention. The first is, as they advertise it, "the world's smallest, lightest, 3-speed portable phonograph." Called the Capri, it measures 10″ x 9″ x 4″, weighs slightly more than six pounds, and costs only $29.95. It plays all 7-, 10-, and 12-inch records and has "Stereosonic Sound." This little marvel is quite a buy. The second is RCA Victor's "Push-Button" tape recorder, which retails for $189.95. By merely pushing a button, you can preserve on tape whatever sounds happen to strike your fancy at a given moment—a child's laughter, a radio broadcast, the audio of a television program, and so forth. It also can handsomely serve another purpose. It can reproduce phonograph records. I'd like to point out the advantages of this. One is that you can take the machine to the home of a friend who has a collection of records that are no longer available, push the button, thereby transferring to tape those records you would like to own. Equally important, you can reduce your own collection of 78 r.p.m.'s into a comparatively small space. Tape requires little room. You can transfer whole operas to tape and save space. This machine is also good fun for those who like to reproduce conversations or what goes on at a party. You might try it once. It's worth the price in pleasure.

Apparently, Jean Simmons is completely dependent on her husband. In their marriage it is he who handles the finances, he who chooses the furniture for their hilltop house, he who makes and breaks the social engagements, he who runs the home.

This has given rise to talk that "in Jean Simmons, Granger doesn't have a wife so much as he has a third child." (Granger has two sons, eight and ten, from his previous marriage.) It has also been said that "he is more a guardian than a husband." Whether or not this is true, Jean and Granger obviously like their marriage.

Jean Simmons does not particularly relish responsibility. She loves having a fiercely protective husband who will fight to the death for her. Occasionally, this may tire the poor fellow. He may get piqued at what he considers her immature behavior, but when the chips are down, when she's in trouble, it's a great relief to her to turn the battle over to a burly two-fisted fighter with broad shoulders and a rapier tongue.

Take Jean Simmons' fight with RKO. RKO maintained that it had an employment contract with Jean Simmons. Miss Simmons' husband maintained that no contract had been signed. He said Jean was more or less a free agent, whereupon many studios offered her roles.

I SAW IT HAPPEN

When my family was vacationing in Glacier National Park we found that we were at a hotel with a locationing movie company. We followed the big red busses that carried the stars to the cliffs above St. Mary's Lake. While they set up their equipment I made friends with the make-up man. He introduced me to Vincent Price, an interesting man, and I had pictures taken with him and with Piper Laurie.

During the filming of one scene, producer Louis King stopped all the cameras with a shout. "Cut!" He slowly turned around and faced my dad. "Would you kindly stop running your noisy movie camera so we can take our sound movies?" And then his cameras began to roll again.

Gail Farwell
Reedsburg, Wisconsin

One of the best offers came from Paramount. They wanted her for the princess role in Roman Holiday.

RKO maintained that Jean was a contract player, that she was scheduled to work on several RKO pictures, and that they had no intention of permitting another studio to use her.

At this point, Stewart Granger had had enough. His friends begged him not to start a long, costly legal battle with RKO. But Granger was adamant.

"I'm not going to sit by and let them do this to Jean. I'm telling you no written contract was signed. Jean has rights. She should be free to accept offers from other studios. She's a great actress. I cannot let this happen to her."

Every argument was tried to dissuade Granger. He was told that it might be years before a final legal decision could be reached. He was told that Jean could be black-balled as a trouble-maker. He was told that Howard Hughes, chief of RKO, had never lost a legal fight in his life.

But Stewart Granger is a fighter, too. He has guts and he has courage and in the face of tremendous pressure, he refused to give an inch.

"I am going through with this," he announced, "if it takes every penny we have. Jean is entitled to know where she stands. Is she under contract or is she not?"

Content to put her fate in her husband's hands, Jean went along with the play. When the case finally came to trial, it was shown conclusively that Jean Simmons had never signed a written employment contract with RKO. So the studio had no right to prevent her from making pictures elsewhere.

RKO maintained that there had been an oral understanding but the court declined to accept this as a valid contract. Nonetheless, because RKO had brought Jean to America, Granger agreed that they were entitled to consideration.

For $200,000 his wife agreed to make three films, not for RKO, but on loanout from them between February, 1953, and February, 1954. This arrangement was signed.

Jean went to MGM and made Young Bess with Stewart Granger, then to 20th Century for The Robe with Victor Mature, then back to MGM for The Actress with Spencer Tracy. Reportedly, she got $100,000 for each of these films, none of which had any connection with her RKO loan-out deal.

Late in October, Stewart Granger was sent to London to star opposite Liz Taylor in the re-make of Beau Brummel. Stewart wanted his wife to accompany him, but if Jean left Hollywood and RKO exercised its right to loan her out, she would lose $200,000. If she remained in Hollywood, RKO would have to loan her out or pay her $200,000.

On October 1, RKO began to pay Jean Simmons $10,000 a week, although she had no work to do.

Late in November, it was announced that she was to make a film called A Bullet Is Waiting for Fidelity Productions. She will play opposite Rory Calhoun.

How much Fidelity Productions paid to borrow Jean, no one knows. By February 26, Jean will be $200,000 richer. With her earnings from her previous films, there is little doubt that she will be Hollywood's biggest earner for the 1953-1954 period.

When Stewart Granger arrived in London without his beautiful young wife, everybody wanted to know why she wasn't with him.

"It broke her heart not to be able to come home," he said. "But she's sitting out her contract. What a contract that was! It helped waste her first three years in Hollywood."

"How do you feel about Hollywood?" Granger was asked. Instead of the vituperation expected from him, Granger said mildly, "I've no complaints. I've been very lucky there. It's nice to be home. I'm just sorry Jean isn't with me."

The Grangers' third wedding anniversary has passed. Some of the memories are pleasant, some sad.

In England four or five years ago, Jean Simmons was one of J. Arthur Rank's leading lights. She was smiling and gracious and cooperative through her tremendous birthday party with Arthur Rank and 200 other guests and a five-tiered birthday cake and magnum after magnum of champagne.

Suddenly, "I can't stand it any longer," she cried. And bursting into tears she ran from the room. Everybody was a littl shocked.

"Don't breathe a word of this," a pres agent said. "But she's hopelessly in love with Stewart Granger. He's the one person she wanted to see at this party and apparently he hasn't been able to get here."

At that time no one could imagine a more unlikely love affair. Granger was much older than Jean. He was worldly, experienced, adventurous, a man who knew all the angles. Jean was a talented, naive, simple girl.

JEAN SIMMONS was born at Crouch End, London, the fourth child of a gymnastics teacher. She lived in Cricklewood, attended school at Edgeware.

At the beginning of the war the family was evacuated to Somerset. There Jean developed a great love for animals and decided on her life's work.

"When I grow up," she used to say, "I'm going to become a kennel maid." But she began to take dancing lessons, and when the family was moved back to London, she decided, "I should prefer rather to become a dancer."

Jean's mother sent her to Aida Foster School of Dancing where she won a prize as the most popular girl in the school.

When Mrs. Foster heard that the Gainsborough Studios wanted a girl to play Margaret Lockwood's sister in Give Us The Moon, she recommended Jean Simmons for an interview. There were 150 applicants for the job but on Friday, 13, Jean won it and went to work on the film.

One afternoon, Stewart Granger who had been acting on a nearby sound stage, dropped by to say hello to Margaret Lockwood. Jean, sitting alone in a corner, summoned up enough courage to approach him. "I wonder," she said, "if I might have your autograph?" She fell in love with the tall handsome actor right then and there.

Her performance in Give Us The Moon was so good that she received other film offers. By the time she was sixteen she had played in six films and was given a starring part in Great Expectations.

And by the time she was sixteen she had seen Stewart Granger on many occasions, at film premières, at studio gatherings, at various canteens, but supposedly he was still a happily-married man. She held her young heart in check.

In 1948 Jean Simmons played Ophelia to Laurence Olivier's Hamlet. Her performance in that one is an all-time great.

The following year at Manchester, she made her only stage appearance and that was opposite Stewart Granger. She cried as the audience applauded, but only she knows whether it was because she was appy or because she was sad. Granger ad decided to go to Hollywood to work or MGM.

BY THIS time he was divorced and reporters asked Jean when she planned o marry. All she would say was: "I met im when I was fourteen. I thought then hat he was the most wonderful person in he world. I have known him really well or three years now, and I still think that. ne couldn't find a nicer, kinder man or better friend."

Six months later, Howard Hughes flew hem to Tucson, Arizona, where they were arried in a simple ceremony. The only riend present was Mike Wilding who flew ut from New York where supposedly he ad been enjoying the company of Marlene ietrich.

Three eventful, jampacked years have lapsed since their quiet wedding. In those ree years Jean and her Jimmy have exerienced tremendous changes in their nancial and professional status. In what ey feel for each other, however, there as been no change. Their love still turns ery defeat into a victory, every tear into smile.

END

The ONLY Vaginal Suppository for FEMININE HYGIENE

That Can Make ALL these claims!

Today, modern women everywhere are turning to Zonitors—the greaseless, stainless vaginal suppository which offers so many advantages:

1. Zonitors contain the same powerful and deodorizing type of medication which makes ZONITE liquid so effective.
2. When inserted, Zonitors instantly release their powerful antiseptic-germicidal medication.
3. Zonitors form a protective hygienic coating which lasts for hours. They are not the old-fashioned greasy type which quickly melt away.
4. Zonitors are ABSOLUTELY SAFE to body tissues. They even have a soothing effect.
5. Zonitors completely deodorize. They keep your person so dainty and feminine.
6. A blessing to fastidious young wives. So convenient. Zonitors require no extra equipment. They eliminate all embarrassment.

Buy Zonitors today. They are packaged two ways: individually foil-wrapped or in separate glass vials.

Young Wives Depend on Zonitors

Zonitors Eliminate All Embarrassment

Zonitors Are Powerfully Effective Yet Harmless

Zonitors®
Vaginal Suppositories

Ava with Spanish matador Mario Cabre.

NO OLÉ FOR AVA . . .

The Spanish aren't speaking to her!

■ Ava Gardner's much-publicized stay in Spain made American headlines because of her supposed romance with torrid matador Mario Cabre. Occurring at a time when she was only a headline away from becoming Mrs. Frank Sinatra, it brought about a flood of publicity.

But the Spanish had nothing to say. They were mad at Ava—but it had nothing to do with bullfighters. For Ava had made a crack about paella.

Now, paella, Spanish rice, is the national dish. It is a culinary work of art, delicious and very, very rich, made of fried rice with fish, shell fish, chicken, meat, hot sausages and other ingredients undetectable by the untrained American palate. When Ava was in Spain she ate and loved paella; when she got home she told the press about it and was promptly asked for the recipe. The question didn't stump her. She grinned reminiscently and announced that you take fried rice and add all the leftovers in the refrigerator.

The Spaniards heard about it, and their indignation knew no bounds. "A bad thing for her to say, really sacrilegious," a lady told an American reporter, adding, "Everything we put in paella is fresh, bought the day we prepare it!"

So don't ask Spanish movie-goers about Ava. If pressed, they will admit grudgingly that she is a beautiful woman. But this is merely damning her with the faintest of Spanish praise. "She's too thin!" they will add with the air of one dealing a fatal blow . . . and go home to a midnight snack of paella.

JUST FOR THE RECORDS cont'd

As this is being written, nobody knows what will happen to the sound track of The Glenn Miller Story, which was made by a band carefully rehearsed in the Miller manner. Miller's widow, who still keeps her late husband's bed made, has flatly refused to permit the soundtrack's being released in any way that might lead the public to be hornswoggled into thinking it was by the original Miller outfit. Meanwhile, of course, several current bands are not averse to exploiting the fact that they can boast of a connection—even of the vaguest sort—with Glenn. RCA Victor, for example, lets it be known that Bill Finegan of the Sauter-Finegan assemblage once arranged for Miller. Capitol does the same in the case of its top band, Ray Anthony's. Anthony, who faintly resembles Cary Grant and who used to blow trumpet with Miller, has come out with an LP called "I Remember Glenn Miller." Although I think it leaves something to be desired, particularly when compared with the "Glenn Miller Limited Edition," I must report that it is an appealing and, on the whole, efficient job that is worth your hearing.

What most movie reviewers have failed to note is that Miss Sadie Thompson offers, in addition to the beguilements of Rita Hayworth, some wonderful jazz in the sequence which has Rita entertaining the Marines with a sensual dance. The open cornet in particular is exciting. In any case, by the time this review reaches print, some company may have put this music on a record. If so, do not miss it. As for Miss Hayworth's husband Dick Haymes, there is little to report except that he seems to be destroying his career by his lack of responsibility toward his public as well as toward his employers. This is a great shame because Dick has one of the most exciting baritones around.

In the instrument field this month there are several items of more than ordinary interest. Two especially merit your attention. The first is, as they advertise it, "the world's smallest, lightest, 3-speed portable phonograph." Called the Capri, it measures 10″ x 9″ x 4″, weighs slightly more than six pounds, and costs only $29.95. It plays all 7-, 10-, and 12-inch records and has "Stereosonic Sound." This little marvel is quite a buy. The second is RCA Victor's "Push-Button" tape recorder, which retails for $189.95. By merely pushing a button, you can preserve on tape whatever sounds happen to strike your fancy at a given moment—a child's laughter, a radio broadcast, the audio of a television program, and so forth. It also can handsomely serve another purpose. It can reproduce phonograph records. I'd like to point out the advantages of this. One is that you can take the machine to the home of a friend who has a collection of records that are no longer available, push the button, thereby transferring to tape those records you would like to own. Equally important, you can reduce your own collection of 78 r.p.m.'s into a comparatively small space. Tape requires little room. You can transfer whole operas to tape and save space. This machine is also good fun for those who like to reproduce conversations or what goes on at a party. You might try it once. It's worth the price in pleasure.

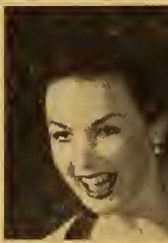
Apparently, Jean Simmons is completely dependent on her husband. In their marriage it is he who handles the finances, he who chooses the furniture for their hilltop house, he who makes and breaks the social engagements, he who runs the home.

This has given rise to talk that "in Jean Simmons, Granger doesn't have a wife so much as he has a third child." (Granger has two sons, eight and ten, from his previous marriage.) It has also been said that "he is more a guardian than a husband." Whether or not this is true, Jean and Granger obviously like their marriage.

Jean Simmons does not particularly relish responsibility. She loves having a fiercely protective husband who will fight to the death for her. Occasionally, this may tire the poor fellow. He may get piqued at what he considers her immature behavior, but when the chips are down, when she's in trouble, it's a great relief to her to turn the battle over to a burly two-fisted fighter with broad shoulders and a rapier tongue.

Take Jean Simmons' fight with RKO. RKO maintained that it had an employment contract with Jean Simmons. Miss Simmons' husband maintained that no contract had been signed. He said Jean was more or less a free agent, whereupon many studios offered her roles.

I SAW IT HAPPEN



When my family was vacationing in Glacier National Park we found that we were at a hotel with a locationing movie company. We followed the big red busses that carried the stars to the cliffs above St. Mary's Lake. While they set up their equipment I made friends with the make-up man. He introduced me to Vincent Price, an interesting man, and I had pictures taken with him and with Piper Laurie.

During the filming of one scene, producer Louis King stopped all the cameras with a shout. "Cut!" He slowly turned around and faced my dad. "Would you kindly stop running your noisy movie camera so we can take our sound movies?" And then his cameras began to roll again.

Gail Farwell
Reedsburg, Wisconsin

One of the best offers came from Paramount. They wanted her for the princess role in Roman Holiday.

RKO maintained that Jean was a contract player, that she was scheduled to work on several RKO pictures, and that they had no intention of permitting another studio to use her.

At this point, Stewart Granger had had enough. His friends begged him not to start a long, costly legal battle with RKO. But Granger was adamant.

"I'm not going to sit by and let them do this to Jean. I'm telling you no written contract was signed. Jean has rights. She should be free to accept offers from other studios. She's a great actress. I cannot let this happen to her."

Every argument was tried to dissuade Granger. He was told that it might be years before a final legal decision could be reached. He was told that Jean could be black-balled as a trouble-maker. He was told that Howard Hughes, chief of RKO, had never lost a legal fight in his life.

But Stewart Granger is a fighter, too. He has guts and he has courage and in the face of tremendous pressure, he refused to give an inch.

"I am going through with this," he announced, "if it takes every penny we have. Jean is entitled to know where she stands. Is she under contract or is she not?"

Content to put her fate in her husband's hands, Jean went along with the play. When the case finally came to trial, it was shown conclusively that Jean Simmons had never signed a written employment contract with RKO. So the studio had no right to prevent her from making pictures elsewhere.

RKO maintained that there had been an oral understanding but the court declined to accept this as a valid contract. Nonetheless, because RKO had brought Jean to America, Granger agreed that they were entitled to consideration.

For $200,000 his wife agreed to make three films, not for RKO, but on loanout from them between February, 1953, and February, 1954. This arrangement was signed.

Jean went to MGM and made Young Bess with Stewart Granger, then to 20th Century for The Robe with Victor Mature, then back to MGM for The Actress with Spencer Tracy. Reportedly, she got $100,000 for each of these films, none of which had any connection with her RKO loanout deal.

Late in October, Stewart Granger was sent to London to star opposite Liz Taylor in the re-make of Beau Brummel. Stewart wanted his wife to accompany him, but if Jean left Hollywood and RKO exercised its right to loan her out, she would lose $200,000. If she remained in Hollywood, RKO would have to loan her out or pay her $200,000.

On October 1, RKO began to pay Jean Simmons $10,000 a week, although she had no work to do.

Late in November, it was announced that she was to make a film called A Bullet Is Waiting for Fidelity Productions. She will play opposite Rory Calhoun.

How much Fidelity Productions paid to borrow Jean, no one knows. By February 26, Jean will be $200,000 richer. With her earnings from her previous films, there is little doubt that she will be Hollywood's biggest earner for the 1953-1954 period.

When Stewart Granger arrived in London without his beautiful young wife, everybody wanted to know why she wasn't with him.

"It broke her heart not to be able to come home," he said. "But she's sitting out her contract. What a contract that was! It helped waste her first three years in Hollywood."

"How do you feel about Hollywood?" Granger was asked. Instead of the vituperation expected from him, Granger said mildly, "I've no complaints. I've been very lucky there. It's nice to be home. I'm just sorry Jean isn't with me."

The Grangers' third wedding anniversary has passed. Some of the memories are pleasant, some sad.

In England four or five years ago, Jean Simmons was one of J. Arthur Rank's leading lights. She was smiling and gracious and cooperative through her tremendous birthday party with Arthur Rank and 200 other guests and a five-tiered birthday cake and magnum after magnum of champagne.

Suddenly, "I can't stand it any longer," she cried. And bursting into tears she ran from the room. Everybody was a little shocked.

"Don't breathe a word of this," a press agent said. "But she's hopelessly in love with Stewart Granger. He's the one person she wanted to see at this party and apparently he hasn't been able to get here."

At that time no one could imagine a more unlikely love affair. Granger was much older than Jean. He was worldly, experienced, adventurous, a man who knew all the angles. Jean was a talented, naive, simple girl.

JEAN SIMMONS was born at Crouch End, London, the fourth child of a gymnastics teacher. She lived in Cricklewood, attended school at Edgeware.

At the beginning of the war the family was evacuated to Somerset. There Jean developed a great love for animals and decided on her life's work.

"When I grow up," she used to say, "I'm going to become a kennel maid." But she began to take dancing lessons, and when the family was moved back to London, she decided, "I should prefer rather to become a dancer."

Jean's mother sent her to Aida Foster School of Dancing where she won a prize as the most popular girl in the school.

When Mrs. Foster heard that the Gainsborough Studios wanted a girl to play Margaret Lockwood's sister in Give Us The Moon, she recommended Jean Simmons for an interview. There were 150 applicants for the job but on Friday, 13, Jean won it and went to work on the film.

One afternoon, Stewart Granger who had been acting on a nearby sound stage, dropped by to say hello to Margaret Lockwood. Jean, sitting alone in a corner, summoned up enough courage to approach him. "I wonder," she said, "if I might have your autograph?" She fell in love with the tall handsome actor right then and there.

Her performance in Give Us The Moon was so good that she received other film offers. By the time she was sixteen she had played in six films and was given a starring part in Great Expectations.

And by the time she was sixteen she had seen Stewart Granger on many occasions, at film premières, at studio gatherings, at various canteens, but supposedly he was still a happily-married man. She held her young heart in check.

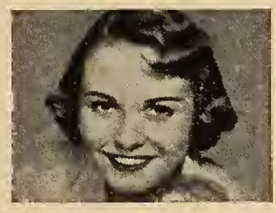
In 1948 Jean Simmons played Ophelia to Laurence Olivier's Hamlet. Her performance in that one is an all-time great.

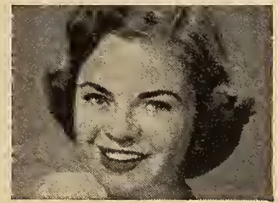
The following year at Manchester, she made her only stage appearance and that was opposite Stewart Granger. She cried as the audience applauded, but only she knows whether it was because she was happy or because she was sad. Granger had decided to go to Hollywood to work for MGM.

BY THIS time he was divorced and reporters asked Jean when she planned to marry. All she would say was: "I met him when I was fourteen. I thought then that he was the most wonderful person in the world. I have known him really well for three years now, and I still think that. One couldn't find a nicer, kinder man or a better friend."

Six months later, Howard Hughes flew them to Tucson, Arizona, where they were married in a simple ceremony. The only friend present was Mike Wilding who flew out from New York where supposedly he had been enjoying the company of Marlene Dietrich.

Three eventful, jampacked years have elapsed since their quiet wedding. In those three years Jean and her Jimmy have experienced tremendous changes in their financial and professional status. In what they feel for each other, however, there has been no change. Their love still turns every defeat into a victory, every tear into smile. END





The ONLY Vaginal Suppository for FEMININE HYGIENE

That Can Make ALL these claims!

Young Wives Depend on Zonitors

Zonitors Eliminate All Embarrassment

Zonitors Are Powerfully Effective Yet Harmless

Today, modern women everywhere are turning to Zonitors — the greaseless, stainless vaginal suppository which offers so many advantages:

1. Zonitors contain the same powerful and deodorizing type of medication which makes ZONITE liquid so effective.
2. When inserted, Zonitors instantly release their powerful antiseptic-germicidal medication.
3. Zonitors form a protective hygienic coating which lasts for hours. They are not the old-fashioned greasy type which quickly melt away.
4. Zonitors are ABSOLUTELY SAFE to body tissues. They even have a soothing effect.
5. Zonitors completely deodorize. They keep your person so dainty and feminine.
6. A blessing to fastidious young wives. So convenient. Zonitors require no extra equipment. They eliminate all embarrassment.

Buy Zonitors today. They are packaged two ways: individually foil-wrapped or in separate glass vials.

Zonitors® Vaginal Suppositories

Ava with Spanish matador Mario Cabré.

NO OLÉ FOR AVA . . .

The Spanish aren't speaking to her!

■ Ava Gardner's much-publicized stay in Spain made American headlines because of her supposed romance with torrid matador Mario Cabre. Occurring at a time when she was only a headline away from becoming Mrs. Frank Sinatra, it brought about a flood of publicity.

But the Spanish had nothing to say. They were mad at Ava—but it had nothing to do with bullfighters. For Ava had made a crack about paella.

Now, paella, Spanish rice, is the national dish. It is a culinary work of art, delicious and very, very rich, made of fried rice with fish, shell fish, chicken, meat, hot sausages and other ingredients undetectable by the untrained American palate. When Ava was in Spain she ate and loved paella; when she got home she told the press about it and was promptly asked for the recipe. The question didn't stump her. She grinned reminiscently and announced that you take fried rice and add all the leftovers in the refrigerator.

The Spaniards heard about it, and their indignation knew no bounds. "A bad thing for her to say, really sacrilegious," a lady told an American reporter, adding, "Everything we put in paella is fresh, bought the day we prepare it!"

So don't ask Spanish movie-goers about Ava. If pressed, they will admit grudgingly that she is a beautiful woman. But this is merely damning her with the faintest of Spanish praise. "She's too thin!" they will add with the air of one dealing a fatal blow . . . and go home to a midnight snack of paella.

BLONDES!

MAKE THIS New Creamy Shampoo AT HOME

FRESH as you need it!

Takes only a minute—Washes Hair Shades Lighter Safely—gives it Wonderful Shine!

If your blonde hair is growing dark or faded, here's good news. A sensational new "creamy" shampoo that you can make at home (FRESH . . . each time you use it), washes hair shades lighter, gives it beautiful new lustre and shine. Called BLONDEX, it is a fragrant powder that needs only water added to it to become a rich, creamy, cleansing shampoo. BLONDEX Creamy Shampoo works 3 ways: 1. It removes the dull, dingy film that makes blonde hair dark and old looking. 2. Brings back that flattering lightness. 3. Gives hair extra highlights and shine. Blondex is absolutely safe—use it for children's delicate hair. Get BLONDEX today at 10¢, drug and department stores

Marvel

WHIRLING SPRAY Syringe FOR Women 3.50

AT DRUG COUNTERS EVERYWHERE

Free Booklet

MARVEL CO. 603D EAST ST. NEW HAVEN, CONN.

Make Money and Friends as a PRACTICAL NURSE

LEARN AT HOME—EARN WHILE LEARNING

FREE Nationally recognized resident school of practical nursing now offers approved training at home to women and girls to help fill waiting demand for nurses. Thousands needed at once. High school not necessary. No age limit. Sample Lesson Free. Rush name on 2c postcard.

POST GRADUATE HOSPITAL SCHOOL of NURSING
5B34 Auditorium Bldg., CHICAGO 5, ILL.

MAKE MONEY DRESS SHOP IN YOUR HOME

Fifth Avenue, New York firm desires ambitious women to sell Dresses, Suits, Lingerie in and from their home. As seen in "Vogue," "Mademoiselle." Experience unnecessary. Good Commissions. Free Dresses too for personal use as EXTRA BONUS. No investment. Write for Sample Book.

Modern Manner Clothes, 260 Fifth Ave., Dept. D-3, New York

TOWELS

12 Large Size Assorted Colors ONLY $1.00

Money Back Guarantee, Order Now!

MURRAY HILL HOUSE, Dept. 48-H
©52MHH 157 East 31st. St., New York 16, N. Y.
Dealers' Inquiries Invited

EASE COLD DISCOMFORTS

Take Tabcin AT ALL DRUG STORES

Made By MILES LABORATORIES INC. Elkhart, Indiana

miss grable steps out

(Continued from page 53) a newspaper, folded it neatly, stood up, took two steps to the window where her husband Harry sat, watching the landscape run by. Taking a crisp stance, she whacked her beloved firmly on the head with the morning's final edition of the Los Angeles Times.

"My dear wife," Harry asked groggily, "What was that for?"

"For horses," dear wife Betty retorted. "Horses which do not send telegrams."

"Let me look at that!" Harry grabbed the telegram and read aloud: "Dear Betty. Sorry you two couldn't make good in Hollywood. But next time you stop by a race track look me up. I'll cop you a fortune. Signed James Session.

"Well, bless his happy heart!" he laughed. "Good old James Session. Good old horse. Isn't it wonderful to have somebody in the family with talent!"

You know the story. You know that after ten years of helping to make 20th Century-Fox into a kind of mint, Betty Grable was what is known as an "ex-movie star." In this capacity she has not enjoyed the good wishes of producers, columnists, writers and hangers-on. She seemed to be that unforgiveable Hollywood commodity, "a has-been." And that's the one thing no one in Hollywood wants any part of. How did it happen to Betty?

Was she, perhaps, borne screaming and kicking from the gates of her studio? Did she demand a pension, an annuity? Was she, before the eyes of the world, thrust out into the California snow? Well, no.

"I figured it was time to leave the studio. I had wonderful years there, but I don't think it's smart to stay with any one studio for more than ten years. Enthusiasm begins to wane and executives lose their excitement about your possibilities every time they see a newcomer."

So the shoe is on the other foot, is it? It is Miss Grable who heartlessly junked the studio, home of her youth and patron of her career? Well, no.

After a couple of suspensions, accompanied by hints from stockholders that her salary checks were bigger than the studio finance department, Betty amiably but firmly decided she wanted out. And out she got.

Of course, one thing is sure. Any out wants in again. No bargainers, these Hollywood has-beens; they'll settle for a walk-on in a horse-opera mob scene. And Grade C at that. Take Betty Grable, for example. She's practically begging.

"I won't sign another studio contract unless I have the right to do outside pictures of my own choosing. I'll never sign another contract with a "good girl" clause that cuts off the money every time I don't do exactly what the studio executives have planned. TV? Maybe yes, maybe no; it all depends. I'm the kind of girl who never plans her career. I just let nature take its course."

BUT WHAT next? What if the tour is a flop? What will that mean to a changing career? What will it mean to a marriage? And when the register has been signed in Chicago's famous Ambassador East Hotel, does the confidence of many years' success fade before the nervousness of an all-important debut?

Those are questions only this long shot can answer. In the Chicago Theatre the big house went dark. Standing in a shimmering sequin version of her famous, fabulous bathing suit pinup costume, Betty shivered a little from the backstage chill.

Suddenly, the fanfare. The curtains inched apart. There was a hush. A seemingly endless hush before the great audience broke into a storm of applause, and backstage a husky musician's voice was heard, "Man, ain't she the end? The ever livin', ever-lastin' end!"

Well, he said it. He said it not only for the audience, but for the kids at home and the anxious friends in Hollywood. He said it for the mob of fans who crammed into the alley outside the Chicago Theatre chanting "We want Grable! We want Grable!" Some has-been!

He said it, too, for the audience out front. They broke into quick little rashes of applause during Betty's "Honey Man" number. "Let's give 'em the tickles, Harry," she stage-whispered as she danced around the stage looking into the faces of her dancing partners in search of her "honey man." Then, sotto voce, she let the audience in on the byplay. With each rhythmic swing of her slim hips, Harry played hot little rills and burbles on the trumpet. Betty, with a meaningful look at the far reaches of the balcony murmured, "Talk to me, daddy boy. Listen to that, my daddy's talkin', talkin' to me."

No doubt about it, when Betty finally ran off the stage and into the arms of Harry, she had completely captivated the toughest of critics and tamed an audience famous for being hardboiled. An audience so callous that entertainers have been all but driven from the stage by a rain of pennies. One unfortunate performer nearly fainted when someone tossed an iron bolt. He ducked and the deadly missile sailed right through a big bass drum.

But Betty wasn't having any of this trouble. The reason is simple enough. Most big-time stars on personal appearance tours whip up a pleasant little act, then walk on stage with every posture implying, "Ah, you lucky peasants to get a close-up look at magnificent me." If anyone criticizes the act, the star is bewildered. As one of them said, "After all the trouble I went to, leaving Hollywood for this tour, do you mean they expect me to perform?"

The surprise reaction to the Betty Grable-Harry James show both at the Chicago Theatre and afterward at the Michigan Theatre in Detroit was expressed by the Detroit Free Press. "There's only one thing wrong—it's too short. From the first note of the famous band leader's trumpet to the colorful finale, the audience applauded for more."

BILLY DANIEL, Betty's old friend, as well as her dancing partner and director points out that this terrific show just seems short and is designed to leave the audience "hungry."

"Betty is responsible for my being in pictures," Billy says. "After they created this girl they threw away the pattern. She's trouper all the way through and what show folks call a real pro. This show is a slam bang success because it was rehearsed eight hours a day for four weeks, with both Betty and Harry working themselves to a frazzle, and Harry even composing music to go with the slightest variation in Betty's dance steps.

"Harry kept pushing Betty along in the rehearsals until she finally protested, 'Baby you'd better take it a little easy or I'm liable to do el foldo.' But she didn't. After the eighth curtain call at one performance she turned to Harry and said, 'Shall we fuss with another retake, old boy?' "

Billy Daniel has known and worked with dozens of stars, but Betty is his idol. "People always ask what it's like to dance with Betty. All I can say is that when she begins to sing, 'Put your arms around me, Baby,' and struts into your vest pocket looking you right in the eye, it's like taking a great big living doll in your arms. You start dancing and you're all gone, man, all gone."

You'd think that any man married to girl who generates so much excitement would tend to be a very jealous guy. Not Harry. You don't have to worry about a wife with Betty's attitude.

"I don't know anything about statistics," she says. "I don't know if there are more divorces in Hollywood than other places. I don't read the gossip columns and I couldn't tell you who isn't getting along with whom. I wouldn't tell you if I could. Some stuff you can't help hearing, and most of that I pay no attention to, because so much of it is wrong. But you do get a little tired of being regarded as a creature with two heads because you've got a happy marriage in Hollywood. Lots of picture people are happily married. There's nothing weird or mysterious about it.

"To me, loving someone means that you want to make him happy. You don't make a man happy by secretly going 'out on the town' when he has to hit the road. You're not privileged to travel the 'what's just a little romance on the side mean?' road just because you're a movie star. Marriage demands loyalty and integrity."

Somehow, it's the loyalty and integrity in Betty Grable that make her attractive both to dowagers who drive to her shows in Cadillacs and to teen-agers who hitchhike to see her in person. Betty is living proof that you needn't indulge in scandal to have a big name. The fact that the Chicago Theatre paid Mr. and Mrs. James a real cool $45,000 for their stand there also proves that clean entertainment can be glamorous and packed with wallop.

BETTY GRABLE knows that loyalty is a two-way street. She insisted on the pin-up pose at opening curtain because, "I want to be the Betty Grable the kids think I am." The electricians couldn't believe their eyes when they saw their cue sheets, calling for multiple light changes during Betty's numbers. One of them said, "Shucks, she's Grable! She doesn't need to put everybody to so much work. What's all this macaroni for? Why not just throw a big white spot on her?"

When he saw the results, though, he exclaimed, "The gal's right. If she wants to trick it up some more I'll sit up all night and re-wire the theatre."

Hollywood is always sending out good will ambassadors to let the public know that it's a nice town full of good people. Sometimes these ambassadors have created an impression so bad that it would have been better if they'd have stayed home.

The studios ought to take up a collection or Betty's hep way of making friends and nfluencing people. In Chicago Betty had o make seven or eight costume changes or each turn, and she had only four or ive minutes between numbers. She caught old and refused to believe that she was ear nervous exhaustion. She insisted on oing out to sign autographs between numers while she was perspiring heavily and he cold got worse. She was ordered to top it and the stage door was locked. As the orchestra replayed her next cue he was found leaning out the window, neaking autographs to her fans.

One of her most loyal admirers is a tiny iddle-aged lady who has gone to every ne of her pictures for years. Betty saw er between acts and accepted a cute pair aprons the lady had made. The two fell n each other's shoulders and wept.

BETTY GRABLE doesn't object to anyone's knowing that she was born December , 1916. To find someone with more youthl wallop, you'd have to go look at the ayful colts on the Harry James ranch. Yet Betty's youthfulness is no miracle. he doesn't do it with massage and face ting. She says she's lazy and she's no lete. To skirt a deep subject, youth ms to have a lot to do with honesty. Betty Grable is honest about her age and herself and her two children, Vickie and Jessica. Hedda Hopper once reported that when she came to interview Betty, Vickie came in and whispered, "Mommy, can I stay here while you talk?"

Betty replied. "You certainly may, honey. You can stay wherever mommy is."

Hedda went on to relate that she recalled another star whose child wandered in during an interview. The star stalked out of the room, hissing to the nurse the ill-disguised order, "Get that child out of here!" Then she returned and cooed at Hedda, "Isn't she sweet? Goodbye now, little sweetheart."

It's just possible that Betty Grable has no harsh lines in her face because she hasn't spent her life trying to look and be something she isn't. Her performance is consistent. When Ted Fio Rito offered her a job, she said to him: "There's just one thing you ought to know. I can't sing."

"Who," replied Ted, equally honest, "is going to notice?"

AFTER THAT, Betty suffered a couple of unhappy loves. Then she became Mrs. Harry James and the mother of two daughters. She has retained her earliest fans and the loyalty of her fellow workers.

It's impossible to report honestly on Betty Grable without telling a lot that is true of no other star, largely because most of them are afraid to be honest with the public. More than a year ago Betty told MODERN SCREEN that she was going to "quit" her studio. Everyone scoffed at that, even those who went backstage in Chicago to say they are sorry they ever let her go. Let her go? They couldn't hold her.

Then there's Betty's mother and father, Lillian and Conn Grable. With many movie stars it takes a private detective to discover the whereabouts of the parents. Although Betty's parents are divorced, Betty insisted that both come to her opening in Chicago. They were overwhelmed by this evidence of love for them both.

Then, not a few stars avoid being photographed at the race track for fear that their public may resent their interest in the sport of kings. Betty figures that those who love her will allow her the sports and hobbies she likes. Which brings us to the place we came in with this story, for it was on the way back to Hollywood on the Super Chief with Mr. Harry James that Betty burst into their compartment, Daily Racing Form in hand. She shook Harry awake and showed him the paper.

"What's the matter?" Harry muttered.

"Nothing, honey," Betty exclaimed, "nothing at all! But maybe you remember the horse that sent me a telegram two weeks ago saying he'd win? Well he did! Look here—'James Session wins Salinas Handicap at Bay Meadows.'"

Mr. James woke up a little. "What did he pay?"

"Oh, not much," Betty retorted. "At $10.30 to win, if you had a thousand dollars on his nose, all you got back was a little over five grand, figuring the odds on a two dollar bet."

"Yeah—that's what I figure."

"You mean we won $5,000?" Betty exclaimed.

"No," Harry replied. "I mean all I put on him was $2, which wins us $10.30. I didn't really think he'd win."

"Oh fine!"

"I'm sorry," Harry James said. "It looks like we'll both have to go back to work!"

And so they have. If you go to Las Vegas soon, you may be able to see their show at El Rancho Vegas. If you can't make it, you can see Betty next in the Columbia Picture, The Pleasure Is All Mine.

That, in case you've been wondering, is what happened to that ex-movie star, Betty Grable.

END

Stop Corns
Callouses!

Dr Scholl's
Zino-pads

5 WAYS BETTER!

1. Remove Corns, Callouses one of the fastest ways known to medical science ...
2. Relieve pain in a jiffy ...
3. Stop Corns, Callouses before they develop ...
4. Prevent Sore Toes, Blisters, Tender Spots ...
5. Ease New or Tight Shoes.

No wonder Super-Soft Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads are the world's largest-selling reliefs for Corns, Callouses, Bunions and Sore Toes, for no other method does as much for you! Sold everywhere. For FREE sample, in size wanted, write Dr. Scholl's, Inc., Chicago 10, Illinois.

CORNS CALLOUSES BUNIONS SOFT CORNS

Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

DESTROY UNWANTED HAIR FOREVER

Temporary relief is NOT enough

Only by KILLING THE HAIR ROOT can you be sure UNWANTED HAIR is GONE FOREVER. Brings relief and social happiness. Do not use our method until you have read our instruction book carefully and learned to use the MAHLER METHOD safely and efficiently. Used successfully over fifty years.

SEND 5¢ TODAY FOR BOOKLET ➡ NEW BEAUTY FOR YOU

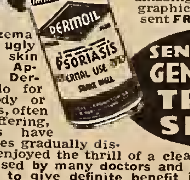
MAHLER'S, INC., Dept. 36-C PROVIDENCE 15, R. I.

CATALOG WITH 215 PICTURES FREE!

NEW! DIFFERENT! BEAUTIFUL!
For the first time — sensational pictures of your favorite movie stars in professional high gloss finish. Special super-duper offer:
20 for 25¢ • 50 for 50¢ • 120 for $1
FREE CATALOG with 215 PICTURES OF STARS with your order
DeLUXE PHOTO SERVICE, Dept. 627
Box 947, Church St. Annex, New York 8, N.Y.

SUFFERERS FROM PSORIASIS
(SCALY SKIN TROUBLE)
Use DERMOIL

MAKE THE ONE SPOT TEST



Prove it yourself no matter how long you have suffered or what you have tried. Beautiful book on psoriasis and Dermoil with amazing, true photographic proof of results sent FREE. Write for it.

SEND FOR GENEROUS TRIAL SIZE

©1935 LAKE LAB.

Don't mistake eczema for the stubborn, ugly embarrassing scaly skin disease Psoriasis. Apply non-staining Dermoil. Thousands do for scaly spots on body or scalp. Grateful users, often after years of suffering, report the scales have gone, the red patches gradually disappeared and they enjoyed the thrill of a clear skin again. Dermoil is used by many doctors and is backed by a positive agreement to give definite benefit in 2 weeks or money is refunded without question. Send 10c (stamps or coin) for generous trial bottle to make our famous "One Spot Test." Test it yourself. Results may surprise you. Write today for your test bottle. Caution: Use only as directed. Print name plainly. Don't delay. Sold by Liggett and Walgreen Drug Stores and other leading druggists. LAKE LABORATORIES, Box 3925, Strathmoor Station, Dept. 8309, Detroit 27, Mich.

IF YOU SUFFER PAIN of HEADACHE NEURALGIA NEURITIS

get FAST RELIEF with ANACIN

the way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend.

HERE'S WHY . . . Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, Anacin contains not just one but a combination of medically proved active ingredients. No other product gives faster, longer-lasting relief from pain of headache, neuralgia, neuritis than Anacin tablets. Buy Anacin® today!

FALSE TEETH

KLUTCH holds them tighter

KLUTCH forms a comfort cushion; holds dental plates so much firmer and snugger that one can eat and talk with greater comfort and security; in many cases almost as well as with natural teeth. Klutch lessens the constant fear of a dropping, rocking, chafing plate. 35c and 60c at druggists. . . . If your druggist hasn't it, don't waste money on substitutes, but send us 10c and we will mail you a generous trial box.

KLUTCH CO., Box 5487C, ELMIRA, N. Y.

Make Big Money! Sell Latest Style Uniforms

FREE UNIFORM PLAN

FREE FULL COLOR STYLE BOOK

Upland

Famous direct-from-factory line, from $3.98. Dupont Orlon, Nylon, etc. Sell full or part time to waitresses, nurses, beauticians, others. Not sold in stores. No experience or investment needed. Exclusive creations. Write for big FREE Outfit.

UPLAND UNIFORM CORP., Dept. ED-2
208 E. 23rd St., New York 10, N. Y.

MAKE MONEY ADDRESSING ENVELOPES

OUR INSTRUCTIONS REVEAL HOW

GLENN GLENWAY 5713 EUCLID AVE., CLEVELAND 3, OHIO

HOW TO WRITE SONGS THAT SELL

A complete course in writing and selling songs. Hit songs are often written by amateurs who have learned the special techniques and secrets of the professionals. This course covers every phase of the popular songwriting business and tells you how to get your songs to the attention of legitimate publishers. $2.98 c.o.d. plus postage or send $3.00 and we pay postage.

Northland Publishing Co., Box 1690, Milwaukee, Wis.

NEW TOWELS

LARGE SIZE! Assorted Colors. New! Not seconds. Money-back guarantee. Order Now! Supply limited.

12 for $1.00

TOWEL SHOP, Dept. 182, Box 881, St. Louis 1, Mo.

HAIR REMOVED Instantly

Unwanted superfluous hair removed immediately from Face, Arms, Legs, with our wonderful HAIR REMOVER. Yes, you can actually remove hair above and BELOW the skin surface. It is harmless and leaves the skin soft, smooth and lovely to touch. WE GUARANTEE that we will refund your money if after the third application hair grows back. Priced at only $2.00. Triple Size $5.00. Rush your name and address. Enclose cheque, cash or money order (cannot send C.O.D.)

LAUREL CO.
125 E. 46th St., Dept. C-415, New York 17, N. Y.

what I learned from women

(Continued from page 55) about life and how to live it.

Mom, of course, contributed the most. I don't know who writes Mother's scripts, but they hand out a lot of fine advice. "Soap and water are cheap," Mom used to tell me. She taught me to try to learn a little bit every day. I used to clam up with strangers, but Mom loosened me up. "When you meet people, speak up," she said. "You're as good as anyone else—we all come from the Infinite." Because Mom thinks good thoughts, she's a good woman. I've tried hard to have some of those thoughts rub off on me.

There are females of all ages who've been sprinkled through my life and I've come away a little wiser by knowing each one of them. Some guys in their teens have a lot of trouble talking to girls, but I never did. I always felt at home with them. Even when I was a little kid I'd walk home from school with a girl, and lots of times pick a flower for her. The gesture never was awkward for me. When I got older I sort of slid into friendships with girls without any self-consciousness. I never had to go through that stiff-necked stage in which a guy has his first real date and regards the girl as a frightening creature from another world. Maybe it was because I was lucky enough to have interests in common with girls. For instance, I was crazy over horses. I dreamed about them at night and drew pictures of them in class when I should have been tending to my algebra. There was a bunch of girls who used to go riding after school from a barn in the neighborhood. I learned to know them easily because all we ever talked about was horses. Mary Lou lived around the corner from our house, so I'd usually ride with her and always walked her home afterward. It wasn't what you'd call a romance—I guess I had a crush on her—but I always relaxed with her.

IT WAS THE same way with Joyce Lockwood, only with her, it was ice skating. We skated as partners. I think Joyce was the first woman whose quality of beauty from within struck me. It was something you couldn't quite put your finger on. When she walked into a room everyone turned to look at her as though she had some magnetic force. Maybe it was because of her remarkable outlook on life, but whatever it was, Joyce always expressed pure beauty when she was on ice, and also when she wasn't. From her I learned that you get beauty out of life if you put beauty into it.

Barbara Jones was another skater, a girl who was really dynamic on ice. We used to work out in the afternoons, and since she was a far better skater than I ever hoped to be she really put me through my paces. It was the way she did it that made working with Barbara such fun. She never nagged, but if she saw a point that needed improvement she put it over to me in such a way that my male ego wasn't offended. That took some doing, considering the fact that I was painfully aware that this girl was a champion and that next to her, I looked like a Tahitian who had never even seen ice. Barbara taught me how to put both my pride and my humility in their proper slots.

Miss Joost was a plump, jolly music teacher in high school. Instead of joining the guys in batting practice during recess, I used to hang around Miss Joost's classroom where a gang of us played the piano and sang. My voice wasn't any better then than it is now. I knew how bad it was and I kept it down to a whisper. Then Miss Joost gave me a cue that I have found applicable to many things. "Let yourself go," she said. "Relax and sing the best you can. Let your voice and yourself be free." If she had kidded me or let the other kids do it, I'd have shrunk right back into my shell. This way she helped me to get over being self-conscious, and without that, I'd never had had a chance in the acting game.

Last December I toured with the play Our Town, playing opposite Marilyn Erskine. In that brief run I learned more about the movie industry than I'd ever known and most of what I learned came from Marilyn. I'm a greenhorn at this business. It's all so new to me that I go around waving my ears like an elephant trying to pick up valuable advice. I've always been impulsive and forgetful, and spent money as soon as I had it. Marilyn advised me to plan my career carefully, setting a goal and working toward it step by step. While she was at it, she explained that this can be done without stepping on other people's necks. She taught me how to be selective about parts that are offered to me. Through her tutoring, informal lessons over coffee cups in assorted towns, I learned to be more critical of performances—including my own. Marilyn is a great actress and a fine technician. I listened and listened until I thought I couldn't absorb another idea.

The nice part of listening to Marilyn was that she didn't try to change me in any way—she only pointed out ways to take advantage of what I am and what I have to offer. I notice lots of guys trying to change their girl friends and vice versa, and I don't go for that. It isn't right. It's like telling Deb Reynolds not to be so happy all the time. You can't tell the sun not to shine.

Debbie is one of my favorite people in this town. Underneath all that crazy gaiety of hers she's a warm, sensitive person. I don't think I realized this until the night I took her to see Jane Powell at the Coconut Grove. I was watching Janie who was singing the last song of her opening night there. Suddenly I looked across the table and there was Debbie, crying softly.

"Well," I said, "this isn't the Debbie Reynolds I know."

She laughed through the tears and threw her napkin over her head to hide her confusion. Deb is like that—all heart. And despite her great success she still has a fine sense of values. She instinctively knows what's right and what's wrong—which is as it should be, considering her wonderful family.

LORI NELSON is like that, too. I guess I like Lori better than any girl I know. At first glance she looks like the drawing room type who'd feel uncomfortable without her pearls. She isn't like that at all. She rides and swims like a demon, and wants to learn to ice skate. I might add, I'm just the guy who would like to help her. And I want to take her up to the mountains and teach her to ski. Lori looks wonderful in old clothes, blue jeans and shirts and stuff, just like Deb. And like Deb, Lori is one of the best sports I've ever known. One of the best little actresses, too. I watched her act in the dress rehearsal of Inside U. I., the live talent revue her studio puts on every year, and she was unrecognizable in the role of a metallic, disillusioned woman. I was so proud of her that afterward I rushed into the dressing room and picked her up and whirled her around. "You were wonderful!" I yelled, and I was so excited that I didn't even notice that the other girls were screaming and ducking for cover. Lori is wonderful. She's intelligent and hardworking and soft-hearted, and she has the same quality I admired so much in Joyce Lockwood; a true beauty from within. Plus which she's a good listener, an attribute that builds my confidence.

Looking back over this it occurs to me that I'm giving the impression my life so far has been filled with nothing but romances. I don't mean to. These are girls I've known who have taught me something or helped me in some way, girls to whom I'll always be grateful. The idea seems to have got around that I'm fickle because I date so many girls so often. Actually, I date once, maybe twice, a week and as far as dating different girls is concerned, I never did go steady and don't think I shall until my marriage is in the offing. Joyce Lockwood's dad, a man I look on as a second father, told me long ago, "I don't believe in this steady routine when you're young. Go out and meet a lot of girls. You'll be more sure when you finally decide to get married." I've stayed with his advice and so far it's working out fine. I figure that people change a lot when they're young, and it's better to get yourself settled before you get hooked up. Of course, I do want to get married some day and have three kids. As the line in Our Town goes, "people are meant to live two by two—it ain't natural to be lonesome." I remember once when Mom and Walt and I lived down in Long Beach, Walt had a date to take a girl to the movies and for some reason I tagged along with them. I remember how cute she looked in her new Easter hat and how lonely I felt when Walt wouldn't let me sit with them. I vowed to myself then (I guess I was about eight) that soon I'd have a girl, too.

I HAVE BEEN lucky, I guess, not to have tied in with any women who are schemers. I don't like women who play games, or women who are cheap or vulgar, and if I don't like them I'm not apt to get mixed up with any of them. I've met a lot of types, and I've learned what I don't want in a wife as well as what I do want.

I remember the girl I met on the roller skating rink in New York when I was in the service. I had a buck to my name and I was lonesome. So I went in and pretty soon I was talking to this girl and I bought her a cup of coffee. That left me with one thin dime. I had to borrow twenty cents from her to take her home and for my own subway fare. I was only sixteen, maybe less, because I lied about my age to get into the Coast Guard. I had a rough time getting up the nerve to ask her for a date. I was to get my paycheck the following week and promised to take her out on the town. Well, we had dinner at a fine restaurant and then went to a lot of nightclubs, all good places, like The Embers, and I was getting a big boot out of just sitting there over coffee and listening to a tinkling piano in the background. It was my first big date and it was just the way I'd always dreamed it would be, sharing a romantic, relaxed evening with a beautiful girl. Then she leaned across the table and said, "I don't know how people can just sit around like this and talk. Let's go someplace where there's some life. Someplace where we can dance."

"Sure," I told her. To myself I said, "This girl has just flubbed the whole thing."

It seems to be a little thing, but I like a girl who can be content with quiet rather than one who has to be chasing around, running away from herself all the time. Like I say, it's what's inside that really counts.

I've known girls who are naggers, whose voices tend to whine, and just having that kind of a thing on a date should steer any guy away from a lifetime of it. I've known some girls I liked very much but somehow I wasn't able to get through to them. Our conversation was stilted and strange, and I sensed a wall around them. Sometimes I've thought perhaps I could help a girl like that to learn how to enjoy herself. After a few dates, if I can't break down the reserve, I've given up.

WALT WAS ALWAYS a little nonplussed at the fact that I went around with so many girls. For Walt it was girl friend No. 1, then girl friend No. 2, and then he got married. "My brother's harem," he used to snort, but our own ways have worked out fine for each of us. Walt got a wonderful wife, and I feel I'm a better guy for having known a variety of girls. They've given me the self-confidence I need in this business. Heavens knows I didn't have it at first. On my first interview, when the reporter asked me to repeat my name, my mouth opened but no sound came out. When I took my first test I was half dead with fright. When I began to meet movie stars and get invitations to Hollywood parties I was petrified. But then I began to think that we're all equal (Mom's advice coming back to me) and if other people failed to be polite to me, all I could do was feel sorry for them. You must care for the complete character of the human being in this life.

It's a little easier now, but I have so much to learn that it makes me dizzy to think of it. I'm in sort of a funny position in Hollywood. I've made four pictures but I'm not under contract to a studio. In these days studios aren't rushing to sign up every new kid who comes along. I've been picked for a movie here and there, but in the meantime I'm on my own as far as learning about the business is concerned. Mom's on my side—she's happy as long as I'm interested in something and trying my best to make a go of it. And Walt is interested in my work in his own quiet way. Last time I saw him he grinned and said, "Saw you in Gun Belt, kid. How are you?" Which, from Walt, is the same as "Go to it!"

SO HERE I am, on my own two feet, and learning a business that I love. I'm still surprised when somebody asks for my autograph and sometimes, when headwaiters bow and say "Good evening, Mr. Hunter," I have to laugh inside. I say to myself, "Art Gelien, boy skater, lookit you!"

If I should ever hit the top the most important thing I'd have to learn is to keep my head out of the clouds. Already I see danger signs. Two years ago I wouldn't even have hoped that I could take a girl to a lush Hollywood restaurant for dinner. Yet just the other night, when I took a girl to La Rue, she mentioned what a good dinner we'd had there last fall.

"Last fall?" I said. "I don't remember being here with you before."

And then I remembered. It had been a great evening, and I had been so concerned since with what I considered a big thing that I had forgot that evening—an evening which should be a big one in anybody's book. I rapped myself on the head.

"What's the matter?" said my date.

"Nothing," I said. "I'm just teaching myself a lesson."

And if I do hit the top, I'll never forget that in great measure it's the ladies who put me there. Not that any girls have taught me about acting, specifically. But we are all composites of those we have known and a lot of girls have, to put it in a corny phrase, made me what I am today.

I've known a lot of men who grumble about women, but as far as I'm concerned, bless 'em all! END

(Tab Hunter can be seen now in UA's Screaming Eagle.)

No other deodorant now asks women to Shave First!

Actual skin tests prove
YODORA SO "KIND" TO SENSITIVE SKIN
we can make this bold statement

FIRST...shave under arms. (For faultless grooming—ask your druggist for Yodora shaving booklet.)

THEN . . . apply Yodora immediately with complete confidence.*

We guarantee Yodora soothing to apply after shaving...gives day-long protection ...won't harm finest fabrics, or your money back.

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping — Replacement or refund of money if not as advertised therein

If you suffer from skin irritations due to allergies or functional disorders, see your doctor.*

A McKesson Product

Accepted — Committee on Cosmetics — American Medical Association

YODORA your really soothing cream deodorant

Before You Buy Your Trailer-- READ...

TRAILER TOPICS MAGAZINE

It brings you the latest in Trailer Coaches—Equipment—Accessories—Trailer Trips—Trailer Parks and many other interesting monthly features at only—$3.00 for 2 years.

(6 MONTH TRIAL SUBSCRIPTION $1.00)

TRAILER TOPICS MAGAZINE ROOM 1530
28 East Jackson Blvd., Chicago 4, Ill.

192 MOVIE, TV, RADIO STARS PHOTOS

SPECIAL! For Limited Time Only—

All your favorite stars in ONE BIG PACKAGE. New FASCINATING POSES! — Many AUTOGRAPHED! PROFESSIONAL wallet sizes — suitable for framing. Sensational Money-Saving offer. Rush your dollar today! $1

FREE! with your order! BIG SURPRISE GIFT (worth 75¢) — private HOME ADDRESSES, plus other REVEALING INFORMATION of 175 OTHER TOP STARS. Also GIANT NEW CATALOG containing ADDITIONAL HUNDREDS OF PHOTOS AND NAMES of Newest Stars—all is SENT FREE WITH YOUR ORDER if you act now!

NEW life-like HIGH-GLOSS FINISH

HOLLYWOOD FILM STAR CENTER, Studio C3, Box 2309, Hollywood 28, Calif.

GIRLS 18-28 . . . BE AN
AIRLINE HOSTESS

Trainees urgently needed by major airlines, earn top-flight pay, vacations, benefits! NOW, TRAIN IN YOUR HOME. . . for a career flying the airways to the glamour capitals of the world; Paris, London, Rio De Janeiro. Meet exciting and interesting air travelers, celebrities. Romance and adventure can now be yours.

DON'T WAIT, SEND FOR DETAILS NOW! FREE!!!

NATIONAL AIR INSTITUTE UNIT #10241
Hostess-Stewardess Division, Dept. D-2
International Airport, Los Angeles 45, Calif.
Name...Age.............
Full Address..

Ladies! here's big news
SPARE TIME MONEY
Just show charming Melville Frocks styles to friends. Gorgeous, latest dresses . . . big selection . . . low prices . . . FULLY GUARANTEED. . for The American Woman
No experience needed. Get expensive Style Kit at no cost to you. Sell newest styled dresses, lovely lingerie, children's wear.
GET OWN DRESSES FREE
ACT NOW! If interested, send name, address, age, dress size TODAY to Mr. B. J. Melville, Pres.
THE MELVILLE CO., DEPT. 8369
CINCINNATI 25, O.

Amazing New Creme
RE-COLORS HAIR IN 17 MINUTES..
Now change streaked, gray, graying or drab hair to a new lustrous youthful-looking color, try Tintz Creme Shampoo-Tint today. It's a new hair coloring that re-colors hair at home as it shampoos. Takes only 17 minutes. No waiting for results. It's easy to use—no messy mixing. Won't wash or rub out. Your choice of 13 natural appearing colors . . . GET TINTZ AT YOUR DRUGGISTS NOW.
Tintz
CREME SHAMPOO
HAIR COLORING

$75.00 IS YOURS EASILY
For Selling Only 100 Boxes of Our Lovely SATIN FLORAL EVERYDAY GREETING CARDS
Their beauty and value sell on sight. You make 75c on each box. No experience needed. 21-Card Boxes, $1 Assortments, Stationery, New Gift Items, 100 other fast-sellers. Get extra Gift Bonuses WORTH $10—$25—$50 OR MORE besides CASH profits to 150%. Get FREE Stationery Samples and 4 best-seller Assortments on approval. WRITE TODAY.
CREATIVE CARDS, 2505 Cermak, Dept. 461H, Chicago 8, Ill.

FINISH HIGH SCHOOL AT HOME!
No classes to attend. Easy spare-time training covers big choice of subjects. Friendly instructors; standard texts. Full credit for previous schooling. Diploma awarded. Write now for FREE catalog!
WAYNE SCHOOL Catalog HAF-24
2527 Sheffield Ave., Chicago 14, Illinois

New, Easy Tablet Discovery
STOPS BED-WETTING
Medically safe DRY-TABS in easy-to-take tablet form must stop BED-WETTING painlessly, easily, safely or money refunded. Generous supply only $3.00. Get DRY-TABS today!
AT BETTER DRUG STORES EVERYWHERE

ADDRESS
POSTCARDS AT HOME
MAKE MONEY!! SPARE - FULL TIME
write
LINDO, WATERTOWN, MASS.

U. S.
SAVINGS BONDS ARE DEFENSE BONDS

crawford meets the critics

(Continued from page 57) whistled. But those of us in the industry just shuddered . . . Apparently Miss Monroe is making the mistake of believing her publicity. Somebody should make her see the light. She should be told that the public likes provocative feminine personalities; but it also likes to know that underneath it all, the actresses are ladies." She added, "I think she'd better become a comedienne —or something."

When this bit of hemlock hit the papers, verbatim, those in the industry shuddered once more. What had happened to Joan, the woman who had made a ritual of keeping within the bounds of good taste, that she should suddenly let fly such an unprovoked attack? When they realized that Joan had been practically tricked into it they first made a mental note to keep their own mouths shut (inasmuch as everybody had been saying the same thing but had had the good fortune not to say it within earshot of a reporter) and then they felt genuinely sorry for Joan.

It put Miss Crawford in a great spot. Everyone was talking about it and Miss Monroe was weeping softly into her mink. The awful part of it was that Joan had said it. She told Louella Parsons that she wished she had saved her opinions as a bit of private advice to Marilyn, and she said, "There's still room in this town for both of us. I feel if I were to meet Marilyn face to face I'd say 'Hi, there' and we'd shake hands."

To our knowledge there never has been a direct apology, an omission which may be for the best, as it would have had to be a hollow gesture. Instead Joan said, "I wish I could say I didn't say those things but I did say them. But, believe me, in the future I'll think twice before I talk so openly." That much had a ring of sincerity.

Not one month had passed before Miss Crawford was slogging around in another bit of mire. To make Torch Song she returned to MGM for the first time in ten years. She began her career there in 1925 and she spent eighteen years at MGM before career doldrums set in and she left, only to defeat the slump by making Mildred Pierce elsewhere and winning an Academy Award.

Metro gave her a cracking big party to celebrate the return of their conquering heroine. It was a neat example of the sticky sentimentality which Hollywood reserves for its own. Verbal flurries of bygone years were forgotten in the blare of trumpets, the expanse of red carpet and the glitter of brass hats on hand to welcome their own Joan. For her part, Joan retaliated with her usual generosity. Her opening day gift to director Charles Walters was a tremendous salad bowl filled with two dozen bird of paradise flowers. On these were hung a cashmere sweater, bedroom slippers, four bottles of lotion and cologne for men, the mixings of a Caesar salad, and two lamb chops. There wasn't a dry eye in the house.

Then they began to work on the picture. Miss Crawford's co-star in Torch Song was Michael Wilding, husband of Elizabeth Taylor. Mike was visited frequently and lovingly by his wife. According to reports which seeped from the guarded walls of MGM, it wasn't long before Miss Crawford was upset about visitors on the set. No specific visitors were mentioned, but in the process of closing the set to all outsiders Miss Taylor found herself, despite her own importance on the lot, unable to see her husband during his working hours. A new queen had arrived and Miss Crawford's omnipotence, cemented by the fact that at the welcoming party she had been soundly bussed by every upper bracket man on the lot, gave her seniority. The result was that relations between leading man and leading lady in Torch Song were strained.

Differences between the two leading lights never came into the open, possibly because of the Herculean efforts of Metro to keep the matter quiet. Witness the reporter who tried to find out if Joan did the singing in Torch Song. Somebody had said that India Adams had done the warbling. Joan was not happy over the report. Investigation proved it was India's voice when the picture had its first preview, and the story went that Crawford then asked to re-dub it with her own voice. When the movie had been completely completed, a reporter phoned the studio with the question, "Whose voice was used for Crawford in Torch Song?"

"We do not give that information out," droned the voice at MGM. It is small wonder that the tiff with the Wildings was kept within the confines of Hollywood.

Joan's next picture was Johnny Guitar, made at Republic, and since Republic's walls are not so soundproof as those of MGM, the whole town soon knew that Crawford and Mercedes McCambridge were not seeing eye to eye. The story goes that Crawford did not want Miss McCambridge, a magnificent actress, to appear in the picture with her. Miss McCambridge was made aware of this from the first day she reported to the lot. Things grew worse the day Mercedes did a scene so adeptly that the crew gave her a hearty round of applause. It is said that after that the air surrounding Miss Crawford's dressing room was below zero, and the big freeze was on. McCambridge, just as honest as Crawford, did not hesitate to report the shenanigans.

There are many people, however, who find it difficult to accept any criticism of Miss Crawford. One columnist even broadcast an open letter to Mercedes McCambridge, telling her she should be ashamed of herself for saying such things.

Said he: "Ever since Joan Crawford and Mercedes McCambridge started work together in Johnny Guitar the gossip columns have been filled with hints of a feud. Joan Crawford has patiently refrained from making any comments, but Miss McCambridge has not hesitated to make sly insinuations, among which was the statement, 'Joan's chief trouble is that she's lost her sense of humor.' Frankly, I'd say this is a case of one actress who always takes her work very seriously and another who takes herself too seriously."

The last sentence stirred considerable speculation as to which was which. Miss Crawford was undoubtedly grateful for the comments on her behalf, and Miss McCambridge was duly unhappy about the partisan pitch, aired throughout the country. Johnny Guitar was completed without a mend in the rift, and odds are that the Misses Crawford and McCambridge will never have compliments to exchange.

For Joan, this made three dips into dueling within the space of eight months. Why? It has been said that Joan Crawford, regardless of her huge success, is an insecure woman whose happiness thrives on manifestations of love and perpetual flattery. With adulation surrounding her, she is calm and benign as a June night, softly shedding silvery light on those near her. Allegedly the storms arise only with the suspicion that she is losing her grip on a situation or a person. "Joan Crawford," said one producer recently, "is an angel as long as she's also the whole show." In this sort of thing as in everything else Joan is a perfectionist, and therefore it is believable that she would have wanted, once the news leaked about India Adams' voice in Torch Song, to remain replete in the spotlight by singing her own songs.

And so Hollywood pondered the reasons for these recent uprisings. Nobody came up with any answers nor did anyone understand why, last October, Joan Crawford was rude to a member of the press for the first time in her life.

Johnny Guitar was made in part on location in Sedona, Arizona, about 200 miles from Phoenix. With such a celebrity in the vicinity Phoenix's Arizona Republic assigned its drama critic, Maggie Wilson, to interview Miss Crawford. According to Miss Wilson, the interview was arranged for her by the publicity director of Republic Studio, and cleared by the unit publicist working with the picture company. It was assumed that Miss Crawford had agreed to the impending interview. Miss Wilson set out for Sedona, via devious mountain roads, and arrived, mussed and dusty, only to be told that Miss Crawford would not submit to the interview. This is known as being stood up, and Miss Wilson did not take it lying down. The following day her column consisted of a violent attack on Miss Crawford.

IT HAPPENED TO ME

When Debbie Reynolds was making a personal appearance in Cincinnati, hundreds of people turned out to see her. We wanted to take pictures of her, but we could barely see her over the heads of the crowd. In desperation, we finally shouted, "We can't see you, Debbie! Get up on the table."

She looked doubtfully at her slim, straight skirt, then grinned and scrambled up on a table to pose for our pictures.

Jane Wehrman
Batavia, Ohio

Miss Crawford said nothing. Two weeks later the Republic's competitor, the Phoenix Gazette, carried a three-column, five-inch ad written and presumably paid for by members of the Johnny Guitar company. It read: "To whom it may concern: anyone who happens to be suffering with what might be diagnosed as chronic sour grapes poisoning:" (To the snubbed Miss Wilson, this was rubbing it in.) "Hear this: We would like the world to know Joan Crawford. We have worked with this great lady in a wide variety of circumstances, in oftentimes difficult and exhausting situations, at all hours of the day and night, and in all kinds of weather. And we are prepared to testify that if there is a more cooperative, charming, talented, understanding, generous, unspoiled, thoughtful, approachable person in the motion picture business, we have not yet met him or her . . ."

The ad was signed "Members of the Johnny Guitar company who have previously worked with Miss Crawford."

This ebullient defense of Joan Crawford is a typical reaction. It happens every time a word is said against her. Nevertheless, her refusal to keep an interview appointment made people wonder. The press has always found Joan Crawford the most cooperative soul in the industry. With both the fans and the reporters she has ever been anxious to make friends and influence people. She has personally answered every fan letter written her, and keeps a running correspondence with her admirers that consumes a wad of hours every week. She amazes reporters by remembering their names through long months between meetings. In two consecutive years, 1945 and 1946, she was awarded the golden apple by the Hollywood Women's Press Club for having been the most cooperative star. Each year she accepted the award with a hint of tears in her eyes. It is a systematic thing with her, this minute personal attention to her relations with people who can be her friends, and so it is all the more surprising that she should suddenly put the plan into reverse.

On the other hand, Joan Crawford has never been noted for her stability. She flits and flies as her fancy dictates, and the Crawford part of it is that Joan herself is unaware of this inconstancy. Her interest patterns are kaleidoscopic. One month she will take a passionate interest in her home, regaling friends with her troubles in ironing the children's dresses. The next month she will be determinedly the great lady, and only things of the greatest elegance will catch her attention. During the early days of her marriage to Franchot Tone, dinner was served on a long, candlelit table, with Tone seated at one end and Joan, in the distance, at the other. One night when guests were present Mr. Tone happened to drop his napkin, whereupon Joan leapt from her seat and sprinted the length of the table to recover the linen from the floor and, kneeling, to press it lovingly into his hand. At one time she conceived a deep interest in all things botanical. Learning about male and female trees, she devoted approximately a month to the personal purchase and planting of young fruit trees, determined to create her own orchard. In the romance department it is the same, and while usually she limits herself to one beau at a time there was a period after her divorce from Philip Terry when she seldom went out without an escort of three, four, or sometimes five young men.

In the spring of 1945 when she was awarded the Oscar for her performance in Mildred Pierce she did not attend the Academy affair because of illness. Her severer critics hinted that the excuse was a hoax, made to order for the dramatic photograph of the Oscar with Joan at her bedside. It was a cruel suggestion, but these same people hooted triumphantly the following year that they may have been right after all. For in the spring of 1946, when Olivia de Havilland won the Oscar for To Each His Own, previous winner Crawford was not on hand to make the customary presentation. The reason given was illness, yet Joan was seen the next day at Palm Springs, attired in tennis shorts and in the best of spirits.

These events with their dramatic possibilities, might conceivably be Joan's own ideas. She is a woman of great imagination and one who understands the ramifications of publicity. And they are things one can expect of Joan Crawford because she is Joan Crawford. She is a legend and a myth, in some ways a Rock of Gibraltar, in others as skittish as a horse in a high wind. There is no valid reason for anyone to be too deeply disturbed about what Crawford says or does in a moment or a day or a week, because the following moment, day or week she probably will be a different kind of person, with different points of view. The real Joan Crawford was lost long ago.

Nor is there any real advantage in pressing the point of an altercation, no matter how angry or hurt the antagonist may be. For every single person who attacks her in any way, Joan has an army of faithful friends who spring to her defense. Nothing, by this time, can hurt Joan Crawford. END

PSORIASIS

is no longer a heartache

Learn how hundreds of thousands of users have found Siroil tends to remove psoriasis crusts and scales on outer layer of skin. Light applications help control recurring lesions. Siroil doesn't stain clothing or bed linen. Offered on two weeks satisfaction or money refunded basis. 21 years of successful results.

Write for free booklet

My thanks to-

SIROIL

AT ALL DRUG STORES

Siroil Laboratories, Inc., Dept. D-26, Santa Monica, Calif.

UNWANTED HAIR?
IT'S OFF because IT'S OUT

Quick as a wink, superfluous hair eliminated. Completely removes all hair from FACE, arms and legs. Checks future growth. Leaves the skin petal-smooth.

ZiP
EPILATOR

Like magic, Milady's skin becomes adorable. For the finest down or the heaviest growth. Seems miraculous, but our 39 years experience proves it is the scientifically correct way. Odorless. Safe. Harmless. Simple to apply. Superior to ordinary hair removers. For 15 years ZiP Epilator was $5.00. NOW ONLY $1.10. Same superior formula, same size. Good stores or by mail $1.10 or C.O.D. No Fed. tax. Above guaranteed, money-back.

JORDEAU INC. Box C-20, SOUTH ORANGE, N.J.

GENUINE large size STUDIO TONE portrait of any movie star. Facsimile AUTOGRAPH. Ready for framing. Also FREE CATALOG!

FREE STUDIO PHOTO

Send name of your favorite star and 15c—or 2 for 25c—to cover handling costs.

HOLLYWOOD STUDIOS
P.O. Box 2807, Dept. M-4
Hollywood 28, Calif.

DANCING SHOES—SUPPLIES

BATON—DRUM CORPS SUPPLIES

SKATING SKIRTS—Roller or Ice.

24 Page Catalog 10c (applied to purchase)

Quincon Dance Supplies, Box 422, Quincy 69, Mass.

CORNS

also Calluses. Quick, easy, and economical. Just rub on. Jars, 35¢, 60¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y.

removed by MOSCO

"Facts About EPILEPSY"

This most interesting and helpful booklet will be mailed to anyone while the supply lasts. We will send a free copy to anyone who writes for it. Lakewood Neurophen Co., Station A., Dept. MM2, Cleveland 2, Ohio.

BE A Nurse

MAKE $50-$60 A WEEK

You can learn practical nursing at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. Thousands of graduates. 55th yr. One graduate has charge of 10-bed hospital. Another saved $400 while learning. Equipment included. Men, women 18 to 60. High school not required. Easy tuition payments. Trial plan. Write today.

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 233, 25 East Jackson Blvd., Chicago 4, Ill.

Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.

Name ____________________
City ____________ State ________ Age ____

You'll be surprised at what happens when lady and servant want the same man!

RAVISHING, irresistible Baroness Anne Stuart always enjoyed the thrill of conquest, and when she met handsome young Dr. Angus Moray, her restlessness flamed as always. How was she to know that she would have to pit her experience against her own servant, pretty Sylvia Hay, who wanted the doctor with all the ardor of first love? You'll enjoy Queen's Gift—the delightful new best-selling story of early Carolina. Regularly $3.75 in the publisher's edition, you may have it with any other two books on this page for a total of only $1, with trial membership in the Dollar Book Club.

An Amazing Offer to new Dollar Book Club members!

ANY 3

OF THESE NEW, FULL-SIZE, HARD-BOUND BOOKS

Up To $15.10 VALUE
IN PUB. EDITIONS

for only $1.00

THE DEVIL'S LAUGHTER

Frank Yerby. Fiery story of Jean Paul Marin and the tawny-haired beauty he adored, in a world gone mad with the wanton excitement of the French Revolution. Newest hit by the author of "Saracen Blade." Pub. ed. $3.50

THE SILVER CHALICE—Thos. Costain

Story of the young Greek ex-slave assigned to fashion a silver case for the cup Christ used at the Last Supper; and the two beautiful women who diverted him. Pub. ed. $3.85

THORNDIKE-BARNHART DICTIONARY

Universally-acclaimed, brand-new! Features every advance in dictionary-making in the last 100 years! 80,000 entries, 700 pictures, 900 pages. Modern definitions, precise synonyms, hundreds of new words.

STORY OF AMERICA IN PICTURES

480 pages, nearly 500 pictures with text, spread the whole thrilling story of America before your eyes — from its beginnings right up to Korea and President Eisenhower. Pub. ed. $7.50

KISS ME AGAIN, STRANGER

Daphne du Maurier. Latest hit by the author of "Rebecca" and "My Cousin Rachel." 8 thrilling stories packed with romance and suspense. Pub. ed. $3.50

HAMMOND-DOUBLEDAY ILLUST'D WORLD ATLAS AND GAZETTEER

Huge 9⅜" by 12¼"! Brand-new! Covers U. S., all foreign countries! 90 up to date maps, 32 full-page, full color! Latest boundaries, population figures, etc. 154 photos, plus 94 pages of fascinating, valuable facts on the world's peoples, industries, customs. A lifetime book!

Save More Than ⅔ on New Best Sellers!

(compared with pub. editions) through the Dollar Book Club

IMAGINE — the very same best-sellers costing $3.00 to $3.95 in publishers' editions come to Dollar Book Club members for only $1—an incredibly big saving which is possible because of the huge printings made for nearly a million members!

Membership in the Dollar Book Club requires no dues of any kind. You do not even have to take a book every month; the purchase of as few as six books a year fulfills your membership requirement.

Get 3 Big Hits Now for Only $1 as Your Introductory Bargain!

When you mail the coupon, you will be sent ANY 3 BOOKS YOU CHOOSE FROM THIS PAGE FOR ONLY $1, plus a few cents shipping cost. Two books are your gift for joining, and one is your first selection. Thereafter, you will receive regularly the Club's Bulletin, which describes the forthcoming $1 selections, also occasional extra-value books up to $1.49. But you buy only the books you want.

Send No Money — Mail Coupon Now!

When you see your introductory Three-Book package — and think of the book bargains you will continue to receive from the Club—you will be delighted to have become a member. If not, return all books in 7 days and your membership will be cancelled, without further obligation. Mail the coupon NOW!

DOUBLEDAY DOLLAR BOOK CLUB, GARDEN CITY, NEW YORK

MAIL THIS COUPON

Doubleday Dollar Book Club, Dept. 3DMG, Garden City, New York

Please enroll me as a Dollar Book Club member. Send me at once the 3 books checked below—and bill me only $1 FOR ALL 3, plus a few cents shipping cost.

- ☐ The Devil's Laughter
- ☐ Kiss Me Again, Stranger
- ☐ Queen's Gift
- ☐ The Silver Chalice
- ☐ Story of America in Pictures
- ☐ Thorndike-Barnhart Dictionary
- ☐ Hammond-Doubleday World Atlas and Gazetteer

Also send my first issue of The Bulletin, telling me about the new forthcoming one-dollar* book selections and other bargains for members.

I may notify you in advance if I do not wish the following month's selections. The purchase of books is entirely voluntary on my part. I do not have to accept a book every month—only six a year. I pay nothing except $1 for each selection I accept, plus a few cents shipping cost (unless I choose an extra-value selection).

NO RISK GUARANTEE: If not delighted return all books in 7 days and membership will be cancelled.

Mr.
Mrs. .... Please Print
Miss

Address..

City
& Zone...State...........

In Canada $1.10 plus shipping. Address Doubleday Book Club (Canada), 105 Bond St., Toronto 2. Offer good in U.S. & Canada only.*

IMAGINE UP TO $100 IN A MONTH JUST FOR WEARING AND SHOWING LOVELY DRESSES!

Slim-line fashion with whirl-away skirt of washable nylon and pima cotton Orlon and Nylon in a wing collar classic with Permo-pleated skirt.
A jaunty "junior with tiny tucks accenting the new side-swept line.
EVERYTHING IS GIVEN TO YOU FREE!

Ladies—here's the best news you ever heard! Your chance to get a whole new beautiful wardrobe of your own . . . a stunning collection of the most colorful new styles . . . WITHOUT PAYING A SINGLE PENNY! And — unbelievable though it sounds—you can make up to $100 in a month just by wearing these glorious dresses—and showing them to your friends!

HERE'S ALL YOU DO!

Just wear these lovely Fashion Frocks given to you as a bonus. What could be more pleasant? You have your choice of over 150 striking new styles—designed by one of America's best known dress companies. When friends ask about them—(as they're bound to!)—simply explain how you can get them the same exquisite styles. Your friends, relatives, neighbors—almost any woman you know—will jump at the chance to get these dresses. It's our way of advertising the unbeatable values offered by world-famous FASHION FROCKS!

NO CANVASSING . . . NO EXPERIENCE!

No woman can resist such smart, original styles . . . such magnificent colors and fabrics. And there's a complete range of sizes for every type of figure . . . Misses, Half-Sizes, Juniors and Stouts. Until you actually see the breath-taking portfolio of new Fashion Frocks, you simply can't imagine the amazing variety of styles, colors, weaves and patterns. What's more, each dress carries the Good Housekeeping Seal and our own unconditional guarantee of satisfaction. So it's no wonder you'll be making BIG MONEY just by wearing and showing them to your friends. Best of all, there's no door-to-door canvassing. You need no experience either. And to top off the whole wonderful plan, you can get your own gorgeous new dresses month after month — without cost to you!

NO OBLIGATION OF ANY KIND!

Everything is ABSOLUTELY FREE OF COST! The coupon brings you a striking Style Portfolio, showing the whole thrilling array of Fashion Frocks designs in glorious color. And you'll receive actual fabric samples of each exclusive new style. And don't forget! Everything you get is absolutely without obligation of any kind!

DON'T WAIT! OPENINGS LIMITED!

Fill out the coupon and send it in before the quota is filled. Don't miss this chance of a lifetime! Paste coupon on postcard—Rush!

FASHION FROCKS
Dept. 0-3054
Cincinnati 25, Ohio

In Canada,
North American Fashion Frocks Ltd.,
2163 Parthenais,
Dept. 0-3054, Montreal, P.Q.

PASTE THIS COUPON ON POSTCARD MAIL TODAY!

FASHION FROCKS, INC.
Dept. O-3054, Cincinnati, Ohio

Yes, I'd like to be one of the women who get the chance to make up to $100 a month for wearing, showing your dresses. Without obligating me in any way, please send everything I need FREE!

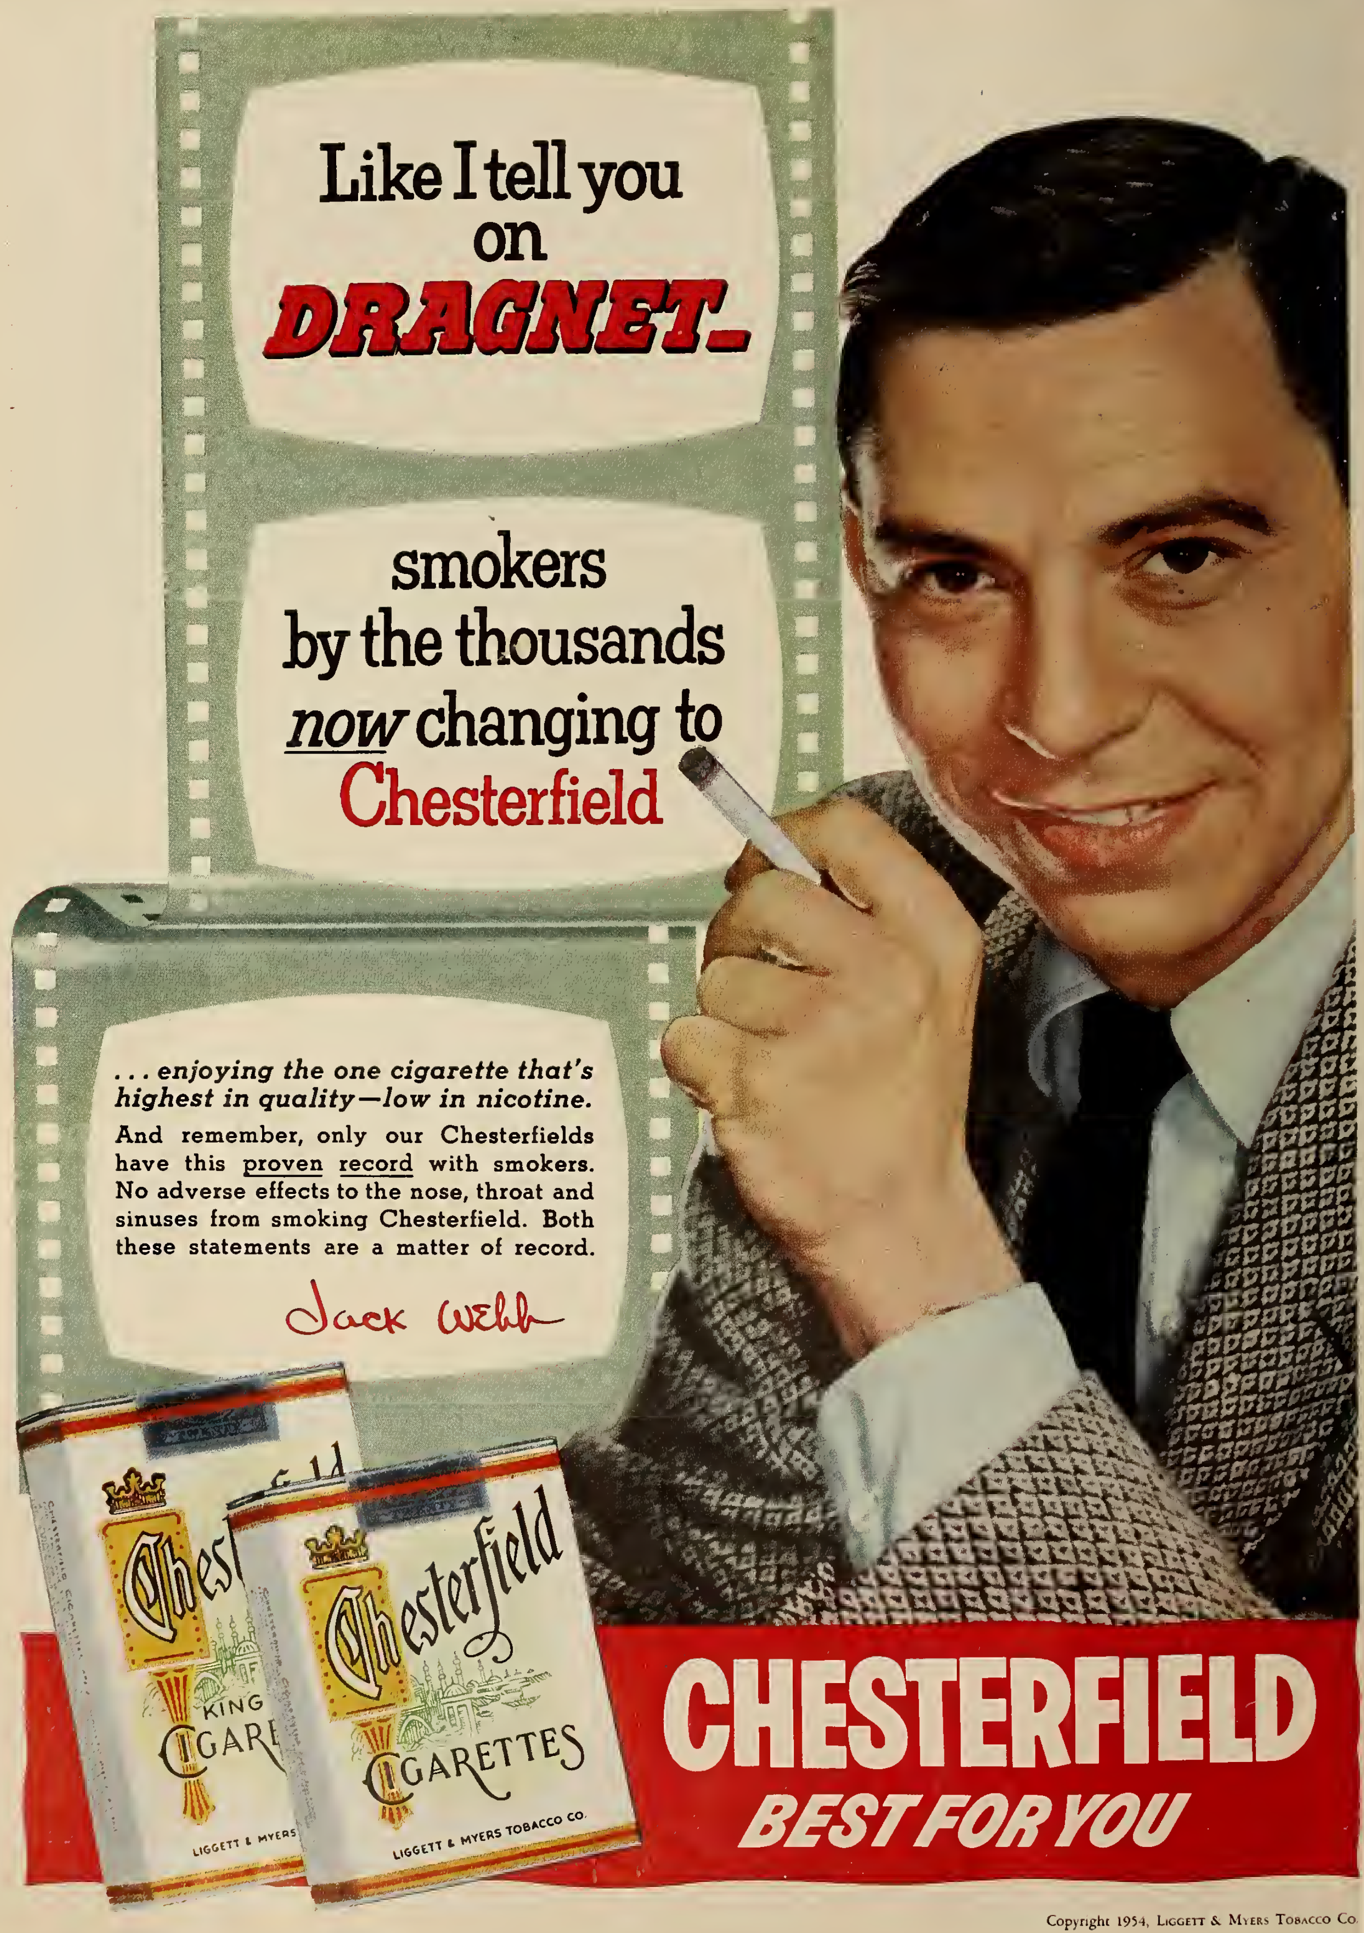
Name______________________________

Address____________________________

City & Zone__________________State_______

Age________Dress Size________

If you live in Canada, mail this coupon to North American Fashion Frocks, Ltd., 2163 Parthenais, Montreal, P. Q.



Chesterfield
KING
CIGARETTES
LIGGETT & MYERS
Chesterfield
CIGARETTES
LIGGETT & MYERS TOBACCO CO.

Like I tell you on DRAGNET– smokers by the thousands now changing to Chesterfield

. . . enjoying the one cigarette that's highest in quality—low in nicotine.

And remember, only our Chesterfields have this proven record with smokers. No adverse effects to the nose, throat and sinuses from smoking Chesterfield. Both these statements are a matter of record.

Jack Webb

CHESTERFIELD

BEST FOR YOU

Copyright 1954, Liggett & Myers Tobacco Co.

EXCLUSIVE! MARILYN MONROE'S HONEYMOON

B 463047

FIVE PAGES OF SCOOP PHOTOS

modern screen

DELL
AGAZINE

20c APR

LIZ TAYLOR:
What bust-up?

That Ivory Look

Young America has it...
You can have it in 7 days!

Babies have That Ivory Look . . . Why shouldn't you? The milder the beauty soap, the prettier your skin. And Ivory is mild enough for a baby's skin . . . in fact, doctors everywhere choose it ahead of all other soaps—for baby's complexion and for yours.

In one week, That Ivory Look for you! It's a complexion that attracts attention. Simply change to regular care and pure, mild Ivory Soap. One week later your skin will look prettier, fresher, younger. You'll have That Ivory Look.

99 44/100 % pure...it floats

Doctors' First Choice For Your Complexion

MAR -5 1954

No dentifrice can stop all cavities—but...

You can prevent up to 60%* of tooth decay

...with new Ipana® containing Anti-Enzyme WD-9

New minty flavor encourages children to brush teeth. As you know, youngsters don't like to use a tooth paste if it doesn't taste good. But Ipana with WD-9 has a new minty flavor so that children will enjoy brushing with it. In tests, new Ipana was liked 2 to 1 for taste.

Confused by recent promises of tooth-paste "miracles"? Here are facts well worth knowing:

1. No tooth paste can stop all tooth decay. This includes our new Ipana with WD-9.

2. But if you want far fewer cavities, no other tooth paste has ever been proved more effective for helping you.

And you can be sure of this:

Two-year clinical tests showed that brushing teeth after eating can reduce tooth decay up to 60%. This means when you use new Ipana with WD-9 this way, the Ipana way—you can expect the same results. Be sure to follow easy directions on the package.

What's more, if you do this, there's an excellent chance that you will never again be bothered by excessive cavities.

The way most dentists recommend

We make these statements confidently because the benefits of the Ipana way were proved by two full years of clinical testing. Most dentists recommend this way (ask yours).

In stopping bacterial-enzyme action that produces tooth-decay acids, WD-9 in new Ipana is one of the most effective ingredients known.

2-year tests showed 60% fewer cavities than from ordinary methods

One or more new cavities for almost 2 out of 3 using ordinary methods.	No new cavities for almost 2 out of 3 people using the Ipana way.

Don't forget your gums

Only your dentist can correct cavities that have already developed and remove hard tartar that may bring on gum troubles—so see him regularly. Between visits, the Ipana way can prevent most tooth decay from starting. And brushing with Ipana from gum margins toward biting edges of teeth helps remove irritants that can lead to gum troubles.

When you can get a tooth paste that does all this without paying a penny extra for it, why not make your next tube Ipana?

Every single brushing fights tooth decay!

Even if you can't always brush your teeth after eating, as you should, new white Ipana with WD-9 still helps you fight tooth decay. Every brushing combats the very causes of cavities . . . checks the bacterial-enzyme action that produces tooth-decay acids.

Best way to stop bad breath all day!

The Ipana way makes it easy to be sure of a fresh, clean breath. One brushing stops most unpleasant mouth odor for as long as 9 hours. Even after smoking and eating anything except, of course, foods like onions and garlic.

Same package
No increase in price

Student nurses are needed
—inquire at your hospital

Put some egg-citement in your hair!
Helene Curtis
shampoo plus egg
CONCENTRATE WITH HAIR-CONDITIONING ACTION
*2%

Caress your hair with the magic touch of fresh whole egg in this super luxury lather! See! Suddenly your hair is so silky, so manageable, so glowingly clean you can't believe your own eyes! Even dull, difficult hair is transformed! Try it! From 29c

APRIL, 1954

AMERICA'S GREATEST MOVIE MAGAZINE

modern screen

stories

THROUGH WITH LOVE (Jane Wyman) by Jack Wade 24
THE COMPLETE STORY OF MARILYN MONROE'S HONEYMOON by Alice Hoffman 27
I LOVED AND LOST (Jane Powell) by Imogene Collins 32
"I DIDN'T MARRY AN ANGEL" (Lana Turner-Lex Barker) by Jim Newton 34
WHY HOLLYWOOD IS SORE AT EDDIE FISHER by Alice Finletter 36
DUTCH TREAT (Audrey Hepburn) by Kirtley Baskette 38
EVERYTHING'S OKAY (Elizabeth Taylor-Mike Wilding) by Herb Howe 40
BUNGALOW BIG ENOUGH FOR TWO (Janet Leigh-Tony Curtis) by Marva Peterson 42
BING'S SECRET LOVE'S NO SECRET ANY MORE (Bing Crosby) by William Barbour 46
THE CASE OF THE SMUGGLED ERMINE (Terry Moore) by John Maynard 48
LOVE IS WHERE YOU FIND IT (Jeanne Crain) by Louis Pollock 50
WHAT MAKES STANWYCK TICK? (Barbara Stanwyck) by John Maynard 54
MARRY THE GIRL! (Shelley Winters-Vittorio Gassman) by Steve Cronin 56
THE HAPPY FAITH by Rock Hudson 58

featurettes

¡QUAPISIMA ELIZABETH! (Elizabeth Taylor) by Wanda Hale 61
HE DIDN'T CARRY THE BALL (Aldo Ray) 86
POWER-FUL DYNASTY (Tyrone Power) 87
THE TRYST THAT FAILED (Donald O'Connor) 91

departments

THE INSIDE STORY 4
LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS 6
JUST FOR THE RECORDS by George Frazier 12
HOLLYWOOD ABROAD 16
MOVIE REVIEWS by Florence Epstein 18
MODERN SCREEN FASHIONS 68
TV TALK 82

On the Cover: Color portrait of Elizabeth Taylor is by John Engstead. Miss Taylor can be seen currently in MGM's Rhapsody. Other picture credits appear on page 93.

CHARLES D. SAXON
editor

DURBIN HORNER
executive editor

CARL SCHROEDER
western manager

PAIGE LOHR, story editor
BARBARA J. MAYER, assistant editor
KATIE ROBINSON, western editor
FERNANDO TEXIDOR, art director
BILL WEINBERGER, art editor
BOB BEERMAN, staff photographer
BERT PARRY, staff photographer
MARCIA L. SILVER, research editor

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS

Changes of address should reach us five weeks in advance of the next issue date. Give both your old and new address, enclosing if possible your old address label.

POSTMASTER: Please send notice on Form 3578 and copies returned under Label Form 3579 to 263 Ninth Ave., New York 1, New York

MODERN SCREEN, Vol. 48, No. 5, April, 1954. Published monthly by Dell Publishing Company, Inc. Office of publication at Washington and South Aves., Dunellen, N. J. Executive and editorial offices, 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y. Dell Subscription Service: 10 West 33rd St., New York 1, N. Y. Chicago advertising office, 221 No. LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill. Los Angeles advertising and editorial offices, 8701 West 3rd Street, Los Angeles, California. George T. Delacorte, Jr., President; Helen Meyer, Vice-Pres.; Albert P. Delacorte, Vice-Pres. Published simultaneously in the Dominion of Canada. International copyright secured under the provisions of the Revised Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. All rights reserved under the Buenos Aires Convention. Single copy price 20c in U. S. A. and Canada. Subscriptions in U. S. A. and Possessions, and Canada $2.00 one year; $3.50 two years; $5.00 three years; Foreign, $3.00 a year. Entered as second class matter September 18, 1930, at the post office at Dunellen, N. J., under Act of March 3, 1879. Copyright 1954 by Dell Publishing Company, Inc. Printed in U. S. A. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Names of characters used in semi-fictional matter are fictitious—if the name of any living person is used it is purely a coincidence. Trademark No. 301778.

M·G·M

presents the first great Musical

in

CINEMASCOPE

All New and in COLOR glory…

ROSE MARIE

Thrilling love drama! Romantic songs to lift the heart! M-G-M's BIG NEW musical, eye-filling in CinemaScope color grandeur!

SONGS…

ROSE MARIE

SONG OF THE MOUNTIES

I'M A MOUNTIE WHO NEVER GOT HIS MAN

FREE TO BE FREE

STARRING

ANN BLYTH · HOWARD KEEL · FERNANDO LAMAS

BERT LAHR · MARJORIE MAIN

…AND MORE SONGS

INDIAN LOVE CALL

I HAVE THE LOVE

MOUNTIE'S LULLABY

THE RIGHT PLACE FOR A GIRL

Hear the thrilling songs in the M-G-M Record Album!

WITH

JOAN TAYLOR · RAY COLLINS · A MERVYN LeROY PRODUCTION · Screen Play by RONALD MILLAR AND GEORGE FROESCHEL · Based on the Operetta "ROSE MARIE" · Book and Lyrics by OTTO A. HARBACH AND OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN II · Music by RUDOLF FRIML AND HERBERT STOTHART · Directed by MERVYN LeROY · An M-G-M Picture

Noreen

SUPER COLOR RINSE

Noreen Super Color Rinse is temporary but completely effective...Adds glamorous color, safely and easily, without making a permanent change...stays fresh until your next shampoo. Try on your Noreen color... see how it makes dull hair exciting, really blends in unwanted gray, or beautifies gray and white hair. Choose from 14 lovely, inexpensive shades.

At cosmetic counters everywhere.
Also professionally applied in beauty salons.
Available in Canada.

THE INSIDE STORY

Here's the truth about the stars—as you asked for it. Want to spike more rumors? Want more facts? Write to THE INSIDE STORY Modern Screen, 8701 W. Third St., Los Angeles 48, Cal.

Q. Does Cary Grant really get irritated when he is asked about his early days as a Coney Island stilts-walker? Is it also true that when he married Barbara Hutton, he signed a waiver of his rights to any of her fortune, just as Porfirio Rubirosa did? —G.U., BOSTON, MASS.

A. Yes on both counts.

Q. Has Ingrid Bergman really become an opera star? Has she given up all hope of seeing her daughter Pia again? —M.H., SCRANTON, PA.

A. Miss Bergman made her opera debut at the San Carlo Opera House, Naples, two months ago in Joan Of Arc At The Stake, but she didn't sing. She received twenty-one curtain calls. She expects her daughter to visit her in Europe this summer.

Q. When Roman Holiday was shown in my neighborhood, the advertisements carried Audrey Hepburn's head on top of Terry Moore's figure. What was Audrey's reaction to this? —C.L., SAN CARLOS, CALIF.

A. Said Miss Hepburn, "It is an indignity and a frightful insult."

Q. Is there a full-fledged romance between Pat Crowley and Vic Damone or is it publicity? —E.T., MIAMI, FLA.

A. Publicity.

Q. How old, really, are Spencer Tracy, Fred Astaire, Clark Gable, Gary Cooper, and Richard Arlen?—V.U., AMES, IOWA.

A. Tracy, Astaire, and Arlen are fifty-three. Cooper and Gable fifty-two.

Q. Can you tell me the name of the plastic surgeon who recently "lifted" Sonja Henie's face in a New York Hospital? —H.R., SPRING VALLEY, N. Y.

A. Miss Henie insists, "I have never had my face lifted."

Q. Sid Luft, Judy Garland's husband, once worked for Eleanor Powell, now Mrs. Glenn Ford. Exactly what work did Luft do for Eleanor Powell? —E.D., DENVER, COL.

A. He was her private secretary.

Q. Is it on the level that Debbie Reynolds has been getting $8,000 a week from RKO for working in Susan Slept Here? —T.R., DALLAS, TEX.

A. No. MGM has received that sum for loaning out Debbie. Her salary is $750 a week.

Q. To whom was Sir Laurence Olivier married before Vivien Leigh became his wife? —H.O., LONDON, ENG.

A. Actress Jill Esmond.

Q. Doesn't Ava Gardner have a secret romance in Madrid? Isn't that why she always vacations there? —E.R., SMITHFIELD, N. C.

A. No. Ava's close friend in Madrid is Mrs. Doreen Grant.

Q. Bing Crosby used to own KXLY and KXLY-TV in Spokane. Can you tell me how much he sold it for? —E.R., SPOKANE, WASH.

A. The corporation owning both properties was sold for $1,750,000.

Q. I've been told on good authority that all the motion picture fan magazines are controlled by one central organization in Hollywood. Is that true? —E.V., PATERSON, N. J.

A. No.

Q. How long was singer Guy Mitchell married and how much did his divorce cost him? —U.G., CHICAGO, ILL.

A. Mitchell was married to Jackie Loughery, Miss U.S.A. of 1952, for eleven months. He now pays $1500 a month alimony and $10,000 in legal fees to his former wife's lawyer.

Q. Did Greer Garson's husband really give her a $50,000 fur coat for Christmas? —F.R., SAN ANTONIO, TEXAS.

A. Miss Garson received from her husband for Christmas a full-length, pale blue mink coat valued by furriers who have seen it at between $10,000 and $15,000.

Q. Jane Powell has been dating Pat Nerney. Who has Gene Nelson been dating?—V.L., SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.

A. His wife.

PARAMOUNT presents

BOB HOPE
JOAN FONTAINE

in

CASANOVA'S BIG NIGHT

co-starring

BASIL RATHBONE
AUDREY DALTON
HUGH MARLOWE

Color by TECHNICOLOR

NOW
THE WORLD'S GREATEST LAUGH-MAKER... AS HISTORY'S GREATEST LOVE-MAKER!

It's Hope at his funniest . . . in the role he was born to slay! He'll murder you . . . as the imposter who's shy of swords, but a devil with the damsels! Follow his hilarious trail . . . from boudoir to dungeon . . . in Paramount's fun-packed tale of romance and mirth!

Produced by PAUL JONES
Directed by NORMAN Z. McLEOD
Written for the Screen by HAL KANTER and EDMUND HARTMANN · Based on a story by AUBREY WISBERG

The talk of the town was the huge welcome-home-from-Korea party given at Ciro's for Terry Moore, Ciro's owner, Herman Hover, hosted the party. Asiatic-style dresses worn by Terry and Susan were created for them on their Pacific tour.

Ann Blyth attended with her husband, Dr. Jim McNulty. Mother-to-be Ann noted that Far Eastern styles made wonderful maternity clothes!

Debbie Reynolds, Terry's best friend, was on hand to welcome her. Deb's escort, Max Anthony, seemed to prefer western attire.

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD

SHELLEY VS. VITTORIO . . . JUNE HAVER FINDS FRED MACMURRAY . . .

WHAT THE WORLD doesn't know about the blowup between Shelley Winters and Vittorio Gassman in Italy is that it did not originate in Rome as advertised via headlines, but right here in Hollywood as far back as October.

It was on October 17, 1953, that Shelley, sporting a black eye, walked into Jerry Geisler's offices and asked her lawyer to draw up divorce papers.

He advised her to wait. Vittorio was going to return to Italy anyway and their battle might subside during the weeks in which she had to make a movie at U-I.

I guess Geisler knew his client, our gal Shell.

The absence from Vittorio certainly made Shelley's heart grow fonder. She nearly broke her neck and wore out the cast and crew of Play Girl working overtime so she could fly to Rome to try to make up with Vittorio. She really loved that guy!

The first shock came when he failed to meet her plane in Rome after she had cabled him the hour. Of course he was on tour with Hamlet, but those things can be arranged.

When Shelley finally caught up with the company she was so hurt and mad she completely blew her top, not, believe me, over Gassman's acting in Hamlet but over his "acting up" with his eighteen-year-old leading lady, Anna Maria Ferraro.

Reports about Anna Maria had reached Shelley's ears in Hollywood but she didn't believe them.

She returned to Rome and cried her heart out on the shoulder of her old pal, Farley Granger, before she finally couldn't stand it any longer and shouted her heartbreak to the housetops, not to mention the wire services:

"He'll have to give me $95,000 to support our baby and he'll have to marry that Ferraro girl! . . . I don't want our baby to know her father or learn to love him . . . he'd just break her heart by neglecting her. . . . How dare he put me in this unglamorous position because of an eighteen-year-old girl!"—and so on and on.

Vittorio, too, had plenty to say. The parting shot was, "She's a liar."

Certainly it can be said on Shelley's side that she did everything in the world to put Vittorio over in Hollywood, even to paying for his first trip here before he got an MGM contract.

Maybe Shelley is loud. But she's honest and loyal—even to trying hard to protect Gassman when everyone in Hollywood knew how he was neglecting her.

AS THE OLD YEAR died out and the New Year rang in, Fred MacMurray and June Haver were wrapped in a clinch, whispering sweet somethings to each other and completely oblivious of about 200 other guests dancing around them at a "private" party.

These two are the hottest romance in town and seldom have I seen such ardor as they staged, seemingly unable to stay more than two inches apart the entire evening.

June looked like a pretty doll in a very décolleté pink satin gown with her blonde hair in short ringlets all over her head.

I must say that everyone seems very much

Susan Zanuck and the troupe.

Mitzi Gaynor, with Jack Bean, wore Bob Wagner's Prince Valiant wig. Ciro's was closed to public for entire evening.

NEWS

. . . DALE ROBERTSONS SPLIT

Bing Crosby brought Mona Freeman to the Pebble Beach Golf Tournament. (See the real story behind their romance on page 46!) Among the stars who played in Bing's Professional-Amateur tourney were Dean Martin, Phil Harris, Randolph Scott . . . the rest of Hollywood watched.

in favor of this new love story between two people who have had such tragedies in their lives. They were two lonely people before they met at the Gay '90's holiday party given for John Wayne by Ned Marin.

Fred had come alone. Junie's escort was A. C. Blumenthal. But just as it happened in the song, "the strangers saw each other across a crowded room," and it was nothing but enchantment for them from there on.

The handsome Fred took Junie home from the party and they have been an every night date since.

Such stars in their eyes!

In addition to the almost visible physical attraction between them, another close bond will be Junie's love of children. Fred is devoted to his motherless youngsters.

In fact, right after he kissed Junie "Happy New Year," he went to the telephone and held a long conversation with his little brood, and June was right beside him.

ALTHOUGH MEL FERRER and his wife separated frequently and spasmodically made up, they seemed to stall on an actual divorce until Mel fell head over heels for charmer Audrey Hepburn.

Then, Mrs. Ferrer took herself to Mexico and obtained a divorce so quietly that nothing was printed about it for ten days.

Since then Mel and Audrey are practically an every night date around New York, chaperoned by her mother!

(Incidentally, for your information, all the time Audrey was supposed to be having torrid romances with Gregory Peck and a couple of other attractive gentlemen in Europe last summer, Mama was also very much in evidence, keeping an eye on her talented daughter.)

Getting back to the Mel Ferrer divorce, I heard an amusing story about ten-year-old Mark Ferrer's reaction (if the remarks of these children of divorce can ever be said to be amusing).

The morning after his mother returned from Mexico, a free woman, young Mark greeted her at breakfast with, "Well, good morning, Miss Pilchard"—her maiden name.

DALE ROBERTSON and Jackie haven't been hitting it off for some time. Even so, he was completely taken by surprise when, as Dale lunched in the commissary at 20th Century-Fox one rainy afternoon, a process server up and put Jacqueline's intention-to-divorce papers in his hand.

Jackie isn't being too secret about why their marriage went on the rocks. Her side of it is that Dale took his stardom big, believed everything the fans and his press agents wrote, and was generally a little potentate around the house.

So far, Dale has had nothing to say except that he is sorry they couldn't make a go of it, particularly for the sake of their one-and-a-half-year-old daughter.

You'd be surprised if you knew who was making a pitch for Dale the minute his wife's divorce plans became known.

ABOUT MARILYN AND JOE: He calls her "Baby," but because he doesn't like to be called by smooch names, she calls him Joe . . . He's the boss . . . Every move of

"Doctor,

please tell me"

Countless women have asked their doctors questions like these:

"Is it true that Tampax may be used by any normal woman?"

Absolutely. The principle of internal absorption, on which Tampax is based, was prescribed by many doctors long before the product was introduced. One of them decided to extend the benefits to all women. He would never have done so, had he not been positive Tampax could be used universally.

"I've heard that Tampax prevents odor from forming. How?"

Tampax prevents exposure to the air, which is the chief cause of odor. The product is easy to handle and dispose of; user's hands need not touch the Tampax.

"Will Tampax cause discomfort?"

Many women, whose viewpoints are colored by their experiences with external pads, fear that an internal protection might be even more uncomfortable. Actually, once the Tampax is properly inserted, it can't even be felt!

There is no more reason for modern women to be held to the cumbersome belt-pin-pad harness than there is for them to wear a bustle or hoop skirts. Tampax is available in 3 absorbency-sizes (Regular, Super, Junior) at drug or notion counters. Month's supply goes into purse. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Massachusetts.

Sanitary Protection Worn Internally
Regular
TAMPAX
SUPER TAMPAX
JUNIOR TAMPAX
10 TAMPAX—AN AVERAGE MONTH'S SUPPLY
Accepted For Advertising by the Journal of The American Medical Association

Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of the American Medical Association

LOUELLA PARSONS' good news Continued

her suspension was dictated by Joe, an old hand at bringing baseball teams around to his terms, financially. He used to go into hiding every time his Yankee contract came up for renewal and he always came up with more moola . . . She likes nightclubs and cafes . . . He doesn't . . . So they compromise by eating in popular cafes in off-hours . . . like steak dinners at three o'clock in the afternoon . . . One of their favorite hangouts is the Hollywood Brown Derby . . . They like having breakfast in the bar around two in the afternoon . . . He likes women in black . . . They got a kick out of the fact that while reporters, cameramen and 20th's press agents were staked out in front of her swank apartment, waiting their arrival on their honeymoon, they were secretly ensconced on the secluded Idylwild estate of Marilyn's lawyer, Lloyd Wright. Only the caretaker knew they were there. . . . Her wedding gift to him was a new Cadillac . . . He gave her a new home on the Peninsula in San Francisco . . . She's beginning to love his hometown as much as Joe does . . . They registered at the motel in Paso Robles as "Mr. and Mrs. Joe DiMaggio, San Francisco" . . . When they argue (and they do) Joe gets very excited and waves his arms and talks . . . Baby just gets quieter and quieter and hardly opens her mouth until the battle is over and they kiss and make up . . . Then they both beam and laugh and talk and swear they'll never fight again. Which they do—even as you and I.

THE REGISTRAR at Scripps Clinic in La Jolla looked up, smiled, and handed the young man standing on the other side of the desk an admittance blank.

"Just fill in your name and address now," the nurse said, "and we'll get the rest of the information later."

When the patient handed back the paper after complying, the nurse gurgled, "Oh, yes, Mr. Lanza. Just go to your room, please, it's 204. Someone will be with you immediately."

When the "someone" went to the room, 204, he took a look around and walked right back to the desk.

"There's no one there," he reported.

And you know what—there was no one there!

It developed that Mario checked into the famed clinic for a complete overhauling, walked into the room assigned him and then walked out the back door and drove away.

They haven't seen hide nor hair of him since.

One report came that he had gone to Las Vegas, where they also give you a "going over" but not of the type endorsed by Scripps Clinic.

Mario's completely unfathomable behavior would be slightly amusing if it weren't so basically tragic.

MY HEART SALUTES beautiful, brown-eyed Suzan Ball, one of the most courageous girls I have ever known.

As I write this, it is only a few hours after the amputation of her leg. Her doctor just called me to say that Suzan is doing as well as can be expected. Dick Long, who was with her during the surgery, has gone home to get a little rest.

He says, "I am going to marry Suzan the day she leaves that hospital!"

The thing that hurts so deeply is that Suzan had believed right up to the time that the doctor was forced to tell her the bitter truth—that her leg was cancerous—that her faith would cure the malignancy.

And it was this same wonderful faith that gave her the courage to tell them to go ahead with the operation. At the same time she requested that an artificial limb be ordered right away, "so I can get used to wearing it as soon as possible."

The real reason why Suzan broke her engagement to Dick a few months back can be told now, too. She said, "I didn't want him to be saddled with a cripple. I love him too much."

Fred Morin's Gay Nineties party in honor of John Wayne was fun. The barbershop quintet included Fred MacMurray, Jeanne Crain and Red Skelton. Later, at this party, Fred met June Haver.

HAVE YOU SEEN ALL THESE WONDERFUL 20th CENTURY-FOX HITS IN

CINEMASCOPE

The Anamorphic Lens Process . . . on the scientifically created Miracle Mirror Screen . . . in the Wonder of Stereophonic Sound!

The Robe

RICHARD BURTON · JEAN SIMMONS · VICTOR MATURE · MICHAEL RENNIE

CINEMASCOPE
TECHNICOLOR

How To Marry A Millionaire

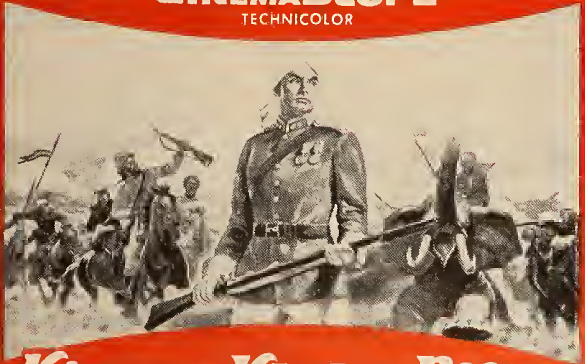
MARILYN MONROE · BETTY GRABLE · LAUREN BACALL and WILLIAM POWELL

CINEMASCOPE
TECHNICOLOR

Beneath the 12-Mile Reef

ROBERT WAGNER · TERRY MOORE · GILBERT ROLAND

CINEMASCOPE
TECHNICOLOR



King of the Khyber Rifles

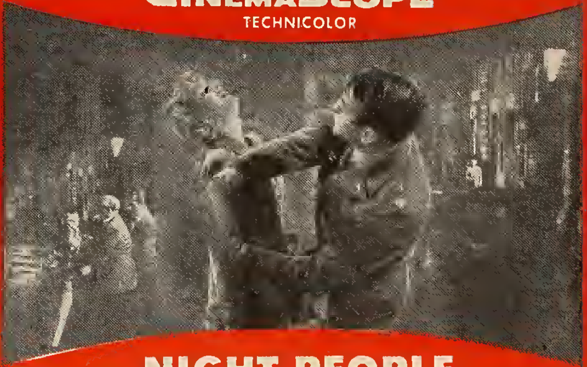
TYRONE POWER · TERRY MOORE · MICHAEL RENNIE

CINEMASCOPE
Technicolor DELUXE

Hell and High Water

RICHARD WIDMARK · BELLA DARVI

CINEMASCOPE
Technicolor DELUXE



NIGHT PEOPLE

GREGORY PECK · BRODERICK CRAWFORD · ANITA BJORK · RITA GAM

CINEMASCOPE
Technicolor DELUXE

CINEMASCOPE IS THE HALLMARK OF QUALITY IN MOTION PICTURE ENTERTAINMENT!

Mona Freeman Tells How to LOSE UGLY FAT

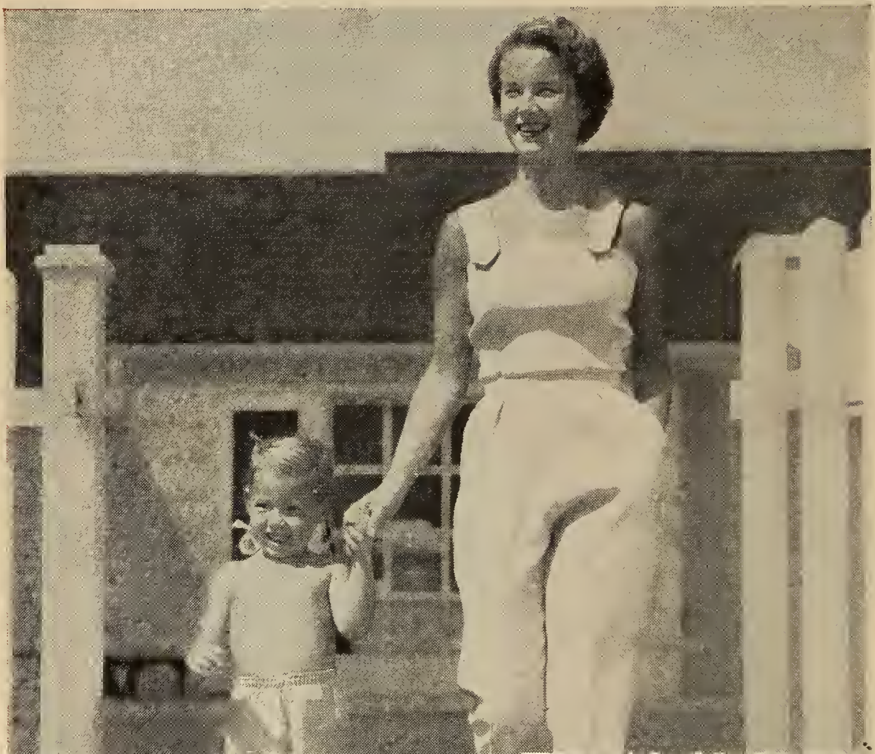
This Easy, Pleasant Way!



Mona Freeman loves the sea and the beach. "If you want to have a lovely figure, I recommend Ayds," says Mona Swimming is Mona's favorite outdoor sport. She says, "Whenever I am putting on too much weight, I start taking Ayds."

Mona Freeman is just one of the many Hollywood stars—the most figure conscious women in the world—who keep themselves trim with the help of Ayds. You can be certain that if Ayds works for them, it will help you to lose weight just as easily, pleasantly and safely!

Proved by Clinical Tests!

With Ayds you lose weight the way Nature intended you to—without strenuous dieting or hunger. A quick natural way, clinically tested and approved by doctors, with no risk to health. With the Ayds Plan you should feel healthier, look better while reducing—and have a lovelier figure.

When you take Ayds before meals, as directed, you can eat what you want—all you want. No starvation dieting—no gnawing hunger pangs. Ayds is a specially made, low calorie candy fortified with health-giving vitamins and minerals. Ayds curbs your appetite—you automatically eat less—lose weight naturally, safely, quickly. It contains no drugs or laxatives.

Guaranteed—A Lovelier Figure!

Users report losing up to ten pounds with the very first box. Others say they have lost twenty to thirty pounds with the Ayds Plan. You, too, must lose pounds with the very first box ($2.98) or your money back. At drug or department stores.

LOUELLA PARSONS' good news

Continued

So she told Dick that the doctors had told her that her leg was cured and that she didn't want to get married because she wanted to concentrate on her career and make up for the time she had been forced to lose.

Suzan did such a wonderful acting job that Dick believed her—but not for long. The minute he read she was back in a hospital, he rushed to her side and said, "Honey, you wonderful liar. But don't you ever tell another one to me. You aren't going to lose me for the rest of your life."

Just before the operation Suzan said to a close friend, "Please never feel sorry for me. I don't feel sorry for myself.

"There are still many roles I can play on the screen. I have the love of a wonderful boy. And my studio has assumed all financial burdens and is continuing to pay my salary for life.

"I still have many wonderful things in my life and I am deeply grateful for my blessings!"

God bless you, Susie, and your beautiful, fine spirit.

THE REAL REASON back of the breakup of Arlene Dahl and Fernando Lamas is that the Señor is not of a marrying frame of mind and Arlene is of a mind to have no more of it—or him.

I had a hunch that all was not well with this romance long before it came out in the open. Arlene had called to tell me goodbye when she was off to New York.

"How can you bear to leave Fernando?" I asked this redhead, who had really been off her rocker about the guy.

"Oh, that isn't hard," she flipped, "all men are a pain in the neck!" When a lady says that—she usually has one particular man in mind!

ASKED THE REAL CAUSE of trouble between himself and Leslie Caron, Geordie Hormel said with admirable honesty:

"I haven't accomplished anything in the last eighteen months to win her respect. My career in music has not kept pace with Leslie's career in films and the ballet.

"But she is a changed girl, not like the sweetheart I married. She doesn't want to be married any longer."

I hear there is another big problem between Leslie and her husband. Money.

(Continued on page 15)

The guests of honor were John Wayne and Pilar Pallette. Many believe these two will marry.

Time Magazine reports on recent medical findings about

SKIN OF WOMEN'S HANDS DAMAGED BY SOAPS, DETERGENTS!

NOW! YOU CAN PROTECT YOUR HANDS FROM IRRITANTS!

USE PLAYTEX® LIVING GLOVES

LATEX, FABRIC LINED

HAVE LOVELIER HANDS IN ONLY 9 DAYS

- Made of Non-Allergenic "Living" Latex.
- Water-proof.
- Fabric-lined—for "bare hand" comfort.
- Non-slip surface—for "bare hand" grip.
- Extra-long turn-back cuffs to prevent drip, splatter.
- Easy on and off.
- Finger free, can pick up pin or dime.
- Never sticky, never clammy.

Hands protected by Playtex Living Gloves cannot possibly be harmed by soaps, detergents or cleansers.

Strong soaps, harsh detergents continually dry out the skin (see photos at left), may even create ugly eruptions. Household cleansers, bleaches, waxes, polishes may aggravate already sensitive skins. Lotions, creams may create fertile "soil" for germs.

Hot water, oven heat, refrigerator cold, irritating household chemicals, can complete the drying, roughening, cracking — and ruin of your skin and nails.

Yet You Can Prevent It All! Yes, All! Proof In Only 9 Days

Do all your housework — dishes, laundry, cleaning, scrubbing — with Playtex "Living" Gloves. The makers of these gloves, world's largest producers of dipped latex products, give you —

A Daring Promise Never Made Before:

In only 9 days PLAYTEX Gloves can help restore the natural smoothness of your hands.

Playtex "Living" Gloves give your skin's natural oils a chance to bring back the natural loveliness of your hands. Give your hands and manicures the protection they can never get out of any bottle or jar. And: The very first manicure you save pays for your Gloves.

Get them today! Have lovelier hands in only 9 days!

The attention of the medical profession is called to the article in Time Magazine, Nov. 9th, 1953, and recent article in Sept., 1953 Archives of Dermatology etc., dealing with the effects on women's hands of soaps and detergents.

$1.39

Prices slightly higher outside U.S.A.

©1954 International Latex Corp'n., PLAYTEX PARK, Dover Del.
In Canada: Playtex Limited, Arnprior, Ontario

The latest on recording stars, new releases and equipment, written exclusively for MODERN SCREEN by one of America's leading record experts.

JUST FOR THE RECORDS

by George Frazier

TV star Jackie Gleason records favorites on LP.

■ Of all the performers I know, the most versatile—except, perhaps, José Ferrer—is Jackie Gleason. Jackie's range of interests and accomplishments is enormous, extending all the way from trying to outdo Toots Shor to composing ballet music. I'm not being facetious. Jackie's problem as well as his great gift is his refusal to adopt partway measures. His drive is prodigious. He wants to do everything and to do everything better than anybody else. Even when he goes to the hospital in an effort to cut down his weight, he does it in a grand way. I'm always astonished when I drop in on Jackie at the suite he retains in Doctor's Hospital. I always thought of a hospital as a place for rest and seclusion, but Jackie destroyed that idea. In the genuine sense of the term, he holds court, lying in bed while a small army of attendants scurry back and forth serving his visitors food and drink. In all the years I've known him I have yet to see Jackie take things in stride. A couple of years ago, for example, he moved into the Park Sheraton Hotel in New York. Most men of his means would have been content with a good suite. Not Jackie. He had to take the fabulous penthouse—at the price, I understand, of $25,000 a year.

That's the lighter side of Jackie. Infinitely more important is his talent—and that is boundless. Singlehandedly, he has succeeded in raising the CBS-TV network to a number one position on Saturday nights. Jackie and I discussed this a couple of weeks ago. What I learned from Jackie should, I think, be of value to anybody who wishes to get ahead in the entertainment business. To paraphrase it he stressed the fact that you must—or you must try to—know everything.

"Look at me," he said. "I'm a clumsy guy, George, but you've seen me on my show. I dance, sing, make jokes, play skits —I lead the orchestra every so often. I even write tunes." Jackie does write tunes —and some pretty good ones. Anybody who is inclined to doubt it should examine a new Capitol LP called "Tawny."

"Tawny" is a ballet which Jackie composed for his Saturday night show. I daresay other people have composed more enduring music, but this is pleasant listening. The other night, Jackie and I spent some time listening and listening again to it. Like all of us, I suppose, Jackie has had his share of shattered romances. And like all of us, he has been affected by them. We all express things differently. Jackie's outlet was in writing "Tawny."

To those who know him only from his television show, Jackie probably seems like the complete clown. He isn't. He is vitally concerned with public affairs. He is deeply conscious of social problems. He reads constantly.

When we discussed "Tawny," he said, "You know Guy de Maupassant. Well, this cat had a line somewhere about a dame. 'She fills you to the marrow with desire,' he said. I had a girl like that and I guess I'll never forget her. But what do you do? You can't go around the rest of your life crying in your beer, can you? My own personal purgatory made me write this music. Maybe it isn't great, but it does happen to be sincere."

I agree with him. If it is nothing else, "Tawny" is sincere. But what always has amazed me—and always will amaze me—is that Jackie cannot read music. In his case, I guess it's a blessing. He does unconventional things that no trained musician would attempt and the results are exciting. Someday, I suppose, Jackie will settle down to what most of us consider a normal life. In the meantime his prodigious drive and versatility will keep him trying rash things that most of us would shun. If Jackie marries the girl with whom he is now in love, we can expect something a lot different from "Tawny." Until then, though, "Tawny" will be the expression of Jackie Gleason's feeling about a beautiful woman. On the other side of this 10-inch LP Jackie and his band play "Little Girl," "If I Had You," "Some Day" and "I Cover the Waterfront."

PROBABLY I've spent more than enough time in recent issues writing about Glenn Miller. You'll have to excuse me if I do so again. I do it here mostly in the interest of economics. As you doubtless know, RCA Victor brought out a Glenn Miller "Limited Edition" (limited, as one executive of the company said, to as many people as will buy it) at $24.95. It is a handsome job, wrapped in simulated white leather and adorned with draw-

(Continued on page 14)

For MODERN SCREEN Readers Only!
Jackie Gleason's New LP—Personally Autographed
Plus a Special Discount!

MODERN SCREEN has arranged for you to get Jackie Gleason's fabulous new Capitol LP with Jackie's personal autograph on your copy! You'll get Mr. Saturday Night himself, playing "Tawny," "Little Girl," "If I Had You," "Some Day" and "I Cover The Waterfront" for the special discount price of only $2.50—including mailing costs! Send the coupon below (with $2.50 in cash, check or money order) and your autographed album will be shipped to you immediately.

Jackie Gleason
P.O. Box 125
Murray Hill Sta., N. Y. 16, N. Y.

Please rush me postpaid my autographed copy of your new Capitol LP "Tawny."
$2.50 is enclosed in cash ☐ check ☐ money order ☐

NAME ______

ST. AND NO. ______

CITY & STATE ______

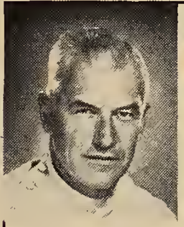
Here is proof of the greatest scientific discovery in toothpaste history—proof that Colgate Dental Cream with Gardol,* Colgate's exclusive anti-enzyme ingredient, gives the best protection against tooth-decay enzymes of any toothpaste!

ONLY NEW COLGATE DENTAL CREAM HAS THE CLINICAL PROOF

that brings new hope to millions for

Lifetime Protection Against Tooth Decay!

Actual use by hundreds of people has proved the long-lasting protection of New Colgate Dental Cream with Gardol! Tests supervised by leading dental authorities—for a full year—proved this protection won't rinse off, won't wear off! Proved just daily morning and night use guards against decay-causing enzymes every minute of the day and night!



A JURY OF DISTINGUISHED DENTISTS HAS APPROVED THIS EVIDENCE . . .

All the facts, published in authoritative dental journals, have convinced these dentists that Colgate Dental Cream with Gardol is far more effective against decay-causing enzymes than any other toothpaste. And because Gardol is the only long-lasting anti-enzyme ingredient with clinical proof, these dental authorities agree that New Colgate's with Gardol gives the surest protection against tooth decay ever offered by any toothpaste.

NO OTHER TOOTHPASTE
Offers Proof of Such Results!

NO OTHER TOOTHPASTE
Contains Anti-Enzyme Ingredient
GARDOL
*SODIUM N-LAUROYL SARCOSINATE

PROTECTION THAT WON'T RINSE OFF OR WEAR OFF ALL DAY

Large Size 27¢
Giant Size 47¢
Economy Size 63¢

CLEANS YOUR BREATH WHILE IT CLEANS YOUR TEETH!

For* LIFETIME PROTECTION AGAINST TOOTH-DECAY ENZYMES

Mrs. Georgia Elliot, Tenafly, N. J. uses detergents regularly, yet still keeps her hands soft.

"I wash 24,000 pieces of silverware a year... but I'm proud of my pretty hands!"

Only 10¢ to $1.00
plus tax

Candlelight and gleaming silver make a perfect setting for Georgia Elliot. But to keep that silver bright, she uses detergents to help her wash and polish thousands of pieces a year. (As many as you!)

Detergents cut grease, but they can also rob hands of natural oils, and leave them rough and red.

But not Georgia's hands! After detergents . . . after any harsh soap or cleanser, she puts on pure, white Jergens Lotion, right away.

It penetrates instantly (doesn't just "coat" her hands) with two important softening ingredients. It actually helps replace necessary softening moisture.

Keep your home detergent-bright, by all means. But be sure to use the world's most popular hand care daily, if you want to keep your hands soft and lovable.

Use Jergens Lotion – avoid detergent hands

(Continued from page 12) ings of Glenn. But here's really good news for the many fans who don't have $24.95 to plunk down for an album. RCA Victor is bringing out the album music on single LP's. The first of these is called "Glenn Miller Plays Selections From the Film, The Glenn Miller Story." I'd like to emphasize the fact that this is the Glenn Miller band, just as it was in its heyday. The band in the movie, naturally, is a facsimile—and a reasonably accurate one at that. But not the Miller band! (I suppose that this is what has troubled Helen Miller, Glenn's widow, so profoundly. This woman clings so desperately to a memory that she refuses to believe that her husband is dead. And for all anyone knows, he may not be.) The significant thing is that this is part of the Limited Edition at a fraction of the price.

THIS MONTH the good Eartha, which is to say Eartha Kitt, is to be heard in an RCA Victor LP called "The Bad Eartha"—which may be as it should be. This is quite a gal. Just before she left for Europe, Eartha and I had dinner at the new place in New York called the Harwynn. We talked about, among other things, her choice of tunes. She told me that such things as "C'est Si Bon" just happen. Dave Kapp, who was then with RCA Victor, suggested the tunes, but it wasn't until they were in the actual process of recording that she and he got the idea of "Cadillac car" and the other English words that have, of course, made it so very special.

Incidental reports on forthcoming items: Decca is highly excited about the faces recorded by Jeff Chandler. My information has it that they are excellent . . . Joan Crawford writes me that she would like nothing so much as to make some "good" recordings . . . For those of you interested in acquiring rare records, I strongly recommend a magazine called The Record Changer (address: 125 LaSalle Street, New York City) which carries, among other things, a complete listing of all records up for auction . . . Rosemary Clooney phoned a day or so after she and her husband, José Ferrer, arrived in Europe to say that she was delighted and flabbergasted to discover that she has apparently achieved international fame. Found her records everywhere.

THERE has been a great deal of undependable talk about high fidelity machines. I've spent approximately four months listening to all the new brands and, at this point, feel qualified to pass a measure of judgment. If you can afford something really special and expensive, by all means try a Phillips, which is of Dutch manufacture, or have a set custom-made by a firm like Fisher Radio (41 East 47th Street) which is probably tops among the companies that install equipment. Assuming, though, that you are of more modest means, try any of the sets made by Columbia and RCA Victor. They can be recommended without reservation. You might also listen to a model (at $119) manufactured by Magnavox. It's one of the most exciting I've heard. Last month, I mentioned a tiny portable machine called the Capri. I've listened to it quite a bit in recent weeks and I am able to report that its assets include durability. It is just about the most serviceable portable I've come across. But it's not hi-fi.

LOUELLA PARSONS' good news

Continued

When the petite French danseuse married the scion of the famed meat-packing family, it was believed that the bridegroom was loaded. Most of the Hormels are.

But as their marriage went on, a friend of Leslie tells me, Leslie was carrying more and more of the financial burden—toward the last, practically all of it.

Geordie didn't give up without a struggle. He went to New York to meet Leslie's boat and morosely announced later, "She granted me a ten-minute interview. Since then she hasn't spoken to me. I guess it's all over."

I guess it is.

THE LETTER BOX: To many of you who have written asking me to give you the "confidential diet that keeps the stars thin," I'm obliged to say there ain't such a thing. All the stars who diet sensibly do so under the care of their personal physicians and their diets are made up for their particular dietary needs. You kids get your parents to take you to a good doctor if you want to lose weight. There's no magic formula.

Lisa, St. Louis, writes that she's giving up Frank and Ava, "because they can't give each other happiness or give each other up. How juvenile can two adults be?"

Eleonore Malone, Ottawa, says I never write of Mel Ferrer in this column. Oh, yes I do, Eleanore—this month.

More weight-conscious readers (and writers) this month. Anna Stamonova of Brooklyn wants to know the most I ever heard of any star's weighing at his or her heaviest. Mario Lanza, I believe, who once hit the scales at 235. For a glamour girl, Joan Crawford, who weighed 164 many years ago when she first came to Hollywood.

Mrs. Fred McNamara hears: "Ava Gardner is supposed to be furious because Cyd Charisse has cut her hair like hers (Ava's) and looks so much like her these days. True or false?" This rumor is, at most, only partly true. Ava isn't too pleased over the resemblance but I doubt that she is "furious." Certainly, she has not "ordered" Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to "order" Cyd to "look different."

That's all this month. See you next month.

June Haver danced with Laurence Harvey, but spent most of evening with Fred MacMurray.

Ringlet Bra with Dualift-Control...only $1.50

You'd think a bra like this would be expensive...from the way Dualift straps lift oh-so-comfortably from center and sides...the way continuous single-needle stitching molds such precious curves. Yet this Lovable RINGLET with so much quality, so much flattery, is only $1.50. Ask for it by name! Other Lovable Bras from $1.

Also in Canada.

The Lovable Brassiere Co., Dept. MS-4, 180 Madison Ave., New York 16

New Help

for those 81 girls out of every 100* in despair over

"Young Skin" problems

Out of every 100 girls, 81 have "Young Skin"—blackheads, large pores, oiliness or flakiness a recent survey shows. What is the cause? Is there any help for it?

In the teens, the oil glands start to over work. The skin turns too sluggish to slough off dead skin debris. These dead flakes mix with the oil and choke pore openings. Next come large pores, even blackheads.

Dermatologists say oil and dead skin must be cleared off. And now—Pond's brings you a greaseless corrective based on this medical theory!

"This treatment works wonders!"

"I saw a change in 3 days!"

"My skin looks clearer, smoother!"

Hundreds of girls with "Young Skin" tested Pond's greaseless treatment! Many saw a real change in under 2 weeks! Just cover face, except eyes, in a thick layer of Pond's Vanishing Cream. Leave on 1 minute. The Cream's "keratolytic" action dissolves off dead skin cells! Frees skin glands to function normally. After 1 minute—tissue off. Your skin feels smooth, ungreasy. Looks fresher, clearer!

For a sheer, greaseless powder base— Use a light touch of Pond's Vanishing Cream. Never shiny. Holds powder!

HOLLYWOOD ABROAD

AN M/S WIRE SERVICE OF LATE NEWS FROM AROUND THE WORLD

ROSEMARY CLOONEY, twenty-five, and her forty-one-year-old husband, José Ferrer, finally got to Europe on their delayed honeymoon. In London, Rosemary demonstrated what reporters described as "slavish devotion to her husband."

When questioned about this, Rosemary said, "Well, why shouldn't I? Joe is a real genius. There's nothing he can't do. I'd like to be in a Broadway musical. What a coach Joe would make!

"My voice? Well, it's just a voice. I never studied. My voice had no training. I just make a commercial sort of sound that sells records. People ask me if I need a warm-up. I've got nothing to warm up!"

Ferrer was then asked if he were really a genius.

"I won't deny it," he said, "if genius is just a capacity for taking pains. The trouble with Rosemary is that she always underestimates herself."

GREGORY PECK, in Ceylon, finishing The Purple Plains, visited director John Huston in Kilcock, County Kildare, Ireland, just before he took off for India.

Huston has apparently left Hollywood permanently to settle down in Ireland with his wife Ricki and their two children.

Besides working on the Moby Dick script, Huston rides on hunts with the Killing Kildores and tries to talk all of his guests into joining him. When he tried to persuade Peck, the tall, Lincolnesque actor said, "I'll tell you what, John. You go fox hunting on your horse and I'll follow by car." Peck and his son had been skiing in Switzerland, and Peck explained that enough exercise was enough.

That morning, both Huston and his horse landed in a ditch. "Bad break, kid," Huston explained to Peck. "People die in their boots hunting the fox in Ireland, and all I do is wrench my back."

PAULETTE GODDARD, working in London on a film called The Stranger, took time out to give her views on life, love, money, work, and husbands.

Said Miss Goddard, now forty-three and still sleek, "I have had three husbands, Charley Chaplin, Burgess Meredith, and Edgar James. These marriages did not work out. I always admit my mistakes. And these marriages are my mistakes.

"I'm without a husband now and that's why I'm working, but as a general rule I don't believe a woman should make a career out of work. All she'll have is a scrapbook, and clippings are no consolation when you're old.

"But every woman should have a hobby. Otherwise, she'll go crazy. My hobby, as you probably know, is acting."

AVA GARDNER, who was dining in Rome with Vittorio Gossman while Shelley Winters was eating with her old pal Farley Granger, has confided to friends that a complete reconciliation with Frank Sinatra is not beyond probability.

"The trouble with me," Ava said recently, "is that each time I see Frank I fall in love with him all over again."

RICHARD BURTON, who couldn't resist the temptation of squeezing Greta Garbo's leg at a Hollywood party, will be leaving London shortly. Burton returns to 20th Century-Fox for The Egyptian.

"Frankly," he says, "I have a guilty conscience about taking all that Hollywood money. In the theatre you really get to believe that you're earning your keep. The work is so hard and the strain so great. But in films, especially CinemaScope, it's rather easy. In CinemaScope, as you know, the shooting is so much faster. There aren't so many different angle approaches."

When Burton was last in Hollywood it was rumored that he and Jean Simmons were developing a warm friendship.

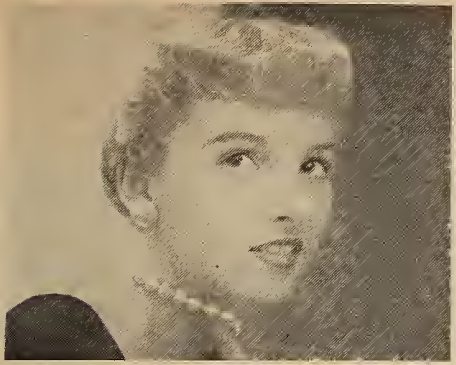
ERROL FLYNN, now the father of a fourth child, would like to return to Hollywood. He's just a wee bit tired of Europe and just a wee bit tired of trying to raise enough money to finish William Tell.

What's holding up his return trip? Flynn is afraid of lawsuits. Second wife Nora, for example, claims that he owes her support for their two children.

Says Flynn, "I'm not a millionaire but I like living like one. My main problem is reconciling my gross habits with my net income."

Says third wife Patrice Wymore, "I intend to stand by Errol."

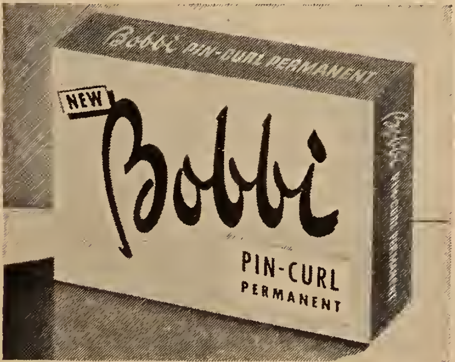
Says second wife Nora Haymes, "I intend to stand by him, too, only in court."



Only Bobbi is designed to give the soft waves needed for this "Bobbi Bob"—the 1920 bob gone modern. Bobbi gives waves exactly where you want them.

Casual, carefree—that's the "Skylark," thanks to Bobbi! Bobbi Pin-Curl Permanents always give you soft, carefree curls and waves right from the start.

Bobbi is perfect for this gay, casual "Florentine" hairdo, for Bobbi is the permanent designed to give soft, natural-looking curls. No help needed.



Everything you need! New Creme Oil Lotion, special bobby pins, complete instructions for use. $1.50 plus tax.

Bobbi's soft curls make a casual wave like this possible. Note the easy, natural look of curls in this new "Starlite" style. No nightly settings needed.

NO TIGHT, FUSSY CURLS ON THIS PAGE!

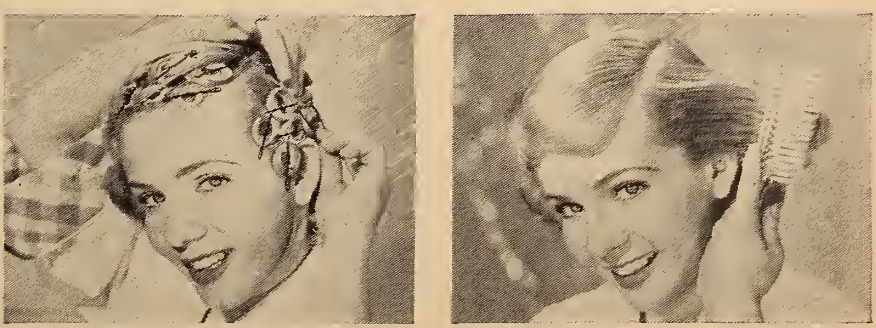
These hairdos were made with Bobbi ...the special home permanent for casual hair styles

Yes, Bobbi Pin-Curl Permanent is designed to give you lovelier, softer curls . . . the kind you need for today's casual hairdos. Never the tight, fussy curls you get with ordinary home or beauty shop permanents. Immediately after you use Bobbi your hair has the beauty, the body, the soft, lovely look of naturally wavy hair. And your hair stays that way—your wave lasts week after week.

Bobbi's so easy to use, too. You just put your hair in pin curls. Then apply Bobbi Creme Oil Lotion. A little later rinse hair with water, let dry, brush out—and that's all. No clumsy curlers to use. No help needed.

Ask for Bobbi Pin-Curl Permanent. If you like to be in fashion—if you can make a simple pin curl—you'll love Bobbi.

REPLACEMENT OR REFUND OF MONEY
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
IF NOT AS ADVERTISED THEREIN



Just simple pin-curls and Bobbi give this far easier home permanent. When hair is dry, brush out. Neutralizing is automatic. No curlers, no resetting.

Something thrilling happens

Your skin feels soft and smooth as a rose petal

Simple two-way treatment helps blemished skin. Suddenly your skin looks like a little girl's. Gone are hateful blackheads, pimples, oily shine, flaky dryness. That's your thrilling reward for making Cuticura Soap and Ointment your daily routine . . . How does Cuticura work such wonders? Cuticura Soap is superfatted, the mildest, best kind of complexion soap. It preserves the natural moisture as it cleanses. And Cuticura Ointment softens, gently stimulates, visibly improves your skin as it helps clear up externally caused blemishes. Millions of women thank world-known Cuticura for their exquisite skin—why don't you try Cuticura!

Cuticura

Get Cuticura Soap and Ointment —at drug counters everywhere!

movie reviews

by florence epstein

PICTURE OF THE MONTH

When Tacy (Lucille Ball) fell in love with a trailer, her bridegroom-to-be, Nick (Desi Arnaz) reluctantly gave her one as a wedding gift. They started their honeymoon-on-wheels in the wrong direction—and discovered it's not easy to U-turn a trailer.

Tacy's carefully planned first dinner landed on the floor—with Tacy—when Nick tried to jack up the trailer. They ate bread and cheese.

Trailer camps were too public for the honeymooners so they parked in the woods and sank into a mudhole!

THE LONG, LONG TRAILER TV fans don't have to read this review; they know what to expect of Lucille Ball and Desi Arnaz. A laugh a minute. Sometimes the minutes surely drag, times when Lucy is rolling on the trailer floor wrapped in flour and salad greens. But in general The Long, Long Trailer will hit the spot. Desi is a bandleader whose home is any convenient hotel on the road. When Lucy marries him she changes that. She strongarms him into buying a trailer (and a convertible to haul it). Like turtles, they'll carry their home on their backs. The trailer is a beaut—looks eighty feet long and is so compact you can serve breakfast in bed without budging from the stove. Honeymooners Lucy and Desi travel across the west in it and everything—but every conceivable thing that can go wrong with a trailer—goes wrong. Through it all Lucy wears this tentative, hysterical smile and doggedly collects boulders as mementoes. Get rid of those rocks! Desi is always shouting, and she's awfully sorry she didn't when they tackle a hill the shape of Mount Everest. I don't know—did you ever live in a trailer when all you ever really needed or wanted was a cot at the Y? That seems to be Desi's problem, and he's stuck with it. Technicolor.—(MGM)

Elizabeth Taylor, star of RHAPSODY,
an M-G-M Technicolor picture, finds Leg-O-Genic glamour easy with Bur-Mil Cameo nylons.

"Your shining moments call for misty dull stockings..."

says Elizabeth Taylor. "There's no doubt that when your stockings shine —you don't," says beautiful Elizabeth Taylor. Miss Taylor relies on Bur-Mil Cameo nylons for leg glamour on the screen and off. Cameo stockings, the only nylons with Face Powder Finish, veil your legs with misty dullness.

And breathlessly sheer 66 gauge, 12 denier Cameo nylons are a practical luxury. These new, ultra-twist Cameos assure better fit and longer wear by actual test. Ask for Bur-Mil Cameo stockings. Full-fashioned 66 gauge ...$1.65. Other full-fashioned and seamless styles from $1.15 to $1.65.

BUR-MIL
Cameo
the stocking with exclusive
Face Powder Finish

ALSO MADE IN CANADA BY BURLINGTON MILLS HOSIERY COMPANY OF CANADA, LTD.

BUR-MIL, CAMEO, FACE POWDER AND LEG-O-GENIC ARE REGISTERED TRADEMARKS OF BURLINGTON MILLS CORPORATION.

Double-Crosser!

Sue blamed Marge for dancing half the night with Joe while she stood on the sidelines. She blamed Joe, too. But Sue was wrong. She had only herself to blame . . . but she would be the last to suspect why. Nobody wants to spend an evening with anyone guilty of halitosis (bad breath). And it's so foolish to risk offending this way when Listerine Antiseptic is such a pleasant precaution.

No Toothpaste Kills Odor Germs Like This

Germs are, by far, the most common cause of halitosis. They're troublemakers because they start fermentation of proteins in the mouth. That's why research shows that your breath stays sweeter longer, depending upon the degree to which you reduce germs in the mouth.

No toothpaste, of course, is antiseptic. No toothpaste kills germs as Listerine does. Listerine Antiseptic kills germs . . . instantly . . . by the millions! Listerine Antiseptic stops bad breath . . . instantly. (And not just for minutes but usually for hours on end!)

Listerine Clinically Proved Four Times Better Than Toothpaste

Toothpastes don't do for you what Listerine does. Recently, this was dramatically proved in scientific tests made on Listerine Antiseptic and leading toothpastes. The results: In an average of test after test, Listerine Antiseptic stopped bad breath four times better than the toothpastes!

Don't ever "double-cross" yourself by taking a chance on your breath. Every morning . . . every night . . . before every date, make it a habit to gargle with Listerine, the most widely used antiseptic in the world.

A Product of The Lambert Company

LISTERINE STOPS BAD BREATH

4 times better than any toothpaste!

movie reviews continued from page 18

RIDE CLEAR OF DIABLO Audie Murphy looks mild as baby food but try to outdraw him, brother, and you're dead. That's the thing crooked Sheriff Kenyon (Paul Birch) doesn't realize the first time he sets eyes on him. Murphy is in town to nab the rustlers who murdered his father and brother. Sure, kid, says the sheriff, tossing him a deputy's badge. Bring in Whitey Kincade (Dan Duryea); he probably did it. Whitey is a killer who resents being classed as human. Shoots everybody in the back and laughs like Richard Widmark. Wouldn't you know Audie drags him back alive? All through this movie Audie keeps bringing back everything that got lost or stolen away, and does it with such gentle manners it's no wonder Susan Cabot gives up her murdering fiancé (William Pullen) for him. Well, it gets so bad that the sheriff, Susan's uncle, is nearly driven to distraction. If Murphy hangs around any more there's liable to be law and order in the town. (First guy to hang would be old sheriff.) So there's nothing for it but to wipe Audie out. My money's on him and his (by now) best friend, Kincade. Technicolor—and good, too. With Abbe Lane, Russell Johnson.—Universal-International.

THE COMMAND Here is Warner's first film in CinemaScope. They'd better try again. 1878 it is, in Wyoming and danged if they have run out of Indians yet. Must be thousands of 'em swarming across the plains, screaming their heads off. And shooting arrows. An arrow in the back of Captain Gregg Barton turns Doctor Guy Madison into Commander. All the way home Harvey Lembeck mixes wry comments with his chawing tobacco about this indignity. Indignity of a cavalryman obeying a doc, that is. Seasoned James Whitmore just braces himself for the ordeal. They come to this town where they're attached to Infantry troops and a wagon train filled with Joan Weldon and various children succumbing to smallpox. Pretty soon the Infantry commander has a stroke. If that Madison doesn't watch out he'll be in charge of the entire American Army, but he takes his responsibility with aplomb. He has to escort the whole kit and kaboodle to Paradise River, Indians notwithstanding. I'll tell you one thing: those Indians aren't standing long—there's a pox on 'em.—Warner Brothers.

BAIT For fifteen years Marko (Hugo Haas) has been pointing vaguely at a range in northern California and shouting, Dere's gold in dat hill! Once someone believed him and shortly died. Not only do people think Marko's cracked but they're admitting he's a murderer. However, farmer John Agar is broadminded. He and Haas drive up a mountain and scuttle to find the stuff before snow sets in. Agar has beginner's luck. Walks around back to chop some firewood and elbows right into a mine. Haas nearly chokes with rage; now he'll have to split fifty-fifty with Agar—unless. The devil, who's been lurking around in Cedric Hardwicke's clothing (Hardwicke introduces the film), enters here. He plants Cleo Moore in Marko's shifty brain. I'll marry that gorgeous, starving waitress, bring her to the cabin as bait for the farmer, thinks he. If the farmer makes a pass—and considering that there's barely eight feet of space to dodge in it's likely—Marko can kill boldly in what you may laughingly call a crime of passion. But that devil's work is sure undone—by that farm boy.—Columbia.

MAN IN THE ATTIC Anyone interested in terrorizing a city can take lessons from Jack Palance. Here's a boy who murders his own mother—and five or six other chicks who live alone in London. What a cut-up he is! They don't call him Jack the Ripper but Man In The Attic is a remake of that famous horror. Palance rents a couple of attic rooms in the home of Rhys Williams and Frances Bavier. He says he's a medical pathologist, that he works at night and that the odors that come from his room aren't burning flesh at all. Constance Smith, a beautiful music hall star, niece of the couple, comes to stay with them. She and Palance get along swell even though he breaks into cold sweats and hot rages at the oddest moments. Scotland Yard Inspector Byron Palmer is less susceptible to Palance's unique charm but you can't arrest a man just because he gives you the creeps in broad daylight. You've got to watch and wait.—20th-Fox.

EVERY PASSIONATE MOMENT OF THE STRANGEST ADVENTURE EVER TOLD!

He followed the lure of her lips across half the world...to conquer and rule a forbidden land...to steal his love from the hidden harems of mysterious Morocco!

Universal-International presents

JEFF CHANDLER
RHONDA FLEMING

YANKEE PASHA

COLOR BY Technicolor

with LEE J. COBB • MAMIE Van DOREN • BART ROBERTS and the MISS UNIVERSE BEAUTIES

Directed by JOSEPH PEVNEY • Screenplay by JOSEPH HOFFMAN • Produced by HOWARD CHRISTIE

I dreamed I went to the opera in my maidenform bra®

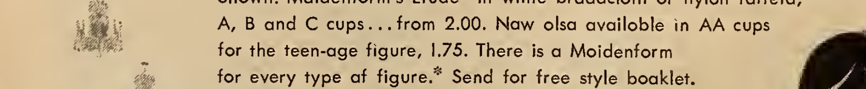
I'm the darling of the diamond horseshoe, the ràge of the dress circle—lilting, lyrical, fabulously composed in my Maidenform bra. Lifted so high and loving it, I'm the most spectacular figure in the audience! And listen, the bra-vos are all for Maidenform and me!

Shown: Maidenform's Etude* in white broadcloth or nylon taffeta; A, B and C cups ... from 2.00. Now also available in AA cups for the teen-age figure, 1.75. There is a Maidenform for every type of figure.* Send for free style booklet. MAIDENFORM, N. Y. 16, N. Y.

*REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. ©1954 MAIDEN FORM BRASSIERE CO., INC. FUR: MAXIMILIAN TIARA: JOHN FREDERICS CHANDELIER: LIGHTOLIER



HAMLET If you didn't catch Laurence Olivier's Hamlet first time round, here's your chance. Or if you've seen it once, see it again—the magic of Shakespeare never fades. You know the plot. The ghost of Hamlet's father appears at Elsinore to assure the young Dane that something's rotten in Denmark. Namely, Hamlet's uncle, who murdered dad and married mom two months later. Hamlet seeks revenge, but he's one of those neurotic boys always caught halfway between thought and action and for a while all he can do is drive himself nuts with these desires, giving his uncle plenty of time to plot his—Hamlet's—sudden demise. Olivier as Hamlet, Jean Simmons as Ophelia, Felix Aylmer as Ophelia's platitude-happy father, Polonius, give stirring performances. Others in this beautifully staged production are Eileen Herlie, Basil Sydney, Terence Morgan, Stanley Holloway.—Universal-International.

RED GARTERS Movies ought to be like life? ask the makers of Red Garters. No sir, they say, life ought to be more like the movies, with which sentiment I can't fully agree, although Red Garters is a very entertaining musical. Rosemary Clooney is in it. She's Calaveras Kate, dance hall queen and sweetie of Jack Carson. Carson is a funny man who spends his time enforcing "the code of the west." Shoot first and dance at the funeral is the code as I found it. You may have gathered that this is not an ordinary film. It's a satire on a lot of worn out westerns. There's a little boy who runs around picking off strangers with what he takes to be a Colt .45. And there's Guy Mitchell who rides into town to avenge his brother's untimely death. Guy falls for Pat Crowley. Joanne Gilbert is paired with Gene Barry. It's all kind of gay in candy Technicolor.—Paramount.

SAADIA Mel Ferrer is a moody doctor in Morocco. His eyes keep saying some woman wrecked his life but his lips are sealed. Another fellow whose lips are sealed is Cornel Wilde, a native ruler of a province. They're both in love with Saadia (Rita Gam) but if you think they're going to let her know it you're mad. She's a village girl, ostracized by her countrymen because she's supposedly under the spell of a witch called Fatima (Wanda Rotha). Wanda lives in some sort of cave and is forever sticking pins into little dolls and falling into deep comas. When Saadia's appendix starts acting up her neighbors would like to burn her but Mel and Cornel take her out of that backward environment, cure her, set her to work in a hospital. Saadia, who is beautiful, silent and brave, performs a couple of heroic feats and wins the natives' respect. She wins a husband, too. Technicolor, with Michel Simon, Cyril Cusak.—MGM.

KING OF THE KHYBER RIFLES Here's Tyrone Power stretched across a CinemaScopic screen and they'll have to think up a new process to top that. The setting is India, 1857, and the British Army is becoming very irritating to certain violent insurrectionists. Guy Rolfe, an Indian with an unnatural lust for power, has holed himself up in a hill from which vantage point he kidnaps and tortures young soldiers. Captain King (that's Power) arrives at the Army post to help stop all that nonsense. He's proud, handsome and a cinch to knock out Terry Moore, fair daughter of commander Michael Rennie. It's a set up, or would be, if Ty weren't a half-caste. His mama was a Moslem so he can't go to any of the officers' dances and pure white girl Terry is taboo. Also, Ty and Guy Rolfe were kids together, practically brothers, and you have to have a lot of conviction to kill your own brother. There's plenty of action, loads of color and spectacle in this film which happily doesn't claim to be anything more than fun (although some of that bloodletting is a little much). —20th-Fox.

RECOMMENDED FILMS NOW PLAYING

THE GLENN MILLER STORY (U-I): A tender, moving tribute to the memory of a great bandleader, this film will let you laugh and cry to your heart's content. Jimmy Stewart does a great job as Miller, and June Allyson, as the girl he married, contributes a delightful performance. If you liked Miller's music, you'll love the soundtrack. Louis Armstrong and Gene Krupa help out. Technicolor.

MISS SADIE THOMPSON (Col.): Rita Hayworth, as the movies' most famous bad girl, does some dancing that tops anything you've ever seen before for sheer, sultry excitement. Among those impressed are Marine Aldo Ray, who likes Rita just as she is, and reformer José Ferrer, who discovers to his horror, that he likes her too much. Technicolor and 3-D.

IT SHOULD HAPPEN TO YOU (Col.): One of the most delightful comedies of the normal (that's 2-D) screen, this one stars Judy Holliday as a startlingly average girl who indulges her craving for fame by renting a huge billboard and emblazoning her name thereon! Peter Lawford plays the worried representative of a soap company desperately in need of the billboard and Jack Lemmon is the young man who loved Judy before she was famous.

ACT OF LOVE (U.A.): This is the poignant story of a soldier and a girl who meet and love in a world of blackmarkets, police and war. Kirk Douglas is excellent as the G.I. who offers shelter to the frightened Lisa (Dany Robin) and tries to protect their romance in the face of impossible odds. Irwin Shaw wrote the fine script.

"GO, MAN, GO!" (U.A.): Dane Clark is immensely charming as the man who dreamed up, organized and made famous the Harlem Globetrotters, professional basketball's most amazing team. Even if you are not a rabid basketball fan, you'll enjoy this story of a wonderful bunch of guys—and the people who helped and hindered them.

KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE (MGM): Mel Ferrer as King Arthur, ruling the heroic Knights; Ava Gardner as Queen Guinevere ruling the romantic heart of Sir Launcelot (Robert Taylor). Also decorative in costume, CinemaScope and Technicolor are Ann Crawford and Maureen Swanson.

THE MAN BETWEEN (U.A.): James Mason and Hildegarde Neff meet and fall in love in postwar Berlin. Like most pictures turned out by Carol Reed, this one has excitement, suspense and tenderness.

THE EDDIE CANTOR STORY (Warners): Sure to be one of the year's big hits. The story of Eddie's rise to fame stars Keefe Brasselle and Marilyn Erskine as the understanding Ida plus Cantor's own singing on the sound track. Exceptionally fine performance by Aline MacMahon as Grandma Esther. Technicolor too.

AN 11-DAY, EXPENSE-FREE
Win VACATION for TWO in Hawaii

Or One of 35 Other Prizes!

(2nd)Diamond-studded Lucien Piccard wrist watch. (3rd)Crosley TV set. (4th)Solid gold bracelet from Marchal of 5th Avenue. (5th)Pedigreed French Poodle from Wilson (makers of Ideal Dog Food). (6th)$100 U. S. Savings Bond from Doeskin Tissue. (7th)$100 Jantzen Sportswear Wardrobe. (8th-12th)Elgin American Compact, Lighter, Lipstick Holder Set. (13th)Lady's Suit by Rosenblum of California. (14th)Crosley V.I.P. Radio. (15th)Luxite Lingerie Wardrobe of Gowns, Negligees, Slips. (16th)Sportswear Separates by Tabak of California. (17th)Leather Makeup Case filled with Max Factor Cosmetics. (18th)Shoe Wardrobe (3 pairs) of Grace Walker shoes. (19th-24th)Three Pairs of Luxite Hosiery. (25th-30th)Two Pairs of Harms Gloves. (31st-36th)16 oz. Tabu Cologne by Dana.

ENTER THIS EXCITING CONTEST!

Just name the Gayla Golden Jubilee hair style! You can win a luxurious 11-day, expense-free, vacation for two in enchanting Hawaii! You'll fly by Northwest Airline Stratocruiser to and from romantic Honolulu, stay at the palatial Moana Hotel on Waikiki Beach...eat exotic foods...dance...swim...and relax under the stars! Hurry! Enter today...you can be one of the lucky winners!

Gayla® HOLD·BOB®
World's Largest Selling Bobby Pin

To mark our 50 years of hair-accessory leadership, we introduce the newest, most startling bobby pin creation! It's the new, improved Golden Jubilee Gayla HOLD-BOB bobby pin with new Flexi-Grip, the patented, exclusive Gayla scientific design that makes the world's best bobby pin even better!

Enter Today! It's Fun..So Easy to Win!

NEW! rubber tipped
Also available in 25c cards
Gayla HOLD-BOB BOBBY PINS
Gayla 10¢ HOLD-BOB
DU PONT NYLON Gayla HAIR NET WITH ELASTIC

NAME THIS HAIR STYLE created by
JOHN ROBERT POWERS
World's Foremost Beauty Authority John Robert Powers and his famous Powers Models have selected Gayla HOLD-BOB as the perfect bobby pin.

HERE'S ALL YOU HAVE TO DO!
1. Suggest a name for our "Golden Jubilee" hair style.
2. Print the suggested name on a plain piece of paper. Each entry must include the top of a Gayla HOLD-BOB bobby pin card or Gayla Hair Net envelope, 25 words or less, telling why you prefer this Gayla product, your name and address, and the name and address of the store where you purchased the Gayla product. Submit as many entries as you wish, but each entry must consist of only one name suggested.
3. Mail entry to CONTEST, Gaylord Products, Inc., 1918 Prairie Ave., Chicago 16, Ill. Make sure your name and address and that of the store are legible. Entries with insufficient postage will not be accepted.
4. John Robert Powers and his staff will be the judges and their decisions will be final. Entries will be judged solely on basis of originality and aptness. In case of ties, duplicate prizes will be awarded. All entries become the property of Gaylord Products, Incorporated, and none will be returned.
5. Contest is open to all except employees of Gaylord Products, Incorporated, their advertising agency, and their families. Contest is subject to all Federal, State, and local regulations.
6. Contest closes June 30, 1954. All entries must be postmarked on or before midnight of the closing date and received not later than July 7, 1954.
7. Winners will be notified by mail within a month after the closing date. A complete list of winners will be sent to persons sending a stamped self-addressed envelope.

MAIL THIS ENTRY BLANK TODAY!

"CONTEST"
Gaylord Products, Incorporated, Dept. DM-4
1918 Prairie Ave., Chicago 16, Illinois

Here is my Gayla Contest entry. I am enclosing my name suggestion for the Golden Jubilee hair style, the top of a Gayla HOLD-BOB bobby pin card or a Gayla Hair Net envelope, 25 words or less telling why I prefer this Gayla product, and the name and address of the store where it was purchased.

Name..
Address.......................................
City....................Zone....State..........

© 1954 G.P.I.

Jane's last marriage, to Fred Karger, seemed idyllic but lasted little over a year.

through with love?

By Jack Wade

More than a marriage may be over for Jane this time. How often can a loser pick up the pieces and start all over again?

■ On January 4, Jane Wyman celebrated her fortieth birthday in what seemed to be matrimonial harmony.

On January 5, Louella Parsons reported that Jane and husband Freddie Karger had separated and that Jane had instructed her attorney to file for divorce.

Since Miss Wyman took home her Oscar in 1948 her private life, which was once free and open, has become almost cloistered as far as her public is concerned. It has become, in fact, her private life. Her marriage to musician Karger in November, 1952, took everyone by surprise and her decision fourteen months later to call the whole thing off was equally surprising. During their marriage Jane and Freddie had been hand holders. That tends to discourage gossips from hints of rifting. If two people hold hands all the time, says Hollywood, they must be in love.

And Jane and Freddie did hold hands. They held hands while they looked at houses for sale, they held hands at cocktail parties and they held hands when Freddie visited Jane on the set. They were a charming couple. Hedda Hopper said this was a popular union and the next day she received a note from the Kargers. "Happiness is difficult to find, and having found it, it is our turn to say best wishes and thank you."

Late in 1953 Hopper had something else to say. "The marriage of Jane Wyman has hit the rocks. Freddie, who has moved into his mother's home, verified the situation but said, 'Please, no comment.' Jane (Continued on page 99)

New! a shampoo that Silkens your hair!

You'll be head over heels in love with the way your hair shines and shimmers . . . silky soft, silky bright, silky smooth—after you've used new Drene. So gleaming, so glamorous . . . your silkened hair!

New Magic Formula . . . Milder than Castile!

Silkening magic! That's what you'll find in Drene's new formula! It lathers like lightning, rinses out like lightning—it's milder than castile! Magic, sheer magic, the way this new Drene silkens your hair. Leaves it bright as silk, soft as silk, smooth as silk—and so obedient!

Lathers like lightning—

no other lather is so thick, yet so quick.

Milder than castile—

so mild you could use this new formula every day.

This is a New Drene!

A PRODUCT OF PROCTER & GAMBLE

No wonder so many women are changing to Camay!

THERE'S

COLD CREAM

NOW IN

CAMAY

"The most wonderful thing that ever happened to complexion care!"

Mrs. Robert Steller, an exquisite new Camay Bride says, "New Camay with cold cream is so luxurious! I love it! It's the only beauty soap for me!"

NEW LUXURY AT NO EXTRA COST! Women everywhere tell us they love the added elegance of cold cream in Camay—the only leading beauty soap with this precious ingredient.

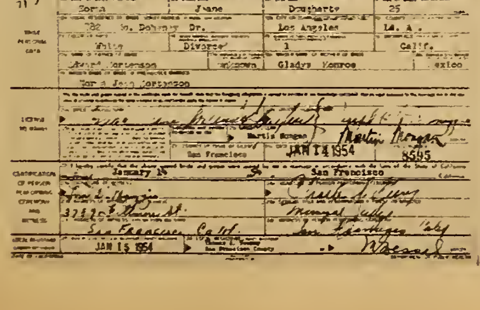
TRY IT YOURSELF! Whether your skin is dry or oily, new Camay with cold cream will leave it feeling exquisitely cleansed, marvelously refreshed. And, of course, you still get everything you've always loved about Camay—that skin-pampering mildness, silken-soft Camay lather and exquisite Camay fragrance. Try exciting new Camay tonight. There's no finer soap for your beauty and your bath!

Now more than ever . . .

THE SOAP OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN

the only complete story of

MARILYN MONROE'S HONEYMOON



268 CERTIFICATE OF REGISTRY OF MARRIAGE 1074 195

Joseph | Paul | Di Maggio | 39
2150 Beach | San Francisco | S. F.
White | Divorce | 1 | Calif.
Joe Di Maggio | Italy | Rosalie Mercurio | Italy
Norma | Jeane | Dougherty | 25
882 No. Doheny Dr. | Los Angeles | L. A.
White | Divorce | 1 | Calif.
Edward Mortenson | Unknown | Gladys Monroe | Mexico
Norma Jean Mortenson
Martin Morgan | Martin Morgan
San Francisco | JAN 14 1954 | 8595
January 14 | San Francisco
San Francisco Calif.
JAN 15 1954

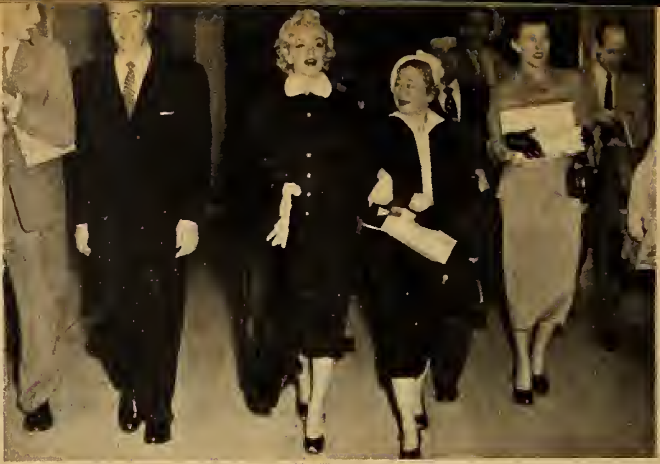
BY ALICE HOFFMAN

■ Joe DiMaggio made up his mind to marry Marilyn Monroe last Thanksgiving.

He had fallen in love with her and she with him two months after they met in June, 1952. But Joe is a shy, emotionally inhibited man and Marilyn has always been a skittish, constrained sort of girl, despite her calendar art and her sexy buildup. Although they loved each other and spent as much time together as their careers would permit, they retreated from discussion of marriage.

Both of them remembered their first marriages with regrets. Joe had been married to Dorothy Arnold and Marilyn to Jim Dougherty. As Joe says, "Each of us (Continued on page 30)

FOUR MORE PAGES OF SCOOP PHOTOS →

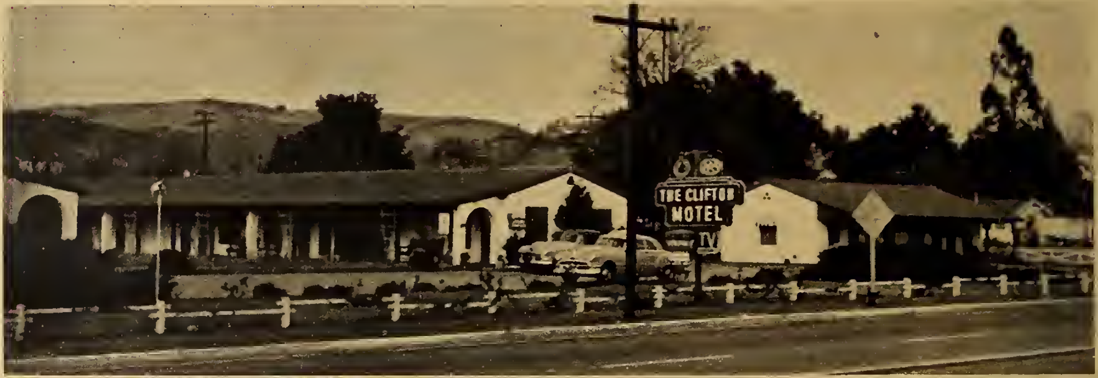


Joe and Marilyn, with Betty Barsocchini, wife of Joe's best friend and Marilyn's matron of honor, plus newsmen tipped off by 20th Century-Fox, walked to Judge Peery's chambers, where wedding took place.

Wedding was delayed while typewriters and marriage licenses were located. Newsmen fussed impatiently; Joe and Marilyn were calm.

The first 24 hours were joyful bedlam for Marilyn and Joe—their honeymoon began in a motel by a roaring turnpike.

Joe signed guest register "Mr. and Mrs. Joe DiMaggio," at honeymoon motel.



After a candlelight-and-steak dinner at the Paso Robles Hot Springs Hotel, Joe and Marilyn remarked that they were heading for Los Angeles. They drove away in that direction, then, to avoid publicity, doubled back for a wedding night at the Clifton Motel in Paso Robles. They left the following morning in Joe's '52 Cadillac.

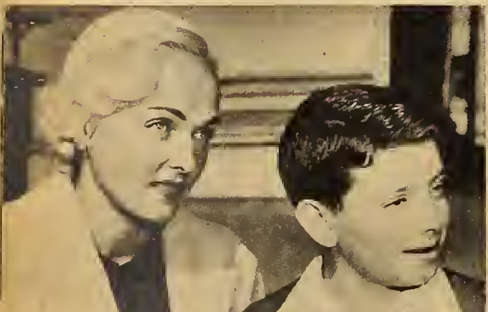
Manager E. B. Sharp and wife kept newlyweds' whereabouts a secret overnight.

Typical of the many attractive motels along the highways of California is the well-kept cottage in which Joe and Marilyn began their marriage—the second for each.

The DiMaggios preferred their municipal ceremony and this quiet motel room to the elaborate wedding on the Hayworth-Haymes style offered them by a Las Vegas hotel.

EXCLUSIVE PICTURES OF JOE'S SAN FRANCISCO APARTMENT ON PAGE 31 →

"We want six kids," the happy bride announced. Joe, who comes from a huge family, was less specific but guaranteed at least one.



Joe's ex-wife, actress Dorothy Arnold, is mother of his son, 12-year-old Joseph Paul. Joe, Jr., and Marilyn are good friends.

In San Francisco the newlyweds hid in Joe's

(Continued from page 27) wanted to be sure."

Marilyn's warm, folksy, unpretentious behavior at the DiMaggio Thanksgiving Day dinner convinced Joe that he must have Marilyn for his wife.

Joe loves kids. When he saw how his twelve-year-old son, Joey Jr., reacted to Marilyn, when he saw her on her hands and knees playing with the children of his brother Mike, the fisherman who died last year in Bodego Bay, his eyes grew moist. He edged over to Marilyn and lovingly passed his arm around her shoulder.

"You're okay," he said softly.

Marilyn looked up at Joe and smiled her gratitude. In that moment, the great baseball player knew in his heart that his days of loneliness were over.

But Joe didn't ask her to marry him until New Year's Eve. Marilyn had to fly back to Hollywood. He had to take little Joe back to Black Foxe Military Academy. The time wasn't propitious and Joe delayed his proposal.

Marilyn returned to San Francisco on Christmas Eve and drove immediately ou the now-familiar road to Joe's three-story ten-room house on Beach Street. Now it her house, too.

She brought a sweater for her sweetheart and gifts for the rest of the DiMag

Joe DiMaggio's Famous Restaurant on Fisherman's Wharf is managed by his friend Reno Barsacchini, who served as best man at the wedding. Photos of ball players line the walls.

Newsmen established a 'round-the-clock dragnet around Marilyn's Hollywood apartment—but the honeymooners were safely hidden in Idylwild, tiny San Jacinto mountain resort.

They expect to spend much of their time in the three-storied Beach Street home Joe shares with his sister, Marie DiMaggio.

Marie, who could not attend the wedding because of an attack of the flu, keeps the house filled with pictures of her brother.

Avid TV fans, Marilyn and Joe spend many evenings in traditional livingroom. BELOW: For family dinners, Marilyn sets the table.

s home—here photographed for the first time!

io family. They are a tremendous clan, our brothers living, four sisters and a ozen children.

She was very tired. "They kept me at e studio until the very last minute," she xplained to Joe. She told about posing or stills and retakes for River Of No eturn. "But now I'm going to take it sy."

When Marilyn takes it easy in the Di aggio household—well, listen to Marie iMaggio, Joe's older sister who has kept use for him. She is closer to Marilyn an the other relatives are—"She doesn't ep very late, maybe until nine, occa nally until nine-thirty. But it's her job to get breakfast, and she always does her job.

"She puts on the coffee, although she usually doesn't drink any—Marilyn is a tea and milk girl—and then she squeezes the oranges and cooks up the bacon and eggs. She's really very handy in the kitchen.

"When Joe first started going with her, a few of us in the family wondered what sort of girl she really was. Maybe she was one of these stuffy, conceited stars.

"Not Marilyn. You couldn't ask for a sweeter sister-in-law. You can go all over this town—Joe's introduced her to all his friends and all our relatives—and find nobody who will say one unkind word about that girl. (Continued on page 84)

All Hollywood wants to know what happened to Jane and Gene. Here at last is Jane's answer—in one of the frankest interviews ever given.

BY IMOGENE COLLINS

"I loved and lost" says jane powell

■ In Hollywood's hectic, passion-ridden history there have been countless victims of countless unhappy love affairs. For years the community has been dotted by tear-stained actresses who have picked up their shattered hearts, cemented them with their own will power, and faced the world anew with hope and faith.

Yes, Hollywood has seen many such women. But rarely have we seen anyone with the guts and honesty and indomitable courage of little Jane Powell.

Last year when she was twenty-three, this petite, lively, singing star happened to fall in love with Gene Nelson, a blond, blue-eyed dancer in his middle thirties.

Both of them were married, unhappily so; both were parents. Both were and are respectable and both were starring in Jane's first loanout, Three Sailors And A Girl.

Both knew they had no right to fall in love. "I did everything to avoid it," Jane says. But the chemistry of attraction and the propinquity—"I'd just look at her across the table," Gene recalls, "at the cute little face and my heart would start to beat in double time"—all of it seemed to be a manifest destiny, a conspiracy of circumstance to throw them together.

Studio executives told them their behavior was adolescent. Friends warned them not to break up their separate homes, but passion was spinning the plot. The hope for the future was laden with promise. ("Gosh! When I think of how well it might have worked out. We could have had a husband-and-wife dance act. We could have done so much together. After all, Gene is such a sincere person.") It's hard to condemn Jane Powell for divorcing a husband she no longer loved.

But Hollywood does not have as many understanding people as you might imagine. Furtive love and infidelity might (Continued on page 65)

ABOVE: At Palm Springs Racquet Club Janie primps with Terry Moore, Susan Zanuck. LEFT: Then joins new romance, Pat Nerney, for the day.

LEX BARKER:

"I didn't marry an angel"

Determined to save money, Lana and Lex bought little in Europe, rejoice that Lana didn't sell her California home; too big for just Cheryl and her, it will be perfect for three.

Lex prefers his wife as a natural brunette, observes that her eyes change color to match her clothes (or his)! Admiring Italians predict their children will look like young gods.

When love is blind, lovers get hurt. But Lana and Lex have their eyes wide open—and they love what they see!

JIM NEWTON

■ When I asked Lana and Lex if they used "Until love do us part" in the marriage ceremony, as Eugene O'Neill did for his second wedding, I saw right away I was downbeat.

They both looked solemn.

"How could love part us?" asked Lex, casting an ominous glance at a long, antique Sikh sword with blade thin and supple as a Gillette.

"Oh, ha," I said lightly. "It might not be an outside job. Might be too much love inside."

Lana looked perplexed. Lex was still looking at the slicer.

"With too much love," I plunged on, "husband gets jealous, wife possessive. The old green dragon stuff."

Lex said: "I am not jealous. You can look at her. But don't wink unless you want to lose your arms and legs."

I looked at Lana and tried to control the right eyelid, but it was difficult.

Lana said: "I am not possessive. Lex asked if I would mind if he flew to Paris for a few days. I said, 'Of course not, dear.' He said, 'Are you sure?' I said, 'Certainly, provided you leave your arms and legs with me. But would you have a nice time in a basket, sweetie?' "

In their amputating mood, they weren't fooling. They did not want this marriage to get away from them. They slipped on a double wedlock, and they aim to make it burglar proof with bambini and Sikh sword.

They married first in Europe. To make sure (Continued on page 63)

TO MILLIONS OF TEEN-AGERS, EDDIE'S THE MOST. BUT

why Hollywood is sore at Eddie Fisher

by Alice Finletter

Ruckus started when Eddie, usually cooperative, ran out on photographers trying to snap him at Mocambo with Mamie Van Doren.

■ Eddie Fisher, the hottest kid in show business, flew out to Hollywood on a business trip. He was going to make a guest appearance with Eddie Cantor on the Comedy Hour and discuss signing a motion picture contract with Paramount.

Eddie Fisher spent his early working years singing in New York nightclubs. Since nightclubs feature beautiful chorus girls and chorus girls have a way of turning up in all show business centers, while Eddie was in Hollywood he did mix business with pleasure.

It turned out to be a sour concoction. As one of Eddie's many admirers pointed out. "This is the first time since he got out of the Army last April that the kid has loused it up."

Unwittingly, he gave the impression that he thought he was too big for Hollywood. Too big for the studios and too big for the citizens.

Paramount offered him $75,000 per picture but the twenty-five-year-old TV and recording star blithely spurned the offer because the studio wanted him to submit to a screen test.

"I'd like very much to sign with Paramount," Eddie said, "but I've (Continued on page 94)

Mamie had dated Eddie when both were trying to crack New York nightclub circuit, thinks success has changed him a little.

Paramount believes that Eddie, very popular with fans, could become a top movie star but balked at signing him when he refused to take a screen test. Eddie claims he's only following his manager's advice.

IN FILMLAND HE ALMOST BECAME PERSONA NON GRATA—IN OTHER WORDS: THE LEAST!

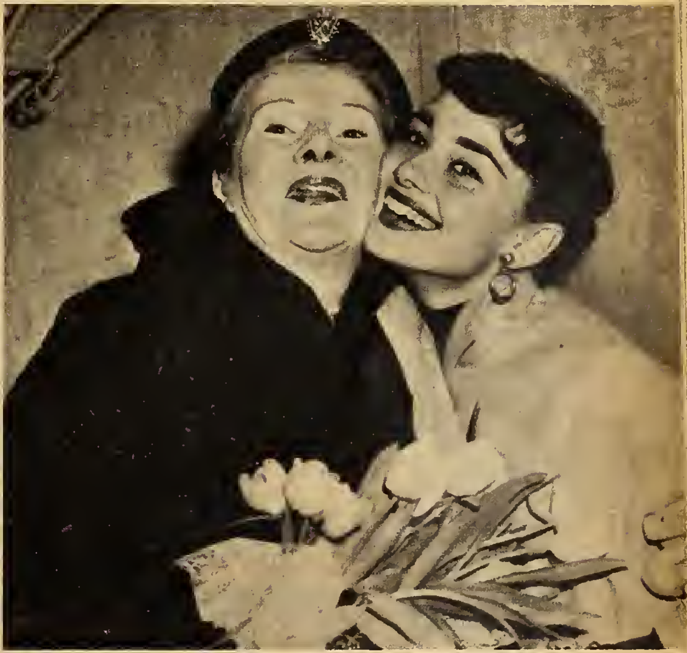
Still writing to European friends, Audrey calls London, New York, "home."

As a girl she didn't learn to drive or play tennis, saw few movies.

After childhood privations, rich food makes Audrey very happy, very sick.



Her mother, Baroness Van Heemstra, came to U.S. to visit Audrey.

Dutch Treat

by Kirtley Baskette

From Europe's Netherlands to Hollywood's Never-Never Land comes a pixie queen, a stately sprite, a shy cosmopolitan—Audrey Hepburn!

■ One fine spring day, a few years ago, a slim, fifteen-year-old girl called Edda van Heemstra slipped on a sunsuit and crept out of the cellar of her house near Arnhem, Holland, into the garden where she wasn't supposed to be.

She breathed deeply and, because she hadn't sampled any fresh air for weeks, she found it intoxicating. Then she stretched out on a pad in the sun and the bees in the orchard blossoms buzzed her to sleep. But she dozed fitfully because in her dreams the "whump, whump, whump" of artillery seemed to march up the River (Continued on page 91)

Rumor says the Wildings are no longer happy. Rumor says there may be a divorce. Rumor says so—but the Wildings don't! ■ BY HERB HOWE

LIZ AND MIKE:

EVERYTHING'S OKAY!

Mike, Jr., has been called a trouble-maker by self-styled experts who claim that he has replaced Mike, Sr., in Liz' affections. Liz replies, "Rubbish!"

■ A threatening cloud over the marriage of Liz Taylor and Michael Wilding was reported by a weather witch in America, while in London a magazine seer went so far as to finger The Other Man.

Liz was in London at the time, working in Beau Brummell at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio. She and husband Michael I and son Michael II, were living in an apartment in the Dorchester hotel.

Plans for the future, according to the Wildings (who claim to be the world's laziest couple) include some work and a lot of loafing at home.

When this investigating committee of one knuckled their door he was received by Michael, looking debonair and carefree in old tweed jacket and flannels. Appearance, as we all know, is often treacherous. The waistcoat of gay tartan may conceal a bleeding heart. Mike wore no waistcoat and his shirt was free of bloodstain.

At the far end of the large room on a davenport Liz was holding The Other Man in her arms. The amber light from a standard lamp made an aureole. Liz was smiling down upon the face of her baby. It was a Raphaelite study of Madonna and Child.

Intent in her rapture she did not seem to notice Michael and me until we had crossed the room; then she looked up with a smile.

Michael I presented me to his son, Michael II. The blue eyes of the baby looked straight into mine and his handclasp was firm. His smile reflected his mother's. Little Mike is magnetic. He is more than a baby; he is a personality.

He is also a threat, according to the London writer who said Michael I felt Liz was absorbed in the baby to the exclusion of every other interest, such as papa.

Having known and adored Liz when her love was a scampering chipmunk and her chief interest in (Continued on page 60)

The den, equipped with private bath, cabinet space, entrance to patio, will eventually be converted to a nursery, Tony and Janet hope.

The large livingroom is set two steps below level of other rooms; there Janet hangs Tony's paintings and keeps his favorite loose candy!

Although perfect for big parties, the livingroom is seldom used; the Curtis' busy work schedules prevent large-scale entertaining these days.

HOUSE OF THE MONTH

The Curtis' Spanish style, California bungalow occupies a corner lot.

Bungalow big enough for two

by Marva Peterson

The old apartment was fine for parties, but now home is casual. Janet and Tony can kick off their shoes and say, "Our very own!"

■ The bright blue truck from the Elgee, Beverly Hills' fanciest meat market, pulled up sharply in front of a picturesque brown and white California bungalow. The delivery boy checked the information on his order slip: "Mr. and Mrs. Tony Curtis, one block east of Doheny, corner house." He backed his pick-up truck into the patio entrance around the corner and hopped out. Then he heaved the meat bundle to his shoulder and whistled as he walked to the kitchen door.

"Elgee!" he called, beating a fast tattoo on the screen door.

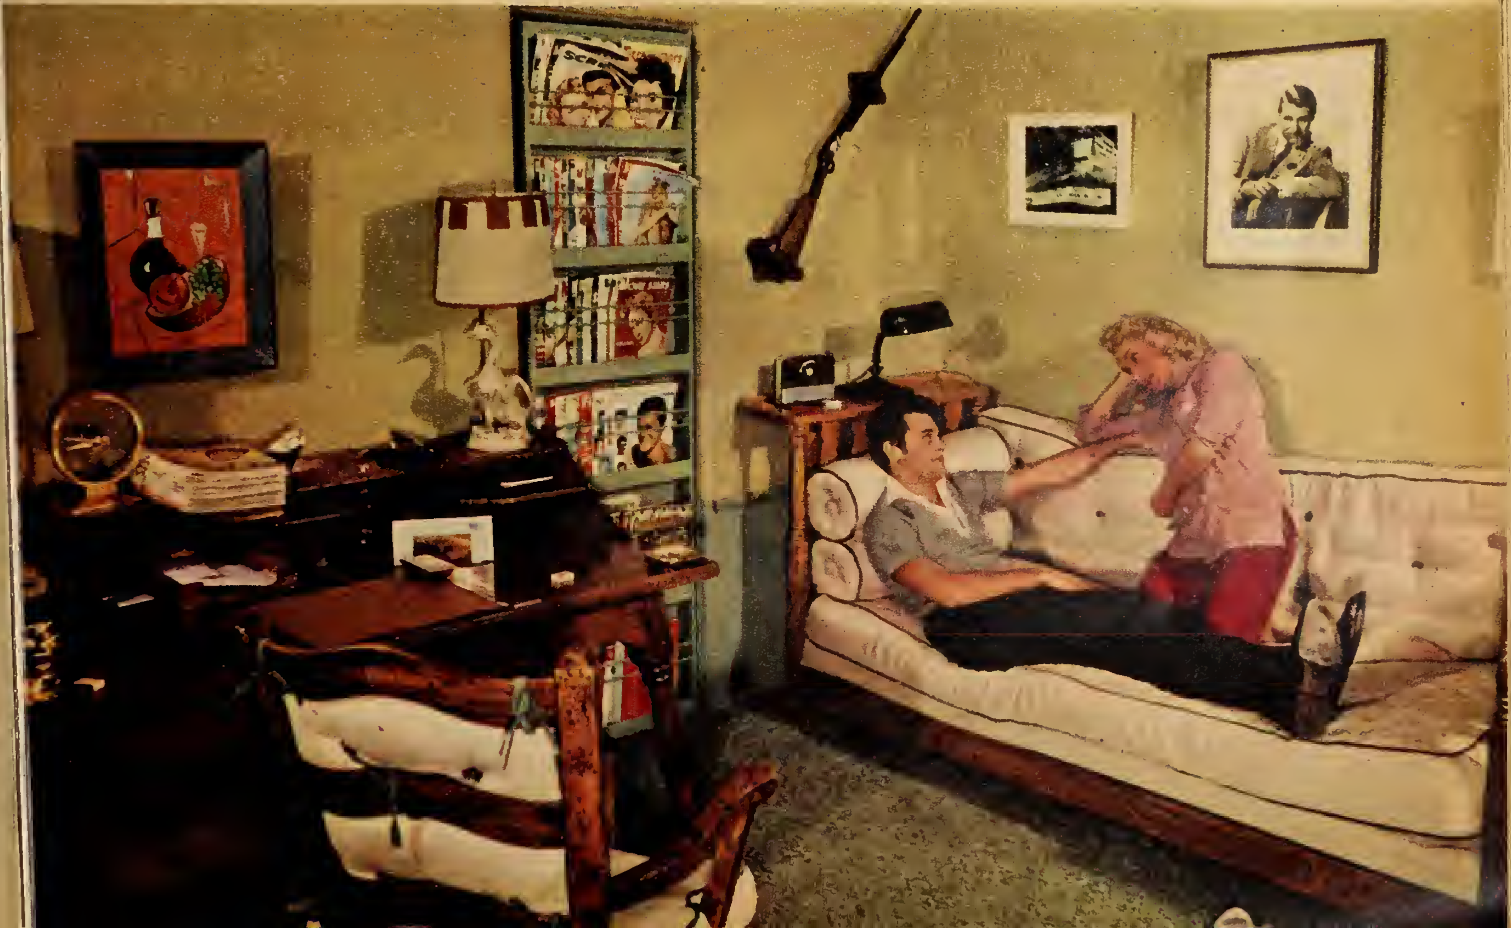
Janet Leigh answered the knock.

"Hiya, Mrs. Curtis," greeted the smiling delivery boy. "How you like the new house?"

"We love every inch of it," Janet said. She opened the door. "One more month of climbing those steps to the penthouse, and we would have had it." (Continued on next page)

More pictures on next page

The comfortable, shuttered den boasts sturdy custom-made furniture, framed photos and a magazine rack cleverly built into the door.



The paneled bar is the most popular room in the house because the cork and wood surfaces can take punishment. Tony and Janet eat dinner-on-a-tray there nightly because the room holds the family TV set.

Bungalow big enough for two

continued

(Continued from page 43) The delivery boy grinned. "Me, too," he said. He looked around the kitchen. "Say!" he exclaimed. "Two refrigerators! That's pretty neat."

Janet smiled. "We've got so much ice-box space we'll only have to order food once a month."

"Now, you wouldn't do that," the delivery boy kidded. "You'd get lonesome without my daily visits."

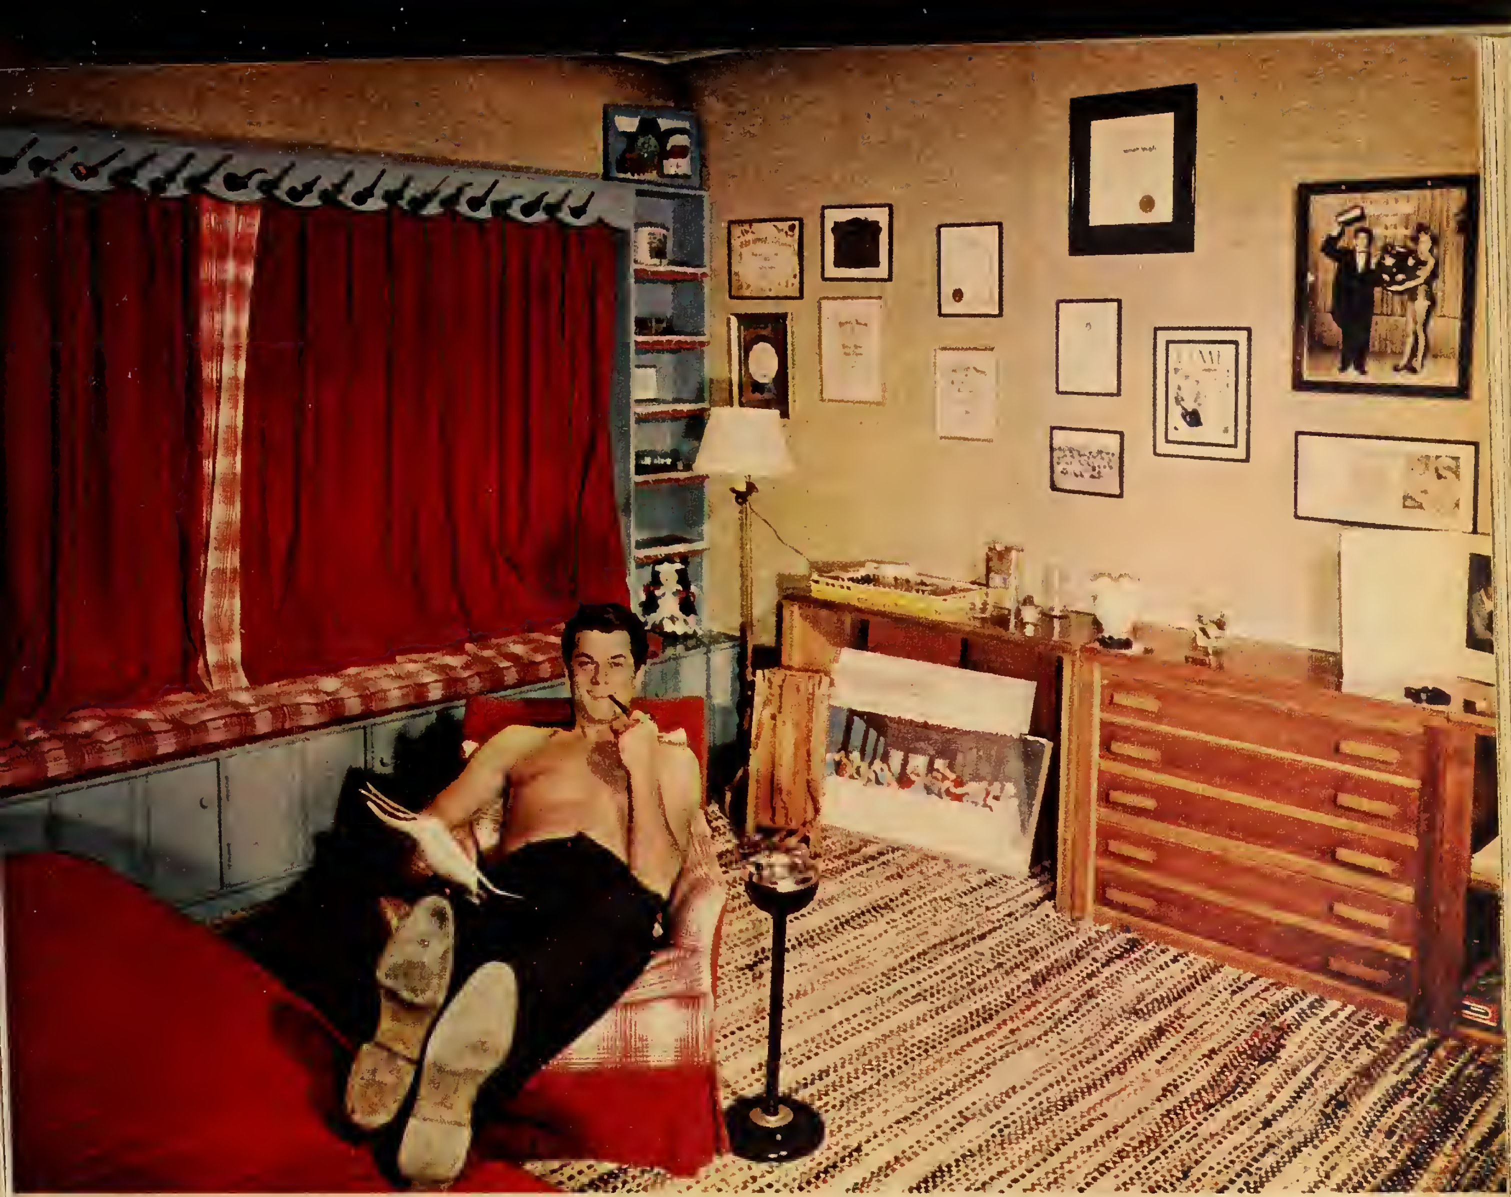
"At Elgee prices?" snapped Janet. "I can afford to be lonesome!" She reached for the receipt and signed the tab. "So long, Charlie."

Last year when MODERN SCREEN showed the Curtis home, Janet and Tony had just settled into a spectacular, $400-a-month, seven-room penthouse with a roof garden and a three-year lease. They intended to remain in an apartment for at least three years. According to Janet, who loves to plan, they would then be ready to build a home of their own. She estimated that by 1956 they would have enough money to build a really large house to meet the potential needs of an expanding family.

The news early last summer that Janet was pregnant upset the timetable. All thought of three-year leases and waiting for the fat bank balance disappeared.

Tony put his foot down and said, "When the baby arrives we must have a house. That's all there is to it." In (Continued on page 88)

Well-loved diningroom has Janet's favorite hand-blocked linen draperies (ABOVE) and crude-finish furniture. Hanging rack, sideboard (BELOW) display wedding silver; screen hides the kitchen entrance.



Tony's hobby room holds his pipe collection (above curtains), rag rug that won't show paint spots, family collection of awards and photos.

The quiet pink and green master bedroom is simply furnished and contains many adored stuffed animals. Janet's newly-acquired love for fine woods is indulged in the attractive, light-colored cabinet.

Comfortable, brightly-patterned chairs enliven bedroom corners. The mirrored doors conceal a large walk-in closet and the light curtains are drawn to show part of Janet's convenient little dressingroom.

Meet Margot James, the girl Bing has been dating. She looks like Mona and shares her measurements; met Bing when she was Everett Crosby's secretary.

If you saw it in a movie, you wouldn't believe it. The Crosby-Freeman romance is merely a case of mistaken identity! ■ BY WILLIAM BARBOUR

BING'S SECRET LOVE'S NO SECRET ANYMORE!

■ For eight months, Hollywood's Monday-morning quarterbacks believed that little Mona Freeman had the inside track in the Crosby Marriage Sweepstakes. Supposedly, she and der Bingle saw each other privately and occasionally went out to some quiet, unobtrusive restaurant.

At least, they were seen together in such places. But now it turns out that there has been a mistaken identity.

Bing Crosby hasn't been dating Mona Freeman often. He has been dating his brother Everett's former secretary, a charming girl named Margot James who happens to be a dead ringer for Mona Freeman.

Mona is five feet, four inches tall, weighs 110 lbs., has a thirty-four-inch bust, twenty-three-inch waist and thirty-three-inch hips. Margot James has exactly the same measurements. The only very noticeable dissimilarity is that her hair is darker than Mona's. Like Mona, she is a one-time loser in marriage. She was born in New York, brought up in Los Angeles, and she went to work at the Crosby office some six years ago when she was nineteen.

A few months ago when she began to date Crosby, she resigned from his office and took a job with a theatrical producer.

Asked about her association with Bing, she said "Why, it's (Continued on page 89)

Mona Freeman has been "seen" constantly with Bing . . . only it wasn't Mona!

the case of the SMUGGLED ERMINE

—or—

Terry and the Irates

A COMEDY IN THREE ACTS

by John Maynard

■ About the middle of December, Johnny Grant, an amiable Hollywood disc jockey and banquet emcee, decided to take off a dozen pounds, no more, no less. His chances of doing so were thin, since he was about to make one of his periodic USO tours of Korea where, he says, a man can eat like a horse. Grant, no fellow to disdain the table in any climate, sighed then and bowed to the inevitable. As he had after other Korean junkets, he would return looking like a barrage balloon and quite possibly he would have to be tethered to his microphone to keep from floating out the window.

He was wrong. He did not—in a deceptive manner of speaking—even have to worry. Five days after his arrival in Seoul, he had shed twelve pounds plus three and was still dwindling. Worry had done it.

As boss of the troupe, Grant was smack dab in the middle of the greatest fuss and fury—or so it seemed at the time—to come out of Korea since the Inchon landings. At the core of his trouble was a white ermine bathing suit, and at the core of the bathing suit a pint-size, irrepressible beauty named Terry Moore, who was about to push Vishinsky and guided missiles off the front pages for a few days. The whole episode was real George, characterized then (Continued on page 74)

PROLOGUE: With Bob Wagner's help, Terry chooses warm clothes for Korea, displays leanings toward striptease.

Bob says goodbye to Terry's mother, who went along because "The Army thought it would be wonderful for the boys to see a mother!"

Susan Zanuck, who toured Korea with Terry, almost wore controversial ermine bathing suit; suit fit Terry better so she was the one to step into it—and trouble!

Respectably clad in long red flannels, Terry is confused about the fuss. "Why, one corporal told me that whoever ordered me home must have rocks in his head!"

LOVE IS WHERE YOU

Jeanne and Paul brought a sports car home with them from England and celebrated their family reunion by taking the kids for a long drive in it. Left to right, the young Brinkmans are: Jeanine (called Dolly), Michael (in front), Timothy, and Paul, Jr.

The big packing box in which Jeanne and Paul shipped their belongings was promised to the boys as a playhouse; as a result, they showed eagerness to help with the unpacking.

Wooden cabinets for their home are among the finest of the Brinkmans' imports. The fact that she and Paul chose them together makes them doubly beautiful for Jeanne.

■ Some years ago a boy and a girl in Hollywood found themselves considering a unique romantic problem—they were so much in love with each other that they were beginning to wonder if it would be wise for them to marry.

It was the girl who was first so disturbed that she put her fears into words. As she talked, the boy began to realize she was bringing something to light which had been bothering him, too. What she was saying was that she thought they might be too infatuated to see what they should be seeing in each other. Their love was growing but, curiously enough, not their actual knowledge of each other. Aspects of character which should have been apparent were overshadowed by the fact that they had stars in their eyes when they were together. Facts they should have been exchanging about themselves and their attitudes were never gotten around to.

Therefore, in the courtship of Jeanne Crain and Paul Brinkman there came a pause. The hand-holding was skipped while they discussed themselves as individuals whose habits and ideas were part of their personalities. They tried to examine these in a sober, analytical light instead of a love light. Getting down to brass tacks when they were so much in love wasn't easy.

And if today Jeanne and Paul and their four children are one of the happiest families in Hollywood, it is not altogether a break of fortune. As well as they could

FIND IT

"Whither thou goest I shall go also" might be the Brinkman family motto. They won't allow any separation, however temporary, to endanger their perfect marriage.

BY LOUIS POLLOCK

A huge, elaborately scrolled silver server was discovered by Michael and commandeered as a helmet. Jeanne, proud of her purchases abroad, rescued it.

ne hand-carved oak door they bought in England reputed to have belonged to Cardinal Wolsey, ears his famous coat of arms on the lower panel.

ith a lot to consider, Jeanne and Paul anned it that way.

Jeanne was frightened by the failures of e Hollywood marriages around her. It thered her particularly because so many the principals were people she had known ll and considered level-headed. It seemed t there was little one could be sure of.

"When Paul and I had our talk," Jeanne alls, "we dug up differences, all right. d that was the time to get them out and go r them. If we (Continued on next page)

MORE PICTURES ON NEXT PAGE

Hunter George Michael worked with Jeanne on Duel In The Jungle in Africa's Kruger National Park.

"You'd look sveldt in the Veldt," Jeanne's studio said. So she and Paul departed on a safari built for two!

In a Mukumba River village, Jeanne made friends with native children while Paul and George hunted. Snapshots and letters kept the Brinkman kids, at home with their grandparents, in touch with Mom and Dad.

Jeanne frequently took packages of badly needed food to the African natives in the areas she visited. They were "so polite," she reported to friends, and always thanked her for the gifts Steaming tropical weather sent Jeanne frequently to the Zambesi River for a cooling swim. Flying over the Nile was another thrill.

rom a famous native hunter, M'taka, Jeanne received ssons in holding and throwing the traditional African pear. Paul preferred to do his hunting with a gun.

(Continued from page 51) accepted them then, we would not be so easily inclined to resent them later. But, heaven be praised, on most things we found ourselves in accord, particularly the most important things. We had a common religion which would give our union a good foundation, and each of us had projected a pattern for marriage that was not unlike the other's. I don't mean that we planned all our steps ahead. You know no one could. But we did know the kind of home we wanted and we wanted the same relationship to each other and to our home. It cut down the unpleasant surprises that can come up when two people begin to live together. We knew where we were going with our marriage."

Jeanne and Paul still know where they are going. And if they feel that they won't go the way of too many wedded Hollywood couples it isn't a case of being too sure of the unsure. It is rather a quiet confidence based on the fact that the security of their marriage is something they have guarded from the very beginning. A lot of people remember that Paul was an actor when he met Jeanne and think that he switched to manufacturing because he wasn't catching on in the movies. The real story has never been told before.

Paul was considered a fine prospect by RKO. He has a nice personality and is not only handsome but (Continued on page 79)

MODERN SCREEN proudly presents a truly brilliant profile of one of the screen's greatest, most glamorous women!

BY JOHN MAYNARD

What makes Stanwyck tick?

■ Those spooky members of the motion picture industry known to the public as "star makers" must have gotten something of a jolt from this magazine's recent poll showing its readers' 1953 favorites.

The amiable youths, male and female, did not exactly bulk large in the proceedings. Some might say that they hardly bulked at all. Among the gentlemen preferred by blondes were such downy-cheeked upstarts as John Wayne, Alan Ladd, Bing Crosby, fast-greying Jeff Chandler, Robert Taylor, Clark Gable and Gregory Peck. And sandwiched among the ten most admired of the ladies, up or down a trifling notch from the likes of June Allyson, Susan Hayward, Lana Turner and Betty Grable, was Barbara Stanwyck, who is not only fast-greying but greyed. You might call Miss Stanwyck's close-cropped hair "silvered," but not through any preference of hers.

Miss Stanwyck was a little surprised by her appearance on the list again, although she took it in her stride, having in the past been acknowledged as rather more than competent. But in this, the era of the star makers and the time of the Jaguar, she didn't seem to have done anything to deserve so handsome an accolade.

No artillery division had voted her "Girl We Would Most Like To Shoot Out Of A Howitzer." She had not become embroiled with a single Hollywood committee over what she did or didn't wear. And she absolutely did not sashay up and down the length of any continent with a man to whom evidently she was not wed.

All in all, Miss Stanwyck's contribution to her own career was neither more nor less than it always has been: she continued to be one of the best, if not indeed the best, actress in the business.

"That," said Miss Stanwyck recently, "I don't admit for a moment, although I'm so moved by your saying so that I would buy you a lunch if you hadn't eaten. But even if it were true, doesn't it sound sort of immaterial? I've been having a hunch that talent, as a barometer of popularity, has ceased to exist. Or maybe it never existed. Don't think for a moment I'm carping. The men who run this industry usually know what's best for the boxoffice. But there was a time—when I broke in, around 1932—when you weren't a star until you became a star. It may sound a bit medieval and fuddy-duddy now, but it was true. We thought of it then as orderly progression, like building a house from the foundation up. It never seemed practical to start with the roof. First you learned to act, then you became an actress; then if you worked very hard and if you were lucky and if the breaks came your way, you finally were called a 'star' or a 'name' and at the very end, if you keep right on doing your best year after year (Continued on page 96)

by Steve Cronin

MARRY THE GIRL!

HOLLYWOOD'S WEIRDEST DIVORCE CONDITIONS

■ In her room in Rome's fashionable Hassler Hotel, Shelley Winters had cried her heart out the night before. Now there were no tears left, only pain, anger and the soul-racking hurt of a rejected woman.

Defiantly, Shelley turned to the reporters at her press conference. Her eyes flashed as she spat out her announcements.

"Tomorrow morning," she said, "I'm having my lawyers file for legal separation from Vittorio Gassman. The suit will be filed in Los Angeles."

"Are you Catholic?" Shelley was asked.

The blonde firebrand shook her head.

"Then, why a separation? Why not a divorce?"

"I'll divorce Vittorio," she virtually shouted, "just as soon as he pays me $95,000. And he'll have to guarantee in writing that right after the divorce he will marry Anna Maria Ferrero."

The reporters looked at each other in consternation.

"Does your husband owe you $95,000?" one of them asked.

"I want $5,000 a year for my little girl until she's eighteen years old."

"But that's only $90,000," a newsman interjected. "What's the other $5,000 for?"

"Expenses," Shelley snapped. "My daughter is now ten months old, and I don't want her to know Vittorio or to love him because all he would do would be to neglect her and break her heart."

The photographers at this point began to shoot. Shelley held up her hand. "Please," she said. "You'll have to shoot from the left. I have a bad eye and I don't want it to show."

Vittoria, 13 months, knows her grandmother, Mrs. Jonas Schrift, better than her father. Shelley's divorce terms, indignantly rejected by Vittorio Gassman, refused him the right to visit his baby daughter.

Anna Maria Ferrero, playing Ophelia to Vittorio's Hamlet, reports from Milan that Shelley has no cause for concern. But Shell reports telephone calls from Anna's mother to complain about Vittorio.

HAVE BEEN SET BY A FURIOUS SHELL: $95,000 AND VITTORIO'S PROMISE TO WED THE OTHER WOMAN!

"Is that the result of too many tears?" a reporter asked.

"It's a little infection," the actress said.

"Do you want your daughter to grow up without a father?"

Shelley thought for a moment. "I'm sure I can still find a better man to be a day-to-day father to her and accept his responsibilities."

"Didn't Mr. Gassman accept his?"

"No," Shelley said flatly. "He did not."

"Isn't it true," one reporter interrupted, "that you and your husband started this whole fight because you didn't like the way he played Hamlet in Genoa last week? Isn't it merely an artistic difference? That's what your husband told us in Padua."

Shelley bristled. "I know. That's what he's been saying, and it's not true. He asked me to say nothing, and until now, I haven't. But he's been running off at the mouth, giving out lengthy statements.

"I guess his business is bad, and he needs the publicity. But I've been made out to be the heavy. I'm not.

"Two years ago when I met Vittorio he told me that he was one of the greatest actors of our time. I believed him. He told me that he was as good as Laurence Olivier and almost as good as Barrymore. I told this to everyone in Hollywood. I even hired a press agent to tell the people I couldn't tell.

"But our fight is not about artistic interpretations or how he plays Shakespearean characters. He has made it seem that I wanted a divorce because I didn't like his work. That's ridiculous. He has placed me in a very unglamorous position because of an eighteen-year-old girl." Shelley referred to Anna Maria Ferrero, Gassman's leading lady in his stock company. Actually Miss Ferrero is only seventeen.

Long before Shelley arrived in Rome after the Christmas holidays, it was rumored that Vittorio was quite taken with Anna Maria and she with him. When Shelley insisted that she would not divorce Vittorio without his promise to marry Signorina Ferrero, people started asking questions. Embarrassing questions.

Had Gassman compromised the seventeen-year-old dark-haired Italian beauty? Once she divorced Vittorio, was it any of Shelley's business whom he married?

In Milan where Anna Maria was working with Vittorio, each of them made it clear to the press that Shelley's unusual protection of Miss Ferrero was unnecessary.

In Hollywood, Jonas Schrift, Shelley's father, tried to explain his daughter's demands.

"Shelley has always been for the underdog," he said. "She always wants to help people. I can't tell you how many starving actors she's supported.

"If she insists that Vittorio has to marry this girl she must have a reason. She can't stand injustice, my Shelley.

"I was puzzled, too, when I read that she wanted Vittorio to marry this Ferrero girl. I asked myself why.

"The answer must be that it is the right thing for Vittorio to do. I'm sorry that this marriage hasn't worked out. He's an intelligent boy, this Gassman. Very cultured. But he's European. You know how those Europeans are. They don't believe a woman should be treated as an equal. (Continued on page 101)

Rock's religion has little to do with ritual, yet he finds strength and love in many churches, and God in every facet of his life.

the HAPPY FAITH

by Rock Hudson

■ I promised to talk about my faith and it is too late to go back on my word. But I surely wish I hadn't. Discussing his spiritual beliefs, a man really leaves himself naked. Even though I did give my word, I don't think I'd go through with it if it involved an affiliation with a particular church. Every member of that church might get the feeling I was talking for him and explaining his views. This, I have no right to do.

It happens, however, that I cannot label my religion. I can hardly explain it, to tell the truth. The best I can do is define it as a sort of warm feeling within, mysterious but helpful, and in its essence optimistic.

It cannot be classified by its doctrine but I can say that its effect on me is to create the feeling that no matter what happens, all is for the best, all will be all right.

I suppose this sounds terribly informal as a religion; too simple, perhaps, or even too easy to follow, but there it is and it has given me all the spiritual comfort I have ever wanted.

It should be plain that I have great confidence in my belief.

There have been bad times in my life. But never, because of my faith, have there been any hopeless ones. There never will be.

I think the groundwork on which I have built my spiritual views was started with an incident that occurred when I was six years old. After a Sunday lunch my grandfather went out to burn some prairie grass off his land and I tagged along to watch. Somehow, I found myself with my back against a fence, angry, crackling flames closing in on me. I could not escape. The fence was too high for me to climb and everywhere else were flames as high as my head. It takes a six-year-old to get himself into a mess like this. Yet, as I remember, I wasn't worried. I just knew that I had to be saved and I knew that someone certainly would save me. I didn't understand then that this somebody should really be designated Somebody, a deity. God was just a word to me then, and not a particularly significant one, I think. But I was certain that someone was looking after me. And I was right.

What actually happened was that my grandfather came charging through the fire, caught me up and slung me over the fence—and then he managed to climb over after me.

BUT THERE remained in my mind the feeling that Grandfather had just been the agent of the Someone I knew I had relied on. And between myself and this Someone, at that moment, was fostered a very personal relationship. At least, I have always felt this. It has seemed to me that the intimacy of this relationship is threatened every time I begin to think of this Someone as One to be identified only with this or that religion. Many religions tend to consider Someone their personal property.

I know perfectly well that this sounds rather selfish, like an exclusive arrangement between God and me. But perhaps in this regard, and only in this regard, every man has a right to exclusive relationship. Considered this way, I hope it doesn't sound too bad. In any case, I didn't plan it this way. This is how it came about; this is how it is and must be with me.

I remember that my grandmother used to talk to me a great deal about the church into which I was born and which I used to attend. She made it come alive for me, made it a place where I felt I could belong. But my grandmother died when I was eleven. I remember that at her funeral I had my first and last (I hope) case of ysterics. After her death, I couldn't con-inue any longer as a member of any specific hurch.

The religious ritual of any church in-erests me and often inspires me. I never ount myself a stranger when I attend ervices; I believe that prayers offered p to the Lord encompass all and not just selected few.

As I interpret my own particular faith, t is a benevolent one, completely. It has o fear or threat of any kind. It may be hat I have conceived for myself a very onvenient religion, but I have never had he sense of creating it; it has taken what-ver form it has naturally.

My faith to me is like the water I swim n. I do not see water as an element in hich sinking is possible, but as one which as the power to buoy me up. How else ould anyone swim? How else and why se would I trust myself to Someone reat and beyond if I were not certain of is love and support? Before I got to inking about this, such phrases as Love is strength” meant nothing to me; terward, they meant everything.

The help I get from my faith is posi-ve. My confidence in it has helped me say, during a bad crisis, “Okay, let ings turn bad. There'll be good to llow.”

NCE (anyway) I fell in love. I found out that I am pretty much of a wreck at ch a time; all I did was stand around d moon. I couldn't do anything else. was awful. So you can imagine how rd I was hit when we decided it would best if we parted.

I can't remember any time in my life r anyone else's I ever heard about) en life seemed so empty, so useless. t, away off in the distance, was the omise of good days, conveyed to me ly by my faith, and though it has taken ne time for them to arrive, those days here at last.

To replace the love I lost came a freedom; not only the passive freedom releasing me from the heaviness in my heart, but an active freedom to go out and experience again the great wide world I had lost sight of during my love and heartbreak.

IT SEEMS to me that one of the greatest signs of the existence of a divine plan in our lives is the way hard luck and suffering can return unexpected compensations. Whoever invented the wheel must have had a backache first from the strain of the heavy loads he was carrying on it. And by his inspiration the backs of countless millions of men have ached that much less. Many of mankind's problems and troubles are well-disguised blessings.

I remember last summer thinking that I should take some time off and away from the studio to think over my life in general and my career in particular; I needed some objective thinking and planning. In acting, the lucky break is very important, but it never hurts to look ahead and lay a course. The trouble was that I never could seem to get time off to do this.

Then, one fine afternoon, I had a bad accident. I went swimming at Laguna Beach, tangled with a rock, and broke a collarbone. After it was set I was resting and wondering why my luck was so stinking, when I suddenly realized that the convalescent period facing me was exactly what I had been looking for. It meant time, time to think ahead and do my planning. It may well be that some of the decisions I made during this period are among the most important ones in my life. (One of them was to stay away from rocks when swimming in the ocean. The wave that threw me in on my shoulder could just as well have tossed me in on my head!)

the adorable queen of the may issue,

esther williams,

will be on the cover of

modern screen

at your newsstand

april 6

I have had the experience of losing out on a role I wanted in one picture, only to get a better role in another picture—because I was available. It's getting so that when anything bad happens I find myself automatically awaiting the good break which always seems to follow naturally on its heels.

Down through the ages, religious arguments have turned on one question—can God be proved? Never, apparently, has one man proved this to another man. But there are many men, I believe—and I am one of them—who are confident they have felt His existence as a palpable force in their lives.

In many ways, at times of emergency and even in quiet periods, I have been utterly conscious of a Presence. I remember when I faced an abdominal operation. With modern day surgery there would seem to be little danger. Yet, like most people, I did have to say to myself, “Well, I could die. It is possible.” Having said I could, I was quite convinced, warmly and serenely convinced, that I wouldn't. It is hard to explain how sure I was; surer than I am of my name.

In Magnificent Obsession I play the part of the surgeon. For technical advice we engaged a nurse from the county hospital and I asked her a lot of questions about surgery procedure. One of the things she told me which I shall never forget is that at all operations the doctors and nurses sense a spiritual presence.

“When a surgeon finishes an operation he feels that he deserves neither credit nor blame. He has only been an agent of the real Doctor,” she said.

It reminded me of my grandfather's rescuing me from the fire and that I had the feeling then that he had been delegated by the Someone I had depended on to save me.

ALTHOUGH I do not belong to any specific church I am strongly attracted to them when I travel. When I was in England one of my first visits was to St. Paul's Cathedral. I also attended services at Westminster Abbey. Standing in St. Paul's I found myself thinking not so much of the church as of the people who had built it. As I watched them in their house of worship, quietly praying, as they had through all the bombings, through the years of their austerity economy, and even now when things were easing up a bit for them, I began to get a small measure of the strength of their character and their devotion.

When I get a yearning for this sort of spiritual inspiration in Hollywood I generally pay a visit to one of the big churches in the old part of Los Angeles, often the Third Congregational Church. I think that which I am seeking (that which we all seek, probably), is confirmation that life is a blessed experience and not just a phenomenon that could have no ultimate meaning.

I never wanted such assurance so badly as when I attended the funeral services of a beloved friend and teacher, Sophie Rosenstein, who had been the drama coach at Universal-International. Her appreciation and understanding, not only of talent, but of the hopes and fears that fill the heart of a young newcomer to the studios, was, it seemed to me, and I believe the others would agree, almost Heaven-inspired.

Standing there in Forest Lawn with the other boys and girls who had known Sophie, I recalled the warmth of her voice, the sympathetic, inspired insight into human nature she had revealed, and I became convinced that no mere combination of chemical elements called the human body could produce this kind of personality. There had to be something more to make a Sophie Rosenstein, and that something could never be destroyed.

The moment this thought came to my mind the sadness of the occasion lifted. If that part of Sophie, the best and most significant part of her, were not gone, we need not feel bereaved. Rather, we should think of her in terms of the living qualities she had left with us. There was no death as long as these lived on as they did in our hearts. END

Yes, Jane Powell uses Lustre-Creme Shampoo. It's the favorite of 4 out of 5 top Hollywood movie stars!

It never dries your hair! Lustre-Creme Shampoo is blessed with lanolin . . . foams into rich lather, even in hardest water . . . leaves hair so easy to manage.

It beautifies! For soft, bright, fragrantly clean hair—without special after-rinses—choose the shampoo of America's most glamorous women. Use the favorite of Hollywood movie stars—Lustre-Creme Shampoo.

Hollywood's favorite Lustre-Creme Shampoo

Never Dries—
it Beautifies!

Jane Powell co-starring in A BRIDE FOR SEVEN BROTHERS
An M-G-M Production. In CinemaScope. In Color

everything's okay!

(Continued from page 41) life outside the studio was roller-skating madly with chums along Elm Avenue in Beverly Hills, I exercised the paternal privilege of speaking freely. I asked her if the old German philosopher Schopenhauer was right in saying, "With woman, man is only the means; the end is always the child."

"Rubbish," said Liz.

With Schopenhauer smacked to the floor, Liz looked across the baby to her husband, relaxed in a deep chair.

"Do you suppose Mike's love of the baby makes me think he cares less for me? How silly. It shows that he cares more."

Baby Mike laughed and lifted a small fist of applause. He is a scene-stealer, little Mike. His eye was on the camera every minute when Cecil Beaton, the London photographer, made pictures of him. Beaton declared Mike knows all the angles.

"A real hambone," said Mummy Liz, smiling over him.

"A born actor?" I asked.

"I hope not," said his father. "There are more important vocations."

"Such as?"

"A doctor," replied Michael père.

Liz murmured, "Doctors are most important."

Michael got up and crossed the room to a desk. He came back with a sheet of letter paper.

"This is Michael's first letter," he said with controlled pride. "He wrote it to me when I was in Ireland."

The first two lines of the letter read: "dear daddy come home soon

"love from michael and mummy."

Following these was a cryptic line, apparently code. Mummy said, "I guided his fingers on the typewriter for the first lines. Then he took over and wrote the third."

Sure sign that Mike is a writer, the kind of genius who is impatient with editorial guidance. As if to confirm the portent, little Mike nipped a bright red pencil from my pocket.

"A writer!" I said.

"A pickpocket," said mummy.

Whatever profession Mike elects, his precocity marks him a genius. At age three weeks he looked around and uttered his first observation. "Okay," he said.

His philosophy, summed up in a word, is likewise his mother's. Everything always has been "okay" with Liz. She never has been known to quarrel or complain.

At three months Mike was swimming.

At eleven months he walked twelve steps. His father counted each step aloud. At the sixth step Mike took a spill, got up quickly and said, "Seven!"

Liz chortled softly. "It sounded like seven."

"He did say seven distinctly," said Michael turning to Liz. "You could not mistake it."

Liz continued to smile. She did not dispute.

The baby's nurse, an Australian girl named Yvonne Lang, entered the room quietly. It was the young genius' bedtime. Liz kissed him. Then he said goodnight to all with a smile and wave of his fist.

"He is very good," Liz said. "He never protests when we put him to bed. He smiles and falls asleep at once. He is no trouble at all."

She added, without tone of complaint or even of wistfulness, "We lead a regimented life. I get up at six in the morning to go to the studio. I don't get back until seven-thirty at night. I have just forty-five minutes with the baby when I'm working."

When she was not working, and during his first few months, Liz fed him. The first time she fed him the food smelled so good she ate half of it. Now the nurse prepares enough for two.

Mike has eaten like a man practically from the first. His real interest in life, says his mother, are his three square meals. His menu is typed each day and after it gets his okay it is presented to the hotel kitchen.

Mike had an angel food birthday cake with lighted candle in January. Mummy ate the cake, all but one slice. Mike settled for the lighted candle but got sold down the river. Mummy blew out the light just as he reached for it. Mike was mystified.

Liz shares Mike's love of food. She eats everything.

"I never worry about my weight. I gained forty pounds," she said, then added, "That was when I was pregnant."

She lost it all in two months, she observed, a bit wistfully. She also lost, during pregnancy, the wave in her hair. But it is returning now.

Liz and Michael had a big wedding in London. When they got to their apartment in the Berkeley Hotel at eleven o'clock that night they had a nuptial feast of pea soup and bacon and eggs. Michael is a pea soup fiend.

"I can't cook," said Liz, "but I open a nice can of pea soup."

The most striking thing about Liz, to one who has not seen her since her racing girlhood, is her composure, a serene stillness. But the subject of food quickly animates the calm queenliness and the enchanting child comes through.

"My favorite dish is brownabona," she said warmly. "I don't know how it is spelled. It is a Dutch peasant dish. My mother used to make it. You cook dark kidney beans and crisp bacon. Over them you pour the boiling fat from the bacon. You cover with diced dill pickles and diced Spanish onions, and drop a big blob of French mustard in the center. Yum-yum!"

Liz was all but overcome with the fragrant memory. Turning to Mike she said, "Do you think the hotel could prepare it tonight?"

Another delirious recollection was the hot garlic toast with raw tomatoes she had on the island of Capri. Liz ate two platters. They threw her.

"I never was so ill in my life," she said happily.

A favorite dessert is zabaglione, the nourishing Italian dolce made of eggs, cream and Marsala wine.

"And Gaelic coffee. Have you had Gaelic coffee?"

In the bottom of a tall glass you pour Irish whiskey, add coffee, top with cream. It's heartening after a hard day at the office—or at the studio.

The dignity of her twenty-three years slips again at the sight of beautiful clothes. Liz loves clothes. Again she favors the Italians. Her two favorite outfits were designed in Rome. From the celebrated couturier Fontana she got a black velvet coat trimmed with fur and lined with white satin to wear with a white satin off-shoulder gown he designed. Her other favorite is a ball gown from Antonelli—pink chiffon trimmed with straw lace, pearl and sequin diamante. With this she wears six petticoats to give flare and bounce. While bouncing—but not in the ball gown—over the hills of Capri she bought fisherman's jerseys, cardigans and tight trousers. (Continued on page 62)

Leaving baby Britches in their London apartment, Liz and Mike headed for the continent where they shopped and sight-saw with well-traveled Liz playing guide for her British husband.

¡ QUAPISIMA ELIZABETH !

The Wildings took Spain by storm—a storm of roses, cheers and beauty!

■ Bullfighting is more than the Spanish national sport. It is a rite signifying man's supremacy over beast. From April to October on late Sunday afternoons and sometimes on Thursday, the only place to go in Madrid is the Plaza de Toros. There are other bull arenas in and around Madrid, but this is the biggest. It seats 25,000. It is the most desirable, because only the top matadores can fight there.

All visitors to Spain are expected to attend a bullfight. The gracious, hospitable Spanish people expect you to go and they get tickets for you before you can say no, even if you should want to.

There is as much excitement at the Plaza de Toros as there is at Yankee Stadium during the World Series. In a way, bullfighting is more exciting. It moves faster and it's always a fight-to-the-death. The bull is the loser 999 times out of a thousand.

One lovely September afternoon a flower-festooned box in the Plaza de Toros was conspicuously empty in the fully-packed arena. Elizabeth Taylor and Michael Wilding were scheduled to arrive in Madrid on Monday. But in case they should arrive early the Madridleños were prepared. A box for the bullfight was decorated and reserved.

Flash rumors spread around the bullring. Elizabeth Taylor might be coming in. The aficionados would rise en masse, look toward the vacant box and yell, "Elizabeth Taylor! Elizabeth Taylor!" with as much enthusiasm as they yell "¡Olé!" when a matador has bested a bull. It's a rare day when a bullfighter must share the attention of the crowd with a beautiful woman.

But that Sunday the crowd was disappointed. Elizabeth Taylor did not reach Madrid until Monday. She was received with a warm, in fact a rousing welcome, and further endeared herself by her charming and gracious response.

The Spanish have a word for a woman who has beauty, sex appeal and style—quapa. It sounds like wah-pah, with accents on both syllables. When a woman is quapa and has charm and graciousness besides, she is quapisima, wah-pee-see-mah.

A Madrid movie critic telephoned Elizabeth's hotel:

"Quapisima," he crooned. "I worship Elizabeth Taylor and I am going to ask her if she is interested in divorce." —Wanda Hale

it's a secret...

(but soon it will be on everybody's lips)

Max Factor discovers a way to put "stay-on lustre" into a lipstick

Now at last the secret's out! After years of research, Max Factor has developed an amazing new non-smear type lipstick with "stay-on lustre" that won't blot away, won't fade away, won't wear away. You smooth on this lanolin-rich, creamy, non-drying lipstick. Hours later... after dinner, after coffee, after that last kiss... its satiny "stay-on lustre" will still be on your lips! In 9 glowing fashion shades. Only $1.10 plus tax.

MAX Factor's Color-fast lipstick

you can't blot away the lustre

Her favorite flowers go well with her complexion and eyes, and her husband keeps her supplied. They are lilies of the valley and violets. Though her eyes actually are a deep cornflower blue they appear to be violet in the shadow of the thick black lashes fringing them.

Press reports of her great jewel robbery amuse her.

"My jewels!" she chortles.

Somewhere between the Rome airport and her hotel in London a pair of earrings, a bracelet and clips vanished from the bottom of the vanity case. Total value, $1200.

Her treasured pieces, of great value, are gifts from Michael—two antique diamond and ruby brooches, designed in the nineteenth century by the famous Parisian jeweler Faberge. They come from the household of Nicholas II, the last of the Russian czars.

Liz was born in England of an English father and an American mother, but she went to America when she was eight and she thinks of herself as American. Still, London is home, too. She has visited England every summer since she was a child and she has countless relatives and friends there.

"Every place is home if you are happy there," she says.

Liz is happy everywhere. Rome is one of her happiest homes. Mike said he might do a picture in Rome. Liz was elated at the thought of spending a month there with him.

"I might make enough to buy you a Roman villa," he added.

Liz tossed him an indulgent smile.

"We haven't paid for our house in Beverly," she said.

Their house in Beverly is situated in the hills above Pickfair and Fred Astaire's mansion.

"We bought it for Mike," Liz said.

Mike was not yet born but he was on his way and already making friends and winning property. The people who sold the house to the Wildings presented Mike II with a pre-natal gift of one and a half acres.

The house is composed of two bedrooms, a livingroom and kitchen.

"A huge kitchen," said Liz. "Kitchens are so important." There is also a guest house with a kitchen and two rooms of less importance.

Mike's domain comprises playground, gardens and swimming pool. Besides this he has his own private property. Four dogs and four cats form an entourage for the young Wilding heir.

Liz said she wants to retire before age takes its toll. She has no ambition to die in harness.

"Career is interesting but anyone who thinks it's more important than home is plain silly," said Liz.

Husband Mike would retire with her. Their aim, she said, was to loaf.

"We are the laziest people, Mike and I. We are content just to sit."

When someone asked her to make a wish she said, "I would like another baby."

Mike nodded: "Boy or girl, doesn't matter."

"Then you have everything," I said.

"I have everything," Liz repeated, looking at me with steady, beautiful eyes.

As for Mike: "I only wish that everything continues as it is," he said.

Liz looked child-size, without shoes, standing with her tall, charming husband at the door, bidding me goodnight.

Congratulating them, I quoted the first word of a certain genius: "Okay. Everything is okay."

"Okay," they said together. END

(Elizabeth Taylor can be seen in MGM's Rhapsody).

"I didn't marry an angel"

(Continued from page 34) the marriage was made in heaven they flew there. To Italy, that is, which is heaven in a way, because Italian marriages stay stuck. At Italian weddings the guests do not speculate on how long the marriage will last, but on how many bambini will bless it.

In Turin, the beautiful Italian city where Lex and Lana first plighted troth, the copious bosoms of old signoras heaved rapturously. "Bellissima! Bellissimo! Venus e Appollo vero. All their children will be little gods and goddesses."

The prophecy of the old Italian soothsayers is supported by advocates of eugenic marriage who declare that when men exercise as much sense in mating as they show in the matchmaking of livestock they may produce a race of gods. Vero, vero.

Moved by the auguries, Lana said earnestly: "If wanting will do it, we will do it."

Lex said, "You can't foretell the sizes the bambini will come in. I am tall but my father is a little man. Every fourth generation you get a small one."

Lana's face clouded.

"I feel ours will be a shrimp," she said.

"Shrimps are all right. I like them," said Lex, always on the upbeat.

SOME EIGHT years ago, I met Lex. He had just arrived in Hollywood. Sol Lesser, impresario of the Tarzan classics, had scrutinized two thousand photographs of muscular males, sent scouts to college campuses, model agencies and gyms full of muscle men. He wanted the All-American Apollo for the next Tarzan. "Because," said Sol slyly, "we find women are coming to see Tarzan along with the kids."

When Lex was unveiled the old Tarzan studio hands agreed he was a production to beat the Greeks. They were staggered when they found he could give the jungle scream in French as well as in literate English.

Apollonian of brow as well as of torso, Lex, a son of wealthy parents, had lived abroad with a tutor and taken on a load of culture. Consequently, he knows art and antiques and how to bargain sharply for them in the flea markets of Europe. That's how he came by that old Sikh pruning knife.

With the Tarzan jungle well behind him, he is a star of rising stock because of his linguistic talent. Wearing a tweed jacket and grey flannels, clear-eyed and fresh of complexion, he had the bounce of a cheerleader.

"You look younger than when I first saw you," I said.

"I'm happy," he said.

He was alone. Bride Lana was working with Gable in Betrayed at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studio. Lex suggested lunch. Over steak and kidney pudding and a glass of English lager which he recommended, he briefed me on the bride.

Only after lunch was safely tucked in was I so rash as to ask if Venus had no law.

Startled, Lex said: "Of course she must have. I could not live with an angel."

The effort to specify threw him into the tance of Rodin's The Thinker. After ogitating he said, "She will give you an rgument."

"Has a mind of her own, hm?"

He raised an emphatic hand and laughed. That she has. She can get mad. But he cannot hold a grudge. If we have an rgument at night, each tries to be first o say hello in the morning."

Carefully summing up the faults she did ot possess, he said, "Lana is not small. There is no pettiness about her. She is incapable of meanness, envy, malice, scheming."

Agreeing that this was my impression of Sweetie Pie, I got invited for cocktails in their apartment.

LANA WITH her own lustrous rich brown hair seemed to me a lot warmer than the blonde she used to be, and that blonde was salutary to the circulatory system. Lex prefers the brown hair to the blonde.

"It softens her face. The natural thing is always best," he says. This explodes the theory that gentlemen prefer blondes. Gentlemen prefer Lana.

Lana's eyes have the chameleon's gift for changing color naturally. At times they are green, other times blue or grey. They accommodate by matching the color she wears. When she wears grey they are dovey. With a blue dress she says they look like the eyes of a china doll. This day they were grey. Lex was wearing a grey suit.

"If you want to see her blue eyes I will change to my blue suit," said Lex obligingly.

"I can think of something better," Lana said.

She was wearing a Christian Dior dress of Chinese red, no jewelry except her wedding ring, a plain gold band. When she disappeared from the room I assumed she was changing to a blue frock. But she was gone only a moment. When she sparkled back the room was flooded in blue radiance from a ninety-five carat star sapphire, guarded by a squad of diamonds.

(Continued on page 64)

LANA'S SECRET MARRIAGE

The Barkers aren't looking for loopholes in their wedlock!

■ The "It-Will-Never-Last Club" has suspended operation. If Lana Turner and Lex Barker are not happier now than they were the day they were married, they are giving Academy Award performances. Lana, it seems, is not a "new" Lana, but an "old" or original one. Her hair is as brown as it was before she became a star. And that's not all.

Time was, when Lana returned to Hollywood after a long absence, she made her first appearance in a night club. This time, she was not seen at all until she turned up in the marriage license bureau in Santa Monica. She and Lex filled out the necessary papers for a second ceremony, just on the chance of legal loopholes in their European "I do's."

Not one reporter was present when Lana and Lex took their vows again at her home on Beverly Glen Drive, although Lex's press representative was his best man. An unusual switch—a press agent keeping Lana's name out of the papers. Lana provided the topper when a photographer did a double-take and touching her on the shoulder exclaimed, "Hey, aren't you Lana Turner?"

"Me? Lana Turner!" Lana laughed merrily as she took Lex by the arm and waltzed to the elevator. Later, the photographer was kicking himself for being so naive.

He needn't have. A MODERN SCREEN reporter who has known Lana more than ten years, failed to recognize her. At the Cock 'n Bull restaurant, a friend introduced his luncheon companion.

"You remember Lana Turner, don't you?" he asked.

"Sure," replied the MS man. "How are you, honey?"

Lana laughed. "You don't remember me, do you?"

She was right. He had failed to recognize this face, famous the world over. He pulled up a chair and talked. He felt that for the first time, Lana has found a man she loves and will be married to for a long time. In fact, your reporter would like to stick his neck out and predict that it won't be long before a little Tarzan is on the way.

Have fun in the gayest new idea in smart footwear!

Flexiclogs®

They F-L-E-X with your foot!

Here's the wonderful new idea in fashion footwear that is sweeping the nation . . . the winner of Modern Screen's 1954 Hollywood Fashion Award. At the beach . . . at home . . . for sportswear or lounging. Flexiclogs make walking a carefree pleasure. Exclusive "Flexi-Hinges" flex with your foot. Made of waterproofed gleaming lacquered maple with skidproof Crepe soles that cushion and comfort every step. Natural curved arch comfortably hugs your foot. Velvet-soft interchangeable plastic straps in eleven fashion-right colors to match your costume. Sizes 3 to 9 for women, 6 to 12 for men, 10 to 3 for children.

Interchangeable Straps in Eleven Rainbow Colors

Matching Belts, Handbags, and Monogram Bracelets

Cutest accessory ideas in years! Plastic belts to match Flexiclogs straps . . . richly grained natural wood handbags with plastic straps to match belt and sandals . . . unusual hinged wooden bracelet with rich gold-color two-initial monogram. Not sold in stores—only through direct factory representatives. Send coupon to arrange for free home demonstration of exciting new Flexiclogs products, without obligation.

Replacement or refund of money · Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping · If not as advertised therein box 24-W, new holstein, wis.

Flexiclogs

FLEXICLOGS, Box 24-W, New Holstein, Wis.
Please arrange a Free home demonstration of Flexiclogs for me.

Name____________________

Address____________________

Town________________ State________

☐ Check here if interested in earning extra money demonstrating Flexiclogs to friends and neighbors.

"My engagement ring," she announced. Lex discovered it in Capri and it looked like a piece of Capri heaven at the deep blue twilight hour with the single evening star.

Lana looked long at it, and when she looked up at Lex, sure enough, she was starry-eyed. He was too. They were co-starry. They'd like to be that way in a picture.

Only the night before, a student of Shakespeare and of Lana who had seen a performance of Antony And Cleopatra by the Stratford-on-Avon players, declared that Lex and Lana would surpass in the roles.

"I should be terrified of speaking the lines," Lana said.

"Your lines," said the authority feelingly, "are letter perfect."

The Shakespeare pun goes for eye and for ear. Although Lana says she still suffers tension during the first couple of weeks in a production, her voice is beautifully modulated and under control. And though she was wearing this Christian Dior garment comprising more material than Cleopatra would approve, it was obvious to the naked eye that her lines might make Marc Antony go A.W.O.L. and lose an empire.

"She was wearing a swim suit the first time I saw her," said Marc Antony Barker. "I was in a pool at Palm Springs. Behind me I heard a chug-chug-chugging. I looked around and there she was."

"It was then you first met her?" I asked.

"No. It was then I got the gleam in my eye," Lex said.

Lana in a swim suit weighs 118 pounds.

"Just right for her height, five, three-and-a-half," Lex said. "She takes bending exercises every morning with me. I am ten pounds over my average 202."

"So I take exercises," said Lana, "to reduce him."

THEY WERE sitting on a davenport, Lex with one leg crossed horizontally over the other. When tea arrived with a tray of pastries Lex reached for an éclair and Lana reached for a smack at Lex's ankle.

"I thought you were keeping to 750 calories a day," she said.

Lex said: "You can eat what you like so long as you keep your stomach muscles hard."

"He eats like a horse," Lana said.

He passed her the pastries. She said she never ate them, had not touched sweets since she was a girl.

"Sugar is not as fattening as salt," Lex countered.

"I don't eat salt, either," said Lana.

Lex said salt is fattening because it calls for liquids, and liquids make you bulge. He reached for another pastry and got another smack.

"We will play a lot of tennis and eighteen holes of golf," said Lex. "Lana and I like the same things."

"Eighteen holes of golf," said Lana. "I can barely walk around nine."

I asked Lana what her favorite exercise was.

"Lying in bed," she said.

"With me," said Lex.

"With a book. You!" said Lana, smacking hard.

"With a book, me!" said Lex, getting up from the davenport to escape a busted ankle. From the secure height of six feet, three, he again helped himself to calories before resuming his place beside her.

Speaking of lying in bed, an exercise beloved by all book lovers, I was reminded of those New York socialites whom an advertising man approached for an endorsement of mattresses. He told them they would confer a great favor if they permitted a photograph of their bed in an advertisement. In return for this great favor his company was prepared to offer them five thousand dollars. He awaited their reply with trepidation. It was not slow in coming.

"For five thousand dollars you can have a photograph of our bed with us in it," they said.

Lex and Lana laughed. Under cover of the laughter I suggested that a photograph of the Lex Barkers in bed with their favorite books would be inspirational in the promotion of the classics, such as MODERN SCREEN.

"Are you offering us five thousand dollars?" asked Lex who has a sordid side.

"The studio allows us to endorse only soap. And we get paid in soap. I have two rooms filled with soap," said Lana. "I would like to endorse stoves. I want a new stove."

Lex said they should endorse automobile tires. The Jaguar needed two new ones.

ASKED WHY they didn't just endorse checks, Lex said, "We endorse them over to the tax man. I divide my salary by three, figuring a third for us."

Lana remarked impressively that she had saved money while working in Europe. She bought only two little wool dresses which she needed when weather over there turned cold. She got the Dior dress she was wearing in America. Simple frocks in Paris cost from three hundred to seven hundred dollars. "That," she said practically, "is for the birds."

Her greatest stroke of fortune, though, was in saving on her house. She would have taken a loss had she sold it.

"I didn't want to sell it; I love it. But it was much too large for Cheryl and me. Luckily I found a big man to fill it." Her hand reached Lex's ankle but this time it was a caressive pat.

The big house should bulge with bambini, if wanting will do it. And they'll all be little gods and goddesses, if prophecies are fulfilled. END

I loved and lost

(Continued from page 32) be understood. But when Janie announced that she was going to divorce Geary Steffen and Gene announced that he was contemplating a divorce from Miriam, how the high and mighty bellowed!

"You're out of your mind," Janie was told last spring, "to even think of divorcing Geary. Don't you realize that all over America you have been played up as the happiest couple in Hollywood. You have two darling children and a great career. People everywhere remember you as that sweet little darling from Portland. How can you do this? You're ruining your life. For what, Janie? In heaven's name, for what?"

For love, she said. On August 6, 1953, Suzanne Burce—Jane's real name—filed for divorce.

TOWARD her husband, a pleasant, garrulous young man addicted to surf-skiing, she demonstrated good will. She gave him more money than he had contributed to their four-year marriage. She gave him real estate, a promissory note for $16,000, a promise to pay the income tax—everything he wanted. She did this because her heart was running over with love for Gene Nelson.

When her lawyer, Sam Barchis, said, "Now, wait a minute, Janie. Let's fight some of Steffen's demands," Jane shook her head. "No, Sam. Give him everything he

DEAR BOSS

Thanks for suggesting an early vacation! You'll notice I got away in a hurry, too—because I bought one of those Expense-Paid Tours by Greyhound.

What a wonderful bargain! You see, it's not really a "tour"... because you're free to travel alone or with your own special friends—you can stop off wherever you choose—and there's no one conducting you around on a rigid schedule.

The whole thing is more like a delightful vacation-in-a-package. One price for the entire trip...including transportation (all arranged), hotels (all reserved and paid-for in advance), special sightseeing and entertainment.

I came down here on one of Greyhound's new "Air Suspension" buses (no metal springs in them!) and it was the most comfortable, scenic trip I've ever made. The people you meet on a bus seem to be more informal, neighborly—lots of fun...and the service was just grand all along the line.

Lots more to tell you about people and places when I get back!

Irene

P.S. You and the Mrs. ought to try a Greyhound Tour! Here's the kind of coupon that got me started...

- FLORIDA CIRCLE, 11 Days from Jacksonville . . . $85.85
- EVERGREEN CIRCLE, 3 Days from Seattle 28.15
- LOS ANGELES, 4 Days 13.50
- NEW YORK CITY, 5 Days 28.20
- WASHINGTON, D. C., 4 Days . . 24.50
- MEXICO (Escorted), 12 Days from San Antonio . . . $149.10
- DENVER, 3 Days 15.50
- NEW ORLEANS, 2 Days 14.00
- CHICAGO, 3 Days 15.65
- BOSTON, 3 Days 15.25

Add Greyhound round-trip fare from your home. U. S. tax extra. Prices subject to change.

FREE! PLEASURE MAP OF AMERICA — WITH TOUR DETAILS

Mail to Greyhound Information Center, 71 W. Lake St., Chicago 1, Ill. for handsome illustrated map, to help plan vacations, estimate prices.

Name______

Address______

City & State______

DM-4-54

GREYHOUND

wants. I must have my freedom at once."

Freedom for what? Freedom to be with Gene Nelson, freedom to sit at his table and watch as he danced for the nightclub crowds, freedom to snuggle up in his arms on the dance floor, freedom to go to the races with him, to be next to him, to look into his eyes and feel his presence and know all his hopes and desires and dreams —freedom to be his wife.

For a few fleeting months Jane Powell knew most of this freedom and luxuriated in her love. Spending her spare time with her children and Gene was a kind of paradise. These were the three people she loved best in all the world.

Gene's wife Miriam went to see her lawyer, Bernie Silbert, to discuss financial settlement preceding the anticipated divorce. Miriam is a fair and understanding girl. She and Gene had separated before. If Gene wanted someone else for his wife she would not be the insurmountable obstacle. She told her lawyer that all she wanted was a guarantee of $400 a month, less than $100 a week for herself and her son Chris. This was to come out of 25% of Gene's gross income. But it must be remembered that his net income is small by Hollywood standards.

Fred Martino, Gene's lawyer, thought this was too much to ask. Gene began to think so, too. And from that moment on the great, overpowering love he had felt for Jane Powell began to change. Gene began to ask himself questions. In leaving Miriam and Chris was he doing the right thing? If he married Jane Powell, wouldn't people always refer to him as Jane Powell's husband? Wouldn't she be the big breadwinner?

If love starts to wane, it's hard to hide the waning from the girl you loved if she has any perception at all. Jane Powell knew instantly that something was wrong.

Jane began to ask questions. "I couldn't help myself. I'm that kind of a person. I've got to know where I'm heading. I need a goal. I just can't live in a vacuum. I could tell from Gene's behavior that he was having a lot of problems. Finally, I asked him if he wanted to stay or go.

"He said that he wanted to go. There was nothing I could do. I let him go."

"Perhaps you put too much pressure on him at the wrong time?" Janie was asked.

"Perhaps I did," was her reply. "But I had a lot to consider. My children, my future. I had to bring the whole thing to a head. I forced the situation and I admit it. I began to ask questions and Gene couldn't answer them."

"What questions?"

"Questions about the future. You see, in many ways Gene is a wonderful person. He's self-sufficient, for instance. I'm not."

"Do you need a lot of people?"

"No, just one. Just one and I'm fine. But I'm not happy alone. I need someone."

"Do you think you've found that someone in Pat Nerney?" (Mona Freeman's former husband.)

"Well, he's very nice."

"Are you planning to marry him?"

"I can't say. I wouldn't dare say. My divorce isn't final until August. He's nice to go around with. I'm very funny. I don't like to be a girl around town. It's nice to have a steady escort."

"There's a rumor that Pat is going to Africa on a safari this summer with the Pat Di Ciccos, and that he plans to take you along as his bride. What about it?"

"This is the first I've heard of it."

"It is all over between you and Gene, isn't it?"

"I'm afraid so."

"Well, in retrospect, would you say that what you felt for Gene was more infatuation than it was love?"

"It was a real love affair. I'd never chalk it up to infatuation. It was love, all right. I loved and I lost."

"Are you heartbroken?"

"No, I wouldn't say that. After all, you can get over pretty nearly everything."

"Even love?"

"Even love."

"Have your feelings for Gene changed?"

"He is one of the most sincere people I've ever known and I'll never change my feelings about him."

"Have you seen him or spoken to him since you broke up?"

"No, I haven't. He's a quiet sort of fellow and you don't hear much about him around town. Have you seen him?"

"He was in New York for an Omnibus TV show, you know, and he's been down to the desert and down to Balboa and on the Ethel Merman TV rehearsals— If Gene were to come back tomorrow and say, 'Let's take up where we left off,' what would your reaction be?

A NEW LOVE FOR JANE

■ As soon as Gene Nelson stopped seeing Jane Powell, Pat Nerney, the thirty-three-year-old former husband of actress Mona Freeman, moved right in.

Nerney makes no secret of his love for Jane and his wish to marry her.

"I think she's wonderful," he says. "I've known her five or six years and I've always thought so. I first met her while I was married to Mona. We just ran into her at different places.

"A few months ago I took her to Chasen's. I haven't dated anyone else. I haven't found a girl like her for a long time. She's one in a million.

"When we were out a few weeks ago we saw Pat Di Cicco and his wife. I had seen Pat last year in Europe and we began to talk about different places we had been and wanted to go and Pat said, 'How would you like to go on a safari to Africa this August?' Jane got very excited. She said that had always been one of her secret desires. If things work out, maybe we can go together. Her divorce isn't final until August 7."

Nerney, who owns a Ford dealership with his brother, was married to Mona Freeman for six years. He has a daughter by that marriage, little Mona, five, for whose support he pays $75 a month. The Nerneys were divorced in 1952. Pat began an active social life and Mona began to concentrate on her career at RKO.

About his feeling for Jane Powell, Pat recently told newsmen, "I'm madly in love with her. We're just friends."

After August 7, he hopes to say, "We're just man and wife."

"Would you take him back?"

"Well, I just don't know. This whole thing upset me very much. I was very much in love with him. I guess I still am. I thought we would have a very wonderful life together. If he was worrying about being the top man in our house—I'd never have made him feel anything else. The difference in earning capacity—well, I've never worried about money. You just have to go out and do your work as well as you can. With a man I guess it's very difficult. I guess Gene had a lot of things on his mind."

"It was he, then, who suggested the break?"

"Yes."

"But would you still take him back?"

"Is Miriam going to take him back?"

"She has taken him back before. She'll probably take him back again. I think she understands that he's a complex man and in the past she has always been patient and forgiving. But would you take him back? That's the question."

"I just don't know. Just don't know. I hope Gene will straighten himself out and find happiness."

"Are you happy?"

"I'm very happy—don't have the time to be sad. I'm finishing a picture, A Bride For Seven Brothers. Then I fly to Italy and sing there at a benefit for crippled children; then I fly to Brazil for the film festival. I won't be home before March, and then we're moving into a new house, so you can see."

"You're sure you're not running away from something?"

"What do you mean?"

"Aren't you carrying a torch for Gene?"

"I guess I am."

"If Gene hadn't come along, would you have divorced Geary, anyway?"

"It would have happened sooner or later. This I know. If I really wanted to go back to the old ways, I could have, couldn't I? I'm glad it happened when it did because now it's better for everyone concerned. And I'm still young and have my life before me. No, I don't regret the divorce one bit."

"Does Geary visit the children frequently?"

"Yes, he's very good about that."

"Don't you ever look back and wonder why you ever got married in the first place?"

"I was insecure and always afraid of loneliness. And there comes a time in every girl's life when she feels that she simply must get married."

"How do you feel about the future?"

"I feel wonderful about it, especially about all this travel. When I was a girl in Portland I used to say, 'My, if some day I could only get to New York.' And now I'll be traveling all over the world. It's really very exciting."

"Maybe you'll find some exciting new man overseas. Have you got your eyes open for that?"

"In the future I hope to pick the right man. I certainly don't want to go through this again."

"Deep down in your heart, do you think the decision that you and Gene arrived at —not to see each other any more—was the right decision? Don't you believe that perhaps you have thrown away the one great love in your lives?"

"That's hard to tell. It's difficult to evaluate anything when you're close to it. And love is hard to sustain when there are so many obstacles. After a while they just wear you down. And one shouldn't live in the past. I'm going right ahead and I guess Gene is, too."

That conversation with Jane helps to show why many interviewers say that no actress in Hollywood is more candid, more honest or more lovable than Jane Powell. Hurt and disappointed she may be, but there is no bitterness toward anyone. She doesn't permit herself to brood.

The wonder of it all is that any man could give her up. In relinquishing his hold on her heart, Gene Nelson gave up a young woman who has sex appeal, top-flight talent, a sunny disposition, a tremendous earning potential and the respect and admiration of her fellow-workers.

In the years to come Gene Nelson may look back and wonder—and this wondering, this pondering, this debate between heart and mind, this pent-up anguish may be the price for Jane Powell's love, once his, then discarded. END

(Jane Powell can be seen currently in MGM's Athena.)

TERRY MOORE starring in
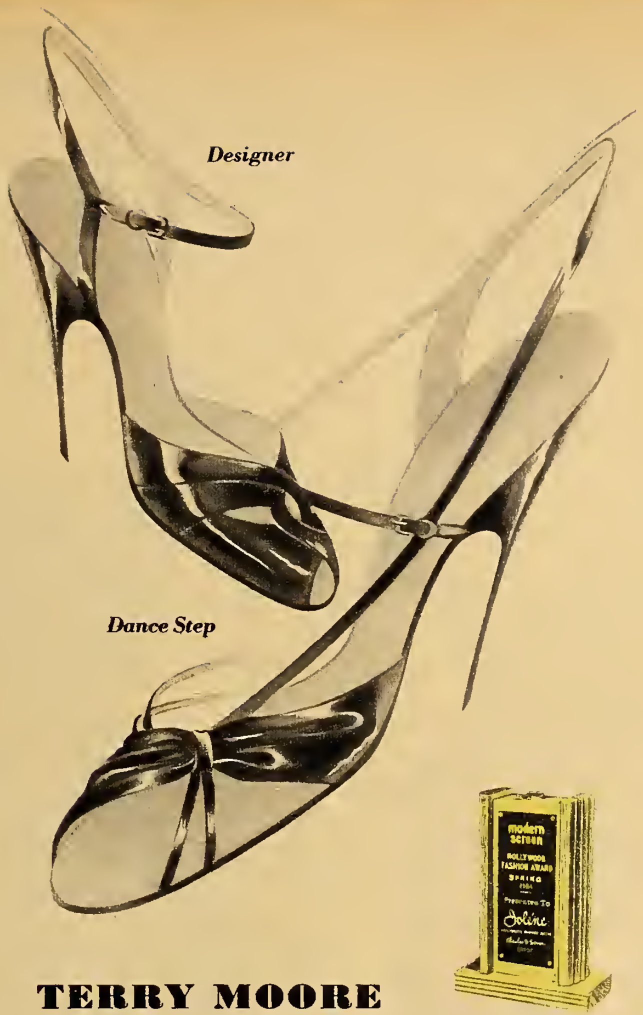
KING OF THE KHYBER RIFLES

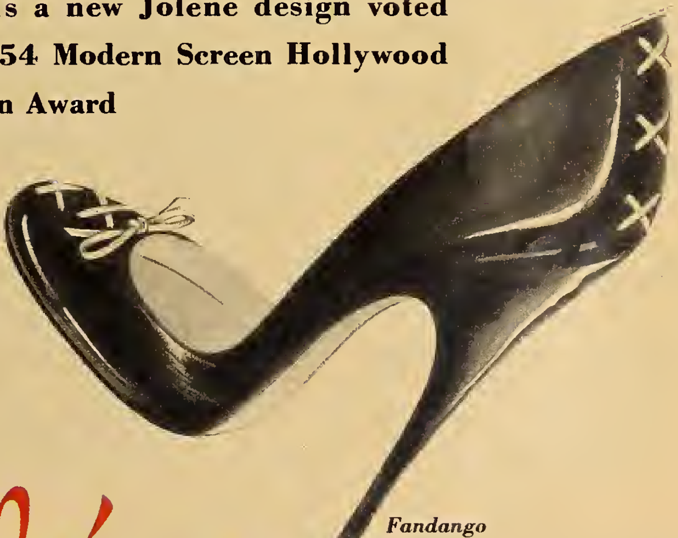
A 20th Century-Fox production in CinemaScope

Color by Technicolor



TERRY MOORE

models a new Jolene design voted the 1954 Modern Screen Hollywood Fashion Award



Joléne

HOLLYWOOD-INSPIRED SHOES

from $8.95 slightly higher Denver West and Canada

TOBER-SAIFER SHOE MANUFACTURING COMPANY • 1204 WASHINGTON AVENUE • ST. LOUIS 3, MISSOURI
Manufactured in Canada by Wilmont Shoe Co., Ltd., Montreal

RITE-FIT DRESS-of-the-MONTH SELECTIONS

Left: Here's rayon and silk . . . powdered with a crisp white print. American Silk Mill's washable Siltussa in navy, lilac or aqua. Sizes 14½ to 24½. About $9. Right: All-over embroidered cotton schiffle on Belding Corticelli's "linen-look" rayon. Hand washable, with a high resistance to wrinkles. Navy, lilac, blue or shrimp in sizes 14½ to 22½. About $9.

Write us—we'll tell you where to buy them.

Max Wiesen & Sons Co. Inc., 463 Seventh Ave., New York 18

HOLLYWOOD LOOKS TO SPRING

■ Filmland takes its fashion straight—loves basic clothes that can be glamourized with accessories and jewelry. This spring's fare includes full, full skirts, classic blouses and a blossoming of colors. Shoes, smartly styled but practical. Jewelry exciting. Dainty underpinnings, of course, complete the perfect wardrobe.

1. Terry Moore models a colorful, clock-printed cotton frock. Sleeveless with a princess waistline and full skirt. Black braid trim. 10 to 16. About $13. By McArthur, Ltd. At Gimbel Brothers, Milwaukee, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh; J. Magnin, San Francisco and branch stores; John W. Thomas, Minneapolis. Capri's startling white sharks tooth earrings ($1*) and bracelets ($1* each). Dorset-Rex bag. See Terry in the 20th Century-Fox CinemaScope films King Of The Khyber Rifles and Beneath The 12-Mile Reef.

2. Terry poses in a colorfast cotton broadcloth skirt and blouse outfit. The blouse has saddle-stitch trim and comes in a dozen wonderful colors. About $3. By Ship 'n Shore. The skirt has unpressed pleats, a wide waistband with a deep V yoke in front. Wide color range. About $8. By McArthur, Ltd. Separate belt, Caldernon. The blouse and skirt are at leading department and specialty stores. Capri's gold ball drop earrings ($1*) and fabulous bead bracelets ($1* each). Terry takes time for college courses along with her career—we caught her doing homework at her Underwood Finger-Flight Champion portable typewriter.

3. Debbie Reynolds chooses a spring costume of navy blue—full, pleated, crepe skirt, blouse with white scarf accent. Debbie wears Bur-Mil Cameo stockings. She puts her best foot forward in her handsome pumps of navy calf called Nina Hi, also smartly accented with white trim. Shoes by Jolene (for complete details see next page). Skirt from Saks Fifth Avenue. Blouse by Lanz of California. See Debbie Reynolds in her new Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Technicolor films, Athena and Give A Girl A Break.

plus taxes*

1

2 modern screen fashions

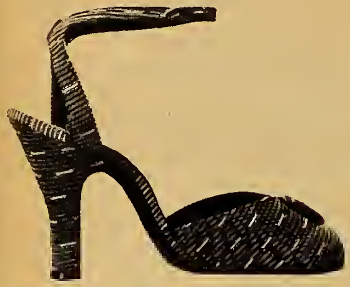
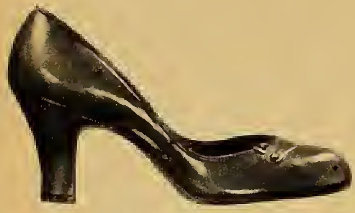
3

MORE>

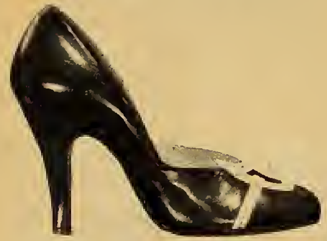
JOLENE HOLLYWOOD APPROVED SHOES



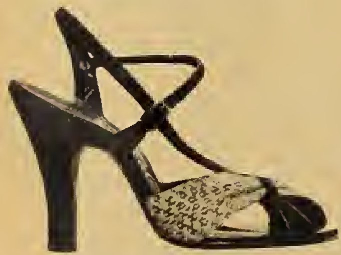
DASH HI—corded faille ankle strap high heel sandal, button on vamp. Black, brown or navy with white. About $9.



LA PETITE—calf pump with rhinestone trim on vamp collar, high heel. Benedictine, black, blue or red calf. About $9.



NINA HI—navy calf pump with white stitching and trim. Also black, red or eggshell calf or black patent. About $10.



DANCE STEP—halter sandal, high heel, cobra trim. Blue or red calf; black or blue suede; or black patent. About $11.

Board members Mr. and Mrs. John Ericson look at Jolene shoes from two viewpoints—a man's and a woman's—and seem to agree.

Eleanor Parker, with hair cut short and caree stretched long, selects a two-color pump, a practical shoe, right for almost any costume.

Whether she dons dancing shoes for fun or for her salary, dancer Ann Miller chooses a pretty, comfortable shoe for a glamorous foot.

Another long-stemmed MGM dancing star, Cyd Charisse tries to make her choice between two good-looking, easy walking Jolene shoes.

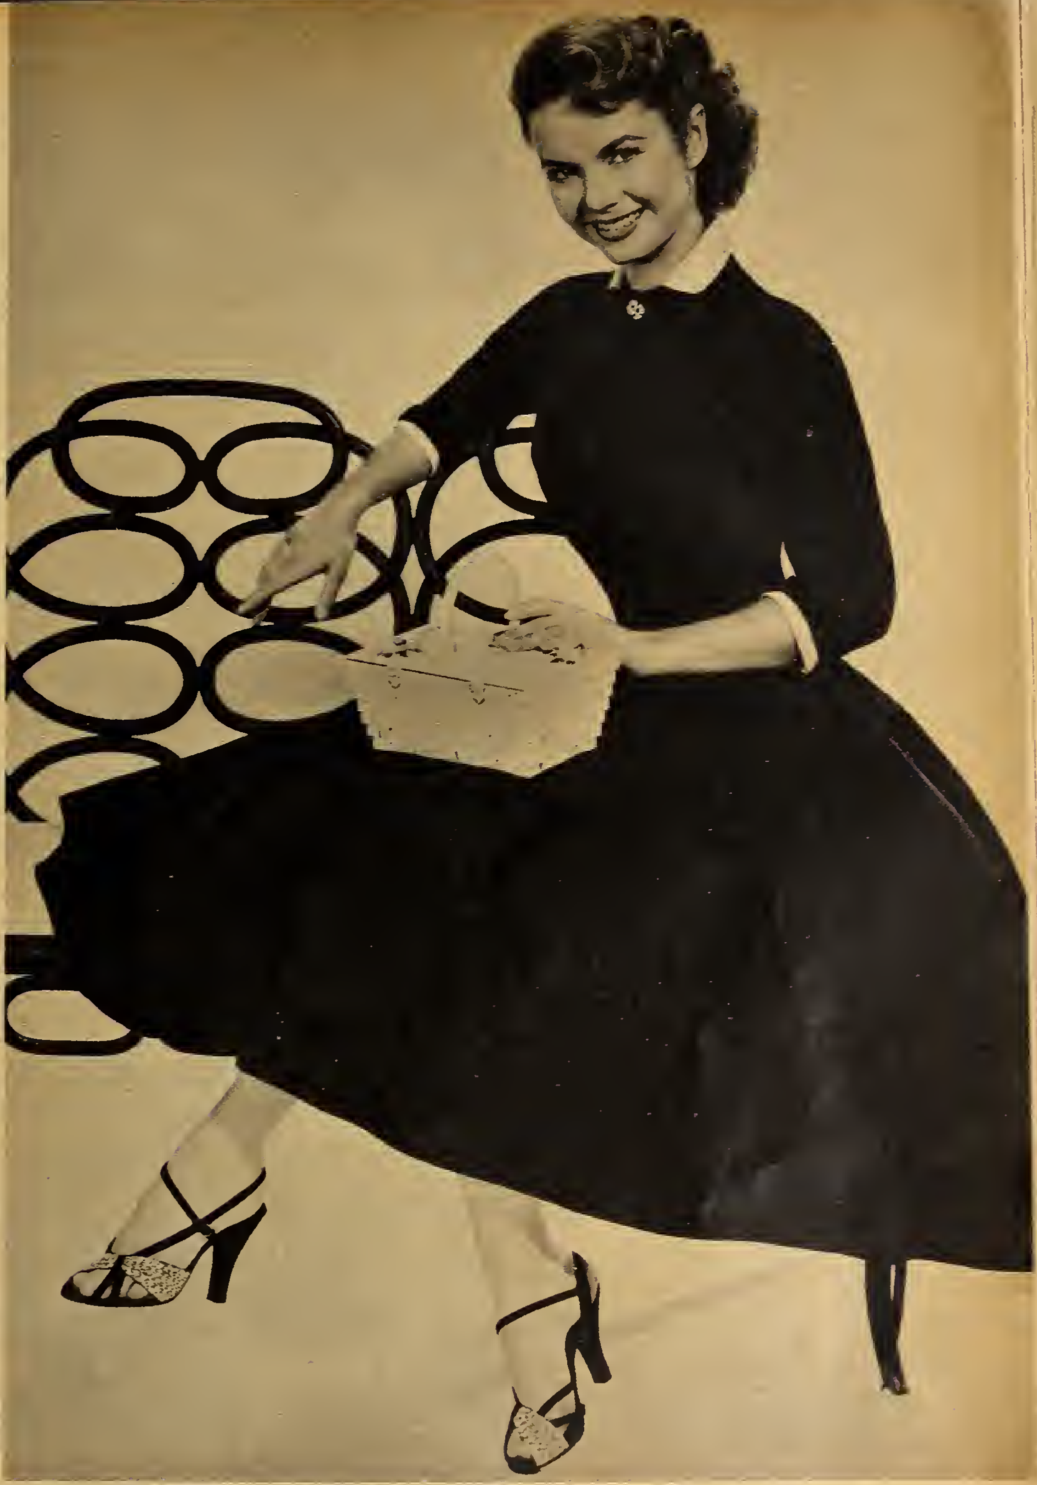
Hollywood Looks to Spring

ALL ABOUT

Star film credits, page 81

Metro's lush beauty, Elaine Stewart, displays two sandals from the winning shoe designs lined up at the left for your inspection.

Chairwoman of Modern Screen's Fashion Board, Metro's Debbie Reynolds detains Dick Anderson for comment on her new shoes.



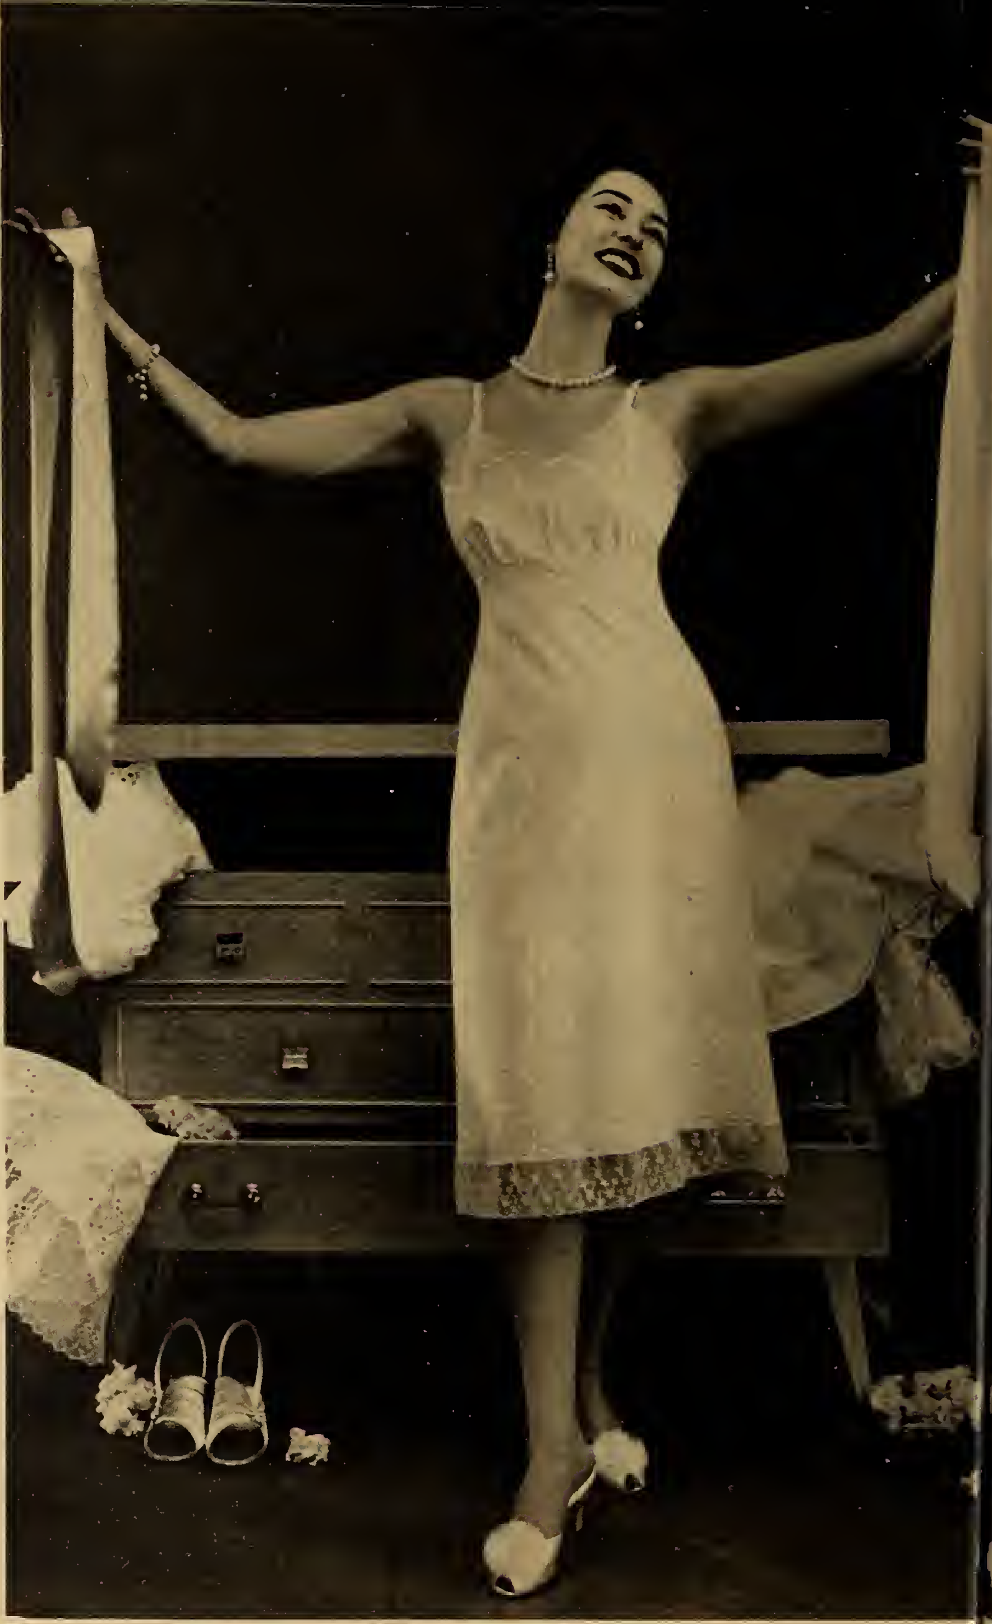
The Modern Screen Hollywood Fashion Board (left) and Debbie Reynolds, Chairwoman, awarded Jolene shoes the M. S. Fashion Trophy for spring. Debbie models Jolene's sandal, Dance Step (see opposite page). Dress by Lanz of California. Bur-Mil Cameo stockings. Dorset-Rex bag.

SHOES

JOLENE SHOES MAY BE PURCHASED IN PERSON OR BY MAIL FROM STORES LISTED ON PAGE 81.

MORE➤

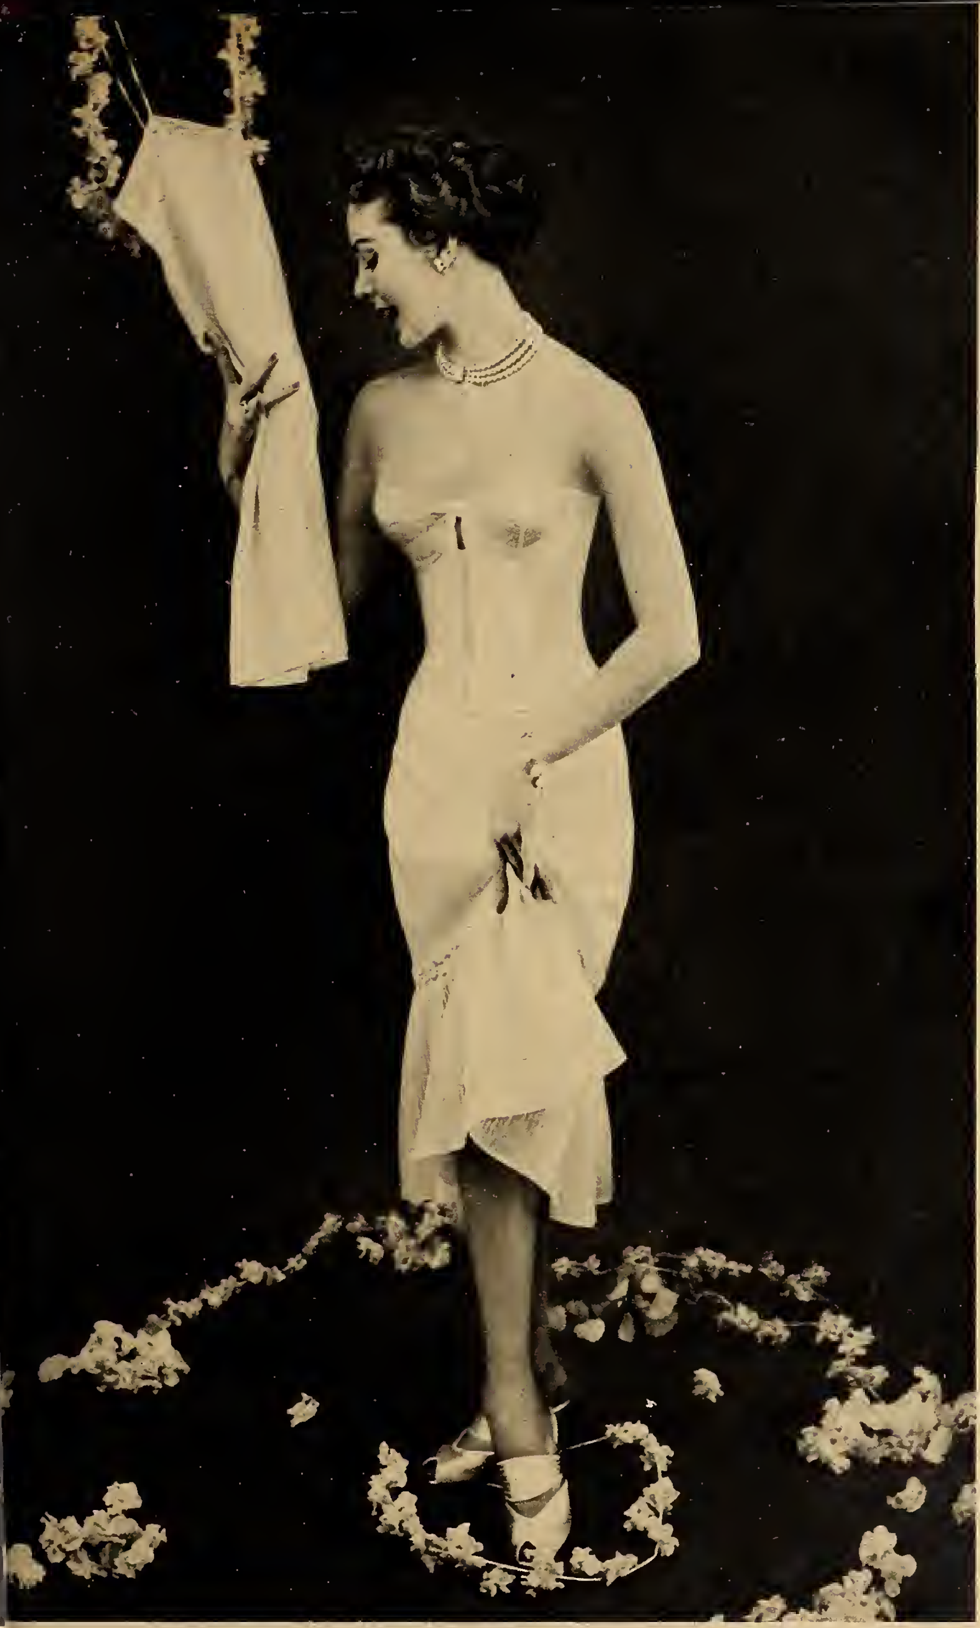
Hollywood Looks to Spring



Right out of heaven—Stardust lingerie. Long known for beauty, it is practical, too—guaranteed for one year's wear, no ironing and so economical. The slip shown is cotton plissé—the bodice and hemline trim are of beautifully embroidered nylon sheer. White only. At about $2. In the cedar chest more Stardust lingerie, nighties and petticoats also of cotton plissé with embroidered nylon sheer trim. Pearls by Richelieu. Holeproof hosiery "Personally Yours" for brunettes, Parisian Nude. Satin mules, Powder Puff with nylon net frou frou trim—the slippers on the floor, Sibyl. Both by Daniel Green. Cedar chest—Lane Company.

STARDUST LINGERIE AVALIABLE AT LEADING SPECIALTY, DEPARTMENT AND VARIETY STORES

SPRING LINGERIE



Today's young figure is exquisitely molded to give even more glamour than Dame Nature endowed—direct contrast to the feminine fripperies of grandmother's time (note old-fashioned chemise, far left). The "Three-Quarter Time" bra shown here is by Hollywood-Maxwell. It has a built-in nipper waist that extends three inches below the waistline. It is made of nylon lace and fine Nyacel Leno elastic—wire support and supple steel boning for complete freedom of movement. White or black. About $11. Pearls by Richelieu. Holeproof hosiery "Personally Yours" for blondes, Champagne. Satin slippers, Sabot, by Daniel Green.

HOLLYWOOD-MAXWELL BRAS AVAILABLE AT LEADING DEPARTMENT AND SPECIALTY STORES

NEWS

More fashions on page 76

the case of the smuggled ermine

(Continued from page 48) and thereafter by almost impenetrable confusion.

Modern Screen, after consideration, undertakes to put history back on the track.

The legal mind probably would break the business down in concise and orderly fashion: The Case, The Prosecution, The Defense, and The Summation. But the legal mind wouldn't have much fun and would be courting a nervous breakdown. This way looks easier: In the drama, lasting not much more than ten days, there is a prologue and three acts. The two pertinent scenes are Los Angeles International Airport, whence the troupe took off, and Korea, where ultimately it landed. Props and personnel include:

The bathing suit.

Miss Moore.

Grant.

George Murphy, screen star and head of the Hollywood Coordinating Committee (USO Camp Shows).

General Maxwell Taylor, commandant of the Korean Theatre, and subsidiary brass.

A lieutenant (unnamed).

A sergeant (unnamed).

Mrs. L. W. Koford, Miss Moore's mother.

Abandoning Grant for the moment and trotting around to that which touched off the mine, the camera focuses first on a Los Angeles hotel one night last autumn. The occasion was the annual Hollywood Press Photographers Ball, the action a skit Miss Moore had agreed to do.

The skit was just a little more forthright than Korean camp shows would have permitted. And it involved The Ermine Bathing Suit. These two points, and these alone, are undisputed. In the following few days, things got pretty weird.

Newspapers reported that (1) the bathing suit was a Bikini, (2) Miss Moore had done a striptease, (3) she was going to do the same skit in Korea.

"Look at it," demanded Miss Moore, a few days after her return from Korea. She had twice been ordered to leave Korea and twice held fast to have the order rescinded, while Stateside newsrooms whirred and boiled and got out the red type. She held The Ermine Bathing Suit at arm's length, spilling mothballs like marbles. "Is that a Bikini?" It was not. It's just a little old run-of-the-mill ermine bathing suit, and a cute one, too. "A Bikini," expounded Miss M., "is—is nothing but a G-string for the underneath part, and—and a kind of a wispy bra. Why, I wouldn't wear one!"

It had not been altered since?

"Certainly not! It is not now nor has it ever been a Bikini? Look, it's even cut extra high on top so there's no cleavage. I saw to that."

Well, how about the striptease business?

"What nonsense!" said Miss M. "For the skit at the ball, I wore a coat at first. Then I went offstage and took off the coat and came back in the bathing suit, but you don't call that a striptease! Do you? And anyway, it was especially written material, nothing to do with what I was going to do in Korea."

Johnny Grant confirms this categorically. "She didn't do a thing risqué there. Sang a couple of songs and worked in a clean little skit with me. The boys loved her. She's a good trouper. But the first part of the mix-up—I just don't know."

The first part of the mix-up occurred at International Airport early on the morning the troupe took off. George Murphy, speaking for the Coordinating Committee, was heard by responsible newsmen saying to Miss Moore: "If you're going to wear that bathing suit, you might as well turn around and go home right now."

More important, he was admittedly heard by Miss Moore to say the same words. She laughed and answered: "Oh, George, you don't have to worry. It isn't even packed."

But it was.

Miss Moore, for defense summation: "Here's the way that happened. Mother and I had talked about the suit, and then decided to leave it behind. But at the last minute, mother thought she'd pack it for—you know—some publicity shots, or something like that. But she forgot to tell me. So when George was talking to me at the airport, mother had already got on the plane, and I thought I was speaking the truth."

On the flight from Los Angeles to Tokyo, there was friction between Terry and Grant, whatever the affability of their relations afterward, and Grant stalked out of one of their post-flight discussions at a Korean base. Let the door slam while he was about it.

And for five performances, Miss Moore wore the ermine bathing suit, to the piercing delight of the soldiers. "Some of them," Terry has said since, "go for months without seeing an American girl. Imagine how long they go without seeing an ermine bathing suit!"

Their pleasure was not wholly shared by the guiding hands of what their entertainment should consist of. On Christmas night, Grant dragged his weary, hungry frame into an enlisted men's mess, where he was told that Tokyo was frantic to get him on the phone, had called five times. Experiencing a premonition and an abrupt loss of appetite, he called the operator.

It was a wire from Hollywood. Miss Moore later was to tell the Los Angeles Examiner in an exclusive interview that the first notice of her recall came from the Army in Washington. That is not Grant's recollection. He can quote the wire, addressed to him, word for word, today. As a document, it perhaps should be offered in somewhat immaterial evidence:

"USO Camp Shows and George Murphy request the return of Helen Koford, known as Terry Moore, to the zone of the interior immediately for violation of an agreement with George Murphy. She is not to appear before any more U.N. troops." It was signed by the Coordinating Committee.

Rather regretfully, Grant delivered the tidings to Terry and her mother.

After that, somebody kicked down the barn door.

At least one person, presumably close to the chain of events, has said it was Terry herself: "She and this sergeant in the Public Relations Office got together and called United Press. U.P. had five stories out before any other wire service got off its duff. Last I heard of the sergeant, he was loading ammunition within whistling distance of Manchuria."

Terry says positively no. "U.P. called me. There was a sergeant who was sympathetic toward me, but if he'd done anything like that, he would have been court-martialed."

In addition, she says, that night was a tough one. "Mother and I cried and cried. How can they say it was for publicity! Why, that would have been the same as a dishonorable discharge! It could have ruined my career! It almost did! I guess it's mostly blown over now, but for a little while it could have gone either way."

Rescue came the next morning. An hour after the rest of the troupe had been flown out for a point further north, the ejection order was countermanded. Terry and her mother were put in two separate planes to follow them, and Terry arrived in time to walk on-stage just as Grant had introduced Penny Singleton, another member of the company.

"Surprised?" said Terry to Grant, as Grant remembers it.

"Very," said Grant. "Shall we dance?"

But at noon that day, Grant received another call, and had to give Terry the bad news all over again. "I don't know," he told her, "where this one came from. But you'll still have to go."

But a second countermand came through, and that was the clincher. Terry had won out—but not the bathing suit. The bathing suit was through.

This final countermand reputedly was the doing of General Taylor himself, who was supposed to have called Grant and asked in bemused exasperation what in the world was going on up there. Grant told him, as well as he was able, and Taylor asked him: "Listen, is everything all right? The girl and the show and everything?" Grant assured him that everything was. "Okay, then," said the general. "Stop worrying."

It was too late. Johnny had shed fifteen pounds, already.

The papers Stateside—or "zone of the interior"—continued to yodel and click their heels. Korea had at last broken out something divorced from grief, stagnation and death.

Immediately on her return to Hollywood, Terry was inclined to blame the Army for her humiliation. A few days later, though, she had switched to the view that darker and less identifiable forces were to blame—not the Army nor the USO, but a kind of pressure lobby she labeled feelingly as "You know." "Everybody," she said, "was pressurized."

That is not impossible. "Even before she left the country," a man well acquainted with the shambles has deposed, "people were sending wires and letters to the War Department protesting against what she hadn't even done yet. They were misled by the Bikini and striptease talk. I wish the joes who write these stories and captions would find out what a Bikini bathing suit is before they begin to use the term."

"I wish they would, too," Terry Moore said, again in summation. "I'd never wear one of those because I think the more you have on, the sexier it is."

Terry Moore lives a nice family life on a nice family street in the part of West Los Angeles called Westwood Hills. It is not far from UCLA, where she is studying for a degree and may well have one in a year or a year and a half. Four days after her return, a friend and occasional historian of hers drove up to her house, blew the horn and invited her to come down and tell him all about it. The two have an informal working basis, wherein he drives her around the neighborhood while she thrashes her verbal way out of whatever buzzsaw she has encountered recently.

She is difficult not to believe. She is small, earnest and cute, and she does not hide behind double-talk. On the contrary, she may well talk herself into a kind of film purgatory one of these days. And if once in a while there comes into her voice a crisp, hard undertone when she speaks of publicity values, the tendency is just to imagine you heard it.

This day, there was no doubt that her feeling was genuine.

"The terrible thing is," she wailed in part, "that from now on anything I do will be tagged, 'publicity,' and they'll be saying I'll do anything for it."

Do not write Miss Moore off as a prophet. A powerful columnist wrote: "Somebody, but somebody, should talk to Terry Moore. The ermine bathing suit episode has gone to her head (Continued on page 77

KEEP YOUR BABY "SOCIALLY ACCEPTABLE"* WITH PLAYTEX BABY PANTS

This Baby-in-Motion Picture shows how PLAYTEX Panties stretch all over to give all-over comfort and all-over protection all the time. Long-lasting. Washable—in seconds! No wonder more mothers buy PLAYTEX than any other make. ©1954 International Latex Corp'n. Playtex Park, Dover Del. In Canada: Playtex Ltd., Arnprior, Ontario T.M.

No other baby pants have this "Miracle-Stretch."
Let your hand prove it.

THE GIRDLE STORY

PERMA.LIFT PANTIE GIRDLES, AND BRAS BY A. STEIN AND HOLEPROOF
HOSIERY AVAILABLE AT LEADING DEPARTMENT AND SPECIALTY STORES

■ Precious as jewels, new as spring—Perma.lift's mere wisps of nylon mesh pantie girdles with a new patented "Magic Oval" crotch for comfort and assurance that the pantie girdle will not ride up. White only—detachable garters. Pantie girdles—l. to r.: $5.00; $5.95; $8.50. Perma lift bras (all have "Magic Insets")—l. to r.: nylon, $1.50; padded cotton, $1.95; all nylon with embroidered sheer upper cups, $2.95. Pearls by Richelieu. Hosiery—Holeproof's exciting new idea called "Personally Yours" that features a particular color for every feminine type. Brownette—left, Cinderella; blonde—center, Champagne; redhead—right, Charm Beige.

(Continued from page 74) and now she'll do anything for publicity!"

The day after that, the columnist had mellowed, attributing to Terry a sense of humor. She had received, she wrote, a letter from Miss Moore bearing the post script: "I'm majoring in psychology, but I guess it didn't take."

"Publicity!" now chirped a distraught Miss M. for the second time. "That's what really hurts—their saying that. Look, I gave up my Christmas to go over there! Couldn't I have got more publicity right here at home, posing for magazine layouts and doing interviews?"

Fortunately for auld lang syne, the question was a rhetorical one. But the answer is no.

Not everyone did think Miss Moore made the trip for publicity. Another faction, not conspicuously more charitable, thought she'd gone to see a Texan friend, a lieutenant now stationed over there. What was there to that?

"Nothing," said Miss M. flatly. "I know him, sure, and we had a couple of dates in Tokyo, but there's nothing to the story. And I don't want to mention his name because his family wouldn't like it. Nobody would care, anyway."

But the romance was over?

Said Miss M., "It never began."

And what of the report that she'd had some difficulties getting home (via a stopover in Honolulu) but had them straightened out by a powerful business acquaintance in Los Angeles?

"Who, me?" said Terry.

And all that over a bathing suit!

"All that over a bathing suit!" she echoed. "And I almost didn't wear it. It would have been Susan Zanuck, but it was a little too small for her. I had a dress I'd much rather have worn, one that Mother made for me, with Christmas decorations and spangles all over it. I guess my good deed for 1953 backfired, all right." Susan Zanuck, daughter of 20th Century-Fox production chief Darryl, was part of the troupe, and a much liked and respected part. Grant nearly blew a fuse in his relief that this was so. He confessed to her that he had a phobia about bosses's daughters, and had prepared for the worst. Then he barely stopped short of throwing his arms around her.

HAVE YOU GOT WHAT IT TAKES TO LAND YOUR GUY?

Well, you can get it—for only ten cents! Be sure to see the special coupon offer on page 80 for your complete booklet of wedding do's and don'ts.

OTHER post storm rumbles were not so unequivocally cordial. Murphy was accused in some places of having blown his stack because the bathing suit bit could have put a crimp in Washington political ambitions he is reported to harbor. An opposite and larger faction contends he not only did not authorize the telegram of recall, but did not even know about it, and was embarrassed when he found out. This school of thought believes another USO officer primed the whole deal, using Murphy's name.

While Terry stoutly maintains that the entire troupe stuck by her, one or two of the troupe were heard to snort that to salvage any personal mention out of the ermine bathing suit ruckus, they'd have had to wear sable-tipped antlers and swallow thousand-dollar bills.

Among other exhibits for the defense, Terry is able to offer a tape recording of an Army radio commentator's rhapsodic review of her performance, a high-ranking chaplain's approval both of the bathing suit and her act, and a mass of shoulder-patches, insignia and medals, and badges bestowed on her by a grateful encampment. Of this, there can be little doubt—they loved her in Korea. She murdered 'em in Seoul.

But that still left unexplained the go-for-broke question: Why, when in effect it was agreed between her and Murphy that she would not wear the bathing suit, had she gone ahead and worn it?

Terry blinked once, and said: "They ordered me to!"

Eh? Who?

"The Army!" said Terry. "The chaplain approved the bathing suit. And a general. And Johnny Grant said I should go ahead and wear it! Wouldn't you call that an order?"

On the other hand, there is one other possible solution, perhaps not too far-fetched. It is that Terry didn't know whether she was wearing a bathing suit or a dress. At least once she has demonstrated alarming myopia toward large, flashy objects.

A few weeks ago she was out driving with a friend in a sort of beige-colored, unwashed Cadillac convertible with red leather upholstery and a back seat that suggested he had been using it to transport sheep. Bear the description in mind.

By and by they stopped at a newsstand where Terry expressed the wish to pick up a couple of magazines. She picked up $2.75 worth and staggered beneath this load back toward the car. But she got into the car parked next to it—a robin's-egg blue Ford station wagon, impeccable and glossy with pearl grey upholstery and a back seat as pristine as Tiffany's window.

Hey, called her baffled escort. Wrong car.

You're sure to get rave reviews, too — like Polly Bergen — for starring in 3-D, when you make a "personable" appearance in MOXEES exciting new 3-way moc discovery. . . . a box-office hit in every dimension!

1 With its nail-head studded dog-collar, it's a snappy anklet moc.
2 Without it — a scene-stealing, curvaceous moccasin.
3 And for still more oomph, ingenue fashion — buckled over the instep.

Hand sewn heel and toe, and how it will go with whirl-away skirts, slacks and shorts. Double features soft, smooth leather in technicolor red, brown or black with a low, low $7.00 admission price. Now playing at better stores everywhere.

Write for names in your neighborhood. Belgrade Shoe Company, Auburn, Me.

Glamour Eyes WITH LASH-KOTE

Waterproof, Smudgeproof Liquid Eyelash Makeup

Your lashes will look longer, lovelier, softer. Bathe, swim, cry — Lash-Kote will not run or smudge. Harmless. Lasts for days and days. Special exclusive applicator in every bottle.

BLACK or BROWN 25¢

...and for added Eye-Beauty

LASH-KOTE DAY 'N NITE EYE SHADOW

It's new, it's exciting! This finest quality shadow available in true shadow shades, Gray Blue and Cactus Green. Applies easily, blends smoothly. Only 25¢

...also

LASH-KOTE SOFT EYE-BROW PENCIL

in black, dark brown, or light brown. Finest quality, long wearing. Only 15¢

VOGUE PRODUCTS • Hollywood 31, California

More Glamour For Less At Your Favorite 5 and 10¢ STORE
Leading Brands—Lowest Prices

Here's Magic at Your Fingertips

TUFFENAIL
—for problem nails. Used by thousands of women. Beauty operator A. F. of Chicago writes: "Have used it (Tuffenail) and think it's very good. My customers' nails have never been so beautiful." Use Tuffenail daily and see for yourself.

Qticare
—for better manicures. Use safe, gentle rapid Qticare Cuticle Remover.

Both in exclusive non-spill applicator vial. So easy to apply.

25¢ each at your 5 and 10

VOGUE PRODUCTS • Hollywood 31, California

"Oh, really?" said Terry, changing cars with no apparent awareness of the difference between them.

Of course her mind was on something else. She had to take a final exam at UCLA that night and she had been cramming most of the day.

What was the subject?

"Oh, it's a play by Bill Saroyan. I'm supposed to read it and write a review."

Which one?

"I forget the name. Something about 'happy.' Happy World—something like that."

The Time Of Your Life?

"That's it," said Miss M. "You know. Happy."

So it could have been this cram-session that had distracted her. But the cars were spectacularly dissimilar, almost like an ermine bathing suit and a long dress with spangles. It might have helped if the Army and the newspapers and the USO and all had known of this myopia. It might have saved everybody, notably Terry Moore, a lot of grief.

And it could have saved her a few surplus pounds. For Terry does not, like the luckless Mr. Grant, shrivel in adversity. She expands. Let the ominous frown of impending misfortune show itself, and Terry begins to pack away the victuals like an escapist going for the needle.

"It's simply terrible," she has said. "My stomach goes boinnggg, and I have to eat to pacify it. Just like ulcers, only I haven't got ulcers. But when I'm worried, I eat like mad, and when there's a crisis—oh, my! If things get bad enough, I won't be able to get out a door without turning sideways."

Things were no more than moderately bad at that moment. The tumult and the shouting were dying down, and Terry had obliterated just two modest chili hot dogs, two root beers, and a small stack of potato chips. Dinner was a good hour and a half away, long enough for any solid eater grappling with catastrophe to work up an appetite.

She and the MODERN SCREEN operative were sitting in the open inner patio of the Brentwood Market, a charming establishment where screen stars are a dime a dozen and potato chips not much more. It seemed a good place to be winding up The Case Of The Ermine Bathing Suit—too hot next to the fire and chilly and indifferent once you were away from it.

"I'm cold on my right," said Miss M., "and toasted on my left. Let's go." END anatomy lesson

It may be comforting to bury your head in the sand, but personally, MODERN SCREEN prefers to stick out its neck and take it on the chin. Take what? Why, your criticism, of course—if you have any you'd like to deliver. On the other hand, if you'd rather award a pat on the back, we'll be starry-eyed over it and all ears for your compliments. Just let us know what's on your mind by filling out the ballot below. Then hotfoot it to the mailbox, because if yours is among the first hundred forms we receive, we'll send you a crisp, new, one-dollar greenback!

QUESTIONNAIRE: Which stories and features did you enjoy most in this issue? WRITE THE NUMBERS 1, 2, and 3 AT THE FAR LEFT of your first, second and third choices. Then let us know what stars you'd like to read about in future issues.

- ☐ Through With Love? (Jane Wyman)
- ☐ The Complete Story of Marilyn Monroe's Honeymoon
- ☐ I Loved and Lost (Jane Powell)
- ☐ "I Didn't Marry an Angel" (Lana Turner-Lex Barker)
- ☐ Why Hollywood Is Sore At Eddie Fisher
- ☐ Dutch Treat (Audrey Hepburn)
- ☐ Everything's Okay (Elizabeth Taylor-Mike Wilding)
- ☐ Bungalow Big Enough For Two (Janet Leigh-Tony Curtis)
- ☐ Bing's Secret Love's No Secret Any More (Bing Crosby)
- ☐ The Case of the Smuggled Ermine (Terry Moore)
- ☐ Love Is Where You Find It (Jeanne Crain)
- ☐ What Makes Stanwyck Tick? (Barbara Stanwyck)
- ☐ Marry The Girl! (Shelley Winters-Vittorio Gassman)
- ☐ The Happy Faith (Rock Hudson)
- ☐ ¡Quapisima Elizabeth! (Elizabeth Taylor)
- ☐ He Didn't Carry The Ball (Aldo Ray)
- ☐ Power-ful Dynasty (Tyrone Power)
- ☐ The Tryst That Foiled (Donald O'Connor)
- ☐ The Inside Story
- ☐ Louella Parsons' Good News
- ☐ Just For The Records
- ☐ Hollywood Abroad
- ☐ Movie Reviews
- ☐ Modern Screen Fashions
- ☐ TV Talk

Which story did you dislike?

Which 3 MALE stars would you like to read about in future issues? List them 1, 2, 3, in order of preference.

Which FEMALE stars would you like to read about in future issues?

Who is your favorite MALE television star?

Who is your favorite FEMALE television star?

My name is..........................

My address is........................

City.................. State.........

Occupation........ I am .... yrs. old

ADDRESS TO: POLL DEPT., MODERN SCREEN, BOX 125, MURRAY HILL STATION, NEW YORK 16, N. Y.

love is where you find it

(Continued from page 53) quick and intelligent. But when he decided to marry Jeanne, they agreed that two public careers in one family was an invitation to trouble. A month before the wedding Paul quietly got his release from the studio. He is head of his own plant today, manufacturing electronic and radar equipment. He likes his work and believes that he has had far greater and more stable success than he would have had if he had remained an actor.

Jeanne has always been thankful that Paul has had studio working experience. "He knows that making a picture is hard work," she says. "He knows what an actor must contribute in terms of nervous energy and he knows that when I go to the studio I don't just sit around trying to look glamorous."

NEITHER Jeanne nor Paul takes any stock in reports about marriages that have blown up overnight; they cannot believe that this actually happens.

"No one breaks up because somebody has danced too long with somebody or smiled too often at them," Jeanne has declared. "This can't be. There is a bigger and deeper reason. There was something basically wrong that should have been attended to. But it was allowed to grow until it overcame the bond of attraction the husband and wife originally had for each other.

"As a matter of fact, I can't persuade myself that people who get divorces within three years were ever really in love. I don't mean that my marriage has made me an expert. But in my judgment, anyone enough in love to get married, and enough in love to stay married for three years, could not have gotten over that love overnight. On the contrary, a marriage is or should be just beginning to knit in that time. Love doesn't just fly out the window; it is killed or allowed to die little by little. That's why I wonder if they ever could have been in love.

"I remember that when I was a young girl my fanciful conception of love was a wonderful musical composition with the sweetest of that music played at the very beginning. It didn't strike me then, as it does now, that if this were the case the music would have to peter down to a most insipid melody. Marriage can be like a symphony, opening on a theme of love, and then developing and exploring this theme in ever finer and more soaring passages."

Not long ago Jeanne was saddened by the divorce of a couple who had been married for three years and had two infants. When she and Paul discussed it they both remembered that right from the start this marriage had puzzled them. In the first place, both husband and wife seemed bent on going out to seek social gaiety. They appeared happy, but they seemed to need the stimulus of convivial society to keep them happy. By contrast, Jeanne and Paul remembered, they had retreated from their everyday world during the first months of their marriage; it had seemed natural to require no other amusement.

"It seemed to us they were getting little out of their marriage," commented Jeanne. "They were awfully casual, even cold, about something which should be the most important and exciting event of their lives!"

NO ONE has yet asked Jeanne for advice on marriage but she is accumulating quite a stock of it—for good reason. She is the mother of three boys and a two-year-old girl.

When Little Jeannie gets around to ask-

The Cocktail Veil '54 — interpretation by John Frederics

DRY underarms have no odor
DRY underarms can't stain

only FRESH has this "Moisture-Shield" formula to keep underarms DRY!

For sure protection, and for long-lasting protection, you can trust safe, gentle, new Fresh Cream Deodorant.

Fresh has a special "Moisture-Shield" formula. Tests in a leading university laboratory show that new Fresh has up to 180% greater astringent action than other leading cream deodorants. It's this astringent action that keeps your underarms dry.

- Trust your loveliest clothes to Fresh.
- It's fluffier! Never sticky or gritty.
- Fresh is guaranteed not to lose its effectiveness—or your money back.
- Be lovely to love always—use Fresh every day.

Fresh is also manufactured and distributed in Canada. Fresh is a registered trademark of The Pharma-Craft Corporation

Don't get Married!

. . . until you've clipped the coupon below and sent for

WEDDINGS

Just 10c will bring you this complete, factual encyclopedia of wedding etiquette. Here are the answers to all your questions about . . .

- INVITATIONS
- COSTUMES
- GIFTS
- RECEPTIONS
- SHOWERS and the many others that you and all other prospective brides have. This 28 page booklet of valuable, timely wedding information . . . taken from Dell's brand new magazine 1000 Hints On Etiquette . . . is offered only to the readers of this magazine—Clip the coupon below today!

and watch for $5 worth of Emily Post, Amy Vanderbilt and Elsa Maxwell for only 25c—at your favorite newsstand soon!

Fill out and mail coupon to

DELL PUBLISHING CO., INC. Dept. 4
10 West 33rd Street, New York 16, N. Y.

Please send ... copies of WEDDINGS. I enclose 10¢ for each copy to cover costs of handling and mailing.

Name........................
Address........................
....

ing questions she is going to find her mother prepared to elucidate. The first piece of advice she will hear, probably, is that girls romantically touched should make sure they are really in love and not playing a game. (Later on, when Little Jeannie is married, her mother will have something to say about developing her life in all possible ways and avoiding reducing wifehood to a routine of checking the power of her femininity.)

The advice about playing games will go something like this in her mother's words: "A girl may have all the boys in the stag line climbing over each other in their efforts to win her favor but this doesn't necessarily mean that the fellow who beats the others out is automatically Number One choice for a husband. He may deserve a dance, but not her whole future. She may make a good dancer, but not a good wife. Sometimes there is a little confusion about this which, sadly enough, isn't straightened out until after marriage.

"Without a whole stag line to play to, with only her husband's attention to get and to hold, she may find herself getting a little bit uneasy. Now, she learns, the job is not just that of giving a smile or a clever word. She is no longer just the person she dressed herself up to be. It is time to be the person she really is.

"I think the tip-off Paul and I had that we had a good chance for a successful marriage is that we didn't have to make any special adjustments—love made our little individual sacrifices easy; it was fun fitting one's plans to please the other fellow's. For us it still is."

Anyone keeping an eye on the Brinkman family would soon note that they follow another wise policy—they do not subject their marriage to undue strains. For instance, take the matter of enforced separations, a common evil in the home life of a movie player in these days of location shooting or filming abroad. These days a husband or a wife leaves Hollywood for far-away work every day. Always there is a statement, issued jointly by the one leaving and the one staying, that the parting in no way affects their marital status. Both express perfect confidence in each other and make sure that every columnist in town gets this straight. What is six months, or a year, or two years apart when there is perfect love? Sooner or later the answer to this question is publicized in legal terms. Inevitably, "unavoidable separation" is listed as part of the story behind the end of the marriage.

It isn't happening to Jeanne and Paul. Her career has sometimes threatened to keep them apart for long periods, but it never has. Last August she had to go to Africa to make Duel In The Jungle with Dana Andrews. The trip and filming would take months. The very length of her absence from home was the best reason for her going without Paul. He had his business to handle, it was inadvisable to take young children all the way to Africa, and if they were left home for such a long period one of the parents should be with them. They considered Paul's staying behind. But when departure time neared—well this is how Jeanne tells it:

"We looked at each other and knew this couldn't be! We were not worried about our love for each other fading. But when you are in love and that love is important to you—you just don't take chances! Besides, this was one of the most romantic journeys on earth—a trip to fabled Africa—a place that had always intrigued us. This was exactly the sort of wonderful experience two people in love should share. We weren't going to miss it.

"If ever Paul and I made a wise move it was this one. There are unforgettable sights and imperishable moments on this sort of trip and Paul and I had them together. When someone mentions Africa, I don't remember it only through my own knowing but through Paul's as well. This, I know, is what is meant by an extension of one's personality in marriage and is, of course, an extension and enrichment of one's life.

"I think of the night we reached Africa and flew over it. It was midnight when we got to Cairo and knew the Dark Continent lay ahead. The pilots told us that their course would follow the ancient Nile south for hours to the very heart of Africa. They didn't have to tell us that there was a full moon overhead. This is a phenomenon Paul and I still have eyes for. Neither of us could think of sleeping. We sat up the whole night through, the only passengers awake on the plane, peering down at the Nile. At such a moment—mystic, exciting, romantic—it was a privilege to be together; it would have been a tragedy to have been apart.

"There were other moments, much more rewarding, much more significant because we were together and could appreciate them through each other's eyes as well as our own."

USE

1954 EASTER SEALS HELP CRIPPLED CHILDREN

THE NATL SOCIETY FOR CRIPPLED CHILDREN AND ADULTS, INC. 11 S. LASALLE STREET, CHICAGO 3, ILL.

Jeanne and Paul were away four and a half months while she made Duel In The Jungle. Jeanne had to work quite steadily, but she did manage to get away to tour and camp with Paul in Kruger National Park where Africa's wild game can be seen in its natural habitat. They slept in the little thatched huts that accommodate travelers and cooked their dinners over open fires. On the way back from Africa they spent three days seeing Rome, on foot and by horse and buggy.

They found the children, who had been left in Hollywood with the elder Brinkmans, in fine shape. Their lovely home was there waiting for them and the plant, due to Paul's long distance supervision, was getting along fine.

Soon after their return they attended a well advertised industry affair and had to walk through a throng of movie fans waiting outside for autographs. As they passed two high school girls, they overheard themselves being described.

"There's Jeanne Crain and Paul Brinkman," one miss said to the other. "They're married."

"Well, that's for sure," agreed her companion.

END

Ladies' choice!

The all-new
RICHARD HUDNUT
home permanent

Your choice of 3 waving and drying methods! And exclusive Beauty Rinse Neutralizer guarantees you best results, no matter which method you use!

1. MOST CASUAL! For soft waves and casually curling ends, use the easy Richard Hudnut PINCURL METHOD.

2. FIRMEST! The Richard Hudnut SALON METHOD is the professional way to get deep, lasting, natural-looking waves and bouncy curls.

3. STEP SAVING! This is the most satisfactory On-Curler Method because Beauty Rinse Neutralizer safeguards your hair. It works instantly to give you firm, springy curls!

$1.50 plus tax

RICHARD HUDNUT

where to buy

modern screen's hollywood approved fashions

Purchase in person or by mail from the following stores:

If there is no store near you listed, write to the Fashion Dept., Modern Screen Magazine, 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y.

JOLENE SHOES—Pages 68, 70, 71

Alexandria, Lo.—Ames Co.
Amarillo, Texos—Kenyon Shoe Store
Auroro, Colo.—Fomily Shoe Store
Belleville, Ill.—J. H. Lerner
Buffolo, N. Y.—Hens & Kelly
Camden, Ark.—Pope-Wagnon
Cleveland, Ohio—Wm. Toylor & Sons
Clinton, Ill.—De. Murray Boot Shop
Daytona Beach, Flo.—Rose Shoe Store
Dubuque, Iowo—Arenz Shoe Co.
Duluth, Minn.—Roslyn Shop
Eau Cloire, Wis.—Catlin's
El Dorodo, Ark.—The Cinderello Slipper Shop
El Paso, Texos—Popular Shoe Store
Enid, Okla.—Earnest Bros. Shoe Store
Evonsville, Ind.—The Shoe Box
Gadsden, Ala.—Hollywood Shop
Grand Forks, N. D.—The Bootery
Grangeville, Idoho—Anderson Shoe Store
Greenville, N. C.—Lorry's Shoe Store
Greenwood, Miss.—Lees Shoe Store
Horrimon, Tenn.—Edwords Shoe Store
Idaho Folls, Idaho—Gobble's
Indionapolis, Ind.—Goodmon Shoes
Jamestown, N. Y.—Bon Ton Shoes
Joliet, Ill.—G. A. Ducker Co.
Junction City, Kan.—Cole's
Kennewick, Wosh.—Mylars Shoe Store
Kinston, N. D.—Harry Peorson Dept. Store
Laredo, Texas—Scooti's Shoe Store
Manitowoc, Wis.—Johnson Shoe Co.
Minneopolis, Minn.—Roberts Shoe Store
Natchez, Miss.—Roymond's
New Orleons, La.—Joy's Inc.
No. Hollywood, Colif.—Storr Shoe Co.
Owensboro, Ky.—Interstote Shoe Store
Porsons, Kon.—Millers Shoe Store
Pensocola, Flo.—Sam's Shoe Store
Pontioc, Mich.—Gillies Shoes
Pueblo, Colo.—Newolk Shoe Store
Sonte Fe, New Mex.—Kahn's Shoe Store
Shawnee, Oklo.—Earnest Bros. Shoe Store
Somerset, Ky.—United Dept. Store
St. Louis, Mo.—Famous-Borr
St. Louis, Mo.—Proper Shoe Store
Storm Loke, Iowa—S. & M. Store
Tampo, Fla.—Lo Fronce Shoe Store
Uniontown, Po.—Metzlers Dept. Store
Woterloo, Iowo—Cutler's
Warren, Ohio—Leopold's Shoe Store
Or write to Tober-Soifer Shoe Mfg. Compony, 1204 Woshington Avenue, Soint Louis 3, Missouri.

See M.S.'s Hollywood Fashion Board Members in their new films:
ANN MILLER currently appearing in MGM's Technicolor film Kiss Me Kate.
CYD CHARISSE appearing in MGM's CinemaScope production Brigadoon.
DEBBIE REYNOLDS soon to be seen in MGM's Technicolor films Give A Girl A Break and Athena.
DICK ANDERSON appearing in MGM's Escape From Fort Bravo.
ELEANOR PARKER appearing in two MGM productions Escape From Fort Bravo and Valley Of The Kings.
JOHN ERICSON appearing in MGM's Technicolor film Rhapsody.

Shine anyone?

It's yours with
RICHARD HUDNUT
enriched creme shampoo

This remarkable shampoo discovery contains the natural protein of real eggs powdered in a wonderful cleansing formula. Egg protein is specially good for your hair. Hair itself is protein, you know, so it naturally benefits from this affinity of protein to protein.

You'll love everything about this golden lotion-creme shampoo. It sudses richly even in hardest water and the gentle, non-drying way it cleanses, rids your hair of loose dandruff and dust—gets it really clean!

CREME RINSE takes only a minute more, and leaves hair tangle-free and easy to set.

Both come in 60c and $1 sizes.
Tax on Creme Rinse only.

RICHARD HUDNUT

Ann Pinkham reports*

"Painful cramps of monthly periods stopped

OR AMAZINGLY RELIEVED

in 3 out of 4 cases in doctors' tests!"

"IT'S WONDERFUL news," says Ann Pinkham, "for women and girls who suffer from those functionally-caused cramps, backaches, headaches and 'no-good' feelings of menstruation ... who feel upset and irritable on certain particular days. In doctors' tests, Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound or Tablets gave complete or striking relief of such distress in 3 out of 4 cases, even on first day of period!"

Yes! Lydia Pinkham's is thoroughly modern in action ... exerts a calming effect on the uterus without the use of pain-deadening drugs. Its effectiveness is known to millions.

Take Lydia Pinkham's regularly ... and see if you don't avoid the feelings of tension and weakness that precede your period ... as well as the cramps and pain of "those days."

Get either the liquid Compound ... or the new, improved Tablets with added iron — so convenient to carry and easy to take.

25¢ Ann Pinkham Booklet . . . FREE!

Easily worth $1! New booklet (illustrated in color —over 5000 words) tells all about menstruation—answers questions authoritatively, simply. Explains mysteries of female system. Tells what to expect in change of life. For free copy write ANN PINKHAM, 821 Cleveland St., Lynn, Mass. Mailed in plain envelope. Not for children. Offer closes June 11, 1954.

 Ann Pinkham, modern-day voice of Lydia Pinkham.*

DESTROY UNWANTED HAIR FOREVER

Temporary relief is NOT enough

Only by KILLING THE HAIR ROOT can you be sure UNWANTED HAIR is GONE FOREVER. Brings relief and social happiness. Do not use our method until you have read our instruction book carefully and learned to use the MAHLER METHOD safely and efficiently. Used successfully over fifty years.

SEND 5¢ TODAY FOR BOOKLET "NEW BEAUTY FOR YOU"

MAHLER'S, INC., Dept. 36-D PROVIDENCE 15, R. I.

SEW FOR CASH

Use our patterns, materials, directions in your own home, full or part time. We buy from you.
Tie of the Month Club
216 W. Jackson Blvd., Chicago (7), Ill.

Corns

Callouses, Bunions, Sore Toes

SUPER-FAST RELIEF!

Super-Soft Dr. Scholl's Zino-pads are 5 ways better. No other method does as much for you!

1. Relieve pain in a jiffy ...
2. Remove Corns, Callouses one of the fastest ways known ...
3. Stop Corns, Callouses BEFORE they can develop ...
4. Prevent Sore Toes, Blisters ...
5. Ease New or Tight Shoes.

Get a box today! Sold everywhere.

CORNS

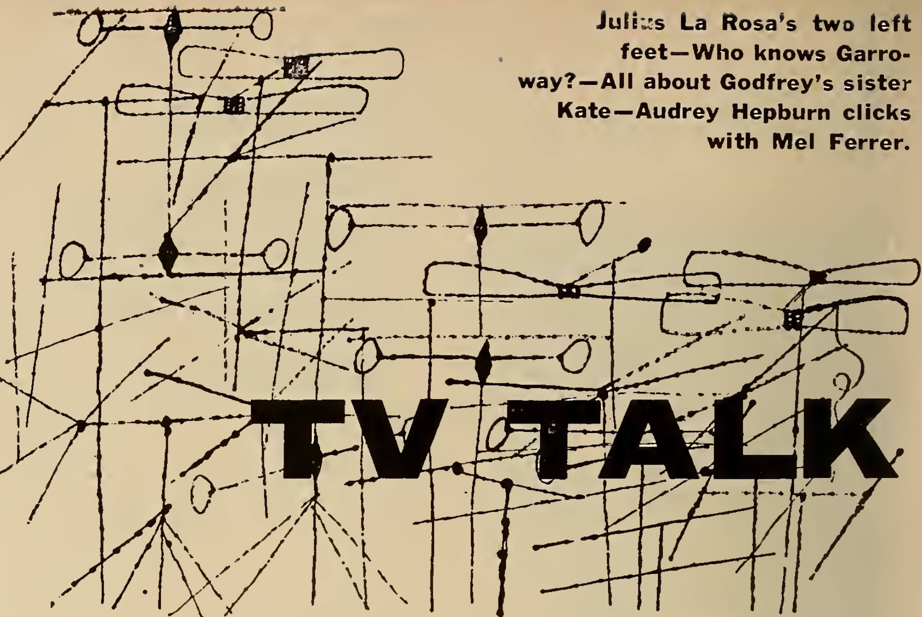
CALLOUSES

BUNIONS

SOFT CORNS

Dr Scholl's Zino-pads

Julius La Rosa's two left feet—Who knows Garroway?—All about Godfrey's sister Kate—Audrey Hepburn clicks with Mel Ferrer.



TV TALK

When Arthur Godfrey fired Julius LaRosa, he claimed that the young singer had been playing hookey from the ballet sessions all the little Godfreys have to take. To top it off, Arthur said he'd caught Julie practicing being awkward. But the people who work with Julie on Toast Of The Town swear that he doesn't have to practice: He was born that way. One of the girls from the dancing line has to take Julie's hand and guide his steps around the stage during rehearsal. There may be a lot of singing, but there's little hoofing in Julie's future . . . Everyone in TV circles is wondering why Arthur's sister Kathy came to New York. She has a good-looking doctor husband and two children—a boy, nine, and a girl, fifteen—in Phoenix, Arizona. And she had a very successful radio and TV career there. Her husband can't leave his pediatric practice to live with her in New York, and she can make it home just once out of two or three weeks. But Kathy seems determined to carve out a network career for herself, and New York is the place to do it. So she lives all alone in a hotel and orders all her meals from Room Service. The closest thing she has to home is a refrigerator stuck in a closet. Kathy is better looking than you'd think from seeing her on television; she's a very handsome forty (ten years younger than Arthur) with a figure that would look good on a woman of thirty. Her limp is quite noticeable, although not so bad as Arthur's has been since his operation. She had polio when she was a girl, and uses a cane for most of her walking . . . Speaking of the Godfrey family, the little-publicized mother of Arthur and Kathy (and three more non-show business little Godfreys) lives right in midtown New York, and is just as busy as her son and daughter. Mrs. G., who is nearly eighty, composes music, plays bridge, and goes to concerts and lectures all the time. She doesn't see too much of her busy son, and neither does Kathy. Kathy, in fact, hardly knows Arthur. He had left home by the time she was six, and she has gone as long as four years without seeing him. Now that she's in New York, too, she visits him once in awhile at breakfast. Arthur eats a big meal in his office right after his morning show, and sometimes spends as much as an hour and a half being sociable before he goes back to work . . . His health, by the way, has everyone worried. His hip just isn't mending fast enough, and people wonder when he'll get off his crutches and into a better mood. One reason Arthur got so much bad publicity when he buzzed the control tower in his DC-3 is that reporters were still rankling over a similar incident in Boston last summer. When he landed at the airport there, his plane came a little too close to the newsmen for their comfort. They thought it was deliberate but when they interviewed him in his hospital room the next day, Arthur almost charmed them out of their bad moods. But not quite . . . Some observers think that all the bad publicity is going to boomerang. People might start feeling so sorry for Godfrey with all his troubles (and he does have them) that he would become more popular than ever before—and that's popular! . . . Peter Lind Hayes is the heir apparent, of course, in case anything should happen to Godfrey (like his taking a leave of absence). Peter's probably going to have a hard time switching from his sophisticated type of nightclub humor to the folksy kind he has to come up with when he replaces Godfrey. He has already been given a long list of things that are "not done" on the Godfrey shows—it took two hours for Arthur to itemize the list. But Peter took the job because it will leave him some time at home with his wife, Mary Healy, and their two children—and more time on the golf course . . . Audrey Hepburn and Mel Ferrer are pretty inseparable these days, and have been for longer than you think. Audrey's mother is usually with them, though. When she isn't, Audrey is her vivacious self; when mama is around, she's as quiet as five mice. Audrey, as you know, is a little lady, and when she is unhappy about something in Ondine, the play in which she and Mel co-star, she tells Mel and he tells the bosses. Mel's divorce, incidentally, came as a complete surprise to his family. They read about it in Louella Parsons' column. It's not the first time Mrs. Ferrer has divorced Mel; she did it once several years ago when they had just one child. Then Mel married another girl, became a father again, got divorced and remarried the first Mrs. Ferrer. They then had another child. But they had been having troubles for a long time before Audrey entered the picture. Mel is not the easiest man in the world to live with. He even insists that his wife iron his shirts herself; no laundry can measure up to the Ferrer standards . . . You don't see him much on television, but CBS board chairman Bill Paley is ultimately responsible for every Columbia show you hear or see. He takes his job so seriously that he once wore one of those new-fangled vest-pocket radios to a dinner party. The other guests noticed that he wasn't paying any attention to their conversation, and they finally discovered that he was sitting there eating—and listening to the radio! He was tuned in to the competition, too! . . . Barry Nelson's wife is so jealous of her husband that he sometimes can't pose for publicity pictures with his Favorite Husband co-star, Joan Caulfield. Mrs. N., who used to work for MGM, allows Barry and Joan to be photographed on the set together, but she draws the line when it comes to any pictures away from the set. Won't even let Barry and Joan pose in the restaurant across the street from the studio. Barry doesn't seem to mind, though. He told the network before he started the show that he wanted it that way . . . Vanessa Brown, whose feud with Tom Ewell has finally quieted down, wins the prize for baby-talking. When she walks into a cocktail party in an elegant, low-cut dress, it's mighty incongruous to hear those little-girl words and that little-girl voice . . . Celeste Holm has never been a small woman, but you should see her now! She has it all over Jane Russell. Celeste's hit play His And Hers, is all about a woman fighting with and reconciling with her ex-husband. One of the members of the first-night audience was Ralph Nelson, who directs Mama and who used to be married to Celeste. But he went and married someone else about a month after the play opened . . . Nina Foch is seen everywhere with a young actor named Jimmy Lipton who plays young Doctor Grant on the TV soap opera Guiding Light. This is a long-standing romance . . . Even Dave Garroway's admirers admit that Dave is a hard man to get to know. They say that he doesn't have any really close friend—that even singer Jack Haskell and Betty Furness have trouble knowing Dave's innermost thoughts. They claim that you can get close to him only up to a certain point; then Dave lowers the curtain and withdraws behind it. He's one of TV's few real mystery men.

"Who'd believe I was ever embarrassed by PIMPLES!"

New! Clearasil Medication

'STARVES' PIMPLES

SKIN-COLORED

HIDES PIMPLES WHILE IT WORKS

Doctors' clinical tests prove this new-type medication especially for pimples really works. In skin specialists' tests on 202 patients, 9 out of every 10 cases were cleared up or definitely improved while using CLEARASIL.

Amazing starving action. CLEARASIL actually starves pimples because it helps remove the oils that pimples "feed" on. And CLEARASIL's antiseptic action stops the growth of bacteria that can cause and spread pimples. Skin-colored to hide pimples and end embarrassment. Greaseless, stainless...pleasant to leave on day and night for uninterrupted medication.

America's largest-selling specific pimple medication...because CLEARASIL has helped so many boys, girls and adults. GUARANTEED to work for you as it did in doctor's tests or money back. 59¢ and 98¢. At all druggists. Get CLEARASIL today. (Available in Canada, slightly more.)

Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping

FREE!

Real photo of your FAVORITE STAR—Movie, or T.V. Large, glossy and facsimile AUTOGRAPHED! Send only 15c for handling (2 for 25c) FAST SERVICE.

FREE!

New 1954 Catalog, listing hundreds of Stars with new poses on cover. Learn how to get HOME ADDRESSES, BIRTHDAYS, PHOTOS OF STARS' HOMES. Also Money Saving Coupon on Beautiful Souvenir.

ESTHER'S STUDIO SERVICE
Box 16983, Dept. MS, Hollywood 46, California

MAKE $10-$40 AN EVENING IN YOUR SPARE TIME

IT'S EASY IT'S AMAZING IT'S FUN

FREE OFFER
Easy to hold style shows...fun packed parties.. FREE prizes and you earn up to $40 in a couple of hours. NO CANVASSING! NO EXPERIENCE! WRITE FOR FREE OUTFIT!

Housewives, working girls and men... EARN EXTRA MONEY...buy homes, cars, make vacation dreams come true just by showing Top Quality Lingerie, Dupont Nylons, Apparel for Women, Children and Men...this fun-packed, party way. No Canvassing...No Experience.

FOR FREE OUTFIT RUSH NAME TODAY!

SAVOY MODES DEPT. 44 36 W. 34TH ST. New York 1.

Don't miss

WHO'S WHO IN HOLLYWOOD 1954

Pictures and stories of 1000 stars

a Dell magazine—on sale everywhere

SHORTHAND IN 6 WEEKS

Famous Speedwriting Shorthand, 120 wpm. No symbols, no machines; uses ABC's. Easiest to learn, write and transcribe. Low cost. 200,000 taught by mail. For business and Civil Service. Typing available. 31st year. Write for FREE booklet to:

Speedwriting ®
Dept. 804-4, 55 W. 42 St., N. Y. 36

BE A Nurse

MAKE $50-$60 A WEEK

You can learn practical nursing at home in spare time. Course endorsed by physicians. Thousands of graduates. 55th yr. One graduate has charge of 10-bed hospital. Another saved $400 while learning. Equipment included. Men, women 18 to 60. High school not required. Easy tuition payments. Trial plan. Write today.

CHICAGO SCHOOL OF NURSING
Dept. 234, 25 East Jackson Blvd., Chicago 4, Ill.
Please send free booklet and 16 sample lesson pages.

Name ______
City ______ State ______ Age ___

Dahlings, dahlings, don't walk—RUN!!!*

"THAT BOOK" is now only 35¢

"FANTASTICALLY FRANK"
Boston Post

"FASCINATING"
New York Herald Tribune

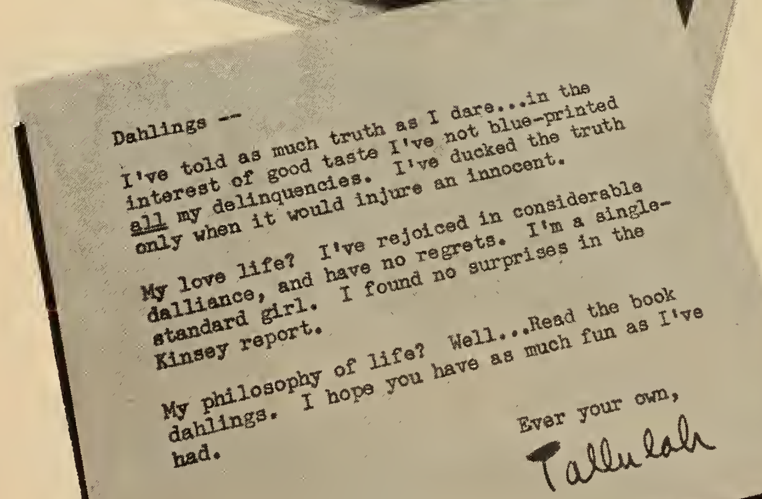
"BEWITCHING"
Richmond Times Dispatch

"UNINHIBITED"
Atlantic Monthly

"EXPLOSIVE"
Washington Post

"HILARIOUS"
Dallas News

"SIZZLING"
Chicago News



Dahlings --

I've told as much truth as I dare...in the interest of good taste I've not blue-printed all my delinquencies. I've ducked the truth only when it would injure an innocent.

My love life? I've rejoiced in considerable dalliance, and have no regrets. I'm a single-standard girl. I found no surprises in the Kinsey report.

My philosophy of life? Well...Read the book dahlings. I hope you have as much fun as I've had.

Ever your own,

Tallulah

*Run... to your nearest Newsstand, Drug Store or Variety Store

Read the FRANKEST AUTOBIOGRAPHY EVER!

TALLULAH

NOW ON SALE — 35¢ — EVERYWHERE

DELL BOOKS

(Continued from page 31) "She's plain and honest and warm and shy. Just like Joe. They were made for each other. I know it sounds corny, but it's true. They like the same things. They never go out to night clubs. They hang around here watching television, making idle talk.

"Marilyn washes and sets her own hair. She's always thinking of doing something nice for someone. When she was up there in Canada working on location she bought me a compact and a cashmere stole.

"I knew she was a good girl the first time Joe brought her up. Right away she was helping with the dishes. All she wants to do is to be with Joe. That's a good sign. And another thing, so much of the stuff that's been written about her is just bunk. It really gets me mad.

"That stuff about her not wearing any underclothes. I've spent a lot of time with Marilyn. We've had a few heart-to-heart talks and we've also gone shopping. And I can tell you that she wears bras and panties and a girdle and all the things other girls wear.

"We went shopping for her wedding suit in San Francisco. She bought two suits, one at Joseph Magnin's. I think she paid $149.50 for it. It was none of my business. I mean the price. But it was a lovely suit. Of course, she was recognized and mobbed by all the people in the store. She wouldn't leave until all the little girls who wanted her autograph got it.

"I'm glad Joe married Marilyn. Best thing in the world for both of them. I'm just sorry I wasn't at the wedding. I had the flu. But I was one of the few people who knew they were going to do it.

"They told me a couple of days before, and of course all the arrangements were made from here. And Marilyn was so happy. 'Marie,' she said, 'Joe and I have decided to get married.' I kissed her, and tears of happiness came into my eyes, and I said, 'I'm so glad, Marilyn. I'm so honestly and truly glad.'"

JOE ACTUALLY proposed to Marilyn on New Year's Eve.

Earlier that evening he and Marilyn had been at DiMaggio's, the famous restaurant on Fisherman's Wharf run by two of Joe's brothers, Tom and Dom, and Joe's closest friend, Reno Barsocchini. They had gabbed with the boys and then Joe had said, "Let's go back to the house."

They got into Joe's 1952 Fleetwood Cadillac and drove home. They climbed the flight of stairs to the living room and sat on the rose-colored sofa before the bay window.

Joe turned on the television set. Then, he came and sat down beside Marilyn. The TV program showed various New Year's celebrations. Presently, Joe turned it off.

"It's 1954," he announced.

Marilyn looked at him expectantly. "Here's a kiss for the New Year," he said. Then "How about getting married real soon?"

Marilyn's answer was a long embrace. When she decided to speak, Marilyn said, "Whenever and wherever you say, Joe."

She made no demands, set no requirements. She knew Joe would want a simple ceremony—quiet and tasteful. Joe, of course, tried to keep the whole thing private. He did a masterful job.

"We planned to get married first," he explained, "and tell all our friends afterward. But Marilyn had promised the studio she would notify them of her marriage. A half hour before the ceremony she did. In that half hour, the studio had time to notify most of the world.

"We were amazed when we walked into the City Hall and saw that mob of people."

Marilyn's failure to report to her studio on January 4 for the start of Pink Tights caused many movie-goers to suspect that Marilyn and Joe were planning to be married. Some columnists said that they were already married. Marilyn's agent, however, said that the only two reasons Marilyn didn't report for work were money and script approval. She wanted her contract re-negotiated and she wanted to read the script of Pink Tights. The real reason was that Marilyn needed time in which to get married, time to shop for a trousseau, time for preparation.

From January 7 to January 14, she and Joe were working out the details of the ceremony. In those seven days, all sorts of ridiculous rumors about them spread.

One wire service reported that "Marilyn Monroe and Joe DiMaggio accompanied by Rock Hudson arrived in New Orleans last night. They were met by a chauffeur and limousine and scurried away five minutes after alighting."

Joe and Marilyn read this item in San Francisco and smiled.

A day later, there was a story from Las Vegas. "George Solotaire, old friend of baseball star Joe DiMaggio, arrived at El Rancho Vegas from New York this morning. It is believed that Solotaire is setting the wedding arrangements for Joe and Marilyn Monroe. He spent the day conferring with owner Belden Katelman."

A few hours after this item appeared, most of the hotel managers in Las Vegas tried to get DiMaggio on the phone. Abe Schiller, who helps run The Flamingo, called Reno Barsocchini.

"Now, look," Schiller said, "we have word that Joe and Marilyn plan to get married in Las Vegas. You know what the Sands did for Rita Hayworth and Dick Haymes. Well, we're willing to take care of everything for your two kids if they'll get married here in The Flamingo."

"I don't think they plan to get married in Las Vegas," Barsocchini answered. "I don't know anything about it at all."

Schiller, however, stuck to his guns. "I know they plan to drive to Las Vegas," he asserted. "Tell them we'll charter a plane. No one will know."

A few hours later, Schiller was back on the phone. "We think those two are on the way to Las Vegas. In fact, we know it."

"I don't think so," said Reno Barsocchini. "Joe is here in the restaurant right now, eating."

"Oh," Abe Schiller said. "Oh!"

AT THE TIME, Joe was lunching with an old friend, Judge Charles Peery, of the San Francisco Municipal Court. Joe had called the judge a day before and had invited him to "have a bite with me down at the restaurant. I'd like your advice."

Joe, always direct and simple, told Peery, "Marilyn and I would like to get married. Very quiet. What's the best way?"

Judge Peery suggested that they take their blood tests and keep it very quiet. He advised Joe not to apply for a license. "We'll have the marriage license typed in my chambers," he said. "Then none of the reporters will find out." He also suggested that the ceremony be held between noon and two P.M. "when there's a lunch period and a court intermission."

"When do you plan to do it?" Judge Peery asked.

"Tomorrow," Joe said.

"The thirteenth?"

Joe shook his head. "Gee! I didn't know tomorrow was the thirteenth. How about Thursday, the fourteenth?"

"All right," the judge said. "In my chambers at one P.M."

They shook hands. Joe told his brother Tom and Reno Barsocchini.

"Reno," he said, "I want you as my best man. And Tom, will you be a witness? Tell Lee." Lee is Tom's wife.

In the meantime, Marilyn called Patty Barsocchini. She knew Patty and liked her. When Joe had been godfather to Patty's little girl, Rena, Marilyn had attended the christening. After it was over, she had said to Patty, "If I ever get married I'd like you to be matron of honor." She reminded Patty of that conversation. Patty was overjoyed. The details of time were worked out.

Tom and Lee DiMaggio with Mr. and Mrs. Barsocchini were to meet at Joe's house at twelve-forty-five Thursday.

These two couples would leave the house first. Marilyn and Joe would follow in their Cadillac. The whole wedding party would slip into City Hall by the basement entrance. None of them would be seen. Top secret.

Joe and Marilyn almost got away with it. But Marilyn is a young woman of honor. She had promised the studio that she would announce her marriage.

At twelve-thirty she called the studio from San Francisco. "Joe and I are going to be married in some courtroom in a few minutes." Then she hung up.

When Joe and Marilyn arrived outside Judge Peery's chambers, reporters, photographers, newsreel men, and movie fans were waiting. There were about 440 uninvited guests.

Tall and erect, wearing a blue suit, white shirt, and blue polka dot tie, Joe didn't seem to be ruffled.

Marilyn, in her dark broadcloth suit with ermine collar, laughed as someone told her that she and Joe would have to wait until an official came with the marriage license. During that wait, the photographers and reporters went to work.

"Do you two expect to raise a family?"

"We expect to have at least one child. I guarantee that," Joe said, grinning.

Marilyn giggled. "I'd like to have six." She blinked her false eyelashes.

The photographers asked them to move closer together. "Kiss her, Joe. Kiss her."

Joe kissed her and the bulbs flashed.

"Are you going to give up your career for marriage?" Marilyn was asked.

"What difference does it make?" she answered. "The studio has suspended me."

"When did you and Joe meet?"

"Two years ago on a blind date."

"Okay, fellows," interrupted Joe. "I don't want to rush you. But we've really got to get on with the ceremony."

JUDGE PEERY came out. "Everyone out," he said goodnaturedly. "Everyone out. Just the principals."

The judge's chambers were cleared and the door to the sanctum sanctorum closed. One reporter jumped on a desk and looked over the transom.

He called back, "They're not getting married. They're all in there drinking martinis." The wedding party was waiting for the man with the marriage license.

Presently David Dunn, the deputy county clerk, fought his way through the crowd and into the chambers clutching half a dozen marriage license blanks. Only there was no typewriter. Out he came again. The cry went up for a typewriter. One was found and the marriage license filled in. It shows Marilyn's age as twenty-five, Joe's as thirty-nine.

Marilyn signed the license first. Then Joe signed it.

Judge Peery called, "Quiet," just as they do in movies when an important scene is to begin. As the silence settled, the judge began the single ring ceremony omitting the word "obey." Marilyn smiled all through the ceremony which lasted exactly two minutes and twenty seconds. Joe was serious. After the marital pronouncement, he took Marilyn in his arms adds color!

IT'S A FACT!

Soaping robs hair color..

COLORINSE

Scientific tests prove that repeated soapings actually rob color from your hair! AND—the color that's left is hidden by a dull soap film that makes hair drab and unattractive. That's why you absolutely need NESTLE COLORINSE after every shampoo...to add gleaming color-highlights—make your hair softer, silkier, tangle-free—remove dulling soap film. COLORINSE comes in 11 flattering shades that rinse in...shampoo out.

6 rinses 25c, 14 rinses 50c.

At Last! Hide Gray Hairs or Add New Color in 10 Minutes with COLORTINT

NESTLE COLORTINT adds rich, new, youthful color...also blends in gray, streaked, dyed or bleached hair. No ammonia—no peroxide—no dyed "paint-brush" look. Enriched with Processed Lanolin to condition dull, drab hair. More than a rinse but not a permanent dye! Lasts through 3 shampoos. Comes in 10 glamorous shades.

6 capsules 29c, 14 capsules 50c.

Professional applications available at your beauty shop

Nestle

COLORINSE • COLORTINT

and kissed her. The room was stuffy and the judge turned to open the windows.

As he did, the door was thrown open. Photographers swarmed in. Joe kissed Marilyn again for their benefit. Tiring of the fuss, he clutched her hand and said, "Okay, let's go."

Joe's brother Tom and Lefty O'Doul, the baseball manager who had given Joe his start, formed a flying wedge and began to move down the corridor. Marilyn and Joe followed behind. Scores of persons tried to beat them downstairs.

"This is a fine thing, Marilyn," someone called, "dodging your loyal fans."

Marilyn waved with one hand, the one that clutched her bridal bouquet of three white orchids, but hung on to her husband's coat tails with the other. Unfortunately, Joe went the wrong way and headed for the Real Estate Department.

The flying wedge thereupon reversed itself and fought back through the crowd once again. This time Joe and Marilyn reached the elevator. They were about to disembark at the first floor, but Joe saw another tremendous crowd waiting and said, "Let's keep going to the basement."

There was still another crowd in the basement, but the newlyweds fought through to Larkin Street where Marilyn jumped into Joe's baby-blue Cadillac.

As they left, Marilyn smiled and shook her head. "And this," she remarked, "was supposed to be a quiet wedding."

Upstairs, Judge Peery was also shaking his head. "I forgot to kiss the bride," he muttered. "Gosh! I'm sorry."

The Di Maggios spent their wedding night in the Clifton Motel in Paso Robles. Their wedding supper, just for the two of them, was served at the Paso Robles Hot Springs Hotel.

Both Marilyn and Joe are heavy eaters. They ordered thick steaks. In a few minutes other diners recognized them and the manager diplomatically moved them to a secluded corner, providing them with privacy and candlelight.

Supper over, Marilyn told Ned Lutz, the coffee shop manager, that she and Joe were driving south to Los Angeles, that she had to report to her studio for work.

Joe and Marilyn started down the highway and doubled back and took a room at the Clifton Motel. When Manager Ernest Sharp saw their name on his register he congratulated them on their marriage. Joe exacted from Sharp the promise that he wouldn't notify newsmen.

Sharp promised. Not until the Di Maggios had left the next day did he reveal their whereabouts. He released his secret to radio station KPRL. By then Mr. and Mrs. Di Maggio were far away.

Actually, the honeymooners continued south. They came through Los Angeles but decided not to stop at Marilyn's apartment or the Hotel Knickerbocker just off Vine Street in Hollywood, where Joe hung his hat in his bachelor days.

This was lucky for them, because dozens of reporters and photographers were camped out waiting to interview them. In fact, the publicity men from the studio spent the entire weekend in shifts patrolling Marilyn's apartment house, and every half hour or so phoned Harry Brand, publicity director of Twentieth Century-Fox, with the same sad report—"No sign of life."

Meanwhile, reports began to emanate from various parts of the country from Joe's and Marilyn's friends saying that the couple had gone fishing off Ensanada in Mexico, that they had secretly flown to Hawaii, that they were hidden in a cabin in the High Sierras. Reporters scoured the countryside in the greatest manhunt Hollywood has ever known.

The plain truth was that while they had

HE DIDN'T CARRY THE BALL!

When Aldo Ray plays football—it's kept a deep, dark secret!

Aldo's best girl, Jeff Donnell, approves of his gridiron maneuvers, but studio bosses say, "Too dangerous."

■ Although the San Francisco sports writers overlooked the matter, a semi-pro football team up that way called the Crockett Rockets had a ringer in the lineup one day last fall, a line-backer named Aldo Da Re.

Da Re used to play with the Rockets but then he got mixed up in the picture business down in Hollywood, turned in his last name for a model spelled simply Ray, and turned in his helmet.

This fine autumn weekend, Ray had turned up in Crockett for auld lang syne, and was pressed into service again. Seems the Rockets were up against a deadly rival named the San Francisco Windbreakers and their regular line-backer was in no condition to perform—was, in fact, what pro football calls "racked up."

Aldo received an inquiry flavored with tart guesses about the inroads the life of a film star might have made on his physical shape.

Ray, the shape of whose nose presumably is worth hundreds of thousands of dollars to Columbia Pictures, suited up and went forth to do battle, schnoz or no schnoz. If Columbia President Harry Cohn had known, he might have blown his stack, Mr. Cohn being a stack-blower of considerable dimensions under less trying circumstances. But Mr. Cohn didn't know. Neither, fortunately, did the San Francisco Windbreakers quite get hep to Ray's identity until the closing seconds of the game. If they had, things could have been different. Pro footballers are said to have a peculiar antipathy toward film actors, even film actors from their own ranks. This may stem from the ease with which stars make 98-yard touchdown gallops when Everything Is At Stake.

Aldo didn't do much galloping that day. Line-backers are for defensive action, a bruising chore with little or no headline glory in it. He turned in a good game, and he was happy. The only flaw was that the Windbreakers turned in a better one.

It is Ray's contention to this day, however, that if the Crockett Rockets had turned him loose on offense, giving him a football to lug from time to time, the outcome would have been different. It wasn't the second billing he minded, just the Rockets' refusal to make the most of their opportunities.

If Columbia's pride and joy had been given a football to lug, he might possibly have returned to Hollywood looking just enough like Rocky Marciano to be out of a job, while Mr. Cohn and his stockholders went out and got crying drunk together.

Nor is all over. The Da Re football dynasty lives on because Aldo's kid brother, Mario, is playing a lot of line for the University of Southern California under the proper family cognomen.

Meanwhile, Aldo and Jeff Donnell, who sounds like somebody's kid brother herself, continue to be a Thing. Aldo has made his stage debut in La Jolla in Stalag 17, and she was there every minute to catch him in case he fainted, which seemed altogether likely. It was another case of premature tension. Once the curtain was up, Aldo played the part as if he owned it, and the notices were superb.

Let the San Francisco Windbreakers put that in their pipe and smoke it.

dropped from sight, they were in a mountain retreat less than a hundred miles from Hollywood enjoying a rapturous honeymoon on the Idylwild estate of Marilyn's lawyer, Lloyd Wright.

After leaving Paso Robles they drove to Palm Springs, then traversed the winding icy road which leads up the San Jacinto mountains overlooking Palm Springs.

While some reporters looked for them there, Joe and Marilyn were secretly laughing up their sleeves only a stone's throw away—but some several thousand feet up in "a poor man's paradise" which few movie stars have ever seen.

It had snowed the week before and the road was covered with ice, but Marilyn and Joe made it and no one recognized them en route to Idylwild, or even in the tiny resort town, except Harry Gibbons, caretaker of the Wright estate, who had been notified that they were coming. Gibbons, however, would tell no one, and even today if you ask him about his famous honeymooners he clams up and refuses to confirm or deny.

Oddly enough, the most publicized of all actresses has given her sister stars a great lesson in how to disappear and behave sedately on a honeymoon.

When MODERN SCREEN finally was first to break down her secret, Marilyn confessed, "That's right. Joe and I spent our honeymoon there, and it was heavenly. We had absolute privacy and no one disturbed us. How did you find out, anyway? We kept it a big secret for more than a week and never suspected anyone would find out, including Joe's family."

The fact is that a publicity man living in Idylwild was driving by the Wright estate late one morning, and saw a tall, well-built, family-looking type man sitting next to a snowbound swimming pool with a beautiful blonde taking a sunbath. The publicity man didn't recognize the nearly undraped lovely, but did recognize Joe because he was a baseball fan. He told nobody but his wife who is a MODERN SCREEN reader—and the secret was out!

Romping in the snow and taking rides down into the desert at night, completely undisturbed by studio, family or friends, these two had a honeymoon of which Marilyn says, like any other bride, "It's something I'll remember the rest of my life."

When he read the news of the Di Maggio wedding, Hollywood business agent David March smiled and felt "good and warmed and fulfilled." It was he who first brought the lovers together.

"In view of what's happened," March says, "I'll never forget the sequence of events. It was June, 1952. I was leaning against the bar at the Villa Nova on Sunset Boulevard. Joe happened to walk in. 'What's cooking?' he asked.

"'Nothing much,' I answered. 'I'm trying to drum up a little business, trying to get Marilyn Monroe as a client.'

"Well, Joe was kind of taken back by that. 'Listen,' he said, 'Do you really know Marilyn Monroe? I sure would love to have a date with her.'

"'I'll try and fix it,' I said. 'But I'm not guaranteeing.' Then I phoned Marilyn and said, 'How'd you like to meet a really nice guy?'

"This wasn't one of her good days. I guess she was moody and depressed and she came back with, 'Are there any?'"

"'This guy's name is Joe DiMaggio,' I told her. 'He's a gentleman, Marilyn, in every sense of the word. I think you'll like each other.' She agreed to give it a try.

"On the afternoon of the date, however, she changed her mind, tried to track me down all over. No luck. That night she walked into the Villa Nova. I was sitting there with my date, Peggy Rabe, and with Joe. She was wearing a low-

ONLY this Vaginal Suppository for FEMININE HYGIENE

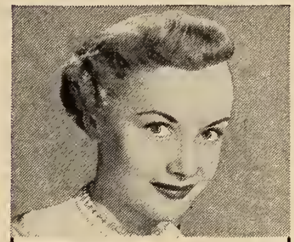
Can make ALL these claims!



Young wives prefer convenience of Zonitors.

Zonitors assure continuous hygienic action that lasts for hours.

Zonitors are absolutely safe to body tissues.

Young wives are most enthusiastic about the extra advantages of Zonitors for intimate feminine cleanliness:

1. Zonitors are greaseless, stainless vaginal suppositories which contain the same powerful germicidal and deodorizing type of medication found in famous ZONITE liquid.
2. Zonitors are easily inserted.
3. They quickly form a protective hygienic coating and CONTINUE to do so FOR HOURS. They're not the old-fashioned greasy type which quickly melt away.
4. Zonitors are ABSOLUTELY SAFE to body tissues. They are positively non-poisonous, non-irritating.
5. They completely deodorize.
6. Far more convenient to use. No embarrassment. Zonitors require no extra equipment.

Buy Zonitors today. Now packaged two ways: individually foil-wrapped or in separate glass vials.

Zonitors®
Vaginal Suppositories

POWER-FUL DYNASTY

Like great-grandfather, like great-grandson!

■ Tyrone Power comes from a dynasty of actors, famed for good looks, stubbornness and charm—not to mention ready wit.

Although great-great-grandfather Power was a minstrel of sorts in County Waterford, Ireland, it was his son Tyrone, taken to England after his father's death, who really established the Powers professionally and financially. Success did not come to him until he was middle-aged, but when it came it was solid. He was lavish in his care of his lusty family of four girls and four boys.

But the theatre wasn't considered respectable. Although many a proper young man boasted of his acquaintance with pretty chorus girls, the girls were seldom invited to his home for dinner. With one accord, the young Powers, established financially and socially, turned their backs on the theatre, looking down their elegant noses at the profession that had made their father both rich and famous.

All, that is, except Harold, grandfather of the present Tyrone. Grandpa was bored with the stuffy London life. He married a pretty actress and then decided to have his fling on the stage. The family was aghast but neither threats nor pleas could move him. To soften the blow, he agreed to carry out his degrading experiment on the other side of the Atlantic and to bill himself as Harold Page.

In New York Harold Page and his wife were an instant success. Their skit was a take-off on modes and manners then current in London and it kept their audiences rolling in the aisles. But back home the rest of the family didn't think it was funny. They hadn't anticipated that grandpa would title the skit, An Afternoon With Mr. And Mrs. Power!

New Medical Discovery Helps

CLEAR UP PIMPLES

Science Finds New Substance That Penetrates Pimples—Clears Skin

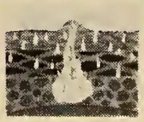
Now at last science has discovered a new substance with the amazing ability to get inside pimples! It's Clearoxin made with Clorpactin WCS 50. It works 4 ways at once! 1. Actually penetrates thru skin into pimples. 2. Kills the germs inside that cause and spread pimples. 3. Helps tighten pores to force out infection. 4. Helps dry up oils that pimples thrive on. Comes with skin colored medicated ointment to hide pimples . . . stop embarrassment instantly . . . while Clorpactin WCS 50 works.

Remarkable Skin Penetrating Liquid

DE-ACTIVATES PIMPLES

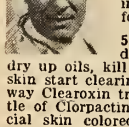
Kills germs inside that make pimples grow

Old fashioned creams merely cover skin . . . fail to penetrate to where trouble lies.



New Clearoxin penetrates thru pores to kill germs inside.

Clearoxin dries oils, tightens pores, helps to force dirt out!



Amazing Medical Tests prove astonishing powers of Clearoxin with Clorpactin WCS 50. Doctors' tests on patients prove its effectiveness on skin disorders. Used by U.S. Government Hospitals and world famous institutions. Now available for first time for home use.

5-Day Skin Clearing Action. Within 5 days you must see Clearoxin tighten pores, dry up oils, kill germs inside pimples and skin start clearing, or your money back. 2 way Clearoxin treatment includes one bottle of Clorpactin WCS 50 plus jar of special skin colored medicated cream. Both only $1.25. Large size $1.95. Get Clearoxin at your drug store, today.

clearoxin

GENUINE large size STUDIO TONE portrait of any movie star. Facsimile AUTOGRAPH. Ready for framing. Also FREE CATALOG!

FREE STUDIO PHOTO

Send name of your favorite star and 15c—or 2 for 25c—to cover handling costs.

HOLLYWOOD STUDIOS
P.O. Box 2807, Dept. M-5
Hollywood 28, Calif.

Women Love

the cool, clean freshness of a MU-COL douche. Non-irritating! Soothing! Safe! MU-COL sold at all drug stores. For sample, send coupon to MU-COL Co., Dept. DA-44, Buffalo 3, N. Y.

Name __________
Address __________
City __________ State _____

cut dress and she looked the berries. I could see that Joe was flipping his lid.

"He was really impressed and I think she was, too. They hit it off right from the start. They were just getting warmed up, conversationally, when Mickey Rooney came over.

"Well, Mickey starts talking to Joe about baseball. This was one time when Joe didn't have his mind on baseball, but Mickey keeps yacking away, yack, yack, yack, and finally Marilyn, who didn't know a squeeze play from third base, gets tired of it all and says she has an early morning call and has to go home.

"You know what Joe did? He jumped up. 'Dave,' he said, 'take care of everything.' And then he turned to Marilyn. 'Would you mind driving me to my hotel?' he said. She just smiled and they left.

"A day or so later when I asked her what she thought of Joe, she said, 'He seems to be a real nice guy. But maybe he doesn't like me.'

"'What do you mean?' I asked.

"'Well,' Marilyn said, 'he asked me if I'd drive him to the airport today and I said yes and I waited all afternoon but he hasn't called.'

"'Don't worry,' I told her. 'He'll call. He's real gone on you.'"

A few hours later Joe called from San Francisco, and from that day on Marilyn Monroe has had a steady boyfriend.

The courtship was slow, steady, and even paced. DiMaggio is neither fast nor slick. He got to know Marilyn gradually. He refused to take her to premières and big Hollywood parties—Sidney Skolsky escorted Marilyn to those—but the young actress didn't mind. She came to understand his shy nature.

Marilyn knew Joe was in love with her when he began to take her with him to San Francisco to see his family. The first time, she went fishing with Joe and Tom.

"We just trolled," Tom recalls, "and caught our limit of salmon. Marilyn was tops. Never a peep or a complaint out of her. When I came home that night, my wife Lee said, 'What do you think of Joe's girlfriend?' And I said, 'Funny thing. She's just like Joe. She's quiet and plain and shy and I like her very much.'"

The entire DiMaggio clan feels like that about Marilyn. Now that she's in the family, Marilyn says, "It's hard for me to believe that I have so many friends, so many relatives in the world. When I was very little, I had no one. Now I have so many fine people to love."

The DiMaggios will divide their time between San Francisco and Hollywood.

In San Francisco, Joe owns a large white house overlooking the bay. It is jammed with his baseball trophies. His sister Marie has been taking care of it ever since his mother died three years ago. She will probably continue to live there.

In Hollywood, Marilyn rents a small, tastefully furnished apartment on Doheny Drive. Joe describes it as "cozy."

One of Joe's brothers says that he thinks it will be too small very quickly. "Especially," he adds, "if Joe is half the guy our old man was. Pop had nine kids, all big, healthy, and strong." Whenever Marilyn is reminded of this, she breaks into a broad grin.

"I said when we were married that I'd like to have six kids. I know that's not as good as Mamma DiMaggio. But would you call it bad?" END

bungalow big enough for two

(Continued from page 44) a pink and blue fog, Janet agreed.

But before they could execute their new plans the anticipated event was canceled. Janet lost the baby. It was a terrible disappointment. The sudden end of hope and the mounting fear for his wife's health frightened Tony badly. During the ordeal he was on location in Honolulu, and he was frantic. Janet refused to let him quit the picture and fly home because, as she puts it rather shakily, "These things happen in the best of families."

She was right. Her obstetrician explained that miscarriages are fairly common in a first pregnancy, particularly when the mother is an intense, active person like Janet. The doctor reassured the young couple and advised them not to be downhearted. "You're young," he said. "There's plenty of time, so let's wait and see what next year will bring."

"Of course," Janet explains, "we listened to him very carefully. But mentally we were already parents. After the shock of losing the baby wore off a little and we could talk about it—that is, without my crying—Tony suggested that we go ahead with our idea of getting a house. He thought we had both outgrown the glamorous penthouse. It had been good for a year and marvelous for parties and wonderful as a showplace but it was no home for people who intended to become parents."

Fully aware that it would be at least a year or so before they might realistically expect a baby, Tony and Janet set about looking for a house. They scaled their desires down. They expected to find not the house of their dreams, but simply a livable place that would be a convenient home for children.

"What we want," Janet explained to her mother (who has always done most of their house-hunting) "is a place around Beverly Hills near all the studios.

"We made the usual list of impossible demands," Janet recalled. "We were having a pickup dinner with my folks one Sunday, and we told them all about our requirements. The only thing Tony and I don't have strong feelings about is architecture. I told Mum the house could be anything on the outside—English, modern, Spanish. Just so long as the inside fitted our needs."

"Once Janet put the housing project in her mother's lap," Tony says, "she felt much better. She had something to look forward to and she forgot about the miscarriage. It's a wonderful thing to have a family helping you all the time. We knew that Janet's mother would keep going and looking until she found something that would make us happy."

With her "outline for a home" in trusted hands, Janet plunged into work. She was playing in Prince Valiant with Bob Wagner and this absorbed most of her energy. From time to time her mother would report on the housing situation and on several occasions, her "kids," as she likes to refer to them, inspected vacant houses. For one reason or another, Janet and Tony rejected them.

Finally last October, after Janet had finished Prince Valiant and had flown to Detroit where Tony was making Johnny Dark on location, her mother found what she thought was the right answer to the problem.

"Mother met me at the airport," Janet remembers, "and when she started telling me about a little remodeled California bungalow, I knew intuitively that it was the place for Tony and me. I was so sure she was right that I made her stop and phone the people who owned the house to ask if I could come right over and see for myself.

"They said sure and we went. Of course it was exactly what we needed. The location was perfect and the Spanish style—well, it's a lot like the house I grew up in when we were living in Stockton.

"My only dilemma was to stall the owners until Tony could give his approval. I needn't have worried. Tony took one look at the place and signed all the papers. For the last six months we've never been happier. We look upon this as our first real home."

THE EIGHT-ROOM house that Tony and Janet refer to as "our first real home" is a fine example of the type of compact, one-story house that everyone was building along the palm-lined streets of Beverly Hills in the early thirties. It earned the deceptive name of "California bungalow" because of its single story, but most of these houses occupy a considerable area. They aren't bungalows like those east of the Mississippi.

The Curtis residence, for example, boasts a large livingroom, a diningroom, a kitchen, two bedrooms and baths, a bar, a book-lined den, and a glassed-in breakfast room. Some bungalow!

All the rooms are high-ceilinged and there are such conveniences as a special dressingroom for Janet, a roomy service porch, linen closets, and a sky-lighted central foyer.

Traditionally, the California bungalow features an entrance garden and an enclosed patio in the rear to allow for outdoor living. Set on a corner, the Curtis place contains a lawn larger than most and several big old trees.

"Matter of fact," Tony comments, "it's a nice neighborhood. The fellows around here take pride in their gardening. To most of them it's not a chore, it's a hobby."

Mention of "hobby" brings up the fact that Tony Curtis is one of the busiest hobby men in the film colony. Janet decided that the second bedroom would be Tony's hobby headquarters. She and Tony moved in the sectional cabinets in which he keeps his paints and modeling tools, and later Janet talked her mother into helping her line the shelves with a red and white plastic paper. Then she covered one wall with framed photographs and awards which she and Tony have won.

"It's a cheerful room for Tony to enjoy all by himself," Janet explains. "If he spills paint and glue anywhere I can hardly tell."

The room they have ear-marked for the baby is the den. This restful, shuttered room is in one corner of the house, away by itself. It has its own bath and a door that leads to the patio. There are plenty of built-in cabinets and it's close to the kitchen. It would make a perfect nursery. In the meantime it is fine for studying scripts, reading and practicing magic tricks, another Curtis specialty.

Of all the rooms in the Curtis house the richly-paneled bar probably gets the most use. Not that Tony and Janet are heavy drinkers—Tony specializes in carbonated beverages—but merely because this snug little room boasts the only television set in the house.

Tony and Janet eat dinner-on-a-tray here every night as they watch TV. If their friends—Jeff Chandler, Marge and Gower Champion, or the Jerry Lewises—wander in no one ever suggests moving elsewhere. The bar's cork floor, natural woods and oatmeal-colored upholstery make a pleasant, easy room.

THE CURTISES do not go in for elaborate, formal dinners or large parties of any kind. Six days a week they are up by five-thirty A.M., gulping coffee and rushing to their studios to report to "make-up."

"Of course," Janet says, "our schedule could change. It's nice to know that we have a large livingroom and a large diningroom, just in case we wanted to invite ten or twelve for dinner!"

About the livingroom Janet admitted, "I just don't know what to do with it. I guess I'll leave it alone unless Tony gets some idea for it. The diningroom, though! I really love it. The hand-blocked linen draperies and the silver lighting fixture—you know, it's not until you've rented badly-furnished places that you appreciate a good one. This one shows real taste."

In the last year or two Janet has learned to like the feel and looks of hand-hewn furniture. She dotes on unique pieces like the hanging rack in the diningroom on which she displays some of her wedding silver. And she's learned how to bring out a room's strong points and hide its weak ones. The white woven screen in the diningroom, for example, masks the entrance to the kitchen. It's her idea.

Fortunately, the kitchen is practically perfect. It has counters of yellow and white tile and a big bay window to let in the sunlight. There are the two refrigerators. Ida Mae, the housekeeper, always has one of them stocked with Tony's beloved soda pop. Now that they have known the luxury of two refrigerators Janet and Tony swear they'll never have less. "In fact," Janet says, "we're thinking of putting in a third, probably behind the bar."

Tony grins. "Everyone knows," he says, "that's the best place for a baby's bottles. Kidding aside," he adds, "we've learned that it's not really living until you're living in a house. There's no one underneath to complain about the noise."

Wait until Mr. Curtis hears the cries of an infant demanding his two-o'clock bottle. Only then will he know what real noise is.

"Even so," they answered, "it's the only noise we need to make our happiness complete. We'll welcome it with happy hearts and open ears." END

(Janet Leigh is appearing in MGM's Athena, and Tony Curtis in U-I's Johnny Dark.)

---

bing's secret love's no secret anymore

(Continued from page 47) ridiculous! It really is. He took me out to dinner and right away the newspapers were playing it up as a big romance. It's no such thing. It's just that Bing has known me a long time and we went out to eat. And really! I don't know how this whole thing got started. I'm not a movie star. Nobody ever heard of me. How did they find out who I was?

"We went to a restaurant and the next day a reporter was sitting in my office waiting for me to get back from lunch. And when I did, right away, 'Are you Bing Crosby's new girl friend?'

"As I said before, I'm nobody and I'm not used to that sort of questioning. Bing is just an acquaintance.

"Can't a girl go out? Does it have to be a big romance? This whole thing is ruining my social life. Other men don't call me up. They think I'm Bing Crosby's girl. I'm no such thing. I guess Mona Freeman is his real girl friend."

Mona, however, denies this. "I've seen Bing maybe two or three times since he got back from Europe last summer," she asserts. "People keep calling me up and saying, 'I saw you with Crosby the other night.' I must have a double. I wasn't with him. All of these stories about my

Edna's DISMAL

PERIODIC PAIN

Menstruation is natural and necessary but menstrual suffering is not. Just take a Midol tablet, Edna, and go your way in comfort. Midol brings faster relief from menstrual pain—it relieves cramps, eases headache and chases the "blues."

FREE 24-page book, "What Women Want to Know," explains menstruation. (Plain wrapper). Write Dept. F-44, Box 280, New York 18, N.Y.

Edna's BRIGHT WITH MIDOL

All Drugstores have Midol

marrying Bing are just bunk. Bing and I are—well, I guess you'd call us pals. But there isn't the slightest chance of our getting married.

"He sent the cutest little puppy over to our house for a Christmas present. It's a little white Maltese dog. We've named him Smog. I did date Bing New Year's Eve but not since then."

Crosby left Hollywood after the various New Year's celebrations to take care of his golf tournament up at Pebble Beach. Mona Freeman was his guest there, in spite of having denied any close friendship with him. One amateur photographer got a picture of them together, although they tried to avoid photographers. Before Miss Freeman was recognized, Bing was his usual nonchalant self.

"Of course I know Margot," he admitted. "And of course I've taken her out. She's a fine girl—wonderful secretary, too."

"Are your intentions serious?" Bing was asked.

"I'd like to take her out to dinner again." He chuckled.

"Would you like to marry her?"

"I'm not marrying anyone right now," he answered.

"How long have you known Margot James? Is she your girl?"

"We've had wonderful weather up here," Bing said. "Just perfect for golf."

A few minutes after that conversation Bing called Margot James in Hollywood.

"Reporters bothering you?" he asked.

"They sure are," Margot said good-naturedly.

"See what you're up against," Bing offered, "when you go out with me."

"I've got the answer," Margot said. "Don't go out. Just die."

Bing chuckled.

"How did they find out?" Margot asked.

"They find out everything," Bing said. "Next time we'll have dinner under my car."

Just how serious they are about each other no one knows, perhaps not even Margot and Bing. All Hollywood knows is that Crosby apparently prefers young, beautiful, refined women.

As he approaches fifty, a young bride might help him to feel that he is younger. Conceivably, that young bride could be Margot James, Mona Freeman, or any girl of their type. Bing may not have stated his intentions, but certainly he has shown his taste—at least in dinner dates.

Certainly Crosby needs a wife. Although he has thousands of acquaintances there is something about his nature that forbids very close friendship.

He keeps people at arm's length. Basically, perhaps, he is a sentimental Irishman embarrassed by sentiment. That might be why he has adopted a nonchalant façade.

In the presence of women he does not exude warmth. He is a fast man with a bon mot, but he gives the impression that he will bare his soul to no one.

Young women like Rosemary Clooney and Audrey Hepburn are attracted to Bing immediately, perhaps more because of their veneration for him than because of his personal magnetism.

Besides his wife Dixie, Bing has never had any really close women friends, never any confidante to share his problems.

Bing's close friends have always been men, fellows like his gag-writer Bill Morrow and his attorney John O'Melveny.

O'Melveny says quite frankly, "From here on in, Bing plans to taper off. He and I are working out his gradual retirement. We've set up trust funds for the boys. We've taken care of the other business angles. And one of these days, Bing will just slip out of the limelight. His career is fulfilled and he has plenty of money, and my own opinion is that he wants to play a little and work a little. Eventually, he'll probably abandon his radio show. Every now and then, if he particularly likes a script, I think he'll make a movie."

BING CROSBY'S ASSETS

Bing Crosby has one of the largest personal fortunes in show business. By 1954, he was worth an estimated $14,850,000.

Most of his money comes from the following sources:

1. Oil wells in Scurry County, Texas, which he owns jointly with Bob Hope and millionaire Texan Monty Moncrief.
2. Decros Corporation, a partnership with Decca Records.
3. Crosby Investment Corporation, a holding operation for securities, real estate, and the trust funds of the four Crosby boys, plus a 20% investment in the Pittsburgh Pirates.
4. Crosby-Jayson, Inc., a partnership with a shirt company that makes the Bing Crosby Casual Shirt.
5. Bing's Things, Inc., a company which produces toys and children's games.
6. Bing Crosby Enterprises, an organization which owns the existing contracts between Bing and CBS, Paramount Pictures and General Electric. For those three companies Crosby turns out radio programs, motion pictures, and TV shows.
7. Bing Crosby Enterprises, Inc., another corporation with an electronics division and a TV film production division. The TV division produces films, already more than 150 half-hour jobs for Procter & Gamble and other sponsors. The electronics division distributes Ampex Tape Recording equipment.
8. Bing Crosby Minute Maid Distributing Co. which owns the distribution rights in five western states for frozen fruit juices. Crosby also owns 20,000 shares of the parent company, Minute Maid, Inc.
9. Bing Crosby Ice Cream Sales, a licensing operation for the use of Crosby's name on ice cream items.

Crosby used to own radio and TV stations in Monterrey, California, and Spokane, Washington, but these have recently been liquidated to pay the inheritance tax on the estate of the late Dixie Lee Crosby.

Crosby says that of all his enterprises he personally takes care of only three. "I look after the golf tournament up at Pebble Beach, the ranch in Elko and my own personal expenses. Jack O'Melveny takes care of everything else."

No one in the entire Crosby organization will dare to comment on Crosby's marital intentions, his dates with Margot James and Mona Freeman and Ghislaine de Boysson in Paris last summer.

One brave girl who has worked intermittently for Bing, says, "I feel very sorry for him. Every time he goes out with a girl the eyes of the world are upon him.

"I guess he likes young girls. He's rarely seen with anyone over thirty. But how would it seem if he married a girl who was only a couple of years older than his oldest son, Gary?

"I guess you know that he takes a dictaphone wherever he goes. When he has a spare minute he answers his personal mail. Maybe if he married a secretary he'd have more time for golf!

"Choosing a wife is a private decision, and most men can marry any girl they choose. But Bing has such tremendous fame that it impinges on his private life, and that's what he hates the most. For twenty years, he has been hounded and followed and tracked down by the press. I think that's why he goes to Europe so much. Nobody bothers him over there."

The girl who marries Crosby will have her hands full. Aside from the many Crosby business enterprises, there are the four Crosby boys.

"Now that Dixie's gone," he has said, "they really need a lot of attention. They're normal, healthy youngsters. If they're not taken care of, they'll run wild."

Bing's wife would necessarily share in raising the Crosby clan. This would call for tact and diplomacy, since all four boys remember their mother with overwhelming love. Certainly, no one could substitute for Dixie.

Bing also owns a few homes. There's the mansion in Holmby Hills, the big house in Pebble Beach (known to real estate men as "Everett's Folly"—brother Everett took bids for its construction and the house has been up for sale for more than a year with no buyers). There's the summer lodge at Hayden Lake, Idaho, the tremendous ranch at Elko, Nevada, and the newest Crosby house in Palm Springs.

That makes five residences. To move in and become mistress of these properties takes courage, knowledge, experience and background. A wife who could do it would be extremely difficult to find. Bing's friends are mostly athletes, show people and plain, unsophisticated people. Where is he likely to meet a girl able to help him to oversee his vast holdings?

A girl who wants to continue a career would hardly be suitable. When he took out Audrey Hepburn one time, there was speculation that Audrey was one of the few young women in the movies with the proper background for a Mrs. Crosby.

As far as it went it was true, but probably Audrey Hepburn would not give up her career at this point for anyone. Bing has always insisted that two careers in one family are one too many. Dixie abandoned hers although she was much more famous than Bing when they married.

Bing knows that he must be extremely careful in choosing his dates. That is why there have been so few. Bing likes to hunt, fish, ride and golf. Few girls are able to keep up with him in these. Presumably, they wouldn't be expected to.

A girl who has sung on Crosby's radio show many times says, "I'd be scared silly to marry Bing. To begin with, he's settled in his ways. That means the wife would have to do all of the adapting.

"Then, too, I'd always know that people were staring at me to see if I measured up —to see if I were good enough for him. Everyone would compare me to Dixie.

"Bing is almost fifty years old. In another ten years he'll be an old man, probably a grandfather. He should marry a woman who is forty, at least, maybe a little older. He needs a woman of experience who can cope with things.

"I can see his going out with young girls for kicks, but I'm sure he's not thinking of marrying them. He's too sensible."

What does Bing think of a future marriage? What does he have to say?

"I might get married again," he admits, "if I could find the right girl, and if the right girl would have me. It's all up to God." END

dutch treat

(Continued from page 39) Rhine right to her garden which was smack in the Nazi battle lines. Only when the earth shuddered beneath her and a blast tumbled her off the pad did she wake up and realize this wasn't her routine nightmare. It was real. Bits of gravel peppered her skin and shell fragments whined wickedly past her ears.

Edda dug the earth with her nails. For agonized seconds she quivered there expecting to be blown to oblivion. Finally the barrage moved on and she crawled back to her cellar door, shaking. She never wanted to try that again.

Edda van Heemstra shed her Dutch alias after the war. She uses her real name now—Audrey Hepburn.

Last October Audrey faced another kind of bombardment in Hollywood where she was making her first American movie, Sabrina Fair. This time the big guns could be labeled Skepticism, Challenge, Envy and Resentment. They were loaded, aimed and set to wham away at her. After all, Audrey was a foreigner, also a one-picture sensation with a royal aura collected in Roman Holiday. She was young and deliciously attractive. Worse than that, she was extravagantly hailed as the new wonder of the film world. There were rumors of attractive Hollywood men like Gregory Peck and Kirk Douglas going mushy over the girl abroad. What a target!

But the battery never opened up. Audrey spiked it. When she flew away to Broadway in December, Hollywood had capitulated. Audrey Hepburn did more than conquer Hollywood. She enchanted it.

Humphrey Bogart, who usually snarls at his colleagues on the set, especially if they seem high and mighty, cooed like a turtledove when Audrey was around. He gave a dinner party in her honor and Baby Bacall loved her. Hepburn's other co-star, William Holden, who can be belligerent about his privacy, even served tea (which he hates) to Audrey and her friends in his dressing room. Bing Crosby, who never visits any sets around Paramount, visited Audrey's like a little boy lost with the excuse that he wanted to keep his French from getting rusty. Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis, on one side of Audrey's dressing room, lapsed into reverent sanity for the entire two months. Danny Kaye, on the other side, confined his brash gags to one mild attempt. "I'm going to bore a hole through this wall," he threatened. "How nice. Please do," invited Audrey.

No one was exempt from Audrey Hepburn's amazing spell. Director Billy Wilder, who spends his days prodding stars into performances over their heads, raved, "She's Mickey Mantle. She can do anything. There's no one like her." Hardbitten grips, props and juicers conducted themselves like courteous pageboys around Audrey. "I don't know exactly why," one confessed. "Here this kid has the red carpet rolled out all over the place, and ordinarily that's a sickening sight to a working stiff. But for her it looked right." Disillusioned Paramount press agents mooned like schoolboys and dug the dictionary for high flown adjectives. They produced "mesmerizing, fey, stately, elfin, wise, ravishing and vibrant." Everyone else on the Paramount lot, from studio chief Don Hartman to the lowliest messenger boy, sang praises and cooked up excuses to collect a glance from her tilted eyes or a phrase from her Mona Lisa lips. Cynical reporters arrived primed to debunk Audrey and departed as putty-noodled as the newshawk Greg Peck played in Roman Holiday—and with blank notebooks.

During her entire Hollywood stay, Au-

Nothing finer than VITA·FLUFF SHAMPOO
...say the world's finest hairdressers.

Exclusive with professional beauticians... sold only
in beauty salons.

by Duon Inc
ORIGINATOR OF FINE SHAMPOOS
CORAL GABLES FLORIDA

THE TRYST THAT FAILED

The O'Connors tried, but their reunion laid a bomb!

■ At the moment, Donald O'Connor is the box office champ of Las Vegas, having topped both Red Skelton and Marlene Dietrich in the Sahara Hotel's Conga Room. For each two-week engagement the attendance score reads—Red Skelton: 18,011. Marlene Dietrich: 17,800. Donald O'Connor: 18,466.

Donald's achievement is unique in that his fast moving show was not naughty. The public is convinced that young Mr. Show Business can do no wrong.

Backstage, viewpoints differ. Don's friends agree that he is a confused young man, much of his confusion coming from his soon-to-be-former wife, Gwen. She came to his opening performance and word got out that the O'Connors would reconcile. Photographers and newsmen gathered outside Donald's dressingroom as Gwen entered—shyly. Twenty minutes later, she burst forth, a violently angry young lady. "There's going to be no reconciliation!" she snapped, slamming the door behind her.

Moments later, the door opened again and Donald peered out. Grinning sheepishly, he exclaimed, "I wonder what she's so upset about!" Then he withdrew.

What Mr. O'Connor said to Mrs. O'Connor may never be known. All sources refuse to comment. Some say Donald stipulated that Gwen must never see Dan Dailey again.

On Gwen's flying trip home from the reunion that didn't jell, Mr. Dailey met her at the airport. There are those who add that jealous as Don may be of Dan, Mrs. Don is more jealous of the ladies with whom her husband cavorts in his dancing acts and the money he gambles away.

Psychiatrists are now trying to untangle this unhappy situation for the young O'Connors. Perhaps Don loves Gwen and Gwen loves Don, but neither of them can understand it.

drey Hepburn said and did nothing provocative enough to make the "Personals" column of a weekly paper. She never entered a nightclub. She attended four dinner parties—at the Bogarts', Jack Bennys', Billy Wilders' and Stewart Grangers'. She went to the Ice Follies and the Sadler's Wells Ballet. On these occasions, Audrey's escorts were men much older than she. Groucho Marx took her to Bogey's and Bing Crosby to Benny's. Funnyman Phil Silvers beaued her to the ice show. Audrey took herself to the ballet.

She did nothing more startling than wearing pink matador pants a time or two and riding around the Paramount lot on the green bicycle Billy Wilder gave her. A studio limousine whisked her to and from a modest two-room penthouse apartment on Wilshire Boulevard, where the only verified steady visitor was a stray cat. There she cooked most of her own meals and usually sacked in from Saturday to Monday watching TV, listening to records, snoozing and reading scripts. Her free days around Paramount she trotted over to the dance barn and worked out with ballet exercises. A couple of times she went swimming in Jean Simmons' pool.

In short, about all Audrey Hepburn did in Hollywood was to make Sabrina Fair. By the time she left she was the most talked about actress in modern Hollywood history.

How come? What is this Hepburn magic? How can a girl on the spot spend nine weeks in a sensation-jaded place like Hollywood and, by doing nothing spectacular, leave it babbling poems of praise in her wake? How, for instance, could she make a glamour-gorged guy like Bill Holden get lyrical about her "elegance and fascinating formality?" Or a vet like Joan Crawford, who only caught a glimpse of her, call her "the greatest thing to happen to Hollywood in years." How, for that matter, could fans all over the land boost Audrey to the top box-office ten after only one picture? What's the girl got?

A first impression of Audrey is that the girl could stand a square meal. Five, seven, but only 110 pounds and with a twenty-inch waist, Audrey sports nothing up and down her chassis that would make the boys in the front row cheer. She wears a size eight shoe and she has a small face perched on a long, gazelle-like neck. She holds her back straight and her slightly slanted nose seems always to be pulling everything up. She looks like one of those Pharaoh's daughters on an ancient papyrus scroll.

Looking at Audrey carefully, you can see that her teeth are not perfectly aligned, her nostrils flare and her dark hair seems to be carelessly cut. She has deep brown oversize eyes that come across in a curve, high and outside. Her black eyelashes are long and the thick eyebrows are perfect. The effect adds up to a new deal in Hollywood glamour. Neither pure beauty nor raw sex is what Audrey Hepburn gets across. Her personal charm is elusive, sophisticated and subtle. It's continental but cute—dignified but disarming.

AUDREY is gracefully informal. She takes you in but holds you off. The Dutch treat with the English accent talks well but tells nothing. If you ask a personal question she smiles sweetly and is silent as the sphinx. You wonder how you could ever, ever have been so gauche. She can sit as primly as a princess, wearing a suit by de Givenchey and kicking off her patent leather pumps to reveal pink toenails peeping through her nylons. It seems so correct that you wonder if you shouldn't kick off your own shoes. She can slop her coffee over the cup and it looks as though that's the only proper way to handle a teacup. She's in command of every situation all of the time. Audrey's undeniable attraction, in one word, is presence. Most Hollywood stars affect it but never quite attain it. That's why Audrey Hepburn has bowled them all over. With her it comes naturally, as it does with some other girls known as princesses. Playing a real one flawlessly, of course, is what brought Audrey to Hollywood.

Because that stock title sheet line, "resemblance to any living person is purely coincidental," is a joke when applied to Roman Holiday. It's common knowledge that the story was inspired by the English Princess Margaret's frolics on the Isle of Capri and the picture was released when the rebellious young lady's romance with Commoner Peter Townsend was hot news. Choosing Audrey Hepburn to play Princess Meg on the screen was a happy piece of casting. In Roman Holiday you watched Audrey romping around Rome but you were also seeing Margaret Rose.

It wasn't all illusion. Audrey's resemblance to Princess Margaret was good luck. But a lot of what came across in Roman Holiday was the result of the same sort of disciplined, tutored childhood that the British princess had.

Audrey's mother is the Baroness van Heemstra, of a noble Dutch family. At one time their ancestral castle was Doorn, where the exiled Kaiser Wilhelm spent his last years chopping wood. Audrey's ancestors served Holland's royal house for generations. One of them, Baron Aernoud van Heemstra, governed the colony of Surinam for Her Majesty, Queen Wilhelmina. A cousin was adjutant at the royal Dutch court. Audrey's father was J. A. Hepburn-Ruston, an Irish-English businessman. Her parents were divorced when she was ten, and since then Audrey has had practically no contact with her father, who lives today in Ireland.

Audrey Hepburn was born in Brussels on May 4, 1929. Her first memories are of a big comfortable estate outside Brussels with servants, governess, pets and plenty of room to race around, playing with her two older half-brothers, by her mother's first marriage. Serious whooping cough almost killed her at six weeks. Later, she became a skinny kid, but healthy and never coddled for a minute. Her program was rigorous. She learned French as well as English. At four she was sent to school in England as her parents shuttled between the British Isles and Holland. Audrey's clothes were especially made for her; her behavior carefully coached. She was introduced to opera and ballet as soon as she could sit still in a theatre seat. She traveled all over Europe with her parents.

This left little time for play or such frivolities as the movies. "I never knew what a 'fan' was or what the word 'star' meant until I made pictures myself in England," Audrey confesses. "Until I was eighteen I had seen only three—and they were Austrian or German."

So you couldn't call Audrey Hepburn's childhood normal in the American sense. It was sheltered in the aristocratic European manner, with emphasis on training in the arts. There was something to study and master every minute. Soon a determined passion for ballet dancing and then the war made her all but isolated.

SHE HAD started dancing classes at five. At ten she attended a performance of the Sadler's Wells Ballet and walked out with visions of a ballerina's career dancing in her head. But the thunderclouds of war were already rolling up, and before them the violent gusts of political struggles. They swept away Audrey Hepburn's security. Her father joined Sir Oswald Mosley's Fascist Black Shirts. Her mother soon divorced him and took Audrey back to Holland and the family home outside Arnhem. Then one day the Nazi tide swept across the Low Countries and remained for six years.

At first the conquerers were painfully correct. Audrey's life went on about as planned. She studied violin, piano, singing and, of course, dancing. She was one of the first pupils at the Arnhemse Dansschool, whose leading ballerina, Madame Winja Marova, still sighs regretfully, "She should never have entered pictures. A fine ballerina was lost." Maybe so. Certainly Adriaantje (Dutch for "Little Audrey," as they called her) was as graceful as a sprite and for a long time lived the almost the soothsayer said it

■ And you've got to give him credit, because the Ides of March are absolutely no fun! Chances are someone is wandering around your house right now with an icebag on his forehead and a "We must save money!" look in his bloodshot eye. But don't despair. Just whisper soothingly that by subscribing to MODERN SCREEN you will save the family exchequer forty cents over the newsstand price. All you have to do is fill out the coupon below and mail it to us with your check or money order. Then fill the icebag up again and settle down to wait for your monthly copy of MODERN SCREEN—delivered right to your happy home!

SUBSCRIPTION IN U.S.A. AND CANADA FOR ONE YEAR $2.00; TWO YEARS $3.50; THREE YEARS $5.00. FOREIGN SUBSCRIPTIONS $3.00 A YEAR. PLEASE SEND CHECKS OR MONEY ORDERS ONLY.

MODERN SCREEN Subscription Department, 10 West 33rd Street, New York 1 N. Y.

NAME ____________________

ADDRESS ____________________

CITY ____________ ZONE ________ STATE ________

3/4

cloistered life of a ballet novice. Soon she used her dancing in another way—to help raise money for Dutch resistance.

The Nazi screws tightened. Hobnailed boots clattered over the brick pavements at night and people Audrey knew vanished as the terror spread. Her cousin was executed and her uncle was shot for implication in a sabotage plot. Audrey changed her name to Edda van Heemstra and spoke only Dutch in the streets. At night she slipped out to verboten gatherings at homes of underground leaders, dancing and passing the hat for money to help carry on the resistance. By day, sometimes, notes that could have sent her to prison nestled in the toe of her stocking—messages to Dutch underground leaders.

Understandably, Audrey Hepburn doesn't like to talk about those days. Besides the Nazi terror there was the hunger and cold, the desperate problems of trying to exist in a plundered land. The winters were bitter with no coal and often only runty greens to eat. Audrey still drools when she sees rich food—but she still gets a stomach ache when she eats it.

The worst time of all came right before liberation. Around Arnhem hopes leaped wildly when the British picked that town for the first airborne landing. The Union Jack came out of hidden places and people cheered as Tommies dropped from the skies. But somebody blundered. A Nazi panzer division, undetected, was waiting and moved in. It massacred the British in one of the greatest fiascoes of the war.

"After that," remembers Audrey, "we lived in a ghost town, although you couldn't say we lived. We stayed alive."

The Germans evacuated the city, taking everything. Arnhem was dead. Audrey's house was outside Arnhem, right in the German lines. For seven months she huddled with her relatives in the cellar as bombardments made the earth heave around her. She risked her life every time she popped her head out. That's when the craving for fresh air overcame the fear of being blown to bits and she took that sunbath and almost got killed.

In April, 1945, Arnhem was liberated by General Montgomery. Audrey could breathe again, but she was a different person. Maybe it's that background that makes Audrey Hepburn a baffling personality in Hollywood, surprisingly mature in some ways and shyly naive in others.

Things were easier for Audrey Hepburn after V-E day, but the family fortune was wrecked. Her mother went to work as a decorator helping to restore ruined Dutch homes. Audrey went back to ballet school. She studied in Amsterdam and The Hague, helping to pay her way by working as a fashion mannequin. At nineteen, when she had made enough progress and saved a small stake, she went to London alone to try out for Madame Marie Rambert's famous advanced ballet school. She bought a round trip ticket in Holland, but tight money restriction allowed her to take only five pounds—then about fifteen dollars. Madame Rambert took her into her own house with some other promising pupils. There was no money from home. To keep her body, soul and ambition together Audrey didn't act like either a princess or a prima ballerina. She acted like a chorus girl.

AUDREY landed first in the second row chorus of the English production of High Button Shoes. Even in that obscure spot, both her grace and appeal stood out. She kicked her willowy legs in other spicily titled revues like Sauce Tartare and Sauce Piquant. She picked up jobs in night clubs and bits around London's movie studios. It was a big moment for Audrey Hepburn when she actually played a talking bit—as the cigarette girl in the opening shot of The Lavendar Hill Mob.

She landed a honeymooning bride bit in a minor British film romp called Monte Carlo Baby, mainly because she could handle both the English and French versions. That took her on location to the gamblers' Principality of Monaco. The day Audrey played her quickie role in the lobby of the Hotel de Paris she also hit the jackpot.

The aging French author, Colette, whose novel, Gigi, was being dramatized for Broadway, spied Audrey from her wheelchair. There was the teen-age heroine of her sophisticated book. "There's Gigi," she said. Colette was right.

A few months later Audrey opened in Gigi at the Fulton Theatre in New York, playing the title role. She had never before acted on the stage. Besides a few dramatics lessons in London she had no training for such a debut. She had never been to America and knew no one. The pressure on the twenty-two-year-old untried, unknown girl was terrific. If she flopped . . . .! But Audrey Hepburn didn't flop—she made a hit. The first night, walking off stage, the manager complained, "I don't know how you're going to get inside your dressing room. It's full of flowers." When Audrey did get inside there were Helen Hayes and Marlene Dietrich, fabulous names to her, waiting to hug and congratulate her. Critics raved about the new star. They've been raving ever since. It looked easy for Audrey Hepburn. But it wasn't.

Butterflies fluttered in her flat tummy then. The next day Producer Gilbert Miller said, "Audrey, may I see you for a minute, out in front of the house?" She remembers thinking, "This is it. I'm going to be sacked." Miller gravely walked her out under the marquee. Then he grinned. "Take a look!" Workmen on ladders were hanging up new letters. They spelled out, "AUDREY HEPBURN."

LATER in London director William Wyler was poking around for a girl to play Princess Anne. He has said frankly, "When she first came to see me I thought she was skinny and colorless. I didn't think she had a thing." He granted a short film test anyway—the bed scene from Roman Holiday—but he wasn't interested enough to stay in London and see how it came out. If the camerman hadn't kept shooting after the scene and caught Audrey hugging her knees with a relieved giggle, Paramount might have scribbled "N.G." on the effort back in Hollywood. But in that brief flash the real Hepburn charm came through and Don Hartman has a quick eye for charm. He cabled, "Sign her." The butterflies are still with Audrey. "Every night is opening night to me," she says. "After all, you have to deliver the goods." They were there when she delivered the goods in Rome for a notoriously

PHOTO CREDITS

Below you will find credited page by page, the photographs which appear in this issue:

6, 7, 8, 10, 15—Beerman, Parry; 24—Wide World; 27, 28, 29, 30, 31—Beerman, Parry, San Francisco Chronicle,—Young; 32, 33—Beerman, Parry, Anderson; 34, 35—MGM, Snyder, Berko of Berko Henry Studio; 36, 37—Stone, Parry, Chicago Daily News—J. B. Scott; 38, 39—Globe, Wide World; 42, 43, 44, 45—Beerman, Parry; 48, 49—Beerman, Parry; 50, 51, 52, 53—Snyder, Parry; 54, 55—Beerman, Parry; 56, 57—MGM, Wide World, Beerman; 58—Beerman, Parry.

Be a lovely, lovable BLONDE

Time-darkened blonde, brunette or redhead—with Marchand's Golden Hair Wash you lighten just a shade or turn adorable, dazzling towhead. Have sunny highlights, one dashing streak! Not a dye . . . complete home hair lightener. Lightens arm and leg hair, too.

60c and 90c, plus tax

OR if you don't plan to lighten—

Use a Marchand's RINSE after each shampoo for flattering highlights and temporary color . . . to blend gray streaks. 12 shades.
6 Rinses 25c 2 Rinses 10c

192 MOVIE, TV, RADIO STARS PHOTOS

SPECIAL! For Limited Time Only . . .

All your favorite stars in one big package. New fascinating poses—EXTRA HEAVY — wallet size — suitable for framing. Sensational money-saving offer. RUSH YOUR DOLLAR TODAY! FREE! — With your order — BIG SURPRISE GIFT! (Worth 75¢) Home Addresses of 175 top stars, also GIANT NEW CATALOG plus 100's of photos and names of newest stars SENT FREE WITH YOUR ORDER IF YOU ACT NOW!! HOLLYWOOD FILM STAR CENTER
Studio C-4 Box 2309, Hollywood 28, California

$1

IF YOU SUFFER PAIN of HEADACHE NEURALGIA NEURITIS

get FAST RELIEF with the way thousands of physicians and dentists recommend.

HERE'S WHY . . . Anacin is like a doctor's prescription. That is, Anacin contains not just one but a combination of medically proved active ingredients. No other product gives faster, longer-lasting relief from pain of headache, neuralgia, neuritis than Anacin tablets. Buy Anacin® today!

Shrinks Hemorrhoids New Way Without Surgery

Science Finds Healing Substance That Relieves Pain—Shrinks Hemorrhoids

For the first time science has found a new healing substance with the astonishing ability to shrink hemorrhoids and to stop bleeding—without surgery.

In case after case, pain was relieved promptly. And, while gently relieving pain, actual reduction (shrinkage) took place.

Most amazing of all—results were so thorough that sufferers made astonishing statements like "Piles have ceased to be a problem!"

The secret is a new healing substance (Bio-Dyne®) — discovery of a world-famous research institute.

Now this new healing substance is offered in ointment form under the name of *Preparation H. Ask for it at all drug stores—money back guarantee. *Trade Mark

RING SET Can Be Yours!

A VERY beautiful new "heart" design Engagement and Wedding Ring to match, made in solid sterling silver, set with simulated sparkling brilliants for selling only 4 Rosebud Perfume at 50¢ a bottle. Rings and perfume guaranteed to please. If only one ring is wanted, then order 2 bottles to sell. Order 4 or 2 bottles today. SEND NO MONEY—We trust you.

ROSEBUD PERFUME CO.
Box 45, Woodsboro, Maryland.

JANE POWELL

FREE PHOTO
LARGE SIZE of your favorite star
Actual HIGH GLOSS PHOTO suitable for framing

FREE!! MOVIE STAR CATALOG listing thousands of poses and containing 55 ADDITIONAL PICTURES of popular stars. FREE!! A list giving BIRTHDAYS OF STARS. Send name of your favorite star and only 15 cents to cover handling charge.

MORTON STUDIOS, P.O. Box 2430
Dept. MS-4, Hollywood 28, Calif.

FINISH HIGH SCHOOL AT HOME!

No classes to attend. Easy spare-time training covers big choice of subjects. Friendly instructors; standard texts. Full credit for previous schooling. Diploma awarded. Write now for FREE catalog!

WAYNE SCHOOL Catalog HAF-25
2527 Sheffield Ave., Chicago 14, Illinois

New Kind Of Safe Tablet
ENDS BED-WETTING

Without electrical devices, sheets, alarms. Medically proven 75% effective. DRY-TABS must stop BED-WETTING or money back. Full supply of DRY-TABS only $3.00.

AT BETTER DRUG STORES EVERYWHERE

Amazing New Creme* RE-COLORS HAIR *IN 17 MINUTES..

Now change streaked, gray, graying or drab hair to a new lustrous youthful-looking color, try Tintz Creme Shampoo-Tint today. It's a new hair coloring that re-colors hair at home as it shampoos. Takes only 17 minutes. No waiting for results. It's easy to use—no messy mixing. Won't wash or rub out. Your choice of 13 natural appearing colors ... GET TINTZ AT YOUR DRUGGISTS NOW.

Tintz
CREME SHAMPOO HAIR COLORING

critical director, William Wyler, and in spite of a very sympathetic Gregory Peck. They were with her when she stepped on the set of Sabrina Fair. They're with her right now on Broadway playing in Ondine. They're always with Audrey Hepburn beneath her cool, calm exterior. They are with most champs. But they never make her lose her head.

Audrey Hepburn may become the biggest star in Hollywood, as William Wyler has predicted. Or she may be only a morning glory as far as Hollywood is concerned.

"This is the most trying time of my life," she says. "I'm just a publicity star now. I've been made by good writers and directors, but I'm still a shadow. I can't have substance until the public gives it to me."

Well, the public gave it to her in both Gigi and Roman Holiday. But the sensitive European girl of Colette's play was almost Audrey Hepburn herself. And so was hookey-playing Princess Anne of Roman Holiday. Will there always be naturals like that for her? The odds are against it. Audrey Hepburn is so extraordinarily fascinating because she is unique. First reports on Sabrina Fair, where Audrey plays a chauffeur's daughter, say she's every bit as enchanting as in Roman Holiday. But Audrey herself has admitted, "I haven't any real acting ability. I'm still learning." And her staunchest supporter at present, Billy Wilder, has said, "I don't know. Maybe she's too good for the general public." In short, the jury is still out on whether or not Audrey Hepburn will continue to be a Hollywood sensation. There are a couple of other things that could line up against that prospect, too: Absence—and a heart that has no trouble growing fond.

Audrey left Hollywood last December and she may not return until 1955. That's when her next picture commitment comes up at Paramount. Her contract binds her to only one a year and she has already made it for 1954. It may be a full year or more before Hollywood sees her again. Few great movie careers have been built that way. Audrey herself has shown no burning desire to concentrate on one. "I don't want to stay in one place. I want to go everywhere and do everything," she has said. "It's the only way you learn." One ambition is to do a musical in London or New York. That's why, even as she made Sabrina Fair, Audrey worked on her dancing and singing.

Asked when she would return, she shrugged. "I don't know. It depends on how long my play runs and whether I'll make a picture in Europe after that or not. But I think I'll take a holiday—perhaps in Italy, or in the south of France. Or maybe I'll take a long trip."

"Alone?"

Audrey smiled. "With my mother perhaps," she said. "I might visit relatives." Audrey still has relatives scattered all over, as far away as Indonesia where her two half-brothers, Ian and Alexander, work for the Royal Dutch Oil Company.

SINCE CHRISTMAS, Audrey has lived with her mother in a New York apartment. She has no other home. She isn't planning to have either a husband or a home soon. Audrey is very positive about that in a general sort of way. "Not with a career," she explains. "I don't want a sloppy, long-distance marriage. You have to give up something." If she does fall in love, she says, that will come first and a home and the hope of children will end her career—like that—the minute she says, "I do." On her record, you might not buy that. But it's a possibility.

Audrey Hepburn has already demonstrated that she is no cold potato beneath her placid poise. She has already been engaged to James Hanson, an attractive and wealthy young English businessman. She was picking out her trousseau in Rome during Roman Holiday. But when she went back to London—and returned to Italy for retakes—the marriage was off.

At the same time it was noted that Gregory Peck and Audrey were having fun together in the Eternal City, not all recorded by a camera. Greg was then estranged from his wife Greta—and people put two and two together. They didn't quite add up to four and there's no indication that they ever will.

The Pecks seem to have made up and Audrey says she didn't even get a postcard from Greg in Hollywood. But if Audrey is as free as the birds right now, no one who knows her expects her to stay that way. Every man she works with gets gone on the girl and already rumors are that Mel Ferrer, her co-star in Ondine, is no exception. Audrey will be twenty-five this May and it's hard to imagine her winding up playing The Old Maid.

But whether all these ifs and buts keep Audrey Hepburn away or bring her back to Hollywood, the town will never be quite the same. On her Hollywood holiday, Audrey may not have lighted up the playgrounds of the movie capital the way she revved up the ruins of Rome—but the general effect was the same. The girl who arrived on the spot left in the spotlight—simply by doing and being nothing but her own enchanting self. END

why hollywood is sore at eddie fisher

(Continued from page 36) been advised against taking a test."

Why should Eddie Fisher refuse a screen test? Bing Crosby, Frank Sinatra, Rosemary Clooney, Nelson Eddy, practically everyone in the business has gladly submitted to a test. Not Eddie.

One Paramount executive who had talked with Eddie and his representatives said, "It sure beats me. We explained to the kid that the screen test would serve as a protection for him as well as for us. 'After all,' I said, 'you wouldn't want to be in a picture if you looked silly or your real personality didn't come across.' He just wouldn't give ground."

Fisher's representative, on the other hand, retaliates with, "Why should he take a test? He's on television twice a week. Anyone who's interested in buying him can see exactly what he looks like, exactly how he projects his personality, exactly how he delivers a song. What else could be necessary?

"Besides, I think it's pretty important that the studio offered to sign him without a test a year ago. I think that was for some picture Freddie Finklehoff had written. Now all of a sudden they want to test him. Eddie isn't an unknown quantity. They can see what they're getting."

STUDIO executives insist that you can't see anything until it's on film shot at the home base in Hollywood. "There was plenty of film on Audrey Hepburn," one of them remarked, "stuff made of her in Europe. But we wouldn't take a chance on her for Roman Holiday until a top-notch director like Willie Wyler tested her himself.

"I know Fisher has made plenty of money. His records have sold more than five million copies. I know he doesn't need the job. But I still can't understand why he won't go for a test.

Eddie Fisher, on TV's Youth Wants To Know, with moderator Chuck Saxon (Modern Screen ed.) said he was eager to be in movies.

"He says he doesn't need one, but how does he know? He's never been in pictures. He's only a kid. We think he's making a big mistake. His agents say that we're making a mistake. Maybe so. Only we can't afford to invest two million dollars in a picture and have the singing star come out a great big flop.

"I remember only a year or so ago when Metro brought out a kid, Russell Nype, who starred with Ethel Merman in Call Me Madam. He was great on the stage but on film his personality didn't come over. He's good on TV but on TV the problems are different."

In all fairness to Eddie, it must be said that the young crooner finds himself in an awkward spot. He's in the middle of an argument which he didn't start.

He keeps saying, "I've got unlimited faith in my manager, Milt Blackstone. When I was really down on my luck and things looked blackest, he's the guy who set me up. A couple of years ago when I went back to Philadelphia convinced that I'd never make a go of it in show business, it was Milt who got me back in at Grossinger's, and it was Milt who helped me get most of the breaks.

"It would be stupid and ungrateful of me not to follow his advice."

Fisher is also represented by MCA, the largest talent agency in the world. These men know most of the answers. Probably they want Paramount to sign Eddie first; then if his screen test should not turn out well, he'd still get a lot of money.

So Paramount is testing another TV singer, Julius LaRosa; and it may well be that if he gets the right roles, LaRosa will develop into the motion picture star that Eddie Fisher might have been.

Some think Julie doesn't sing as well as Eddie, but he does have warmth, good looks and an electric charm.

THIS IS not to say that Hollywood has irrevocably turned thumbs down on Eddie Fisher. The kid from Philadelphia may yet wind up on the Paramount lot. But right now the negotiations are finished, and the studio is looking elsewhere for young talent. And there's an unkind rumor in the wind that Eddie's success has gone to his head.

A Hollywood photographer who covers the nightclub beat, says, "He acted like a prima donna out here. One night he came into Mocambo with Mamie Van Doren and some other people. Naturally, we moved in and began to focus.

"Next thing you know, he jumped up and yelled, 'None of that. No pictures.' And he ran out of the room.

"We were kind of flabbergasted. He'd flown out here from the east to appear on a TV show with Eddie Cantor and Frank Sinatra. The network boys took pictures and he had no objections. We want to photograph him with this babe and he balks.

"All I can say is that if Eddie Fisher doesn't want to be photographed with any of his dates, particularly a luscious armful like that Van Doren doll, then he shouldn't be taking them to the Mocambo."

Mamie Van Doren, the Universal-International starlet who dated Eddie in Hollywood, says, "Of course he's changed. He has more confidence in himself—more assurance. It's only to be expected.

"I first met him in New York when we were doing Million Dollar Baby, a Monte Proser show in his Cafe Theatre. I was a showgirl and I think this was Eddie's first show. He was very sweet and I guess maybe a little scared, but he'd been around and he knew the big city. I was from South Dakota. I wasn't in love with him—it wasn't anything like that—but we did go around on dates.

"He didn't have much money and someone, I think it was a girl in the line, told me Eddie was crazy about a little Irish girl named Joan Wynne, who was working at the Copa. But I didn't mind.

"Eddie has always been a nice guy. His career has always come first with him. I knew that right away. Girls were just incidental to him.

"We used to take walks near Central Park and down Broadway at midnight. And with all those neon signs and the crowds milling around and the restaurants open, it was very glamorous, very big-time, and it was wonderful being with Eddie.

"I'll tell you this about Eddie. He's got a very warm personality and he's very lucky because he's always known what he wanted in life. He wanted to sing and to entertain, and that's what he's doing.

"After he went into the Army I came out to Hollywood. One day he called. He was in uniform and I can't remember if he was on his way to Korea or coming back from there. Anyway, he said he was down at the Beverly Hills Hotel and wouldn't I go out with him. And of course I did. He looked fine.

"And then this last time a few weeks ago. He was here for the Eddie Cantor show and after it was over he called me again and asked, 'How about dinner?'

"I'm always glad to hear from Eddie and I said, 'Sure.' First we went to Romanoff's. After that we drove with another couple to the Mocambo to hear Eartha Kitt. Eddie was absolutely a perfect gentleman. He always is. The captain seated us, and then in a little while the photographers came over and began to take pictures of us. All of a sudden Eddie jumped up as if someone had lit a fire under him. He pushed the table away and ran out in the lobby, and there I was, sitting by myself and wondering what was wrong with the guy.

"Afterward he was sore at himself and felt kind of silly for behaving that way. He tried to make up for it. 'Look,' he said. 'I promised Guy Mitchell we'd go over to Ciro's and catch his act.' But by then I'd had enough. 'Just take me home,' I said. 'This isn't our night.'

"He apologized again and took me home, and he was just as sweet as he could be.

"Do I think he's changed? Of course he's changed. He's got more money for one thing. He can take a girl to Romanoff's for dinner. When I met him, Romanoff's was just a place he read about in a movie magazine. And naturally money has done things for his ego, his security.

How to use a feminine syringe

YOU'LL find many helpful suggestions on feminine hygiene in the book offered below. Also information on the use of B. F. Goodrich water bottles, ice caps and other rubber products.

The B. F. Goodrich "Sojourn" is a gravity-flow syringe, like those used in hospitals, holds two quarts yet fits in a handy water-proof case.

To get our 116-page book on how and when to douche, sick care and feminine hygiene, send the folder packed with each B. F. Goodrich syringe, water bottle or ice cap to The B. F. Goodrich Company, Dept. S-56, Akron, Ohio. This informative book, written by a nurse, will be mailed promptly.

ASK YOUR DRUGGIST FOR

B.F.Goodrich

RUBBER PRODUCTS

NEW TOWELS

LARGE SIZE! Assorted Colors. New! Not seconds. Money-back guarantee. Order Now! Supply limited.

12 for $1.00

TOWEL SHOP, Dept. 209, Box 881, St. Louis 1, Mo.

SEW FOR CASH

Use our patterns, materials, directions in your own home, full or part time. We buy from you. Wilson Ties, 402 S. Main, Stillwater (7), Minn.

NO DATES?
ACNE TROUBLE?
USE

ACNETROL "A"

You CAN do something about acne! Rid yourself of embarrassing pimples and inferiority! Clear your skin, reveal a new personality with ACNETROL "A," developed by a foremost dermatologist!

A treatment, not a concealment!

Copa Products
2734 COLBY AVE., LOS ANGELES 64, CALIF.

Enclosed find $1.50 (cash, check or M.O.) for one jar of ACNETROL "A"

MONEY BACK GUARANTEE

NAME ______

ADDRESS ______

CITY ______ ZONE ____ STATE ______

M

SUFFERERS FROM PSORIASIS
(SCALY SKIN TROUBLE)
Use DERMOIL

MAKE THE ONE SPOT TEST

Prove it yourself no matter how long you have suffered or what you have tried. Beautiful book on psoriasis and Dermoil with amazing, true photographic proof of results sent FREE. Write for it.

Don't mistake eczema for the stubborn, ugly embarrassing scaly skin disease Psoriasis. Apply non-staining Dermoil. Thousands do for scaly spots on body or scalp. Grateful users, often after years of suffering, report the scales have gone, the red patches gradually disappeared and they enjoyed the thrill of a clear skin again. Dermoil is used by many doctors and is backed by a positive agreement to give definite benefit in 2 weeks or money is refunded without question. Send 10c (stamps or coin) for generous trial bottle to make our famous "One Spot Test." Test it yourself. Results may surprise you. Write today for your test bottle. Caution: Use only as directed. Print name plainly. Don't delay. Sold by Liggett and Walgreen Drug Stores and other leading druggists. LAKE LABORATORIES, Box 3925, Strathmoor Station, Dept. 8409, Detroit 27, Mich.

SEND FOR GENEROUS TRIAL SIZE

©1935 LAKE LAB.

High School Course at Home
Many Finish in 2 Years

Go as rapidly as your time and abilities permit. Course equivalent to resident school work—prepares for college entrance exams. Standard H. S. texts supplied. Diploma Credit for H. S. subjects already completed. Single subjects if desired. High school education is very important for advancement in business and industry and socially. Don't be handicapped all your life. Be a High School graduate. Start your training now. Free Bulletin on request. No obligation.

American School, Dept. H414, Drexel at 58th, Chicago 37

Marvel
WHIRLING SPRAY
Syringe FOR Women 3⁵⁰
At Drug Counters Everywhere
Free BOOKLET
MARVEL CO., 6040 EAST ST., NEW HAVEN, CONN.

CATALOG WITH 215 PICTURES FREE!

NEW! DIFFERENT! BEAUTIFUL!
For the first time — sensational pictures of your favorite movie stars in professional high gloss finish. Special super-duper offer:
20 for 25¢ • 50 for 50¢ • 120 for $1
FREE CATALOG with 215 PICTURES OF STARS with your order
DeLUXE PHOTO SERVICE, Dept. 628
Box 947, Church St. Annex, New York 8, N.Y.

DANCING SHOES—SUPPLIES
Elastic Leotard with Nylon tulle tu tu ➔
Ideal Recital Costume. Pastel Shades Black & Red.
Child's, 2 to 12, $3.95; Adult's, Sm., Med., Lg., $4.75.
BATON—DRUM CORPS SUPPLIES
SKATING SKIRTS—Roller or Ice.
24 Page Catalog 15c (applied to purchase)
Quincon Dance Supplies, Box 422, Quincy 69, Mass.

HOME SEWERS
Make good money—75c hour possible. We furnish everything.
FILMLAND NECKWEAR
Buena Park 7, Calif.

CORNS
Removed by Mosco, also Calluses. Quick, easy, economical. Just rub on. Jars, 35¢, 60¢. At your druggist. Money refunded if not satisfied. Moss Co., Rochester, N. Y.
MOSCO ★CORN★ REMOVER

"Facts About EPILEPSY"
This most interesting and helpful booklet will be mailed to anyone while the supply lasts. We will send a free copy to anyone who writes for it. Lakewood Neurophen Co., Station A., Dept. MM3, Cleveland 2, Ohio.

MAKE MONEY
ADDRESSING ENVELOPES
OUR INSTRUCTIONS REVEAL HOW
GLENN GLENWAY 5713 EUCLID AVE., CLEVELAND 3, OHIO

But it hasn't given him a big head or anything like that. He's always had both feet on the ground. He never puts on airs and I don't think he ever will.

"Eddie is loaded with common sense. I hope we'll always be friends. The thing to remember is that he's under a lot of pressure. And when a guy is under pressure he's bound to flip his lid once in a while.

"I'm sure Eddie would never do anything to harm anyone. He'll do anything to be cooperative and running away from those photographers—well, it was just one of those things."

Another of Fisher's friends interprets the Mocambo incident differently. "This kid," he says, "is blessed with a lot of professional wisdom. There he is in the Mocambo with one of the sexiest starlets in the business. He is sponsored on radio and TV by Coca-Cola. He realizes that his following consists mostly of teen-agers. How are these teen-agers going to react to a picture of him in their newspapers with a sexy blonde at his left, a scotch and soda at his right? (Fisher doesn't drink.) How will his sponsor react? He can't take chances on a question like that.

"He did the right thing. He got out before the photographers loused him up. No one is going to look after Eddie unless he looks after himself. This boy lives a clean life. The only thing he's interested in is his career. Anything you hear that conveys a different impression is 100% wrong.

"For some reason everyone seems anxious to marry him off. He's young. He's got plenty of time for marriage."

Eddie himself says, "I think thirty might be a good age for marriage. But who knows? I'd like to find a girl who was right for me. Just what she'll be like or where I'll find her I don't know. I certainly don't expect to remain a bachelor or to rule out marriage because my career takes so much of my time."

Eddie Fisher has been fabulously lucky in that he came on the show business scene at a time when the younger set was ready for a new singer. Most of his popular recordings were originally scheduled to be sung by Mario Lanza, one of RCA Victor's top money-makers.

For the last two years Lanza has been unable to do any sustained work. He has recorded only four sides.

In that same two years Eddie Fisher has been busy. He not only took over Lanza's number-one recording berth at RCA, but he replaced Mario on the Coca-Cola radio show and inherited his tremendous teenage following.

Should Lanza ever return to the recording wars, should he start making motion pictures again or go out on personal appearance tours, possibly Eddie Fisher would lose some of his amazing popularity. Although Eddie is a competent baritone, his voice has not developed classical range yet. Music lovers don't make the concentrated rush for Eddie's discs that they once made for Lanza's.

Eddie hopes to come to Hollywood and to make motion pictures. He is sorry for his behavior at the Mocambo. In the future he will be more circumspect. But right now he is riding the crest of his popularity. The whole world seems good, golden, and glorious. Teen-age girls outside the stage entrance of New York's Paramount Theatre are still writing on the walls in red crayon, "Eddie Fisher is the most."

Under these circumstances it probably doesn't seem too important to Eddie that he has ruffled Hollywood's sensitive feathers. Next time he will straighten out everything. And there undoubtedly will be a next time. Hollywood doesn't give up easily on money makers. END

---

what makes stanwyck tick?

(Continued from page 54) and got to know your business cold, you were a success. After that, there are no problems except staying a success—and that's no more a problem than walking a tightrope across Niagara Falls. But it helps—it does help—if you know one helluva lot about tightrope walking."

Miss Stanwyck paused, considered, stubbed out a cigarette, got a light for another, sat back in a modified lounge chair with the prim, straight-backed posture of a little girl whose mother has taught her to sit like a lady at all times, and considered some more. She was wearing a short, full skirt and a sweater, a hunk or two of casual jewelry and a somewhat furrowed look around the brow.

"No doubt," she said after a while, "I've gone on about this before. You might even call it one of my favorite go-on-abouters. But probably there's something to it. Look, you take a man, a young man—or a girl—who has been in your particular shop for, say, a year, and say to him suddenly: 'You are now our star salesman.' Or your star front man, or what have you. 'We will send out a barrage of letters and fanfare,' you say, 'announcing you as such. Thus customer resistance will be beaten to a pulp before you even show your face. From there on all you have to do is keep breathing.' Well, it isn't as easy as that. Or if it is—and once in a while it is—it shouldn't be. Where does the poor kid stand? He doesn't know—oh, shipping—he doesn't know production, he doesn't know the clerical end, he doesn't know tooling or purchasing. He just doesn't know. But he's Mr. Big. Without the background. So if he falls on his face, who's to blame? A person? A system? I don't know. But I'm not sure it's the best way in the world to run a railroad."

Nor even the second best, offered another person, muttering about balloons. A balloon was a little, limp nothing. You blew it up and it was a big, fat nothing. But it was still nothing.

"That's true and it isn't," said Miss S. "Because sometimes they shoot it full of helium instead of just air and it keeps rising. It's a funny thing, but the phony inflation of a personality does sometimes work, and all your arguments fall apart. You're right but you're wrong—and they can prove it. Pictures are no business for the scientific minds or the engineers. They'd go berserk in no time. There are stars, big stars, out here who have traveled to the moon on nothing but a gimmick—and more power to them. May I make a point of that, by the way? I wouldn't want you to think that as one of the busy beavers myself, I envy or—or deplore success of any kind. That's not Girl Scout talk; it's true. I like to see it happen, whether it's rigged to a gimmick or what they call in the front office, genius. But you have to feel sorry for the youngsters who haven't got genius or a gimmick either, because then there's nothing left to fall back on but the things in the middle—some talent, a capacity for hard work, genuine ambition. And those things, all three together, aren't common. And even if the kid does have them all he's pretty vulnerable to premature publicity."

Vulnerable how?

"The talent's vulnerable because it's brought along too fast, like a flashy young fighter being overmatched. I could name you names, but what would it prove? Please don't conjecture. I'm not talking about Marilyn Monroe, for instance. She's trying hard to leave the launching phase of her publicity behind her and she's developing into a fine comedienne. She's really ambitious. I'm coming to that. All right. The capacity for work is blunted by a kind of surface success being handed to you before you know what work is. You see? A youngster makes two pictures, has umpty-ump magazine stories written about him, gets the A-treatment at Mocambo and he's in. Without working. So why work? And in a little while, when he's out again, he won't know why and perhaps he's incapacitated from ever learning, which is even worse. He's been a star, even if he wasn't really one. What is there after that?

"And ambition. By ambition, I mean wanting, truly wanting, to act, not simply to be an actor, a star. There's a world of difference. One wants in his heart and in his mind to learn to move an audience. The other wants only to sign autographs and be pointed out in nightclubs. That's not an ambition, it's a daydream. What the second wants may come to the first in the natural, healthy order of events. But the second should never leave home. They start with nothing, seek nothing and will get nothing."

MISS STANWYCK, as the foremost exponent of the husky, breathless, catch-in-the-throat delivery, has a bit of a gimmick of her own, but on her it looks incidental. Now in her twenty-second year of unquestioned stardom, she has incited inestimable millions of people to tears, wrath and the deepest sort of male breathing (e.g., Double Indemnity, in which Miss S. portrayed a trollop so artfully as to make the Johnston Office uncertain whether to write a new rule or just wash its hands of the whole business). For such undeviating polish, Miss Stanwyck has a word of her own, which covers all the adjectives in splendidly succinct fashion. She necessarily does not apply it to herself—although it certainly does apply—but to such highly respected colleagues as Shirley Booth, Thelma Ritter, Clifton Webb, Bette Davis, Ingrid Bergman, Ralph Bellamy and many others. The word is "pro."

"It says everything," avers Miss Stanwyck. "There are the pros and the non-pros. The pros have it. They are the actors. One of the classic examples here in pictures is Bill Holden. I'm prejudiced, sure. The Holdens are dear friends. But Bill did it the slow way, the sure way, the quiet way. He had good pictures and fair ones and bad ones. The bad ones got him down. I told him to forget it and learn from them what he could. He would have anyway, but I told him. He plugged ahead, another beaver like me. Bobby-soxers didn't mob him. He didn't get umpty-thousand letters a month before he'd opened his mouth on a screen. But he learned and he grew. Now look at him, this wonderful run of great pictures, beginning with Stalag 17—and you won't mind my mentioning Executive Suite? That's what I'm talking about. Bill can be around forever if he wants to, just because he built and was built from the bottom instead of the top. It can be cruel the other way around and sometimes needlessly so. I'm not trying to tell the masterminds how to run their business, because they know how. But what can be good for the business can be bad, very bad, for the player. I have no reforms. It's the way it's done. The rules of the jungle didn't come from Frank Merriwell. But, now and then to survive you've got to be good and tough. Or tough and good."

Well, who, for example, had been clawed and survived?

"Bob Taylor was one," said Miss Stanwyck without breaking stride. "He had this 'Pretty Boy' label pasted on him. Girl fans hiding under the bed. It was nonsense and all the wrong kind. It antagonized people more than anything else. It almost knocked Bob cold. He'd come home some nights and— Well, that's beside the point. But he stuck with it. Because he's an actor, a good actor, and now he has proved it. But I don't think those days were easy."

Miss Stanwyck would please excuse it, but there had been reports that—

"No," she said sharply. "We're good friends again. At last. It took some doing. But—no. A flat and final no. I am good and sick of conjecture, too. Conjecture is the cheapest thing in the world. We'll eat dinner together or go out to a nightclub, and yackety-yackety-yack. People simply don't know what they're talking about. I know what I know; Bob knows what he knows. They don't."

But a partial reconciliation had been affect—?

"I don't know what you call a reconciliation. We've gone back to getting on well, that's what I'm trying to say. And that's all."

But even that much had not been easy?

"Easy? It was terrible. For a year I was so bitter, I—I— Well, I don't know. Bob wanted to be friends right along. Not me. Then gradually— Well, he's a nice guy to be with. Always was. You've got me off the track, though. My point was that Bob was exposed to cheap publicity and ridicule, and survived it. Not many do. The ones that can survive are the good ones. Vic Mature. He got off to a bumpy start. Too fast, too bumpy. The beautiful hunk of man and so forth. It might have seemed great then but he knows better now. But Vic got by it, too, because he's a fine actor and he's proved it and it can't be denied. But take those two and only a handful of others, and I can't name you a single player who was victimized—and I do mean victimized—by freak promotion who's up there today. Up there solid, I mean. It just doesn't do them any good."

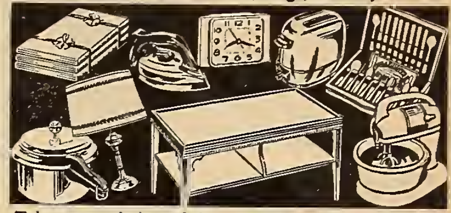
THE CAUSE of Miss Stanwyck's decision to divorce Robert Taylor after more than eleven years of marriage is not, of course, wholly unknown, but neither are any of the guesses notably documented or authorized. A close friend of Miss Stanwyck, queried point blank on the subject, has said with a kind of tired frankness: "Certainly I know the answer. Why should I lie to you? I'm one of the very few who do. And to provide it to you or to anyone else would be an inexcusable invasion of privacy. And that's about the truest statement you can hear or read on the matter."

As to whether Miss Stanwyck has a new male interest, the reply is substantially the same. That portion of her private life open to general survey these days does not tend to encourage any reckless chitchat about romance. When she's not working—which is rare—she's up at about eight-thirty in the morning, in her pool by eight-forty-five and tearing into a breakfast steak by nine. A little later she'd just as soon play tennis if her partner will swear not to hit her over the head with his racket, because Miss Stanwyck's tennis isn't what it once was. Nor her golf. In fact, her golf never was. Golf looked like a cinch to Miss Stanwyck after tennis, merely a problem of hitting a little old stationary object from here over to there. But first there was the problem of hitting the little old stationary object in the first place and that was the one she failed to master. Always raising her head to gaze with the look of eagles down the fairway to see where the ball had gone, which was nowhere, largely because she'd raised her head.

"In golf," Miss Stanwyck has snarled on

GET $50—$100—$250 IN FAMOUS BRAND PRODUCTS—FREE

Sheets, Toasters, Towels, Rugs, Mixers, etc.



Take your choice of hundreds of nationally advertised products: Bates Bedspreads, Westinghouse Vacuum Cleaners, Cannon Sheets and Towels, Dormeyer Mixers, St. Mary's Blankets, Holmes & Edwards Silver, Blue Ridge Dinnerware—furniture, wearing apparel, watches, cameras—all these and many, many more—yours FREE! You don't pay a cent for anything!

FREE—BIG NEW 164-PAGE FULL COLOR CATALOG

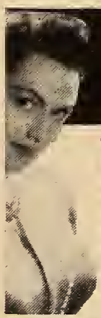
You can have any of the fine merchandise shown in our beautiful, big Catalog: $50 - $100 - $250 worth or more, simply by being Secretary of a Popular Club you help your friends form. It's fun! Thousands are refurnishing and redecorating their homes this new, easy way—without spending any money. You can, too!

NOTHING TO BUY—NOTHING TO SELL
Write Today—No Obligation

Mail the coupon today for the Free Catalog and select the merchandise you want. See how easily you can get it without a penny of cost. No obligation.

Popular Club Plan, Dept. B-823
Lynbrook, New York
Please send me FREE CATALOG and tell me how I may get the nationally advertised merchandise shown without cost.

Name ....
Address ....
City..................... Zone.... State........



"HONEY BUMPS"
Newest Hollywood Rage!
BUST PROFILES

You can't have a full-busted figure? Nonsense! Honey Bumps perform bosom miracles! They're softest, aerated, non-crushable, washable "foam-tone." Worn inside your bra and "real as life." Can't slip or slide—they cup and blend perfectly with the curves of your body because they're anatomized—looking exactly like Nature's own. No embarrassing store fittings.

HAVE MOVIE STAR GLAMOUR INSTANTLY. A NEW BUST PROFILE... PREPAID ONLY $3

Order today. State size . . . A (small) B (flat) C (sagging). Prepaid in plain wrapper, $3.00 per pair or C.O.D. $3.00 plus postage. "Honey Bumps," Dept. M, 5864 Hollywood Blvd., Hollywood 28, Calif.

CHOOSE A CAREER AS AN INFANT NURSE

GOOD PAY, BIG DEMAND FIELD

Over 1,250,000 more births in U.S. each year than 10 years ago. Help fill this growing demand for nurses in this pleasant, well-paid work. Prepare at home in spare time. Classes supervised by REGISTERED NURSES. Simplified, practical course; modern methods. High school diploma not needed. Write now for FREE book and sample lesson pages. No obligation.

FREE Book! Lesson Pages

Wayne School of Practical Nursing
2525 Sheffield, Dept. K-90, CHICAGO 14, ILL.

DECORATE YOUR TOILET SEAT

12 Colorful Designs. Brighten up your bathroom. Designs for any home. Modern, Circus, Farm House, His & Hers, and many others. Apply these designs yourself—easy as decals—on all 4 sides of your toilet seat. Water and acid proof. Won't rub off. Handy "Dear John" DO-IT-YOURSELF Kit only $4.95 with simple instructions to fit all toilet seats. Your monogrammed initials to match, add $1.00. Or send for complete hand decorated seat $24.50. Guaranteed satisfaction. Order from "Dear John," Dept. A-9 — 459 No. Canon Drive, Beverly Hills, California. Send 10¢ for illustrated catalog.

Join America's fastest-growing audience!

ABC

Everyday millions of new listeners are setting their dials to the ABC* network for two of the most talked about programs on radio . . .

MODERN ROMANCES

Thrilling, intimate dramas . . . situations like those you might have faced yourself . . . taken from the pages of Modern Romances.

HOLLYWOOD STARWAY

Exciting moments from the lives of Hollywood's greats — true dramatizations adopted by the editors of Modern Screen magazine.

listen
in daily monday through friday

you too, will soon be saying "wonderful entertainment!"

*Check your newspaper for local time and station.

occasion, "either you hit it and can't see it or you see it and can't hit it."

Evenings, she likes to have friends in for music and conversation but absolutely no word games like Scrabble. They set Miss S.'s teeth on edge. Maybe an early movie with her close friend and personal publicist, Helen Ferguson, one-time screen star who now operates a glossy public relations salon in Beverly Hills. Maybe reading until four A.M. Miss Stanwyck is an omnivorous reader, who'll sail happily through anything from a pocket whodunit to Arnold Toynbee. She has no taste for nightclubs and will go only to hear a favorite entertainer—and then only to the early show. Then back to West Los Angeles as fast as her very fast car and the Los Angeles ground rules will permit.

She is a woman to whom "order" is a word with obsessive overtones. She clocks her engagements and diversions to split seconds and is actually pre-punctual for dates. "You wouldn't think," a friend has said, "of dropping in on her without calling first. It would shatter her schedule." With intimates she is utterly relaxed; with strangers or casual acquaintances, shy but with a shyness she contains well under surface volubility and a trace of discernible tension. Like so many persons with neat minds, she is a furious ashtray emptier. Let more than one-and-a-half butts sully a tray the size of a wagon wheel, and swoosh! It is emptied, wiped and in position for the next trip.

THAT IS Miss Stanwyck away from a studio. When she works—she works.

Ruby Stevens, as the kids around Broadway correctly called Miss Stanwyck in the latish Twenties, was born in Brooklyn one hot July 16, 1907, and was orphaned four years later. She did not, however, go to an orphanage or to any other charitable institution, no matter what you may have heard to the contrary. She was boarded out by her sister Mildred with various families. First she wanted to be a dancer like Isadora Duncan. Second, a missionary to China. Then she went back to Isadora again and at the distinctly tender age of thirteen, Ruby was hoofing on Broadway's Strand Roof.

In those days she was one of an inseparable triumvirate, of which the others were Mae Clarke, later to crack pictures herself, and Wanda Mansfield, today the widow of songwriter Walter Donaldson. While at liberty (a near-chronic condition then) the three hung around a tavern run by Billy LaHiff (whose niece got to be known here and there as Nancy Carroll) until Billy, apparently in self-defense, decided to get Ruby a job. Willard Mack, a top producer of the day, was the lad who took the chance and presently he had promoted Miss-Stanwyck-to-be from a chorus slot to a poignant and juicy role. This she performed right tastily and that was that and has been ever since. But while he was about it, Mr. Mack took care of her name. The story is that he was standing near an old playbill reading, "Jane Stanwyck in Barbara Frietchie." And that he just took one fast look, held out his hand and said, "Hello, Barbara Stanwyck." Well, it could have been like that.

The Noose ran a year in New York and led to Burlesque, a sad and tender play in which Miss Stanwyck and the late Hal Skelley sustained two performances which couldn't have been much better or more affecting. Then came Hollywood.

The roll of drums that accompanied Miss Stanwyck's entrance made the sort of noise that indicated that the drummer had gone out for a smoke. She tested for nine roles and got none of them. Her tenth time at bat found Director Frank Capra looking for someone for an item titled Ladies Of Leisure. Would Miss Stanwyck test? "No, thank you," said Miss Stanwyck. "I've already had some." According to Miss Stanwyck's official biography this moved Mr. Capra to hire her on the spot, and if that is not precisely so, it's too much trouble to check right now.

Ladies Of Leisure was a good picture (although two predecessors resisted the strongest deodorants with total success) and Miss Stanwyck, in it, a brilliant actress.

Nor has she been anything less since. Just—even in the misfires—better and better and better.

Such whole-hearted conscientiousness and application deserve a footnote. A few weeks ago Miss Stanwyck was asked, as she is frequently asked, if she hadn't had enough, if she wouldn't care to get out while she was on top and raise Herefords in Calabasas?

"Nope," she said. "Herefords and I aren't simpatico. Besides, I love to act."

Or return to the stage?

"Nope. Not enough variety. In this business it's always something different."

What, then, if she did slip, if recession, as it must to all, came to her?

"Slip and act at the same time."

And if the point came when she were forced to take character roles with sleazy, run-down studios?

"Try to make it the best character performance the sleazy, run-down studio ever had."

SALT OF THE EARTH

Lunching in the Astor Pharmacy one noon, I overheard the man next to me order a malted milkshake. To my surprise, he asked me to pass the salt and started to add it to the malt. I naturally took a second look at the man and saw that he was Frankie Laine. I must have looked pretty startled because he started to laugh—and then he paid my check!

Joan Fitzpatrick
New York, New York

NOT MENTIONED by Miss Stanwyck's current history, but an item of record nonetheless, is that before Taylor she had been married to Frank Fay, a superb master of ceremonies and later a gifted serious actor, but not a fellow of predictable behaviour. Miss Stanwyck once pronounced her own epitaph on this union.

She was asked if she wished to attend Harvey in New York, a spectacularly successful play in which Mr. Fay played in triumph an amiable souse opposite a non-existent, six-foot bunny.

"I think not," said Miss Stanwyck. "I've already seen all the rabbits Mr. Fay has to offer."

Miss Stanwyck, for all her perfectionism in the professional sense, is not one to raise much of a rumpus while her picture is in production. She raises it all beforehand and gets it out of the way. She's impatient of small talk, would as soon not use the telephone if it could be avoided and has managed somehow to channel her tensions into creative endeavor.

The chances are, moreover, that she is quietly really happy over your citation to her, via MODERN SCREEN. She likes to have accomplishment designated as such. END

through with love

(Continued from page 24) Wyman does not answer her phone."

On December 7, Louella reported their reconciliation. "Jane and Freddie have kissed and made up and I told them they were equally to blame. There were a few problems, but not important ones. It looks as if everything will be all right because they were holding hands when they left."

There it was again—hand holding. It fooled everybody except Jane's closest friends. They know her too well to be duped by a gesture. During the Christmas holidays she was as nervous as a cat in a cage. When her son Mike accidentally set the dining room on fire it was several days before Wyman got her feet back on the ground. Admittedly, a fire in the home is enough to upset anybody, but Jane was out when it happened and the fire was out by the time she got home. An exquisite table was damaged beyond repair and the ceiling was blackened. Mike was duly penitent, having only lighted the candles of a centerpiece to show the maid how pretty it was. There was no reason, under normal circumstances, for more emotion than downright remorse for the table. But Jane blew sky high and friends noted that she shook like a leaf at the slightest disturbance all through the holidays. There was even a rumor of a second blow up with Karger but if that was fact, it was kept from the press.

IT CAME to a head just after the start of the new year. Jane arranged to file for divorce, charging grievous mental suffering, and Freddie took his own action, filing for legal separation, to be followed by suit for divorce, charging mental cruelty.

"What's the matter?" Louella wanted to know.

"The same old thing. You know," replied Miss Wyman. "We just weren't able to work out a reconciliation. However, believe me, we parted very amicably. We both realized our problems couldn't be solved so we decided to go through with the divorce."

"Any chance of making up?" inquired Miss Parsons.

"Absolutely not," said Miss Wyman. The way she said it left no doubt.

Said Mr. Karger, "I don't want to say anything. I'd rather Jane made all statements. Anything she says is all right with me."

All of this conversation left unanswered the big question in any Hollywood divorce. Why?

Part of the answer might be found in a list of names by which Jane Wyman has been known in the past: Sarah Jane Fulks. Jane Durrell. Jane Wyman. Jane Futterman. Jane Reagan. Jane Karger. With this new divorce, she is asking to resume the legal name of Jane Wyman.

Obviously, this list shows a restless nature. She was born Sarah Jane Fulks but the rest of the names were taken on voluntarily. She called herself Jane Durrell when she came to Hollywood twenty years ago. Eventually, she became Jane Wyman. Some say the Wyman was acquired through an early marriage, but Jane has always denied it. The next, with Myron Futterman, ended with divorce in 1938 when Jane was twenty-four years old. She refuses to discuss this marriage or the one rumored to have taken place when she was in her teens. Two years after her divorce from Myron Futterman and a stormy romance with Tyrone Power, Jane married Ronald Reagan. Although this was a marriage blessed with a home and children and regular church attendance—all the things the books say will make a lasting marriage—it, too, came to an end after eight years.

Then came a four-year stretch in which Hollywood said it was worried about Wyman. She wasn't showing any signs of wanting to marry again, and Wyman, they said, was a girl who has to be married in order to be happy. There was a fiasco with a young man named Travis Kleefeld, a boy whose family had enough money to permit their son to play the Hollywood field. 'Trav' and Jane dated steadily and nightly and after an acquaintance of ten weeks became engaged. Three weeks later, when they became un-engaged, Jane explained the betrothal. Pressure from friends and from the press had led her to think a marriage with Kleefeld would be advisable. Those same pressures had influenced her to break her engagement.

This is a strange statement from a woman who takes marriage seriously. Such an attitude could not possibly stem from reason; it must necessarily have been emotional. There are those who insist that Jane's near-tumble into another mistake was the result of a rebound from Greg Bautzer. Mr. Bautzer is the man-about-town lawyer who has squired practically every glamour girl you can name, but married none of them. Each new fancy thinks she will be the one to land him, and each new fancy eventually learns the awful truth; i.e., Mr. Bautzer is not about to marry anybody.

WITH ALL this going on, small wonder Jane's friends worried about her. Most of them, along with all of Hollywood, were stunned by the restless Miss Wyman's marriage to Karger. Not that anyone disapproved. It was the suddenness of it. She had known him three months. She had rehearsed with him her musical numbers for Let's Do It Again. Fred Karger is an able musician, employed as a musical supervisor by Columbia Pictures when there is a musical film in the making. He comes from a family in comfortable circumstances. His father was a businessman; his mother had been in vaudeville. He and Jane seemed to have a great deal in common, and this time she didn't consult anybody. "When you're going to get married," she said, "you don't need opinions. You have your own." And so they went to Santa Barbara to be married, with Freddie's friend, Dick Quine, and Jane's hairdresser, Betty Lou Fredericks, as witnesses.

The marriage had a good chance. Both Jane and Freddie were very much in love. Both of them are thoroughly nice people. Jane's two children, Maureen and Mike, got along famously with Terry Karger, Freddie's daughter by his only previous marriage. Said the new Mrs. Karger: "It must have been a kind of providence that brought Freddie and me together. He not only thinks the way I do, I find myself agreeing with him as soon as we begin to discuss something." She was objective enough to refuse to live in the house she had shared with Ronnie. Following the breakup with Kleefeld she had said, "I would certainly never subject a new marriage to the pressure of living against an old background. You know how that can ruin things. I began to wonder where we would live—" With Karger there was no hesitation. They rented a house on Beverly Glen Boulevard. It was big enough to hold their collection of pianos (three) and children (three).

THEIR CAREERS went booming along. Jane made So Big the following summer and Magnificent Obsession the following fall. Freddie was out of Columbia with the fin-

More people eat more CHEEZ-IT than any other CHEESE CRACKER

GOOD any old time!

Ladies! here's big news
SPARE TIME MONEY

Just show charming Melville Frocks styles to friends. Gorgeous, latest dresses . . . big selection . . . low prices . . . FULLY GUARANTEED . . . for The American Woman

No experience needed. Get expensive Style Kit at no cost to you. Sell newest styled dresses, lovely lingerie, children's wear.

GET OWN DRESSES FREE

ACT NOW! If interested, send name, address, age, dress size TODAY to Mr. B. J. Melville, Pres.
THE MELVILLE CO., DEPT. 8421
CINCINNATI 25, O.

NEW TOWELS
LARGE SIZE! Assorted Colors. New! Not seconds. Money-back guarantee. Order Now! Supply limited. 12 for $1.00
TOWEL SHOP, Dept. 210, Box 881, St. Louis 1, Mo.

For BLONDES only!

New CREAMY Shampoo
Made at home... FRESH as you need it!
Takes only a minute—Washes Hair Shades Lighter Safely! Gives it a Wonderful Shine!

To help keep light hair from darkening and brighten faded hair, BLONDEX, the sensational new CREAMY Shampoo works 3 ways: Removes dull, dingy film that makes blonde hair old-looking—brings back flattering lightness—gives hair extra highlights and shine. Safe for children's delicate hair. Get BLONDEX today at any 10¢, drug and department stores.

HOLD

ON!

...just know your brands

instead

You won't have to dig down to the lining so often if you stay with the manufacturers' branded products that never fail you.

Buying what gives you consistent good value is the only real economy. Even if these products sometimes cost a little more, you're spending wisely and well. Nothing's a bargain that isn't good. So buy the brands that serve you faithfully. No mistakes, that way, no losses . . . no losses, and your money lasts longer.

Nobody's giving anything away, mind. Nothing's for nothing. But nothing's wasted either, when you are buying what is good.

Lots of more-for-your-money ideas in the ads this magazine carries.

BRAND NAMES FOUNDATION
INCORPORATED
A NON-PROFIT EDUCATIONAL FOUNDATION
37 WEST 57 STREET, NEW YORK 19, N. Y.

WANT VALUE? PATRONIZE THE DEALER WHO PROVIDES YOUR FAVORITE BRANDS

ish of Let's Do It Again but back to write the theme song for From Here To Eternity and back again at the end of the year for The Pleasure's All Mine. Between picture assignments he had his orchestra, a band much in demand for private parties.

The marriage should have gone along swimmingly. Instead, within the space of one year, something went terribly wrong.

At first there had been a tremendous physical attraction. If that were the sole basis of their love it would naturally lead to trouble. When attraction wanes the problems seem bigger than they do in the first flush of a marriage. Jane herself has said, "I'm madly impulsive. I do things and then I think, 'What did I do?' When I have that doubt I must pause and get things straightened out."

Did Karger's health have anything to do with it? It is said that his doctor has warned him against strenuous physical exertion because of his heart. Did this mean any loss of activity for Jane, who loves activity? After her marriage she said, "I'd like the chance to travel now. I've been too busy up to now." Instead they stayed home, pinned down to her work or his, and somewhat confined because of his health.

Was the financial situation too difficult to bear? In his capacity of musical supervisor, on and off, Karger's income did not nearly measure up to the sums brought in by his wife. There must have been the old Hollywood bugaboo of the husband who ran second as a breadwinner. The man whose wife receives a jeweled bangle as a Christmas gift from her agent, while the best he can afford is a nightgown, must always be in a difficult position.

The Kargers were on an eternal house hunt but they never bought a house. While house hunting one day the Kargers looked at a mansion priced at $96,000 and Mr. Karger said, "Now, this is one I can afford." This leads to speculation about Karger's attitude and income, and whose money the Kargers were living on.

It must be remembered that it is hard for any man to be married to a woman so prominent that he himself must be self-effacing. To be Mr. Wyman is no fun. It was embarrassing when the Kargers were invited to a party and Freddie Karger's band was invited to play for the same occasion. It happened several times and Karger had to turn down the job. This meant less income provided by him.

You will recall that Jane told Louella Parsons, "Believe me, we parted very amicably." 'Believe me' has the sound of a plea and suggests that the lady doth protest too much. It could not have been so very amicable when both parties, within the space of a few days, filed for divorce from each other.

Freddie Karger is, above all, a gentleman, and a gentleman does not file for divorce unless he is very, very angry, or unless he is a publicity hound. Karger is far from being a publicity hound. He has always been the kind of man who shrinks from the glare of the spotlight. So it must be assumed that Mr. Karger had reason to be angry.

A lawyer who handles many Hollywood divorces has said, "Whenever two people file simultaneously for a divorce, it's a sure bet their respective attorneys have had a finger on the failing pulse of the marriage. They know it is spoiling for a fight and when the moment comes for it to break into the open it becomes a race to see who can file first."

Karger's lawyer, Milton Cohen, said: "There will be no fight. All Mr. Karger is interested in is his freedom."

It would appear that Freddie Karger is a proud man who wants to live again in a house that belongs to him, that he is a man who believes in an old-fashioned marriage. And that Jane Wyman is a proud woman who is not going to give in to circumstances, a woman who admires a modern marriage. It is possible that she realizes that sooner or later such a marriage would reduce Karger to a man without self-respect. Perhaps, in a way, the divorce will be the best thing for both of them.

Karger might have had a better chance if he could have married Sara Jane Fulks. Jane Wyman has changed a great deal since her initiation into Hollywood. In the early days she was a bouncing blonde known by everyone from the gatemen on up. She was in love with life, merry and unspoiled by success. She wanted desperately to do a dramatic part rather than the chorus cutie bits that were handed her, and when she got her first crack at it, in Johnny Belinda, she walked away with an Oscar. They say this did something to her. She became inaccessible, aloof, and suddenly highstrung. In short, Jane Wyman fell victim to what ails most of its stars. She had so much that there was little left for her to want.

IT HAPPENED TO ME

At a party I once gave for the drama department students at the University of Miami, I tripped and fell down several steps and cut my face on a tray I was carrying. A guest named Bob came to help me clean the cut. I was about to wash it with tap water, when, remembering his Army medical experience, Bob stopped me. He looked over the contents of the medicine cabinet and chose some articles with which he made a dressing. My doctor later told me that Robert Horton had probably saved me from having an ugly scar on my face.

Nancy Chapman
New York, New York

This sort of thing lies coiled behind almost every Hollywood divorce. Divorces here are asked for and granted on the same grounds as in the rest of the country; adultery, alcoholism, mental cruelty, etc. But in Hollywood there is something else, something that doesn't go into court records. Many of the plaintiffs aren't aware of it themselves. It is a restlessness that underlies the lives of stars, an unhealthy restlessness that comes when there is nothing left to want. It comes, too, because a star is accustomed to having every wish granted, and when a mate refuses to agree with him or her, the star blows a gasket. When you are a movie star there is less inclination, to buckle down to working out disagreements than there is when you are a housewife dependent on your husband's weekly take-home pay.

Hollywood feels sorry for both Freddie and Jane. It was a good try, but it failed. Like every divorce, in its wake lie a lot of bitter memories, as well as the sweet ones that are even harder to bear.

We wish Freddie good luck. And we hope that Jane is not yet through with love, that she will find what she is looking for. END

marry the girl

(Continued from page 57) My Shelley says what's on her mind, what's in her heart.

"She was very much in love with this fellow. But after all, he's an actor. You know how actors are. The whole world revolves around them. Very selfish, these European men.

"My Shelley, she says what she means and she means what she says. At least she has a wonderful girl out of the marriage. Of course the baby from the nose up looks just like the father. But even so, she's a wonderful child. Not because she's my grandchild. Ask anyone. You just have to look at her and you know that she is a superior child."

In Milan Gassman heard Shelley's stipulations for a divorce: (a) $95,000, (b) marriage to Miss Ferrero, (c) abandonment of all visitation rights to his daughter. He clenched his teeth in anger, his face reddened and for a few moments he couldn't talk.

When he could, he exploded. "Absurd! Who ever heard of such a thing! She must be out of her mind. I don't object to her financial demands. But this business of not letting me see my own child is crazy.

"As for my marrying Miss Ferrero, why, that's absurd, too."

"Maybe you and Shelley will reconcile," a reporter suggested.

"Not likely," Gassman snapped. "Not after this."

"I am a friend of them both," interrupted Pietro Ardenzi, Gassman's manager, "and I will try to reconcile them. But many of these things Mrs. Gassman has said about her husband are not true. Not true. He has never used a publicity agent in the United States. Vittorio is a great artist. You cannot deny such a man the right to visit his child."

When Shelley read her husband's statement, she summoned reporters again and told them that she would fight tooth and nail and exhaust every legal possibility to retain complete custody of her child.

"Vittorio was too busy acting on the stage in Italy even to come to Los Angeles when Vittoria, our little girl, was born," she thundered. "Then he finally did come. He stayed with us for a couple of weeks, and in all that time, he played with her maybe for five minutes.

"It has always been his work—his work and himself—that mattered. Nothing else.

"Why, I had to throw his clothes out on our front lawn before he finally agreed to take out any life insurance. There isn't a judge living in America who would give him custody of the child after I get through testifying."

While Shelley was discussing the legal aspects of the case, her attorney in Los Angeles, foxy old Jerry Geisler was saying nothing. Instead, he drove down to the Superior Court House in Santa Monica and unobtrusively filed, on behalf of his excitable client, a suit for separate maintenance.

In that suit Shelley charges mental cruelty and agrees that her husband is entitled to reasonable visitation rights. She wants custody of the child, which is all right with Gassman.

The truth of the Shelley-Vittorio battle is that Anna Maria Ferrero had little to do with it, although she undoubtedly aroused Shelley's jealousy. Before Shelley left for Rome, she had a pretty good idea that her marriage was finished. She had battled with Gassman all over Beverly Hills, accusing him of selfishness, egoism, lack of consideration, conceit and a dozen or two additional inadequacies as a husband.

Most of all, she could not tolerate Vittorio's seemingly cold attitude toward their child, about whom she is completely daffy.

Gassman is not an emotional man. "I don't get excited," he once said. "I am logical and self-controlled. Shelley is just the opposite. I put my work first. A man does not throw away his life for love or the lack of love. My work dictates to me how I must live. My work, not my love.

"I always have been calm. I practice intellectual control. Other people say that show business is hectic, all mixed up. Not for me. I like to know what I am doing and what I am capable of doing.

"To me love does not mean childish things. It means companionship. But I cannot remake Shelley's personality, and she cannot remake mine."

Vittorio has another daughter, Paula, eight, by a previous marriage, and although she lives in Rome, Vittorio's headquarters, he sees relatively little of her. He is always working. As a member of his troupe put it, "He is married to the stage. He is not the perfect father."

Shelley tried to mask her feelings but when Vittorio failed to show up for the birth of their child last February she was badly hurt.

She felt in her heart that he no longer cared for her. Perhaps she was right. Apparently, she has always loved him infinitely more than he loved her. The sad part of it all is that she still loves him.

Perhaps by now they have reconciled or are planning to. Certainly it's not beyond them. Shelley will take her Vittorio on practically any basis, even one which permits him the privilege of being a part-time husband, which is exactly what he has been.

Shelley's lawyer, Jerry Geisler, admitted that "Shelley is still in love with that guy. I think she hoped for a reconciliation when she went to Italy. That was my understanding. But after she left this country in December I didn't hear from her.

"Not until the middle of January. Then she called from Rome and said, 'Go ahead with the suit. I want you to file it first thing Monday morning.' "

Gassman has said many times that Shelley, a great saleswoman, has tried to Americanize him too quickly.

"She wants me to dress like an American, to talk like an American, even to drive like an American. After all, I am a human being, entitled to retain my own nature.

"The demands of my work have kept me very busy. But in eighteen months I have spent $3250 in long distance calls to Shelley and more than $6500 in plane tickets. How much can you ask of a man?

"I cannot help it if the movies I have been in have been shot in Mexico and New York. I cannot tie myself to Shelley's apron strings.

"That I love our daughter just as much as Shelley does, I swear. I cannot get as emotional about her as Shelley does because that is just not my nature."

Shelley and Vittorio were an unlikely combination from the beginning. It is not true that Vittorio married the blonde bombshell merely to gain entrance to the United States and Hollywood. But perhaps their great love for each other wasn't quite that.

Shelley was ripe for marriage. For years she and Farley Granger had been involved in a phony love affair for publicity. She had really loved Marlon Brando and Liam O'Brien. Those loves came to nothing in 1950 and 1951. She had played according to their rules, and was left with memories, presumably not happy. The happier Shelley's professional life, the emptier her private one.

No other deodorant now asks women to Shave First!

Actual skin tests prove
YODORA SO "KIND" TO SENSITIVE SKIN
we can make this bold statement

FIRST... shave under arms. (For faultless grooming—ask your druggist for Yodora shaving booklet.)

THEN . . . apply Yodora immediately with complete confidence.*

We guarantee Yodora soothing to apply after shaving . . . gives day-long protection . . . won't harm finest fabrics, or your money back.

Replacement or Refund of Money · Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping · If not as advertised therein

If you suffer from skin irritations due to allergies or functional disorders, see your doctor.*

A McKesson Product

Accepted · Committee on Cosmetics · American Medical Association

YODORA your really soothing cream deodorant

FREE! FREE!

Photo of Your Favorite

MOVIE STAR

Big Bargain . . . NOT small pocket size, but LARGE, ACTUAL PORTRAIT. Also FREE Beautiful Catalog. FREE! Many additional pictures of popular stars on cover. FREE! Tells how to get HOME ADDRESSES, BIRTHDAYS and PHOTOS of STARS' HOMES. Send only 15c for handling. 2 photos for 25c. Rush to:

HOLLYWOOD FILM STAR CENTER
Box 2309, Dept. L-4, Hollywood 28, Calif.

TOWELS

12 Large Size Assorted Colors ONLY $1.00

Money Back Guarantee, Order Now!

MURRAY HILL HOUSE, Dept. 48-J
©52MHH 157 East 31st. St., New York 16, N. Y.
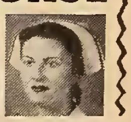
Dealers' Inquiries Invited



Make Money and Friends as a PRACTICAL NURSE

LEARN AT HOME—EARN WHILE LEARNING

FREE Nationally recognized resident school of practical nursing now offers approved training at home to women and girls to help fill waiting demand for nurses. Thousands needed at once. High school not necessary. No age limit. Sample Lesson Free. Rush name on 2c postcard.

POST GRADUATE HOSPITAL SCHOOL of NURSING
5B44 Auditorium Bldg., CHICAGO 5, ILL.

GIRLS 18-28 . . . BE AN AIRLINE HOSTESS

Trainees urgently needed by major airlines, earn top-flight pay, vacations, benefits! NOW, TRAIN IN YOUR HOME . . . for a career flying the airways to the glamour capitals of the world; Paris, London, Rio De Janeiro. Meet exciting and interesting air travelers, celebrities. Romance and adventure can now be yours.

DON'T WAIT, SEND FOR DETAILS NOW! FREE!!!

NATIONAL AIR INSTITUTE UNIT #10241
Hostess-Stewardess Division, Dept. D-3
International Airport, Los Angeles 45, Calif.
Name............ Age..........
Full Address..............

In November, 1951, when supposedly she was touring Europe with her "Farfel," her favorite name for Farley Granger, she left him and flew to Rome. Frank Lattimore, the English actor, introduced her to Vittorio.

He moved in quickly, with charm and tact. Poor Shelley's Hollywood romances had hardly prepared her for such an approach.

Gassman took Shelley to the Passeto, then to the Caballa, another wonderful little café on the banks of the Tiber. He introduced her to his mother and sister. Soulfully, he confessed that although he was separated, he was still married to the daughter of Italian actor Renzo Ricci. He told her about his seven-year-old daughter, Paula. He told her how he had been drafted into Mussolini's army. It wasn't long before Shelley was giving out with her biography. They stayed up until five-thirty A.M.

They spent one week together in Rome. In that one week, Shelley fell for Vittorio like an atom bomb. When she got back to the States, she sent him a cable: "I'm lonely and I'm sending you a kiss."

"I'm lonely, too," he cabled back, "and I'm returning your kiss." Then he walked down to the TWA office in Rome and got a reservation on a flight to Los Angeles.

When he turned up in Hollywood, Shelley was overjoyed.

"But I can only stay six days," Vittorio said.

"You mean you flew six thousand miles just to spend less than a week here?"

Vittorio nodded.

"It must be love," Shelley cracked. And she really felt that way. She took Vittorio around to all her friends, showed him off with great pride. Before he left to make a film in Spain, they discussed his impending annulment and their subsequent marriage—by proxy in Mexico, or a regular marriage in Mexico. Shelley wasn't sure of the details. "All I know is that I'm going to marry him."

Vittorio is sharp and observant. In his first week in Hollywood he learned a lot about Shelley. He saw that she was aggressive and verbose in order to hide her insecurity. He learned that childhood rejection lay behind her unbridled ambition. Stories of her childhood in St. Louis and Brooklyn meant relatively little to him but he was impressed because Hollywood respected Shelley as an actress. Maybe she was sloppy; maybe her posture and her frankness left much to be desired. But certainly she was a grade A actress. To Vittorio that was 90%. He loves talent.

Shelley was nominated for an Academy Award for her performance in A Place In The Sun and that, too, added lustre.

Vittorio was sure he was right in obtaining his annulment. Presently Shelley joined him in Italy. Then they flew to Hollywood and when the annulment came through, down to Juarez, Mexico, where they were married. This was in April, 1952.

People are optimistic everywhere, but especially in Hollywood. They believe that marriage changes the partners involved. It doesn't change their basic personalities, although after her marriage Shelley kept saying, "I'm a new person, a new woman. Honestly. You have no idea how much I've changed," she elaborated. "I guess it's because I'm in love with an extraordinary man. He's given me security. For the first time in my life I have security.

"I'm not so frantic any more. I wasn't upset when I didn't win the Academy Award. Two years ago I would have cried my eyes out. Now I just don't care. I see everything in its proper perspective.

"Remember how scared I used to be about money, how frightened when they took me off salary? Now, I don't worry. I have someone to take care of me, and he's just wonderful. In all the time we've been together we haven't had a single fight."

Soon the fights began. Shelley tried to get Vittorio to take an American haircut. "Those Italian barbers cut hair so funny," she said. Vittorio told her to mind her own hair.

She said she loved Italian food and was going to specialize in learning how to prepare it. Vittorio said, "Never mind. I really prefer French cooking."

In a little while it became obvious that he preferred Italy to California. He agreed to sign a contract at MGM but only if he could have six months free to return to Europe and his stock company.

Shelley, of course, went all-out for her new husband. She praised him to the skies. She took advertisements in the trade papers. She told everyone who would listen that he was the greatest actor Italy had ever produced. She clung to him with a desperation that was almost pitiful, as if she secretly knew that her time and her happiness with him was limited.

There were many quarrels. Presently, she was pregnant. It was a miserable pregnancy, and most of the time Vittorio was out of the country. When the child was finally born, she almost choked to death and had to be put into an incubator. Shelley needed help and encouragement and a husband. But the husband was 6,000 miles away.

"Shelley is a mature young woman," Gassman told a reporter. "I know she will understand. I will be in Hollywood in a few weeks." His encouragement was entirely by telephone.

When Vittorio arrived last spring and saw his daughter, Vittoria Gina, for the first time, he was pleased but not overdemonstrative. Shelley was bitterly hurt. In a voice that might have been heard in Cucamonga she gave vent to her feelings. Vittorio began to look at timetables. He went to Switzerland after he finished Rhapsody with Elizabeth Taylor. Then he told Shelley he had to return to Rome. She recognized an awful truth—that her husband seemed always anxious to leave.

Hollywood suspected last December that the marriage was almost over, but Shelley publicly refused to admit its failure. After Vittorio left town she insisted that their relationship was excellent and that she would follow him in a few weeks and that they would co-star in a picture, Mambo.

Then, just before she left for Rome, she asked Jerry Geisler to draw up separation papers and hold them until she telephoned from Europe. If she didn't phone, everything was fine. She and Vittorio had worked out their differences. If she did phone then Geisler would file the suit.

On January 16, the call from Shelley Winters in Rome came through. END

DRESS REHEARSAL

When the Shelley Winters-Vittorio Gassman separate maintenance suit comes up in the California Superior Court, it is going to be a vindictive battle. But the dialogue will be clever. Here is a prelude to that battle staged by the two participants in Rome a few weeks ago. Point for point, Shelley commented on Vittorio's remarks.

GASSMAN: Unfortunately, it is all over. Once two lovers have separated their friendship is finished.

SHELLEY: Bunk. We were never two people in love. I was in love with him. And he was in love with him.

GASSMAN: Divorce is now the only possible solution.

SHELLEY: He can have a divorce when he agrees to support our baby. Until then it will remain a separation.

GASSMAN: In letters to each other almost six months ago, Shelley and I agreed upon a divorce.

SHELLEY: Baloney. He asked me for a divorce when the baby was 11 weeks old. I told him I'd come to Italy with the baby and that we'd try to make the marriage work. Then I came and found he had another interest. He was the one who asked for the divorce. I loved the guy. But now all of that is in the past tense.

GASSMAN: From now on I am more interested in art than finance.

SHELLEY: That's a hot one. I got two Academy Award nominations and now I'm more interested in finance.

GASSMAN: I will never, however, drop my rights as a good father to my 10-month old daughter.

SHELLEY: As a good father he should know his baby is now 11 months old.

GASSMAN: I want people to know that it was only after a long series of quarrels that I asked for a divorce.

SHELLEY: We were never together long enough for a long series of anything. The only time he stayed at my house was when he was making a movie—and probably only because he wanted to save rent.

GASSMAN: I must say something in defense of Anna Maria Ferrero. I have only a sincere friendship for this girl.

SHELLEY: Then why did he ask me to leave him because—and these are his own words—he had "an important sentimental relationship with the girl." I insist that he must marry her. Something must be done to compel him to treat her as a human being instead of a toy. I cannot blame her for what's happened, and I don't. But the truth is that their affair goes back a long time. I'm no dummy and I know they were constantly seen together last summer at the film festival in Venice.

GASSMAN: From now on, my main interest will be the theatre, not the movies.

SHELLEY: That's great. As you probably know, Metro dropped his option.

GASSMAN: A lot has been said about my not being in Hollywood when our baby was born. That was because I was working in a play here in Rome.

SHELLEY: He asked me to stay out of Italy because he didn't want to be bothered with a pregnant woman. As soon as he had a picture offer he dropped his play like hot cakes and hustled right over.

Shampoo this diamond sparkle
into your hair with new

DIAL SHAMPOO

© ARMOUR AND COMPANY

Only Dial Shampoo with Hexachlorophene gives this complete cleanliness

Now a new kind of shampoo! This wonderful new shampoo with Hexachlorophene gives your hair clean-smelling freshness and a diamond sparkle!

You've never been able to get such complete cleanliness with ordinary shampoos. You'll like the new squeeze bottle, too – it's unbreakable and so easy to use!

No other shampoo gives this glorious Dial beauty – yet leaves your hair so easy to manage!

New beauty comes naturally with Dial Shampoo because it leaves your hair dazzling clean, dancing with light. Wouldn't you love to try it – today?

For fun and laughs watch Pride of the Family and Your Show of Shows on TV every week.

Donna Atwood AMERICA'S NO. 1 "QUEEN OF THE ICE"

Dazzling star of the Ice Capades of '54,
"Greatest Show On Ice", says:

"I LIKE
CAMELS—
YOU WILL, TOO!"

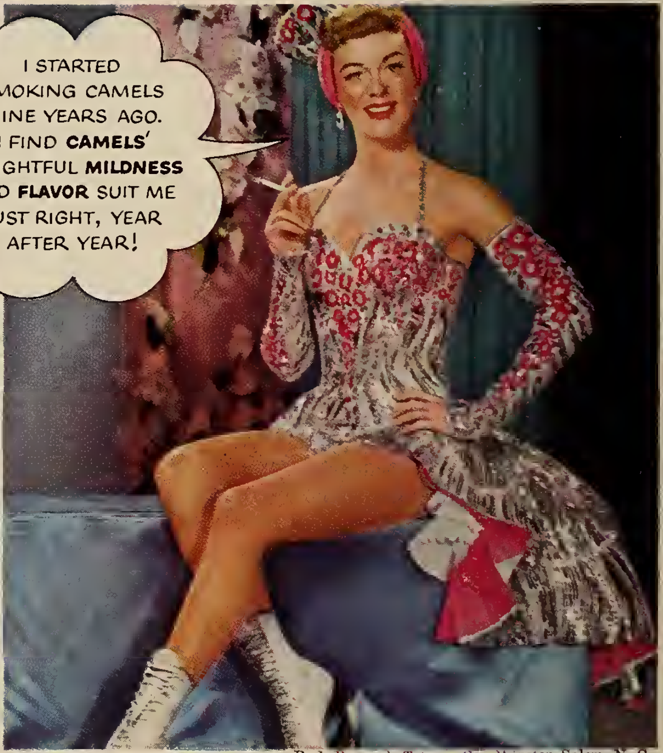
SHE LEAPS...

SHE GLIDES...

SHE DANCES...

SHE SPINS...

SHE SMOKES CAMELS!



I STARTED SMOKING CAMELS NINE YEARS AGO. I FIND CAMELS' DELIGHTFUL MILDNESS AND FLAVOR SUIT ME JUST RIGHT, YEAR AFTER YEAR!

R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., Winston-Salem, N. C.

AMERICA'S NO. 1 CIGARETTE...

for Mildness, for Flavor...

Camels agree with more people than any other cigarette!

LIKE Donna Atwood — like men and women smokers everywhere — you rate the cigarette that rates tops in America for mildness and flavor...Camels! Yes, Camels lead all other brands in popularity—by billions. You owe it to yourself to try Camels for 30 days . . . see how much pure pleasure you've been missing. See how well Camels agree with you!

MAKE THE 30-DAY CAMEL MILDNESS TEST

Only your own 30-day test can tell you best which cigarette is best for you!

AMERICA'S GREATEST MOVIE MAGAZINE

modern screen

APR 15 195

AY 20c

DELL
MAGAZINE

GABLE AND HIS GIRLS

by

LOUELLA PARSONS

THE LIBRARY OF CONGRESS
SERIAL RECORD
APR 28 1954

MARILYN AND JOE:

Who turned love's dream into a free-for-all?

Esther Williams

No wonder so many women are changing to Camay!

THERE'S

COLD CREAM

NOW IN

CAMAY

"Such wonderfully luxurious complexion care!"

Lovely Camay Bride, Mrs. Charles T. Jackson, Jr., says, "I changed to Camay with cold cream the minute I heard about it. Now, after using it for months and months, I can say it's the most wonderful beauty soap I've ever used!"

WOMEN EVERYWHERE love Camay with cold cream—extra luxury at no extra cost! And Camay is the only leading beauty soap that contains this precious ingredient.

TRY IT YOURSELF! Whether your skin is dry or oily, Camay with cold cream will leave it feeling exquisitely cleansed and refreshed. In your daily Beauty Bath, too, you'll enjoy Camay's famous skin-pampering mildness, satin-soft lather, and delicate fragrance. There's no finer beauty soap made!

NOW MORE THAN EVER . . . THE SOAP OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN

APR 15 1954

B 469013

Now...a tooth paste that protects your teeth from sweets

Enjoy sweets...then use new Ipana with WD-9 to inhibit tooth-decay acids*

Now you can eat the sweets you like—the sweets you need for a balanced diet—and stop worrying about unnecessary cavities.

Now, with new white Ipana containing acid-inhibitor WD-9, you can guard your teeth against decay acids—formed when sweets and other carbohydrates team up with bacteria in your mouth.

For WD-9 in Ipana's exclusive new formula is one of the most effective ingredients known to prevent the formation of these tooth-decay acids.

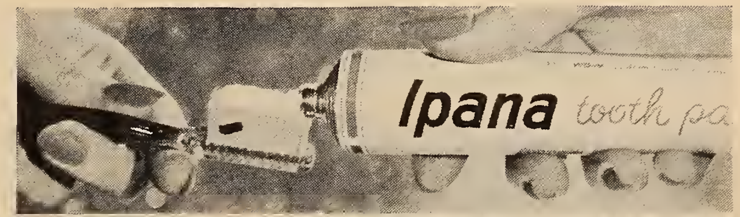
To get the best results from new Ipana, use it regularly after eating—particularly after sweets. Thus it acts before tooth-decay acids can do their damage.

Brushing with new Ipana after eating really works. A 2-year clinical test with hundreds who ate all the sweets they wanted proved that brushing this way can prevent most tooth decay.

So remember, while no dentifrice can stop all cavities—you can protect teeth from sweets with new white Ipana containing WD-9.

Enjoy your sweets and protect your teeth with Ipana®

Your youngsters will love it, too. Ipana's wonderful new minty flavor actually encourages children to brush teeth. No strong, medicinal taste. But new Ipana with WD-9 makes your mouth so fresh and clean that even one brushing can stop most unpleasant mouth odor all day long.



PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

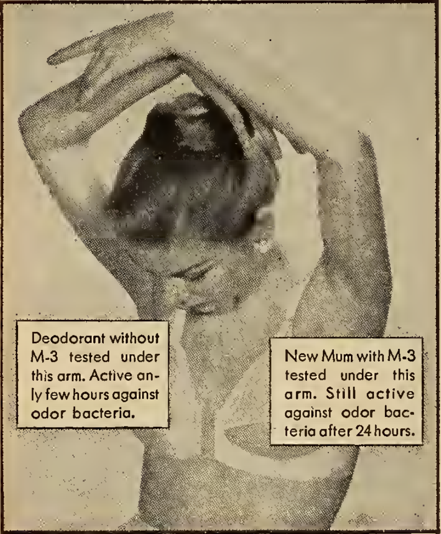
New white IPANA with Acid-Inhibitor WD-9

NEW!

Doctor's deodorant discovery safely*

STOPS ODOR ALL DAY LONG

New Mum with M-3 won't irritate normal skin or damage fabrics



Deodorant without M-3 tested under this arm. Active only few hours against odor bacteria.
New Mum with M-3 tested under this arm. Still active against odor bacteria after 24 hours.

Actual underarm tests by doctors prove new Mum with M-3 protects against bacteria that cause perspiration odor—far longer than the ordinary deodorant tested.

1. *Exclusive deodorant based originally on doctor's discovery, now contains long-lasting M-3.

2. Stops odor all day long because invisible M-3 clings to your skin—keeps on destroying odor bacteria a full 24 hours. Just use daily.

3. Non-irritating to normal skin. Only leading deodorant containing no strong chemical astringents—will not block pores.

4. Won't rot or discolor fabrics—certified by American Institute of Laundering.

5. Delicate new fragrance. Creamier texture—new Mum won't dry out in the jar.

6. Gentle, safe, dependable—ideal for sanitary napkins, too. Get new Mum today.

NEW MUM®

cream deodorant with long-lasting M-3

A PRODUCT OF BRISTOL-MYERS

MAY, 1954

AMERICA'S GREATEST MOVIE MAGAZINE

modern screen

stories

PETE'S PAT (Peter Lawford) .... by Susan Trent 31
GABLE AND HIS GIRLS (Clark Gable) .... by Louella Parsons 32
THEY'RE ALL CRAZY! (Jane Russell) .... by Steve Cronin 34
YOU GOTTA ELEVATE! (Robert Wagner) .... by Jack Wade 36
WHO TURNED LOVE'S YOUNG DREAM INTO A FREE-FOR-ALL? (Marilyn Monroe) .... by Alice Finletter 38
MITZI'S MIRACLE (Mitzi Gaynor) .... by Imogene Collins 42
TOWARDS THE LIGHT .... by Jeff Hunter 45
DOCTOR'S WIFE (Ann Blyth) .... by Marva Peterson 46
ACT OF LOVE (Burt Lancaster) .... by Alice Hoffmann 50
ONLY HER HUSBAND KNOWS (Esther Williams) .... by Thelma McGill 52
GOING . . . GOING . . . GONE! (Dale Robertson) .... by William Barbour 56
"JUST THE FACTS, MA'AM" (Jack Webb) .... by Richard Moore 58 LOVELY TO LOOK AT (Grace Kelly) .... by Louis Pollock 60

featurettes

ROMANCE OF THE YEAR (June Haver-Fred MacMurray) 12
I LOVE YOU—TODAY (Corinne Calvet-John Bromfield) 14
C'EST SI BON (Ginger Rogers) 65
THIS TIME FOR REAL? (Piper Laurie-Dick Contino) 78
IN RITA'S FOOTSTEPS? (Gene Tierney) 87
PROFESSIONAL HUSBAND (Jane Russell-Richard Egan) 91 LETTER FROM TOKYO (Marilyn Monroe) 96

departments

THE INSIDE STORY 4
LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD NEWS 6
TV TALK 16
JUST FOR THE RECORDS .... by George Frazier 18
MOVIE REVIEWS .... by Florence Epstein 22

On the Cover: Color portrait of Esther Williams, now appearing in MGM's Jupiter's Darling, by Jack Albin. See page 75 for other photo credits.

CHARLES D. SAXON
editor

DURBIN HORNER
executive editor

CARL SCHROEDER
western manager

PAIGE LOHR, story editor
BARBARA J. MAYER, assistant editor
KATIE ROBINSON, western editor
FERNANDO TEXIDOR, art director
BILL WEINBERGER, art editor
BOB BEERMAN, staff photographer
BERT PARRY, staff photographer
RUTH RAKOW, research editor

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS

Changes of address should reach us five weeks in advance of the next issue date. Give both your old and new address, enclosing if possible your old address label.

POSTMASTER: Please send notice on Form 3578 and copies returned under Label Form 3579 to 263 Ninth Ave., New York 1, New York

MODERN SCREEN, Vol. 48, No. 6, May, 1954. Published monthly by Dell Publishing Company, Inc. Office of publication at Washington and South Aves., Dunellen, N. J. Executive and editorial offices, 261 Fifth Avenue, New York 16, N. Y. Dell Subscription Service: 10 West 33rd St., New York 1, N. Y. Chicago advertising office, 221 No. LaSalle St., Chicago, Ill. Los Angeles advertising and editorial offices, 8701 West 3rd Street, Los Angeles, California. George T. Delacorte, Jr., President; Helen Meyer, Vice-Pres.; Albert P. Delacorte, Vice-Pres. Published simultaneously in the Dominion of Canada. International copyright secured under the provisions of the Revised Convention for the Protection of Literary and Artistic Works. All rights reserved under the Buenos Aires Convention. Single copy price 20c in U. S. A. and Possessions, and Canada. Subscriptions in U. S. A. and Canada $2.00 one year; $3.50 two years; $5.00 three years; Foreign, $3.00 a year. Entered as second class matter September 18, 1930, at the post office at Dunellen, N. J., under Act of March 3, 1879. Copyright 1954 by Dell Publishing Company, Inc. Printed in U. S. A. The publishers accept no responsibility for the return of unsolicited material. Names of characters used in semi-fictional matter are fictitious—if the name of any living person is used it is purely a coincidence. Trademark No. 301778.

ROMANCE...

RAPTURE...

"RHAPSODY"

In thrilling color by
TECHNICOLOR
with all the romance of Paris, St. Moritz and the French Riviera... and the popular music of the world's greatest composers!

"I must possess the man I love...heart, body and soul!"

M-G-M's "Rhapsody" starring

ELIZABETH TAYLOR

in her most daring role as a gilded girl obsessed with insatiable desire!

VITTORIO GASSMAN
JOHN ERICSON
LOUIS CALHERN

MGM 30th ANNIVERSARY JUBILEE

Screen Play by FAY AND MICHAEL KANIN • Adaptation by RUTH AND AUGUSTUS GOETZ • Based on the Novel "Maurice Guest" by Henry Handel Richardson
Music Conducted by Johnny Green • Piano Solos Played by Claudio Arrau • Violin Solos Played by Michael Rabin
Directed by CHARLES VIDOR • Produced by LAWRENCE WEINGARTEN
AN M-G-M PICTURE

Ich muss Tampax haben

私はタンパークスほしい

Je désire Tampax

Quiero Tampax

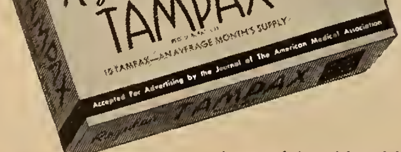
They all mean

"I want Tampax"

Yes, women all over the world – from Capetown to California, from Sumatra to Saskatchewan – want Tampax and only Tampax. This modern internal sanitary protection is not only sold to millions of American women, but it's distributed in 75 other countries as well.

How could this product – unknown 25 years ago – have achieved such outstanding popularity in such a relatively short space of time? Because Tampax is really what women want. They like the way it eliminates belts, pins and bulky external pads. (It's worn internally.) They like the fact that it can't be seen or felt, once it's in place. They like its easy disposability, and they particularly like the way Tampax prevents odor from forming.

Tampax was invented by a doctor. It consists of compressed surgical cotton in throwaway applicators. It can be used by any normal woman. And whether you live in Paris, France, or Paris, Kentucky, you can get Tampax at drug or notion counters in 3 absorbency-sizes: Regular, Super, Junior. Tampax Incorporated, Palmer, Mass.



Sanitary Protection Worn Internally
Regular
TAMPAX
FOR MORE ABSORBENCY SUPER TAMPAX
FOR WANING DAYS JUNIOR TAMPAX
10 TAMPAX—AN AVERAGE MONTH'S SUPPLY
Accepted for Advertising by the Journal of The American Medical Association
TAMPAX

Accepted for Advertising
by the Journal of the American Medical Association

THE INSIDE STORY

Here's the truth about the stars—as you asked for it. Want to spike more rumors? Want more facts? Write to THE INSIDE STORY, Modern Screen, 8701 W. Third St., Los Angles 48, Cal.

Q. Stewart Granger is supposed to be such a he-man. How come he was invalided out of the British Army?
—T.E., New York, N. Y.

A. Stomach ulcer.

Q. Is it true that Bob Wagner and Dan Dailey double date, and that Dan taught Wagner everything he knows about women?
—H.C., Salinas, Calif.

A. No.

Q. I've been told that Red Skelton is impossible to live with, impossible to work for. How much of this is true?
—B.Y., Chicago, Ill.

A. A lovable character, Skelton is nevertheless eccentric and difficult to live with.

Q. Is Jackie Gleason a tyrant in the Arthur Godfrey sense of the word?
—B.E., Brooklyn, N. Y.

A. Gleason rules his TV show with an iron hand.

Q. Does Judy Garland see much of her five-year-old stepson, John Luft?
—B.W., Atlanta, Ga.

A. Yes. He plays with Judy's two daughters at the Luft home several days each week.

Q. Is there anything to the Fred MacMurray-June Haver romance, or is it publicity? —C.I., St. Paul, Minn.

A. There is a genuinely warm friendship between these two.

Q. Does Burt Lancaster really hate fan magazine writers?
—V.L., Indianapolis, Ind.

A. No; he recently held a reception for them.

Q. In Moulin Rouge, did Zsa Zsa Gabor really sing? If not, who did?
—K.T., Louisville, Ky.

A. Muriel Smith.

Q. Is Jack Benny's daughter who just got married a natural daughter or was she adopted?—E.O., Milwaukee, Wis.

A. Joan Benny was adopted.

Q. Does Terry Moore ever talk about her first husband, Glenn Davis?
—N.Y., Richfield, Utah

A. No more than she can help.

Q. Doesn't William Holden see to it that his brother gets a part in each of his pictures? —B.D., Denver, Col.

A. No, although his brother, Richard Beedle, did have a small part in Stalag 17.

Q. I recently saw Jack Palance in a picture that reminded me of The Lodger with Laird Cregar and Merle Oberon. Can you tell me how many versions there have been of this picture?
—N.F., Detroit, Mich.

A. Four.

Q. Is there any chance of an eventual marriage between Shelley Winters and Farley Granger? Is it true that Vittorio Gassman married Shelley so that he could get into the United States?
—B.V., Perth Amboy, N. J.

A. No on both counts.

Q. Who is the Hollywood executive with whom singer Eartha Kitt has been seen?
—K.G., New York, N. Y.

A. Arthur Loew, Jr.

Q. Is it true that the wives of Dean Martin and Jerry Lewis don't mix socially? —H.F., Memphis, Tenn.

A. Yes.

Q. Will John Wayne marry Pilar Pallette when his divorce becomes final?
—E.L., Dallas, Texas

A. Probably.

Q. What is Rock Hudson's real name, Roy Scherer or Roy Fitzgerald?
—J.U., Columbus, Idaho

A. His father's name is Fitzgerald; his stepfather's name is Scherer. His stepfather brought him up.

Q. I heard a rumor that Doris Day dislikes Bob Hope and will never work with him again. Why is this?
—C.L., Lincoln, Neb.

(Continued on page 28)

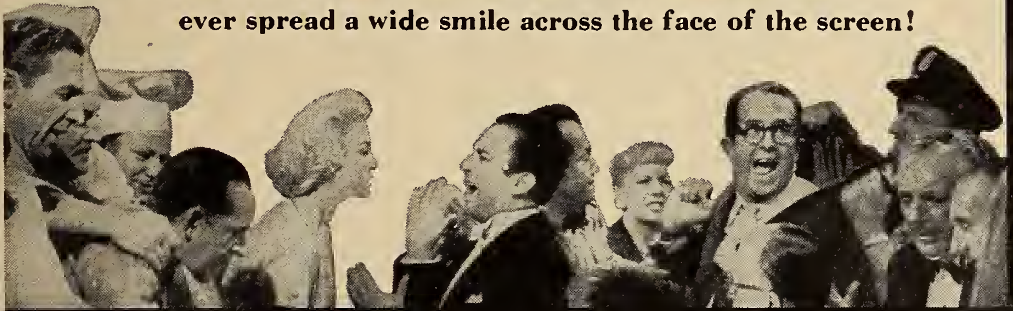
DORIS DAY AND CINEMASCOPE NEVER HAD IT SO GOOD!

A gal is just a girl until a guy starts chasing her . . . a song is just some notes until a doll like Doris sings 'em . . . and this is just a hint of all its huge happiness—the fastest-paced pleasure that ever spread a wide smile across the face of the screen!



WARNERS' "LUCKY ME" IS ULTRA-NEW LOOK IN MUSICALS!

"Lucky Me" STARS DORIS DAY · ROBERT CUMMINGS · PHIL SILVERS CINEMASCOPE

AND WARNERCOLOR With these all-pop all-top new hits: 'I SPEAK TO THE STARS' 'LOVE YOU DEARLY' 'TAKE A MEMO TO THE MOON' 'MEN' 'I WANNA SING LIKE AN ANGEL' 'HIGH HOPES' 'BLUEBELLS OF BROADWAY' 'SUPERSTITION SONG' 'PARISIAN PRETTIES'

SCREEN PLAY BY JAMES O'HANLON, ROBERT O'BRIEN AND IRVING ELINSON · FROM A STORY BY JAMES O'HANLON · PRODUCED BY HENRY BLANKE · DIRECTED BY JACK DONOHUE · MUSICAL DIRECTION BY RAY HEINDORF

The talk of the town was The Toast Of The Town telecast from Hollywood celebrating MGM's thirtieth anniversary.

Emanating live from Hollywood, the full-hour Sunday night telecast was hailed as the most ambitious collection of top performers ever seen on TV.

LOUELLA PARSONS' GOOD

ARLENE DAHL HAS A NEW ROMANCE . . . PROPER PETER LAWFORD . . . ROCKY

When Arlene Dahl broke up with Fernando Lamas, the redhead said, "I'm through with love."

But love, apparently, isn't through with Arlene.

Head over heels in love with her is Rudolph Schirmer, son of famed music publisher Gus Schirmer. Arlene and Rudolph did not date for months after he was separated from his wife and he thought the lady had obtained her Reno divorce before he and the Dahl doll started going around in Hollywood.

But after more than seven weeks in Reno—Mrs. Schirmer changed her mind for some reason (you can guess why) and for a rather frantic forty-eight hours denied that she would divorce Schirmer.

Arlene was really frantic at the implication that she had broken up a marriage—which she certainly had not.

"I know both Mr. and Mrs. Schirmer," Arlene told me, "and it was she who first told me that she and her husband were separated."

Whether or not he and Arlene will be married all depends on the lady.

If there were hard feelings between Doris Day and her boss, Jack Warner, you'd never have guessed it at Jack's beautiful party for Pierre de Gaulle, former Mayor of Paris.

Just twenty-four hours previously, Jack had blown his top when Doris failed to show up to record the final musical number in Lucky Me.

He ordered the cast dismissed, said the song would be cut from the picture, and also said quite a few other things about temperamental stars and one star in particular!

What got Doris' nose out of joint was that Judy Garland had been given four days of rest at Ojai Valley before she (Judy) recorded her songs for A Star Is Born.

When I first heard that Doris was AWOL, I called to get her version.

"I have an earache," she said, "but really I've had no trouble with the studio." Oh, Doris!

"When Mr. Warner hears I've been ill, I'm sure he'll change his mind and put the song back in the picture," she opined. You were right, Doris.

Doris went on, "Also, I wish you'd deny for me the silly talk that I'm unhappy about Judy Garland. Or that I am trying to copy her by arriving late on the set—or staying home.

It starred Jane Powell, Ann Blyth, Esther Williams in dances, songs and skits . . . all this and Ed Sullivan, too!

Gene Kelly, Lana Turner and Walter Pidgeon were among the stars. Lana's routine, "Gentlemen Of The Press," was her TV debut, won raves.

No novice on TV was Ann Blyth, who recently starred in a successful telecast of A Place In The Sun with John Derek, Marilyn Erskine.

Esther Williams and Van Johnson were a twosome, having recently co-starred in the Technicolor hit, Easy To Love, with Tony Martin.

Stars watched fellow-stars on monitor screen.

Ed Sullivan, TV's most famous mc and guiding light of The Toast Of The Town, gave last-minute instructions to the stars, remained unsmiling as usual. Fears that the show might become a hodgepodge of uncoordinated acts proved false; critics acclaimed fine direction and handling of talent.

NEWS

COOPER SOUNDS OFF . . . MARTHA HYER'S LOST LOVE . . . DORIS DAY IS EMBARRASSED . . . PARTYING PAIRS

"It's the same old talk that went the rounds when Peggy Lee made a picture at Warners. It's all so embarrassing."

TO GET BACK to the Warner party, it was a dilly.

The surprise twosome was Robert Taylor and Ursula Thiess, back together, holding hands and gazing into each other's eyes as ardently as though Ursula had not said a few weeks back, "Bob and I are washed up."

Scott Brady's former heart, Dorothy Malone, danced almost every number with millionaire Alfred Vanderbilt and I must say his taste is good. Dorothy was one of the loveliest girls present.

Vera-Ellen wore one of her fabulous costume jewelry necklaces, this one of brilliant orange-colored stones which matched her orange-colored bouffant gown.

Merle Oberon's glittering emeralds were not costume but the real thing, and they were beautifully set off by the stunning green gown she wore.

There are few girls in our town who have blossomed out more than Jeanne Crain. Formerly very much an ingénue despite her status as a married woman with four children Mrs. Paul Brinkman has suddenly become one of our wittiest girls. Jeanne's new touch of sophistication in her talk and dress is très becoming.

Mari Blanchard, the sultry siren of U-I, is one of the lovelies I admire just as much with her new dark tresses as I did when she was blonde. She's a blonde naturally, but the dark hair is becoming.

The newest divorcée, Corinne Calvet, was escorted by producer Mike Todd, but I noticed that Carlos Thompson, who came stag, cut in on several of their dances.

All in all, it was a big night.

ALL RIGHT, all right, so Peter Lawford wanted to be socially correct and have the announcement of his approaching marriage to Patricia Kennedy come from the Kennedy family.

But did he have to go to such extremes in denying my scoop as to say:

"Hah! Absolutely nothing to it. I enjoy my freedom too much."

And, the very next day, former Ambassador (to England) Kennedy and Mrs. Kennedy confirmed my story that Pete and Pat would be married the week after Easter.

"The "Young Skin" Treatment" that works!

Hundreds of disturbed complexions clearer, smoother—often in less than 2 weeks

Are you panicky over "pores" that look bigger and bigger . . . oiliness that gushes through make-up . . . a new crop of blackheads every day?

The cause of "Young Skin" problems is often this: the oil glands start over producing. At the same time, the skin's normal casting off of dead cells slows down. These dead flakes pile up, choke the pore openings. Then "pores" start to enlarge, blackheads appear.

The corrective, say skin doctors, is to clear off dead skin and excess oil. Now —Pond's brings you a treatment based on this medical theory. Hundreds of girls with problem skin say it works!

"Tightens" large pores reduces oiliness leaves skin soft—never flaky!

For a clearer skin—every day cover face deeply, except eyes, with cool greaseless Pond's Vanishing Cream. Its "keratolytic" action dissolves away oil and dead skin, frees the tiny skin glands. Leave on 1 minute, wipe off, rinse with cold water. See the results! Girls say: "It really helped." "Pores look much smaller." "My skin feels so clean!"

AND—for ungreasy powder base—a touch of Pond's Vanishing Cream.

LOUELLA PARSONS' good news

continued

IT TAKES just one good argument to start divorce rumors in our town, and Ruth Roman and Mortimer Hall had that one good argument right in front of Chasen's, one of the top spy spots of the town.

The following morning, when reporters checked the Halls to find out which one was going to Las Vegas, Morty got on the phone and said:

"Listen, fellas. It was two-thirty in the morning. My wife said to me, 'I wish you hadn't had that last drink.' If there is a wife in the world who, at sometime or another, hasn't said this to her husband he's got to be a teetotaler or else he's dead!

"Ruth and I are very happy. We'll probably have a few more disputes in public. Think nothing of it."

JANE POWELL, who had a terrible time getting out of the ingénue class on the screen (she got out off screen when she broke up her marriage), says to all girls who have a yen to be sophisticated:

"Wear red. I'm sure you'll find it's more effective than black in causing the boys to turn their heads."

GOSSIP IS THAT one of the reasons Marlon Brando walked out on The Egyptian is that he is "emotionally upset" that his long time girl friend, Movita, walked out on him.

The story goes that Movita is tired of holding his hand—and head—unless a wedding ring goes with the job. And Marlon just can't make up his mind to get married.

Somebody said that marriage would have been a lot cheaper than the $2,000,000 suit slapped on him by 20th Century-Fox after Marlon came to the coast, had wardrobe fittings, sat in on a rehearsal with the entire cast—and then suddenly blew Hollywood without even a wave of the hand to the studio which already has $1,000,000 invested in this film without a camera turning.

In these times of tight budgets, there's nothing funny to the studio about Brando's disappearing act and the abrupt communiqué from his New York psychiatrist that he is "too muddled" emotionally to work.

But one of the executives piped up, "When he reported wearing a Homburg, a clean shirt and his pants pressed, I knew something had to snap!"

EVERY TIME the phone rang at Zsa Zsa Gabor's "Come-As-Your-Favorite-Person" party, someone would crack that it was George Sanders asking if he could send over a butler (presumably the same one Zsa Zsa accused him of "stealing" when he moved out of her home).

There was a photographer for about every three guests, which isn't too surprising, Zsa Zsa being Zsa Zsa.

Ann Miller and her beau, Dr. Al Mietus, created the biggest sensation as the Male and Female Kinsey Reports. (Just evening clothes with signs, kids.)

Geary Steffen came as the White Rabbit, a bit of subtlety which eludes me.

Exotic newcomer Bella Darvi was a Rainbow and Brad Dexter her Pot o' Gold.

John Ireland, and four other gents, came as Howard Hughes!

Mrs. James Mason wore a nightgown with oodles and oodles of jewels which she said represented the hostess going to bed.

Everyone thought Zsa Zsa was a cinch to come as herself. But she fooled 'em and came as herself as Jane Avril in Moulin Rouge.

What a gal. But never let it be said that she isn't good copy and doesn't supply color to the Hollywood scene.

IN A WAY it's more like a movie plot than any movie she's ever played in.

I mean beautiful Martha Hyer's real life romance with a man who is not free to marry her.

She did not break up his home. She didn't meet the handsome actor until he and his wife decided to separate hoping the "time out" would help them to solve their problems. Neither the husband nor the wife wanted a divorce because of their two children whom both adored.

It's the irony of fate that during this estrangement Martha should have met the man and fallen very much in love with him.

He didn't try to fool her. He didn't say he wanted or expected a divorce from his wife. He told her truthfully that he didn't know whether they would be able to work it out—or not.

Martha herself was just recovering from the wounds of a broken marriage to Ray Stahl. She had been dreadfully unhappy until this new love came into her life.

If this were a typical Hollywood story about people who throw themselves headlong into an emotion, the ending would be that the man divorced his wife and married Martha.

Instead, it is a different story about a girl who doesn't want a broken home on her conscience nor could they be happy with each other when both were conscious of his

Terry Moore, escorted by Tab Hunter, arrived at the Red Garters première in a horse-drawn carriage. And of course, she wore one red garter!

Still a frequent twosome are Dan Dailey and Gwen O'Connor. Gwen's Las Vegas tiff with Dan seems to have ended reconciliation hopes.

New! a shampoo that Silkens your hair!

You'll be head over heels in love with the way your hair shines and shimmers . . . silky soft, silky bright, silky smooth—after you've used new Drene. So gleaming, so glamorous . . . your silkened hair!

New Magic Formula . . . Milder than Castile!

Silkening magic! That's what you'll find in Drene's new formula! It lathers like lightning, rinses out like lightning—it's milder than castile! Magic, sheer magic, the way this new Drene silkens your hair. Leaves it bright as silk, soft as silk, smooth as silk—and so obedient!

Lathers like lightning—

no other lather is so thick, yet so quick.

Milder than castile—

so mild you could use this new formula every day.

This is a New Drene!

A PRODUCT OF PROCTER & GAMBLE

I dreamed I went to a masquerade in my maidenform* bra®

The dream of a bra: Maidenform's Chansonette in fine white cotton broadcloth, acetate satin, or nylon taffeta . . . from $2.00. There is a maidenform for every type of figure.*

COSTUME BY JOHN FREDERICS JEWELS BY TRIFARI

*REG. U. S. PAT. OFF. ©1954 MAIDEN FORM BRASSIERE CO., INC.

LOUELLA PARSONS' good news

continued

Popular pair June Haver and Fred MacMurray were among the Hollywood delegation which flew to the first annual Brazilian Film Festival at Sao Paulo.

The largest official group ever sent to an international festival by Hollywood, it included 18 stars as well as top executives. Among the stars were Jane Powell, Edward G. Robinson, Rhonda Fleming, Ann Miller, Bob Cummings, Irene Dunne, Joan Fontaine.

strong obligations to the family he left.

When there was a chance of a reconciliation, even though it broke her heart, Martha told him, "Go home to your wife and children—and never regret that you did the right thing."

WHEN BEAUTIFUL Lorraine Chanel, the luscious model Gary Cooper dated in Mexico City, arrived unexpectedly in Hollywood just a few days after Gary landed here, Mrs. Cooper (Rocky) said:

"So what? Suppose Gary did take her out in Mexico. I don't expect him to sit home nights when we are parted. We're much too civilized for that."

But Rocky wasn't so civilized at a recent party that she didn't tell off in no uncertain words a certain charmer who seemed, at least to her, to be occupying too much of big Coop's attention.

Eavesdroppers were enthralled by Rocky's choice of words to the belle as she took her husband's arm and steered him to a neutral corner of the room.

AVA GARDNER and Shelley Winters have struck up a friendship in Rome and Shelley writes: "Both Ava and I are getting fat on this Italian food."

Shelley on the plump side I can imagine. But Ava? This belle has always had trouble keeping her bones covered.

THE LETTER BOX: "You don't like Lana Turner's dark hair and you've been very skeptical about her marriage to Lex Barker," chides Vera Campenelli of Dallas. "Is there anything you like about Lana?" Yes, Vera—I like Lana.

Johnny Laliberti, Montreal, Canada, writes: "I am employed as a bellhop in the Hotel De La Salle where Miss Dorothy Lamour and her troupe stayed during her nightclub appearance at Chez Paree. May I say, Miss Parsons, that this lovely lady, so kind, so gracious and so cordial to everyone, is the best ambassador from Hollywood who has ever visited our town."

"It makes me laugh to read that Marilyn Monroe has pushed Betty Grable off the throne as Queen of Hollywood musicals," writes Robert McArdy, San Antonio. "Wait until Marilyn equals Betty's record as Queen of the Box Office for six years straight before such extravagant claims are made for her."

Many, many letters from all over the world, Sweden, Ireland, Australia and Italy, all asking in effect: "What is the real trouble with Mario Lanza? Please tell us the truth." The truth is, no one knows what is the matter with Mario. His closest friends admit that he is "mixed-up" and some of them go so far as to say he needs psychiatric aid.

Frank Sinatra's fans have had a sticker printed which they paste on all their letters, reading: FRANK SINATRA'S FANS WILL LOVE HIM "FROM HERE TO ETERNITY." And no doubt they will!

Mrs. Alice Hakarine, of Virginia, Minnesota, is just one who writes this month with raves for The Robe and special raves for Richard Burton.

Ignaeio Aurrecoechea sends a blast from Manila, Philippine Islands, "Why you insult Liz Taylor? Always you print nothing nice about Liz." Is that so? I challenge you, señor, to send me a clipping in which I have insulted Liz.

After getting the above off his chest, Ignaeio calms down and tells me about the American actors and actresses who are popular in his country. "The box office draws here," he writes, "are Virginia Mayo, Ann Blyth, Eleanor Parker, Susan Hayward, Gregory Peck, James Mason, Liz Taylor, Ricardo Montalban, Martin and Lewis, Tony Curtis and Piper Laurie."

I've used more letters than usual in this month's LETTER BOX because the mail from all over the world was particularly heavy—and interesting, don't you think?

That's all for now. See you next month.

Jeff Hunter and his pretty wife, Barbara Rush, brought their own movie camera, hoping to get a picture of Brazilian President Vargas.

Pat Nerney escorted Jane Powell to the plane. Group was joined by Eric Johnston, named official U.S. delegate by President Eisenhower.

Are you in the know?

For a good Spring tonic, try —

☐ Sulphur and molasses ☐ Shreds and patches

Has Spring turned the gang into social sluggards? Get 'em stirring—on a Hobo Hike. Boys to be rigged in old, beat-up togs; girls in jeans 'n' jackets with gay, sewn-on patches. Bring a kettle. Have everyone tote a can of eats, for stew; then use the emptied tins instead of plates. It's fun! And instead of being a mope-at-home on trying days—choose Kotex. See how comfortable you can be with this softness that holds its shape!

Should you use an antiperspirant —

☐ Before bathing ☐ Instead of bathing ☐ Like a bunny

If underarm moisture baffles you, do you use an antiperspirant properly? After bathing, towel your armpits pronto. Then apply the dryer-upper quick like a bunny—to close your pore "doors" before perspiration starts! But in sanitary protection, absorbency is what you need—and get (non-fail!) with Kotex. Those special flat pressed ends prevent revealing outlines.

Which would improve this duet?

☐ Clothes harmony ☐ A harp ☐ Ear muffs

Vocally, these hopefuls may rate. But to style-sharp eyes, her outfit's off key. What's wrong with that newsworthy print? Nothing—if she'd worn an "*un*busy" hat! Follow the single feature plan, costume-wise. Just as in buying Kotex you select the one size that does most for you: Regular, Junior or Super.

More women choose KOTEX* than all other sanitary napkins

*T. M. REG. U. S. PAT. OFF.

Have you tried new Delsey* toilet tissue? It's the only one that's fine and firm and soft—like Kleenex* tissues. Each tissue tears evenly—no shredding, no waste. And Delsey's double-ply for extra strength. What's more, now you can get Delsey in your favorite bath towel colors: pink, yellow, green, blue—as well as white. Ask for Delsey where you buy Kleenex tissues.

ROMANCE OF THE YEAR

All the world loves these two lovers—June Haver and Fred MacMurray!

June and Fred met at Ned Marin's party.

■ Hollywood has never had a more popular romance than that of June Haver and Fred MacMurray.

In the prolonged illness and death of his wife last year, Fred MacMurray's life was filled with deep sorrow. June Haver was forced to abandon her life as a novitiate after she had decided to dedicate herself to a religious life.

For more than two months they have been constant companions, and they were together in Brazil and Argentina for the film festivals.

But Fred says nothing about June unless he is more or less trapped into it. And June appears to be frightened of public reaction. She'll never know whether it is favorable or not unless she goes back to her old practice of giving out honest interviews. Apparently, she feels that her interest in Fred MacMurray has been too brief to be the subject of prolonged interviews. And until recently, she has had no career to talk about. But she has hardly been away, and now she has started her comeback with her fine performance in the CBS television show, Trouble Along The Way. Unless there is a last-minute hitch, she will be one of the stars in Columbia's My Sister Eileen.

June has dropped ten pounds and is as trim and pretty as she was at the height of her career. As pretty, her friends think, as a bride. And she might be just that before the year goes by.

YOU'VE GOT A FRONT ROW SEAT AT THAT FABULOUS BROADWAY MUSICAL REVUE... WITH ITS STARS, SONGS, DANCES, FUN...ITS THEATRE EXCITEMENT INTACT! AT POPULAR PRICES... FILMED THROUGH THE MAGIC OF

CINEMASCOPE

EDWARD L. ALPERSON
presents
LEONARD SILLMAN'S

NEW FACES

in glorious COLOR in the wonder of STEREOPHONIC SOUND

Hear EARTHA KITT sing
C'EST SI BON, SANTA BABY,
USKADARA,
MONOTONOUS, BAL PETIT BAL,
LOVE IS A SIMPLE THING!

Starring
Ronny GRAHAM · Eartha KITT
Robert CLARY · Alice GHOSTLEY
Directed by HARRY HORNER · Co-producer BERMAN SWARTTZ also starring

JUNE CARROLL · VIRGINIA DE LUCE · PAUL LYNDE
BILL MULLIKIN · ROSEMARY O'REILLY
ALLEN CONROY · JIMMY RUSSELL

Did he have a right to suspect her?

Dunbar was in a troubled state of mind. The honeymoon was scarcely over, but, lately, his wife was acting strangely indifferent. She responded reluctantly to his affectionate advances and seemed repelled by his kisses. Was she tiring of him? Was there another man? He suspected everything . . . everything that is, but the truth.

One of the worst things about halitosis is that it is so easy to offend without even realizing it. Halitosis comes and goes . . . absent one day, present the next . . . and you may never know when. So why rely on lesser precautions when Listerine Antiseptic offers such a record of proven performance.

No tooth paste, of course, is antiseptic. Chlorophyll does not kill germs—but Listerine kills bacteria by millions, gives you lasting antiseptic protection against bad breath.

Listerine Clinically Proved Four Times Better Than Tooth Paste

Is it any wonder Listerine Antiseptic in recent clinical tests averaged at least four times more effective in stopping bad breath odors than the chlorophyll products or tooth pastes it was tested against? With proof like this, it's easy to see why Listerine "belongs" in your home. Gargle Listerine Antiseptic every morning . . . every night . . . before every date.

No Tooth Paste Kills Odor Germs Like This . . . Instantly

Listerine Antiseptic does what no tooth paste does—instantly kills bacteria, by millions—stops bad breath instantly, and usually for hours on end. Bacterial fermentation of proteins which are always present in the mouth is by far the most common cause of bad breath. Research shows that breath stays sweeter longer depending on the degree to which you reduce germs in the mouth.

A Product of
The Lambert Company

LISTERINE ANTISEPTIC STOPS BAD BREATH

4 times better than any tooth paste

I LOVE YOU—TODAY

But tomorrow Corinne and John may be finally divorced.

■ A California divorce doesn't become final for twelve months. This affords Corinne Calvet and John Bromfield plenty of time to reconsider.

Corinne has filed for divorce but she admits, "I still love John."

Bromfield says, "I not only love her but I can't get her out of my blood."

"But," says Corinne, "I don't believe John knows what he wants. I can't seem to make him happy. I offered to give up my career even though he never asked me to."

Parisienne Corinne came to Hollywood to work for Paramount Pictures in 1947. Dropped because she didn't learn English fast enough, she was "discovered" by actor John Bromfield. He introduced her to Hal Wallis who promptly signed her.

A few months later John and Corinne were married. Whereupon Corinne announced, "I used to think European men were the best lovers in the world. Marriage to John has changed my opinion. In every American there is some European. All a wife has to do is to wake it up."

While Corinne was doing this, her career was zooming. But husband John was dropped by Wallis and took small parts in B pictures.

"Two careers in one family have nothing to do with it," John says. "Corinne's return to Europe to make some films broke up the rhythm of our marriage.

"When she got back we separated, and I missed her terribly. We reconciled but then we started fighting again. After five and a half years we had grown more apart than together.

"I'm still crazy about her, and maybe we'll reconcile."

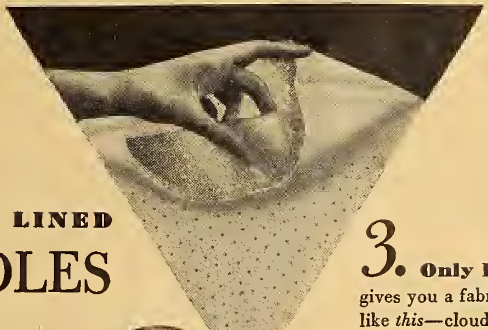
As for Corinne: "All I want for my Johnny is to be happy, if not with me, then with someone else."

Which is why John and Corinne will probably wind up together. The California divorce law is a wise one for impetuous people.

NOW! 3 Great Exclusive Features in One Sensational Girdle!

1. Only Playtex gives you the fabulous fit and control of latex, without a seam, stitch, stay, or bone!

2. Only Playtex gives you adjustable latex garters that let you stand, sit, stoop, or stretch in complete freedom!



3. Only Playtex gives you a fabric lining like this—cloud-soft and cloud-comfortable!

Playtex® FABRIC LINED GIRDLES with 4 durably reinforced adjustable garters

No other girdles like them! Smooth latex with cloud-soft fabric lining, these sensational Playtex girdles are invisible under the slimmest clothes, and they have the world's only adjustable latex garters that give custom fit with a touch!

Enjoy these great exclusives in Playtex Fabric Lined Girdles. Discover the fabulous fit, the fabulous freedom only Playtex can give you. The comfort of that fabric lining. The 4 adjustable garters so firm yet so flexible that stockings are held with just the right tension whether you stand, sit, stoop or stretch!

Playtex Fabric Lined Girdles are all one smooth figure-slimming piece. They're second-skin comfortable, wash—dry in a flash!

Playtex . . . known everywhere as the girdle in the SLIM tube.

Playtex Fabric Lined Garter Girdles and Panty Girdles with adjustable garters—at a low, low $5.95. Extra-large size, $6.95. Fabric Lined Panty Brief (without garters), $4.95.

At department stores and specialty shops everywhere.

(Prices slightly higher outside U.S.A.)

©1954 International Latex Corporation . . . PLAYTEX PARK . . . Dover Del; In Canada: Playtex Ltd. . . . PLAYTEX PARK . . . Arnprior, Ont.

Life's going to be Different!

With a smooth, blemish-free skin that invites romance

No More hateful blackheads, over-oily skin or pimples to keep you from having fun. You can be lovely, alluring. It's easy if you take these 3 steps:

Step One: Cut down sweets, pastries, starchy foods. Eat sensibly.

Step Two: Get your skin really clean.* Hundreds of doctors advise Cuticura Soap because it is superfatted and contains soothing, healing Cuticura medication.

Step Three: At bedtime smooth on Cuticura Ointment. This softens and improves your skin as it helps clear up blackheads and externally caused pimples.

In 7 Days you'll begin to see fresher, clearer, smoother skin, radiant new complexion tone.

Keep It Up. Cuticura Soap and Ointment make your skin lovelier as they help clear it up. What's more, they also help protect and preserve.

Want Faster Action? During the day use new "invisible" Cuticura Medicated Liquid under your make-up. Many doctors report results in 1 to 3 days! Get Cuticura at your druggist today!

Cuticura

FREE Soap sample and Skin Care leaflet giving correct face cleansing techniques. Write Cuticura, Dept. DM-5, Malden 48, Mass.

TV TALK

Jackie Gleason's private life . . . Jeanmaire meets New York . . . Robert Montgomery in the White House . . .

No one has yet figured out why there was so much publicity over Jackie Gleason's admission that he was in love with Marilyn Taylor, the dancer sister of June Taylor, the choreographer on the Gleason show. Jackie's been in love with Marilyn for a long time, and he and his wife Genevieve have been separated for five years. The last time Jackie and his wife were seen together in public was a year and a half ago, the night Jackie's show started on CBS. Genevieve and their two daughters went to the big opening-night party. But Mrs. G barely smiled all evening, and sat at the far end of the table from Jackie drinking black coffee. Jackie introduced her to the other members of the party, but didn't spend any time with her. He did, however, take his shy, thinnish daughters around and show them a good time. But you could tell it was not a happy family reunion. Jackie would be a hard man to live with as he'd be the first to tell you. There are few men alive who have more ego and more energy than Jackie Gleason. His ego shows all during rehearsals for the show. He insists on directing the orchestra, directing the sketches, changing the lines—on doing everything himself. Just like the old Milton Berle. And when he's relaxing he tries to hold the center of the stage no matter where he is. He will talk louder, laugh louder, and try to top anyone else's jokes. He always tries to get in the last word—even if he has to shout it down the hall after people. Even when he's on one of his diets—consisting of graham crackers and beer—he keeps having ideas for something else he can do. Already loaded down with his TV show—which is enough to wear out six men—he insists on composing music, recording music, thinking up new ideas for new shows, and—of all things—writing. He had an idea for a novel not long ago, and was determined to get it down on paper. But even he had to admit he didn't have the time. So he spent several days interviewing writers. He'd tell them his idea for the novel, and ask them to whip it up for him. So far, no one's taken him up on it. The main reason he's moving to California (besides the climate) is that he wants to get into movies more than anything. And—as you'd expect—he doesn't just want to star in them. He wants to produce them.

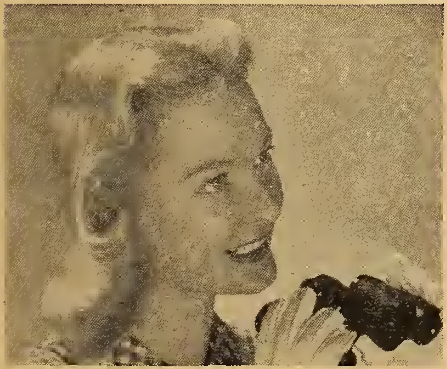
You'd never know it from watching him walk slowly through his Sunday afternoon TV show, but Eric Sevareid is scared to death of the cameras. He's literally in a sweat for the entire thirty minutes. But watch him steal some of Ed Murrow's thunder as the TV glamour boy at CBS. Come to think of it, you could line up the CBS newsmen and a bunch of movie actors—and you'd have a hard time deciding which group is better looking. Sevareid, a huge hulk of a man, also has one of the handsomest wives in Washington . . . Don't think that Jeanmaire (or "Zizi," as everyone calls her) looks much like she did in Hans Christian Andersen. She's much more vivid and striking and was horrified when she saw herself on the screen. But she liked making the movie because she met Danny Kaye that way. He's about her only happy memory of Hollywood. She was almost a recluse when she went out to make Hans Christian Andersen because she still didn't speak any English. And, for seven months of her stay, she was laid up in bed recovering from an operation on her leg. She's miserable when she isn't dancing. You've never met a girl who loves to work as much as Zizi does. And you've never met anyone who looks more lovely close up. There isn't a flaw on her face. It's hard not to just sit there and marvel. And she's so tiny, it's unbelievable. She always looks much bigger on the screen or on TV or on the stage than in person. She's a five-footer. Now that Zizi speaks English—quite well, in fact—she's come out of her shell. (Continued on page 78)

No new romance is Jackie's recently publicized love for dancer Marilyn Taylor, but his religion forbids his getting a divorce from present wife.

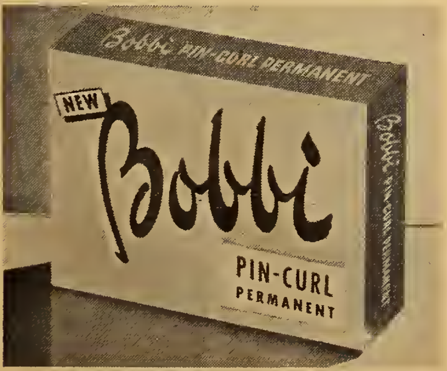
Ed Murrow, CBS' prize newsman, narrator and dignified glamour boy, is top personality on TV hits See It Now and Person To Person.

Bobbi is perfect for this soft, casual "Chantilly" hair style, for Bobbi is the permanent designed to give natural-looking curls. Easy . . . No help needed.

Bobbi's soft curls make a casual wave like this possible. Notice the natural look of the curls in this new "Tally-Ho" hair style. No nightly settings needed.



Only Bobbi is designed to give the soft curls needed for the delicately sculptured "Diana" hair-do. Bobbi gives you curls exactly where you want them.



Everything you need! New Creme Oil Lotion, special bobby pins, complete instructions for use. $1.50 plus tax.

Like the casual, spirited look of this "Robin Hood" hair-do? Bobbi does it! Bobbi Pin-Curl Permanents always give you soft, carefree waves like these.

NO TIGHT, FUSSY CURLS ON THIS PAGE!

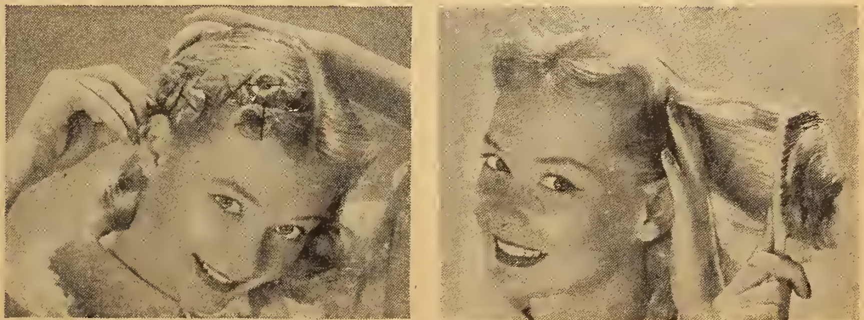
These hairdos were made with Bobbi ... the special home permanent for casual hair styles

Yes, Bobbi Pin-Curl Permanent is designed to give you lovelier, softer curls . . . the kind you need for today's casual hairdos. Never the tight, fussy curls you get with ordinary home or beauty shop permanents. Immediately after you use Bobbi your hair has the beauty, the body, the soft, lovely look of naturally wavy hair. And your hair stays that way—your wave lasts week after week.

Bobbi's so easy to use, too. You just put your hair in pin curls. Then apply Bobbi Creme Oil Lotion. A little later rinse hair with water, let dry, brush out—and that's all. No clumsy curlers to use. No help needed.

Ask for Bobbi Pin-Curl Permanent. If you like to be in fashion—if you can make a simple pin curl—you'll love Bobbi.

Replacement or Refund of Money
Guaranteed by Good Housekeeping
If Not as Advertised Therein



Just simple pin-curls and Bobbi give this far easier home permanent. When hair is dry, brush out. Neutralizing is automatic. No curlers, no resetting.

new...for a lovelier you!

Stardust

4-SECTION BRA

with a complete inside lining that improves uplift, comfort

At last ... a 4-section bra that positively assures better uplift ... rounds out the figure beautifully ... creates an entirely new conception of fit in motion.

But more—the unique petal-smooth inside lining of self material eliminates chafing and irritation, guards health as well as beauty! Discover what Stardust's 4-Section Bra can do for you!

Rich acetate satin or fine pre-shrunk cotton; A, B, or C cups. $1.00

Stardust
Life-Insured Bra
GUARANTEED FOR 1 YEAR

Write for name of nearest store.
STARDUST, INC., EMPIRE STATE BLDG., N. Y. 1

A new, exclusive MODERN SCREEN feature: a nationally-known record expert gives you the latest on recording stars, new releases and equipment.

JUST FOR THE RECORDS

by George Frazier

■ The Columbia LP of the tunes from Paramount's Red Garters can be recommended on several grounds. For one thing, the Livingston-Evans score is, for the most part, a catchy one. For another, the quality of the recording is high. But what is probably most important is that here, on a single record, are three of the ablest popular vocalists around — Rosemary Clooney, Guy Mitchell and Joanne Gilbert. They do handsomely by such numbers as the title song, "Bad News," "Man And Woman," "Good Intentions," "Brave Man," "Meet A Happy Guy," "A Dime And A Dollar," and "This Is Greater Than I Thought."

There probably isn't much that has been left unsaid about Rosemary Clooney. That she is a fine interpreter of popular music is undisputed. There are times, in fact, when she is a great one—her Columbia recording of "Mixed Emotions," for example. But it seems to me worth mentioning that her marriage to versatile José Ferrer has imbued her with a sense of well-being that was sometimes lacking in her earlier efforts. The last time I talked to her was more than a year ago. We were having dinner together one night in the Hampshire House in New York. Usually a talkative girl, she seemed troubled and reticent that evening. Two days later I discovered that she had fallen madly in love with Ferrer and was worried about her ability to make a good wife for a man of near-genius.

Guy Mitchell, unlike Rosemary Clooney, has yet to achieve peak success on the order of that won by Sinatra or Tony Bennett or a few other male vocalists of recent years. He is an engaging performer and a good-looking boy. Mitchell certainly deserved sharp criticism last February when, as a participant in a good will junket for Red Garters, he showed up in Sackowitz' chic department store in Houston and, after inspecting the guests at the party, testily demanded, "Where are the dames?" Shortly afterward he departed without any regrets on the part of those in attendance. I'm inclined to be tolerant because he was then going through the sorry ordeal of being divorced from a former Miss America. Since he's still young and gifted with authentic talent, he'll probably come to realize his folly. His contributions to this recorded portfolio from Red Garters (which, in its movie form, is one of the most engaging spoofings of westerns I've ever seen) are splendid.

Joanne Gilbert is the prettiest and youngest vocalist on the Red Garters LP. This very young girl, who has a lovely figure and flashing black eyes, can become very important. If you hear her on this LP you can't doubt that.

A movie name, but of another sort, can be heard on an MGM recording of "Three Coins In The Fountain," a pleasant number from a new Metro picture. The singer is beautiful Marti Stevens. Miss Stevens' real name is Schenck and she is the daughter of Nicholas Schenck, who runs Leo the Lion. Having the powerful connections that are naturally in the possession of the child of the head of MGM, Marti could have taken the easy course by using her own name. When she opened at the Maisonette in the St. Regis last February, she demonstrated that she needs no assistance.

For those who (Continued on page 20)

Rosemary Clooney heads the list of singing stars who reproduce the songs from their musical, Red Garters, on a new Columbia LP.

Guy Mitchell, young recording star, joins Rosie in this take-off on western movies. Their singing co-star, Joanne Gilbert, is on the LP, too.

Dry skin: "Before I used Noxzema, my dry skin actually peeled in spots," says Cathy Hild of Woodridge, N. J. "Now Noxzema helps it look smoother, fresher."

Blemishes*: "Noxzema quickly helped heal my blemishes*," says Jackie Spalding of Whitefield, N. H. "Now everybody tells me how much brighter, fresher, more attractive my skin looks."

Look lovelier in 10 days with DOCTOR'S HOME FACIAL or your money back!

This new, different beauty care helps skin look fresher, prettier —helps keep it that way, too!

● Here's wonderful beauty news! A noted skin doctor worked out a different kind of beauty care—with a special beauty cream. It helps your skin look fresher, smoother, lovelier and helps you KEEP it that way!

This new beauty care owes its remarkable effectiveness to the unique qualities of Noxzema. It's a combination of softening, soothing, refreshing and cleansing ingredients offered by no other leading beauty cream. And it's medicated—aids healing—helps keep skin looking fresh and clear!

Feel the exhilarating tingle!

The moment you smooth on Noxzema, you feel a cool, refreshing tingle. It tells you Noxzema's beauty action is starting to work on your skin problem—helping your skin look fresher, prettier.

Results are thrilling

Hundreds of letters praise Noxzema care for dry, rough, flaky skin; for externally-caused blemishes; and for that dull, lifeless half-clean look of many so-called normal complexions.

Wouldn't you like to see a fresher, prettier complexion in your mirror 10 days from now? Then, start this Doctor's Home Facial tonight!

1. Cleanse your face by washing with Noxzema and water. Apply Noxzema liberally; wring out a cloth in warm water and wash as if using soap. See how stale make-up and dirt disappear when you 'cream-wash'!

2. Night Cream: Greaseless Noxzema helps soften, smooth and freshen your skin! (Pat a bit extra over any blemishes*—it's medicated to help heal them fast!)

3. Make-up base: In the morning, 'cream-wash'; then use Noxzema as a long-lasting powder base.

Works or money back! In clinical tests it helped 4 out of 5 with skin problems to have lovelier-looking skin! If you don't look lovelier in 10 days—return jar to Noxzema—Baltimore—money back!

externally-caused*

Look Lovelier Offer! 40¢ trial size only 29¢ plus tax. See how it helps your skin; then get 10 oz. economy jar only 98¢ plus tax—drug, cosmetic counters.

NOXZEMA skin cream

Dream of dreams come true!

now there's a real BENDIX for even less than lots of Wringer Washers!

only $169.95

for a genuine work-free BENDIX

*MODEL WDN

It washes or rinses, drains, damp-dries, and shuts itself off . . . automatically!

- Does a full-sized 8-lb. wash, with new Super-Agitator cleaning action!
- Floataway-Flushaway draining keeps dirty washwater from straining back through clothes. New flexible Metexaloy Wondertub is so durable, it's guaranteed in writing for 5 full years! No wringers or spinners—it's safe! Portable . . . needs no special plumbing, no high water pressure, no wash tubs, no bolting down.
- Let your Bendix Dealer show you the magic way it works!

BENDIX HOME APPLIANCES

PIONEER OF WORKLESS WASHDAY

BENDIX HOME APPLIANCES, AVCO Manufacturing Corp., Cincinnati 25, Ohio

just for the records

(Continued from page 18) like danceable records, RCA Victor has two new LP's by Ralph Flanagan. One is called "Freshman-Sophomore Frolic," the other "Junior-Senior Prom." Both, as the expression goes, were designed for dancing. If your taste is inclined to superb jazz, you had better hear Bob Manning's Capitol recording of "You Made Me Love You," which is on a 45 RPM single. Manning is a pleasant vocalist, but the excitement on this one is the incomparably soulful muted trumpet background by Bobby Hackett, who, you may remember, shared with Billy Butterfield the trumpet assignment for Burgess Meredith and Fred Astaire in Second Chorus.

Everybody has been telling me that it wasn't Rita Hayworth but a girl named Greer who did the singing in Miss Sadie Thompson. They may be right. Ordinarily I would have checked the rumor with Rita, who is a forthright girl, but at the time it came to my attention, she and Dick Haymes seemed to have enough trouble. To me, it really doesn't much matter who did the actual singing. I just happened to enjoy it when I saw the movie. I enjoy it, as I'm sure you will equally as much, on the Mercury LP of "Miss Sadie Thompson." In addition to the voice of either Miss Hayworth or Miss Greer, it has some fine harmonica work by Leo Diamond, a magnificent jazz band (with a great trumpet player) in the song called "The Heat Is On," and a moving rendition by José Ferrer of "The 23rd Psalm." . . . At fairly regular intervals, Capitol puts out LP's called "Today's Top Hits." Nothing you'll play forever, but pleasant contemporary stuff on the order of Dean Martin's "That's Amore" and Kay Starr's "Change Partners." . . . The best Sinatra in a long, long while is his 45 RPM Capitol single of "Young At Heart." . . . My reports from the West Coast are unanimous in praising the songs Harold Arlen has written for Judy Garland in A Star Is Born. . . . The Trend label has an LP called "Jerry Fielding Plays A Dance Concert." Fielding, who is Groucho Marx' musical director, assembled able musicians and the result is great.

In the matter of equipment, the market is bountiful with good hi-fi machines. I've already mentioned the Libertyphone portable, but there can be no harm in reminding you that, at $99.50, it is a remarkable phonograph buy. Another splendid machine is the Birch, which costs around $90. It's a table model. If you're looking for something bigger, you might listen to the Libertyphone Chairside, which has, besides the phonograph, a remarkably efficient radio. It costs $379.50, but if you can afford it, it's well worth investigating. . . . If you're given to reading inspirational books, you'll be fascinated to hear that RCA Victor has recorded Norman Vincent Peale. The title, naturally, is "The Power Of Positive Thinking." . . . The Webster Company, which manufactures, among other things, the superb Webcor tape recorder, has sensibly gone into the record or, more exactly, the tape record business. So you can now buy tapes of selections to play—just as you buy records. I'll discuss some of them next month. END

Ava Gardner, star of M-G-M's CinemaScope production in color, "KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE", wears Bur-Mil Cameo nylons with exclusive Face Powder Finish.

"Your legs need glamour...not glimmer" says Ava Gardner. "Shiny stockings can make legs appear unshapely—rob them of glamour." When your stockings have a soft, freshly powdered look, you know that you look your Leg-O-Genic best. That's why Miss Gardner and other M-G-M stars wear Bur-Mil Cameo nylons. With Cameo's exclusive Face Powder Finish, you're sure of a misty dull loveliness that won't wear off, won't wash out.

Cameo's delicately sheer, high twist, 60 gauge, 15 denier nylons are not only lovely to look at—they give up to 40% longer wear by actual test. And they cost only $1.50 a pair. Other full-fashioned and seamless Cameo styles from $1.15 to $1.65 a pair.

ALSO MADE IN CANADA BY BURLINGTON MILLS HOSIERY COMPANY OF CANADA, LTD.

BUR-MIL, CAMEO, FACE POWDER AND LEG-O-GENIC ARE REGISTERED TRADEMARKS OF BURLINGTON MILLS CORPORATION.

BUR-MIL
Cameo

the stockings with exclusive
Face Powder Finish

Here are thrilling vacations you can easily afford!

GREYHOUND
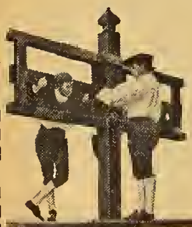
Expense Paid Tours include hotels, transportation, sightseeing at one low price!

Tour-of-the-Month!
LAS VEGAS
Three gay days in this Western resort town; side trip to Hoover Dam, boat cruise on Lake Mead; 2 nights at smart hotel.
☐ . . . $15.00



Tour-of-the-Month!
COLONIAL VIRGINIA
Six romantic days at old Virginia's Williamsburg . . . Jamestown . . . Yorktown . . . Natural Bridge; 5 nights' hotel.
☐ . . . $45.90

Check up on other tours — like these:

☐ NEW YORK CITY, 5 days . .	$28.60
☐ FLORIDA CIRCLE 11 days from Jacksonville . .	79.10
☐ LOS ANGELES, 4 days . . .	14.15
☐ NEW ENGLAND CIRCLE 8 days from New York . . .	64.45
☐ CHICAGO, 3 days	15.65
☐ SAN FRANCISCO, 4 days . .	20.20
☐ COLORADO SPRINGS 5 days, 10 meals	37.50

U. S. tax extra. Add Greyhound round-trip fare from your city.

For details, mail coupon to:
Greyhound Information Center,
71 W. Lake St., Chicago 1, Ill.
Don't forget to send your name and address! DM-5-54

GREYHOUND

movie reviews

by florence epstein

PICTURE OF THE MONTH

Phil Silvers, star of Top Banana, made his first big hit in Broadway's High Button Shoes, also appeared in movies like Cover Girl. "Top Banana," in case you're wondering, is the show business term for the star comedian in a burlesque troupe. Phil started out originally as Third Banana.

The Slaves (chorus girls to you) and Talking Women in this United Artists hit are among Hollywood's and Broadway's most glamorous.

Nearsighted Phil complains he never gets a really good look at the girls, but doesn't mind tripping over them as long as it gets a laugh!

TOP BANANA. United Artists isn't like most major movie companies. It doesn't produce any pictures; it distributes them for other producers. Through the years Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Pickford, Charles Chaplin, D. W. Griffith, Sam Goldwyn, David Selznick, John Huston, J. Arthur Rank and others have done business with U.A. Apparently, business has been good because this year United Artists celebrates its thirty-fifth anniversary and isn't even content to rest on its laurels. Instead, it offers Top Banana (among other films reviewed here). Top Banana was a hit on Broadway, and that's no wonder. Based on the activities of Jerry Biffle (Phil Silvers), TV's first comic, it's a study in hilarity. Aggressive, nervous, self-centered, a master of timing, Silvers displays mammoth energy as Biffle, star of the Blendo Soap Program. Always surrounded by a coterie of writers and paid admirers he gags his way through rehearsals, romance, commercials, public appearances and haircuts. All the oldest vaudeville jokes are in this movie but they're sparked to new life. The air is electric with the excitement of show business. Johnny Mercer wrote the music and lyrics. Cast includes Rose Marie, Danny School, Judy Lynn. Technicolor. Produced by Harry M. Popkin.

(More reviews on page 24)

"Don't Be Overweight!" says Mrs. Bob Hope

"Here's How You Can Lose Weight Easily and Pleasantly!"

No Drugs . . . No Diet . . . Results Guaranteed! Excess weight may ruin your health and your looks, too. Lovely movie stars lose weight the Ayds way—why not you? In fact, you must lose pounds with the very first box ($2.98) or your money back!

Proved by Clinical Tests. With Ayds you lose weight the way Nature intended you to—without strenuous dieting or hunger. A quick natural way, clinically tested and approved by doctors, with no risk to health. With the Ayds Plan you should feel healthier, look better while reducing—and have a lovelier figure.

Controls Hunger and Over-eating. When you take Ayds before meals, as directed, you can eat what you want—all you want. No starvation dieting—no gnawing hunger pangs.

Ayds is a specially made, low calorie candy fortified with health-giving vitamins and minerals. Ayds curbs your appetite—you automatically eat less—lose weight naturally, safely, quickly. It contains no drugs or laxatives.

New Loveliness in a Few Weeks. Users report losing up to ten pounds with the very first box. Others say they have lost twenty to thirty pounds with the Ayds Plan. Get a box today!

Mrs. Bob Hope with her pet cocker spaniel, Princess. "Ayds has done just wonderful things for my figure," she says.

Mrs. Hope is an ardent golfer. She says: "You can lose weight easily and pleasantly if you follow the Ayds way."

Lovely women everywhere, including many Hollywood stars, follow the Ayds way. Get Ayds at your drug or department store.

Reader's Digest Reports:

ONLY NEW COLGATE DENTAL CREAM

with Miracle Anti-Enzyme Ingredient GARDOL*

HAS THE CLINICAL PROOF!

(Proof that Brings New Hope to Millions for LIFETIME PROTECTION AGAINST TOOTH DECAY)

5 QUICK FACTS FROM THE READER'S DIGEST ARTICLE

"What About Anti-Enzyme Toothpastes?" December, 1953

1. Reader's Digest says—The most effective anti-enzyme toothpaste ingredient tested was developed in the Colgate laboratories.

(It's Colgate's miracle ingredient Gardol (Sodium N-Lauroyl Sarcosinate)—found in no other leading toothpaste!)

2. Reader's Digest says—One of the foremost dental authorities in the world proved that this ingredient binds itself effectively to the teeth—holds acid formation below the decay level in 95 per cent of cases tested.

(Unlike ordinary toothpaste ingredients, effective only for minutes, this protection won't rinse off—won't wear off—all day or all night!)

3. Reader's Digest says—Even 12 hours after brushing, this new Colgate anti-enzyme discovery continues to guard against the enzymes that cause tooth decay.

(Thus, regular morning and night use guards against decay-causing enzymes every minute of the day and night!)

4. Reader's Digest says—In full-year clinical tests, supervised by leading dental authorities—4 out of 5 of the people who used New Colgate's with Gardol developed no new cavities at all!

(Distinguished dentists examined this evidence and agreed—New Colgate's with Gardol gives the surest protection against decay ever offered by any toothpaste!)

5. Reader's Digest says—New Colgate Dental Cream is the only toothpaste with clinical proof of its effectiveness in actually reducing the formation of new cavities.

COLGATE RIBBON DENTAL CREAM

NOW! NEW COLGATE DENTAL CREAM CONTAINS GARDOL

(*SODIUM N-LAUROYL SARCOSINATE)

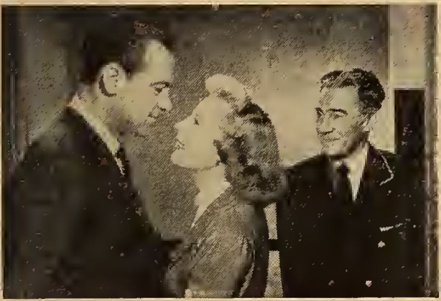
For LIFETIME PROTECTION AGAINST TOOTH-DECAY ENZYMES

RHAPSODY No greater love has Vittorio Gassman than his violin, which makes it hard for Elizabeth Taylor who won't play second fiddle. She'd like to set up house in some villa and reserve music for cocktails. Wealthy and willful, she follows Gassman to a conservatory in Zurich where her possessiveness ruins their relationship. Pianist John Ericson picks Liz up on the rebound. He's different from Gassman; he puts himself in Liz' hands and she proceeds to destroy him. This is the skeleton of Rhapsody, a romance touching on deep passions and examining the meaning of love. Flamboyant at times, suffering the lack of quiet sensitivity, it is nevertheless effective. It is also rich in music, offering among other shorter pieces, Tschaikowsky's Concerto in D Major (recorded by Michael Rabin) and Rachmaninoff's Concerto No. 2 in C Minor (recorded by Claudio Arrau). Technicolor—MGM.

BEACHHEAD Marine sergeant Frank Lovejoy is a bitter man. He lost all but three of his platoon on Guadalcanal and blames himself alone. Now he's assigned to find a French planter (Eduard Franz) on an island near Bougainville, three days before the assault on Bougainville itself. If he locates the planter, who has information about mines, he'll save thousands of G.I. lives. Not helping his morale are Tony Curtis, Skippy Homeier and Alan Wells who form his party. Homeier and Wells don't complain much—they die too soon—but Curtis makes up for them. Crawling through brush, evading Japanese by the droves, killing a few, they come upon Mary Murphy in a blue cotton dress. Franz is her dad and romance is not her game—but you know those marines. Supermen. Anyway, if you want a treatment instead of a treat don't miss Beachhead. Technicolor. With Sunshine Fukunaga.—United Artists.

INDISCRETION OF AN AMERICAN WIFE This is Vittorio De Sica's first American language film. It was photographed in Rome in a terminal station. Patti Page sings a couple of haunting melodies, and then there's the story of an extra-marital adventure. By using extraneous but supposedly telling glimpses of life in a railroad station, De Sica strains for high drama but achieves little more than the framework of it. As a respectable Philadelphia housewife, Jennifer Jones uses her mobile face to interesting but rarely convincing effect. She has fallen in love with an Italian college instructor, Montgomery Clift, who begs her to begin life anew with him. The film opens with her saying goodbye and not for one moment do you doubt she means it. But she misses her train and while waiting for a later one becomes involved in various episodes that comment on their love situation. With Dick Beymer.—Col.

SASKATCHEWAN The Canadian mountains are advertisement enough for Saskatchewan. Get tired of looking on the cruel face of Marshal Smith (Hugh O'Brian) you have only to lift your eyes to the range beyond. But in the valley, oh, there is trouble. With Indians. The Sioux that slaughtered Custer are crossing the border to wreak havoc among the Canadian Mounted Police of which Alan Ladd is a foremost memher. Ladd is a great friend of the Cree tribe who were peace loving until a new Mountie commander (Robert Douglas) confiscated their guns (used exclusively on game). Now they're ready to join the Sioux. Ready to join Ladd in holy matrimony is Shelley Winters who's been making her way north to escape a murder charge. Marshal Smith has come to fetch her. What with falling for Shelley and putting down a massacre almost singlehandedly Ladd sees plenty of action.—U-I.



EXECUTIVE SUITE When the big boss of a business empire expires there's always a scramble for his chair. And in the struggle for supremacy his potential successors unwittingly lay themselves bare. Slick, suspenseful and expertly acted, Executive Suite deals with this struggle. William Holden, Fredric March, Walter Pidgeon, Paul Douglas, Dean Jagger —vice-presidents all—must choose a leader among themselves. It is a crucial decision; it is the moment in their lives which is the summing up and the forecast of their futures. Each man is in a way a stereotype, but a good script and the aforementioned acting lift Executive Suite out of the "too pat" class and throw real light on human nature. As wives and sweethearts, June Allyson, Barbara Stanwyck, Shelley Winters, Virginia Brissac add substance to this portrait of men in industry. So do entrepreneur Louis Calhern and devoted secretary Nina Foch.—MGM

TENNESSEE CHAMP A Runyon-esque flavor laces this fable of a fighter (Dewey Martin) who's a "believer" and his manager (Keenan Wynn) who's a finagler. Escaping from a poker session where he took the pot (while no one was looking) Keenan races for the Mississippi River and there finds a watered Dewey. Dewey threw himself into the stream on the assumption that he'd just murdered Sixty Juhel (Charles Buchinsky). When Keenan rescues him Dewey is sure he's seen the hand of God. This same hand leads him into the prize ring where his soon notorious Sunday punch rakes in the dough for church and Keenan. Dewey's religious fervor spreads to Shelley Winters (Wynn's wife) who struggles to keep her man from robbing his protégé. Earl Holliman, a gem of sluggish mentality wedded to an undersized harmonica, is most amusing as ex-boxer Happy Jackfield. Technicolor—MGM

NEW SURE WAY TO

LOVELIER HANDS

IN ONLY 9 DAYS!

BEFORE
(unretouched photo)
AFTER 9 DAYS
(unretouched photo)
↑ Skin Dried Out from SOAPS AND DETERGENTS!
↑ Softer, Smoother Skin IN ONLY 9 DAYS!

PLAYTEX GLAMOROUS HOUSEWORK GLOVES make this daring promise never made before:

In only 9 days Playtex Gloves can help you restore the natural smoothness of your hands. And: The very first manicure you save pays for the gloves.

Made of Non-Allergenic "Living" Latex. Water-proof.

Fabric-lined for "bare hand" comfort. Never sticky, never clammy. Non-slip surface for "bare hand" grip. Extra-long turn-back cuffs prevent drip, splatter. Easy on and off. Finger free, can pick up a pin or a dime. Get them today. At department and drug stores. $1.39

Prices slightly higher outside U. S. A.

PLAYTEX® LIVING FABRIC LINED LATEX GLOVES

©1954
International Latex Corp'n, PLAYTEX PARK, Dover Del., In Canada: Playtex Ltd., Arnprior, Ontario

A beautiful NEW note in ring styling

JEWELLED Duet

UNJEWELLED Duet

UNJEWELLED Harmony Duet

Symphony by Genuine Orange Blossom

Fresh new designs, smartly different, yet so sweet and simple in styling as to radiate everlasting charm.

In these lovely rings you'll discover an artful composition of mellow gold and scintillating diamonds — as artistically and subtly blended as a beautiful symphonic masterpiece.

Write for illustrated Orange Blossom Tradition booklet.

Traub Mfg. Co., 1938 McGraw—Detroit 8

BEAT THE DEVIL Somewhere in the Mediterranean are a group of people so odd, so droll, so delightfully abandoned they must come from the pen of Truman Capote. They do. And John Huston directed Beat The Devil, a fantastically funny film. Humphrey Bogart and wife Gina Lollobrigida are delayed in a town on their way to Africa. Also delayed are Bogart's business associates—four bloodless, bombastic fakers—Robert Morley, Marco Tulli, Peter Lorre, Ivor Barnard. Delayed, too, are Jennifer Jones, a congenital liar of the utmost charm and her snobbish husband Edward Underdown. The associates are headed for African uranium deposits. Meanwhile the movie moves very matter of factly through outrageous events like murder, larceny, shipwreck and plain lunacy. Jennifer woos Humphrey; Gina stalks Underdown; an Arab police chief (Gulio Donnini) sells justice for an introduction to Rita Hayworth. Go see it!—United Artists

RIOT IN CELL BLOCK 11 Filmed in the vast cell blocks of Folsom State Prison, utilizing hundreds of actual inmates for the mob scenes, Riot In Cell Block 11 is grimly realistic. As entertainment it is exciting, unusual fare, but its more serious purpose is to awaken taxpayers to the burden they share; the burden of rehabilitating criminals who are also human beings. Herded together by the simple fact that they have broken the law are psychopaths, perverts, scarred old men, young boys, morons and intellects. Rehabilitation in an atmosphere so charged with disorder—and often with neglect—becomes a meaningless word. The rioters demand a new penal policy. Their outburst is brutal, desperate and frightening and brings out the militia. Nothing is accomplished, the leader (Neville Brand) draws an extra thirty years to his sentence, but at least the public has been alerted. With Emile Meyer, Leo Gordon, Robert Osterlob, Frank Faylen.—Allied Artists

NEW FACES New Faces won Broadway with its clever appeal and its—until then—unknown talent. Now 20th Century-Fox brings this musical revue, more or less intact, to the screen. They've added a plot line too feeble to be harmful. The line is: will showgirl Coocoo Clayborn's father fork over some dough before the creditors arrive? Coocoo (Virginia DeLuce) is a vast, luscious, stagestruck blonde whose dad happily struck oil in Texas. Meanwhile there's Eartha Kitt turning "Monotonous" into a love call and slinking through several other songs—like "C'est Si Bon"—that made her famous. There are Ronny Graham, Alice Ghostly and Paul Lynde who separately and together (in a skit burlesquing Death Of A Salesman) are hilarious. There are French singer Robert Clary, June Carroll and a chorus and dancers all of whom perform vibrantly against artistic settings. Technicolor.—20th-Fox

TAZA, SON OF COCHISE Taza (Rock Hudson), son of newly dead Cochise, has a thorn in his side. That's kid brother Bart Roberts who wants to steal his girl (Barbara Rush) and strew the west with scalps. Rock makes a deal with army captain Gregg Palmer. Let Indians punish Indians, he says, and there'll be peace. Okay, says the captain. But kid brother and Barbara's old man Grey Eagle (Morris Ankrum) plan to liquidate that captain. Apaches have become nothing but sissies, they say, we want out of this reservation, we want war. And when Geronimo (Ian MacDonald) is set to pasture on the reservation he nearly loses his mind. War it is and who does General Robert Burton blame? Taza, natch. And who saves General Robert Burton when he is about to be parted from life? T—a. After the massacre, though, comes peace—because who's left standing to pull the trigger? 3-D, Technicolor—U-I.

RECOMMENDED FILMS NOW PLAYING

THE LONG, LONG TRAILER (MGM): Lucille Ball and Desi Arnaz star in this happy, bilarious tale of honeymooners on a trailer trip. A natural for everyone who loves Lucy and her zany ways. Technicolor.

MAN IN THE ATTIC (20th-Fox): Jack Palance as Jack the Ripper—and what could make a more terrifying combination? Constance Smith is around, as scared as the audience, and Byron Palmer is there, too, to see that everything comes out all right.

RED GARTERS (Paramount): This take-off on a horse-opera has Rosemary Clooney, Guy Mitchell, Pat Crowley, Joanne Gilbert, Jack Carson, Gene Barry, Technicolor and music. You want more? Well, it's funny, too!

KING OF THE KHYBER RIFLES (20th-Fox): Action, romance, sandstorms and blood make this one exciting. Those involved are Tyrone Power, Terry Moore and Michael Rennie—all as good as you'd expect. CinemaScope, too.

THE GLENN MILLER STORY (U-I): A tender, moving tribute to the memory of a great bandleader, this film will let you laugh and cry to your heart's content. Jimmy Stewart does a great job as Miller, and June Allyson, as the girl he married, contributes a delightful performance. If you liked Miller's music, you'll love the soundtrack. Louis Armstrong and Gene Krupa help out. Technicolor.

IT SHOULD HAPPEN TO YOU (Col.): One of the most delightful comedies of the normal (that's 2-D) screen, this one stars Judy Holliday as a startlingly average girl who indulges her craving for fame by renting a huge billboard and emblazoning her name thereon! Peter Lawford plays the worried representative of a soap company desperately in need of the billboard and Jack Lemmon is the young man who loved Judy before she was famous.

ACT OF LOVE (U.A.): This is the poignant story of a soldier and a girl who meet and love in a world of blackmarkets, police and war. Kirk Douglas is excellent as the G.I. who offers shelter to the frightened Lisa (Dany Robin) and tries to protect their romance in the face of impossible odds. Irwin Shaw wrote the fine script.

KNIGHTS OF THE ROUND TABLE (MGM): Mel Ferrer as King Arthur, ruling the heroic Knights; Ava Gardner as Queen Guinevere ruling the romantic heart of Sir Launcelot (Robert Taylor). Also decorative in costume, CinemaScope and Technicolor are Ann Crawford and Maureen Swanson.

Your hair is romance

. . . keep it sunshine bright

with White Rain

You know it's true—the most delightful beauty asset you can have is lovely hair. Hair that's bright to see, soft to touch, as fresh as a playful spring breeze—the kind of hair you have when you use the new lotion shampoo that gives you results like softest rain water. For White Rain sprinkles your hair with dancing sunlight. And with sunshine all around you—love and laughter follow after. Love and laughter . . . the essence of romance.

Use New White Rain Shampoo tonight and tomorrow your hair will be sunshine bright!

FABULOUS LOTION SHAMPOO
BY TONI

She stuck in her thumb,
And pulled out PINK PLUM
And cried, "What a smart girl am I!"

Smart girl, indeed! For what could be more tempting to the lips than the sun-ripe, sun-sweet color of fresh plums? And what more effective accent to the whole new range of Paris blues, off-pinks, charcoal and black? (Nice, too, to know that Cashmere Bouquet's Pink Plum stays pink, stays on—for hours—without re-touching!)

7 Cover-Girl Colors 49¢

Conover girls pick Cashmere Bouquet

"We teach our Conover School students how to use Cashmere Bouquet Indelible-Type lipstick. They apply, splash cold water on their lips, then blot. The color clings for hours!"

Candy Jones (Mrs. Harry Conover) Director Conover School

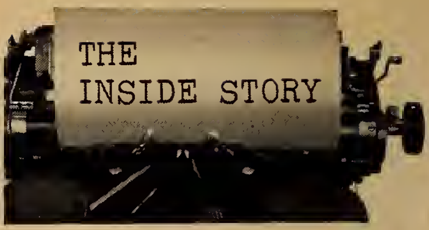
cashmere bouquet
INDELIBLE-TYPE LIPSTICK
Super-Creamed to Keep Your Lips Like Velvet



THE INSIDE STORY

(Continued from page 4)

A. Doris does not dislike Hope but she will no longer play "straight lady" to him on radio or TV shows.

Q. Will Mario Lanza ever work in Hollywood movies again?
—C.O., BILOXI, MISS.

A. Not until he convinces producers that he is in sound mental and physical health.

Q. Isn't Maureen O'Hara's secret Mexican crush millionaire Luis Parra?
—N.F., TIAJUANA, MEXICO

A. Maureen is extremely fond of Señor Parra.

Q. I've read that RKO plans to remake the old Astaire-Rogers musicals. Will Astaire and Rogers star in these again? —W.L., BOULDER, COL.

A. The scripts are being rewritten and will feature new stars.

Q. I understand that there'll be no more 3-D pictures. Why is this? I like them! Only for this would I wear glasses. —B.I., NEW YORK, N. Y.

A. 3-D films will continue to be made until the industry agrees on one photographic system.

Q. Why has Clark Gable refused to sign a new contract with MGM, the company which gave him his start?
—C.U., ROLLINS, VA.

A. Gable wants more time and money for himself.

Q. Lena Horne is colored and her husband Lennie Hayton is white. How does Hollywood accept this mixed marriage?
—F.J., BILOXI, MISS.

A. Mr. and Mrs. Hayton are accepted calmly.

Q. Why doesn't Zsa Zsa Gabor ever pose with her child?
—T.R., LAS VEGAS, CALIF.

A. She thinks such photos might damage the impression of perennial glamour she seeks to convey.

Q. I understand that before he fell in love with Ingrid Bergman, the Italian director Roberto Rossellini was so much in love with Marilyn Buferd, Miss America of 1946, that he gave her a pair of earrings and an antique bracelet worth more than $10,000. Does Miss Buferd still have this jewelry?
—V.E., ROME, ITALY.

A. On returning to the United States, Miss Buferd inadvertently failed to declare this jewelry. Customs officials in New York appraised the gifts from Rossellini at $60.

Classic Modern in blond oak—a charming design for any room in the house. Self-lifting tray; rubbed and polished finish. Model #3025. Lane Table, #247. Chest price, $$59^{95}$*

For the girl with future plans–or the wife with storage problems...

A LANE CEDAR CHEST!

IF YOUR future plans include a trousseau, you'll find there's nothing like a Lane Cedar Chest! It helps you gather treasures the gradual, economical way. Friends and relatives add their gifts, too . . . to your precious collection of fine linens, towels, blankets, delicate lingerie.

Or, as a homemaker, you'll bless your Lane for being such a handsome, practical piece of storage furniture! It keeps costly suits, coats, woolens, sweet-smelling and fresh—safe from moths and dust—as no other storage method can. Just one nice garment saved from moths can pay for a Lane! Lane Chests are sold at most leading furniture and department stores.

Also makers of Lane Tables.

Lane is the ONLY pressure-tested, aroma-tight cedar chest. Made of ¾-inch red cedar in accordance with U. S. Gov't recommendations, with a free moth-protection guarantee underwritten by one of the world's largest insurance companies, issued upon proper application. Helpful hints for storing are in each chest. The Lane Co., Inc., Dept. Z, Altavista, Va. In Canada: Knechtels, Ltd., Hanover, Ont.

Many at... $$49^{95}$* Easy terms

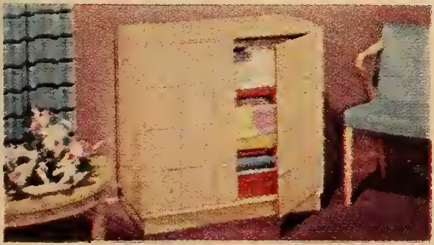
$5.00 higher in the West due to higher freight costs—slightly higher in Canada.*



LIVING ROOM

Modern Console in blond oak. Interior drawer, adjustable shelves. Consoles also in other styles. Model C-108—$99.95.*

FOYER

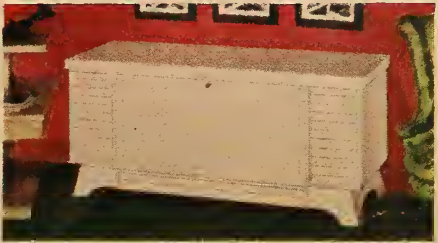
Handsome 18th-Century Chest in rich mahogany with Lane's convenient self-lifting tray. Model #2601—$59.95.*

BEDROOM

Streamlined Modern in matched American walnut and paldao wood. Self-lifting tray. Model #3024—$49.95.*

FOYER

Stunning Modern in American walnut. Self-lifting tray. Model #3008. Gray walnut, #3009; Seafoam mahogany, #3022. $59.95.*



LIVING ROOM

Arresting Modern in Seafoam mahogany. Drawer in base; self-lifting tray. Model #2925—$69.95.* Lane Table, #257.

LIVING ROOM

Attractive Modern in blond oak. Model #3027. Also in Seafoam mahogany, #3046; walnut, #3028. Each $49.95.* Lane Table, #437.

4 for the price of 3!

So pure, so mild! Yet, 4 cakes of Personal Size Ivory cost about the same as 3 cakes of other leading toilet soaps!

Count 'em . . .
one, two, three, four!
Only Ivory gives you
one cake more!
Get pure, mild Ivory . . .
Personal Size!

America's Best Beauty Buy!

A PRETTY CAKE FOR A PRETTIER YOU!

See how dainty this Personal Size Ivory is? As you know, it's the handy toilet-soap size of pure, mild Ivory. Beautifies your bathroom—and oh, what nice things Ivory does for your complexion, too! No wonder it's the most famous skin care in the world—this gentle Ivory care!

$99\frac{44}{100}$% pure...it floats

NEW BEAUTY IN A WEEK—THAT IVORY LOOK!

More doctors advise Ivory for baby's skin and yours than any other! So change to regular care and use Personal Size Ivory. In one week you'll have a softer, smoother, younger-looking complexion—That Ivory Look!

THE BEST BEAUTY CARE IS THE THRIFTIEST, TOO!

Just think, you get four cakes of Personal Size Ivory for about the same price as three cakes of other leading toilet soaps! Better pick up a supply of your Personal Size Ivory this very day. It's your best beauty buy.

More doctors advise Ivory than any other soap!

Let the welkin ring!
Lawford the elusive is about to become a groom—caught by the one girl who ran the other way!

BY SUSAN TRENT

Pat Kennedy, daughter of the former Ambassador to England, sister of Senator John Kennedy of Massachusetts, is the girl.

PETE'S PAT

■ Joseph P. Kennedy, former United States Ambassador to the Court of St. James, has announced the betrothal of his daughter, Patricia, to Peter Lawford.

This announcement comes as no surprise to Hollywood. For months, Pete has been pursuing Pat Kennedy back and forth across the continent. His denial of any serious intentions was simply put down to Pete's conservatism and to his insistence on impeccable behavior. Naturally, he would wait for the first announcement of his engagement to come from the bride's family. One day before Mr. Kennedy's announcement, Pete told Modern Screen, "Pat and I have been friends for years. There is definitely no romance. No romance at all."

Why had he been spending all of his spare time with Miss Kennedy? (Pete has had a lot of spare time. Since Metro dropped him last year, he has been in only one picture—It Should Happen To You, a sparkling comedy with Judy Holliday.)

"All of that," Pete answered, "is pure coincidence."

But he was unconvincing. Pat Kennedy has been working for NBC television in New York and with Family Theatre in Hollywood. Pete has been commuting cross-country. Hardly any man does that kind of thing casually, and it didn't seem characteristic of Pete Lawford. Pat and Pete were often seen together down at the beach in Santa Monica; Pete drove to the Beverly Hills Hotel every day to pick up Pat; they were often together at cocktail parties in Bel-Air.

Apparently, it took (Continued on page 85)

by Louella Parsons

Hollywood's most famous reporter felt like a prying D.A. but when Louella finished with Clark she had a full confession.

Gable and his girls

■ There never will be another Mrs. Clark Gable!

"I'll never marry again," Clark told me, quietly. And then he smiled, "But I shall always enjoy the company of lovely ladies."

As disheartening as this news will be to the femmes who consider The King the most attractive man on the screen and the dozens of beauties all over the world who would love to become Mrs. Gable Number Five, the statement was made by Mr. G. himself with almost cheerful finality on the unseasonably hot day in February when he came a visitin'.

Seemingly completely oblivious of the death-knell he was sounding to millions of feminine daydreams, he went on, "Oh, yes, frequently I am lonely. But as my life lines up today, as I see my future, I never expect to marry again."

I looked at Clark as he is today. He might have been a ruddy Englishman dropped in for a spot of tea. He had arrived at my house correctly garbed for the afternoon in a sports coat of brown-checked tweed (heat and all), with a deep tan and looking the picture of health and vigor.

It had been at least two years since we had seen each other. And yet, so deep is our friendship and of such long standing, that it might have been just yesterday that I had seen Clark or interviewed him for a Sunday story or just chatted as we frequently did when he dropped in for a social call.

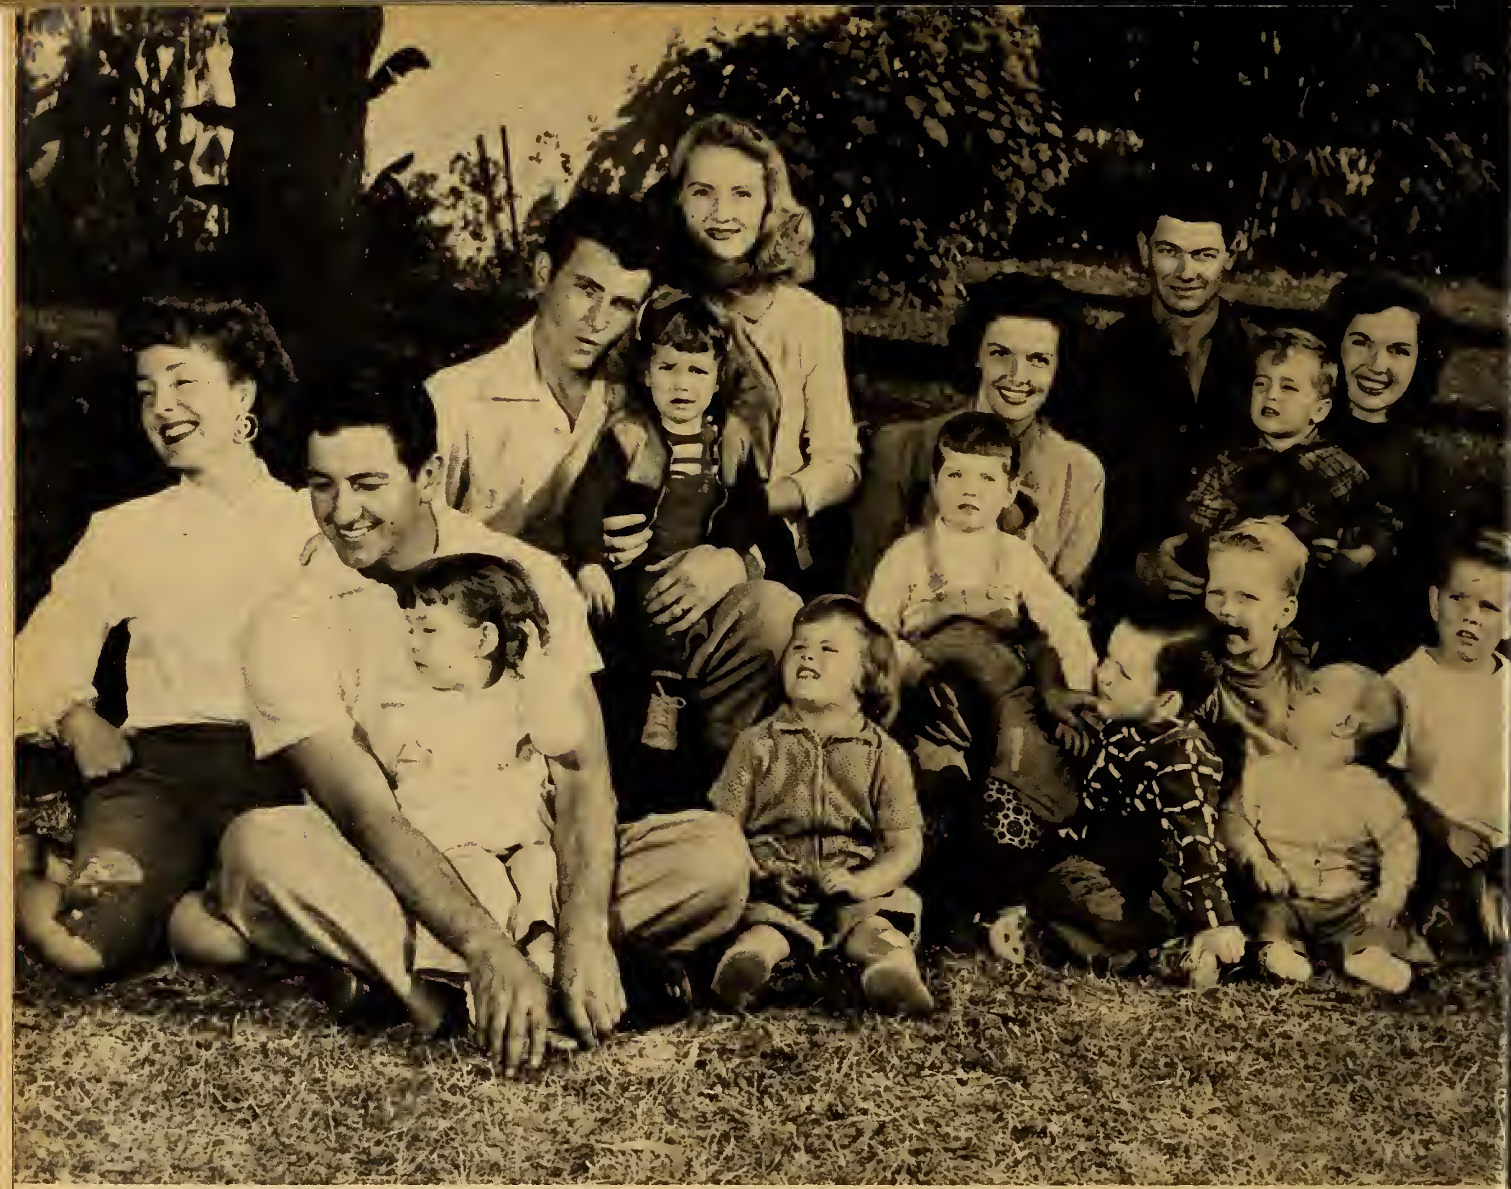
I've known The King the full twenty-four years he has been in California. It would be silly to say that he has not changed greatly—particularly in the past few years when he has added a high continental polish to the basic he-man appeal he has always had.

Clark has spent the last twenty-four months working and traveling in Europe. He now speaks French like a native. He talks interestingly of the many countries he has visited and the great experiences he has had.

But I was of a mind to concentrate particularly on his highly publicized experiences with the beautiful ladies.

The King laughed when I persisted in asking about beautiful blonde Grace Kelly (the new Hollywood sensation) with whom Clark was supposed to have (Continued on page 79)

Good friend Louella feels that Clark has never forgotten Carole, needs a woman adept at giving, not taking, in love.



That's Jane in the middle. She is holding her daughter Tracy; the boy in the checked shirt is her son Tommy. Left to right are brothers Tom, Wally, Jamie

■ A first-time visitor to Ma Russell's acreage out in the San Fernando Valley must come away completely exhausted and more than a little bug-eyed. He couldn't possibly take it all in during a single visit. "It's a rabbit hutch," muttered one unnerved individual as he crept away.

The family of Jane Russell tells this on itself with huge delight. They couldn't care less if they really lived in a rabbit hutch and, besides, they thought it was a pretty fair description. Undulating in and about two small houses and the chapel which is the heart of their existence are Mother Russell, ninety-year-old Great-aunt Jane, the four Russell boys, their wives, ten small children and assorted dogs. Except for Great-aunt Jane, who entertains herself by reading the obituaries of people far younger, they are all terribly active. When she isn't making a picture, daughter Jane and her two young ones add to the energetic population as much as possible—and, of course, there are always other people drifting about the premises for spiritual solace, for a handout, or simply because they've fallen under the spell of the oddball Russells.

"They're the most wonderful people in the world," commented a friend who could, by temperament, easily be blood kin to them. She added without any change of expression, "I went up to see Mother Russell right after I got out of the insane asylum, and the first person I saw was Jamie, out in the yard. He hollered, 'Hey, here comes the crazy girl!' and that was that.

"You don't see anything particularly wonderful about it? That's the Russell approach to everything: bring it out into the open. Secret things are bad things, secret wounds fester, so they don't have any. When I got out of the insane asylum, everybody but the Russells avoided the subject like the plague. So, for a long time, they were the only people I felt comfortable with."

As it happens, the girl had merely suffered a nervous breakdown—but if she had gone completely off her rocker, she'd be right at home with the Russell family. They're all crazy, too. It's a pleasurable state of mind which they enjoy except for the inconvenience that Jane's career has caused them. "I'm a character," admits Kenny, her second brother, without a trace of self-consciousness. "I've been one all my life, and nobody noticed a thing until Daughter became a movie star. After that, I had to watch myself. When I was being perfectly natural, people accused me of showing off because I was Jane Russell's and Kenny; each surrounded by wife and kids.

Meet Jane Russell's screwy, scrappy, scrumptious brothers and the lovely lunatics they married. Meet them—and duck!

BY STEVE CRONIN

they're all CRAZY!

brother. It was enough to inhibit anybody—except me, I guess."

The Russells now live—or, at least, poise momentarily—in the citrus grove of what was originally the family estate. Standing at Ma's or Jamie's front door, they can look over at the huge hacienda that was the home of their childhood, sold after the death of Father Russell because there was no money left to maintain it. The house and five acres of land went, the Palomino saddle horses, the children's ponies and most of the stock. Being Russells, the family neither avoids looking at the big house nor cares a whit that it no longer belongs to them. Being Russells, they're too busy living it up in the present to brood about the past.

Although Jane controlled her brothers by systematically belting the daylights out of them, Ken was (Continued on page 88)

you gotta elevate!

IT'S FINE TO BE PRETTY BOY ON TOP, BOB SAYS, BUT YOU HAVE TO BE PRETTY GOOD TO STAY THERE!

by Jack Wade

■ "You know," said Bob Wagner, "I'm the luckiest guy in the whole town. And," he added, "I'm on about the roughest spot."

"Come again?" I puzzled. "What did you say?"

Bob grinned. He's got a great grin, simply great. It's a grin that would charm a cobra before it could spread a hood. "Come on over to my room," he said, "and we'll put on some music. I can talk then. It soothes the savage beast."

"Breast," I corrected.

"For me," he kidded, "it has to be beast!"

I had dropped in on R. J. out at his film factory, Twentieth Century-Fox, as I like to do every now and then to check up on the progress of my favorite boy. I like Bob, and I always have. I first met him in the days when he was just another handsome young Hollywood Joe hoping to get started in this acting business. His folks were taking care of him and the most serious concern he had in the world was trying to talk Debbie Reynolds into a date and straightening out his two-iron pokes at the Bel-Air Country Club.

Lately, the dropping in had gotten a little tougher. In fact, this trip I'd waited about a month before I could catch up with Wagner. So I wondered if some of the sharpies around town could possibly be right; that is, that all this swoon star business which has suddenly seized Bob by the seat of his slacks was making a very nice fellow impossible to get at and more impossible to get along with. I didn't believe it, but a reporter has to find out those things for himself.

I had asked Bob right off how he was doing and he came back with that cryptic crack. Furthermore, I seemed to notice that his old faithful smile buttoned itself down again in a straight line a little more quickly than it used to. Could he have problems?

Bob loosened (Continued on page 64)

MODERN SCREEN went with Bob and Mona Freeman for a day at the races

Bob took fellow star Mona Freeman to the races but prefers to date private. "I've got swell girls stashed away," he claims happily.

Always well-dressed, Bob likes custom-made clothes—and admits that he spends too much for them.

Racing fan Bob tried unsuccessfully to buy a horse. Now he asks, "Well, what would I do with him? My eardrum hurts when I bounce."

Hotdogs are fine at the races, but, to his own surprise, Bob usually finds himself eating at Romanoff's.

Enjoying the relative privacy of the races, Bob is worried by girls who mob him in the streets. He'd prefer them to mob his films.

No more silly photos or publicity love affairs, Bob announced, as he embraced Mona for the camera!

BEGRIMED, BOTHERED AND BEWILDERED ARE

Startled by unexpected crowds when they landed at Tokyo Airport, Marilyn and Joe climbed out of the plane, ducked back and finally came out again—smiling bravely for photographers.

At Tokyo Army Hospital, Camp Tokyo, Marilyn chatted with a Japanese employee, Miss Taeko Fukagawa. Later she was given a Japanese movie magazine—with her picture on the cover!

THE DI MAGGIOS—THEY DIDN'T THINK ANYONE WOULD EVER RECOGNIZE THEM IN JAPAN!

Marilyn was mobbed and presented with flowers by thousands of cheering Japanese admirers while Joe and baseball coach Lefty O'Doul (with hand upraised) got their first taste of playing second fiddle.

Surrounded by cameramen, questioned by over eighty reporters, Marilyn posed at the Imperial Hotel in Tokyo with her eyes on her husband—who was interviewed by four worshipful sports writers.

Marilyn and Joe planned a secret visit to a tiny fishing village but the harassed pair were accompanied by the press as they strolled through the town, smiling and trying unsuccessfully to talk to the inhabitants.

In the Tokyo Army Hospital Marilyn kissed S 1/C James W. Riley of Greenboro, North Carolina. To visit one wounded G.I., forced to lie face down, Marilyn stretched out on the floor, looked up.

marilyn and joe:

who turned love's dream into a free-for-all?

■ Marilyn Monroe's honeymoon began in the restful, secluded, rustic fashion typical of honeymoons.

Her attorney, Lloyd Wright, insisted that she and Joe spend a week or two at his summer estate in Idylwild, a peaceful mountain village overlooking the desert resort of Palm Springs. There they stayed for the ten days after their hectic marriage in January.

They romped in the snow, swam in the pool, took sunbaths and rides into the desert. In Marilyn's words, "We had the most wonderful time." This, while hundreds of photographers and reporters were searching for them everywhere.

Once Marilyn and Joe left the safety of their mountain hideout, their honeymoon became a free-for-all, a colossal clambake involving agents, baseball players, 20th Century-Fox, the U.S. Army, Japan and millions of movie fans.

Marilyn and Joe Di Maggio planned a quiet honeymoon. They are both shy and retiring. The last thing in the world they wanted was to make their wedding trip the object of international reporting.

(Continued on page 41)

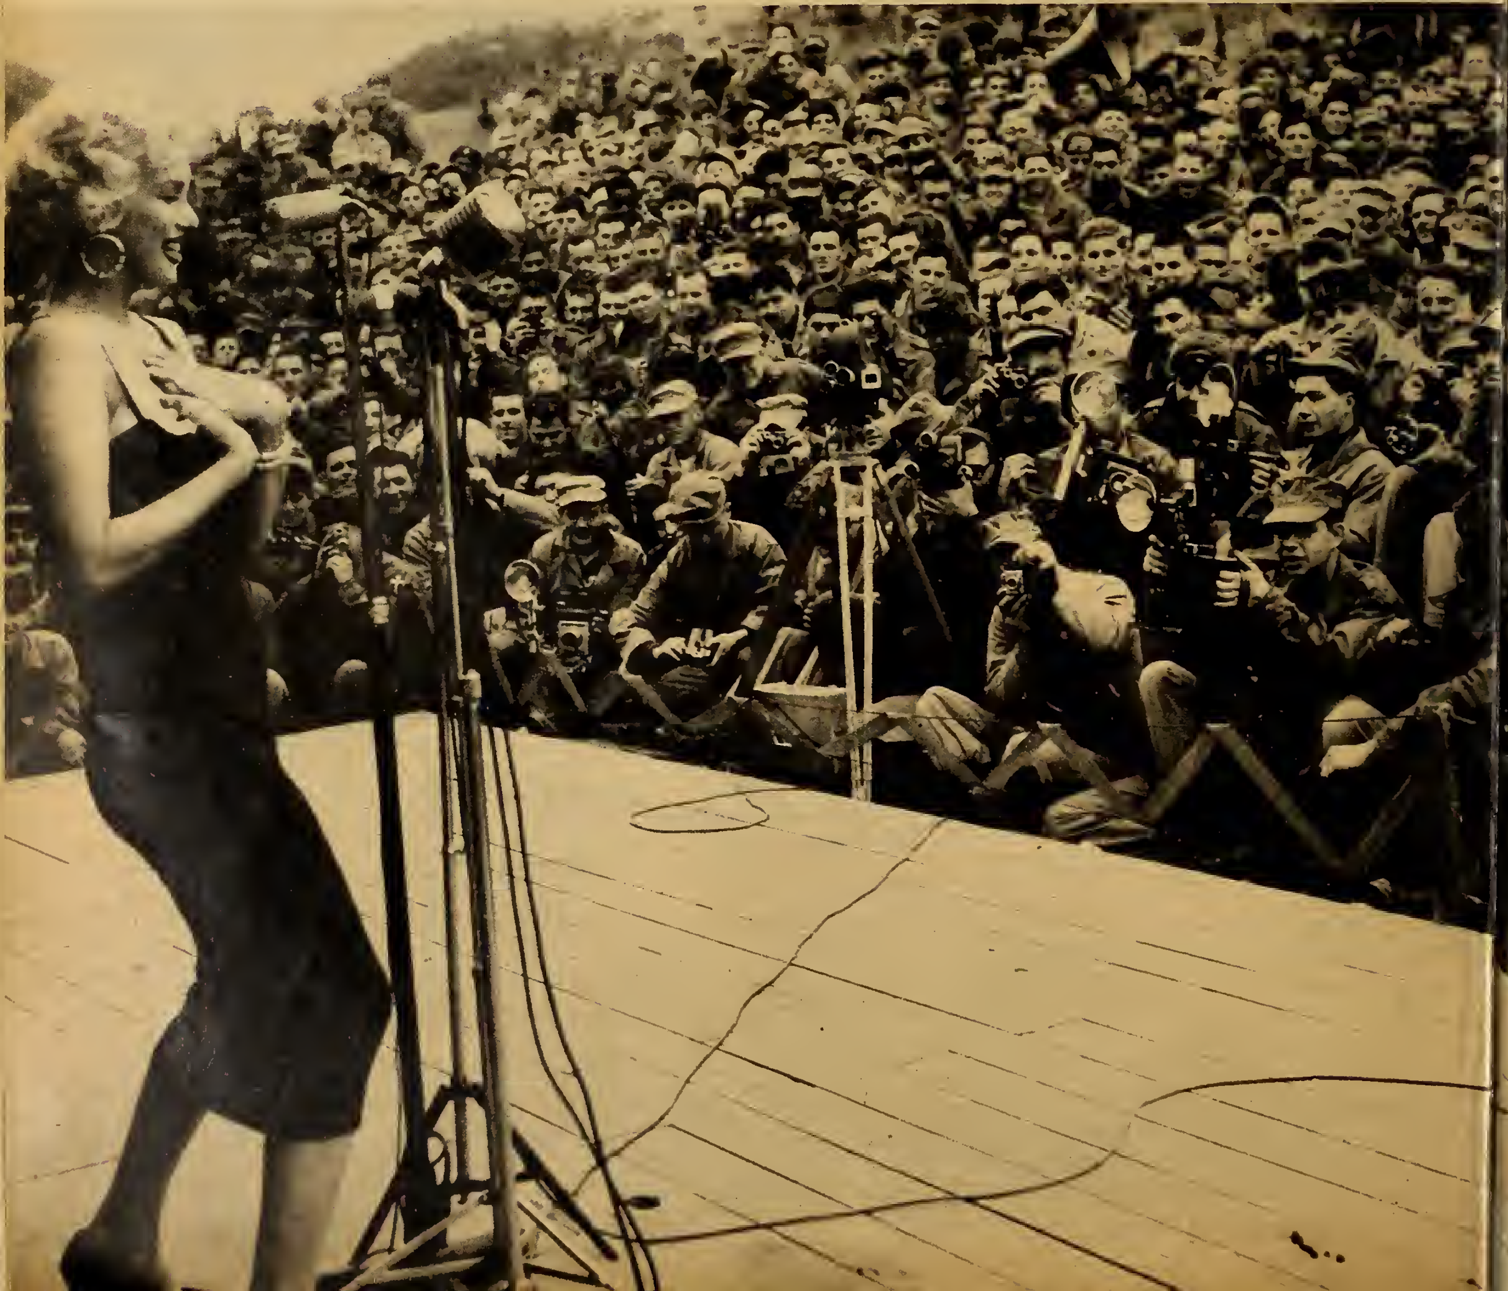
continued

MARILYN VISITS KOREA:

Traveling in slacks, Marilyn took a helicopter to the First Marine Division area where she performed for 13,000 Marines.

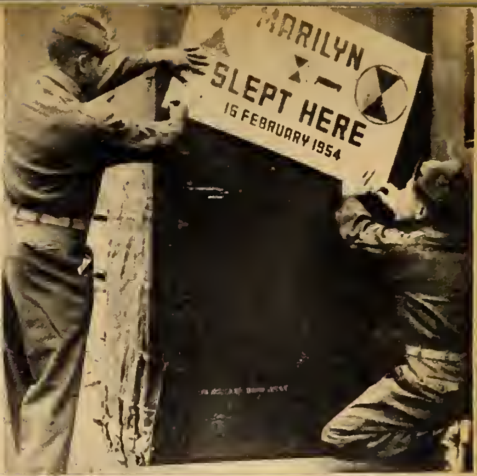
Pleased Army cooks reported that Marilyn was "just great—she eats anything!" In three days in Korea, Marilyn gave ten performances with the Special Services show, Anything Goes.

CHEERFULLY, MARILYN DONATED PART OF HER HARRIED HONEYMOON TO TOURING KOREA IN A COCKTAIL



At Cuchon Air Force Base Marilyn discarded her famous purple cocktail dress, draped herself in a tub for the benefit of delighted Air Force photographers.

She posed obligingly with two members of the "Golden Dragons," the 25th Division baseball team, but offered no batting hints.



Two 7th Division G.I.'s tacked up a commemorative sign after Marilyn's departure. They had politely removed Monroe calendars.

DRESS, CAUSED A NEAR-RIOT AMONG BATTLE-HARDENED G.I.'S WHO CLAIMED WAR WAS NEVER LIKE THIS!

(Continued from page 39) Somehow they got caught in the web of circumstance and before they knew it they were living their private life in public.

After their memorable stay in Idylwild, Joe flew to New York to transact business with his attorneys, and Marilyn secretly slipped into Hollywood.

She read the script of Pink Tights and decided not to do the picture. That is, not unless the script were completely rewritten. Pink Tights had been made once before under the title Coney Island, and Marilyn simply felt that "it wasn't for me."

While Marilyn was hiding in Hollywood, talking only to her business manager, her agent, and one or two favored friends, Joe was talking on the phone to Lefty O'Doul in San Francisco.

One of the great baseball players of the century, Lefty had not only given Joe his first opportunity in organized baseball, but he had always remained a staunch friend. Joe had confided to him his intention to marry Marilyn, and Lefty had said, "Why don't you have your honeymoon in Japan? I'm going over there in a couple of weeks to coach. Why don't you and Marilyn come along? The Japanese people respect privacy. You can have a great time."

Since this happened a few days before the wedding, Joe didn't want to commit himself.

"I don't know," he said. "Marilyn is supposed to make another picture and, well, we'll see what comes up."

What came up was Marilyn's refusal to do Pink Tights and her subsequent suspension by the studio, giving her all the free time she cared to take. When Joe heard from Marilyn that she wasn't going into another film immediately, he and O'Doul began setting plans for the trip to the Orient. (Continued on page 95)

Moments of peace were rare for the newlyweds when Marilyn rejoined Joe on Japan's inland sea near Hiroshima—and found photographers waiting even there.

1. Relaxing at Palm Springs with friend Anne Francis, Mitzi finds that her well-developed muscles require constant attention.

2. Will power was essential for dieting. Finding her own unreliable, Mitzi shrewdly enlisted the aid of a watchful waiter.

3. New, slim figure brought new, sleek clothes, whole new personality to Mitzi, who now feels very sophisticated, very 21.

MITZI'S MIRACLE

Here are the very first pictures of the new Mitzi Gaynor—minus twenty-five pounds, plus a sleek new shape to her personality!

by Imogene Collins

■ Almost all stories about Hollywood's incredible personality changes are apocryphal. They are illustrated by tricked-up photos, a blonde or brunette hair dye and sketchy instructions on how Miss Average Girl may go and do likewise. This is something Miss Average Girl seldom does because she is blessed with more intelligence than Hollywood press agents suspect. She may not be a world-beating enchantress, but what she has is better than what she might have if she followed a lot of ridiculous blueprints offered by a publicity-hungry actress.

A single exception to a (Continued on page 44)

More pictures on page 44

That's me 4 months ago?

It simply couldn't be!

I mean, I was actually fat!

Easy come is not easy go where poundage is concerned. But Mitzi found that if you watch the ounces, the pounds eventually take care of themselves.

Fiancé Jack Bean dieted with Mitzi. Together they feasted on butterless vegetable plates, wept into their low-calorie soft drinks, until joyful Jack lost 15 pounds. Mitzi's miracle diet list is on page 62.

(Continued from page 42) rule that has been in force ever since the first Quick Movie Diet and Fast Leap to Loveliness was invented, is provided by this girl named Mitzi Gaynor.

"I had to do something," she recalls. "A little over a year ago, in March, 1953, to be exact, my appendix and I parted company. When my head cleared after the operation I found myself with a ravenous appetite. As soon as they'd let me I ate everything in sight. In a matter of days I'd gained fifteen pounds.

"It's a funny thing. When you're growing up your parents will let you take ballet lessons or acrobatic dancing. They'd even let you play right halfback on the football team if you could find one that would take girls. Both mother and dad are delighted to help fulfill your girlish ambitions.

"The only trouble is that they don't know, and neither do you, that as you become a girl athlete you develop some pretty strong muscles that are going to become a headache unless you plan a career as a lady wrestler. Or, unless you can combine the same determination you had in the beginning with some sensible ideas on diet, clothes planning, hair-do and such, not necessarily in that order."

The most important among the few more items mentioned by Mitzi is will power. This differs from determination. You can be determined for ten seconds and then lose your will power to carry on that determination. The nice thing about will power is that it is always inside you, but sometimes slow to wake up to its full strength. When that happens, sometimes you can borrow someone else's will power to tide you over.

That has happened to Mitzi, most frequently at the (Continued on page 62)

TWICE, HIS FAITH HAS SAVED JEFF'S LIFE. ALWAYS, IT HAS TAUGHT HIM HOW TO LIVE.

towards the sun

by Jeff Hunter

■ Two years ago, on a sunny afternoon, off the Isle of Gozo near Malta in the Mediterranean, I did a darn fool thing. I went skin-diving alone. The studio had chosen this part of the south of Europe to film A Sailor Of The King and I had been given a few days off by the director of the picture.

With flippers on my feet I went sightseeing along the shore. I was wearing goggles through which I could peer deep beneath the surface of the water at the marine growths and rock formations.

I was swimming along like this an hour later, miles from anyone, when I saw an undersea cave just below me. Getting curious I kicked my way down to it and wriggled into the opening. Ahead in the dimly-lit water were odd shapes, like statues in a grotto, that were hard to make out, so I kept working my way closer. I was far inside

(Continued on page 74)

The curtain has lifted at last. Ann Blyth McNulty is now ready to let the world share her first shining year of marriage and her first shining home!

BY MARVA PETERSON

DOCTOR'S WIFE

This is the "denning room", filled with the sun-lit patterns Ann loves. Here the McNultys eat, informally entertain their closest friends around the corner fireplace.

The eight-room McNulty house, built in the Connecticut farmhouse tradition, will be their permanent home, Ann hopes. Shaded by three giant walnut trees, the large lawn allows Ann to indulge a childhood craving to squirt a hose to her heart's content.

Carefully cushioned and quilted couches with an Hawaiian floral print dominate the blue livingroom; like the marble-topped table, they were designed for the McNultys by decorator Mitchell Numier. The large fireplace is used even in the summer.

■ Nothing in a doctor's private life can be planned with certainty except taxes. When she accepted the name of Mrs. James V. McNulty, Ann Blyth accepted that fact. It was one of the things Jim warned her about before their marriage.

"I want you to know," he said, "that my time isn't my own, that I'll be called out at the most outlandish hours, and that many nights you'll be alone and waiting."

In the nine months that she's been a doctor's wife, Ann has learned to accept all of this.

Only a few months ago, she expected Jim home for dinner in fifteen minutes when the hospital called to say that Dr. McNulty was delayed in obstetrics. Thirty minutes lengthened into an hour. One hour became two. At nine o'clock Ann strode into the kitchen.

"Barbara," she told the housekeeper. "No point in your waiting up. I'll serve the doctor when he comes in." Then she walked back into the dimly-lit den, her beautiful head tilted in a listening position. She wasn't particularly hungry. She had passed that point. Nor was she sleepy. Just disappointed.

This was their six months' anniversary. She had prepared a special dinner—cake, candles, even champagne. And now Jim was late because the stork had been off-schedule with one of his patients.

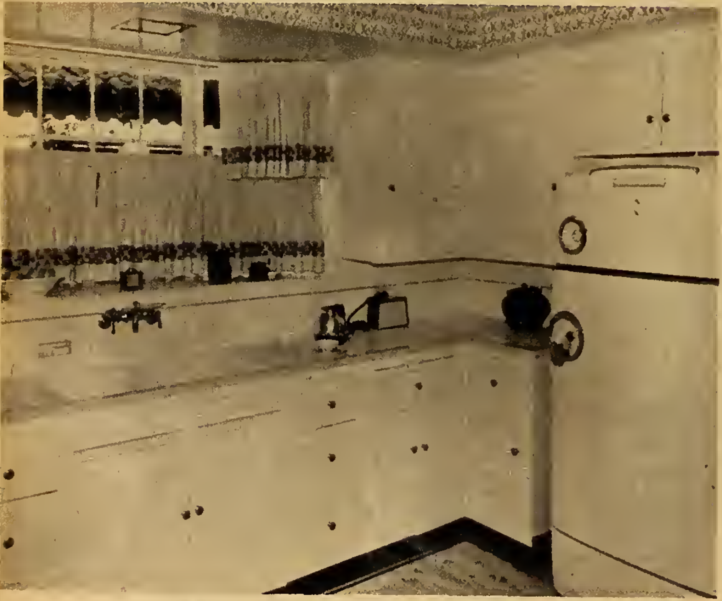
Suddenly the whir of Jim's car turning into the driveway threw Ann out of her disappointment (Continued on next page)

Perfect setting for Ann's wedding silver and crystal is the French Provincial diningroom with its silvery bleached walnut table, six grey velvet tufted chairs and scenic French wallpaper.

The first room furnished, the quiet blue bedroom opens onto the patio, displays delicate, quiet wallpaper, a quilted spread and step-tables to hold Ann's and Jim's books. A TV set and large dresser complete the room.

More pictures on next page

Floral-patterned "stairway to the future" leads to unfurnished second floor, awaiting expanded family. Ann took almost a year to furnish three rooms.



Attractive and efficient kitchen features eight-cubic-foot Bendix refrigerator, eighteen-cubic-foot Bendix freezer, and electric stove. Ann took cooking lessons but admits Jim's coffee is better.

Ann's wonderful Bendix Duomatic washes and dries clothes in one continuous operation, requiring no attention from busy Ann, who puts in an eleven hour day at the studio when working.

DOCTOR'S WIFE continued

(Continued from page 47) into a dither of preparation.

She gave the logs in the fireplace a hasty poke. She ran to the refrigerator, took the split of champagne and placed it on a tray beside two glasses. She just made it into Jim's arms as he stepped through the Dutch door from the patio.

"Happy semi-anniversary," she managed to mutter.

Jim kissed his wife's hair. Then he reached down into his coat pocket and pulled out a brown paper bag. He dropped the gift into her hands.

"For you," he said.

Excitedly Ann sat down on the couch and shook the contents of the bag into her lap. Eight of the most delicate, exquisite, hand-painted porcelain knobs. "See," said Dr. McNulty, "I'm a very practical guy."

Ann smiled. "You're priceless, darling. These will put the finishing touches to the bathroom. I'll use one on each cosmetic drawer and one on the medicine cabinet, and one on—"

"You're sure you're not disappointed now?" the doctor suggested. "They're just drawer-pulls."

"Of course not," Ann said. "Most husbands do the obvious thing on anniversary dates. They bring flowers or candy. But this is the kind of unexpected gesture writers are always trying to dream up for 'young love' scripts. And you do it naturally."

"The best way to write about young lovers," Jim said, "is to draw them from life."

Certainly this is true of Ann and Jim McNulty. Their romance and marriage has been compared to a dream, a fairy tale and a movie script. But these are pallid compared to the true version. For this marriage has so much love and warmth and tenderness that it must get better and better.

The early chapters in Ann Blyth's true love story have been thoroughly reported. Her first dates with Dennis Day's brother, their courtship, the announcement by her aunt Cissy and Uncle Jim, the charming way Jim proposed while they were trimming the Christmas tree, their common religion and Irish heritage and of course, every detail of the impressive wedding from the Papal blessing down to the size of the marriage ring.

Once the wedding was over, a news blackout was lowered. Months passed. No more Ann Blyth features were published. Movie-goers waited avidly for stories of Ann Blyth, novice housewife. No stories came. They looked for pictures of Ann and Jim at home. No news, no pictures.

Ann says now, "In the last six months I've been busier than I've ever been in my whole life. I just haven't had time to collect myself.

"Right after our honeymoon at Lake Tahoe I had to report to MGM for rehearsals of Rose Marie. Then I went into the picture. As soon as that was finished, rehearsals started for The Student Prince, then the actual shooting. (Continued on page 86)

SETS HAIR SO LUXURIOUSLY Soft...

KEEPS HAIR SO BEAUTIFULLY manageable

Dr. Ellis'®
LANOLIN Enriched
WAVE SET
NEW FORMULA WAVE SET
1. GIVES A SOFT— LUXURIOUS WAVE
2. DRIES QUICKLY
3. LEAVES NO FLAKES
4. *CONTAINS PROCESS LANOLIN
DIRECTIONS
Wet hair thoroughly with Waving Fluid. Set Wave with finger or comb and allow to dry. Then comb out the wave.
DR. ELLIS SALES CO. INC., DIST.
PITTSBURGH, PA. CONTENTS 8 FL. OZ.

Dr. Ellis'

IS AMERICA'S LARGEST SELLING

WAVE SET

NOW! LANOLIN ENRICHED!

Its amazing popularity, the fact that it is First in Sales, is proof that Dr. Ellis' Wave Set is the Finest . . . for All Types of Waves, All Weights, Colors and Conditions of Hair. And yet, Dr. Ellis' Wave Set, that Makes All Permanents Last Longer, is priced at Only 15¢ and 25¢, at all leading 5¢ and 10¢ and drug stores, everywhere.

By all means get and try the amazing, new-formula, lanolin-enriched, 25¢ Dr. Ellis' Wave Set right away. Discover its sensational ease of application; its delightfully quick, flakeless drying; the exquisitely soft, just-brushed-and-burnished look it imparts to your hair all day, all evening long; the conditioning it gives your scalp and hair as it beautifies your wave. Greaseless, it combs-in instantly, brushes-out magically. For hair that is luxuriously soft, yet beautifully manageable, get Dr. Ellis' Wave Set, only 15¢ and 25¢, at leading 5¢ and 10¢ and toiletry counters, everywhere.

DO DRYING DETERGENTS CAUSE YOUR NAIL POLISH TO Chip? Flake? Peel? Fade?

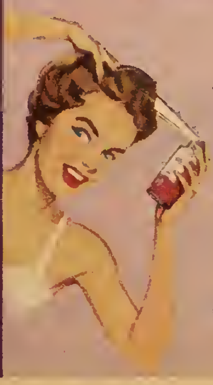
Try Dr. Ellis' Feathercote Nail Polish. Actually helps prevent powerful new "super soaps" from attacking nails. Fast-drying — sets so hard that within 3 minutes surface is virtually scratch resistant. Less than 1¢ per application! At all leading 5¢ and 10¢, and drug stores

ONLY 10¢

Dr. Ellis' Pearlcote Iridescent Polish, in fashion-right colors, is by far the most inexpensive on the market. Why pay up to $1.00 for iridescent nail polish when you can get genuine Pearlcote?

ONLY 15¢

INSTANT DRYING! DAY-LONG RESULTS!



Dr. Ellis'

HAIR SPRAY

Instant spray keeps hair softly in place, for a soft, luxurious wave all day.

ONLY 79¢

Am I happy? I'm sort of fulfilled.

The moving story of Burt Lancaster's

When I first came to Hollywood I was scared stiff. I rubbed a lot of people the wrong way . . . compensating for my insecurity.

Am I difficult to live with? No, I wouldn't say that I am. My wife and I get along pretty well.

Well, I've learned and I've changed. At least I believe that I have.

BY ALICE HOFFMAN

■ Seven years ago when Burt Lancaster was relatively new and fresh in Hollywood, he was invited to a dinner party. This festive affair was well-sprinkled with colorful Hollywood characters. A loquacious writer began to spout on half a dozen different subjects.

Lancaster controlled himself for half an hour, but as the writer talked Burt's face became rosy. Finally he could stand it no longer.

He walked up to the writer, eyes flashing.

"You," he snarled, "are the biggest, no-good, four-flushing phony I've ever heard." With that he whirled and strode from the room.

The writer was aghast. For a moment he stopped gushing like a severed artery. When he could speak above this outrage, he raised a shoulder, pursed his lips and bristled. "Well!" he exclaimed. "All I can say is, 'Well!' "

Not long after that, Burt was starred in a prison film out at Universal. During the course of the production, he turned to an (Continued on page 82) fight against fear

Act of Love!

Most people call Esther wholesome and charming; some people call her "uncooperative."
But if you want the truth, just call her husband and ask!

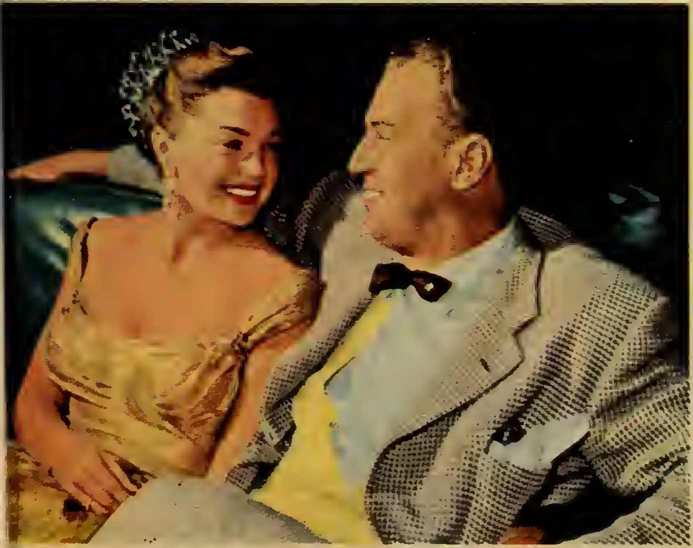
BY THELMA McGILL

only her husband knows

Her growing family is Esther's most obvious denial of the phony rift rumors frequently spread about her marriage. One of five children, Esther hopes for at least four.



Ben believes jealousy is responsible for Esther's "least cooperative actress" award; Esther managed a smile, quipped, "Well, at least they voted me an actress!"

■ No prospective movie star should be born in Los Angeles. It is a distinct disadvantage. The instant the star assumes her lofty position in the Hollywood solar system, thousands of local fans claim to be authorities on her life.

Esther Williams made this tactical error and practically every native Angeleño between the ages of twenty-five and thirty-five claims to know everything there is to know about the leggy film star.

A few months ago when Esther was unfairly and unjustifiably voted the most uncooperative actress of the year by the Hollywood Women's Press Club, everyone and his sister had something to say about the choice.

"I went to school with Esther in Inglewood," one secretary commented, "and she's always been real cool."

Said a local photographer, "I was in high school with Esther Williams, and while I never would've married Ben Gage, this babe is okay. She's honest and truthful. No phony-baloney about her."

"Esther Williams and I were in grade school together," a cab-driver said. "Matter of fact, she was gone on me. I never did give her a tumble, just wasn't my type, but (Continued on page 54)

More pictures on next page

FOR ESTHER, LIFE CAN BE BEAUTI-

No golfer herself, Esther only rarely accompanies Ben to the links. Once there, she promptly plops down on the grass; at home she prefers sitting on the floor to a chair!

(Continued from page 53) for my money she's okay. She made it the hard way. Her old man was never head of any studio."

As you can see, practically everyone in Los Angeles went to school with Esther Williams. Knows all about her. How she learned to swim. How she went to work as a stock clerk in I. Magnin's for $78 per month. How she swam for Billy Rose. All of it.

There are a few genuine authorities on the life of Esther Williams, some of whom never went to school with her. Her parents, for example.

FULLY CROWDED WITH HOME, CAREER AND FRIENDS—AND MOST OF ALL, WITH HER LOVE FOR CHILDREN.

Already good athletes, Kimmie and Benjie share Mama with the Nursery School for the Visually Handicapped. Esther gave a pool to the Nursery; spends her spare time teaching the children to swim.

Good food is one of Esther's loves; she and Ben can eat waffles all day, love her homemade pies and salads. No seafood, though: Esther once glanced at a friend's fish dinner and asked, "What's that—live bait?"

Time at home is precious to Esther; it takes six months to make one of her films. Besides taking care of the kids, she markets and cooks when she can, helps Ben with the management of the restaurant and factory.

At Romanoff's after a première, Donna Reed chats with the Gages. Donna and her husband, Tony Owen, are members of the inseparable Gage gang, as are David and Jane Wayne, Janet Blair and Virginia Bruce.

The father, Lou Williams, now spends most of his spare time fishing. The mother, Bula Williams, is a social worker with two degrees, Doctor of Philosophy and Doctor of Divinity. (She is a licensed minister.)

Both of her parents think Esther got a raw deal when the press girls branded her "the most uncooperative."

There are more oracles: Esther's sister Maurine, also a Ph.D.; her sister June of the Pico Women's Club, her brother Dave, a contractor-plumber. And of course, her tall, husky (six feet, four inches, 255 pounds) husband, smiling Ben Gage.

Naturally, Ben Gage knows more about Esther than anyone. He has been married to her for eight years. He is the father of her children.

How did Esther come to be voted the "most uncooperative actress of 1953?" This title was originally scheduled for Doris Day, who should have won it hands down. Last year Doris was about as cooperative with the Hollywood Press as a frightened porcupine.

The Women's Press Club was told that Doris had been under a great nervous strain. For months she had suffered from cancerphobia, a fear of cancer which fortunately turned out to be groundless. Appeals were made to their kindness. Why make someone who was ill more ill by voting her uncooperative?

A press agent phoned and said that if Doris were branded "the most uncooperative" he would lose his job. Press agents often hold this sword over the heads of warm-hearted reporters.

So you can see what a tight spot these writers were in. Someone had to get the sour apple. It just wouldn't do to say there were no (Continued on page 92) going... going...

Dale and Jackie tried dancing at Ciro's . . .

a brief separation, a marriage counselor . . .

JACKIE AND DALE ROBERTSON HAVE WATCHED THEIR MARRIAGE CRUMBLE. IT IS SMALL COMFORT

■ "I guess he never loved me," Jackie Robertson mumbled, choking with tears. "Or maybe there's just no love in his heart." This beautiful twenty-two-year-old girl was talking about her impending divorce from actor Dale Robertson. She was trying to reconstruct the tangled web of their unhappy marriage.

Why had this marriage foundered?

Was it Hollywood's fault?

Was the marriage too sudden?

Was Dale to blame exclusively?

Was Jackie an inadequate wife?

What went wrong with a marriage that three years ago was blessed with so much promise?

You recall its romantic foundation. MODERN SCREEN covered the love affair in detail. So did many newspapers.

In 1951, on the set of Friendly Island, Mitzi Gaynor introduced Jacqueline Wilson, a poised, sloe-eyed young actress, to Dale Robertson.

Dale was then as hot as a freshly-fired pistol. He had finished Take Care Of My Little Girl with Jeanne Crain. Betty Grable wanted him for The Farmer Takes A Wife. He was receiving three times as much fan mail as Marilyn Monroe.

The tall Oklahoman took one look at Jackie and the total effect was nothing. A few weeks later producer Andre Hakim gave a dinner party, a small affair by the standards of the continental Hakim. There were thirty or forty guests. Among them were Jacqueline Wilson, sophisticated, but not even 16-month-old Rochelle could hold together the marriage of a too-young wife, too-indifferent husband.

GONE!

NOW TO LOOK BACK AND KNOW THAT IT WAS NEVER BASED ON REAL LOVE. ■ William Barbour well-bred, and nineteen, and Dayle LyMoine Robertson, handsome, drawling and between thirty and thirty-five years old.

They began to talk about horses. Jackie had been born in Paris, reared in Princeton, educated in eastern finishing schools. She had been a member of the Eldridge-Hartford Hunt in Baltimore.

Robertson was a frustrated cowboy who had attended Oklahoma Military College and worked later as a shipping clerk for the Firestone Tire & Rubber Company and as a jackhammer operator for the Charles M. Dunning Company, a construction outfit in his native Oklahoma City.

All the polish he had, he wore on his fingernails. But his is a magnetic personality. He has the same kind of air, good looks and command of situations that characterized Gable when he came to Hollywood twenty-five years ago. And Jackie Wilson, understandably, was attracted to this rugged, square-shouldered six-footer.

"We met on a Saturday," she remembers. "Then he called on Sunday, proposed on Monday, and we were married three weeks later. If things had worked out, the hurry, the haste, the mad rush would've been swell. But the marriage didn't take; so now I can say the courtship was too fast.

"It's easy to be wise after it's all over. But I was so (Continued on page 93)

jack webb:

JUST THE FACTS, MA'AM!

JACK WEBB IS EVERYONE'S FAVORITE MAN FRIDAY. BUT HE'S ALSO TV'S MOST RUMORED-ABOUT GUY!

Jack's divorce from his former wife, Julie London, will be final in seven months. Both he and Julie took the split hard at first and Jack maintains that his busy work schedule did not cause the rift.

A steady couple are Jack and Dorothy Towne. Many believe they will marry but Jack refuses to discuss the subject until his divorce is final. Now he lives quietly with his mother, sees his two daughters often.

By Richard Moore

■ Every actor in Hollywood sooner or later finds himself under fire, with the press, his relatives or old pals taking shots at his integrity. The reason is obvious. Success inevitably gives birth to envy, and the urge to find a place on the financial gravy train is an itch few of an actor's casual friends or members of his family can resist.

Jack Webb, who has become to television what a combination of Alan Ladd and Clark Gable would be to pictures, is no exception.

Here are a few of the accusations not too lately hurled at the creator and star performer of Dragnet. That he is upstaging his friends. That he is too temperamental. That he all but socks on the nose anyone who has the nerve to ask a question about his private life. That he already has decided who the next Mrs. Jack Webb will be.

Because of the stories circulated by Hollywood gossip, a disreputable old bat with a tic in her eye, let's look at the whole story of Mr. Webb and see what sort of man he really is. Mr. Webb has already been thoroughly worked over by two esteemed journalists in Los Angeles.

They deserve credit for getting straight answers to direct questions from a man a couple of columnists had claimed was impossible to interview. Mr. Hal Humphrey, Radio and TV Editor of the Los Angeles Daily Mirror, had this to say about Mr. Webb's romantic life: "Webb is understandably nettled at all of the rumors concerning his (Continued on page 73)

Proud of Dragnet's Emmy (TV equivalent of the Oscar) Jack feels responsible for all phases of the show, directs and writes besides acting. Imitations don't bother him; he finds them funny!

LOVELY TO LOOK AT

Meet Grace Kelly, the girl Gable gabs about—and the demurest miss ever called a menace
by a Hollywood columnist!

BY LOUIS POLLOCK

■ Eight years ago there were a great many more boys than girls attending Stevens High School in the Chestnut Hills area of Philadelphia. The girls loved it; no one was a wallflower and the "rush" was terrific. But some of the mothers were concerned; they thought their daughters might develop a conceit that would take a bad beating later when they got out into a world less bountiful with attentive males.

They needn't have worried. The effect on the girls in the class was good. They developed excellent poise based on a fine confidence in themselves. One of them, a quiet, blue-eyed blonde named Grace Kelly, was the daughter of John Kelly, once an international sculling champion, and now a building contractor. Later, her older brother. Jack, won similar renown. Today Grace is pulling her own oar as an actress. Even though she is single she seems to have a monopoly on Hollywood's best young-wife roles.

Her film husbands have included Gary Cooper (in High Noon), Richard Basehart (14 Hours), Ray Milland (Dial M For Murder). and Bill Holden (The Bridges At Toki-Ri). In Mogambo she loses Clark Gable to Ava Gardner but in Rear Window she's a cinch to settle down domestically with Jimmy Stewart and it's anybody's guess whether she will settle down with Bill Holden or Bing Crosby in Country Girl. Friends are beginning to kid her that marriage in real life may be an anti-climax.

Grace, who was born twenty-five years ago in Philadelphia, needed that favorable boy-girl setup at high school because she was not so sure of herself to start with. Bracketed between an older and a younger sister she is reported to have been a "withdrawn" kid at twelve.

One of the favorite family stories about her is that when she wanted to play hooky at this period she would first announce the fact at breakfast time—the point being that she was emulating other girls but not really wanting to skip school. She was hoping that someone would talk her out of it.

This indecision was general. "She couldn't shop for herself until she was quite a bit older," says her mother. Grace herself recalls, "Well, I was generally down with all the sicknesses—the original sinus kid."

Now Grace is a tall girl, five feet, five and a half inches, weighs a nicely modeled 115 pounds and is nobody's weakling. Not according to the tales brought back about her from Africa, when she made Mogambo with Gable and Ava.

In more than four months on safari. beset by heat and restricted to the rigorous routine of camp life, she didn't miss a day's shooting. As a matter of fact, in contrast to Ava, who spent her spare time reading in camp, Grace used hers to accompany the hunting parties sent out to get meat for the company personnel. The man who shot the heavy game on these expeditions was generally Gable. But Grace had a quick eye for fowl and bagged a great number of guinea hens.

Perhaps her nerves were most severely tested the morning she awoke in her tent to see what looked like a long, four-inch-wide snake wriggling along the ground. A closer look revealed that the "snake" was really a long line of giant ants migrating right through the tent. She got up and dressed, stepping gingerly back and forth over the undulating line, and went to breakfast. Late that afternoon when she returned from the day's filming the parade of ants was still in progress. Attacking with a pail of boiling water her native servant managed to break up the line of march and divert it around the tent. Unfortunately a few thousand ants lost their way and got into her baggage where they kept showing up for weeks.

GRACE IS not sure how her love for acting was fostered. There is a theatrical tradition in the family founded by two of her father's brothers. One uncle is the noted playwright, George Kelly, author of the Pulitzer Prize-winning play, Craig's Wife, and The Show-Off. Grace had a share of his blood but none of his encouragement. He thought the theatre was not for her. Another uncle was Walter C. Kelly, a famous vaudeville headliner known as "The Virginia Judge," who died when Grace was a youngster without delivering any opinion about her talent.

